AMONGST all the benefits for which we have reason to thank the Masons of the middle ages, there is hardly one which, to a large class of the descendants of those for whom they built, is so important and so interesting as a practice which the Masons almost universally adopted—viz., the introduction of the coat of arms of their employer in every fitting part of their building. The glass stainers, the seal engravers, the metal workers, and, at a later period, the portrait painters, all followed this useful example, they having the further advantage of inscribing, in general, the name of the employer for whom they executed the coat of arms. This plan had the benefit of two chances of saving the information from oblivion: if the coat were destroyed, the inscription might, perhaps, escape; if the latter were obliterated, the coat might still remain. Now, every one of our readers who has ever visited an old building, or a collection of mediæval antiquities, must recollect how many cases have fallen under observation of the interest which would have been added to this inspection if he had known for whom the work had been executed. The artists have their reputation in their works—we shall never know their names; but we like to be able to feel that this is the seal of Anthony Beck the princely Bishop of Durham, that this picture must be the portrait of the unfortunate Earl of Essex, this MS. has belonged to John of Gaunt, or that this brass is the memorial of Sir John de Creke with the artist's stamp affixed—that this cup was the gift of the Lord Mayor, John Northampton. And when the sceptic asks, Why do you say this belonged to such a man in so remote a period?—it is satisfactory to be able to say, Look at the coat of arms as here displayed, and see for yourself that it, at least, is genuine. Little interest of this sort attaches itself to any portion, except the medals of the classic period; it is only when we look back to the dawn of civilization in Egyptian hieroglyphics that the monument still tells us the time at which, and for whom, it was made. To the present day almost every Egyptian work is to a certain extent dated: we have learned approximately the succession of the monarchs at a time far earlier than that which regal and republican Rome only offers a legendary, if not mythic, history; and there is hardly one Egyptian work of any importance which does not show the title and name, if not always the banner, of the sovereign under whom it was executed. The Assyrian inscriptions may be ranked in this class of useful information. Some Greek and Roman inscriptions of this sort have been preserved; but personal, or rather family, history can hardly be said to commence before the period at which the Masons and the heralds began to work in harmony. If we enter a cathedral and begin to seek for the dates of the various portions, many a legend is contradicted by the silent testimony of some bishop's coat of arms; and when we review the series of tombs, many a vacancy in the local knowledge as to whom they are to commemorate is to be supplied by any visitor who has some knowledge of heraldry.

This knowledge is of three sorts; many persons think that as soon as they have learned the principal terms used in that science they are great scholars; others possess a sort of index either in their memory, or in writing, and on seeing a coat can quickly tell the name of the family, if celebrated, to which it belongs; while some have gone farther—perhaps as far as have the pundits at the College of Arms in Doctor's Commons—and know, if they are old the locality in which a coat of arms exists, what book gives the history of the families in that neighbourhood, or are obliged to consult some of the attempts at an index which have been almost the most important labours of the best heralds for the last three centuries.

The first sort of information is only the grammar of the science, and it will perhaps surprise some one, or more, of our readers, who have heard the confident manner in which people talk of the difficulties they have encountered in heraldry, when we assure them that with a decent memory, a week's study under a master, or two or three weeks' evening study of a good grammar, will render them superior to all those difficulties. In the middle ages the Masons must have been au fait of all the technical heraldic knowledge of their time, and of much more besides of that class of information. When any person has thus learnt to express accurately, in words, or as the herald say "in blazon," any coat of arms of which he wishes to know something, he is fully qualified to form such indexes, as those which stand at the head of this notice, for himself, or to consult any existing index.

Of these sources of information there are two kinds, one is the alphabetical list of family names, followed by the technical description of the coat of arms belonging to each family, and of such books there have been several, the latest being Burke's General Armory: the other is the collection of all coats that have any similarity, e.g. on one page "lions," on another "eagles," and of such a list there are several instances in MS., consequently difficult of access, and two in print, these two last mentioned are, respectively, one of the time of Edward III., and contains only six hundred coats, while the other, comprising about ten thousand coats, was compiled, under Elizabeth, by the celebrated Robert Glover, Somerset Herald. It is scarcely credible that such a lapse of time as three hundred years should have been allowed to pass without some better attempt than this scanty and unmethodical one of Glover's, which refers to England only, and which, but slightly improved in arrangement, is only to be found, in a printed form, as an appendix to the expensive works by Edmondson and by Berry, which, reprinting one from the other, have perpetuated to a frightful extent the errors, omissions, and additions of the person who first put Glover's MS. in order for the press.

Mr. Papworth has come forward at a time which is energetically devoted to mediæval inquiries, with a proposal to fill the place which Glover (if now living) might have occupied; he offers the student a classified index to shields belonging to families in Great Britain and Ireland, and asserts that instead of Glover's ten thousand, he includes about fifty thousand such pieces of information. Let us see what he has to say for himself.

The first condition of success in such an attempt at an index of this kind is, the goodness of the plan on which the classification is based; the second is the authoritative character of the materials to be classified; and the third is the care with which the materials are put into their places. With regard to this last point we observe that there is a possibility of finding fault with Mr. Papworth, on the ground of there being some entries a little out of order, too high or too low, e.g. p. 53, after "barry of six erm. gu. and az." is "barry of six vairy," &c., and another article, which are not only out of their right place, but are not quite correctly stated, as is evident from the following page where they occur again in their proper places, and are not only accurate but have fuller information than in their erroneous first entries. We are quite ready to excuse such inadvertencies in a first attempt of so much difficulty and labour, for we find no faults of any other description beyond a few typographical inaccuracies here and there which are so few, that the work, as far as it has gone, reflects great credit both on the author and the printer.

Having got the materials into their places, we reverse Mr. Papworth's process and inquire into the air of authority which they possess; and here we are induced to notice the startling list of original documents with which he prefaces his book. Out of twenty of these lists of coats of arms, dating from the year 1200 to 1550 or 1600, ten only have been previously printed, and nine out of these ten must not only have been transcribed afresh from some original MS. for the purpose of the book, but collated with other duplicate MS. Besides these there are Glover's printed ten thousand which have been compared and corrected, and in addition we have Mr. Papworth's assurance that all the coats for which no authorities are cited, have been derived from heraldic works of repute and other trustworthy sources. Taking pp. 100 and 101 as a specimen, we find seventy-two entries, and among them only twelve or thirteen of these are citations, so that it will be seen the mass of the work has been compiled from these "heraldic works of repute," and we may suppose about forty thousand descriptions must have been copied and entered in their proper places for the work. Many of these must necessarily have been duplicates, and the labour of comparison and research could not have been achieved without such an application as extorts our admiration at the assiduity which has been bestowed, and which we are inclined to reckon at five years of unrelenting work of both head and hand for ten hours daily!

It is a relief to turn from this to the Blazon of Episcopacy, by the Rev. Bro. Bedford, (Prov. G. Chaplain for Warwickshire we believe) which we hope is included in the other sources so cursorily noticed by Mr. Papworth. The author modestly calls it "an instalment of information upon a subject hitherto neglected, viz., the coats of arms belonging to the English bishops since the conquest." These prelates were, until the reformation at least, great builders, and if not always themselves the designers, architects, clerks of the works, or head builders, it is to their connection with the Masonry of the period that we owe some of our finest structures. It is a pity that our author is obliged to own his list incomplete and to complain of the present uncertainty of heraldic information on the coats of arms belonging to some of the bishops.

Slight inaccuracies, no doubt printers' errors, have caught our attention, but are remedied, in most cases, by their context; e.g., p. 48, 1637 for 1607, as the date of Bishop Parry's enthronization at Gloucester; p. 59, 1669 for 1660, when Accepted Frewen was collated to the Archiepiscopal see of York, and 1650 for 1660, the death of his predecessor; but perhaps the most curious of these little discrepancies is at p. 44, where the arms of Bishop Walter Stapleton are given in type, or blazon, as "two bars wavy," while the plate shows two bends wavy, both being arms appropriate to the name, certainly, but provocative of a hesitation which is only to be cleared up by searching a number of works in a public library.

Bro. Bedford's plan is to give the list of the bishops of each see, in chronological order, with a description of their arms, and opposite to them an illustration of each coat. We are not ourselves of opinion that these outlines make any addition to the value of Bro. Bedford's labours, or of most others upon heraldry in general; and it is evident that Mr. Papworth shares this conviction, as he neither gives any "pictures," nor any promise of them. The Egyptian titles, &c., to which allusion has been previously made, do indeed require some pictorial aid in any list of them, such as is given in Murray's Handbook of Egypt, where, unfortunately the banners are omitted, and it would be interesting to know the reason why the rectangular figure, in which a royal title is enclosed, always has a separate pattern of fringe, if it may be so termed, for each monarch (our readers must not suppose that we have forgotten that these frames, or enclosures, are supposed by some authorities to represent the front of an edifice); but in order to use any such list of pictures, or of descriptions, with facility, the list must either be very short, or the system of reference very simple.

We have called the printed Glover's Ordinary (for Ordinary is the technical name for such a dictionary as Mr. Papworth's) unmethodical, but the fitter adjective would be illogical, for example, if any one will draw a shield, and therein a cross, and put four lions, or four eagles, in the corners, he will see that the cross is the principal feature of the shield; that cross can be omitted; but that is the only great change to be made, whereas the lions may be displaced for any other objects that heraldic ingenuity may devise, yet in the printed Glover's Ordinary (and the original MS. is worse in this respect), a cross between four lions is to be sought under the heading four lions, a cross between four eagles is supposed to be under the title four eagles. Mr. Papworth's plan appears to be much more simple, for the important charge, such as a cross, is the key to the dictionary in this case, and in his work we shall find a list of crosses simply,—of crosses with two objects, as birds, beasts, castles, crescents, hands, &c.,—of crosses between four objects,—of crosses with something placed on them,—and lastly, of crosses charged with similar divisions. In fact Mr. Papworth's Alphabetical Dictionary of Coats of Arms, has rendered heraldry a science by giving it a system of families, orders, genera, species, divisions, and subdivisions, that renders it easy to find a coat if it be in the book at all, whereas, hitherto, if a coat of arms be seen or described, and the owner's name be asked, there is no other printed book adapted to supply, in such a ready manner, the answer sought, but search must be made in a variety of works, and over very many pages, mostly devoid of any method to aid the inquirer, yet often without success, though the work may contain the precise information wanted. Mr. Papworth may be fairly considered as the Linnæus, or rather the Jussieu, of Heraldry, and is doing for it the inappreciable benefit of making it useful to the local historian, the biographer, and indeed not only to the archaeologist, but to every intelligent man who makes a tour, even round the nearest cemetery.

We shall only make one other observation on both the works standing at the head of this notice, viz., that the authorities for individual statements are clearly and precisely given, and shall conclude by stating that both the Blazon of Episcopacy and the Alphabetical Dictionary of Coats of Arms are indispensable portions of the library of every liberally educated brother of the Craft, to each of whom we may say that both of the authors ask for any additional information that may tend to add to their success; and among such indications we would especially urge the communication of the existence of any documentary evidence as to the earliest dates of authenticated coats of arms.

Shelley Memorials, from Authentic Sources. Edited by Lady SHELLEY. To which is added, an Essay on Christianity, by PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. (Now first printed.) Smith, Elder, and Co.

CAPTAIN MEDWIN'S Life of Shelley will be in no way affected by the present volume, for it must still hold the position of the most complete memoir of Shelley given to the world. In the above named book, Lady Shelley throws no light upon the dark passages in the poet's life, contenting herself with a reference to family papers which might clear up the doubts, but withholding them, we presume, because one of the poet's children by his first wife is still living. If there lingers any regret that these passages are not explained, it is considerably heightened by Lady Shelley's withdrawing such family papers from the last editor of the poet's memoirs, Mr. Hogg, who sat down to his task and acquitted himself with an amount of intelligence, good faith, and fairness, that no other biographer of Shelley can pretend to. All that we find new in the present volume relates to the first and second wives of Percy Bysshe Shelley, and we shall quote, as an example of the second lady's clear and direct reasons for being of no party, an extract from her diary, in 1838. She says:—

"I have been so often abused by pretended friends for my lukewarmness in 'the good cause,' that, though I disdain to answer them, I shall put down here a few thoughts on this subject. . . . I have never written a word in disfavour of liberalism: that I have not supported it openly in writing arises from the following causes, as far as I knew:—That I have not argumentative powers; I see things pretty clearly, but cannot demonstrate them; besides, I feel the counter-arguments too strongly. I do not feel that I could say aught to support the cause efficiently; besides that, on some topics (especially with regard to my own sex) I am far from making up my mind. . . . When I feel that I can say what will benefit my fellow creatures I will speak; not before. Then I recoil from the vulgar abuse of the inimical press; I do more than recoil: proud and sensitive, I act on the defensive—an inglorious position. To hang back, as I do, brings a penalty. . . . Alone and poor, I could only be something by joining a party; and there was much in me—the woman's love of looking up, and being guided, and being willing to do anything if any one supported and brought me forward—which would have made me a good partisan. But Shelley died and I was alone. . . . If I had raved and ranted about what I did not understand; had I adopted a set of opinions, and propagated them with enthusiasm; had I been careless of attack, and eager for notoriety; then the party to which I belonged had gathered round me, and I had not been alone. It has been the fashion with these same friends to accuse me of worldliness. There indeed, in my own heart and conscience, I take a high ground. I may distrust my own judgment too much—be too indolent and too timid; but in conduct I am above merited blame."

Of the Essay on Christianity, the less said about it the better. It is totally unworthy of Shelley's powers, and has but one redeeming point, the love of purity and goodness.

A Select Glossary of English Words. By the Very Rev. RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, D.D., Dean of Westminster. 8vo. John W. Parker and Son, West Strand.

THE study of the mutation of language must necessarily be one of importance to our Craft, for in our ritual there are many expressions that have lost their meaning, and sorely puzzle the members whose reading is not of a character to make them acquainted with the sense in which those words were used. The Dean of Westminster has long done good suit and service in this cause, and we have derived much information of a useful and practical nature from his previous efforts. Some time since, Dr. Trench gave a series of lectures to the students of the Training College at Winchester, on The Study of Words, which, not being intended for a learned audience, have, as a book, become most deservedly popular. These were followed by, English, Past and Present, and give some very curious insight into the derivation of words. Then came, from the same pen, Proverbs and their Lessons, which were a collection of painstaking, and in many cases original, remarks on the proverbial sayings found in several languages. We have now A Select Glossary of English Words, in which, in a popular though scholarlike style, the Dean traces for general readers the changes which many words common to our forefathers and ourselves have undergone, and of which in their case and ours the signification is quite different. In this plan Dr. Trench does not aim at limiting research; but to those who choose to consider the subject one of interest his Select Glossary of English Words will act as a whetstone.

In our Bible and Prayer-Book there are several words of this kind, and they appear to those unacquainted with archaic and obsolete significations very obscure. Thus, in Isaiah iii., 18, we read of the "bravery of tinkling ornaments." To the ordinary reader this may appear an error, as he connects with "bravery" courage; but among the older writers, at the time of the translation, and long after, "bravery" was used to denote finery. Thus, Bacon says, "In bravery of their liveries;" and Massinger speaks of "hurt to the kingdom by superfluous bravery."

Carriage also was not, as now, employed to denote the means of transit for persons or burthens, nor the vehicle used for those purposes, but it signified the baggage, or luggage itself, so when David (1 Sam. xvii. 22) "left his carriage in the hands of the keeper of the carriage," it means that he left his luggage in charge of a servant.

Cunning, too, was not, as now, used to express deceit, but was derived from the Anglo-Saxon konnan, to know. So reading "let my right hand forget her cunning," (in Psalm cxxxvii) it implies knowledge, or as Caxton meant, when speaking of the Earl of Worcester's death, as "a grete loss of suche a man, considering his estate and connyng," and as Sir Thomas More uses it when he states, "St. Anstyn, St. Hyerome, St. Basyle, St. Gregory, with so many a godly connyng man."

The Dean of Westminster lays claim to the merit of originality, and it is justly his due. He tells us,—"Of my citations, I believe about a thousand in all, I may owe some twenty, at the most, to existing dictionaries or glossaries." And with such a small number out of a thousand passages selected from Chaucer, Shakespeare, Bacon, Donne, Fuller, Burton, Milton, South, Barrow, and numerous other writers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, is certainly a very limited amount to draw on others whose works have preceded his. To give our readers any particular class of words would be to do injustice to this very excellent work, therefore we shall take a few haphazard, to show of what material the book is composed, and its paramount utility.

Babe and baby are words of early use. Doll is one of late introduction into the English language, certainly later than Dryden. Babe, baby, or puppet supplied its place, thus:—

"True religion standeth not in making, setting up, painting, gilding, clothing and decking of dumb and dead images, which be but great puppets and babies, &c.—(Homilies.)

"But all as a poor pedlar did he wend,
Bearing a truss of trifles at his back,
As bells and babes and glasses in his pack.

Spenser: Shepherd's Calendar.

"Think you that the child hath any notion of the strong contents of riper age? or can he possibly imagine there are any such delights as those his babies and rattles afford him."—Allestree: Sermons.

Blackguard. We are informed, in connection with this word, that "The scullions and other meaner retainers in a great household, who when progress was made from one residence to another accompanied and protected the pots, pans, and other kitchen utensils, riding among them, and being smutted by them, were contemptuously styled the 'black guard.' It is easy to trace the subsequent history of the word. With a slight forgetfulness of its origin, he is now called a 'blackguard,' who would have once been said to belong to the 'black guard':—

"A slave that within these twenty years rode with the black guard in the duke's carriage amongst spits and dripping pans."—Webster: The White Devil.

Dunce has a peculiar origin.

"Duns Scotus, whom Hooker styles 'the wittiest of the school divines,' has given us this name which now ascribes hopeless ignorance, invincible stupidity, to him on whom it is affixed. The course by which this came to pass was as follows:—When at the reformation and revival of learning the works of the schoolmen fell into extreme disfavour at once with all the reformers, and with all votaries of the new learning, Duns, a standard bearer among those, was so often referred to with scorn and contempt by these, that his name gradually became the byword which now it is:—

"What Dunce or Sorbonist cannot maintain a paradox?"—G. Harvey: Pierce's Supercorogation.

"Remember ye not how within this thirty years, and far less, and yet dureth unto this day, the old barking curs, Dunce's disciples, and like draff called Scotists, &c."—Tyndale: Works, 1575, p. 278.

Knave, Garb, Whirlpool, and Thews are worthy of attention. Under the words Knave and Garb we have examples of the happy conciseness with which the Dean of Westminster, when he chooses, can convey his meaning. He says:—

"Knave: How many serving-lads must have been unfaithful and dishonest before 'knave,' which means at first no more than boy, acquired the meaning which it has now! Note the same history in the German 'Bube,' 'Dirne,' 'Schalk':—

"If it is a knave child, sle yo him; if it is a woman, keep ye."—Ecclesiastes i. 16: Wielif.

"O murderous slumber,
Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy
That plays thee music! gentle knave, good night."
"Shakespeare: Julius Cæsar, act. iv., sc. 3."

With reference to Garb we read:—

"This is one of many words whereof all the meaning has run to the surface. A man's dress was once only a portion, and a very small portion, of his 'garb,' which included his whole outward presentment to other men; now it is all:—

"First, for your garb, it must be grave and serious, very reserved, and locked."—Ben Jonson: The Fox, act iv., sc. 1."

"Of the word Whirlpool it is stated, 'None of our dictionaries, as far as I am aware, have noticed the use of 'whirlpool' to designate some huge sea-monster of the whale kind:—

"The Indian sea breedeth the most and the biggest fishes that are; among which the whales and whirlpools, called balaenæ, take up, &c. Holland: Pliney, vol. i. p. 235.

"We conclude our quotations with one respecting the word Thews (on which there is a note in Craik's English of Shakespeare, p. 117). We read—'It is a remarkable evidence of Shakespeare's influence upon the English language, that while, so far as yet has been observed, every other writer, one single instance excepted, employs 'thews' in the sense of manners, qualities of mind and disposition, the fact that as often as he employs it it is in the sense of nerves, muscular vigour, has quite overborne the other use, which, once so familiar in our literature, has now quite passed away.'"

For everything to which one is inclined
Doest best become and greatest grace doth gain;
Yet praise likewise deserve good thews enforced
With pain."—Spenser: The Faerie Queen, b. ii. 2.

In the foregoing extracts it will be seen how new food for thought is opened to the student of language, and to those of limited opportunity and research what a mine of wealth is here disclosed. Meanings that may have seemed to many without sense, will, by the perusal of the dean's Select Glossary of English Words, become as clear as the more common words in use in present vulgar tongue.

Heartily congratulating the Dean of Westminster on his success, in being useful to his less informed brethren, we can but express a wish that more of our caputular dignitaries would follow so excellent an example, and from the storehouses of cathedral and caputular chapters, turn their stalls to something else beside the daily routine of a residentiary. Not that by any means we would wish the service of the church neglected, and the Dean of Westminster is a living proof that his usefulness in his spiritual charge in nowise falls short, nor is a duty made to give place to an amusement, but when we know, and we do know somewhat more than usual of the aimless lives of the canonical and prebendal bodies, we say let them follow the laudable example set before them, and show that they have some greater interest in the knowledge of their fellow men, than that which is confined to leases, renewals, fines, and dividends.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

Mr. A. PANIZZI, of the British Museum, is in Italy on his way to Parma and Modena. Mr. Panizzi is a native of Brescello, in Modena, and his fellow countrymen proposed to elect him as a deputy to the National Assembly of Modena, but he refused. His object in coming to Italy was to visit his native place, and to thank his fellow countrymen; but some of the Turin papers ascribe his visit to another cause, and say that he is an agent of the British government.

Among the late donations to the fund to relieve the trustees and purchase the lease of the buildings of the London Mechanics' Institution, are the names of the Duke of Cleveland, the Marquis of Bredalbane, and Lord Cranworth. The early example of that philanthropic and benevolent man, the late Lord Murray (Lord of Session), was noticed at the time, and now Lady Murray sends £50, and Miss Burdett Coutts £100 to the account at Ransom and Co.'s. In the City Messrs. Hanbury have received 100 guineas, recently voted for the purchase of the lease by the Corporation of London.

The Germans, at Constantinople, are going to erect a monument to Alexander von Humboldt, in connexion with which a museum, library, and reading room will be established for the benefit of the late philosopher's countrymen living at Constantinople.

Among the new works in preparation by Messrs. Longmans, a described in their "Notes on Books," are an edition of "Lalla Rookh," by Tennyson. A new edition of "Pilgrim's Progress," with a preface by the Rev. C. Kingsley, and 120 illustrations engraved on steel and wood from original designs by Charles Bennett. A book of emblems, entitled "Moral Emblems from Jacob Cats and Robert Farley, with Aphorisms, Adages, and Proverbs of all Nations," the illustrations freely rendered from designs found in Catz and Farley by John Leighton, F.S.A., and engraved under his superintendence," in one volume, square crown octavo, with sixty large illustrations on wood, and numerous vignettes and tail pieces. The emblems, and other works of Dr. Jacob Catz, or Sir James Cats, have for two centuries been household books in Holland, and were well known to our forefathers, who highly prized them, both for their moral doctrine, and for the ingenious designs with which Adrian Van De Venne symbolised their teachings. Sir Joshua Reynolds, when a boy, was much influenced by these compositions, of which he made careful copies. Sir W. Beechey, in his "Life of Reynolds," states that Sir Joshua's "richest store was Jacob Cats' Book of Emblems, which his grandmother, a native of Holland, had brought with her from that country." The tail pieces are derived from Farley's "Lights, or Moral Emblems," a rare book of poems and primitive woodcuts, printed in London in 1638. The third and concluding volume of Captain Brialmont's "Life of the Duke of Wellington," translated with emendations and additions by the Rev. G. R. Gleig, M.A., is now in the press. It will take up the history of the Duke from the Battle of Waterloo, and will represent him as an ambassador, as a minister, and as a citizen. A complete treatise on the "Science of Handling, Educating, and Taming all Horses," with a full and detailed Narrative of his Experience and Practice," by John S. Rarey, of Ohio, U.S., will be published in one volume, with many illustrations. This work has been several years in preparation, and contains a complete account of the method adopted by Mr. Rarey with the various animals selected in England, and other countries, to test the efficacy of his system.

New York papers mention the report that Alfred Tennyson contemplates a tour in the United States during the approaching autumn. Tom Taylor, the dramatist, it is also said, will favour the Americans with his presence about the same time. His play of the "American Cousin" gained him a reputation at New York which will ensure him a hearty welcome.

Messrs. Routledge and Co. will shortly reissue the 8vo. editions of the Dramatists, published by the late Mr. Moxon, which series they have recently purchased.

The gathering of the institution of Mechanical Engineers was held at Leeds last week. The members met in the Civil Court at the Town Hall. Mr. John Penn, the great engine-builder, and president of the association, occupied the chair. The papers read were numerous and important, though of more interest to professional than to general readers. The members of the society visited all the great objects of mechanical interest in the town of Leeds, as well as the waterworks at Arthington, and the ironworks at Low Moor and Saltaire.

A strong list of Presidents of Sections has been appointed for the Aberdeen meeting of the British Association, of which we hope to present a special report to our readers. The Earl of Rosse will conduct the business of the Section of Mathematical and Physical Science,—Dr. Lyon Playfair, that of Chemical Science,—Sir Charles Lyell, that of Geology,—Sir W. Jardine, that of Zoology and Botany, including Physiology,—Rear-Admiral Sir J. C. Ross, that of Geography and Ethnology,—Colonel Sykes, that of Economic Science and Statistics,—Robert Stephenson, Esq., that of Mechanical Science. The list of officers will not be completed until the day of meeting. Two attractive discourses have been arranged for the evening lectures—one by Sir Roderick I. Murchison, 'On the Geology of the Highlands,'—and one by the Rev. T. R. Robinson, 'On Electrical Discharges in Highly Rarefied Media.'

Under the name of the "London Arabic Literary Fund," an undertaking of an educational and civilizing tendency for the many millions speaking the Arabic tongue is being started in London by a Syrian gentleman named Antonius Ameuney. Mr. Ameuney will make an appeal to the British public for the means of establishing an Arabic newspaper in London, which will be sent to every country where the Arabic language is spoken, and there gratuitously distributed amongst all classes. The objects which are to be promoted are to neutralise the great efforts made by France for the aggrandisement of her influence in the East, by means of the clerical, scholastic, and journalistic machinations which she has set on foot; and to infuse as much as possible into the Arabian mind the ideas and sentiments which generally prevail among the Anglo-Saxon race. Mr. Ameuney was educated at King's College, London.

The Publishers' Circular announces that the indefatigable Mr. John Timbs has in the press a volume of "Narratives of Inventors and Discoverers in Science and the Useful Arts," to be illustrated with engravings.

The Duke of Devonshire (says the Athenæum) has permitted four eminent Fellows of the Society of Antiquaries to make a careful investigation of the Collier Folio. This folio is at present in the hands of His Grace's solicitor. The four gentlemen will make known the results of investigation in their own way; but we may state generally that the facts they have elicited tend to prove how hasty and superficial was the inquiry conducted under the eye of Sir Frederick Madden, and to increase the public regret that gentlemen connected officially with a great public library should have allowed themselves to engage as principals or partisans in such a strife. But since the officers of the Manuscript Department of the British Museum, lowering their own credit and the dignity of letters, have put themselves forward as a committee of impeachment and public prosecution, where is their indictment? Why does the promised charge hang fire?

Mr. W. Dyce, R.A., has received the first prize of £50, at the Liverpool Academy Exhibition, for his picture of "The Good Shepherd."

The Exhibition of the Birmingham Society of Artists opened on Thursday with a collection of works of painting and sculpture, between five hundred and six hundred in number. Contributions have been received from local picture galleries, and from patrons of Art at a distance. Mr. Phillip's "Spanish Contrabandistas," the property of the Prince Consort; Leslie's "Columbus and the Egg;" Collins's "Sunday Morning;" Stanfield's "Portna Spania—Giant's Causeway;" Roberts's "Basilica of San Lorenzo, Rome;" Danby's "Games of Anchises;" Mr. F. Goodall's "Scene in Brittany;" Mr. H. W. Pickersgill's "Portrait of Wordsworth," hang on the walls. The members of the society and local artists exhibit a majority of the works.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

METROPOLITAN.

DOMATICO LODGE (No. 206).—The first meeting for the season of this excellent Lodge was held at Bro. Ireland's, Masonic Hall, Falcon Tavern, Fleet Street, on Monday last, Sept. 12th, Bro. Baker, W.M., presiding, supported by nearly forty of the brethren. Three brothers having been passed to the second degree, and no further business of importance offering, the Lodge was closed in due form. The brethren afterwards adjourned to an elegant banquet, at the close of which the usual toasts were proceeded with. In replying to the toast of the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers, Bro. Smith, Grand Purs., said he was sure it would be highly gratifying to the members of the Lodge to be informed that their esteemed Past Master, Bro. Thos. Alex. Adams, who was unfortunately prevented being present that evening, had received a letter from the Grand Secretary informing him that it was the intention of the Most Worshipful Grand Master to confer upon him the newly created office of Assistant Grand Pursuivant. He knew how well Bro. Adams would perform the duties, and he (Bro. Smith) felt highly gratified to find that he should have the assistance of so distinguished a brother in the discharge of his duties. The health of the visitors (including Bros. Moring, Brown, Walkley, M. Cooke, &c.) was briefly acknowledged by Bro. H. G. Warren, P.M., 189 and 202. Bro. Smith neatly proposed the health of the Worshipful Master, whom he eulogised for a strict discharge of his duties, and a desire at all times to add to the comfort of the brethren. The Worshipful Master replied, and gave the health of the Past Masters, which was acknowledged by Bro. Carpenter very humourously and quaintly. A variety of other toasts, including prosperity to the Freemasons' Magazine, were drunk, and the brethren separated at an early hour, but not before acknowledging the exertions of Bro. Ireland in catering for the Lodge. The proceedings of the evening were enlivened by the excellent singing of Bros. Cooke, Everitt, and others.

WELLINGTON LODGE (No. 805).—The first meeting of this season was held at the Lord Duncan Tavern, Deptford, on Tuesday, September 13th, Bro. Wadson, W.M., presiding, who initiated Mr. Prior of the George and Vulture Tavern, Castle Court, Cornhill, and Mr. John Pierce of the Bell Tavern, Gracechurch Street, into the Order. At the close of the business the brethren adjourned to an elegant banquet, provided by Bro. Hayes, P.M.; there being several visitors present, including Bros. Stuart, Birch, Marcellus, and others. The whole of the proceedings passed off most agreeably, as they always do at this well conducted Lodge.

INSTRUCTION.

LODGE OF CONFIDENCE (No. 225).—A meeting of this excellent Lodge of Instruction was held at Bro. Wadson's, Bengal Arms Tavern, Birchinlane, on Wednesday, September 14th, when Bro. Anslow, P.M., most ably worked the first ceremony and lecture. There were a number of joining members, and this Lodge of Instruction bids fair to become the most numerous and well attended east of Temple-bar.

UNITED PILGRIMS' LODGE (No. 745).—On Friday evening a meeting of this Lodge of Instruction was held at the Manor House, Walworth. Bro. H. Thompson (of the Domatio Lodge) presided as W.M., Bro. Lascelles (of the Jubilee Lodge) S.W., and Bro. Geider (of the Parent Lodge) J.W. The Lodge having been opened in the first degree, the Worshipful Master worked the first section of the lecture, (the answers by the brethren), and afterwards performed the ceremony of instruction, Bro. Clout being the candidate. The Worshipful Master afterwards worked the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh sections of the lecture. Two new members having been admitted, Bro. Lascelles was elected Worshipful Master for the ensuing week, and the Lodge was closed in due form with solemn prayer.

PROVINCIAL.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Gloster Lodge (No. 152).—The brethren held their usual monthly meeting at Freemasons' Hall, Bugle street, on Thursday evening, Sept. 8th, at seven o'clock, Bro. F. Perkins, W.M., presiding, supported by his officers and the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. C. E. Deacon; Bro. A. Fletcher, W.M. of Lodge Peace and Harmony; Bro. J. R. Stebbing, W.M. of Lodge Twelve Brothers, and a large attendance of members and visiting brethren. The principal business of the evening was the passing of Bro. William Digby Seymour (M.P. for Southampton) to the second degree. This was performed by the W.M. in his usual able and spirited manner, and after the transaction of some local business, about forty brethren sat down to banquet. The usual Masonic toasts were given and responded to in a very admirable manner. The health of Bro. Deacon, D. Prov. G.M., drew forth from that R.W. brother in reply, an exceedingly warm response, eulogizing in the most glowing terms the influences and advantages of Masonry. The health of the visiting brethren was responded to by Bro. Seymour, who said nothing could give him greater pleasure than the advancement in Masonry he had made that evening, it revealed fresh truths and again reminded him that Masonry was the means of inducing men of every clime and creed to meet in unity, not upon the narrow ground of party, but as members of the great human family, upon the broad basis of brotherly love, to keep alive and propagate those principles which teach man to halt at every step of his career, to reflect upon some great truth, to practise some great virtue, to scatter good around, to show that he lives for something more than himself. It was a pleasing thing to have a spot where men might meet free from those feelings which are engendered by party warfare, held sacred from the hostilities of the political world, where all came with one common object, and to practise brotherly love, relief, and truth. Several other speeches were made during the evening, and the brethren separated at an early hour, highly pleased with the proceedings.

LANCASHIRE WEST.

ROBY.—Alliance Lodge (No. 965).—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on the 6th inst., in consequence of the Worshipful Master having received requisitions from members of the Lodge to call a Lodge of Emergency to ballot for, and if approved, initiate, Messrs. Wm. Tyson, H. Unsworth, Thomas H. Williams, and Wm. H. B. Trego, who were leaving town. Accordingly an Emergency was called one hour previous to the regular meeting, and the above gentlemen were initiated into the mysteries of our Order by the Worshipful Master, Bro. G. A. W. Philipps, assisted by all his officers. The Lodge was then closed in due form, after which the regular Lodge was opened and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed. Two applicants, widows of deceased brethren, were relieved, a member proposed for initiation at the next monthly meeting, and, after some discussion relative to the finances of the Lodge, it was closed in due form and harmony. The brethren then adjourned to refreshment, and a pleasant evening was spent; there was some good singing by the Worshipful Master (who had composed a song for the occasion), and other brethren.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

The following Provincial Grand Officers were appointed, on Wednesday last, September 14th:—Bros. Wm. Kelly, reappointed D. Prov. G.M.; Frederick Goodyer, No. 766, P.M., S.G.W.; Edward Mammatt, No. 1081, W.M., (and P.M., No. 631), J.G.W.; Rev. J. O. Picton, M.A., No. 766, Rev. John Denton, M.A., No. 1081, reappointed G. Chaplains. Joseph Underwood, No. 348, P.M., reelected G. Treas.; Jos. B. Harby, solicitor, No. 348, G. Registrar; Charles Morris, solicitor, P.M. No. 348, G. Secretary; John Holland, jun., W.M. No. 348, S.G.D.; John Dennis Paul, No. 766, J.G.D.; William Millican, architect, P.M. No. 766, reappointed G. Supt. of Works; Robert Brewin, jun., S.W. No. 766, reappointed G. Dir. of Cera.; Alfred Cummings, S.W. No. 348, reappointed Assist. G. Dir. of Cera.; T. H. Robart, S.W. No. 1081, G. Sword Bearer; Geo. Aug. Löhr, No. 766, G. Organist; C. J. Willy, W.M. No. 766, G. Purs.; Marten Nedham, J.W. No. 348; Thomas Sheppard, J.W. No. 766; James Bonnell, No. 348; Harry J. Davis, J.W. Nos. 58 and 766; Thomas Harrold, No. 58, John Sloane, M.D., No. 348, Grand Stewards; James Bembridge, No. 348, Grand Tyler. A full report of the proceedings of the Provincial Grand Lodge will appear next week.

HINCKLEY.—Knights of Malta Lodge (No. 58).—The festival of this, the mother Lodge of the province, was held at the usual place of meeting, the Town Hall, and not "The Crown Inn" as stated in the Calendar. (It may here be observed that none of the Lodges in the province now meet at an hotel). In the absence of the Right Hon. Earl Howe, Prov. G.M., who had honoured the Lodge by accepting the Mastership a second year but who was prevented being present through illness, Bro. W. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M., presided. There were also present Bros. Cotman, P.M.; Cotterell, P.M.; May, P.M. and Sec.; H. J. Davis, J.W.; Harrold, S.D.; Atkins, I.G.; Watson, Ferriman, Homer, Morley, Goude, Wilson, S. Davis, T. W. Clarke, Holditch, S. Clarke, and McKenna. The Lodge having been opened and the minutes (including the election of W.M.), having been read and confirmed, the D. Prov. Grand Master, on behalf of the noble Worshipful Master, proceeded to invest the following brothers as officers for the ensuing year, impressing upon them the necessity of punctual attendance and strict attention to the duties of the Lodge, viz.: Bros. Harrold, S.W.; Langford Wilson, J.W.; W. May, P.M. Sec.; C. Watson, S.D.; T. Goadby, J.D.; T. Atkins, I.G. The D. Prov. Grand Master then initiated Mr. Thomas Preston, after which, the Lodge having been opened in the second degree, he passed Bro. Holditch, and subsequently raised Bros. T. W. Clarke and S. Davis to the third degree. On the resumption of business in the first degree, a gentleman was proposed as a candidate for initiation. The D. Prov. Grand Master then stated that during a recent visit to Jersey he had been entrusted by the learned author with a copy of Bro. Dr. Hopkins's Lectures on Freemasonry for presentation to the Lodge, and in delivering it into the hands of the members he strongly recommended it to their attentive perusal, as by the study of this and similar works their knowledge and appreciation of Masonry would be greatly increased. The brethren afterwards dined together under the presidency of Bro. Cotman, P.M., when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured, not forgetting the healths of the Prov. Grand Master, the D. Prov. Grand Master, and of Bro. H. J. Davis, of Leicester, the late J.W.

ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL CHAPTERS.

GIBRALTAR.—Calpean Chapter, attached to Lodge of Friendship (No. 345).—A meeting of this Chapter was held on the 3rd of September, for installation of Principals and officers elected last meeting, and for exaltation. Companion Charles O. Swain, Past H. of the Pythagoras Chapter No. 654, at Corfu, was duly installed M.E.Z. of this Chapter by E. Comp. Relph, P.Z. (D. Prov. G.M.), the other installations were Comps. Ingram, H.; Relph, J.; Warry, S.E.; Black, S.N.; McKittrick, P.S.; Weir, Treas.; Bentuko, Janitor. After which, Bros. G. Grant, 100th regiment; A. E. Rykert, 100th regiment; Captain Daubeney, 7th Royal Fusiliers; Hood, 25th A.D.C., all members of Lodge No. 345, were duly balloted for, unanimously elected, and regularly exalted to this supreme degree.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Chapter of Concord (No. 555).—A convocation of this Chapter was holden at the Freemasons' Hall, Southampton, on Wednesday, September 7th, 1859, under the presidency of the M.E.Z., Comp. H. Abraham, who was assisted by Comps. Page as H., and C. Bemister, J. Comp. G. W. Clarke, Scribe E., and several other Companions, were present. The minutes of the preceding regular and special convocations were read and confirmed. The following Companions were then nominated to office for the ensuing year:—W. Bemister, M.E.Z.; D. G. Douglas, H.; F. Perkins, J. (W.M., Royal Gloucester Lodge); G. W. Clarke, Scribe E.; T. R. Payne, Scribe N.; E. Booth, Principal Soj.; H. Abraham, Treas.; G. Lockyer, Janitor; J. Biggs, Assistant Janitor. Some discussion ensued on Comp. G. W. Clarke urging on the Companions the desirability of nominating deserving members of the Chapter to offices not previously held by them, and not to continue the same Companion in office during successive years. The M.E.Z. then delivered in a most impressive manner the historical and symbolical lectures, which were listened to with much attention and pleasure by the Companions. Comp. G. W. Clarke, Scribe E., proposed that the sum of £2 2s. be subscribed to the Firmin Memorial Fund, which was resolved upon. All business being concluded, the Chapter was closed in ancient form.

WATFORD CHAPTER (No. 580).—A convocation was holden on Monday, September 12, in the Freemasons' Hall, in Watford. Present: E. Comp. George Francis as Z.; Jeremiah How as H.; W.S. Tootel, J.; and there. The minutes of the preceding convocation of the Chapter, when the officers were elected, having been confirmed, Comp. How, at the request of the acting M.E.Z. installed Comp. Tootel in the chair of H., according to the established rites and ceremonies, and inducted into the chair of J. Comp. Burchell Herne, P.E.Z. Comp. Rogers, the Treas., Comp. Goodyer, E., and Comp. Davy, P.Soj., were also invested. Comp. Davy appointed Comps. Russell and Humbert his Assistants. An apology was made for the absence of the Grand Superintendent of the province, and also for his son, Comp. Major Stuart, whose nuptials were appointed for the ensuing day in Ireland. There being no other business, the Chapter was closed, and the Companions adjourned to the banquet, at which Comp. Francis presided, and the evening was spent with that love and harmony that characterizes all the Watford meetings.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL ENCAMPMENT.

GIBRALTAR.—Calpe Encampment.—A meeting of this Encampment was held in Freemasons' Hall, Glynn's Buildings, on Thursday, September 1st. Present, Sir Knights—Capt. C. M. Layton, E.C.; Dr. I. S. Williams, as First Captain; Capt. Wilson Black, as Second Captain; Ingram, Registrar; Newcome, as Expert; Weir, Captain of Lines; Swain, Ottawa, &c. Comps. J. P. Wilkinson and Capt. Henry Pears, both of the Calpean Chapter, No. 345, were regularly installed Knights Companions of the Order. The E. C. proceeded to state that as he was about to leave this station for a time, and there being no Past E.C. in the Encampment, he had called this emergency meeting with a view of installing their E.C. elect previous to his departure, so that should he not return, they would not be without a duly installed Commander to carry on the business. The Eminent Commander elect, Sir Knight I. S. Williams, having therefore been duly inducted, proceeded to fill up the vacant offices as follows:—Sir Knights Ingram, First Capt.; Capt. W. Black, Second Capt.; Swain, Registrar. The E. C. then moved that a vote of thanks be recorded on the minutes to their Past E.C., Sir Knight Layton, for the manner in which he had filled the chair since the constitution of the Encampment—to him it was under great obligations—in fact it was him they had to thank for its existence. Soon he (the E.C.) would be the only one left on the station of those who had signed the petition for the warrant; Sir Knight Drake, C.B., had followed the call of duty to another hemisphere.—Sir Knight Tripland, a sterner summons to another world—and now their Past E.C., Sir Knight Layton, was about to leave them for a time, perhaps for ever; and he could not let him go without recording for the information of the younger and of the future Knights of that Encampment, his sense of the zeal and ability displayed by Sir Knight Layton in organizing and commanding the Calpe, and his appreciation of the truly Masonic—he might add chivalric—principles upon which he had acted, and which, if followed up in the Encampment, must ensure its prosperity. The resolution having been carried by acclamation, the retiring Commander, in a few brief but appropriate words, took an affectionate leave of the Knights Companions, congratulated the E.C. on his assuming the command of a prosperous Encampment, thanked him for the support he had afforded him, without which he would not have been able to originate the Encampment—and the Companions generally for their aid, without which his endeavours would have been futile, and urged them to transfer that support most zealously to their present E.C. He left them with regret, but rejoiced to know that the command would be in able hands. Comp. Robt. C. Dalrymple Bruce, (Capt. H. M. 8th Regt.), of the Calpean Chapter, was then proposed as a candidate for admission, and the business being finished, the Knights adjourned to refreshment, at which the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, with those proper to the occasion, were duly honoured.

COLONIAL.

CANADA.

At the recent session of the Grand Lodge of Canada, the territory was divided as follows:

- "1. The London District, containing seventeen Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Essex, Kent, Lambton, Middlesex, and Elgin.
- "2. The Wilson District, containing thirteen Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Oxford, Norfolk, and Brant.
- "3. The Hamilton District, containing sixteen Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Halton, Wentworth, Lincoln, Haldimand, and Welland.
- "4. The Huron District, containing eight Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Huron, Perth, Bruce, Wellington, and Waterloo.
- "5. The Toronto District, containing nineteen Lodges, shall comprise the counties of York, Peel, Simcoe, and Gray.
- "6. The Ontario District, containing eleven Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Ontario, Durham, Victoria, Northumberland, and Peterboro.
- "7. The Central District, containing fifteen Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Frontenac, Leeds, Grenville, Stormont, Dundas, Glengarry, Lanark, Carleton, and Russel, and that part of Lower Canada west of the eastern boundary line.
- "8. The Prince Edward District, containing seven Lodges, shall comprise the counties of Prince Edward, Hastings, Lennox, Addington, and Renfrew.
- "9. The Montreal District, containing seven Lodges, shall comprise that part of Lower Canada east of the Central District, and to the north of the River St. Lawrence and west of the River Richlieu.
- "10. The Eastern Townships District, containing seven Lodges, shall comprise the counties in that part of Lower Canada lying south of the St. Lawrence and east of the Richlieu."

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

QUEENSTOWN.—St. John's day was commemorated on the 24th of June, by the brethren of the Craft, inhabitants of Queenstown division, who assembled to dine at Stubb's hotel. Bro. Hutchons, British Lodge, No. 419, and Bro. Best, Albany Lodge, No. 545, were requested to act as chairman and vice-chairman of the meeting. After the cloth was removed, the chairman gave the usual loyal and patriotic toasts in his accustomed cordial and eloquent manner, which were duly responded to. He then called on Bro. Dr. Mack, for the toast of the evening, viz.:—"Success to the Antient Order of Freemasons all over the world." In the course of his short address the Doctor referred to the grand principles of the Order as being identical with those words of sacred writ:—"What ye would that men should do unto you do ye also unto them," and "Bear ye one another's burdens." "But," he added, "I cannot blind myself by my attachment to our Order to various abuses which, after Lodge hours, are allowed to creep in amongst us. We have done good—witness our Freemasons' Orphan Asylums, containing at the present time orphans of deceased Freemasons to the number of 150—clothed, educated, and also provided for with comfortable situations in after life—ask, have we not done good? But look at others, who forgetting the just use of our society, have made it only the means (after Masonic observances have been duly concluded) an excuse of meeting for other purposes of a decidedly opposite nature." Various other brothers followed in like strain, re-echoing the same sentiments and agreed that right steps should be taken to found a Lodge of Freemasons in accordance with such views. Bro. Hutchons was unanimously requested to prepare himself for the discharge of the duties of Worshipful Master, which, after great reluctance he accepted, and nominated as officers, Bros. Linton, Best Wilson, Norden Heise, and Ward, and Bro. Mack, as Secretary—who all agreed to accept office. Their last resolution was to the effect that Bros. Hutchons and Mack were to apply to the Colonial government for the grant of a piece of ground for the erection of a Masonic Hall.

AMERICA.

GRAND LODGE OF NEW YORK.

THE annual communication of the Grand Lodge of this State was holden on the 7th July, Bro. John L. Lewis, M.W.G.M. presiding. The Grand Master's address is interesting, and those portions which referred to the union of 1858 were received in a very marked and feeling manner, and with great emotion. Upon certain questions of Masonic jurisprudence the Grand Master dwelt at considerable length, and with great force and clearness, and the opinions there delivered will be found of very great benefit to all active officials of subordinate Lodges, and of great interest in a governmental point of view to the whole fraternity. Foreign relations were briefly touched upon, and the gratifying intelligence given that we were on terms of amity with the whole world, and in full communication with each jurisdiction. The address contained an allusion to the effort which has been made to establish a National Grand Lodge. The matter came up under a consideration of the General Conventions of Masons, which have been, and are about to be held in America. The Grand Master's subordinate officers received kindly notices and thanks for the able manner in which they sustained him, and laboured for the prosperity of the Craft during the year, and in the foreground of his eulogies was placed the name of the R.W. Deputy G. Master, John W. Simons. How well this marked notice was deserved is known to all who have had official relations with the recipient of the compliments referred to.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MONUMENT TO THE PILGRIM FATHERS AT PLYMOUTH.

THE corner stone of the structure to be erected on the Forefathers' Rock, at Plymouth (U. S.), was laid on the 2nd August, by the Grand Master of the State of Massachusetts.

The Grand Lodge met in the Hall of the Plymouth Lodge at eight in the morning, and marched thence to the spot where the ceremony was to be performed. On their arrival, after appropriate prayers, the Most Worshipful Grand Master addressed the President of the Pilgrim Society as follows:—

"To celebrate the deeds of the benefactors of mankind is a service dictated alike by gratitude and benevolent desire to transmit the blessings of their examples to posterity. The memory of the good and brave, whose virtues and exploits challenge admiration and homage, should be honoured and perpetuated; and the establishment of institutions affecting happily the welfare of our race, is eminently worthy of commemoration. A people capable of greatness will not forget the virtues of their fathers; reverently will they cherish them, and gratefully present them in all their lustre for the respect and imitation of after ages. Impressed with sentiments like these, we are assembled here to-day to solemnize an undertaking designed to perpetuate the renown of that fearless band—the first settlers of New England. It was here on this spot, then the border of a wilderness nearly as vast as the continent, where they landed on the 21st of December, 1620. Here, therefore, it is appropriate that a national monument to their memory should be erected; a work which, we are happy to see, has been commenced under the most flattering prospects of success. To the Pilgrim Society belongs the honour of initiating this grateful and patriotic enterprise: and under its auspices it will be, we doubt not, triumphantly accomplished. In compliance with your courteous invitation to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts to lay this corner-stone, that body will now discharge that agreeable duty according to the ancient usages of the Craft. It is not known, Sir, that any of the passengers of the Mayflower were Freemasons: certainly no record of the fact has been discovered. But since it is well authenticated that our institution was in a flourishing condition in England in 1620, it is not improbable that some members of a society which from the earliest times has been tolerant as regards modes of religious worship, should have united with the members of the Church of the Pilgrims and fled with them from the persecutions inflicted on dissenters by the established church. That there are no accounts extant of private or subordinate Lodges in the earlier days of the colonies, is not to be taken as evidence that none then existed in them. In the constitution of a Lodge previous to the past century it was not necessary that its existence and proceedings should have official or durable record: it received no warrant or charter from the General Assembly—the Grand Lodge of that time; nor were its meetings confined to any particular time or place: it is not to be wondered at, that under these circumstances, and after a lapse of two centuries, all traces of it should be obliterated. Thus it is apparent that a Lodge might have existed even in the Mayflower, and been composed of pilgrims, without the knowledge of their associates or posterity. The principles of Freemasonry are in no way incompatible with the professions of the forefathers in morals or religious belief, but, on the contrary, are such as would have been approved and vindicated by them. It will not be out of place for me to mention here a coincidence derived from the history of our Society and that of the first settlers. I allude to the fact that two of the Grand Masters of England were members of the "Council established at Plymouth" by the Great Patent which passed the Seals on the 3rd of November, 1620, and became the foundation of all subsequent grants of territory in New England. They were William, the third Earl of Pembroke, and Thomas Earl of Arundel. The former was Chancellor of the University of Oxford and Lord Chamberlain of the King's household; the latter, Earl Marshal of the realm. Pembroke, who was Senior Grand Warden under the Grand Mastership of Inigo Jones, his friend, and a celebrated architect, succeeded him as Grand Master in 1618, and continued to preside over the fraternity until the time of his death in 1630. Arundel was elected to the office in 1633, and filled it for a period of two years. It is worthy of remembrance that, though the Plymouth Company possessed the privileges of a monopoly—it having exclusive right by its patent to all the lands in New England—the members of the Council were lenient in their measures affecting the colonists. Towards the pilgrims, especially, they showed much liberality. The latter, compelled by treachery to settle on this spot, instead of that further to the south which they had selected before their departure from Europe, found themselves without privileges within the territorial limits of the Plymouth Company. The Council did not, however, look upon them as trespassers, but, through the influence of one of its number, caused a patent to be issued in their favour. This generous act of the Government of the Company indicates that its counsels were controlled by sentiments of humanity—by sentiments of brotherly love, such as might be supposed would have influenced the action of those members of it, at least, who were Masons. On former occasions the fraternity have been called upon to consecrate by their rites statues and other memorials erected in honour of the distinguished dead. To the illustrious Washington, to Franklin, Warren, Jackson, Clay—esteemed and venerated of our countrymen, esteemed and venerated also as Freemasons—have lasting monuments been reared, whose commencement and completion have been thus signalized. But it is not to eminent characters who were of us alone that our ceremonials of honour are confined: we recognize and respect exalted worth in whomsoever it exists or has existed, and are always ready, as a society, to manifest our appreciation of it. Important events like that we are now commemorating, which have promoted the progress and improvement of general society and conferred great benefits on the intellectual, moral, and religious well-being of men, may be celebrated with great propriety by Masons with all the distinction which their ceremonies can bestow. This occasion naturally carries our thoughts back to the times of the forefathers, and suggests the recital of their trials and sufferings and triumphant struggle for religious freedom; but this duty I leave to others to perform. Though that instructive tale has been often told with power and beauty by the historian, orator, and poet, until it has become familiar to all, still it is not a worn-out tale—its reiteration never falls upon listless ears, or fails to move the sympathies and arouse the patriotic feelings of an American audience. The Pilgrim Monument will be one of the most imposing and beautiful monumental works in the world. The design, so creditable to the taste and genius of the artist, prefigures a structure of vast, yet harmonious proportions. While it will mark the place of the first settlement of New England, it will, also, by inscriptions, devices, and sculpture, signalize the leading events in the lives of the forefathers, and, by appropriate figures, symbolize their cherished principles. May it endure for ages, and decay only when our descendants shall cease to appreciate their rich inheritance of civil and religious liberty.

The stone was then laid in due form, and the Grand Master said. Brother Architect,—It is with much pleasure that I inform you that this foundation, so skilfully and faithfully constructed, meets with the entire approbation of the Grand Lodge. They commend, also, the design and working plans for the superstructure, and trust that your earnest desire for its successful completion will be fully gratified. To your hands are these implements confided, and may the Supreme Architect prosper, counsel, and direct you in all your doings.

The proceedings closed with the usual benediction.

The following is a description of the monument and the site upon which it is to be erected:—

"The design consists of an octagon pedestal, on which stands a statue of Faith. From the four smaller faces of the pedestal project buttresses, upon which are seated figures emblematic of Morality, Education, Law, and Liberty. Below them, in panels, are alto-reliefs of 'The Departure from Delft-Haven,' 'The Signing of the Social Compact in the cabin of the May Flower,' 'The Landing at Plymouth,' and 'The First Treaty with the Indians.' Upon the four large faces of the main pedestal are large panels, to contain records of the principal events in the history of the Pilgrims, with the names of those who came over in the May Flower, and below are smaller panels for records connected with the society and the building of the monument.

A chamber within the pedestal, 26 feet in diameter, and well lighted, is to be a depository for all documents, &c., relating to the pilgrims and the Society. In this chamber will be a stairway leading to the platform upon which stands the figure of Faith, from which may be seen all the places of interest connected with the history of the forefathers. The whole monument will be about 150 feet high, and 80 feet at the base. The statue of Faith rests her foot upon the Forefather's Rock; in her left hand she holds an open Bible; with the right uplifted she points to Heaven. Looking downward, as to those she is addressing, she seems to call them to trust in a higher power. The sitting figures are emblematic of the principles upon which the pilgrims proposed to found their commonwealth. The first of these is morality. She holds the decalogue in her left, and the scroll of revelation in her right hand. Her look is upward, toward the impersonation of the spirit of religion above. In a niche, on one side of her throne, is a prophet, and in the other, one of the evangelists. The second of these figures is Law. On one side of his seat is Justice; on the other, Mercy. The third is Education. In the niche, on one side of her seat, is Wisdom, ripe with years; on the other, Youth, led by Experience. The fourth figure is Freedom. On one side, Peace rests under his protection; on the other, Tyranny is overthrown by his prowess.

The statue of Faith will be 70 feet high, and the sitting figures 48 feet high, thus making it in magnitude the greatest work of the kind in the world; while, as a work of art, it is believed it will afford pleasure to every American citizen.

The monument is to be erected on one of the lofty hills that skirt the village of Plymouth, and which, from its prominence, can be seen from all points by persons visiting the first settlement of the Pilgrim Fathers of New England. At the same time its site is so commanding that almost all the objects of interest relating to pilgrim history, and the lives of our forefathers, can be readily seen from its elevated base.

AMERICAN ITEMS.

[From Rob Morris's Voice of Masonry.]

OXFORD, MISSOURI.—On Monday, July 4th, the corner stone of a new Masonic Hall was planted. At half-past three o'clock a procession was formed, and marched to the Cumberland Church, when Bro. Wm. F. Stearns delivered an address. At half-past five o'clock the procession was reformed and marched to the site of the new hall. A block of marble about a foot square, with a vault morticed in it, covered with a light marble lid, was prepared as the foundation or corner stone. In the vault was deposited a copy of the Constitution of the United States; the Bible; the Charter of Oxford Lodge, No. 33; and other articles.

PORTSMOUTH, NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The fraternity here have just finished a new, convenient and beautiful hall. The opening was celebrated with a capital supper, at which some sixty had seats.

FOX LAKE, WISCONSIN.—The brethren here are fitting up a room, which they think will be ahead of anything in the state. Good for them.

MANCHESTER, NEW HAMPSHIRE.—On May 11th, the annual communication of Lafayette Lodge, choice of officers and the transaction of regular business took place. About fifty members were present. After the regular business, and before the choice of officers, the W. Master, Henry T. Mowatt, delivered an address to the Lodge, which was replete with sound and practical truths and illustrations. After the election of officers, the Lodge being called from labour to refreshment, adjourned to the banquet hall. In the evening the officers were installed by W. D. District G.M. Edward W. Harrington, present Mayor of the city. After the installation, to which the sisters were invited, and which they attended, a presentation was made to P.M. Bro. Mowatt, by the young Masons initiated during his administration, of a splendid copy of Lipincott's edition of the Holy Bible.—[Do the American Constitutions sanction the presence of ladies at installations, Bro. Morris? Such a proceeding would not be tolerated here, and if it is in the United States we are afraid our American brethren will soon find themselves outside the landmarks.]

OSKALOOSA, IOWA.—East Hall, in Union Block, has been fitted up and furnished, and Tri-luminar and SeEVERS Lodges hold their meetings in it. On Thursday, the 7th of July, they had a public installation of officers, which was witnessed by a large audience of ladies and gentlemen.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—On the 15th of June last, a Lodge of Perfection and Council of Princes of Jerusalem, were established in that city, by Bro. K. H. Van Rensseler, S. G. Inspector General 33rd, and Deputy of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

WALDRON, ARKANSAS.—The first Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons in this county was organized on Saturday, June 11th, A.D. 1859, A.L. 5839, with eleven members. Very few Masons in Scott county—about thirteen. The nearest Chapter is at Fort Smith, fifty miles.

SOUTH AMERICA.

BUENOS AYRES.

EXCELSIOR LODGE (No. 900).—The annual festival in this city on St. John the Baptist's Day passed off with, if possible, more than its usual characteristics of harmony and true fraternal association. The brethren assembled in the Lodge room soon after three o'clock, p.m., to assist at the installation of Bro. Frederick Hughes, who had again obtained the suffrages of his brethren as Worshipful Master, in token of their high appreciation of his rule during the past year.

The immediate ceremony of the installation having been concluded, the Worshipful Master appointed his officers for the ensuing year. His choice fell on Bro. J. P. Boyd for S.W.; J. C. Ruding, J.W.; F. Wells, Sec.; W. C. Livingstone, S.D.; R. B. Masefield, J.D.; W. Passman, I.G. The brethren had previously chosen Bro. W. C. Thompson, P.M., for their Treas., and Bro. F. Sanguino for Tyler. These brethren were severally addressed by the Installing Master, and invested with the distinctive badge of their respective offices.

Many visitors were present as deputations from Lodges in the city working under the Scotch rite, who were deeply impressed with the simplicity and beauty of the ceremony of installation, which was conducted by Bro. Ford, P.M. and Chaplain. The close of the ceremony was marked by a pleasing incident. Bro. W. Petty, J.W., during the past year having obtained permission to address the Worshipful Master, in the name of the brethren, presented him with an elegant and chaste silver tea service as a mark of their regard and a memento of his having entered the holy state of matrimony during the period of his year of office. Bro. Petty spoke to the following effect:

"Worshipful Sir,—It is not a matter of deeper regret to any one more than to myself that the allotment of this duty falls upon me. A feeling of a far higher order than mere pleasure pervades the entire brotherhood of the Excelsior Lodge, and seeks utterance and expression. It is no new feeling—it is the growth of years. The occasion on which we seek to give expression to this feeling is one devoted to the demonstration of good cheer in all lands and in all ages. You, Worshipful Sir, were the first of the many who have so effectively filled our highest seat of office, who, while presiding over our councils, have entered into the mystic bonds of another and a sacred order. When you joined the Masonic Order, you set an example that the whole world might follow and derive benefit from; and now that you have entered the holy estate of matrimony, you set an example to your unmarried brethren of the Excelsior, which if they do not follow, must be because they are under a ban to finish their journey through life alone. Permit me, now, Worshipful Master, in the name of the Excelsior, to transfer to you this inadequate expression of their brotherly love. May the purity of the material be the emblem of the Masonic virtues and purity of the recipient; and the hovering dove,* the emblem of abiding peace."

The Worshipful Master replied as follows:—

"I need scarcely assure you, my brethren, that I am deeply moved and affected by this flattering mark of your kindness and regard; and the more so since no services of mine to the Craft in general, or to this Lodge in particular, have merited or called forth so unexpected and so unlooked for a demonstration from my brethren of the Excelsior Lodge. It is in truth a lordly and a Masonic gift; it is the spontaneous and willing offering of brother to brother, proclaiming that in these temples to modest virtue, where we are taught and encouraged to weep with them that weep, we forget not also to rejoice with them that do rejoice. It is a testimonial of affection and regard, which manifests the good wishes of my brethren towards me and mine, upon my entering into the holy estate of wedlock during my year of office in the chair of this Lodge. What can I say to you, my brethren, in return for the kindness which prompted you to bestow upon me a gift at once so munificent and so useful? I can only thank you. But believe me, it is the thankfulness of a deeply grateful heart, that feels more, much more than it is able at this moment to express, and which, when the excitement which your unlooked for generosity has created shall have subsided, will be able more truly to appreciate, and more justly to value, your kindness, in the assurance it will at all times serve to convey to me of the fraternal regard and kind sympathy of those in whose councils of brotherly love, relief, and truth I have so often mingled. Yes! my brethren, I receive your kind gift as a precious jewel, to hold an elevated position among my household goods: proud of the kind distinction it reflects upon myself, and still more of the memento it will serve for, to present and future generations—bearing its powerful witness to show forth, that while brotherly love is one of our principles of profession, testimonials of its practical.

* The ornament on the lids of the several pieces.

demonstration are on every side, and in every place, to be found. Allow me, my brethren, in conclusion, to add a few words more in behalf of one who cannot come here to speak for herself, and who, I can assure you, will fully participate in my surprise and gratitude for your kindness on this occasion. I feel quite safe in assuring you that my wife most warmly thanks you for her share in the good wishes and kind feelings you have so courteously and so handsomely manifested in her favour, and will, I am confident, ever feel proud of this distinction from those whom her husband has so much reason, as well as duty, to address by the endearing name of brothers."

The brethren, to the number of about fifty, subsequently adjourned to the Province Hotel, where an adequate entertainment was provided by Bro. Preaux. The cloth having been removed, the Worshipful Master, in appropriate addresses, proposed the "Queen and the Craft," "The Most Worshipful Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland," "The Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master, Lord Panmure," "The Governor of the land in which we dwell, and the speedy advancement and elevation of this country amongst the nations of the globe." In proposing the next toast, "The steady and progressive development of Freemasonry around us, and the health of Bro. Perez," the Worshipful Master said,— "The steady and progressive development of pure and ancient Freemasonry must ever be a subject near and dear to every faithful brother's heart. I say steady and progressive development, in opposition to that rapid and instantaneous growth which too often precedes an early decay, and indicating that what we wish for others, is only what we desire for ourselves—the purest and the best. Our annual banquet has now, my brethren, for some years past, been honoured with the presence of guests, to whom we have at all times gladly extended the right hand of fellowship, and hailed by the endearing name of brother, and if the restrictions laid upon us by our Constitutions preclude our going beyond this, yet I feel assured they justly value the simplicity of the title we extend to them, demonstrated as it has been with the practical exhibition of the ties and duties it embraces; to comprehend, that although separated by rites, and under other jurisdiction, the fraternal chord of brotherly love, relief and truth, unites us with them in the holy cause of Masonic excellence; and the extension and diffusion of its principles among the natives of the land we dwell in must ever be a source of sincere joy and heartfelt satisfaction to the Excelsior Lodge. And, with the rest of that society whose branches are spread over the four divisions of the globe, we must ever regard with grateful satisfaction, to venerate and to love, those who have fostered and yet continue the culture of Acacia in those widely extended plains, devoting their time, their strength, and their talents—spent, and being spent, in the burden and heat of the day—in promoting the growth of that plantation, which it may be hoped will yield a glorious harvest, in establishing and cementing the peace, prosperity and happiness of the soil, which marks their birth and infant nurture."

"Brethren, I give you the health of the W.M., Bro. Perez, and his colleagues, united with our best wishes for the steady and progressive development of pure and Antient Freemasonry around us."

Bro. Perez acknowledged this toast with his usual eloquence and warm feeling, assuring the brethren of the high regard and deep respect with which the native brethren look up to the Excelsior Lodge.

Bro. W. C. Thompson, P.M., then proposed "The health of the Worshipful Master." In acknowledging the toast the Worshipful Master said—"Brethren, I rise to thank you for having so cordially and warmly responded to the toast just given. My unavoidable absence from the country kept me from you six out of the twenty-three evenings which mark the total number of our meetings during the past year, which I truly regret; but what I have seen and experienced of the duties demanded and required from the brother who fills the chair, has convinced me how manifold have been my short comings, how inferior my abilities, and how numerous my defects for the adequate performance and profitable discharge of the office of Master of the Excelsior Lodge."

"Your suffrages have again called me to preside and rule over you, and in all sincerity I say it, I would that your selection had fallen on some one else; but since we are taught as a Masonic duty that our 'obedience must be proved by a ready acquiescence in all votes and resolutions duly passed by a majority of the brethren,' and as my insufficiencies are not unknown to you, I have accepted the distinction allotted to me by my brethren, truly sincere in my desire to do my best, and in the words with which I appealed to you at our last banquet. Trusting to your support and co-operation to enable me rightly to discharge the responsible duties attached to an office at once so honourable and so high: for in unity I regard our strength."

"During the year that is passed there is much that I have to lament in having left undone what I wished to have done, to increase our Masonic knowledge, but have not been able from the calls made upon our time by the increase that has taken place in the number of initiations, passings, and raisings, which having considerably advanced upon preceding years may be regarded, I think, as a hopeful sign that our Lodge, if it has not arrived at that eminence we desire to see it attain to, has nevertheless progressed, and not unreasonably will admit the expectation to be entertained that it will continue to advance yet higher and higher in Masonic perfection, so that our name, our beautiful name of Excelsior may finally become a watchword and a beacon of love, of unity, and of honour; but before we can attain the end we aim at, there is much, very much to be done; and although this is not a time or place to read you a homily upon Masonic duties, yet I may be permitted to remind some of you that the inspection of our register of attendance serves to show that although the looked for harvest before us is great, yet the labourers are still few, and that on our nights of meeting, many seats in our temple are vacant which ought to be filled."

"Our Book of Constitutions tells us, that 'Every Brother ought to belong to some Lodge, and be subject to its by-laws, and the general regulations of the Craft.' A Lodge may be either general or particular, as will be best understood by attending it; and there a knowledge of the established usages and customs of the Craft is alone to be acquired. From ancient times no Master or Fellow could be absent from his Lodge, especially when warned to appear at it, without incurring a severe censure, unless it appeared to the Master and Wardens that pure necessity hindered him.' Pardon me, brethren, in thus adverting to an unpleasant matter at this moment: it is your welfare that prompts me to take advantage of an opportunity I should not wish to lose altogether, by waiting for a more convenient season; and I am sure you would not desire to continue wanting in your fidelity to those laws you have solemnly pledged yourselves to observe. It is unity that I ask of you: it is brotherly love that I demand, when I seek the united, constant, and persevering labour of all our workmen, to draw near with willing hands in the task of cementing and beautifying our Lodge, by the culture of every moral and social virtue, in example, as well as in precept, that standing alone as it does, far removed from its sisters scattered over our native land, it may yet, in its particular and simple rite, remain bright and shining in modest virtue, lowly in its own eyes, but at no distant period, I trust, with many witnesses to attest to its zeal for the Order; that so its Masonic Hall, its Masonic Club, its Masonic Library, its Masonic Charities, may cause it to be beloved and esteemed by the brethren both far and near, and ever respected and regarded alike by all as the abode of love, of holiness, and of truth. Yes, brethren, my ambition is high, my desires are great for the Excelsior Lodge, and ardently as I desire the welfare of the Craft in general, my heart yearns in an especial manner for the onward, higher course of our own particular Lodge. I wish to see it foremost in the rank of all that is good, of all that is lovely, of all that is virtuous, and like the sun that shines above us, giving a genial heat and warmth to all it rests upon, dispensing health and vigour, and diffusing life, cheerfulness, and joy to gladden the hearts of the evil as well as the good, so in a similar, though more humble sphere, do I wish to see the Excelsior brethren up and doing, strict to their vows, true to their principles, and just alike to all, that so running the race they may win the prize."

The Worshipful Master resumed his seat amid general and prolonged applause.

The health of "The P.M.s. of the Excelsior Lodge," of "The Worshipful Master, Wardens, and Officers of the Lodge," Amie des Naufragis, of "The Past Officers of the Excelsior" followed.

In proposing "Prosperity to the Benevolent Fund," Bro. J. P. Boyd, S.W., gracefully and feelingly alluded to the obligations the Excelsior Lodge is under to Bro. Samuel Hesse, its late treasurer and first Master, and warmly urged upon the brethren to let their Benevolent Fund be ever in a position to illustrate, practically, that prominent feature of their profession—charity.

Bro. Billingham, W.M. of the Lodge Regeneration followed, and in warm and hearty words proposed "Prosperity to the Excelsior Lodge, No. 900." In acknowledging the toast, the Worshipful Master read some interesting statistics indicating the growth of the Lodge, and the interest in its working evinced by its members. Various other toasts followed, ably proposed and suitably acknowledged, the last being the usual one of "All poor and distressed Masons, &c.," which drew forth a handsome contribution to the charitable funds of the Lodge, and closed this auspicious meeting in a manner befitting the social harmony and fraternal feeling which pervaded it.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The royal family continue in good health at Balmoral in semi-privacy. The Queen and her daughters ride and drive about the neighbourhood, and occasionally assist at the Prince Consort's deer-stalking exhibitions. Sir George Grey is the Secretary of State in waiting upon the Queen, and there have been scarcely any other visitors to her Majesty this week. The Prince of Wales has left Holyrood and joined his parents at Balmoral. It is delightful to learn, from the columns of our brilliant contemporary, the Court Journal, that "it is said that the young prince has enjoyed his residence at Edinburgh very much." Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, Helena, and Louisa, and Prince Arthur were present at a ball given by her Majesty and the Prince Consort to the gillies, and keepers of the Balmoral and neighbouring properties.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor and Empress of the French have left St. Sauveur for Biarritz. They were received with enthusiastic acclamations by the populace everywhere along their passage. The Prince Chimay has arrived at Biarritz, and has taken up his quarters at the magnificent Chateau d'Ardoin, which he has hired for the reception of the King of the Belgians. His Majesty travels under the name of Comte de Later. Count Walewski was to leave on the 17th inst. for Biarritz, and an interview between the Emperor Napoleon and King Leopold was to take place on the 14th inst. An article from the Siecle is particularly deserving of attention, as the Siecle has hitherto exhibited a friendly feeling towards our country, and has shown an earnest anxiety for the maintenance of the English alliance. The article is written in the same spirit with that which dictated the threatening letter in the Independence Belge. According to this article nothing short of our humiliation will satisfy France, and then we shall understand the meaning of the phrase, "When France is satisfied, Europe is tranquil!" The Independence Belge gives a circumstantial account of the mode in which Prince Napoleon is to have a kingdom cut out for him, under the title of the "Kingdom of Etruria;" but our Paris correspondent observes, that although the idea is credited in various well-informed quarters, he believes that the Prince himself is strenuously opposed to it. The article in the Moniteur, on the Napoleonic policy in Italy, occupied the press of the French capital to the exclusion of almost every other subject. Great anxiety prevailed as to the effect it would produce in Italy. It cannot fail to cause great discontent there, as everything led the Italians to suppose that their destiny was in their own hands. Victor Emmanuel was disbanding his army; but the men were supplied with passports for Tuscany and Modena, where it was thought they would swell Garibaldi's army. It is asserted that France and England will make a joint expedition against China. It is also rumoured that the Governments of France and England have both agreed that it will be necessary to hold a Congress for the settlement of the Italian question.—The official portion of the Wiener Zeitung contains an Imperial decree for the regulation of the Protestant churches in Hungary, the Waywodschaft, Croatia, Slavonia, and of the military boundary district. The non-official part of the same paper contains an article promising that great concessions will be made to the Protestants of all other provinces. A Protestant member has already been elected to the Consistory of Vienna. Baron Bach, formerly Minister of the Interior, and lately appointed Ambassador to Rome, is about to leave for that city. The Wiener Zeitung of Tuesday, in its non-official portion, publishes an article expressing satisfaction with the article of the Moniteur, which contains advice for the inhabitants of Central Italy. It further states that, in considering the state of affairs in Italy from this point of view, the Moniteur increases the hopes for peace, and banishes the fears which had been entertained till now.—A letter from Berlin of the 10th states that the health of the King of Prussia has improved, both mentally and bodily.—M. Ricasoli has reviewed the National Guard at Florence, and published an order of the day thanking them in the name of the country and of the King for their attitude and their discipline, and expressing confidence in the future. He adds that his hope is that the National Guard, with the troops, will support the wishes of the country. The people assembled cried "Long live the King."—The Milanese are celebrating their delivery from the Austrian domination in a spirit that shows their love for their new sovereign. On the subject of Tuscany the Italian journals are united in favour of its annexation to Piedmont.—The National Assembly of Bologna has decreed that all those who have governed in the Romagna from the 12th of June till the present time have deserved well of their country; the ratification of the title and authority of M. Cipriani, as governor-general, with responsible ministers; that full powers be conferred on M. Cipriani for the preservation of order in the interior, and for the defence of the country; that M. Cipriani be charged to co-operate energetically for the accomplishment of the wishes of the assembly to procure a more intimate union with the other provinces of Central Italy; and that to M. Cipriani is given the faculty of proroguing and re-convocting the National Assembly. One hour afterwards the Minister of Grace and Justice read a decree for the prorogation of the assembly.—The National Assembly of Parma, in its sittings of Monday, voted unanimously, and by ballot, the annexation of the provinces of Parma to the kingdom of Sardinia, under the sceptre of the glorious dynasty of Savoy. A solemn silence reigned in the hall of the assembly during the voting, but at the proclamation of the result of the ballot enthusiastic cheers and loud vivas to Victor Emmanuel burst forth from all parts. The assembly has chosen five deputies to convey the wishes of the population to the King of Sardinia. All proposals made in yesterday's sitting have been adopted unanimously, and the following motions have been taken into consideration:—The confirmation of Signor Farini as dictator; the promulgation of the statutes of Sardinia; and the formation of a fund for the assistance of the Venetian volunteers.—M. Parisi, ex-secretary in the cabinet of Francis V., Duke of Modena, M. Guerra, keeper of the privy archives, and M. Solieri, ex-secretary general of the late ministry for foreign affairs, have acknowledged before a notary the authenticity of the writing of the two letters from Francis V., slandering the Emperor Napoleon, France, and other western powers. This declaration is in reply to the article in the French Pays.—The government of Zurich have invited all the plenipotentiaries to an excursion in steamers on the lake of Zurich. The Grand Duke of Baden will, before leaving, assist at a breakfast of the plenipotentiaries, to be given at the Hotel Bauer. The conferences are suspended for the present, until Count Colloredo receives fresh instructions from Vienna. Count Wimpffen, secretary of the Austrian embassy at Naples, has arrived on a visit to Count Colloredo. The Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden, with their son and suite, have arrived here.—News received from the Caucasus to the 26th of August states that the Circassian chief Schayml has been made prisoner and is to be sent to St. Petersburg.—The Madrid journals of the 8th state that six battalions of Spanish troops had landed at Ceuta, and that an attack had been made on the Moors. The papers say that should a grand expedition be sent to Morocco, the Infante Don Sebastian, who recently recognized the queen, will have an important command. Some journals publish articles on the necessity of taking Gibraltar from the English, no matter by what means. Letters received from Madrid to the 5th inst., state that the English ambassador had addressed inquiries to the government of Spain concerning the concentration of Spanish troops in Algeiras. The reply of Spain is said to have been drawn up with great courtesy, but did not fully explain the reasons of the concentration of troops at this point.—The Moniteur of Wednesday, in an article containing the details of the late treachery of the Chinese, concludes thus: "The Government of the Emperor and that of Great Britain are about to take measures together to inflict chastisement and obtain every satisfaction which so flagrant an act of treachery requires."—The principal inhabitants of Turin have presented an address to the head of the municipality of that city, in which they state that the people of Italy should make known in France the feelings of gratitude they entertain towards the Emperor Napoleon, by erecting a monument in Paris at their expense, expressive of those feelings. They request the Syndic of the municipality to take the initiative for the accomplishment of this universal desire. The committee is to be composed of the Syndics and Mayors of the principal towns in the kingdom, thus representing the whole population of Sardinia.—It is stated that the Papal Nuncio is seeking for recruits in Venice, and that the men who enlist under the Pope's banner are conveyed gratis to Ancona in Austrian bottoms. This looks very like garrisoning Ancona with Austrian troops.—The Madrid journals of the 9th have arrived. They state that on the receipt of the news of the death of the Emperor of Morocco a cabinet council was held, and, at its rising, orders "of the highest importance" were sent to the commanders of the troops assembled at Algeiras; but what those orders were could not be ascertained. Advice received from Tangiers state that no serious disturbances had taken place in any part of the territory of Morocco, and that Sidi Mohammed was on march from Morocco to Fez. Sidi Mohammed had been proclaimed Emperor at Fez, Mequinez, Tetuan, and Arabas, and he was about to be proclaimed Emperor at Tangiers. A message received from Tunis states that the Bey of Tunis had been attacked with serious illness, and the French physician had been summoned to his aid. A second message received from the above city states that he had been attacked with erysipelas in the left side, and that hopes were entertained of his recovery.

INDIA AND CHINA.—We have received advices from Calcutta to the 8th of August, and from Hong-Kong to the 19th July. The news from the former is not of very great importance; but we regret to learn that the defection of the local European troops in Bengal continues unabated, and that the Indian army is "every day decreasing in numbers." Lord Clyde, in general orders, warns Europeans of the disadvantage of taking discharge. Only a few have withdrawn their names. The number of discharged in Bengal will reach 6000. The Sikhs on the Nepal frontiers have had two successful engagements with rebels. Some excitement exists among the Mahomedans of the Punjab; and the 5th and 6th regiments of Madras Cavalry have shown symptoms of disaffection at Hyderabad. The telegraph from Kurrachee to Lahore is completed. The civil employes have raised objections to the threatened diminution of their salaries. The Commander-in-Chief has issued an order of the day in which he addresses the European troops in a warning manner. The rebel fugitives in the mountains of Nepal number about 8000 men.—From China the news is most disastrous. The allied expedition, under Admiral Hope, arrived off the Peiho River on the 17th of June, and found that the fortifications had been rebuilt, but no guns or men were visible. The entrance into the river was barred with booms and stakes. The plenipotentiaries joined the squadron on the 20th, and no notice having been taken of the announcement of their arrival, an attempt was made on the 25th to force a passage, when, on a sudden, batteries, supported by a Mongol force, of apparently 20,000 men, were unmasked, and opened a destructive fire. After a severe action the squadron was obliged to withdraw with the loss of the Cormorant, Lee, and Plover, and 464 killed and wounded. The French had 14 killed and wounded out of 60. The plenipotentiaries have returned to Shanghai; the rest of China is reported quiet. No fears are entertained about Canton, but the Tartar troops had been disarmed as a matter of precaution. A further telegram received from Her Majesty's agent and consul-general in Egypt, mentions that seven officers were killed, and seventeen wounded. Admiral Hope, Captains Shadwell and Vansittart are mentioned as being wounded. The squadron has returned. It is stated that the American ambassador has been admitted to Peking. The hope of the treaty being carried out is given up, and a fresh war is considered imminent at Canton. All traffic with the interior is interrupted. The allies still occupy the town. The action at the Peiho was fought with the greatest heroism on the part of the British. Admiral Hope, who was severely wounded in the early part of the day, refused to leave the deck, or give up the command, until completely disabled by a second injury. The Chinese fortifications and artillery were evidently designed by Europeans or Americans; it is said that Russian gunners were seen at work in the forts, and the word of command given in Russian was recognized by some of our men who knew it of old, at Sebastopol.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The ministers are now all of them away from town, with the exception of the under secretary of state for the home department, who is left in town possibly to look after the house-keepers in Downing-street. As for news in town we are sorry to say there is too much this week, and of a serious complexion, and theintelligence from China in particular will necessitate a consultation of the government to decide upon immediate steps to be taken to bring the Chinese pirates to their senses.—The trial trip of the Great Eastern has come to a most disastrous conclusion—after having delighted all on board with the satisfactory proofs given of her sea-going qualities and her immense speed and steadiness under steam, a fearful accident has put a stop to her progress for some time. On her passage from the Nore to Weymouth, off Hastings, at six, p.m., on Friday, a terrific explosion occurred in the funnel casing of the forward boilers; the fittings of the grand saloon and lower deck cabins were blown to pieces; thirteen firemen and stokers were scalded or burnt, two are since dead, one jumped overboard, and was drowned. Five are not expected to recover. No passenger was injured. The magnificent decorations of the grand saloon are totally destroyed, valued at £5,000, but the ship and machinery otherwise have sustained little injury. The inquest on the bodies of the men who lost their lives by the explosion, was opened at the Town Hall, Weymouth, on Monday. After some preliminary evidence had been taken, the inquiry was adjourned till this day, in order that a thorough scientific examination into the cause of the accident may be made.—The strike in the building trade has shown some more favourable features this week; on Monday several of the building yards were opened, without the document being insisted on. At others the test was required, but refused by the men. The probability now is that the strike—as strikes usually do—will wear out, instead of coming to an abrupt termination by mutual arrangement.—The weekly report of the Registrar General says the mortality of London is now near the average rate, which, exclusive of the weeks of 1849 and 1854 (when the cholera was epidemic), would have demanded 1102 lives. The actual number last week was 1111. In the same period the births of 875 boys and 827 girls were registered.—A serious fire has occurred in the pitch and tar factory of Mr. Dorsett, Plough-road, Rotherhithe. The catastrophe was caused by the bursting of a retort.—James Kirkham, clerk to Mr. Humphrey, local commissioner for the redemption of land tax, was charged at the Mansion House on Saturday with forging the names of Sir Alexander Duff Gordon and Mr. Disraeli to a certificate for about £600. The prisoner was remanded, and bail refused.—Normington has been fully committed for trial by the Leeds magistrates, on the charge of murdering Mr. Broughton. The prisoner has made a confession, but denies that he did the deed, although he spoke to the murderer just after the commission of the crime. Boarder is discharged.—The city commissioners of sewers held their first meeting yesterday since the commencement of the holidays. Deputy Christie in the chair. Some reports were presented from Dr. Letheby, after which the court adjourned.—At the Court of Bankruptcy a melancholy case was brought under consideration. It was that of R. Cane, a fishmonger at Windsor, who, suffering from mental derangement, was unable to attend to his business, which, conducted properly, might have been a very prosperous one. It, therefore, devolved upon others who, it was stated, managed it so imprudently that insolvency soon resulted. After the bankruptcy the poor fellow soon became the inmate of a lunatic asylum; but he has now recovered his reason. It was feared, however, that any excitement such as would naturally ensue from an examination, would cause a relapse. The Commissioner, therefore, in consideration of the circumstances of the case, the bankrupt's debts not being large, his estate having already paid 2s. in the pound, and there being no opposition, granted an immediate second class certificate. Adjournments of examination meetings in several cases were rendered necessary in consequence of the unprepared state of the accounts. It caused the remark by the Commissioner that adjournments were becoming almost matters of course, and that it was a practice which ought to be checked.—Although at the first sitting of the coroner's jury to inquire into the circumstances attending the disastrous explosion on board the Great Eastern, it was resolved to adjourn the inquest till Saturday, yet as it was considered desirable that as little delay as possible should take place, arrangements were made to resume the subject on Wednesday. On this occasion Mr. Scott Russell was present, and made a statement relative to his absence in the first instance, and also as to the evidence to be brought forward. The investigation was again adjourned till Saturday.—The prices of the various securities recovered from their previous depression, owing to the expectation that the concerted measures between France and England to revenge the insult offered in the rupture of the new treaty will more closely cement the alliance between the two countries. Consols were eventually quoted 95½ to ¼ for money and the account. About £48,000 of gold was sent into the Bank, and it is expected other arrivals, when they are received, will be retained in this country. Only a small sum of the Indian loan was paid in full, but the price recovered from the previous fall. There was not much demand for money, the average quotation remaining 2½ per cent.

—COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—During the past week there has been less activity in the port of London. The number of vessels announced inwards at the Custom House amounted to 249; there were 6 from Ireland, and 139 colliers. The entries outwards amounted to 102, and those cleared to 107, besides 10 in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been three vessels, viz., 1 to Sydney of 668 tons; 1 to Port Philip of 1266 tons; 1 to Adelaide of 769 tons; making a total of 2701 tons.—The traffic returns of the railways in the United Kingdom, for the week ending the 3rd September, amounted to £533,230, and for the corresponding week of 1858 to £508,090, showing an increase of £25,140. The gross receipts of the eight railways having their termini in the metropolis amounted to £229,363, and for the corresponding period of last year to £221,669, showing an increase of £7694. The receipts on the other lines in the United Kingdom amounted to £303,867, and for the corresponding week of last year to £286,421, showing an increase of £17,446, which, added to the increase on the metropolitan lines, makes the total increase £25,140, as compared with the corresponding week of 1858.—During the past week the movements of the precious metals have been extensive. The imports have been large, and comprise £50,000 from the United States, by the Arabia; £129,600 by the City of Manchester; £37,609 by the Hammonia; £226,000 by the City of Baltimore; and £160,170 by the Vanderbilt. The Oneider, from Australia, brought £389,178; and the Eagle, £126,540; the total being £1,069,097. The exports have been £159,697 to Bombay, by the Indus; £45,000 to Cadiz, by the Oscar; and the shipments to the continent through the London Custom House estimated at £2192; making a total of £206,889.—The intelligence from China exercised no immediate effect upon the silk market, but among the operators in the tea trade the influence was very decided. A great number of the large holders refused to sell until further details were ascertained, while in the business that in reality occurred an advance of ¼d. to 1d. on common congous, and of 2d. per pound on black-leaf kinds, was established. The report of the Intercolonial Royal Mail Steampacket Company has been presented preparatory to the meeting which is to take place on the 23rd inst. It appears that the directors, in addition to the original sum of £24,000 for carrying the mails between Sydney and the principal ports of the colony of New Zealand, have obtained a further subsidy, amounting to £6000, for which they undertake to run a boat monthly between Sydney and Auckland direct. Although the supplementary service is an equivalent for the increased outlay by government, its performance does not involve any addition to the fleet. Under the new arrangements three boats will be actively employed, the remaining one being available for any unforeseen contingency. The working account presented to the shareholders has been constructed, which shows a balance of £7,600 in favour of the company. This amount, after deducting for depreciation as shown by profit and loss, enables the directors to recommend an ad interim dividend at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum, free of income tax, leaving a balance in hand. A steady and rapid increase of traffic is presented in each successive voyage, and, under the circumstances, a favourable future is anticipated.—The dividend declared at the meeting of the Ottoman bank was at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and after its payments the profit will leave a balance of £1030 to be carried forward to the next account. The reserve fund now amounts to about £40,000, and it is stated that the progress has been satisfactory, notwithstanding the adverse state of affairs existing during the past six months. The position of monetary relations in the Ottoman empire, it has been thought, renders it necessary that a national bank should be established. The connection of the Ottoman bank with the government was satisfactory, but terms had nevertheless been ceded to other parties for organizing such an institution, though no result had yet been arrived at. The commission appointed to regulate finances consisted of six persons, with whom was associated Mr. Falconnet, the managing director, and the effect upon the paper currency will steadily become apparent.—The Overland advices have not exercised any fresh influence on the value of Calcutta and China produce in Mincing-lane. The little effect that the outbreak of hostilities appears to have had on the tea trade at the principal Chinese ports has tended to check the excitement which the telegrams had induced here; but the firmness of the market is, on the other hand, sustained by the unfavourable tenor of the crop accounts, and on the whole rather a large business has been concluded at quite yesterday's rates. A better inquiry has prevailed in the rice market, in consequence of the reference which the Calcutta letters make to the continued restriction of shipments for this country. All other articles remain much as they were.—The Royal mail steamer Atrato has arrived from the West Indies with £120,000, the particulars of which remain to be ascertained.—No transactions occurred in the shares of the Great Steamship Company; but the quotation was maintained at ¼ dis. to ¼ prem.—From the Paris Bourse business continues to present a favourable appearance, and quotations again close rather higher, particularly for the account. Four per Cent. Rentes, for money, were at the close 94f. 50c.; Three per Cents, for money, 68f. 55c. and for the account, 68f. 65c. Bank shares were 2780f. On the other Bourses the transactions showed some fluctuation, and the tendency was not altogether encouraging, the state of business being far from active.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SUMMONSES FOR LODGE MEETINGS.—“Inquirer” asks—“How many days prior to an ordinary meeting of a Lodge should the summons be issued by the Secretary? There does not appear to be any law upon the subject; the Book of Constitutions, p. 81, requiring that a notice of not less than seven days shall be given prior to a Lodge of Emergency only. What is the general practice? Some Lodges, I am informed, consider three days' notice sufficient; but, query, is not a notice of seven days more consonant with the spirit of Masonic law?”—[We consider that in every case at least seven days' notice of a meeting should be given.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1859.

BETHEL-EBENEZER.

A FEW weeks since we found ourselves almost in the very midst of Salisbury Plain. The time was evening; the twilight as it closed shed a purple light along the edge of the horizon—a crane pursued her pensive and solitary flight above our heads—the lark had descended, and her yet tuneful twitter might be heard amongst the short grass—a patient looking donkey regarded us with more than the usual curiosity of that animal—and but for a few streaks which seemed to scud along the extreme limit of vision, the sense of solitude would have been complete.

Conspicuous however above all was that mysterious monument, altar, or tomb, whichever it may be, whose weird looking components might well seem the watchers set by antiquity upon the doings of future time. As the shadows of evening deepened over Stonehenge, it looked in the distance like an Egyptian scarabæus, and might have been transported from a pyramid. The night seemed gradually to draw it within its folds, and the imagination affected to give to it a retiring motion, like the spirit of Hamlet's father when he seeks to impart to his son the secrets of his prison house.

The question as to whether these stones are the altars of an extinct worship or the memorials of an extinct race has been much discussed, but the conclusions arrived at by different antiquarians are conflicting. It by no means follows that they are not altars because human skeletons have been found under them, or that they are not tombs because ancient vessels, supposed to have been employed in the uses of an ancient worship, are often found interspersed with other relics either near or about these uninterpreted sanctuaries. In every age, and among every nation, places dedicated to religion have been coveted abodes of sepulture; and even now, as in the beginning, to be buried immediately under the altar is esteemed by many as a distinction only reserved for those who by good works and piety might earn it. One thing, however, is certain, that these ancient remains are consistent with either hypothesis, and probability points to the conclusion that they were used, although at different periods, alike for sacrificial purposes and for sepulture.

There is no doubt that the date at which these structures were erected is lost to the chronologist, and the means of investigation are wanting to the antiquarian. Owing to these deficiencies opinions have been promulgated, some, perhaps, rather fanciful, but others, again, if supported by a great deal of patient research, still unsatisfactory, from the very fact that research cannot reach their origin. There is no anachronism in attributing them to a prehistoric period and the purposes of an ancient rite, nor to a custom then or later in existence of burying the dead in places esteemed holy by the people who congregated in these venerable triliths.

The very earliest record in existence—the Bible—speaks of the practice of raising stones for altars before temples were known, or even heard of. Thus the first act of Noah was to build an altar. Abraham built altars at various times and places. Isaac did the same: but those which Jacob built are described with more circumstantiality. When on his journey into Mesopotamia to seek a wife, he sought rest, the sun having gone down, took a stone for his pillow, and dreamt that very remarkable dream the description of which is certainly one of the most graphic passages in the sacred writings. We are told by the Septuagint, "And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and said, the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not; how dreadful is this place! And Jacob rose up early in the morning, and took the stone that he had put for his pillow, and set it up for a pillar, and poured oil upon the top of it. And he called the name of that place Beth-el, the house of God. (Gen. xxviii. 16-19). It does also abundantly appear from various passages in holy writ, and from traditions of early nations generally, that the custom was, in performing any sacred act, to erect an altar, or heap, as it is called in the Bible. The pillars of witness in old Celtic ruins are confirmative of this view. When Laban came up with Jacob, and rebuked him for carrying off his daughter, and both entered into a covenant, Jacob took a stone, and set it up for a pillar. And Jacob said unto his brethren, gather stones; and they took stones, and made a heap, and Laban called it Jegar Sahadutha, the heap of testimony, but Jacob called it Galeed, the heap of witness. (Gen. xxxi. 45-48.)

The analogy between the name given by Jacob to his altar and that employed by the authors of the Celtic cromlechs, is certainly remarkable. All those ancient altars, says Valancy, now distinguished by the name of cromlechs, or sloping stones, were originally called Bothal, or the House of God, and they seem to be of the same, specially as those mentioned in the sacred scriptures, and called by the Hebrews Beth-el. We again read that in the covenant at Sechem, Joshua took a stone and set it up there under an oak, that was by the sanctuary of the Lord. And Joshua said unto all the people, Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us; for it hath heard all the words of the Lord. (Josh. xxiv. 26). After the defeat of the Philistines it is related that Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shur, and called the name of it Ebenezer, saying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. (1 Sam. vii. 12).

These pillars were however more than testimonies to solemn acts, and it would seem suggested by the above passages that the situations in which they were erected were such as gave some solemnity to the memorials. What for instance can be more touching than those pillars set up on battle fields, such as that which marks the buried carnage of Waterloo, or that simple obelisk with its weeping angels that is seen by the traveller amongst the cypresses of Scutari. But with early people these monuments did not so much indicate the prowess by which a victory was achieved, as it typified the divine aid which had been employed in their favour. There is hardly any record of ancient nations that does not furnish proof corroborative of such custom. The Greek sacrificed to Hercules or Apollo upon the field which he had won. The Roman paid a like compliment to Jupiter or Mars. The existence of this custom amongst the Jews, the following passage leaves little room for doubt, for on the return of the ark from Philistia, after the plague of Ashdod, when the idols of Dagon fell down before it and were mutilated, we read that the kine drew the cart on which the ark was placed into a field, "where there was a great stone, and the people clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine for a burnt offering to the Lord, having placed the ark upon a stone."

It would seem, too, that sacrificial altars or cromlechs were of three kinds—the single upright stone or pillar; that with a single stone placed crosswise upon it; or two upright stones, with a third resting upon them, and called trilithon, from the number of blocks employed in its construction. The sacrificial stone or altar of Stonehenge is placed immediately before the great trilithon, which forms the end of the hypethral temple within the external peribolos; and that temple would seem to be something like the one which Moses built at Sinai, and commanded the people to build when they should have arrived at the promised land, and which was accomplished under Joshua. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel. And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basons, and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words. (Exod.

xxiv. 4-8). Taking away the horrors of human sacrifices, the gloomy superstition of druidical rite, one could almost imagine the glorious lawgiver and hierarch of God's people the officiating minister, by the border of some forest whose venerable branches intermingling formed a natural temple, whilst the foam of a waterfall washed its feet and the mountain round whose summit flashed the thunders of the Almighty rose amid the clouds whereon sat the Lord of Hosts.

At Stonehenge there were five of these sacrificial altars. It is easy enough to conceive how the altar should be the foundation stone of all religious architecture. Even before men had learnt to permanently provide for their bodily wants one must have awakened to the necessity of propitiating the Deity. He thought not yet of a temple whose cloistered quiet should invite to prayer, whose painted windows should chronicle the glory of his saints, and whose solemn music should give a voice unto his conscience, until he cried out, "Lord help me, for I am a sinner." To him for a temple was the overhanging firmament fretted with golden fires, bounded only by the horizon which seemed jagged with shadows of rugged promontories, with the forms of huge beasts which lazily fled before him, or rivers of clear water where swam the silver delicacy which he sought to snare, and pleasant thicket where he reposed after his labour. But still was the divine anger manifested in the thunders which seemed at times to disturb the very harmony of that spangled dome, to rend the arch whereon rested, or was supposed to rest, the home and world of the Deity. Equally so in the flood, which surmounted the ramparts erected to exclude it and poured its spreading wrath over the land, sweeping before it rock and stately oak. In the earthquake also, which upheaving destroyed the pride of cities and of empires, burying them fathoms deep beneath the earth, from which they are only resuscitated as a warning. A pillar was set up and the worshipper placed his offering upon it and then cast himself upon the ground. At a later period these pillars were surrounded by others, either for security or to afford convenience for an increased number of worshippers.

Strabo, speaking of the early Egyptian temples, says that they were of vast extent, of rudest workmanship, without elegance, grace, or embellishment of any sort. From this a distinguished writer has inferred that these temples were little more than some similar combination of stones to that we have just mentioned. That such places should have become tombs for great or eminent personages can hardly be a matter for wonder to the antiquarian. The ordinary motives of human conduct would sufficiently explain this, if evidence did not so abundantly exist that their purpose and uses refer to periods long antecedent to any evidence that has been found either under, about, or in immediate connexion with these monuments. The king of a tribe would naturally like to rest where his bones would be undisturbed by an enemy. The priest would wish to repose in the presence of the sacred symbol before which he worshipped, and where, too, his rite was performed. What place would either be so likely to elect for sepulture as the sanctuary invested with superstition to an enemy, or consecrated by presence of a higher power. The early fathers of Christianity have, on frequent occasions, spoken of the tomb of Christ as the true altar of sacrifice and penitence, and this notion seems to have originated in the manner and the thoughts suggested by the Lord's Supper. To Christians and to Christian architects of the Craft, in mediæval times, the altar was the object of greatest solicitude, on it was expended the most patient care. For it, were reserved the highest efforts of genius. Beneath the "Gloria" which almost invariably surmounted it hung festoons of flowers and fruits, scrolls of elaborate foliage, groups of birds and animals carved in stone or wood, and fashioned in such wise as to illustrate some passage in Scripture. More recently the altar has received a simpler form, but there are cases where coarseness and vulgarity attempt to adorn them.

INTERNAL TEMPERATURE OF THE EARTH.

[At a recent meeting of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, the following highly interesting paper was read by WILLIAM HOPKINS, Esq., M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., "On the Earth's Internal Temperature, and the Thickness of its Solid Crust."]

IF we descend beneath the surface of the earth, and observe the temperature at different depths, it is found that within a depth ranging from fifty to eighty feet, the temperature changes periodically, being affected to that depth by the heat which the earth receives from the sun at different seasons of the year. The annual variation, however, becomes less as the depth increases, till at the depth abovementioned it becomes insensible. At greater depths the temperature is invariable at each point, but increases with the depth at the rate, on an average, of 1° (F.), for a depth of between sixty and seventy feet. The best observations which have been made on this subject are those in deep mining shafts and deep artesian wells; the greater the depth the more completely do anomalous influences counterbalance each other. The greatest depths at which such observations have been made in Western Europe, are at Monkwearmouth and Dukinfield, in this country; the Puits de Grenelle, at Paris; Mondorff, in the Duchy of Luxembourg; New Seltzwerk, in Westphalia; and at Geneva. At the first two places the observations were made in vertical shafts of coal mines; the depth of the one at Monkwearmouth being upwards of one thousand eight hundred feet, and that at Dukinfield upwards of two thousand feet; and in both cases the observations were made while the workmen were sinking the shafts, and with every precaution against the influence of any extraneous causes which might affect the observations. The former gave an increase of 1° (F.) for every sixty feet of depth, the latter for about every seventy-two or seventy-three feet. The sinking of the Puits de Grenelle was superintended by Arago. The mean increase of temperature was 1° for every sixty feet. At Mondorff the bore was two thousand four hundred, being that of an artesian well; the increase was 1° for fifty-seven feet. At New Seltzwerk the artesian well, penetrating to the depth of two thousand one hundred feet, giving an increase of 1° (F.) for fifty-five feet. The average of these is very nearly 1° for sixty feet.

Numerous other observations are confirmatory of these results, though observations at smaller depths present many anomalies indicating the observation of local causes. If a sphere of very large dimensions, like the earth, were heated in any degree and in any manner, and were left to cool in surrounding space, it is shown by accurate investigation that after a sufficient and very great length of time, the law according to which the temperature would increase in descending beneath the earth's surface, within depths small compared with the earth's radius, would be—that the increase of temperature would be proportional to the increase of depth. This coincides with the observed law, if we neglect the anomalous irregular variations which are found to exist more or less in each locality. Now, according to this law, the temperature at the depth of sixty or seventy miles would probably be sufficient to reduce to a state of fusion nearly all the materials which constitute the earth's external solid envelope; and hence it has been concluded that the earth probably consists of a central molten mass, as a fluid nucleus, and an external solid shell, of not more than sixty or seventy miles in thickness; and some geologists, desirous of rendering the conclusion the foundation of certain theories, have considered the thickness even less than that now mentioned. This conclusion, however, rests on reasoning in which an important element is wanting. It involves the hypothesis that the conductive power of the rocks which constitute the lower portions of the earth's crust is the same as that of the rocks which form its upper portion. This conductive power of any substance measures the facility with which heat is transmitted through it; and it is easily proved, by accurate investigation.

that when the same quantity of heat passes through superimposed strata of different conductive powers, the increase of depth corresponding to a given increase of temperature (as 1° is in any stratum proportional to the conductive power. Consequently, if the conductive power of the lower portions of the earth's solid crust be greater than that of the thin upper portion of it through which man has been able to penetrate, the depth to which we must proceed to arrive at a certain temperature (as that of fusion for the lower rocks) will be proportionally greater.

The precise nature of the rocks situated at a great depth can only be judged of by analogy with those which are accessible to us; but those geologists who adopt the conclusion of the extreme thinness of the earth's crust will doubtless admit that its inferior part must be of igneous origin, and must therefore be allowed to bear a certain resemblance to igneous rocks on the surface of the earth. Mr. Hopkins had recently made a great number of experiments on the conductive powers of various rocks. That of the softer sedimentary rocks, which are great absorbents of water, is very much increased by the quantity of moisture they contain; but taking chalk, one of the best absorbents, its conductive power, even when saturated, is not half so great as that of some of the igneous rocks on which Mr. Hopkins had experimented. Calcareous, argillaceous, and siliceous substances, reduced to fine powder, stand, with reference to their conductive powers, in the order in which they are now mentioned, the conductivity of the first being the least; and when in a compact state, all that contributes to give a hard and crystalline character to the substance, and continuity to the mass through which the heat is conducted, increases the conductive power. These considerations lead to the conclusion that the conductivity of the inferior portions of the earth's solid crust must be much greater, and may be very much greater, than that of the less consolidated and mere superficial sedimentary beds. Moreover, the temperature of fusion of certain substances, as Mr. Hopkins had shown by experiment, is much increased by great pressure; and by analogy it may be concluded that such would, at least in some considerable degree, be the case with the mineral matter of the earth's crust.

The chalk is that formation in which the most numerous and some of the best observations on terrestrial temperatures have been made; and it would seem impossible to conclude, from actual experiment and the considerations above stated, that its conductive power can exceed one-third of that of the inferior rocks, and may not improbably be a considerably smaller fraction of it. Now the increase of depth in the chalk corresponding to an increase of one degree Fahrenheit is well ascertained to be very nearly sixty feet, and therefore the rate of increase in the inferior rocks must probably be at least three times as great as in the chalk, and may be very considerably greater still. Hence, supposing that the thickness of the solid crust would be about sixty miles, if the conductive power of its lower portion were equal to that of chalk, its actual thickness must probably be at least about two hundred miles, and may be considerably greater, even if we admit no other source of terrestrial heat than the central heat here contemplated.

There is also another way of investigating the thickness of the earth's crust, assuming the whole terrestrial mass to consist of a fluid nucleus inclosed in a solid envelope. If the earth were accurately spherical, instead of being spheroidal, its axis of rotation would always remain exactly parallel to itself, on the same principle as that on which the gyroscope preserves, in whatever position it may be held, the parallelism of the axis about which it rotates. But the attraction of the sun and moon on the protuberant equatorial portions of the earth's mass causes a progressive change in the position of the earth's axis, by virtue of which the north pole, or that point in the heavens to which the northern extremity of the earth's axis is directed, instead of being stationary, describes a circle on the surface of the heavenly sphere about a fixed point in it called the pole of the ecliptic, with a radius of nearly twenty-three and a half degrees, equal to the inclination of the equator to the ecliptic, or the obliquity. The whole of this revolution is completed in about twenty-five thousand years; but, as follows from what has just been stated, without any change, beyond small periodical ones, in the obliquity. A corresponding change of position must manifestly take place also in the position of the equinoxes, which have thus a motion along the ecliptic in a direction opposite to that in which the signs of the zodiac are reckoned, completing a revolution in the period above mentioned of twenty-five thousand years. It is called the precession of the equinoxes.

This precessional motion has been completely accounted for under the hypothesis of the earth's entire solidity, and that of a certain law according to which the earth's density increases in approaching its centre; but some years ago Mr. Hopkins investigated the problem with the view of ascertaining how far the observed amount of precession might be consistent with the existence of a fluid nucleus. The result was, that such could only be the case provided the thickness of the solid shell were much greater than that which, as above stated, has been supposed by many geologists. The numerical result was, that the least admissible thickness of the crust must be about one-fifth of the earth's radius; but, without assigning any great importance to an exact numerical result, Mr. Hopkins had a full confidence in the investigation, as showing that the thickness of the crust could not be so small as two or three hundred miles, and consequently that no geological theory can be admitted which rests on the hypothesis of the crust being nearly as thin as it has been frequently assumed to be.

The influence of the interior fluidity on the precessional motion above described is due to the difference between the motions which the attractions of the sun and moon tend to produce on a solid mass in one case, and a fluid mass on the other. It has been recently stated, as an objection to this investigation, that the interior fluid mass of the earth may move in the same manner as if it were solid. The only reply which could be given to such an objection was, Mr. Hopkins conceived that it was mechanically impossible that these motions should be the same, though the resulting precessional motion for the solid crust, under certain conditions, to be determined only by the complete mathematical solution of the problem, might be the same as if the whole mass were solid. The effect of the attractions of the sun and moon also depends on the ellipticity of the inner surface of the solid shell; and it has been said that since that ellipticity depends on the law of the earth's density, which can only be imperfectly known, no result can be depended on which involves that ellipticity. This was not a correct statement of the problem. It was assumed, in the solution referred to, that the ellipticity of the inner surface would depend partly on the law of density and partly on the forms of the isothermal surfaces.

Mr. Hopkins had supposed it possible, at the time he was engaged in this investigation, that a surface of equal solidity might approximate to a surface of equal pressure; he has now experimental reasons for believing that it must approximate much more nearly to an internal surface of equal temperature. Now for depths greater, probably much greater, than those which have often been supposed to correspond to the thickness of the earth's solid crust, there is no doubt that the internal isothermal surfaces have a greater ellipticity than the external surface itself; a conclusion which is independent of the law of density. Hence a like conclusion will hold with reference to the internal surface of the shell, if it approximate sufficiently to the surface of equal temperature, and this is the conclusion most unfavourable to the thin shell supposed by some geologists.

Restricting the interpretation, then, of Mr. Hopkins's results to the question whether the earth's solid shell be as thin as some geologists have supposed, or at least several hundred miles in thickness—and this is the only question of geological importance—Mr. Hopkins denied the validity of either of the objections above stated. Thus, both the modes of investigation which had been described, lead to like conclusions respecting the least thickness which can be assigned to the solid envelope of our globe. It must be much greater than geologists have frequently imagined it to be.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

THIS society brought its very interesting meeting to a close, at Newbury, last Saturday. On Friday, after a hurried visit to the ruins of Reading Abbey and the Priory, Mr. Pettigrew and the other members of the Archæological Association returned to Newbury, and attended a soirée, which was given at the Mansion House in the evening. Mr. Pettigrew occupied the chair. Mr. Blundell, F.S.A., read a paper on the Battles of Newbury, the first of which took place on the 18th of September, 1643, Charles I. commanding the Royalists in person, and the second in 1644. The Baroness Weld and other ladies contributed to the musical portion of the entertainments, and some of the local gentlemen exercised their vocal abilities for the gratification of the company, which was one of the largest and most fashionable during the congress. It was approaching midnight when the soirée terminated.

By Saturday morning the archæologists had diminished in number, and all the clerical members left the town for their parochial duties on Sunday. This led to an alteration in the programme of the day's proceedings. The Vale of the White Horse was intended to be visited, but the journey was found too far and it was abandoned. The expedition was first to Welford Church. The manor formerly belonged to the abbot and convent of Abingdon, but is now the property of Mr. Charles Eyre, of Welford-park. The church is of the Saxon style, and the stone stalls in the chancel are some of the most remarkable in the country. On the north wall is a handsome monument, with a sculptured woman in a dress of her time, kneeling at a desk, and this was an object of much interest to the archæologists.

The church of Little Shefford was also visited, and Mr. Planche read a paper on an alabaster monument, having on it the figures of a man in armour and a lady, without any inscription or arms. At an early period the manor was in the family of Feltham, one of whom, Thomas, married Beatrice, an illegitimate daughter of John the King of Portugal, who had been successively the widow of the Earl of Arundel, Lord Talbot, and the Earl of Huntingdon. In the chancel is an elegant grey marble tomb, against which are the effigies of John Feltham, his wives and children. From his mouth issues the inscription, "Deus miscreatur nostri et benedicat nobis;" and from that of the woman, "Illuminet vultum suum super nos." This proved to be one of the most interesting places that has been visited. The excursionists returned to the town early in the evening.

There was a fair sprinkle of gentlemen at the dinner, at the Pelican hotel, Speenhamland. Some speeches were delivered of a complimentary character, relating to archæological researches, and the proceedings of the congress were brought to a close by a meeting in the Mansion House.

THE ROMAN VILLA AT CARISBROOKE.

SOME particulars of these very remarkable remains of antiquity, appear in a long letter from an observant correspondent of the Hampshire Advertiser, and we doubt not that from the great interest excited by this discovery, our readers will not be offended by our transferring a considerable portion of his letter to our columns. He says:—"I first met with indications of the villa on the 28th of April last, when, observing workmen excavating for stables on the vicarage grounds, I walked down to see if anything might be turning up, induced to do so by having before found in Carisbrooke portions of a British urn and other relics of ancient burial; and I was indeed agreeably surprised by finding portions of Roman tiling, which had been thrown up by the workmen, its character being unknown to them.

"I at once applied to the vicar, the Rev. E. B. James, for leave to make researches, which was readily granted, and every facility for search afforded me by all those in his employ. Following, then, in the wake of the men still digging for the foundations of the stables, a good quantity of broken pottery, &c., was collected, and, finding some scattered tesserae, which gave indications of a pavement, I set a man to cut exploring trenches in several directions. The first trench soon opened up a coarse tessellated pavement, forming a portion of what may have been a corridor of the building; another brought to light the bath, with its hypocaust; and following up these and other trenches, the villa, so far as it has yet been opened, was gradually disclosed.

"A detailed account, even of these portions of the building, would require accompanying plans, and a practised hand; but a few general features may be given, premising that some dimensions are given from memory, and that the remains have not been sufficiently explored to speak positively on many points, while some must be, necessarily, a matter of conjecture only. The villa would appear to have covered a space of from one hundred and ten to one hundred and twenty feet in length, and from sixty to seventy feet in width; but, from the slight indications of masonry in the adjoining lane, this size may be increased. The pavements are from five to six feet below the present level of the soil; of this depth about three feet is composed of the chalk debris of the walling, &c., over which the three feet surface mould must have been brought and spread. As to the arrangement of the building, a portion of the eastern side would seem to have formed a corridor of about forty-two feet long by about eight feet wide, leading to the atrium, or central hall, about twenty-two and a half feet square, and the best apartment, which is on the north-eastern side, and about fourteen and a half feet square.

"Around two sides at least of the atrium, north and west, apartments, probably dormitories, about ten feet wide, with cement floors, appear to have been ranged. Other walls have been met with in the cuttings; but, as they have not been followed up, no idea of the apartments of which they formed a part can be gained; though from the plain plastering on them, and the absence of tessellated pavements, the better portions of the villa would appear to have been those opened on the north eastern side. The bath, an interesting object, is near the south western side, and is in good preservation. Its shape is semicircular, or nearly so; its length at the base seven and a half feet, and its height about sixteen inches. When the flues under it were first opened, the soot of say sixteen centuries since was adhering in large quantities to the tiles. These flues were traced to the adjoining stable, where they appear to have warmed a small apartment, the floor of which was gone, though very many of its tile supports were still remaining. The examinations were suspended before these flues could be traced to the furnace mouth, which may, however, have been destroyed by the first excavations of the workmen, or may yet be found in the adjoining lane.

"To the south east of the bath a kind of cement floor occupied a large space, probably the site of inferior offices, or it may be of a courtyard. Over this, the least interesting portion of the building, stables have been erected, leaving, fortunately, the far greater and better portion of the villa untouched. Returning to the corridor and atrium, we find their pavements to consist of red brick tesserae, of about an inch square, roughly formed, and are mostly laid without any design. They appear to be chiefly made out of roofing tiles, &c.; at least, they bear portions of the same markings.

"The walls remaining are about the same height, two feet eight inches, and are from one foot nine inches to two feet three inches thick; on many parts of them the plastering is still perfect, while in the interior of the rooms a plaster moulding runs round the base of most of them. It is, however, on the before mentioned apartment, at the north eastern angle of the building, that the chief care has been bestowed. It is about fourteen and a half feet square, but, rather singularly, an angle of the atrium projects into its south western corner to the extent of four feet square. The pavement of this room needs a drawing to convey an idea of it. The borders wide, but irregularly so, are of coarse red and white tesserae. The designs of the interior portion, consisting of parallelograms and other figures, with scrolled borders inclosing the lotus flower and leaves, are worked with finer tesserae, of a red, white, black, and blue colour, and are, I find, of a form often found in Roman pavements. Similar ones, among others, may be seen figured on the sketch of a pavement at Basilidon, Berks. in one of the numbers of Mr. Roach Smith's Collectanea Antiqua. In the centre is a handsome shaped vase and flowers. From its hollow sound it has probably flues under it. While it cannot, I believe, be classed with the superior pavements at Cirencester, &c., it is, unlike some of those, in good preservation, and from the testimony of a most competent judge, Mr. Roach Smith, F.S.A., is a very interesting one.

The plastering on one side of this apartment still remains. It is painted in panels, but many pieces were found among the rubbish on the floor, with leaves, flowers, and other figures on them. The colours, red, white, yellow, blue, green, &c., were very bright when first removed, but have somewhat faded since.

"The villa must have been covered with stone roofing tiles (if I may so call them), of an angular shape, as these lie scattered everywhere, both whole and broken, many of them with the nails still in them. The only flanged roofing tiles that were found had been used for the bottom of the flues leading to the bath. Wood ashes in small quantities were found about most parts of the building, in some cases, though, amounting to two or three handfuls. Some portions of the pavements, too, show signs of fire, so that it was at first thought that the place might have been burnt down; but no charred wood of any size has been found, nor does the plastering appear to have suffered from fire. Whatever may have caused its destruction, nearly everything appears to have been first removed from it, for nothing perfect or valuable has been found, though much that is interesting; among which are two coins (third brass), one illegible, the other a Posthumus in good condition; two bone hair pins, two or three small bronze rings, blade of knife, hinges, various small iron articles, a few nails eight or nine inches long, a quantity of roofing nails, fragments of window and other glass, large quantity of débris of various kinds, though chiefly of a coarser sort, part of the upper stone of a hand-mill, stone roofing tiles, flanged earthen tiles, flue tiles, painted plaster, &c. Bones, too, of the deer, sheep, and other animals are abundant, as well as oyster and other shells. On two or three portions of the antlers of the red deer some marks are as fresh as when first made. These articles I shall gladly deposit again at the villa, as it is important to keep the collection intact.

"I have heard no decisive opinion as to what period of the Roman occupation the erection or destruction of the villa may probably be ascribed; but we know that Vespasian conquered the Isle of Wight, A.D. 43; that the coin found is of the third century; and that the Saxons, under Cedric, A.D. 530, made slaughter and havoc at Carisbrooke.

"The villa will, I think, when fully uncovered, be found a very interesting one, though much inferior in size to some. Apart, too, from any claim it has in itself, it derives a peculiar interest from its being the first Roman building that has been met with in the island. It settles, too, a point long contended for by the Rev. J. Kell, as to the Roman occupation of our island, and can but contribute to the elucidation of that period of its history. Situated in a rich valley, under the very shadow of the castle, it seems to point to a former connection with it, though the traces of any Roman occupation at the latter place are, I believe, few, if any. This building could hardly have stood alone; in the same valley, indeed, many have collected portions of Roman tiling a long time since, while coins too have been found there. There can then, I think, be but one wish, viz., that the place may be thoroughly explored and preserved in situ, for it is by that alone that its teaching can be fully realized.

"Pending any arrangement for continuing the excavation, the vicar has kindly apportioned the proceeds received from visitors towards the reduction of a debt pressing heavily on the parochial schools, and a good sum has been already realized, though the amount has been greatly exaggerated. This matter of the further exploration has, it is well known, been beset with many difficulties, in consequence of the remains standing on the private grounds of the vicarage. To endeavour to remove these difficulties has been the aim of several gentlemen of the neighbourhood associated for the purpose, nor have others pleaded privately with less anxiety for the same object. Some of the best portions of the remains the vicar has already, to his personal discomfort, decided to preserve, and I confidently trust that he will before long arrange some plan which shall embrace the whole. I may add, that the most important parts, the best pavements and bath, have been from the first temporarily roofed in, and preserved as far as possible from injury."

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL EXHIBITION AT ABERDEEN.

During the meeting of the British Association at Aberdeen, an archaeological exhibition has been held. The collection commences with the early Pictish period, and comes thence down. It embraces specimens of implements of war, and articles of domestic economy; of metallurgic manufacture; of bronzes; of iron ornaments, &c., &c. Amongst the antiquities is a powder horn of James VI. The show of Jacobite relics is extremely interesting. There are three or four portraits of Prince Charles Edward, and two of his father; three pictures of Flora Macdonald; one of the prince's mother; one of the celebrated Jacobite, Mrs. Mackintosh of Moy; and portraits of Lochiel, Lovat, and Kilmarnock. Among the manuscripts are several of the Pretender's letters, with letters of Lord George Murray, Lord Lovat, and others of the prince's adherents. Among the weapons are the pistols worn by the prince; the pistols presented by him to Lochiel; his sword, targe, and belt; and, among other things, two plaids belonging to him; the dress and wig in which he made his escape; a silver snuff-mull enclosed in a drinking cup of the same metal, exhibited by Lochiel; a silver medal; the copper plate from which his paper money was engraved, viz., notes for fourpence and sixpence; his sporran; and a case of mathematical instruments presented by him to Mr. Hay, of Rannes. There are the Duke of Perth's scarf, the green flag of the M'Phersons, the "Bratach Uain," which was at Culloden; old daggers dug up on the field; and old swords by the score, bearing Jacobite inscriptions.

The portrait department is well worthy of notice. It includes some fine portraits of Mary Queen of Scots, taken at different periods of her life. Near the queen is a portrait of Lord Darnley, and the portrait of Mary Beaton, one of her "four Marys." Her son, King James, appears in several aspects; as does also Rizzio. There is a fine picture of Queen Mary's mother, Mary of Guise, the property of Sir N. Bruce, in which may be traced the family, or the French lineaments in a bolder form. Of the date of the Reformation are portraits of Knox, the Regent Murray, Wishart, and Cardinal Beaton. In one group is to be seen a series of five Vandykes—Charles I., his queen Henrietta Maria, and their daughter, and one of the Dukes of Hamilton. The portrait of the unfortunate Queen of Bohemia (by Honthost) will be regarded with interest. There is, likewise, her son, the chivalrous Prince Rupert. Near those is one of the most exquisite paintings in the rooms, viz., that of the Marquis of Montrose, by Honthost. There is a portrait of Charles II., painted in Holland during his exile, and there are several pictures of his grandson, the Chevalier St. George. There are some pictures of the time of Charles II., and, of course, very fine, since they are almost all the works of Sir Peter Lely. One of the finest of these is a portrait of the Countess of Southesk, famous in her time.

Among the collection of letters and autographs there is a complete series of signatures and letters of the sovereigns of Scotland from James IV. to Queen Anne; and the history of the Stuart family is continued even later, by the original letters of James, the old pretender, and his two sons, Charles Edward, and Henry Benedict, Cardinal York, with the latter of whom the male line expired in 1807. This royal series includes, besides the signatures of Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII., and wife of James IV.; of the Regents Murray, Mar, and Morton; as well as of Cromwell, the Lord Protector. There will also be found the curious and rare signature of James Earl of Bothwell, husband of Mary Queen of Scots. The writing of the earlier sovereigns is exhibited in the shape of their signatures only; but from James VI. downwards the collection contains their original letters, which are, in some instances, sufficiently characteristic of the writers. There is also a letter of Queen Elizabeth's to the Regent Mar on Scottish affairs, and which presents a fine specimen of her bold handwriting and signature.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Through Norway with a Knapsack. By W. MATTIEU WILLIAMS With Six Tinted Views and Map. London: Smith, Elder, and Co., Cornhill.

EVER since the Rev. Henry Newland published his book on the fishing in Norway, we have regarded that country with special feelings of admiration. Being devoted lovers of the "contemplative recreation," and ardent followers of the "quaint old coxcomb," Izaak Walton, Norway has always held a distinguished position in our esteem. The title of Mr. Williams's book had a charm for us in its being an angler's mode of travel, "with a knapsack," for we hold as a strong article of travelling faith, that no man sees a country so effectually as one that "foots it merrily," and we feel that in company with such a guide we are almost as much spectators as the author. In our mind's eye we are present at the quaint marriage ceremony, which we well remember from the Rev. Henry Newland's racy description, and the general simplicity and primitive characteristics of the Norwegians, so aptly told by Mr. Williams. There is also another great inducement to pedestrian travel, its cheapness, Mr. Williams's bill for the whole journey of ten weeks amounting to the modest sum of twenty-five pounds, four shillings, and ninepence, and he further initiates us into the mystery of manufacturing your own knapsack, telling us how to manage with two shirts and three pairs of stockings, and in what way to wash them yourself.

Mr. Williams offers the following picture of the shops in Christiania, the capital of Norway :—

"Opposite the Hôtel du Nord is a baker's shop, which may be taken as a type of some of the peculiarities of the shops in Christiania. It appears like a private house—a mansion, I might almost say, from its dimensions. There is no shop front, merely the common dwelling house windows, which are decorated with growing flowers in pots; but the flowers are not floury, nor does shopkeeper look whiter than other Norwegians. I should never have guessed that bread was made or sold there but that swinging over the door is a wooden effigy of a convoluted loaf—the usual true lovers' knot done in bread, common here and in North Germany. Most of the food venders have shops of this kind. There are a few with shop fronts, but these are chiefly devoted to the sale of fancy articles; other shopkeepers place a few samples of their wares in plain parlour windows."

"On making some purchases of books, maps, and minor articles of clothing, I find in every shop some one who can speak English, and that generally it is well spoken. English articles prevail at the drapery and haberdashery establishments; the latest devices in shirt collars and similar articles are there, stamped with the names of the best known London houses, and retailed at the same price as in London."

We are next treated to an insight of the Christiania Cremorne, but it would be intolerably slow to the fast young gentlemen who are in the habit of patronising our Bro. Simpson, and frequently behaving in so rude a manner that their more northern, and, as they would tell us, less enlightened, pleasure seeking companions would blush to imitate. From this we learn that oranges are dear there, being sold at 5½d. each, and it is reckoned "the thing" for a lover to purchase one and divide it with his lady love.

Arrived at Soknaes our author found two English gentlemen who had taken up their quarters in that neighbourhood for the delight of angling. This taste much surprises the Norwegians who look upon fishing as a menial occupation, and are as much surprised at it, as our travelling author assures us, as our own laundresses would be, "if Chinese Mandarins were to migrate annually to England, and pay large sums of money for the privilege of turning the mangle."

On the road to Soknaes, Mr. Williams lost his way, and in endeavouring to ascertain his whereabouts, came on the unexpected sight of three in a bed, of which he says :—

"Turning back, I made inquiries at the first house, by knocking at the window. Though nearly eleven o'clock it was not dark, and a bed was visible close to the window; and it rather surprised me to see three heads start up out of this bed, two belonging to men and one to a woman. Whether this sort of sleeping arrangement is the custom of the country, or of the district, or was a special peculiarity in this case, I am not able to decide; but it does not accord with Laing's statement relative to the careful separation of the sleeping apartments of the sexes in the rural districts of Norway. That they were sleeping thus in all innocence, without any idea of impropriety, was evident from the manner in which one of the men reached to the window and opened it; all of them joining very kindly in telling me the way and the distance to the station. As the Norwegian bedstead is an oblong wooden box, this might possibly have been a double bed, a box with a partition down it; the two men lying on one side and the woman on the other, or two boxes, side by side; but I did not see any partition."

Mr. Williams confirms what had already been reported of that legend to which we had, in our younger days, given full credence—the Maelström, and tells us that there is no whirlpool. One after another, our early stories are upset by some matter of fact investigator, and although we are anxious to be always truly and faithfully informed, yet the sweeping away of those fables in which we had formerly delighted greatly shakes the faith in the belief of many wonders we have heard of, but not seen, and which still linger in our affections.

On Mr. Williams's arrival at Alten, he had to pay a steward's bill headed in the following descriptive fashion—"He with the large beard," and he says :—

"This account requires some explanation. First, as to the title of the debtor, 'He with the large beard.' The steward, not knowing our names, gave us descriptive designations in his ledger. There were five Englishmen on board who were thus described: 'He with the red beard,' 'He with the large beard,' 'He without a beard,' and 'He with a veil.'"

Even in Norway, with all its simplicity of manners among the inhabitants, they are not a whit more unsophisticated, in some parts, than their neighbours. Take for example the following bit of genuine pious imposition :—

"At the station of Hægeheim I encountered the first example I have met with in Norway of an attempt at petty imposition. I called for a bowl of milk, for which the hostess demanded four skillings, or nearly twopence, the usual charge being two skillings, and sometimes only one.

I threw two skillings on the table, and looked fierce; whereupon the woman picked up the two skillings and slunk away to the adjoining room, where a lazy looking man was sitting. A grumbling dialogue followed, from which, and the physiognomy of both, I inferred that the poor woman was honestly disposed, but her husband forced her to overcharge the guests. On leaving the house I observed written over the door in conspicuous letters some proverb or motto about fearing God. I have unhappily found it a rule, without any exception, and applicable in all countries, that people who parade their religion outside, and set up pious signposts in their actions or conversation, are mean, selfish, and dishonest."

There are several very valuable and practical hints in Mr. Williams's book, one of which is so apt to the purpose that we shall give it in his own words :—

"As the best means of preventing drunkenness is by supplying an agreeable substitute for intoxicating drinks, any improvement of the poor man's coffee is of great social importance; I therefore suggest to the benevolent ladies who so nobly exercise the attributes of woman by visiting with kind intent the dwellings of the poor, that they might do great service by teaching them how to roast, and grind, and make coffee; and, where it is practicable, by presenting the poor man's wife with an apparatus for the purpose. It appears to me that the iron tray and the wooden pestle and mortar answer their purposes admirably; and the two might be profitably manufactured and sold for one shilling, if a quantity were in demand. From what I have seen, with the wooden pestle and mortar, the newly roasted coffee may be pounded as quickly and effectually as it can be ground in a small coffee mill; and, if kept exclusively for this purpose, it would be a valuable addition to the domestic furniture of a cottage. One of these, with a roaster, a pound or two of coffee berries, and a lesson in the use of them, would be a most suitable marriage present to the bride of an agricultural labourer; for by their judicious use she might win her husband from the beer shop, and thus avert the domestic miseries so commonly associated with it."

There is also a hint to be gathered by our political economists as to supporting the aged poor, but we presume, from the absence of any mention to the contrary, the great incubus of our poor law system, able bodied paupers and vagrants, are unknown, to any considerable extent :—

"In Norway there are no poor rates, but the farmers have to support the aged poor as inmates of their houses. These old people generally do some light work, such as gathering wood and the like. The custom is primitive, and has many advantages. Charity thus becomes an active virtue, dwelling at the fireside of home, 'it bleaseth him that gives and him that takes'; for in kindly treating such a pensioner a happy influence is spread throughout the house, and the little children are trained in the exercise of gentle benevolence by a course of instruction that no maxims or sermons can substitute; for moral training must be a training in deed and feeling: mere ethics only inform the intellect."

Of course it is no business of readers, generally, to inquire if the author of a work is married or single, nor do we venture to give any definite information on this point, as far as Mr. Williams is concerned, but we think the truth leaks out in the following extract :

"At Honstadt, where I dined on the day following, raw smoked salmon was brought to me, and I very diffidently suggested to the hostess that I should prefer it fried a little. She would listen to nothing of the kind, and told me many times over that it was røkt (smoked), and that she liked it røkt without frying, and her husband liked it the same; and she intimated that, if I did not like what she and her husband and other people did, I must be a disreputable character. This sort of despotism is common to women of all nations, and its universal system is my main argument against strong minded women who advocate a female House of Commons."

"The persecutions I have had to endure because I usually drink cold water at breakfast are too incredible to narrate. I have heard a lady, otherwise gentle and kind hearted, assert to my face that a man who does not love tea and coffee, and drink it like other people, is an undomestic monster, deserving the dreadful doom of perpetual bachelorhood. If we had female legislators, summary laws would be enacted for the punishment of all such offences, and bachelors above thirty-five would perish at the stake."

Altogether Through Norway with a Knapsack, is one of the few readable books that are suited both for old and young, the grave and gay, and we shall be very much surprised if it does not go through several editions. There is a manly tone, slightly egotistical, about Mr. Williams's writing, yet it is so thoroughly honest that we rather like to see the character of the author in his work, feeling assured that where he writes in this style he is thoroughly master and con amore of his subject.

The City of the Dead; and other Poems. By JOHN COLLETT. London: Hardwicke.

YOUTH is a season of joyous innocence, and it is usually the practice of those whose words, or actions, have much to do with children to present to them the bright and sunny side of life, for if they reach the years of maturity there is sufficient time for them to look upon it in a sad and dismal light, even if they have little or no experience of the troubles of mankind. But of all the dull horrors to put into the mouth of the young, preserve us from such a specimen as Mr. Collett's

"CHILD'S PRAYER" (?)

"When gloomy robes of dreary night
Sweep silent by my side,
And many a sad and ghostly sight
Follows with noiseless stride;
"When slowly steals the bridled brenth,
The spirit quails with dread,
And footfall low of ghastly Death
Steals to some other bed;
"Or when, at call of wak'ning dawn,
The spectral phantoms flee,
And brightly streams the jocund morn;
My God, I think of Thee!"

The above lugubrious rhyme can only be equalled by one of the so called humorous specimens entitled

"THE LAY OF THE LIMPING."

"And now the parson's voice repeats
The words that make me die;
'A (h) men,' the solemn clerk responds;
'A (h) women,' too, says I.
"I'll take my stand on London bridge,
Plunge in that stream of mud,
And there will add more body to
That porter making flood.
"And oh! at evening, when the breeze
From this rampagious sea
Willywobbles through the streets,
O, think of blessed me!
"And now my story's done, fair maid,
Of hope and sorrow blended;
As the tadpole said, as he changed to a frog,
Behold, my tale is ended."

That any one should write the second line of the above, and print a note to it stating "the words that make me die," is intended for the marriage service—which we humbly conceive is more likely to make one live—is purely unaccountable. It is not wit, nor sense, nor ribaldry, but sheer dulness, only fit for the inhabitants of The City of the Dead.

Northumberland and the Border. By WALTER WHITE. London: Chapman and Hall.

MR. WHITE gave us his impressions of A Month in Yorkshire, about this time last year; this year he has gone farther north, and this book is of greater interest than its predecessor. The Border, with its legends, minstrelsy, and the numerous frays and liftings, of which the recollection is associated with almost every acre of ground, becomes of all absorbing interest through its historical associations, which permeate through every era of our history from the Romans down to our own time. Mr. White has done good service in directing attention to this locality, and will doubtless cause many travellers to seek a holiday among the vales and streams of Northumberland, hitherto the almost exclusive property of the angler and the artist. To those who wish for fresh and beautiful scenery, we cannot do better than advise an autumnal visit to the Border, and if they want reliable and useful information in a pleasant and attractive form, we counsel them to possess themselves of Mr. White's Northumberland and the Border. They will find the work useful and amusing, illustrated with a capital map, and containing many quaint stories and some excellent sketches of popular sports, one of which we extract for its peculiarity of Jedburgh dialect:—

"To this succeeds Hitch and Kick—a feat quite new to me. A staff, upon which slides a moveable bracket, is fixed upright in the ground; you might fancy it the measuring rod by which the recruiting serjeant takes the height of smart young men anxious to fight for their country; and the bracket being set at a height of six feet, a disk of parchment, stretched on a hoop about the size of a dessert plate, is laid upon it. A few minutes of calm would now be desirable, for the disk is so light that it is repeatedly blown off. The game consists in the player leaping up by the side of the staff, and while up, kicking the disk off the bracket, and then giving something like a polka hitch with his heel before he touches the earth. Hence the name, Hitch and Kick; not an easy effort of gymnastics, as any one who has a soft place to practise on may uncomfortably prove. Redark springs first, and away flies the disk, as if six feet were but a joke; and three or four others that follow are equally successful. One of them is a short burly fellow, by far too thick and heavy for feats of vaulting ambition, as one might judge, yet he leaps agile as a Pantaloon. 'He's a tailyer, I tell ye he's a tailyer!' argues

Rustic loudly, to settle a dispute as to the heavy leaper's calling. The bracket is pushed up to seven feet, and now the players must kick to a considerable height above their heads, and they all but one knock off the disk, and that one, incredible as it may seem, is not the thick "tailyer." But he fails at the next trial, with the bracket raised to eight feet: and although I see three others leap up and send the disk flying with that surprising high jerked kick, I can hardly believe my own eyes. Another rise—eight feet six—they all fail. A little lower—there, eight feet two—the players try again, and one of the three dislodges the parchment. "Weel dune! weel dune!" cry the rustics; "thot's braw."

Recollections of Samuel Rogers. London: Longman and Co.

"MELONIOUS ROGERS," as Byron termed the poet, has here had full justice done him. We remember Mr. Dyce's Table Talk of Samuel Rogers, and a more dull and pointless volume we do not recollect. On opening the above volume of course we, who are accustomed to venerate such names as Burke, Porson, Sheridan, Byron, Grenville, Fox, Sidney Smith, Luttrell, Moore, Malby, and others of the bygone celebrities of the generation now passed away, were most grievously disappointed at the amount of twaddle spoken by these great men, which made us regret that their sayings and doings had been dragged forward in this way. This book itself tells us but little of Rogers more than we are all acquainted with, but here and there are curious scraps of information, such, for instance, as the following on reporting,—

"I once sent a shorthand writer to take notes of Addington's speeches, but the scheme failed—the notes were so imperfect. All the reporters were against us, and the misrepresentations were a constant source of complaint."

It is wonderful how an art that now is so essentially useful could have furnished such a passage, for if we take all the morning papers and compare a speech delivered by any one, as printed in each of them, they are such exact counterparts of each other that nothing but a perfected and well understood system could produce.

One of the best stories in the book, told by Sir Walter Scott, of himself, is worth preserving. Sir Walter says:—

"There was a boy in my class at school who stood always at the top; nor could I with all my efforts supplant him. Day passed after day and still he kept his place, do what I would; till at length I observed that when a question was asked him he always fumbled with his fingers at a particular button in the lower part of his waistcoat. To remove it, therefore, became expedient in my eyes; and in an evil moment it was removed with a knife. Great was my anxiety to know the success of my measure, and it succeeded too well. When the boy was again questioned, his fingers again sought for the button, but it was not to be found. In his distress he looked down for it; it was to be seen no more than to be felt. He stood confounded, and I took possession of his place; nor did he ever recover it, or ever, I believe, suspect who was the author of his wrong. Often in after-life has the sight of him smote me as I passed by him, and often have I resolved to make him some reparation; but it ended in good resolutions. Though I never renewed my acquaintance with him I often saw him, for he filled some inferior office in one of the courts of law at Edinburgh. Poor fellow! He took early to drinking, and I believe he is dead."

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

LAST week, at the opening of the twenty-eighth congress of the British Association at Aberdeen, the Prince Consort assumed the presidency and delivered to an audience of two thousand persons, an inaugural address, replete with eloquence, good sense, and philosophy. The following is a very much condensed summary of his royal highness's observations:—"Gentlemen, your kind invitation to me to undertake the office of your president for the ensuing year could not but startle me on its first announcement. The high position which science occupies, the vast number of distinguished men who labour in the sacred cause, and whose achievements, while spreading innumerable benefits, justly attract the admiration of mankind, contrasted strongly in my mind with the consciousness of my own insignificance in this respect. A simple admirer of science to take the place of the chief and spokesman of scientific men of the day assembled in furtherance of their important objects—the thing appeared to me impossible; yet on reflection I came to the conclusion that, if not as a contributor to or director of your labours, I might still be useful to you—useful to science—by accepting your offer. Remembering that this association is not a secret fraternity of men jealously guarding the mysteries of their profession, but inviting the uninitiated public at large to join them—having as one of its objects to break down those imaginary and hurtful barriers which exist between men of science, and so-called men of practice—I felt that I could, from the peculiar position in which Providence has placed me in this country, appear as the representative of that large public which profits by and admires your exertions, but is unable actively to join in them; that my election was an act of humility on your part which to reject would have looked like false humility—that is, like pride—on mine. But I reflected further, and saw in my acceptance the means, of which necessarily so few are offered to her Majesty, of testifying to you, through the instrumentality of her husband, that your labours are not unappreciated by your Sovereign, and that she wishes her people to know this as well as yourselves. Guided by these reflections, my choice was speedily made, for the path of duty lay straight before me." His Royal Highness then paid a high compliment to Professor Owen; alluded to the wide field for study, more particularly to the geologist, the north of Scotland afforded; and remarked on the beneficial influences of science, and the consequent good which meetings like the present conferred on human kind. After pointing out in eloquent language, which drew forth frequent applause, the objects and advantage of science, the prince noticed the gratifying fact that the association had met with liberal patronage from the public, and expressed his satisfaction that there should exist bodies of men who brought the wants and claims of science before the public and the government, "who will even hand round the begging box and expose themselves to refusals and rebuffs, to which all beggars are liable, with the certainty, besides, of being considered great bores. Please to recollect that this species of bore is a most useful animal, and well adapted for the ends for which nature intended him." Having noticed the great genius and labours of the late Humboldt, the anniversary of whose birth by a singular coincidence happened that day, his Royal Highness thus concluded: "Philosophers are not vain theorists, but essentially men of practice: not conceited pedants, wrapped up in their own mysterious importance, but humble inquirers after truth—proud only of what they have achieved or won for the general use of man. Neither are they daring and presumptuous unbelievers—a character which ignorance has sometimes affixed to them—who would, like the Titans, storm heaven by placing mountain upon mountain till hurled down from the height attained by the terrible thunders of outraged Jove; but rather the pilgrims to the Holy Land, who toil on in search of the sacred shrine—in search of truth, God's truth, God's laws, as manifested in His works, in His creation." His Royal Highness was loudly cheered throughout.—Sir Benjamin Brodie then, in a few words, moved, and the Lord Provost briefly seconded, a vote of thanks to His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, which was heartily given, the whole company rising and cheering. The address occupied an hour in delivery. An invitation has been forwarded to Lord John Russell, now at Aberfeldie, to be present during some period of the British Association's sittings, and it is exceedingly probable that his lordship will comply with the invitation.

The office of Principal in Edinburgh University has been vacant since the death of the Very Rev. Dr. John Lee in April last, and considerable discussion has lately taken place as to the duty of the Edinburgh Town Council in regard to filling up the vacancy. By the Scotch Universities' Act of 1858 the office of principal is declared to be open to laymen, but that act neglected to fulfil its obvious intention of repealing the test of conformity to the Established Church, which, so far as regards the offices of principals and divinity professors, was not removed by the Test Act of 1853. A supplementary act to remedy the defect was last session brought in by Mr. Dunlop, and passed, but it was declared that it should not come into operation till the 10th of October, which is the day fixed for handing over the patronage and management of Edinburgh University, hitherto enjoyed by the civic corporation, to the curatorial court of seven, to be appointed under the act, and of whom the town council are to nominate four. A good deal of contention has taken place in the town council respecting the vacancy, one party urging the exercise of the patronage while it remained in their hands, and proposing the appointment of the Rev. Dr. John Cook, minister of St. Andrew's, and moderator of the general assembly of the Church of Scotland, while the majority indicated a desire to hand over the duty to the new patrons, who would, owing to the repeal of the test, have a larger field of choice. At a private meeting of the council, held on Tuesday, however, it was resolved, with only one dissenting voice, that Sir David Brewster, Principal of St. Andrew's College, should be appointed to the vacant office. Sir David is well known to be a Free Churchman, and it may be recollected that great controversy took place as to his continuance in the office of principal after he had seceded from the Established Church in 1843; but it was found that having once taken the test he could not be ejected. In the confident belief that, looking to his present occupancy of a similar office, the test would not be applied should he accept the new office, the council have resolved, as the last act of patronage, to appoint him as Principal of Edinburgh University. At the public meeting following the private conference, the Lord Provost nominated Sir D. Brewster, expressing his belief that the appointment would secure the approval of all men of science throughout Europe. Only one objection, he said, had been made against Sir David—namely, his advanced years; but he was not older than Lord Campbell, who was but the other day elevated to the highest office in the realm, that of Lord Chancellor, and who was now as vigorous as at any period of his long career; or Lord Brougham, on whom it was proposed to confer the new office of Lord Rector of Edinburgh University, on the inauguration of the new régime. Bailie Forrester, who had in the former discussions urged the necessity of the council filling up the office, believing that the University Court without a principal could not be lawfully constituted, seconded the motion, which was almost unanimously carried, Dr. Murray only dissenting. The other candidates who had offered themselves to the council, assuming that if they were appointed the test would be applied, were all clergymen of the Established Church—namely, Dr. Cook, already mentioned, Dr. Tulloch, Principal of St. Mary's College, St. Andrew's, and Dr. Anderson, of Newburgh, author of various geological works.

The Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, M.P., will visit Manchester during the last week of October. He has promised to address the members and friends of the Institutional Association of Lancashire and Cheshire, embracing 110 Mechanics' Institutions, and to distribute the prizes and certificates to the successful candidates at the late examination held at the Manchester and Blackburn centres of the association. Mr. Charles Dickens delivered the prizes last year, Lord Brougham the year previously. It is fifteen years since the ex-leader of the Commons addressed a public assembly in Manchester.

Baron de Bourqueney, who acts for France at Zurich, is well known in London, where he was secretary to the Embassy of Marshal Sebastiani, temp. Louis Philippe. He began life, as most French diplomats have done, as a journalist; he was long on the staff of the Débat. Walewski started in a similar position on the Constitutionnel. Cavour, Thiers, Guizot, Bunsen, and other continental public men had the same training.

The Committee of the Liverpool Art Union have decided to adopt the Parisian scheme, and to reduce the price of the shares from a guinea to one shilling! A large sum is raised annually in Paris from a subscription of one franc, and it seems the experiment is now to be tried in this country. The highest prize will be of £100, which will fall to one of the shilling subscribers, who will have the choice of a work of Art of that value from the Exhibition of the Society of Fine Arts in Liverpool. There will of course be other prizes of various amounts. It is anticipated that subscriptions will be received from all parts of the kingdom, expressions of approval having been received from various quarters.

The Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres of Paris, at its late meetings, has been occupied with the choice of subjects for the prize to be offered for competition for the year 1861. It proposes for the ordinary annual prize the following question:—"Investigate the administration of Alfonse, Comte de Poitiers and Toulouse, according to the original documents, which are to be found chiefly in the archives of the Empire, and explain the points in which it approaches or differs from that of St. Louis." It also proposes, for the prize founded by M. Bordin, the following question:—"Give the history of the Ethiopian language and literature, and prepare as complete a list as possible of the original works and translations in Ghez; determine the different epochs of literature in Abyssinia; enumerate the peculiarities of style which enable us, in default of positive proof, to assign dates to the works written in Ghez."

We have news from Munich of a deplorable accident that has happened to Justus Liebig. The great chemist, who has been travelling in the interior of Bavaria, was unfortunate enough, whilst passing through a small village, to fall down and break his kneecap. He was at once conveyed to the town of Passau, where two of the most eminent physicians of Munich are attending him.

The Bombay Times mentions the appointment of a second expedition from Bombay to North Eastern Africa, to carry out the discoveries of Captains Burton and Speke. Mr. J. Kennelly, of the Indian navy, and secretary to the Bombay Geographical Society, and Dr. Silvester, compose it. The former is said to be an accomplished astronomer and meteorologist, and the latter a draughtsman and naturalist. They will proceed at once to the great lake district, and endeavour to circumnavigate the northernmost of the lakes. They are to set out in November next.

During the past week, three paintings by M. Kiddlemans, of Brussels, which had been accidentally delayed, have been added to the Exhibition of the Liverpool Society of Fine Arts. They represent scenes in the Belgian, Flanders, and Ardennes. We are informed that the sales continue highly satisfactory.

M. Jacques Coste, one of the oldest journalists in Paris, and a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, has just died at the age of sixty-two. M. Coste was the founder and director of Le Temps, a paper of considerable influence under the reign of Louis Philippe, to which Leon Faucher, Merriau, Pages (de l'Arriège), Ch. Nodier, and other wellknown names, were contributors. He was one of the forty protestors whose life was to be sacrificed if Charles X. had succeeded in enforcing the July ordinances. When Casimir Perrier was minister, the Hotel Bonaparte, which was then occupied by M. Coste, became a point of attraction for the chief politicians, journalists, and littérateurs of the day.

Poetry.

SELECTIONS FROM POETRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

THE INQUIRY.

BY THOMAS CAREW.

AMONGST the myrtles, as I walk'd,
Love and my sighs thus intertalk'd :
"Tell me," said I, in deep distress,
Where may I find my shepherdess ?"
"Thou fool," said Love, "know'st thou not this—
In everything that's good she is !
In yonder tulip go and seek ;
There may'st thou find her lip, her cheek ;
"In yon enamelled pansie by
There thou shalt have her curious eye ;
In bloom of peach, in rosie bud,
There wave the streamers of her blood ;
"In brightest lily there that stands,
The emblem of her whiter hands ;
In yonder rising hill there smell
Such sweets as in her bosom dwell."
"Tis true," said I ; and thereupon
I went to pluck them, one by one,
To make of parts a union ;
But on a sudden all was gone.
With that I stopt. Said Love : "These be,
Fond man, resemblances of thee,
And, as these flowers, thy joy shall die,
Even in the twinkling of an eye ;
And all thy hopes of her shall wither,
Like these short sweets, thus knit together."

A NYMPH'S PASSION.

BY BEN JONSON.

I LOVE, and he loves me again ;
Yet dare I not tell who,
For, if the nymphs should know my swain,
I fear they'd love him too.
Yet if it be not known,
The pleasure is as good as none,
For that's a narrow joy is but our own.
I'll tell that, if they be not glad,
They yet may envy me ;
But then, if I grow jealous mad,
And of them pitied be,
It were a plague 'bove scorn,
And yet it cannot be forborne,
Unless my heart would as my thought be torn.
He is (if they can find him) fair,
And fresh and fragrant too,
As summer's sky or purged air,
And looks as lilies do
That are this morning blown.
Yet, yet, I doubt he is not known,
And fear, much more, that more of him be shown.
But he hath eyes so round, so bright,
As make away my doubt,
Where Love may all his torches light,
Though fate had put them out.
But, then, to increase my fears,
What nymph see'er his voice but hears
Will be my rival, though she have but ears.]

I'll tell no more, and yet I love,
And he loves me ; yet no
One unbecoming thought doth move
From either heart, I know,
But so exempt from blame
As it would be to each a fame,
If Love or Fear would let me tell his name.

THE PASSING BELL.

(CIRCA 1603.)

COME, honest Sexton, take thy spade,
And let my grave be quickly made ;
Thou still art ready for the dead,
Like a kind host to make my bed.
I now am come to be thy guest ;
Let me in some dark lodging rest,
For I am weary, full of pain,
And of my pilgrimage complain.
On Heaven's decree I waiting lie,
And all my wishes are to die.
Hark ; I hear my passing bell !
Farewell, my loving friends, farewell !
Make my cold bed, good sexton, deep,
That my poor bones may safely sleep
Until that sad and joyful day
When from above a voice shall say—
"Wake, all ye dead, lift up your eyes ;
The great Creator bids you rise."
Then do I hope, among the just,
To shake off this polluted dust,
And, with new robes of glory drest,
To have access among the blest.
Hark ; I hear my passing bell !
Farewell, my loving friends, farewell !

IN PRAISE OF ALE.

WHEN the chill north easter blows,
And winter tells a heavy tale,
And 'pies, and daws, and rooks, and crows,
Do sit and curse the frost and snows,
Then give me ale.

Ale in a Saxon rumkin then,
Such as will make grim malkin prate,
Bids valour bargain in tall men,
Quickens the poet's wits and pen,
Despises fate.

Ale that the absent battle fights,
And forms the march of Swedish drums ;
Disputes the prince's laws and rights ;
What's past and done tells mortal wights,
And what's to come.

Ale that the ploughman's heart up keeps,
And equals it to tyrant's thrones,
And wipes the eye that ever weeps,
And hurls in sweet and dainty sleeps
Their very bones.

Grandchild of Ceres, Bacchus's daughter,
Wine's emulous neighbour, even if stale,
Ennobling all the nymphs of water,
And filling each man's heart with laughter—
Oh, give me ale !

TOILET AT THE FALLS.—In a few minutes, first one crept out, and then another, into the waiting room, feeling rather queer, and wondering if all the party were attired in the same extraordinary manner, and were evidently consoled when they saw others in the same plight ; and at last we all laughed most heartily at each other. Fancy the ladies à la bloomer, with red flannel trousers, a yellow oilskin tunic, coarse blue worsted stockings, and such shoes, with high hobnails in them ! Gentlemen, a complete dress of yellow oilskin. The black guide now brought each person a tarpaulin cap like a coal heaver's, with a large flap to keep the water from running down the back of the neck. One of the ladies looked most disconsolate at this last article of attire ; but after holding it in her hand a few minutes, a smile appeared on her countenance, and she took out her pocket handkerchief, and deliberately put it over her head before crowning it with the hat. This arrangement was considered a great improvement, and was universally adopted. When we were all ready, John Bull's dislike to be laughed at came into full play ; no one would move, for we had to walk some little distance, and then cross the road. At last we persuaded one of the party to peep out and see if the coast was clear. We could see the negro guide through the door, grinning and showing his white teeth ; we then heard him say, pointing at us on the sly, "Lookee dar ! dis chile b'lieve tha white folks am 'fraild." This would never do, so off we started, and to our great delight, we reached the point without being seen.—American Photographs.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

MASONIC SONG WANTED.

I VISITED a country Lodge last winter, and heard a song, two lines only of which I remember:—

"When matters go wrong, let your judgment incline
To make them go even by drawing the line."

As I see you have adopted the plan of "Notes and Queries," perhaps you can help me to the song I quote from, or tell who was its author?—J. A. M.—[The song in question is entitled "The Mason's Allegory," and was written by George Saville Carey, the son of the celebrated Henry Carey, and the father of Ann Carey, who was the mother of our late Bro. Edmund Kean, the tragedian. "J. A. M." is not quite correct in his version; the song originally ran thus:—

"The trade of a Mason's a good moral school,
Where the measures of life are establish'd by rule:
When affairs go awry, let your judgment incline
To make matters even by drawing the line.

"Should your paths, being crooked, bewilder the mind,
Or, encircled by care, no alternative find,
Ne'er let your guide, reason, give way to despair;
Old Time, with exertion, your troubles may square.

"Should you meet with a brother in craft too profound,
Make use of your plummet—his subtlety sound;
And if you no bottom should find in his heart,
When his hand he presents you, then bid him depart.

"Let your converse be level, your life not too gay,
But just within compass, the moderate way;
When you're crippled by age, infirm, or oppress'd,
Let Faith lend a pillar on which you may rest."

We are sorry to say that we have not been able to trace the air to which the above excellent, and truly Masonic, song was adapted.]

MASONIC ANECDOTE.

Following the course of a former correspondent who sent a Masonic anecdote, and suggesting that any brother meeting with such would do good service by forwarding them, I avail myself of that intimation to enclose a cutting from a newspaper of very old date, in which the following is inserted:— A. C. F.

"At an inn in a town in the west of England several people were sitting round the fire in a large kitchen, through which there was a passage to other parts of the house, and among the company there was a travelling woman and a tailor. In this inn there was a Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons held, and, it being Lodge night, several of the members passed through the kitchen in their way to the Lodge apartments. This introduced observations on the principles of Masonry and the occult signs by which Masons could be known to each other. The woman said there was not so much mystery as people imagined, for that she could show anybody the Mason's sign. 'What,' said the tailor, 'that of the Free and Accepted?' 'Yes,' she replied, 'and I will hold you a half-crown bowl of punch, to be confirmed by any of the members you please to nominate.' 'Why,' said he, 'a woman was never admitted; and how is it possible you could procure it?' 'No matter for that,' added she; 'I will readily forfeit the wager if I do not establish the fact.' The company urged the unfortunate tailor to accept the challenge, which he at last agreed to, and the bet was deposited. The woman got up, and took hold of the tailor by the collar, saying, 'Come, follow me;' which he did, trembling alive, fearing he was to undergo some part of the discipline in the making of a Mason, of which he had heard a most dreadful report. She led him into the street, and, pointing to the sign of the Lion and Lamb, asked him whose sign it was. He answered, 'It is Mr. Loder's,' (the name of the inn-keeper.) 'Is he a Freemason?' 'Yes.' 'Then,' said the woman, 'I have shown you the sign of a Free and Accepted Mason.' The laugh was so much against poor snip for having been taken in that it was with some difficulty he could be prevailed on to partake of the punch."

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PROV. GRAND CHAPTER AT CALCUTTA.

In the year 1814, a Provincial Grand Chapter was established for Royal Arch Masonry in Calcutta and its dependencies. The Companions belonging to the Chapters of London and Moira, and other Companions of the Order, met at the Lodge-room of "The Star in the East," when M. E. Comp. Compton, Prov. G. Supt. of Calcutta and its dependencies, constituted the Prov. G. Chapter in ample and ancient form. The following Companions composed the primary officers:—M. E. Comp. Compton, Z.; Blaquiere, H.; D'Oyly, J.; Larkins, N.; Montague, E.; S. Hampton, H. Alexander, and Hayes, Sojs.; Aubury, G. Supt. of Works. After the establishment of the Prov. G. Chapter, the M. W. Bro. Seton, a Grand Master of the Craft of Masonry, was exalted to the degree of a Royal Arch Mason, and became a member of the Grand Chapter. The Principals of the London and Moira Chapters attended during the ceremony, and formed, ex officio, a part of the Prov. G. Chapter.—S. E.

MASONRY AND THE INQUISITION.

The following very true and beautiful reflections on the intolerance of the Romish church towards our Craft are to be found in vol. lxvii. of the European Magazine, p. 520, and, I think, are worthy of finding a home among the notes in the Magazine.

P. G. T.

"It might have been presumed that years of blood, and seasons of devastation, would have taught the heads of Christian nations to place a proper value on all those amicable ties, by whatever name they may be called, which unite man with man in the bonds of friendship, and which help to form the links of that chain by which social order might be preserved. But unhappily this is not the case, and the restoration of the inquisition, in Spain, has been followed by an edict from the Roman Pontiff, published on the 25th of September, 1815, prohibiting all the secret societies, but particularly those of Freemasons. Suspicion, upon whose base this measure must have been erected, surely wanted a mark whereon to fix her jaundiced eye; for in what age, we ask, have societies of Freemasons been found inimical to the public weal, or when have they disturbed the repose of any nation—disturbed did we say—we spurn the phrase, and will go further. We maintain that the good government and the laws of all nations are under infinite obligations to these establishments. Their doctrines are universally acknowledged to be all peaceful and benevolent—their principles are founded on the purest Christianity—their practice, like that of the good Samaritan, to bind up the wounds of the afflicted, 'to comfort and help the weak-hearted, and to raise up them that are fallen;' their desire is 'on earth good will towards men.' If the Catholic religion aims to be exalted to its former rank among the nations of Europe, it must seek some other way than this. For we hesitate not to assert, that not all the Bulls of the Pope will be able to erase from the mind of the Free and Accepted Mason that duty which, next to his unfeigned adoration of the Divine Architect, he owed to his fellow-man—Christian benevolence."

WAS THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON A FREEMASON?

In the absence of records showing the time of initiation of the Duke of Wellington, it will be gratifying to obtain secondary evidence. The duke was an affiliated member of that distinguished Lodge, La Clemente Amié, of Paris, and in that capacity is commemorated by the Lodge in the official list. The Lodge was founded on the 8th of the 1st month, (March), 1585. The duke must have joined during the period of his residence in Paris. Although the Lodge has not only a Rose Croix Chapter, but an Areopagitic Council of K.H., the duke had not been admitted to any higher degree, but is entered as M.M. The Ill. Bro. De Marçonnay will most likely be able to give further particulars. It is worth while to seek for information among the old Masons in Portugal as to intercourse of the duke with Lodges in Portugal. The above settles the fact of the duke being a Mason.—HYDE CLARKE, Smyrna, 4th September, 1859.

EARLY MASONIC SERMON.

By whom, and in what year, was the earliest Masonic sermon delivered?—CLERICUS.—[The first with which we are acquainted was preached at Christ Church, Boston, on St. John's day, Dec. 27th, 1749, by the Rev. Charles Brockwell, A.M., his Majesty's chaplain at Boston, New England. In the Freemasons' Pocket Companion of 1754, it was first inserted. There have been several reprints of it].

DRUIDICAL LITERATURE.

I should be obliged to you, or any of your correspondents, for the names of some books which treat of the Druids and their rites; as I believe that there was among them a knowledge of some of the principles of Masonry.—STONEHENGE.—["Stonehenge" should have told us how he came by his belief, because in directing him to certain works, it is quite possible we may tell him of those he is already acquainted with. Those which occur to us at the moment are Godfrey Higgins's Celtic Druids, 4to., Lond., 1829; Rev. W. Jones's Description of Stonehenge, Ambury, &c., with an Account of the Learning and Discipline of the Druids, 8vo., Salisbury, 1776; Inigo Jones's Most Notable Antiquity of Great Britain, vulgarly called Stonehenge Restored, by Inigo Jones, folio, Lond., 1665 (this work has large folding plates); Dr. J. Smith's Choir Gaur; the Grand Orrery of the Ancient Druids, commonly called Stonehenge, 4to., Lond., 1771; A Complete History of the Origin, Manners, Powers, Rites, and Superstitions, &c., of the Druids, 8vo., Lichfield, 1810].

STEPHEN JONES.

At p. 148 of the present issue of the Freemasons' Magazine, Bro. How has very kindly furnished us with his personal recollections of our late Bro. Stephen Jones. Perhaps it may not be deemed out of place to supplement Bro. How's communication with some further facts which are gathered from various obituary notices.

Bro. Stephen Jones was the son of Mr. Giles Jones, formerly secretary to the York Buildings Water Company, was educated at St. Paul's School, and afterwards placed under an eminent sculptor, but on account of some difference he was removed from that situation and apprenticed to a printer in Fetter-lane. On the expiration of his articles he was engaged as corrector of the press by Mr. Strahan, the king's printer, and where he was brought into close and daily intercourse with our late Bro. William Preston, a junior partner in that establishment. At the end of four years he removed to the office of Mr. Thomas Wright, in Peterborough-court, where he remained till the death of his employer in March, 1797, an event which terminated Mr. Jones's immediate connection with the printing business. He then became the editor of the Whitehall Evening Post, but on the decline of that paper he was appointed to the management, and became part proprietor of the General Evening Post. This paper, too, he was destined to see gradually fall in circulation till it merged in its contemporary the St. James's Chronicle. Bro. Jones became also, on the death of Mr. Isaac Reed, the editor of the European Magazine, and was for some time the conductor of the first issue of the Freemasons' Magazine. In the Masonic Craft Bro. Jones was very deeply versed. He was a man of genial sympathies and a great promoter of social gatherings, and it is to be regretted that, in common with the times in which he lived, his habits were inconsistent with that strict attention to business that can only secure a competence to those connected with the press. He was a man of considerable talent in his day, and his Biographical Dictionary, in miniature, ran through many editions. He also republished Reed's Biographia Dramatica, in four volumes, and was most unmercifully attacked by an article on it in the Quarterly Review, his critic censuring him for retaining many of the entries that had appeared in the previous edition, and not giving him credit for the very large mass of new matter which he had incorporated into the later performance. This attack caused him to print a pamphlet, entitled Hypercriticism Exposed; in a Letter to the Readers of the Quarterly Review, 8vo., 1812; but, it is said, this was the most unfortunate step he could have taken, as he never prospered afterwards. From 1799, for many years, he selected an annual volume from the newspapers, under the title of The Spirit of the Public Journals. His other works are, An Abridgment of Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution, 12mo., 1791; Monthly Beauties, 8vo., 1793; An Abridgment of Ward's Natural History, 3 vols., 12mo., 1798; A History of Poland, 8vo., 1795; Dodd's Beauties of History, Enlarged, 12mo., 1796; An Abridgment of Donald Campbell's Journey to India, 12mo., 1796; Masonic Miscellanies, 12mo., 1797, of which there were several editions, the last being in 1813; A Pronouncing and Explanatory Dictionary of the English Language, 8vo., 1798; Gray's Poetical Works (Illustrated), 8vo. 1798; Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, 2 vols., 1800; Blair's Chronology Continued, fol., 1803; Davies's Life of Garrick (new edition, with additions), 2 vols., 8vo., 1808; Preston's Illustrations of Masonry (with additions), 8vo., 1821. Bro. Stephen Jones departed this life on the 20th of December, 1828, in King-street, Holborn, having been for some time a sufferer from dropsy. He was in his sixty-fifth year at the time of his decease.—MATTHEW COOKE.

AHASUERUS FROMANTIEL.

Who was Ahasuerus Fromantiel? He is mentioned in some old books and pamphlets of the seventeenth century as a most "ingenious mechanick." Was he a Mason?—SENEC.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

UNIFORMITY OF WORKING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I deem it a subject of legitimate inquiry what differences, if any, exist in our universal brotherhood regard to rites and ceremonies; and your valuable Magazine is an excellent and very appropriate medium for the dissemination of intelligence that will aid in the examination of this subject.

I feel it to be important determining whether the landmarks are in danger—whether they have already been invaded, and if so, where and how far—and thus enable thinking Masons to take measures for the restoration of all deficiencies, and the abrogation of all excrescences.

Though restrained in a communication intended for publication, from going into details, I will be as explicit as prudence and justice will permit, I desire to set on foot an inquiry as to what changes in ritual exist, where they originated, and to what extent they have spread?

Among the many writers on the subject of Freemasonry, there are but few who show a desire to examine the subject, except upon a basis which is circumscribed by our oral lectures and the jurisprudence of the Order. I fear that too many of our brethren are not aware of the extent or even the nature of that "Antient Hidden Freemasonry" to which allusion used to be made in the lectures and teachings of the institution in days that are past, and to which Hutchinson, Preston and others have so forcibly alluded in their writings.

Our Grand Lodge, at its annual session in June last, reviewed the working of the Grand Lecturer; and by a re-election of Bro. Drew who holds that responsible office showed their approval of his work—yet it differs in many trifling points from the working as taught in times past. Now is it not of importance that we should trace these and other discrepancies to their origin, and thus arrive at the best and most reliable remedy for the evils with which we are threatened?

It does not follow that Bro. Drew's system is not legitimate or antient, because it differs from that which has prevailed "from time immemorial," in some sections of the globe; nor is it to be received as a standard without examination and comparison. With what?—why with the landmarks of the institution as developed in the designs drawn upon our Masonic tressel board.

Nor does the state of New York stand alone in this respect, many other state jurisdictions are pursuing similar means to enforce peculiar systems of work, denouncing all others, and awakening strife and contention, where amity and union should exist unbroken and impregnable.

This evil is not confined to the United States of North America—your own Grand Lodge can furnish clear and undeniable proofs on the subject to which I am referring, and to which I refer at this time to lead to inquiry, as before stated, on the point of danger, to be effected by the deviation from any of the landmarks of antient hidden Freemasonry.

Are we not, as a body, too negligent of those antient landmarks—are not our Lodges, universally, remiss in the study and development of them—are we doing our duty to the fullest extent by inducting our members into the mysteries of godliness and the development of the true interpretation and exposition of the esoteric system of ethics, morality, and truth, which lies concealed in our symbolism?

I do not expect that these inquiries will be fully met in the columns of your Magazine, but I do hope to elicit attention and arouse those who can exert influence to awaken a desire to know these mysteries; for I am persuaded in my own mind that where there is an honest desire for information and enlightenment for pure and legitimate purposes, that enlightenment will be afforded by the G.A.O.T.U., who will illuminate every mind that is a fit receptacle for the mysteries.

Should you deem these remarks suitable and likely to awaken thought on this important subject referred to, I trust your Magazine will be made a medium for the diffusion of such illustrative remarks as may occur to any of your readers, or to yourself.

I see, by your issue of the 9th July, that you have changed the form—this I regard as an improvement, and trust you will find a corresponding disposition to be liberal on the part of your readers.

I also see that Bro. Elisha D. Cooke is in your midst, and although I am not personally intimate with him, yet, from his connexion with Bro. Rob Morris, of the "Voice of Masonry," I am pleased to find he is received with that attention which should always exist among the fraternity; and I do hope he will be granted all the facilities our English, Scotch, and Irish brethren possess to acquire information in regard to the history and principles of Masonry, as no one is better calculated to lay such matters before the Craft universally than the editor of the "Voice," for whom Bro. Cooke is acting.

The fraternity in the state of New York is again united, and there is now but one Grand Lodge in this jurisdiction. The process of "healing" the illegitimates will, ere this reaches you, be fully consummated upon honourable and truly Masonic principles.

The General Grand Chapter of the United States will hold its triennial session in September; as will also the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar, when many subjects will be acted upon which are intended to exert, and must exert, an important influence upon their constituency. I shall endeavour to keep you advised in a matter of interest to the Craft generally.

In the last issue of the "Voice of Masonry" just received, I find a letter from Bro. Cooke, in which he gives his impressions on a recent visit to an English Chapter of Royal Arch Masonry. He says he found that the rites and ceremonies were different to ours; nor were the English Royal Arch Masons satisfied with the same number of tokens; nor were any of theirs like ours. I simply allude to this as an illustration of my positions in the preceding part of this letter. I will write again and develop the subject further.

Yours fraternally,
New York, 28th July, 1859. JAMES B. TAYLOR.

MASONRY IN THE PUNJAUB.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It occurs to me that, as we in India derive much pleasure from a perusal of communications to your Magazine, some account of the progress in this part of the world might, perhaps, be acceptable to your readers, so I will give a slight history of our Lodge here at Lahore, the capital of the Punjaub.

The Lodge was named "Hope and Perseverance," and established on the 1st of January of this year. The want of one had long been felt by the resident brethren: but from their small numbers, the constant shifting of some of them, and principally owing to the absence of a brother of influence and zeal to start the matter, no progress had, up to November last, been made. However, about that time we were fortunate enough to receive an important accession to our strength in the advent of Bro. H. D. Sandeman, a genuine hard working Mason, possessing all the rare qualifications necessary for the task of establishing a Lodge, and afterwards for the able ruling of it. Through his exertions then, and the energy he had by his example instilled into the brethren, the Lodge was formed.

The number of members at starting was eight; there are now subscribing about twenty-two—for India a very large number, for here very few persons remain at one station for any length of time, the majority only stay a year or so, and the consequence of this constant state of moving on is, that none are able to afford much support to the permanent establishment of anything. However, this camp life tends to strengthen, among Masons, the wish to meet together for mutual defence and support as often as possible; and many brethren in India think little of travelling forty or fifty miles on a back bruising conveyance called a "mail cart," over villanous roads, with the thermometer at ever so much, for the purpose of attending a Lodge meeting. We have had several such instances of Masonic zeal in our members during the few past months. The funds of the Lodge are in a flourishing condition (St. John's box especially so), so that we purpose erecting a Masonic temple so soon as the present monsoon ceases. By the way, I would mention that, to Indian Masons, the fact of English Lodges being held in taverns seems unaccountable. All that I have heard speak on the subject scout the practice as most objectionable and disgraceful to our noble Order. The movement in progress at present at home for the erection of suitable temples will, perhaps, soon clear away the stain. I need hardly tell you that in India our Lodge buildings are always kept exclusively for the purposes of Masonry.

Attached to the Lodge there is now a Royal Arch Chapter styled the "Punjab Chapter," and this is, I am glad to be able to say, like the Lodge, in a promising condition. The Chapter was opened for the first time on the 6th of July, when five brethren were exalted. Several Companions came very long distances to assist in the ceremonies, which were most ably presided over by M.E. Comp. H. D. Sandeman; the chairs of H. and J. being filled by Comps. O'Brien and Ball. The fitting up of the Chapter (no easy task) was managed in a very creditable manner by each Companion lending his hearty assistance. The degree is much prized by the Companions here, and applications for exaltation are numerous, so that the Punjab Chapter promises to be a prosperous one.

It is also in contemplation to open an Encampment of Knights Templar, under V.E. Commander Sandeman. Should this be established, the brethren of this Lodge will be not a little proud, seeing that the degree is worked nowhere in the vast continent of India, excepting in Madras.

From the above rambling account, you will glean that Masonry is at present flourishing in this part of the east; the success of our Lodge is however principally due to the untiring exertions of Bro. Sandeman. His services to the Craft have just been acknowledged by the Prov. Grand Lodge by his appointment to be a Prov. Grand Warden, an honour never better deserved or more worthily bestowed. He is about to leave the Punjab to fill a higher situation at Madras. His loss to the Lodge will be much felt; but the brethren, while regretting his departure, rejoice at the good fortune that calls him away, and are about to present to the Worshipful Brother some testimonial of their esteem and admiration.

I know not if what I have written above be worthy of a place in your columns. Should it be inserted, you will hear occasionally from

Yours fraternally,

A MASON.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

At the meeting of the Board of Benevolence on Wednesday, £85 were voted amongst seven brethren or their widows. One sum of £20 was voted to a brother from Sydney, New South Wales, initiated in 1852. The consideration of a petition from a Scottish brother was postponed for further information.

THE R.W. Bro. Roxburgh, G. Reg., has appointed Wednesday, the 12th of October, for holding a Prov. Grand Lodge of Suffolk, at the Lecture Hall, Woodbridge.

Nothing can show the importance in which the Craft is held in Australia more than the expense the brethren go to in furnishing their Lodges. We have just inspected ten volumes of the Sacred Law about to be sent out by Bro. Spencer, of Great Queen Street. They are got up in most beautiful style—the binding is replete with Masonic emblems of the most chaste design—the expense of each volume being equal to what many Lodges in England would look upon as sufficient to furnish the Lodge at starting.

METROPOLITAN.

ROYAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION FOR AGED FREE-MASONS AND THEIR WIDOWS.

[The following circular has been issued to the various Lodges]:

WORSHIPFUL MASTER,—The M.W. Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, having sanctioned the resolution passed at the last annual general meeting, viz., "That it is the opinion of this general meeting that an annual festival would be advantageous to this charity, and not injurious to the other charities," and his lordship having appointed Wednesday the 25th day of January, 1860, for holding the first annual festival in aid of the funds of this Institution, I am directed by the Committee of Management to solicit the name of a brother of your Lodge who will act as a Steward on that occasion, and trust you will favour me with the same.

As it is the desire of the committee to recommend as great a number of annuitants, for election at the next annual meeting, as possible, they earnestly solicit your co-operation in obtaining donations and subscriptions in furtherance of the objects of this institution, for which purpose I enclose you a form.

I have the honour to be, Worshipful Master, yours fraternally.

W. FARNFIELD, Sec.

Grand Secretary's Office, Freemasons' Hall,
London, September, 1859.

PROVINCIAL.

DEVONSHIRE.

PLYMOUTH.—St. John's Lodge (No. 83).—At the regular meeting of this Lodge, at the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday, the 6th of September, Bro. Phillips having given ample proofs of his proficiency in the intermediate steps, was raised to the degree of Master Mason, and Mr. Finemore having been balloted for and unanimously accepted, was initiated into the first degree. The ceremonies were both ably performed, and we notice with pleasure the division of labour, by which Bro. Dupré, S.W., and Bro. Holmes, J.W., did a considerable part of the duty which generally devolves on the Master. We admired the manner in which the charges were delivered by the S.W., and the working tools were explained by the J.W. Bro. Gover has been the W.M. of this Lodge for nearly 25 years, during which time it has risen from a low ebb to a state of proficiency and prosperity; and having regard to the firm basis on which it now rests, the practice of charity, we think it must be many years before it can again lapse into difficulties. At any rate it is not probable that the refreshment table will ever become the bane of the Lodge.

STONEDHOUSE.—Lodge of Sincerity (No. 224).—At a regular meeting held in St. George's Hall, pursuant to notice, on Monday, Sept. 12th, at seven o'clock, P.M., Bro. R. B. Rodd, W.M., in the chair, supported by the following brethren:—Hunt, P.M., acting S.W.; Barton, acting J.W.; Tripe, P.M., P. Prov. G.S.D., Treasurer; Spence Bate, Secretary; Ridley, S.D.; Rae, J.D.; Kadri, acting I.G.; and Dix, acting Chaplain; there were also present Bros. Russell, P.M.; Brizzi, G. L. Hawker, Jackman, Bull, No. 717; Soheirbeck, No. 102; and Bassmagian, No. 122. The minutes of the preceding Lodge being confirmed, a candidate was proposed for initiation at the next meeting; and there being no further business, the W.M. worked the Lodge up through the three degrees, and then down again; and finally closed the Lodge in peace and harmony at half-past eight o'clock.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Southampton Lodge (No. 555).—The first meeting of this Lodge for the winter session took place on the 15th inst., Bro. George Lungley, W.M., in the chair. Bros. J. George of Romsey, and Peter Lungley of Southampton, were raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons, and Bro. Roe was proposed as a joining member. Bro. J. R. Stebbing, P.M., called the attention of the Lodge to the importance of aiding in the general and growing desire amongst the brethren of England that some method should be established by which Provincial brethren should be enabled to vote on the election of the various boards which managed and controlled the business of Masonry and the various charities of the Order—that at the present time there were a far larger number of Provincial than of London Lodges, yet from the greater convenience with which the London brethren could attend as compared with those in the provinces, the former were four or five times in number larger in attendance at all quarterly communications, and hence elected on all boards and committees of Grand Lodge; he therefore asked the Lodge to pass a resolution soliciting the Board of General Purposes to consider this unfair condition of things, and to urge on that Board to recommend to Grand Lodge that all Masters, Past Masters, and Wardens of Lodges, alike London and Provincial, be allowed to vote by voting papers for all boards and committees of Grand Lodge by such mode as may most fairly record the wishes of the majority of persons entitled to attend Grand Lodge. Bro. Charles Bromley, one of the oldest Past Masters, said he quite concurred in the justice and necessity of the proposal urged by Bro. Stebbing, and cordially seconded it. His professional occupations rarely, if ever, enabled him to attend Grand Lodge; but he thought he had a right to exercise a vote in these elections and to contribute to the means of getting a fair proportion of Provincial brethren willing to act, placed on these Boards of Grand Lodge; the resolution was carried with perfect unanimity.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

CONSECRATION OF THE FREEMASONS' HALL AT LEICESTER.

The annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of this province was held at the county town on Wednesday, the 14th instant, for the consecration and dedication of the recently erected Freemasons' Hall, in Halford-street, and other business. The following brethren were present during the day—The Right Hon. Earl Howe, G.C.H., (Past Deputy Grand Master of England), Prov. G.M.; W. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M.; Windram, P. Prov. S.G.W., as Prov. S.G.W., (in the absence of Bro. Morris in Ireland); Mammatt, (W.M., No. 1081), Prov. J.G.W.; Rev. J. O. Picton, M.A., Prov. G. Chaplain; Underwood, (P. Prov. J.G.W.), Prov. G. Treas.; F. Goodyer, Prov. G. Sec.; Millican, (architect of the building), Prov. G. Supt. of Works; R. Brewin, jun., (S.W., No. 766), Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Cummings, (S.W., No. 348), Assist. Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Emberlin, Prov. G. Sword Bearer; Bithrey, Prov. G. Organist; Paul, Prov. G. Pura.; Willey, W.M., No. 766; Nedham, J.W., No. 348; Sheppard, J.W., No. 766; Bouakell, (S.D., No. 348), Prov. G. Stewards; Pettifer, P. Prov. S.G.W.; Pratt, P. Prov. J.G.W.; Gibson, P. Prov. S.G.W.; Morris, W. Jackson, Gamble, Gill, P. Prov. S.G.D.; Hazby, E. R. Denton, I.G.; Dr. Sloan, J.D.; H. A. Thomson and Boyer, of St. John's Lodge, No. 348; Bankart, P. Prov. J.G.D.; Clephan, P. Prov. J.G.W.; Hardy, P. Prov. S.G.W.; Goodwin, P. Prov. G.S.B.; Löhr, P. Prov. G. Organist; Lieut. Barber, Lloyd, P. Prov. Assist. G. Dir. of Cers.; H. J. Davis, S.D.; Garner, I.G.; and Challis, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766; T. Harrold, S.W.; Watson, S.D.; Goadby, J.D.; Ferriman, T. W. Clarke, Homer, and Hands, of the Knights of Malta Lodge, No. 58, Hinckley; and Rev. John Denton, M.A.; E. Mammatt, W.M.; T. H. Bobart, J.W.; and J. Redfern, (Prov. G. Dir. of Cers. for Derbyshire), of the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 1081, Ashby-de-la-Zouch. A few visitors were also present from the provinces of Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and Staffordshire.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in due form at a quarter before eleven o'clock by the noble Prov. Grand Master, who stated that although he had been suffering from a very severe attack of illness, which had confined him to the house and to his couch during the last five weeks, he was determined, although contrary to medical advice, to attend the celebration of an event, in which he felt so deep an interest, as the inauguration of the building in which they were now met.

The minutes of the Provincial Grand Lodge, held on the 15th of February last, for the purpose of laying the corner stone of the Hall, having been read and confirmed, letters were read from the Prov. Grand Masters for Derbyshire, Warwickshire, Staffordshire, and the Channel Islands, who had promised to attend, but were prevented so doing by other engagements.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was then adjourned for the brethren to proceed privately to St. George's Church. In consequence, however, of the earl's health not permitting him to attend divine service, and the highly unfavourable state of the weather, the attendance was very thin. Prayers were read by the incumbent, the Rev. Robert Burnaby, after which an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. J. O. Picton (the curate), Prov. Grand Chaplain, from the text, "Who is my neighbour?" and which, as will be seen below, the reverend brother has been requested to publish.

On returning to the hall, a procession was formed in the following order:—Visiting brethren from other provinces; members of the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 1081, Ashby; members of the Knights of Malta Lodge, No. 58, Hinckley; members of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766, Leicester; members of St. John's Lodge, No. 348, Leicester; the Provincial Grand Lodge.

The arrangements for the ceremony were under the direction of the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, and were most effectively carried out by the Grand Director of Ceremonies and his Assistant; the musical portion being conducted by Bro. Löhr, with his usual taste and skill.

The brethren passing from the anteroom, entered the hall in procession and passed round the room three times to solemn music; the vessels containing incense, corn, wine, and oil, being carried by the Prov. Grand Chaplain; the Worshipful Master of the John of Gaunt Lodge; the immediate Past Master of St. John's Lodge (representing the W.M. who was absent, owing to a family affliction), and the Deputy Prov. Grand Master.

The brethren then seated themselves, the officers took their places, and the various elements of consecration were placed on a table, in front of the Prov. Grand Master's pedestal, covered, together with the charters of constitution of the John of Gaunt and St. John's Lodges, on a crimson velvet cushion, encompassed by the three luminaries.

The D. Prov. Grand Master then informed the Prov. Grand Master that the members of St. John's and the John of Gaunt Lodges in this town, with some assistance from members of the Knights of Malta Lodge, No. 58, Hinckley, had, at great pains and expense, erected a Masonic Hall for the convenience and accommodation of the fraternity of the province, and were now desirous that the same should be solemnly dedicated to Masonic purposes, agreeably to ancient form.

The Prov. Grand Master gave his assent and directed the Prov. Grand Chaplain to proceed with the ceremony.

The Prov. Grand Chaplain read a passage of Scripture, taken from 1 Kings, viii. 22-30, and an anthem was then sung by the brethren.

The Prov. Grand Supt. of Works then delivered to the Prov. Grand Master the implements of his profession, entrusted to him for the erection of the building, and announced that he had completed the work, according to the plans and specifications which were agreed to by the brethren.

The Prov. Grand Master expressed his approval of the architect's conduct, after which the following anthem was sung (the music composed for the occasion by Bro. P. Löhr, Prov. G. Org.):—

Behold! how good a thing it is,
And how becoming well,
For brethren, such as Masons are,
In unity to dwell.
Oh! 'tis like ointment on the head,
Or dew on Sion hill;
For then the Lord of Hosts hath said,
"Peace shall be with you still."

All brethren not Master Masons having retired, the Prov. Grand Chaplain perfumed the Lodge with the conser and read Exodus xxx. 7, 8, and the Provincial Grand Officers formed in procession, the elements of consecration being carried by the D. Prov. Grand Master and the Worshipful Masters of Lodges, Nos. 348 and 766. During the procession the organ continued playing solemn music, excepting only at the intervals of dedication.

The circuit of the Lodge having been made, and the Prov. Grand Master having reached the east, the Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 766 presented the cornucopia of corn to the Prov. Grand Master who sprinkled the Lodge with corn, the Prov. Grand Chaplain reading Psalm lxxii. 16.

The Prov. Grand Master then said, "In the name of the Great Jehovah, to whom be all honour and glory, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to Masonry."

Musical response by the brethren, "Glory be to God on High!" with the grand honours.

After the second circuit was made, the immediate Past Master of Lodge No. 348 presented the chalice of wine to the Prov. Grand Master who sprinkled the Lodge with wine, the Prov. Grand Chaplain reading Nehemiah x. 39.

The Prov. Grand Master then said, "In the name of the Great Jehovah, to whom be all honour and glory, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to virtue."

Musical response, "Glory be to God on high!" with the grand honours.

After the third circuit the D. Prov. Grand Master presented the cruet of oil to the Prov. Grand Master who anointed the Lodge with oil, the Prov. Grand Chaplain reading Exodus xxx. 25, 26.

■ The Prov. Grand Master then said, "In the name of the Great Jehovah, to whom be all honour and glory, I do solemnly dedicate this hall to universal benevolence!"

Musical response, "Glory be to God on high!" with the grand honours.

The Entered Apprentices and Fellow Crafts having been readmitted, the Prov. Grand Chaplain offered up the Consecration Prayer, the brethren all standing.

Musical response, "So mote it be!"

The Prov. Grand Master then seasoned the Lodge with salt, the Prov. Grand Chaplain reading Leviticus ii. 13; and the Prov. Grand Master then declared the hall duly consecrated and dedicated according to antient form.

A highly interesting and eloquent oration on Masonry was then delivered by Bro. Picton, Prov. G. Chaplain, which, at the unanimous request of the Prov. Grand Lodge, the reverend brother has consented to publish, together with his sermon. The ceremony concluded with the following anthem, composed for the occasion by Bro. Löhr, P. Prov. G. Org. "The glorious majesty of the Lord our God be upon us: prosper thou the work of our hands upon us, O, prosper thou our handy work." Psalm xc. 17.

This and the preceding anthem were highly pleasing and effective compositions, and we are gratified to learn that Bro. Löhr is about to publish them, dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. Earl Howe, G.C.H., Prov. G.M., as they will be found very suitable for similar celebrations.

The ordinary business of the Prov. Grand Lodge was then resumed.

The Prov. Grand Master announced that the office of Provincial Junior Grand Warden having become vacant by the decease of Lord Ferrers, he, on the 30th May last, had conferred the appointment on Bro. Edward Mammatt, his lordship's successor in the Mastership of Lodge No. 1081.

The following resolution, moved by the Prov. Grand Master and seconded by the D. Prov. Grand Master, was carried unanimously, his lordship being requested to communicate it to the Countess Ferrers:—

"That this Grand Lodge cannot avoid taking the earliest opportunity of recording the deep regret they feel at the premature and unexpected death of their late Provincial Junior Grand Warden, the Earl Ferrers—engaged within a few days of his decease in the duties of his office. Connected as he was with the county and with the Craft by a long line of ancestors, his kindness of heart and amiability of manners will long survive in the recollection of the brethren of the Provincial Grand Lodge."

A report from the Building Committee was then presented, which set forth that the Committee having brought their labours to a close, so far, at least, as the erection of the Hall was concerned, had to report that £810 had been contributed by the brethren, and that the deficiency on the building account was £3 10s. 7d. An estimated sum of £150 was required for furnishing and decorating the interior, and the brethren of the two local Lodges generally had liberally supported the undertaking, but several members of the Order who, from their social and Masonic position in the province, it had been fully anticipated would have contributed liberally, had not yet responded to the appeal made to them; though, as the scheme had been proved to be practicable, it was now earnestly hoped that they would come forward and secure for it a firm basis. The thanks of the fraternity were due to several brethren for personal services or gifts in addition to liberal subscriptions, and especially to Bro. Morris for his gratuitous professional services in the conveyance of the property, and in advising the committee; to Bro. Brewin, for raising a separate subscription for additional stonework on the front of the building, and for personally defraying the cost of fitting the gas piping throughout the interior; to Bros. Haxby and Underwood, for a handsome bronze chandelier for the dining-room; and to Bro. Broadbent, for the polished alabaster window-shafts, from his quarries at Humberstone, which form so elegant a feature in the street-front of the edifice. A bust of the late worthy Provincial Grand Master, Sir F. G. Fowke, Bart., had been presented through the W.M. of the Fowke Lodge of Mark Masters (Bro. Kelly), by the present Baronet; and several brethren had each undertaken to present a bust of some eminent Freemason, for the decoration of the hall. An estimate of the annual income and expenditure was then given, with suggestions as to the amount of rent to be paid by the several Lodges and Chapter meeting in the hall, and for present grants from their funds (which are for the first time called upon) towards the expense of furnishing, &c. Reference was made to the probable source of revenue arising from the purveyor's department connected with the social gatherings after Lodge meetings, on which subject some valuable information was given from the accounts of the Lodge of Truth, No. 768, Huddersfield, since its removal to the hall erected by the members in 1855, from which it appeared that during the years 1856, 1857, and 1858, an average profit of nearly £40 per annum had been derived from this source. The report concluded with a balance sheet of the capital account, and a list of the contributors; and it was suggested that their names and the amount of their donations should be placed on a tablet in some part of the edifice, in accordance with a suggestion made some time ago in an editorial article in the Freemasons' Magazine, space being reserved for the addition of the names of future donors.

The report was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be printed.

A permanent committee of management for building was sanctioned, consisting of the Prov. G.M., the D. Prov. G.M., the Worshipful Master, the M.E.Z., and two members to be elected from each body. A grant of £10 was made towards the expense of furnishing, and an annual rent of £10 agreed to be paid by the Prov. Grand Lodge for the use of the hall.

It may be here mentioned, that £85 was at once raised towards the £150 required, Earl Howe giving £25, Bros. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M., Clephan, and Brewin £5 each, whilst Bros. Haxby and Underwood made up the deficiency on the building fund, to which the latter brother had already contributed £35.

Favourable reports were then presented from the private Lodges in the province, from which it appeared that during the past year, there had been nine initiations in the Knights of Malta Lodge, No. 58, Hinkley, which has nineteen subscribing members; that four initiations had taken place in St. John's Lodge, No. 348, Leicester, which has forty-four members; that in the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766, Leicester, numbering thirty-seven members, seven initiations had taken place; and that during the short time in which the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 1081, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, has been at work, prior to its consecration, (which is expected to take place on the 5th October), there have been eight initiations, and two joinings, and that the Lodge numbers twenty subscribing members.

The Provincial Grand Treasurer's accounts were then passed, and Bro. Underwood was unanimously reelected treasurer, and thanks voted to him for his past services.

The Provincial Grand Officers were appointed, and invested according to the list which appeared in our last week's number.

Thanks were voted to Bro. Goodyer for his services as Prov. G. Secretary during the past three years, to the Rev. Robert Burnaby for the use of his church, to the Rev. Bro. Picton for his excellent sermon, and to Bro. Löhr for his musical services during the ceremony of consecration.

The letter addressed to the Provincial Grand Master on the 18th April last, by the Grand Secretary, by command of the M. W. the Grand Master, the pamphlet on "Provincial Organization," to which it referred, and the letter of Bros. Lyall and Symonds, dated 1st June, were considered; when, on the suggestion of the Prov. G.M., the subject was ordered to be deferred for the present, it being felt that in consequence of the large amount which had recently been contributed by the Leicestershire brethren, and the further expenditure to which they were committed in connection with the Masonic Hall, it was inexpedient at this time to press upon them the claims of any other object, however laudable, and, under other circumstances, worthy of support.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was then closed in due form, and with solemn prayer.

The brethren adjourned to the banquet, which took place at a later hour in the hall, and at which the noble Prov. G.M. presided with all his accustomed urbanity and efficiency, notwithstanding the effects of the severe indisposition from which he had been suffering, and of an accident which rendered it necessary for one arm to be supported by a sling.

The appearance of the room when arranged for the dinner was exceedingly brilliant, the tables being decorated with a profusion of fine flowers, antique tankards, &c., with Bro. Boyer's usual excellent taste, and the walls adorned with portraits of several of the former Grand Masters of the Order, and of the province, of the D. Prov. G.M., and other brethren together with the Lodge banners, and that of the Prov. G.M., which surmounted the throne. A fat buck and a plentiful supply of game were presented by his lordship.

After dinner "Non nobis Domine" was sung, and an antient custom of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers was, as usual, commemorated, by the introduction of the loving-cups belonging to the Knights of Malta and John of Gaunt Lodges. The Provincial Grand Master "drank to all," and the cups passed round the table.

The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, alternating with numerous glees, duets, and songs. Bro. Löhr presiding at the piano-forte.

In proposing "The Army and Navy," Lord Howe alluded to the late disastrous news from China, and expressed the great pain he felt, bearing the name he did, to hear of the loss of several of our vessels of war. The toast was responded to by Bro. Lieut. Barber, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, who has just returned from India on sick leave, and who expressed his regret that he was the only representative of the army present. Upon this, Bro. Brewin, the Senior Lieutenant of the Leicester Volunteer Rifle Corps, recently formed, sprung to his feet, and called upon his brethren in arms to arise, when a considerable portion of the brethren stood at "attention," (one fourth of the whole corps are Masons), whilst their commanding officer stated that he thought the army was very numerously represented, and, after some humorous remarks, observed that the whole British army were volunteers, for, thank God, we have no conscription, and stated his belief that, if unfortunately the volunteer rifle corps should ever have to repel an invader, they would be found ready to do their duty to their country, no less than the regular army.

The D. Prov. Grand Master, in proposing the better health of Earl Howe, observed that if the individual, whose health he was about to propose, were entirely unknown to the brethren, or one with whose character they were but slightly acquainted, he should regret that the toast had not fallen into the hands of one more competent than himself to do justice to its merits, but, fortunately for him, it would be quite unnecessary for him to dilate upon the many excellencies which entitled that brother to their respect and esteem, as he was one universally known and universally beloved in the county; that there are some men whose position in society renders their conduct and character, to a great extent, public property, and well is it for society when such men let their light so shine before the world that not a speck dims its lustre, and thus offer a bright example to those around them. Such an one the county had possessed in the late excellent Lord Lieutenant, the good Duke of Rutland, and such an one the brethren would bear him out in saying, they had the happiness to possess in their noble Prov. Grand Master, Lord Howe. He (Bro. Kelly) would scorn to flatter any man, but it was not flattery, it was merely the simple truth to say that in all the relations of life their noble chief offered a worthy example—whether as a husband and a father beloved by his family, as a landlord, whom his tenants delighted to honour, as a magistrate, ever anxious to blend justice with the divine attribute of mercy, and last, though not least, as a Mason, who through a very long connection with the Order in the province had ever been ready to promote its interests with his purse and with his personal exertions in the cause, as had been that day evinced, when, although suffering from illness, he had incurred much risk in order to be present. Long might the Great Architect of the universe spare him to rule over them.

The noble earl who, on rising, was greeted with loud and long continued applause, expressed in feeling terms his thanks to the brethren for their kind reception and the pleasure he invariably experienced in meeting his brother Masons. His lordship then proposed, in complimentary terms, "The health of the D. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Kelly," who having replied,

"The Visiting Brethren" was given, and acknowledged by Bro. Bute, P. Prov. S.G.W. for Derbyshire.

His lordship then retired, the brethren rising, and the chair was occupied during the remainder of the evening by the D. Prov. Grand Master.

[An engraving is in progress of the new Masonic Hall, executed specially for the Freemasons' Magazine; but in consequence of the illness of the artist, it cannot be completed in time for this week's impression.—Ed.]

LICESTER.—John of Gaunt Lodge (No. 766).—The first meeting of this Lodge, after the summer recess, took place at the Freemasons' Hall, Halford-street, on Thursday evening, the 15th instant. There were present, Bros. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M.; Willey, W.M.; Clephan, P.M.; Kinton, P.M.; Bankart, P.M. and Treas.; Rev. J. O. Picton, Chaplain; Brewin, S.W.; Sheppard, J.W.; Johnson, Sec.; Davis, S.D.; Spencer, J.D.; Garner, I.G.; Löhr, Prov. G. Org.; Paul, Prov. J.G.D., &c., &c. Visitors, Bros. Gill, P.M., St. John's Lodge, No. 348, and Richardson. The minutes of the last Lodge having been read and confirmed, the Lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Challis passed a satisfactory examination, after which, a Master Mason's Lodge having been opened, he was raised to that sublime degree by the W.M., in a highly creditable and efficient manner, it being the first procession on which he had presided since his installation. It may be recorded that this was the first degree conferred on a candidate in the newly consecrated hall. The effect of the ceremony was greatly increased by Bro. Löhr's services as Organist. The Lodge having been closed down to the first degree, several important matters of business were discussed, inter alia; the sum of £15 was voted towards the fund for furnishing and decorating the hall; £15 per annum for the rent of the building, and £5 per annum for the use of one of Broadwood's grand pianofortes, about to be purchased by means of loans from the brethren of the Order, to be hereafter repaid; an organ having already been erected in the hall. Notices of motion were given for the election at the next meeting of two members, in addition to the Worshipful Master, to represent the Lodge in the Permanent Committee for the management of the building, and for the appointment of two or three purveyors to superintend the arrangements for the social meetings, in conjunction with an equal number to be appointed by St. John's Lodge, on a similar system, comparing small things with great, to that existing at the London clubs. At these meetings, concerted music is to form a distinctive feature. The D. Prov. Grand Master, in the name of the author, presented to the library of the Lodge a copy of Bro. Hopkins's excellent Lectures on Freemasonry, accompanied by a letter from the worthy doctor; and Bro. Brewin, S.W., expressed to the brethren the pleasure and profit he had derived from a perusal of the lectures some months ago. The formation of a good Masonic library, of which the John of Gaunt Lodge possesses a nucleus, consisting of the Freemasons' Magazine almost complete from the commencement, Dr. Oliver's works, &c., &c., is to be proceeded with as opportunities may occur, and it is anticipated that many works will be presented by brethren so soon as arrangements shall have been made for their reception. After a sitting of three hours, the brethren separated highly delighted with the comfort and greatly increased accommodation afforded by their new quarters.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

HIGHBRIDGE.—Rural Philanthropic Lodge (No. 367).—A Lodge was held on Friday, the 16th inst.; Bro. Wm. Harwood, W.M., presiding. The dispensation for the removal of the Lodge having been read, it was then unanimously agreed to forward the same to the Grand Secretary, to obtain the Most Worshipful Grand Master's concurrence. The Secretary then read a notice, received from Bro. Farnfield, of the first annual festival for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, to be held on Wednesday, the 25th day of January, 1860, soliciting the name of a brother from this Lodge who will act as Steward on the occasion. It was then unanimously agreed that Bro. P.M. Henry Bridges attend at the above festival as Steward for this Lodge. One candidate was proposed to be balloted for at the next meeting. The Lodge was then closed in harmony. The brethren sat down to the usual banquet, and spent a comfortable evening together.

STAFFORDSHIRE.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—St. Peter's Lodge (No. 607).—The general monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on the 1st of September, at the Star and Garter Hotel. There was a fair attendance of the brethren. Bro. King, P.M., presided, assisted by the officers of the Lodge. After the circular and minutes were read, and the latter confirmed, the Lodge was opened in the second degree, when Bro. H. Fendelow answered the necessary questions and was ordered to retire. The Lodge having been opened in the third degree, Bro. Warner, P.M., took the chair, when Bro. H. Fendelow was admitted and raised to the degree of M.M. The Lodge was resumed in the first degree and the W.M., Bro. King, read an apology from the R.W. Prov. G.M. and also one from Bro. Cooke, I.G., for their nonattendance at the Lodge. An invitation was received to attend the installation of the W.M. of the Vernon Lodge, Dudley, on 21st of September, also an invitation from the Prov. Grand Lodge, Worcestershire. The Lodge was duly closed in antient form and with solemn prayer.

At the previous meeting of this Lodge, in August, a ballot was taken for Bro. Henry Gibbons, of No. 606, Hanley, as joining member, which was unanimously favourable. Bro. King, P.M., who presided as W.M. on this occasion, appeared in his clothing as Prov. J.G.D., having received the appointment at Stafford, at the Prov. Grand Lodge held there on the 2nd of August. The brethren were highly pleased at the honour having been conferred upon one so deserving, and congratulated Bro. King upon the occasion, who replied to the effect that it was also an honour conferred upon the Lodge. It was then proposed by the W.M., seconded by Bro. Betts, and carried unanimously, that two guineas each, annually, be given to the Boys and Girls Schools. It was also proposed by Bro. Warner, seconded by Bro. King, and carried unanimously, that the petition of Mrs. Critchley, accompanied by a recommendation signed by the brethren present, be sent to the Prov. G.M. for his consideration and then forwarded to the Board of Benevolence.

SUSSEX.

BRIGHTON.—Royal Clarence Lodge (No. 338).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge took place on Friday, the 16th instant, Bro. John H. Scott, (Prov. S.G.D.) W.M., presided. The visitors present were Bro. Leveau, P.G.S.B., Bro. Ardaseer Cursetjee, of the Rising Star Lodge of Bombay, Bro. Holroyd (460), and Bro. Potter (1034). A recommendation of the Prov. Grand Lodge of Sussex was read, and ordered to be entered on the minutes. In accordance with a notice of motion given by Bro. E. Booty, it was unanimously resolved, that in future a copy of the Book of Constitutions (small edition) should be presented to every candidate upon his initiation. Other business of a private nature followed, at the termination of which the Lodge was closed. Nearly fifty brethren dined together, and after the usual preliminary toasts, the Worshipful Master gave "Lord Panmure, R.W.D.G.M., and the Officers of Grand Lodge, past and present." He said—We are honoured to-day with the presence of two Grand Officers, Bro. Pocock, G.S.B., and Bro. Leveau, Past G.S.B. Of Bro. Pocock, what need I say—he is known to all of you, and not only known, but beloved and respected. Were I to enumerate the services which he has rendered to the Craft in this province, what should I be doing but narrating its history for the last five years? Who is it that resuscitates our decaying Lodges—who is the mainstay of the Brighton Lodge of Masonic Instruction—who is it that keeps a vigilant eye upon our affairs, and keeps us in that order and regularity so essential to the wellbeing of our Lodges? Brethren, I need not answer these questions you all know the only reply that can be given to them, and I am sure that you all rejoice with me that the M.W. Grand Master has recognized these exertions, and that he has conferred upon Bro. Pocock one of the highest distinctions to which a Mason can aspire, namely, office in Grand Lodge. Bro. Leveau, Past G.S.B., we have had the pleasure of seeing at our Lodge before. He is a most ardent supporter of the Masonic charities, and by his energy, kindness of disposition, and discretion, is able to command a large number of votes, so that if at any time we want assistance in that way, we shall do well to enlist his sympathies. Bro. Leveau, on behalf of Lord Panmure, and the Grand Officers, thanked the brethren, and regretted that there was not some more eminent member of Grand Lodge present to express the obligation more adequately. He feared that the Worshipful Master had overrated his usefulness with regard to the charities, but he should at any time be glad to place his services at the disposal of his Sussex brethren, if in his power. He congratulated the Masons of Sussex upon the prosperous state of their province, and stated that he had read the report of their last meeting at Hastings in the week's number of the Freemasons' Magazine with great pleasure. "The Duke of Richmond, Prov. G.M.," and "Capt. Dalbiac, D. Prov. G.M., and the Provincial Officers," having been drunk, Bro. W. Verrall, Prov. G. Treasurer proposed the health of the "Worshipful Master." The Worshipful Master, in reply, congratulated the brethren upon the spirit which had marked the discussion which had taken place that evening. Although strong feeling appeared to exist on both sides upon the question which was brought before the Lodge, their difference of opinion had been completely merged in that love and harmony which should at all times characterize Freemasons. He was also glad that the motion of Bro. Booty had been so unanimously adopted. There were few things more important than that every brother should be thoroughly acquainted with the Book of Constitutions. A knowledge of their laws would explain many circumstances which now perplexed, and sometimes even annoyed, those who were not conversant with them. He was glad too of the quarter from whence the motion emanated. It proved that those brethren who had not yet taken office, were nevertheless taking an interest in what concerned the Lodge, and he assured the brethren that no motion which was strictly in accordance with their laws, which had been well digested, and which had the good of the Lodges for its object—would meet with opposition from those who were in authority. The Worshipful Master then proposed the health of the "Visitors," and after briefly alluding to Bros. Leveau, Potter, and Holroyd, said—In Bro. Cursetjee we have the gratification of entertaining one who has practised Freemasonry in a far distant land. Bro. Cursetjee is a native of India. He was for many years chief engineer in the government dock-yards of Bombay. As a citizen of the world he has so distinguished himself, as not only to receive many marks of esteem from his own countrymen, but also to become a Fellow of the Royal Society of England, and almost all the scientific bodies in this country. As a Mason he joined the Rising Star Lodge of Bombay, and held the office of Deacon in that Lodge at the time of the Burnes Testimonial. If you will refer to the Freemasons' Magazine of 1844 and 1845, you will find a full account of that very interesting event. Bro. Burnes was the Prov. G.M. of Western India, under the Scotch constitution, and he was the first who opened the portals of Masonry to the natives of that region. It was to commemorate that event that the testimonial was presented; it consisted of a gold medal, bearing an appropriate device, for himself, and of a similar medal in silver to be worn by every member of the Rising Star, as a badge of that Lodge. Bro. Cursetjee was one of the first to seek and to receive admission into Masonry, and he wears upon his breast at this moment the medal I have spoken of. Brethren, we are at all times glad to welcome visitors to our Lodge; we are at all times ready to hold out the right hand of fellowship to all true and worthy Masons—but there is something peculiarly gratifying in seeing at our table, to-day, one of another race and clime—one, who in another quarter of the globe, has been promulgating the same grand principles of love, relief and truth which we profess to practise, and who now rejoices in the fact, that though far from his own land, he can come amongst us, not as a stranger, but as a brother. I see in this the possibility, and, therefore, the certainty of the future realization of those hopes which have animated all true-hearted men since the world began, of the universal brotherhood of the human race. And though at the present day that time seems far distant, though a dark and sanguinary cloud still hangs over the East, and even we, at home, are divided by selfish and miserable jealousies—there is, nevertheless, not more of beauty than of truth in the prophetic words which were sung by our high souled Scottish bard and brother—

"For a' that, and a' that,
It's coming yet, for a' that,
That man to man, the hail warld o'er
Shall brothers be for a' that."

The presence of Bro. Cursetjee at our Lodge is a significant testimony that Freemasonry is silently doing her humble part in this glorious work. Bro. Cursetjee, we welcome you amongst us with the most fraternal regard, and wishing you every blessing that Divine Providence may see fit to bestow upon you, we most heartily drink your health. Bro. Cursetjee, in reply, said that the very fraternal reception he had met with, and the kind remarks of the Worshipful Master, had made a deep and lasting impression on his heart. He should ever remember the day he had the happiness to meet the Worshipful Master and the brethren of the Royal Clarence Lodge. Other toasts followed, and the brethren separated shortly before eleven.

COLONIAL

VICTORIA.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

A quarterly communication of the Provincial Grand Lodge, holding under the Grand Lodge of England, was held at Tattersall's Hotel, Lonsdale street West, Melbourne, on Monday, the 20th June. Present: The R.W. Bro. Francis Thomas Gell, D. Prov. G.M., (in the chair); Bros. H. W. Lowry, Prov. S.G.W.; R. S. Anderson, Prov. J.G.W.; T. Hamlet Taylor, P. Prov. J.G.W.; Charles Vaughan, M.L.C., Prov. G. Treas.; Robert Levick, Prov. G. Sec.; M. F. Gordon, Prov. S.G. Deacon; J. M. Llewellyn, P. Prov. S.G. Deacon; E. T. Bradshaw, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera.; C. G. Feinaigle, Prov. G. Org.; George Lewis, Prov. G. Pers.; &c., &c. The R.W. Bro. W. P. Wilson, D. Prov. G.M. under the Grand Lodge of Scotland, was present as a visitor.

The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in form and with solemn prayer.

The minutes of the quarterly communication of the 21st March, 1859, were read, and, on being put for confirmation, Br. J. J. Moody, W.M. of the Combermere Lodge, observed that the minutes, so far as related to the withdrawal of his second notice of motion, were incorrect, and, upon being explained, the D. Prov. G.M. ordered that the following five words be struck out—viz., "it was in consequence withdrawn." The minutes were then confirmed.

The Provincial Grand Secretary informed the Provincial Grand Lodge that the District Provincial Grand Master had granted dispensations for Lodges to be established at the following places, the petitions being properly recommended and the respectability of the petitioners vouched for, viz.: At Kyneton, to be called the Zetland Lodge; at Creswick, to be called the Creswick Havilah Lodge; and at Heathcote to be called the Heathcote Lodge.

The report of the Lodge of Benevolence, of the 3rd of June, was read; the V.W. Bro. Lowry, Prov. S.G.W., in the chair. Two petitioners were relieved with the following sums: Bro. Holland, £7; the widow of the late H. M. Turnbull, £10; and the Committee recommended that the District Provincial Grand Master grant a further sum of £10 from the fund to Mrs. Turnbull.

The Provincial Grand Treasurer declared a balance in the Bank of Victoria of £266 12s. 10d., belonging to the following funds: Grand Lodge, £97 18s. 6d.; Provincial Grand Lodge, £54 1s. 6d.; Benevolent Fund, £114 12s. 10d. The sum of £20 voted to Mrs. Turnbull is not deducted from this last amount.

The following letter, received from Prince Frederick William of Prussia, in reply to an address from this Provincial Grand Lodge, forwarded for presentation to that Prince, congratulating him on his marriage with the Princess Royal of England, was read:—

"Most Worshipful Sir,—I have received with great gratification the address of the Most Worshipful Provincial Grand Lodge of Victoria, and was highly pleased to observe that the brethren in your distant country have so warmly sympathized in the establishment of that happy bond which I hope will be the greatest blessing of my life. I have carried with me a warm and grateful recollection of the great and uniform kindness which has been extended to me by the Masonic fraternity of Great Britain in general, and I can assure you it is most pleasing to my heart to behold the universal feeling of this sympathy which animates so many members of our noble Order. I request you, Most Worshipful Sir and Brother, to convey to the Illustrious Grand Lodge of Victoria my sincere and warmest thanks for their affectionate address and cordial wishes. I assure you that I feel all those emotions of gratitude which they are calculated to inspire; and I hope that the feeling of sympathy and the principles of concord and unity will never desert our Order, which are destined for the blessing and benefaction of mankind. May the Supreme Architect of the Universe look down with benignity upon all the undertakings of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Victoria, and enable you to promote the welfare and advance the happiness of the human race.

"Saluting you by the sacred numbers,

"I am, yours fraternally,

(Signed) "FREDERICK WILLIAM Prince of Prussia.
"Andrew Clarke, Esq., M.W. Prov. G.M. of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Victoria, Melbourne, Australia."

Proposed by Bro. Moody, P. Prov. J.G.W. for Cheshire, and seconded by Bro. Lowry, Prov. S.G.W.: "That the letter from Prince Frederick William of Prussia be entered on the minutes." Carried.

Bro. Lowry, Prov. S.G.W., stated that one of the newspapers had requested a copy of Prince Frederick William's letter for publication; and the Right Worshipful Deputy Provincial Grand Master was pleased to comply with the request for a copy, but directed the Provincial Grand Secretary not to part with the original.

The following letters from the R.W. Captain Andrew Clarke, Prov. G.M., to the District Provincial Grand Master were then read:—

"Colchester, 7th March, 1859.

"My Dear Sir and Brother,—I inclose a copy of my letter, transmitting the remittance from the Freemasons of Victoria, under the English constitution, to the Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the Mutiny in India, the reply thereto, and the formal receipt from the Secretary to the General Committee.

"Will you kindly communicate this correspondence to the Grand Lodge, as well as to the various Lodges throughout the Province.

"I am, my dear Sir and Brother,

"Yours faithfully and fraternally,

"ANDREW CLARKE.

"P.S. I think this correspondence should be entered on the minutes of the Provincial Grand Lodge proceedings."

(Copy.) "The Camp, Colchester, Essex, 14th February, 1859.

"Sir,—I have the honour herewith to transmit the sum of two hundred and eighty-five pounds ten shillings and sixpence (£285 10s. 6d.), by the first of a bill of exchange drawn on the London and Westminster Bank, as a contribution from the members of the various Lodges under the English Constitution in Victoria, Australia, to the Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the late Mutiny in India.

"I take this occasion of mentioning that the contributions from the Order in Victoria would have been much more considerable had the brethren been satisfied to confine the whole of their donations to the subscription lists of their various Lodges. But this has not been so, as the members have almost invariably, in addition to their subscriptions to this contribution, also subscribed as colonists to the general fund which has been raised in Victoria.

"You will consequently be kind enough not to measure the amount of interest and sympathy felt by the Freemasons of Victoria for their fellow-countrymen in India by this contribution, but to accept it as a simple recognition on their part of the fundamental principle of their Order.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your most humble servant,

(Signed) "ANDREW CLARKE, Prov. G. M., (E. C.) Victoria."

"Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the Mutiny in India,
"27, Cannon-street, E. C., London, 16th February, 1859.

"Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing first of exchange for £285 10s. 6d. After your letter as been laid before the Committee, it will be officially acknowledged.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"Capt. Clarke, R. E., Colchester." "D. FOURST, Secretary.

"Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the Mutiny in India,
"27, Cannon-street, E. C., London, 28th February, 1859.

"Sir,—I am instructed by the General Committee to acknowledge your letter dated the 14th instant, inclosing a bill of exchange for 285 10s. 6d. sterling, for which I inclose a formal receipt.

"In reply, I am directed to communicate to you the thanks of the General Committee for the sum subscribed by the Masonic body in Victoria, and to request that you will do the General Committee the honour to communicate their sense of this very liberal contribution and the generous sympathy which has been evinced by the members of the various Masonic Lodges in that colony.

"The Committee direct me to observe that they are very sensible that the present remittance represents only a portion of the amount contributed to the general funds by the members of the Masonic Lodges in Victoria.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"T. PARRY WOODCOCK, Hon. Sec.

"Capt. A. Clarke, R. E., Colchester, Essex."

"The Indian Mutiny Fund,

"No. 6140. "27, Cannon-street, E. C., 17th February, 1859.

"Received of Capt. A. Clarke, R.E., P.G.M. for Victoria, contribution in the members of the various Masonic Lodges, under the English institution, in Victoria, Australia, the sum of two hundred and eighty-one pounds ten shillings and sixpence (£285 10s. 6d.)

"D. FORREST, Sec."

Proposed by Bro. Lowry, and seconded by Bro. Moody: "That Mr. Clarke's letters be entered on the minutes." Carried.

The following letter from Bro. William Gray Clarke, G. Sec., in reply an application from the Provincial Grand Lodge, asking for a reduction of fees payable by Masons in Victoria to the Grand Lodge of England, was read:— "Freemasons' Hall, London, April 11, 1859.

"Sir and Brother,—I have the honour to inform you that the memorial from the District Grand Lodge of Victoria, praying that the fees payable to the Grand Lodge of England for the registration of brethren and for Grand Lodge certificates may be reduced to a fixed sum of 2s. 6d. in each case, was duly laid before the Grand Lodge at the ordinary communication in September last, it not having reached this entry till three weeks after the meeting of the Grand Lodge in June.

"The question, involving points of detail which could not be conveniently discussed in a large assembly like the Grand Lodge, was referred to the Colonial Board, that it might receive that complete attention and investigation which it is the wish of Grand Lodge that communications from our colonial brethren should receive.

"The Colonial Board gave the subject very careful consideration; they found great difficulty in the way of advising Grand Lodge to comply with the wishes of the memorialists, inasmuch as the question involved not only Victoria, but the whole colonial system, as no distinction could be adduced for making a distinction between one provincial Grand Lodge and another in the amount of fees payable to the Grand Lodge, and in some cases the proposed reduction would involve positive pecuniary loss to the funds of the Grand Lodge of England.

"The Board, however, felt reluctant to report definitely against the wishes of the memorialists, and, being willing to believe, from the contents of the memorial, and from the circumstance that was therein mentioned, no reference whatever was made to the very great reduction in fees for registration and certificates, which, after the careful consideration of Grand Lodge, has been so recently made in the case of colonial brethren—viz., from 17s. to 7s. 6d.—that such alteration in the law not come to the knowledge of the brethren in Victoria when the memorial was drawn up, resolved to recommend to Grand Lodge that I should be instructed to communicate with the District Provincial Grand Lodge of Victoria on the subject, and to direct their attention to the small difference that exists between the aggregate sum per head payable for registration and certificate and the sum suggested by the memorial.

"Owing to press of prior matter in the paper of business of Grand Lodge in December, the report of the Colonial Board stood over until the 1st, when the report was received, and the subject was referred back to the Board, with power to act.

"I am instructed by the Board to make the foregoing statement, to regret the delay which would appear to have occurred, to which I feel much regret. The Board have had the advantage of a personal interview with the R.W. Dis. Prov. G.M. of Victoria, Bro. Capt. Clarke, and have expressed to him their anxiety to preserve friendly and cordial relations with their colonial brethren in general, and with those in Victoria in particular.

"The Board would fain hope that, on more mature consideration, the District Provincial Grand Lodge of Victoria will come to the conclusion that the important reduction in fees already made should be acquiesced in as sufficient, and that the brethren in Victoria, fully appreciating the willingness of the Grand Lodge of England to attend to—and, when practicable, to remove—every grievance, will not further urge upon the parent body the consideration of a reduction so difficult to deal with in its general bearing, and so trifling in amount as regards each individual brother.

"It is scarcely necessary to state that, in considering this subject, the Grand Lodge is influenced by no mercenary views. The sole object aimed at is to retain the connection with the District Grand Lodges by such nominal fees as will merely suffice to cover the necessary expenditure.

"Before concluding, it may perhaps be convenient to make a few remarks upon the Fund of Benevolence, regarding which some misapprehension appears to exist in the minds of many of the colonial brethren. It ought to be clearly understood that no Lodges out of England—excepting only those in the Channel Islands—are required or expected to pay any quarterages or make any contributions whatever to this fund. But, though exempted from payments to it, they are not thereby excluded from its benefits. If, from unforeseen circumstances, a member of a colonial Lodge has occasion to petition the Lodge of Benevolence for relief, his claim as a Mason is at once admitted, and he is free to participate in those funds subscribed entirely by the brethren at home. His case is treated upon its own merits as fully as though the petitioner himself had aided in his more prosperous days to swell the fund. As one instance amongst many, in proof of which is now stated, the case of the widow of the brother who had been initiated in a Lodge in India may be adduced. This brother during his lifetime contributed nothing to the Fund of Benevolence; yet, on the application of his widow, this circumstance was overlooked, and the sum of £100 was voted to her out of the Fund of Benevolence.

"By order of the Colonial Board,

"WM. GRAY CLARKE, G. Sec.

"The Provincial Grand Secretary, District Provincial Grand Lodge of Victoria, Melbourne, Victoria."

It was proposed by Bro. Bradshaw, and seconded by Bro. Grafton: "That the letter be entered on the minutes." Carried.

It being the feeling among the members of the Provincial Grand Lodge that the fees payable by the Masons of Victoria to the Grand Lodge were as low as they could possibly be made, no further action was taken in the matter.

The Right Worshipful District Provincial Grand Master then invested Bro. Bradford, W.M. of the Hobson's Bay Lodge (No. 921) as Provincial Grand Steward from that Lodge, he having been recommended by the Lodge for that appointment.

Bro. H. W. Lowry, Prov. G.S.W., stated that, as it was found quite impossible to carry on the business of the province without having a paid Secretary, and as the funds at the disposal of the Provincial Grand Lodge are inadequate to do so, he intended to give notice that a new scale of fees should be adopted. The Lodges in the London District pay 27s. 6d. for every brother initiated; the Lodges in the provinces in England, 17s.; and, therefore, 20s. must be considered a low fee from the Lodges in this colony. He gave notice that he would propose:

"That each private Lodge in this province shall pay to the Provincial Grand Lodge for each brother initiated 20s., which sum shall include all fees payable to Provincial Grand Lodge and to Grand Lodge for registration and certificate.

"That each private Lodge in the province shall pay to the Provincial Grand Lodge, for each joining brother, 7s. 6d., which shall include fees payable to Provincial Grand Lodge and to Grand Lodge for registration. If the brother is not previously registered in the books of the Grand Lodge and requires a Grand Lodge certificate, a further sum of 7s. 6d.

"That the Provincial Grand Secretary shall be paid a salary of £100 per annum, to date from the beginning of this year.

"That the Metropolitan Lodges shall pay to the Lodge of Benevolence 2s. per quarter, or 8s. per annum—but that country Lodges having to give relief in their own districts, shall pay as heretofore, 1s. per quarter, or 4s. per annum."

Bro. Lowry stated, that the foregoing fees were very fully considered and discussed by the Board of General Purposes, and that the Board unanimously agreed to recommend their adoption.

Bro. McLean then gave the following notice of motion:—"That a return be laid before the Provincial Grand Lodge, with as little delay as possible, showing, 1st—The names of the various Lodges in the colony, and the number of Members returned by each Lodge at their last return to Provincial Grand Lodge; 2nd—The amount received from each Lodge during the last year for initiation, joining fees, and quarterage, each item being stated separately."

All business being concluded, the Provincial Grand Lodge was closed in form, and with solemn prayer.

A large number of the brethren afterwards dined together, under the presidency of the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., and an exceedingly convivial and agreeable evening concluded the Masonic proceedings of the day.

Obituary.

R. W. BRO. LIEUT.-COLONEL WILDMAN, PROV. GRAND MASTER FOR NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

ANOTHER ruler among Masons has been taken from us, full of years and universally beloved and respected. Colonel Wildman, of Newstead Abbey, died on Tuesday morning, the 20th instant, suddenly. The gallant colonel was out the day previously, but on Tuesday morning was seized with an attack of epilepsy, of which he died at three o'clock a.m. on that day. The deceased was the intimate friend of the late Lord Byron, and purchased the ancestral estate (Newstead Abbey, where Lord Byron spent much of his time during the period that he was a minor) for £96,000. Our deceased brother was an old Waterloo officer, belonging to the 10th Hussars, and was an annual guest at the late Duke of Wellington's Waterloo banquet. Colonel Wildman was a magistrate for the county of Nottingham, and brother of the present recorder of that borough. It was at his residence—the venerable abbey of Newstead (which has been beautified considerably since it has been in the gallant colonel's possession) that the remains of the Countess of Lovelace—

"Ada, sole daughter of my house and heart," were conveyed previous to their interment at Hucknall Church—the deceased bearing a part in the cortège. During the life of the late M.W.G.M., the Duke of Sussex, his royal highness was a constant guest at the abbey. Colonel Wildman's literary attainments were of a respectable character. He was an excellent landlord, and throughout the neighbourhood was universally respected. It was stated that Newstead Abbey, which was built in the time of Henry II., and passed into the Byron family at the period of the Reformation, having been given by Henry VIII. to an ancestor of the present Lord Byron, will be sold; but nothing positive is yet known. The Right Worshipful Brother leaves a widow but no family; he had attained his 73rd year. Bro. Col. Wildman was initiated whilst serving with his regiment abroad—and joined the Lodge of Friendship (No. 6) in 1813, and afterwards became a member of the Lodge of Antiquity (No. 2) in 1819. The office of Provincial Grand Master was conferred upon him by H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex; and Bro. Wildman at once acquired the esteem and confidence of the brethren over whom he was deputed to rule. In 1854, a superb testimonial, valued at two hundred guineas, was presented to him on his completing the thirty-fifth year of his Prov. Grand Mastership, the proceedings on which occasion were of a singularly interesting character, and a detailed account of which will be found in our Magazine for 1855, at pp. 103–112. The gallant brother was a life governor of both the Masonic Schools.

BRO. JOHN BARNES.

JUST as we were going to press, we heard of the death of this distinguished brother, who expired at four o'clock on Thursday morning. We will give a notice of his Masonic career next week. Our brother, who was highly respected, is to be buried at Kensall Green.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Last Sunday the Queen, her family, and the court attended divine service at Crathie Church, the only remarkable circumstance about which appears to have been that an elder of the congregation, while handing the "ladle" for charitable contributions, tumbled into the royal pew and thereby considerably astonished the lady in waiting into whose lap he fell; an incident which doubtless tended to relieve the ordinary monotony of the Scotch service. The Rev. A. Anderson officiated, but our instructive contemporary, the Court Journal, does not inform us in what manner the occasion was improved. The rest of the week has been spent in deer-stalking, riding, driving and visiting. Her Majesty has been to Lochnagar, Altnagassack, the Linn of Dee, and other Gaelic sounding localities. The Count of Flanders, the Earl of Elgin, Lord John Russell, and the Farquharsons, from Invercauld, have been visiting at Balmoral. Everybody is quite well belonging to the royal family. The Queen gave a ball on Tuesday, to which were invited the Earl and Countess of Fife, Lord Macduff and Lady Anne Macduff, the Countess of Kinnoul, Miss Rowley, Mr. and Lady Louisa Brooke, Sir Maxwell and Lady Wallace, the Master of Lovat, Col. and Mrs. Dalrymple, Miss Ricardo, Miss Stapleton, Mr. Kennedy Erskine, Capt. Williams, Hon. H. Duncan, Sir Alexander Bannerman, Hon. A. Fraser, Mr., Misses, and two Misses Farquharson (of Invercauld), Lieut.-Col. Farquharson, Earl and Countess of Caithness, Col. the Hon. and Mrs. Alexander Gordon, Mrs. and the two Misses Dundas Durham (of Largo), Lord Listowel, Capt. Shelley, Mr. and Mrs. William Russell and three Misses Russell, Hon. Mrs. Dudley Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Jenkinson, Mr. Hawkes, Sir Charles, Lady, and Miss Phipps, Sir James and Lady Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Clerk, Major Browne and the officers of the 93d Regiment, and Dr. Robertson.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor and Empress of the French are at Biarritz, and the usual autumn amusements are being gone through by the Imperial Court. It is asserted that the result of the visit of the King of the Belgians to Biarritz was fully successful. Some ridiculous rumours have been circulated regarding the object of King Leopold's visit; but it seems that the visit was made to obtain a postponement of payment of the loan due from Belgium to France, incurred as far back as 1815. Lord Cowley, Count Walewski, Count Cavour, and the Duke of Malakoff are likewise expected at Biarritz. Nothing definite has yet been decided on by the government as to the number of forces to be despatched to China; but it is stated in the Débats that a force of 25,000 men, half English and half French, is to be sent to China, to obtain satisfaction for the treacherous conduct of the Chinese to the allied forces at the embouchure of the Peiho. Messrs. Blanqui and Boches have arrived at Marseilles, stating their intention to avail themselves of the general amnesty. The Moniteur of Sunday, after saying that several newspapers had alluded to a decree that would modify the laws on the press, states that the news was void of foundation. The reason given for this is, that the government of the Emperor will not deviate from the established system, which, in allowing a field sufficiently large for discussion, controversy, and analysis, prevents, on the other hand, the disastrous effects of falsehood, calumny, and error. The Débats has published a sarcastic article on the Moniteur in relation to the manifestoes contained in that official print on the press laws. The Moniteur of Monday, therefore, issued a circular of the Minister of the Interior, addressed to the Prefects, and dated September 18, concerning the régime of the press, as follows:—"The Minister holds it necessary to remind the Prefects of the principle upon which the late decree concerning the effect of the warnings given to newspapers was founded. He says the decree of the 17th February, 1852, is not a law enacted on account of a particular crisis, and which would not be available during a time of peace and tranquillity. Like every political law, this one is also capable of improvement; but the principles of the law are closely connected with the restoration of authority in France, and with the creation of unity of power, based on universal suffrage. The government does not fear the discussion of its acts in a loyal sense, neither does it fear any attacks; but the general welfare of the people imposed upon the government the obligation of not putting aside lawful arms, which are guarantees, and not obstructions, to the right of publication of one's opinion, which could not be taken away from an enlightened people like the French. This right is not to be confounded with the exercise of the liberty of the press by means of newspapers. If the government reserves to itself the right to punish abuses, it does not interfere with the liberty of expressing one's thoughts, and will retain those restrictions only which are required out of respect for the Constitution, the legitimacy of the Imperial dynasty, and the interest of order, morality, and religion. The government is far from imposing a servile approbation of its measures; it will always tolerate opposition in a serious spirit, and will not confound the right of control with a systematic opposition and premeditated ill-will. The government will be only too glad to be enlightened itself by fair criticism and discussion, but will not permit society to be troubled by culpable excitation or hostile passions." Advice received from Zurich announces the arrival of a courier from Vienna, with instructions to draw up the instrument for the treaty of peace, and the documents for the cession of Lombardy to Sardinia. No allusion is made to the Duchies. It is hoped that the treaty of peace will be signed in a few days. The letters of the Paris correspondents are occupied with comments on the circulars published by the French Minister of the Interior on the laws on the press. These circulars have been received with the greater disgust, as hopes had been held out that it was the intention of the French government to modify the press laws in a liberal sense.—Matters are not likely to go on so smoothly in Italy as is supposed by the French government. The people, "whose destiny is in their own hands," seem to be preparing to secure that destiny at all hazards. The Milan Gazette has a spirited article on the subject, and the Gente Latina, another daily paper, calls the peace of Villafranca "a truly satanic compact, setting the conscience at odds with the heart, and imposing on us the sacrifice of our dignity for the love of our brethren. The Italians are now beginning to depend more on themselves. It is thought the Tuscans will shortly elect a Regent, who will be, of course, subordinate to Piedmont. Great activity is prevailing among the military authorities in Venetia, and there is also a rumour of a probable insurrection in Venice. The military occupation by Piedmont of Tuscany and the minor duchies is talked of. The Tuscan government has notified the plenipotentiaries of the Grand Duke to evacuate the palace within three days, and in case of non-compliance the property of the Grand Duke is to be sequestered. The Dictator Farini, at Parma, did not even wait for the King of Sardinia's answer to the deputation before he proceeded to proclaim the Sardinian rule, and to plant the arms of Savoy in the public places. It is said the King of Sardinia is preparing arms and accoutrements for an army of 250,000 men. On the other hand Austria is about to assist the Duke of Modena to recover his throne. On this last point the Corriere Mercantile makes an indignant comment, and appeals to his countrymen to resist force by force, and says the time for action has arrived. The members of the deputation from the National Assembly of the Romagna to the King of Sardinia have been named. The deputation is composed of Count Bentivoglio, Count Gozzadini, Marquis Tamari, Count Salvoni, M. Laderchi, M. Scaramelli (Vice President), and M. Marescotti (Secretary to the National Assembly). The Pope has recovered from his late illness. The Papal government has expressed its satisfaction with the article on Italian affairs published in the Moniteur of the 9th instant. Conferences between Cardinal Antonelli and the French Ambassador, the Duke de Grammont, continue to be held. It is said that the attributions of the Council of State and the Financial Consulta are to be extended.—The Wiener Zeitung of this day contains an Imperial decree raising the state of siege in Venice. However, some slight regulations will continue provisionally in force for certain cases.—A supplement to the Invalide Russe has just been published, which states that, according to a verbal report of Lieut.-Col. Grabbe, a victorious assault had been made on Guni, and five cannons had been taken by the Russians. Schamyl was taken prisoner, and his sons and family were captured or killed. The Russian loss did not exceed one hundred men.—The Madrid journals of the 15th have arrived. The Gaceta contains an account of a combat which had taken place between the Spaniards and the Moors at Ceuta, in which the Moors lost thirty-two killed and forty wounded, while the Spaniards lost only twelve wounded.—From Constantinople, under date of September 18, we learn that a conspiracy to assassinate the Sultan had been discovered, and two hundred persons had been arrested. The troops were suspected of participation in it.—News has been received from the frontiers of Morocco. The native tribes had renewed their attacks on the French outposts, and had pillaged and set fire to some of the French houses. Gen. Esterhazy made a brilliant onslaught, and repulsed the enemy. The Government of Morocco does not appear to be implicated in these attacks, but has not the power to check them.—The steamer City of Washington, from New York on the 10th, arrived at Queenstown on Tuesday night, where she landed forty-four passengers, and proceeded for Liverpool. Her political news is unimportant.

INDIA AND CHINA.—We have received by the Overland Mail advices and papers from Bombay to the 20th of August. Upwards of 10,000 soldiers have desired their discharge. There is little news of the rebels, who were prowling about in small bands, and nearly in a state of starvation. The Nana was suffering from fever, and the Begum still holds out. Balla Rao, the Nana's brother, had died of jungle fever. The Candia, with Calcutta dates to 27th August, has arrived at Aden. A bill had been introduced in the Legislative Council to tax all professions and trades in India; cultivators of land to be exempted. The Special Disarming Act passed during the mutiny is to become permanent. The House of Delhi has been deprived of all titular distinctions and privileges for ever. The French Admiral commanding in Cochin China has concluded a treaty with the Annamese, and will probably start with his fleet to China. The barque Neptune had been lost off Akab. The state of the funds was: five-and-a-half per cent. Loan, 5½ to 5¼ discount. Exchange on London, six months, for first-class paper, 2s. 0½d.—The following is an extract from a private letter received from an officer on board one of the gunboats engaged in the recent operations at the mouth of the Peiho River:—"Our little craft was riddled by their shot. Ten carpenters have been at work upon us three days, plugging up our shot-holes. The heaviest shot we received weighed 56 lbs. Several balls were cut out of our second gig, which several officers, among whom was Commander Commerell, declare are Russian rifle balls. We shall have better work next time, as their forts are progressing in size and number fast. I was working at the howitzer, and a ball carried away my watch and chain."

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—Lord Derby is laid up with another fit of the gout, which will, we fear, prevent him from being present at the great banquet which the Liverpool Conservatives are getting up. As for the Premier, he is at Broadlands, well and hearty, and has been improving the minds of the bumpkins by speeches on railway progress and social improvements, à propos of cutting roads and rolling wheelbarrows, which his lordship has been doing with his usual facetious urbanity on some new railway near his park. Active measures we believe have been taken here to repair the Chinese disaster; and it is to be hoped that in India Lord Canning will not be found wanting in promptitude, and that he will contrive to despatch a numerous and efficient reinforcement to the scene of action in China. Lord Clyde is coming home, and his place is to be filled by Sir Hugh Rose; General Mansfield is appointed to the command of the Bombay army. Brave old Admiral Hope, who commanded, and was dangerously wounded at the Peiho Forts, is recalled, and will be superseded by Admiral Keppell, an equally dashing officer, who we hope will have better luck than his gallant predecessor.—The inquest on the bodies of the sufferers by the explosion on board the Great Eastern, is at length brought to a close, a verdict equivalent to one of accidental death having been returned. A want of caution is also declared to have been exhibited on the part of the engineers; but who "the engineers" were is a question yet to be decided, and one upon which the jury did not find themselves called to pronounce an opinion.—The revising barrister for the City of London registration has this week held his first sitting at Guildhall. The objections on the liberal side are about five hundred in number, and those on the conservative three hundred and fifty. There are but few fresh claims. The second court for Middlesex was held at Bedford by Mr. Shadwell. Of the two days' proceedings the result shows, at Uxbridge—conservative objections, forty-eight; expunged, twenty-four—liberals, thirty-seven; expunged, twenty-two. At Bedford, conservative objections, nineteen; expunged, twelve—liberal, fifty-five; expunged, fifty-two. The result of the day's proceedings at Mr. Shadwell's court, showed conservative objections made, ninety-one; sustained, fifty-three; liberals, one hundred and nine made, and ninety-four sustained. The revising barrister for the City of London has concluded the lists of liverymen of the different companies.—There has been no intimation given as to the intention of the government with regard to the fate of Dr. Smethurst. He still continues to assert his innocence, and he is engaged the greater part of every day in writing what he calls "notes" of the case, and which consist of remarks upon the evidence for the prosecution. The visiting justices, in order to assist him in this matter, have allowed him to have a transcript of the notes of the short hand writer employed at the Central Criminal Court, or rather the printed report which is published at the close of each session by order of the corporation of the City of London, which of course amounts to the same thing. This is considered a very extraordinary proceeding, and it is most unusual to allow such facilities to a capital convict.—The registrar general's return for the past week gives the number of deaths as 1092, which is about the average mortality for the middle of September. There was an increase of deaths from small pox and scarlatina, but a considerable decrease in fatal cases from diarrhoea. The births during the week amounted to 1607.—It will be observed with regret that Dr. Vaughan, whose able oversight of Harrow school has done much to keep up the reputation of that ancient seat of learning, is about to retire.—A meeting was held on Monday evening at the London Tavern, Chatham, by the dockyard men, at which it was agreed to enter into a subscription for presenting to the Right Hon. James Wilson a testimonial, to consist of a silver inkstand, for his exertion in obtaining the Civil Service Superannuation Bill. The subscription amounted to £9 19s. 4d., which would remain open until Saturday.—The September session of the Central Criminal Court opened on Monday, before the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, and several aldermen. The first edition of the calendar contained the names of eighty-three prisoners. The Recorder, in his charge to the grand jury, congratulated them upon the lightness of the calendar. Among the cases tried was that of William Denbigh Sloper Marshall, who was charged with bigamy; he was found guilty, and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. The case has been often before the police courts.—Alfred Cooper surrendered to take his trial upon several indictments charging him with embezzling money from the churchwardens and overseers of Camberwell parish. He pleaded not guilty. Two cases were tried, and the prisoner was acquitted on both. Mr. Poland said it was the intention of the prosecution to proceed with the other indictments. These trials occupied a very long time.—At the Middlesex Sessions, Charlotte Morris, a married woman, was indicted for attempting to commit suicide. She had been taken into custody for drunkenness, and while locked up she twice attempted to strangle herself. She pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to six months' hard labour, on which she said she would do it yet.—Thomas Suter, a baker, but well known as the "Thieves' Lawyer," and Thomas Lee, a returned convict, known as the "Rabbit," from his dexterity at thieving, pleaded guilty to robbing Charlotte Yeates. A long list of convictions against Suter was put in, extending over fourteen years, and he had served one sentence of four years' penal servitude. Suter was now sentenced to six, and Lee to three years' penal servitude.—Thomas Thompson was convicted of stealing fixtures from a dwelling-house. He was one of a gang who got possession of houses by false references, and immediately stripped them of everything that could be taken away. He was also shown to have been guilty of other offences, and the Court sentenced him to eighteen months' hard labour.—John White was convicted of assaulting and robbing William Payne. He had been repeatedly convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, and on one occasion was condemned to four years' penal servitude. The learned Judge said this was another instance of old and known thieves getting off by pleading guilty at police offices, and being summarily convicted. He was now sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.—At the Court of Bankruptcy the cases of Messrs. Oak and Snow, of the Blandford Bank, and the European and American Steam Shipping Company, were brought under consideration. The petition against Messrs. Oak and Snow will be annulled, the majority of the creditors having agreed to the receipt of a settled dividend. The audit of the European and American Steam Company was effected, but no dividend is to be declared under the liquidation until the bills forming a portion of the assets arrive at maturity.—The choice of assignees was arranged in the case of John Edward Buller, the fraudulent bankrupt solicitor and money scrivener, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, whose debts and liabilities amount to upwards of £100,000. The bankrupt has absconded, having, it is said, inflicted severe injury, if not utter ruin, upon many persons by whom he was trusted in his confidential character of solicitor. One very gross case was detailed yesterday, in which the bankrupt appropriated to his own purposes £10,000 of trust money and property of a widow lady. The total amount of debts proved yesterday was about £13,000 or £14,000.—At the Central Criminal Court yesterday, the trials of Charles Annois, a Portuguese, charged with the murder of Philip Barker, and of George Frederick Royal, accused of poisoning a young woman with whom he cohabited at Poplar, were postponed until next session.—Thomas Goodfellow, a boy ten years of age, was found guilty of stealing a letter containing a bill of exchange, and sentenced to fourteen days' hard labour, and five years' confinement in a reformatory; and Henry Ford was indicted for stabbing Sarah Thompson with intent to murder her; a second count charged the intent to be to do grievous bodily harm, and on this last count he was found guilty and sentenced to penal servitude for four years. Just before the closing of the court the judge increased the sentence passed on young Goodfellow from fourteen days to six weeks' imprisonment in Newgate, and afterwards to be sent to a reformatory for five years.—Mary Denny and Mary Healey were found guilty of robbing Rosetta Susan Clemmerson of a purse and money. The prisoners were of the class of unfortunates, as was also the prosecutrix. Former convictions having been proved against them, but more frequently with respect to Healey, the Court sentenced her to four years' penal servitude, and Denny to twelve months' hard labour.—John Edward Jenkins, clerk to the Foreign Vineyard Association, was examined at the Mansion House on a charge of forging a cheque for £101 4s. 6d. The prisoner, who had been apprehended at Broadstairs, was remanded for further evidence.—Mr. David Hughes, lately carrying on business as an attorney in the city, who absconded from his creditors in July, 1858, leaving behind him liabilities to the extent of about £200,000, was brought up at Guildhall, on a warrant, having been captured in Australia by Brett, a sergeant of the city force, and placed at the bar for examination, before Alderman Lawrence the presiding magistrate, charged with non-surrender to the fiat issued against him in bankruptcy. The prisoner was remanded for a week.—A shocking occurrence took place yesterday at the Lewes sheep fair, by which four persons lost their lives, and others were seriously injured, and a number of horses and sheep killed. The disaster was caused by the bursting of the boiler of an engine which was brought on to the ground for the purpose of testing the capabilities of a chaff cutting machine. Instantly on the explosion the engine was seen to rise in the air, and was shot a clear distance of thirty yards.—A disgraceful outrage has occurred at Hereford, where a brute of a labourer has thrown some vitriol over a young girl because she refused to marry him.—Wednesday being St. Matthew's day, the lord mayor, lady mayoress, aldermen, sheriffs, and governors of the several royal hospitals, attended Divine service at Christ Church, Newgate-street, after which they repaired to the great hall of the hospital to hear the speeches of the Grecians, which were of the most creditable description, and elicited much applause.—The funds yesterday were maintained with firmness, and consols for money and the account left off 95½ to ½. There was greater activity in foreign stocks and railway shares, Mexican especially having advanced. The prices from the Paris Bourse again showed an improvement of ½ per cent., and hence the bargains after hours were once more at a fractional improvement. Only £8000 gold was sent into the bank, and the demand for Mexican dollars, which advanced to 60½d. per ounce, induced a belief that the remittances to India and China will steadily increase. There was no feature in the produce markets, except that rice sold more freely on rather easier terms.

COMMERCIAL.—The weekly commercial reviews of the manufacturing districts are not altogether satisfactory. The intelligence of the disturbance of mercantile relations with China, together with the advices of the fall in prices at Calcutta, have created much heaviness at Manchester. In Leeds the influence of the same accounts has been experienced, but at Nottingham and Birmingham a good general trade has been transacted. At Bradford and Halifax the manufacturers were proceeding steadily, but no large orders have recently come to hand. In the neighbourhood of Sheffield and Wolverhampton the course of affairs has been tranquil, and the general prospects of business have not suffered any decided reverse.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.—The English opera season is announced to begin on Monday, the 3rd of October, under the Pyne and Harrison management. In addition to Miss Louisa Pyne (who we are happy to say has quite recovered her health), the programme includes the names of many distinguished singers, some of whom are new to the stage. Among these we find Mdles. Pilling, Fanny Cruise (her first appearance in London), Miss Thirlwall, and Miss Parepa (her first appearance at the Royal English Opera); Mr. Santley (his first appearance), Mr. Henry Haigh, Mr. H. Corri, Mr. G. Honey, Mr. St. Albyn, Mr. Mengis, Mr. Lyall, Mr. Wallworth, Mr. Bartleman, Mr. Terrott, Mr. Maurice de Solla, and Mr. W. Harrison. An excellent ballet company is engaged, including our old favourites, the Paynes, Mdle. Rosalia Lequine, Mdle. Pierron, Mdle. Pasquale, and Mons. Vandriss.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—Mr. E. T. Smith, and his operatic company, have returned to London, and the former has definitively secured Drury Lane Theatre for a new term. In consideration of £4,500 rent, instead of £4,000, he has now the liberty to open the house every night in the year, without the extra payment of five pounds, to which, under the old agreement, he was subject for each and every one after the two hundredth.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.—Last Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mathews concluded their engagement with a benefit, to do honour to which one of the most crowded audiences assembled that we have ever seen in this or any other house. Mr. Mathews had selected "The Road to Ruin" and "Paul Pry" for the occasion, sustaining in the former comedy the character of Goldfinch, and in the latter that of Paul Pry. Greatly as we admire Mr. Mathews, and well-wishers as we are to him, we are constrained to say that we have never seen him act so ill before. The offensive character of Goldfinch, contrary to our expectations, received no new treatment at his hands; and the feeble way in which he played Paul Pry was perfectly astonishing to his friends who were present. In addition, the whole of the gentlemen and ladies in the comedy, with one or two exceptions, were shamefully imperfect in their parts—Mr. Mathews most conspicuously so; and altogether a more unsatisfactory performance we never assisted at. The audience, however, were very indulgent and good natured, and took great pains to be pleased without a cause. On Monday last, Miss Amy Sedgwick made her appearance for the first time this season in the character of Rosalind, in "As You Like It," with great success. Miss Sedgwick, throughout, realized the highest conception of her character. The playful humour and the exquisite grace and tenderness which she exhibits during the period of her disguise, and while testing the love and trying the heart of Orlando, are a perfect embodiment of the poet's idea. Mr. Howe made an admirable Jaques, and Mr. Compton (it is scarcely necessary to inform old playgoers, in the part of Touchstone, interpreted the humour of Shakespeare with that true taste and perfect conception of the author in which he is unequalled by any living actor with the exception of Mr. Phelps. Mr. Wilkins played Andrey in an unctuous and satisfactory manner. On Thursday, a new farce was produced by Mr. John Bridgman, a proprio of the Rifle Movement.

NEW ADELPHI THEATRE.—On Monday Bro. Webster is to open this elegant and most comfortable theatre with Adelphi dramas, comedies, farces, and burlesques. The pieces selected for opening are "One Touch of Nature," a new farce, by J. M. Morton, Esq., called "Love and Hunger," and the popular burlesque of "The Babes in the Wood."

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.—Mr. Augustus Harris, ci-devant right-hand man to Mr. Gye at Covent Garden, opens this theatre to-night with a new comedy (translated, of course,) by Mr. John Oxenford, entitled "Ivy Hall," and so far, if the tale be true, the new management would seem to be treading in the footsteps of the old one. Mrs. and Miss Louise Keeley, and a Mr. George Melville as first stock actor, are to form part of the company. If the latter justify the fame that has been hitherto advanced guard, he will be found a first-rate artist in tragedy, comedy, and melodrama.

OLYMPIC THEATRE.—To-night this theatre will be re-opened, as Messrs. Robson and Emden have novelty in store for their patrons—comedieta, by Mr. Charles Dance, entitled "Morning Calls," with part for Mrs. Stirling and Mr. G. Vining.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Under the auspices of Mr. Chatterton, this house begins its season on Saturday, the 1st proximo. Mr. Leigh Murray will appear in a new comedy, and a burlesque by Mr. Leicester Buckingham is also announced.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.—The winter season commenced at this house with the tragedy of "Romeo and Juliet," introducing Miss Caroline Heath, late of the Princess's Theatre, to an Islington audience: the character of Mercutio being sustained by Mr. Phelps. The house was crowded to the ceiling. The play was judiciously cast, and acted throughout with good taste and artistic feeling. Miss Heath, who has for some time been favourably known to London playgoers as a pleasing actress in light comedy, surpassed the expectations of her best wishes by the ability she displayed in the part of Juliet—so different to anything she has hitherto done upon the metropolitan stage. In the earlier scenes her grace and the modest expression of her deep love were fully appreciated and admired by an audience which carefully noted every word and gesture; but the fire and energy she put forth in the last acts fairly took the house by storm, and a more completely successful débüt we have rarely witnessed. Mr. Phelps's conception of the witty and fiery Mercutio was perfect. "King Lear" has also been produced, Miss Heath playing Cordelia with much grace and sweetness.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BRO. BESWICK.—In reply to your inquiry as to the price of Mr. Papworth's Alphabetical Dictionary of Coats of Arms, reviewed in the last number of the Freemasons' Magazine, we see it is published by Mr. Papworth, 14A, Great Marlborough-street, London, and is issued to annual subscribers of one guinea each. We have communicated with Mr. Papworth, who will send, what we have not, a prospectus to Bro. Beswick, with whose address, for that purpose, we have furnished him.

"A."—See the above answer to Bro. Beswick. We will take care that the communication from "A." shall reach Mr. Papworth, and will forward to him the address of our correspondent, in order that he may receive a prospectus.

No. 206.—In our notice of the proceedings of this Lodge last week we omitted to mention that Bro. Baker, W.M., has consented to serve as steward at the next festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution of Ag Masons and their Widows.

No. 907.—We consider that seven days' notice should always be given prior to holding a Lodge of Emergency, though not specially provided for in the Book of Constitutions.

"W. B."—We have repeatedly answered the question. A Warder should not occupy the Master's chair, whilst ruling the Lodge.

BRO. BELL.—There are many Lodges whose members number over fifty. We look upon the model number as from twenty-five to thirty.

A BROTHER WANTING PREFERMENT.—Try and get an introduction to the Caveac. We hear it has only nine members.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1859.

SYMBOLISM OF COLOUR.

"Formæ dignitas coloris bonitate tuenda est."

Cicero de Officiis, i. 36.

WHEN the Almighty fiat went forth on the first day of creation, "Let the earth bring forth grass, and the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so"—the glorious purpose could scarcely be said to be perfected till the following day, when the fourth command was promulgated, by which the beauteous creation of plants and trees, herbs, and all the pompous panoply of nature then starting into being would be apparent to man for whom all this gorgeousness of creation was preparing; for on that day passed first the creative word: "Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years. And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so."

Then and not before was accomplished the purpose of Jehovah, to gladden the lord of all this mighty preparation, who was soon to enter into the full fruition of his being, by the perception and enjoyment of all the grand and beautiful in nature; then was his eye opened to the cerulean vault of heaven, to the green carpet of the earth, studded with all the countless varied hues that the refraction of the new born sun produced; the rich umbrageous woods filled with the beauteous and contrasted hues of an infinite feathered multitude, exhibiting at every move a new prismatic change. This consummation was perfected as soon as the glorious luminary of day appeared above the horizon; then was granted to man the gracious boon of colour.

To estimate more fully this most precious gift of heaven, let us only for a moment figure our world and all creation deprived of the prismatic action of the solar rays, and contemplate the appearance of every object on which we could cast our eyesight, veiled in one uniform unvaried tint; a case almost within the description of Virgil's Cyclops, taken objectively:—

"Monstrum informe ingens cui lumen ademptum."

It is of no consequence what single tint we propose in which to cloud all nature; any one unvaried would be equally objectionable; red would weary the eyesight, and tend to weaken, if it did not induce blindness; brown or black would afflict the mind, and induce melancholy; even the more subdued tints of green or blue would ultimately wear down the soul by monotonous insipidity and unvarying tameness. With such an habitation its human denizen would attain the same frame of mind which Virgil (Æn. iv. 450) attributes from different causes to Dido when Æneas fled:—

"Tum vero infelix fatis exterrita Dido Mortem orat; tædet cœli convexa tueri."

Sir Isaac Newton says in his "Opticks":—"If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world; nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflexions or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light."

From such a triste and miserable abode, such an unchanged and wearisome existence, we are kindly saved by the diversity of the solar rays and the variety of colour, which, however, could scarcely have been perceived before mankind made use of this diversity; and it seems but reasonable that mankind should early in the natural distinction of colours have sought corresponding tokens of the different relations of life, of thought and action. This was but a necessary consequence of the permanence, the variety and the beauty of the physical objects around them. By degrees to every tint an unchanging idea was attached, and which may have been fostered by the ideas which some of the ancients entertained of the nature of colour. Plato considered all colour as a flame issuing from the coloured substances, a reflex of the rays of his supreme god—the sun. The stoic Zeno called it the contour and boundary of matter; and Aristotle said it was some property by which alone bodies became visible; here evidently defining a cause by a consequence. As, however, the opinion of Plato seems to have been, if not so acknowledged, at least the received general theory of the ancient and eastern world, we cannot wonder that a due appreciation of colour became soon an object of religious usage, and that particular colours were soon appropriated and restricted to particular divinities. The language of colours became thus intimately allied to the heathen dispensations in China, in Egypt, in Greece, and in Rome. Even in the remote clime of Iceland, where nature is divested of half her beauty, the darker and cloudy hues were introduced into its creed; and in the middle ages the missals, the encrusted walls of their churches, the encaustic paintings, and the glorious windows "dim with religious light," each told its story of mythic lore in the various tints it exhibited. The conventional colours these displayed were of most ancient usage, and of the most venerable observance. We may trace many of their contrasts and much of their splendour and beauty to the liturgical precepts of the Zendavesta; to the Brahminical rituals of the Vedas. The reproduction of the polychromic figures and temples from most of the countries we have named, enshrined in their new crystal repository at Sydenham, that literally — "doth bestride the narrow world

Like a Colossus, and we petty men Walk under his huge legs and peep about," bears witness to the truth of our assertion: there in a microcosm, "a narrow world," is collected full evidence of the truth of the constant and unvaried symbolism of colour.

In Egypt, that land of priestcraft and intelligence, the robe of Isis was of every hue which the natural objects of the country afforded. Osiris, the puissant god, was the luminary, the sun by which alone she, as variegated nature, shone. The chromic orthodoxy of Egypt was kept up by the strictest injunctions. Synesius tells us that their laws prohibited the workers of metals and their stonemasons from forming figures of their divinities, for fear of a departure from established forms and tints. At Rome the monopoly of the imperial purple to the family of the emperor is inculcated as late as the Justinian code; and it is well known that in China the minute gradations of rank to the present date are carefully denoted by the colour of the garment; and in that celestial empire, possibly, the study of precedence and authority may be there as curious and ridiculous as the labours of our heralds in their multiplied tints and blazons. The Chinese code gives three hundred bastinadoes and three years of banishment to any one unlucky or daring enough to encroach unauthorisedly upon the sacred figures of the green dragon or the yellow phoenix.

Turner's "Embassy to Thibet" (p. 314,) gives us a similar fixity and meaning for colour in Thibet, neighbouring and much dependent upon China:—

"The priests were habited in long robes of yellow cloth with a conical cap of the same colour, having flaps to draw down and cover the ears. I notice this particularity in the colour of their dress, as it is a distinction adopted to mark one of the two religious sects that divide almost the whole of Tartary to the eastern limits of this country. The other colour is red, and the tribes are known as belonging to the red or yellow cap. The former differs principally, as I understand, from the sectaries of the yellow in admitting the marriage of their priests. But the latter are considered as the most orthodox, as well as possessed of by far the greatest influence. The Emperor of China is decidedly a votary of this sect, and he has sanctified his preference of the yellow colour by a sumptuary law, which limits it to the service of religion and the imperial use."

This may however have been a later innovation of the now dominant Mantchew Tartars who entered China in 1643, or we find, in Staunton's account of the embassy thither descriptions of the interiors of their temples and palaces, and paintings frequently mentioned as vermillion, and notices of red ornaments in them. The envelope for the royal drinking cup of gold, after being licked clean by the imperial tongue, is a piece of red silk.

The symbolism or the perpetuity of colour was not confined to the narrow bounds of the eastern hemisphere: the same deference to particular colours was given by Aztecs and Toltecs (the most ancient inhabitants we read of for Central America) as in the Old World, and though many curious traces of mutual knowledge are gradually opening betwixt the New and the Old World, this deference to colour seems but a common feeling implanted in every human being whose organs of sight are perfect. In Mexico, the favourite, the sacred, and the regal colour seems to have been green.

Prescott ("Conquest of Mexico," vol. ii., p. 50), tells us "It was not long before he (the King of Texuco) appeared borne in a palanquin litter richly decorated with plates of gold and precious stones, having pillars curiously wrought supporting a canopy of green plumes, a favourite colour with the Aztec princes;" and at p. 63, of Montezuma's dress at his interview with Cortez it is said, "Both the cloak and sandals were sprinkled with pearls and precious stones, amongst which the emerald and the chalihivit, a green stone of a higher estimation than any other amongst the Aztecs, were conspicuous. On his head he wore no other ornament than a panache of plumes of the royal green which floated down his back; the badge of military (priestly?), rather than of regal rank." We have queried this former epithet, for we find (vol. i.) the idol of the Huscals had its head-dress also of green feathers; and further, that this sacred colour extended its influence to the feathered tribe in which it preponderated, for at p. 101, Prescott, speaking of the aviary of Montezuma, tells of "the endless parrots with their rainbow hues, the royal green predominant."

The practical Peruvians put the different shades of colour to a very useful purpose. Their guipos served them for many adaptations of a note book or a chronicle, and a similar practice had extended far across the Pacific, as Prince Lee Boo endeavoured on his journey from the Friendly Islands of his father to make similar coloured threads serve for a journal of his passage, till nearing England the multitude of events and fresh ideas made him throw up the imperfect records in despair.

Mahomet felt the influence of antiquity and Egyptian neighbourhood, and perpetuated its reverence of colours and the endurance of their meaning to his followers by which, amongst others, the symbolism of flowers has been established over a large portion of the civilized world. He has given it in the Koran (Bees chap. xvi.) as a precept received from heaven, "that colours are the principal distinctions of objects." His Moslem followers were ready disciples, and extended the meaning by willing expounders of this creed. The seclusion of the harem, the beauty of their eastern floral wealth, led his votaries easily and fully to a floral language precise and well understood. The billets doux in a bouquet, well defined and conventional, though apparently innocent, are often the channels of a deep intrigue.

It was however impossible that objects so constantly in view and so pleasing should not have had their votaries and meaning far more extended than the realms of the Moslem. Neale and Webb, in an introduction to a translation to a portion of Durand's Work on the Ceremonies, &c., of the Catholic Church, tell us, (p. 47), when speaking of the symbolism of flowers:—

"This is a species of symbolism which has prevailed among

* That green has become the sacred colour of Islamism may have been the mere accident of Mahomet's robe being of that colour, preserved as a sacred emblem. It now probably floats side by side with the red oriflamme of France, sent from heaven as a sign of victory and an entry of conversion to Clovis.

all nations, and which our devout ancestors were not slow in stamping with the impress of religion. Witness, for example, the herb trinity, now generally called heart's ease, the passion flower, and lachryma Christi. In the present day, who knows not that the rose is the symbol for beauty, the violet for modesty, the sunflower for faithfulness,* the forget-me-not for remembrance, the pansy for thought, the cypress for woe, the yew for true heartedness, the everlasting for immortality."

We adduce this meagre list of symbols at present as a sample, but trust to be able in time to give a larger and more expressive catalogue from the Catholic Calendar; a church which has always endeavoured to ally its tenets and practice with natural objects and a popular perceptiveness.

Some of these congruities are palpable enough; the pansy, for thought, can only arise through the French penser, which is forced; the forget-me-not is not so thoroughly popularized as its German prototype the vergiss-mein-nicht; and the heart's ease has received from Shakespeare an interpretation in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" not very favourable to the weaker sex, to which the flower usually is attributed; for with him the heart is changed to one only of its passions, and we will trust, for the honour of the female sex, that ease is not always idleness—so that his full interpretation of love and idleness for heart's ease is not invariably true. But to these symbolical meanings we must revert again when the different classes of natural objects have to be noticed.

To return, however, to the chromic symbolism of classic antiquity, we may remark that much of it is lost to us from the almost entire destruction of their monuments. In the fifteenth century not more than six ancient statues were known, and if with these ancients each colour had its symbolical meaning or was a fixed attribution, we can now only learn so from occasional notices in their writings that have reached us. We may, however, at least conjecture, much as it may militate against our æsthetical feelings, that most of the plastic chef d'œuvres of their chisels received the aid of colour. It requires only a visit to the Elgin marbles in the British Museum to find traces of a coating of pigment, which the exposure of more than two milluries has rubbed from the prominent portions—it requires, therefore, a close scrutiny of the crannies of the figures before this is discovered; but so firmly was Mr. Owen Jones persuaded of the fact that, in his classic restorations at Sydenham, polychromy is plentifully used.

Another difficulty, however, in settling the symbolical meanings of the ancient pigments arises from the great doubt which hangs over the particular name of the tint of any given pigment. These ancients themselves were most loose in their use of the terms descriptive of the various colours. On this head, Spence, the author of the "Polymetis," is undeniable authority. He says, p. 167,—

"I believe there is no one thing in the whole language of the Romans that we are more at a loss about than their names of colours. It appears evidently enough that cæruleus was used by them for some dark colour."

One might bring a number of instances to prove this.

"Sæpe videmus
Ipsius in vultu varios errare colores;
Cæruleus pluviam denunciat."—Georg. i. 451.

And

"Tum mihi cæruleus supra caput astitit imber
Noctem hiememque ferens et inhorruit unda tenebris.
Æn. iii. 195."

Spence might have supported his proposition also from Ovid (Fasti, iv. 420), when describing the rape of Proserpine, Pluto's horses are noted as cærulei.

"Hanc videt et visam patrum velociter aufert Regnaque cæruleis in sua portat equis."

Equally uncertain are we as to the use or tint of purpureus. I again quote Spence, p. 186,—

"What idea the Romans meant by the word purpureus is not
* "So the sunflower turns on his god when he sets,
The same look that he gave when he rose."—MOORE.

at all settled with us. They use that epithet of fire, of swans, of snow, so that nivei and purpurei may not differ so much as they seem."

"Gemma purpureis cum juga demet equis." Ovid, Fast. ii. 72.

And

"Carmina sanguinea deducunt cornua lunæ." Ibid. ii. 24.

"Et revocent niveos solis euntis equos."

So in Virgil (Georg. iii, 82, 83) it is difficult to assign a satisfactory tint to this passage, giving the quality of horses from their colours:—

"Honesti
Spedices glaucique: color deterrimus albis
Et gilvo."

Glaucus seems generally only to mean shining, and may have been, in a very remote sense, akin to the German term Glück (luck).

Gilvus is a honey colour, answering to the modern yellow, German gelb or gellb, and the same well known metathesis of j and b would give the best significance for flavus in the German blau, our blue; nor should I object to a derivation of cæruleus from the German gar, car, kur, and helle, bright: gar representing, in that language, anything special or particularly perfect. That Spence was in part of this opinion, may be deduced from his note on "cæruleus fibris" (Æn. vii. 64), and "crinem cæruleum," (Ovid); and Virgil:—

"Eum tenuis glauco velabat amictu Carbosus."—Æn. viii. 24.

when he says—

"I imagine cæruleus signifies a darkish or sea green colour here, though it may in general signify any colour that the sea is of, and that varies according to the objects that reflect light upon it. Near the shore it is always tinged with the predominant colour of the shore, and is generally more or less green; far out at sea it is of whatever colour the clouds happen to be of, so that cæruleus is a very vague and indeterminate expression.

"The meaning of the word glaucus is almost as uncertain. One of the best vocabularies we have for the Latin tongue (Ainsworth), says it signifies grey blue, sky coloured, azure sea green, or a bright fiery red."

But it may have only applied to a brilliancy in all the particular instances which seems proved by Lervin's explanation of the word in the passage above from the Georgics, by its resembling cats' eyes—felineis oculis.

Not only is this uncertainty of colour inherent in themselves, that is subjectively, but even the eye objectively (as in the other senses) is unable to satisfy itself that the impressions on it from the same objects are the same as those made upon any other individual, but as the relative change remains permanent and consistent throughout, the difficulty, though incapable of proof as of alteration, certainly adds to the general uncertainty of polychromy.

With regard, however, to its symbolism, we can hardly suppose that in the clear atmosphere and pure air of Greece and Italy, where nature's nicest and most delicate tints had fullest play, and where every hue of field or forest, the gaudy colouring of the feathered tribe, were so precisely noticed, and where the play of the shot colours of the dolphin, the tunny, and other denizens of their clear waters gave the splendour and variety of a kaleidoscope to each bay and inlet of their shores—we can hardly suppose, I say, that here the beauty of variety in colour should have passed unheeded, or its symbolism not have arisen.

Englishmen, as we have already pointed out, have at the present day peculiar opportunities, and almost a mission, to judge and determine on the symbolism of colour and on the appositeness of polychromy in the examples offered in the new glass palace at Sydenham. We have there what are declared to be correct, though reduced copies, of Assyrian, Egyptian, Grecian, Roman, British, Gothic, Spanish, Mahomedan, Renaissance, and Italian colouring down to our own time, in the production of the industrial courts and the limning of the palace itself. It is to be lamented that we have them not placed in a chronological series; so that a visitor or student might commence with the earliest link, and so pass on from the old Palace of Ninus, in the order we have indicated, to the more extended field of Egyptian gaiety and to a more pronounced and extended chromic field. The Grecian use of polychromy may be said to be successfully asserted as material aid to the chisel in the tints which Mr. Owen Jones has so harmoniously bestowed on the frieze of the Parthenon, and which he may possibly carry out on the chefs d'œuvres of Phidias, Minerva's glorious tympanum.

At Rome, in the arabesques of the baths of Titus, we find every variety of tint employed with such freedom and richness of invention that Rafaele did not disdain to become their copyist in the loggias of the Vatican; and how much Gothic architecture is improved and harmonized by the introduction of the strongest tints, the mediæval courts of England, Germany, and France bear ample testimony, and in the number of the colours and their brilliancy how much the round and pointed arch and their corresponding styles are heightened and sublimed by the use of pigments. It was not without ample consideration and experience that our forefathers encrusted the walls of their cathedrals and parish churches with the storied history of the Saviour and the Saints in richest hue, the backgrounds inlaid or diapered with vivid mosaics or overlaid with resplendent gold; and thus the temples showed by their solemn pomp advantageously as the abode and dwelling place of the Most Highest, and placed in an obvious light the distinction between a common house and the habitation of the Lord. The legendary lore on the walls around, their moral precepts though

"Spell'd by th' unlettered Muse,
The place of fame and eulogy supply,
And many a holy text around she strews,
Teaching the rural moralist to die."

This useful, this æsthetical practice was buried in the age of whitewash and uniformity, and all in religion was thereby rendered gloomy, meaningless, and dull.

The idea, however, of the beautiful and significant in colour could not be banished from the minds of the people or the designs of the artist, and polychromy, ejected from our churches, took refuge in the palaces. The Renaissance Court has its finest examples of colour from the halls of princes, from the ducal edifices, or the vestibules of the nobili. The cinqe cento period, when art had lost the solemnity and awe of the cloister, necessarily wandered into the grotesque and gay; it degenerated successively in England into the Elizabethan and the austere Puritanical.

A certain internal relation, however, of the several periods we have traced is still observable, and a certain preponderance of four colours—red, blue, yellow, and black—with an occasional variation of green (as we shall show subsequently, from our own popular mythology), pervades all. In the earliest Assyrian we have the first rudiments of polychromy and the infancy of art, in which the rude pigments employed were such as the surrounding soils afforded—ochres and earths, deep red, brown, and yellow, with intense blue blacks; and the contrasts are also sombre and in keeping with the majestic grandeur of their architecture—dull red on buff, or blue on red and red on blue alternately. These colours and their contrasts are so suitable to the stiffness of the sculpture that they seem but the completion of form; brighter tints or more delicate oppositions would be totally out of place.

The Egyptians, to whom a knowledge of the metallic oxides seems to have been familiar, add more enlivening tints to the ochres of the Assyrians, though still the influence of the austere Nubian and their own sunburnt tint controlled their introduction and use. The same agreement, however, of form and colour is here which we have found in the courts of Nineveh—the opacity of tint there is quite in keeping with their formal treatment of form; whilst in the Egyptian Court we meet a transparent lightness of decoration which gives to its ponderous sculpture an appearance at once gay and brilliant. The temperament of the children of Misraim seems to have been dreamy and spiritual; that of the Assyrian, like their colours, was more earthy and coarse; and in the latter their broad staring effects of colour correspond to the comparative clumsiness of their contours.

We have now seen how small so far the sum of colours introduced into these buildings; but properly blended and heightened they were not incapable of the most gorgeous effects. The Alhambra court with all its splendour is but the result of the three heraldic tints, azure, gules, and gold (or) and the sacred colours prescribed by the Almighty to the Israelites are similar, if we take purple and scarlet as its sub-tints to represent red. Thus Exodus, xxviii. 6:—"And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple and scarlet, and of fine twined linen with cunning work."

The same injunction is repeated, Exodus xxxv. 25, for the garments of the priests—and xxxvi. 8; xxxix. 5, 24, 29, for the curtains of the tabernacle.

It is these three tints which appear solely according to the authority of Mr. Owen Jones in the decoration of his Grecian temples, and no doubt it was ascribable to the influence of Grecian art, that these are the colours which Mr. Digby Wyatt, on the authority of the Pompeian discoveries, uses exclusively in the reproduction of the Pompeian court; though occasionally the Etruscan influence of light greens and purples are discernible, but rarely.

A triplicity of tint seems, however, to have formed a standard of symbolism through all ages; so that even the Catholic church restricts the use by its priests in their sacred vestments to this number solely, though white is added, and, being called a colour, makes the number of ritual colours four, as we learn from Durandus, iii. 18:—

"Quatuor sunt principales colores quibus secundum proprietates dierum sacras vestes ecclesia distinguit, albis, rubeus, niger, viridis—nam in legalibus indumentis (under the old law) quatuor colores induisse leguntur, byssus, purpura, iacynthus, et coccus."

Their symbolism is distinctly marked by their prescribed use for particular masses.

White vestments are used on the festivals of holy confessors and virgins which be not martyrs, on account of their integrity and innocence. Jovinus Torrentius, in his hymn on the Innocents, sings beautifully, "De puero Jesu" (p. 63, editio Amstelod. 1576, 12mo.), and their beauty must be an apology for a lengthened extract:—

"Vos præter omnes, lingua quem fari nequit
Fuso professos sanguine
Ergo supremi parte cæli lactea
Quâ lucidum fulget via Quâ picta dulci stillat uva nectare
Quâ nectar exhalant rose.
Herous ante et ante auctos purpura
Cœlestis aulæ principes,
Læti coronis luditis et insignium
Mixti puellarum choris
Sacrum canentes itis agnum candido
Quacunque præcedat pede,
At gaudet ille, gaudet innocens sua
Qui morte mortem vicerit:
Victorque clausi ruperit seras poli
Potente cunctis regia
Qui mitis aut ut agnus aut blandus puer
Sine fraude vitam auxerint."

For the above reasons white vestments are used in the festivals of the angels; at the Nativity to the Epiphany, with the exception of the three intervening martyrdoms of St. Stephen, the holy Innocents, and Thomas à Becket. White is indispensable at the Purification of the Virgin, and on Easter Sunday, but more especially at Pentecost, which thence received and has retained, the name of Whit or White Sunday. The Romans used the same colour during their sacrifices to their superior gods. Cicero (De Legibus, ii.)

says: "Color albus præcipue decorus Deo est, tum in cæteris, tum maxime in textili."

Scarlet vestments are used on the festivals of the apostles, evangelists, and martyrs, on account of the blood of their passion which they shed for Christ. "Some use red from the vigil of Pentecost to Trinity Sunday inclusively, on account of the fervour of the Holy Ghost, for there appeared unto them divers tongues of fire."

Black has a rare and solemn license for its use on Good Friday, when every ornament of the sacred edifice is shrouded in black, and the paintings veiled with sable. It is also used on days of abstinence and affliction, and whenever the Roman pontiff walks in procession barefooted. For the Innocents it is a question whether black be most suitable to the mournful occasion, or red, in sympathy with these earliest martyrs; though, as regards themselves, the white, as above, remains the most apposite and symbolical of their innocence. A curious reason is given for the use of black in masses of requiem and from Septuagesima to Easter as commemorative of the expression, Canticles i. 5: "My spouse saith, I am black, but comely."

Green seems the residuary colour which is used when the church has none other of the above three specially appointed, and is not, therefore, mentioned, or at least rarely, in the common Roman Catholic almanacs of the present time; but the reason assigned is curious and scarcely defensible, because green is an intermediate colour between black, white and red, and we are curious to know if our painters acknowledge it as such. A very corrupt passage of Durand gives some relations of other colours to the foregoing, which are hardly cognizable—"Ad hos quatuor colores ceteri referuntur, scilicet ad rubrum colorem coccineus, ad nigrum violaceus qui aliter coccus vocatur: ad album byssineus: ad viridem croceus quanquam nonnulli rosas ad martyros crocum ad confessores et lilium ad vergines referunt." In the Roman Catholic Almanack for 1846 the purple is frequently indicated as the colour for the days marked Feriæ.

THE SAVANS IN SCOTLAND.

THE proceedings of the British Association were brought to a close at Aberdeen last week, after a very interesting series of papers had been read and discussed. The Prince Consort, who has attended several of the sittings, conveyed the Queen's commands to the members of the society to partake of her majesty's hospitality at Balmoral—a requisition which was obeyed by two hundred gentlemen.

During the congress the association has devoted several grants of money to the investigation of scientific subjects. The following is a list of the investigators chosen, the topics they are to treat, and the sums of money they are to receive towards their expenses:—To the Kew Observatory, £500; to Prof. Sullivan, "Solubility of Salts," £30; to Prof. Voelcker, "Constituents of Manures," £25; to Mr. A. Gages, "Chemico-Mechanical Analysis of Rocks," £25; to Dr. A. Smith, "Scientific Evidence in Courts of Law," £10; to R. Mallet, "Earthquake Waves," £25; to Rev. Dr. Anderson, "Excavations in Yellow Sandstone of Dura Dun," £20; to Sir R. I. Murchison, "Fossils in Upper Silurian Rocks, Lesmahago," £15; to R. M'Andrew, "General Dredging," £50; to Dr. Ogilvie, "Dredging North and East Coasts of Scotland," £25; to Prof. Kinahan, "Dredging in Dublin Bay," £15; to Dr. Daubeny, "Growth of Plants," £10; to Prof. Allman, "Report on Hydroid Zoophytes," £10; to Dr. Wilson, "Colour Blindness," £10; to Admiral Moorsom, "Steam Vessels' Performance," £150; and to Prof. J. Thomson, "Discharge of Water," £10; making altogether a total of £930.

The business of the session having come to a conclusion, the assembled philosophers on Thursday posted over to Balmoral, to pay their loyal respects to their sovereign. The invitation was originally limited to the members of the general committee of the association, it was afterwards extended to life members of the association, to gentlemen who had read papers during the late meeting of the body, and to the officers of sections—precaution being, however, taken by the executive of the association that the entire number to whom invitations were issued should not exceed two hundred. It is not believed that this limitation was at the command or even the desire of her majesty or his royal highness the Prince Consort. It is supposed to have been the act of the council of the learned society to which this distinguished honour was paid, who apprehended that at so short a notice sufficient posting accommodation could not be had to convey more than two hundred from Banbury, where the Deeside Railway ends, to Balmoral, a distance of thirty-three miles. This was, however, a mistake. A larger number might have been carried down on similar terms to those charged by the association for the conveyance of the members to whom they had distributed invitations. At all events, parties might have gone by the ordinary public conveyances, or by vehicles hired on their own account; and there can be no doubt that the limitation and the mode of distribution fixed upon by the council gave rise to much discontent amongst the general body of members. The gates of Balmoral were thrown open with royal hospitality on the occasion, and all who entered, even the most humble, were regaled with right royal abundance.

At two o'clock a splendid breakfast was partaken of by the guests, and shortly afterwards her majesty accompanied by her husband and children joined the party; and gave the signal for the commencement of the Highland games which she had ordered for the amusement of her visitors. The scene was a very striking one, the presence of three Highland clans contributing not a little to the picturesque and feudal character of the assemblage—these were the Duff Highlanders under their chief the Earl of Fife, the Farquharsons, commanded by Colonel Farquharson of Invercauld, and the Forbes clan under Sir Charles of that ilk. The athletic games which have been so laudably revived and patronized by the sovereign of late years were never shown to greater advantage, and tossing the caber, putting the stone, throwing the hammer, sword play, dancing, et hoc genus omne were performed with enormous gusto and as much to the satisfaction of the guests as the exhibitors.

At half-past five the Queen left the company, which was the signal for the party to break up after a most delightful day; the weather was somewhat showery but that meteorological phase appeared to be generally accepted as a necessary adjunct to the Highland scenery, and umbrellas were treated with the contempt which they deserved. After sundry refreshings by the way, the wandering men of learning arrived safely at Aberdeen at one o'clock in the morning, and thus ended the congress of the British Association for 1859.

Among the numerous valuable contributions which were read before the association there are two of a particularly interesting character which we have transferred to our own columns. These are Sir Charles Lyell's view of the present state of geological science and Mr. Laurence Oliphant's observations on the island of Japan.

Oxford and Manchester contend for the honour of entertaining the British Association next year. Oxford is the chosen, with the preferential reservation in favour of the Lancashire city for next year. Lord Wrottesley is to be the President. The following will assist him as Vice-Presidents: The Chancellor of the University of Oxford; the Rev. the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford; the Duke of Marlborough; the Earl of Rosse; the Bishop of Oxford; the Dean of Christ Church; C. Daubeny, Esq., M.D.; H. W. Ackland, Esq., M.D.; W. F. Dinkins, Esq. Major General Sabine has withdrawn from the office of Secretary. Prof. Walker has been elected General Secretary. It is proposed to hold the session next year nearly three months earlier—that is, in June instead of September.

SIR CHARLES LYELL ON GEOLOGICAL SCIENCE.

No subject has lately excited more curiosity and general interest among geologists and the public than the question of the antiquity of the human race; whether or no we have sufficient evidence to prove the former co-existence of man with certain extinct mammalia, in caves or in the superficial deposits commonly called drift or "diluvium." For the last quarter of a century, the occasional occurrence, in various parts of Europe, of the bones of man or the works of his hands, in cave-breccias and stalactites associated with the remains of the extinct hyæna, bear, elephant, or rhinoceros, have given rise to a suspicion that the date of man must be carried further back than we had heretofore imagined. On the other hand, extreme reluctance was naturally felt on the part of scientific reasoners to admit the validity of such evidence, seeing that so many caves have been inhabited by a succession of tenants, and have been selected by man, as a place not only of domicile, but of sepulture, while some caves have also served as the channels through which the waters of flooded rivers have flowed, so that the remains of living beings which have peopled the district at more than one era may have subsequently been mingled in such caverns and confounded together in one and the same deposit.

The facts, however, recently brought to light during the systematic investigation, as reported on by Falconer, of the Brixham Cave, must, I think, have prepared you to admit that scepticism in regard to the cave evidence in favour of the antiquity of man had previously been pushed to an extreme. To escape from what I now consider was a legitimate deduction from the facts already accumulated, we were obliged to resort to hypotheses requiring great changes in the relative levels and drainage of valleys; and, in short, the whole physical geography of the respective regions where the caves are situated—changes that would alone imply a remote antiquity for the human fossil remains, and make it probable that man was old enough to have co-existed, at least, with the Siberian mammoth.

But, in the course of the last fifteen years, another class of proofs have been advanced in France in confirmation of man's antiquity, into two of which I have personally examined in the course of the present summer, and to which I shall now briefly advert. First, so long ago as the year 1844, M. Aymard, an eminent paleontologist and antiquary, published an account of the discovery in the volcanic district of Central France, of portions of two human skeletons (the skulls, teeth, and bones), imbedded in a volcanic breccia, found in the mountain of Denise, in the environs of Le Puy en Velay, a breccia anterior in date to one, at least, of the latest eruptions of that volcanic mountain. On the opposite side of the same hill, the remains of a large number of mammalia, most of them of extinct species, have been detected in tuffaceous strata, believed, and I think correctly, to be of the same age. The authenticity of the human fossils was from the first disputed by several geologists, but admitted by the majority of those who visited Le Puy and saw, with their own eyes, the original specimen now in the museum of that town. Among others, M. Pictet, so well known to you by his excellent work on Palæontology, declared after his visit to the spot his adhesion to the opinions previously expressed by Aymard.

My friend, Mr. Scrope, in the second edition of his Volcanoes of Central France, lately published, also adopted the same conclusion, although after accompanying me this year to Le Puy, he has seen reason to modify his views. The result of our joint examination—a result which, I believe, essentially coincides with that arrived at by MM. Hébert and Dartet, names well known to science, who have also this year gone into this inquiry on the spot—may thus be stated. We are by no means prepared to maintain that the specimen in the museum at Le Puy (which unfortunately was never seen in situ by any scientific observer) is a fabrication. On the contrary, we incline to believe that the human fossils in this and some other specimens from the same hill, were really imbedded by natural causes in their present matrix. But the rock in which they are entombed consists of two parts, one of which is a compact, and for the most part thinly laminated stone, into which none of the human bones penetrate; the other containing the bones is a lighter and much more porous stone, without lamination, to which we could find nothing similar in the mountain of Denise, although both M. Hébert and I made several excavations on the alleged site of the fossils. M. Hébert therefore suggested to me that this more porous stone, which resembles in colour and mineral composition, though not in structure, parts of the genuine old breccia of Denise, may be made up of the older rock broken up and afterwards redeposited, or as the French say remané, and, therefore, of much newer date—an hypothesis which well deserves consideration; but I feel that we are, at present, so ignorant of the precise circumstances and position under which these celebrated human fossils were found, that I ought not to waste time in speculating on their probable mode of interment, but simply state that, in my opinion, they afford no demonstration of man having witnessed the last volcanic eruptions of central France. The skulls, according to the judgment of the most competent osteologists who have yet seen them, do not seem to depart in a marked manner from the modern European, or Caucasian, type, and the human bones are in a fresher state than those of the Elephas meridionalis and other quadrupeds found in any breccia of Denise which can be referred to the period even of the latest volcanic eruptions. But, while I have thus failed to obtain satisfactory evidence in favour of the remote origin assigned to the human fossils of Le Puy, I am fully prepared to corroborate the conclusions which have been recently laid before the Royal Society by Mr. Prestwich, in regard to the age of the flint implements associated in undisturbed gravel, in the north of France, with the bones of elephants, at Abbeville and Amiens. These were first noticed at Abbeville, and their true geological position assigned to them by M. Boucher de Perthes, in 1849, in his "Antiquités Celtiques," while those of Amiens were afterwards described in 1855, by the late Dr. Rigollot.

For a clear statement of the facts I may refer you to the abstract of Mr. Prestwich's memoir in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1859, and have only to add that I have myself obtained abundance of flint implements (some of which are laid upon the table) during a short visit to Amiens and Abbeville. Two of the worked flints of Amiens were discovered in the gravel pits of St. Acheul—one at the depth of ten, and the other of seventeen feet below the surface, at the time of my visit; and M. Georges Pouchet, of Rouen, author of a work on the Races of Man, who has since visited the spot, has extracted with his own hands one of these implements, as Messrs. Prestwich and Flower had done before him. The stratified gravel resting immediately on the chalk in which these rudely fashioned instruments are buried, belongs to the post pliocene period, all the freshwater and land shells which accompany them being of existing species.

The great number of the fossil instruments which have been likened to hatchets, spear heads, and wedges, is truly wonderful. More than a thousand of them have already been met with in the last ten years, in the valley of the Somme, in an area fifteen miles in length. I infer that a tribe of savages, to whom the use of iron was unknown, made a long sojourn in this region; and I am reminded of a large Indian mound which I saw in St. Simond's island, in Georgia—a mound ten acres in area, and having an average height of five feet, chiefly composed of cast-away oyster shells, throughout which arrow heads, stone axes, and Indian pottery are dispersed. If the neighbouring river, the Alatomaha, or the sea which is at hand, should invade, sweep away, and stratify the contents of this mound, it might produce a very analogous accumulation of human implements, unmixed perhaps with human bones. Although the accompanying shells are of living species, I believe the antiquity of the Abbeville and Amiens flint instruments to be great indeed if compared to the times of history or tradition. I consider the gravel to be of fluvial origin; but I could detect nothing in the structure of its several parts indicating cataclysmal action, nothing that might not be due to such river-floods as we have witnessed in Scotland during the last half century. It must have required a long period for the wearing down of the chalk which supplied the broken flints for the formation of so much gravel at various heights, sometimes one hundred feet above the present level of the Somme, for the deposition of fine sediment, including entire shells, both terrestrial and aquatic, and also for the denudation which the entire mass of stratified drift has undergone, portions having been swept away, so that what remains of it often terminates abruptly in old river cliffs, besides being covered by a newer unstratified drift. To explain these changes, I should infer considerable oscillations in the level of the land in that part of France—slow movements of upheaval and subsidence, deranging, but not wholly displacing, the course of the ancient rivers. Lastly, the disappearance of the elephant, rhinoceros, and other genera of quadrupeds now foreign to Europe implies, in like manner, a vast lapse of ages separating the era in which the fossil implements were framed and that of the invasion of Gaul by the Romans.

Among the problems of high theoretical interest which the recent progress of geology and natural history has brought into notice, no one is more prominent, and, at the same time, more obscure, than that relating to the origin of species. On this difficult and mysterious subject a work will very shortly appear, by Mr. Charles Darwin, the result of twenty years of observation and experiments in zoology, botany, and geology, by which he has been led to the conclusion that those powers of nature which give rise to races and permanent varieties in animals and plants are the same as those which, in much longer periods, produce species, and, in a still longer series of ages, give rise to differences of generic rank. He appears to me to have succeeded, by his investigations and reasonings, to have thrown a flood of light on many classes of phenomena connected with the affinities, geographical distribution, and geological succession of organic beings, for which no other hypothesis has been able, or has even attempted, to account.

Among the communications sent in to this section, I have received from Dr. Dawson, of Montreal, one confirming the discovery which he and I formerly announced of a land shell, or pupa, in the coal formation of Nova Scotia. When we contemplate the vast series of formations intervening between the tertiary and carboniferous strata, all destitute of air breathing mollusca—at least of the terrestrial class—such a discovery affords an important illustration of the extreme defectiveness of our geological records. It has always appeared to me that the advocates of progressive development have too much overlooked the imperfection of these records, and that, consequently, a large part of the generalizations in which they have indulged in regard to the first appearance of the different classes of animals, especially of air breathers, will have to be modified or abandoned. Nevertheless, that the doctrine of progressive development may contain in it the germs of a true theory, I am far from denying. The consideration of this question will come before you when the age of the white sandstone of Elgin is discussed—a rock hitherto referred to the old red, or Devonian formation, but now ascertained to contain several reptilian forms, of so high an organization as to raise a doubt in the minds of many geologists whether so old a place in the series can correctly be assigned to it.

MR. LAURENCE OLIPHANT ON JAPAN.

The three ports of the empire visited by the Mission, and which fell more immediately under our observation, were Nagasaki, situated in the Island of Kinsin; Sowinda, a port opened by Commodore Perry on the Promontory of Idsa; and Yedo, the capital city of the empire. Of these, Nagasaki is the one with which we have been for the longest period familiar. In former times it was a fishing village, situated in the principality of Omura; it is now an imperial demesne, and the most flourishing port in the empire. It owes its origin to the establishment, at this advantageous point, of a Portuguese settlement in the year 1569, and its prosperity to the enlightened policy pursued by the Christian prince of Omura, in whose territory it was situated, while its transference to the Crown was the result of political intrigues on the part of the Portuguese settlers, in consequence of which the celebrated Tago Sama included it among the lands appertaining to the Crown.

Situated almost at the westernmost extremity of the empire, at the head of a deep landlocked harbour, and in convenient proximity to some of the wealthiest and most productive principalities in the empire, Nagasaki possesses great local advantages, and will doubtless continue an important commercial emporium, even when the trade of the empire at large is more fully developed and has found an outlet through other ports. The town is pleasantly situated on a belt of level ground which intervenes between the water and the swelling hills, forming an amphitheatre of great scenic beauty, their slopes terraced with rice fields; their valleys heavily timbered, and watered by gushing mountain streams; their projecting points crowned with temples or frowning with batteries; everywhere cottages buried in foliage reveal their existence by curling wreaths of blue smoke; in the creeks and inlets picturesque boats lie moored; sacred groves, approached by rock-cut steps, or pleasure gardens tastefully laid out, enchant the eye. The whole aspect of nature is such as cannot fail to produce a most favourable impression upon the mind of the stranger visiting Japan for the first time.

The city itself contains a population of about 50,000, and consists of between eighty and ninety streets, running at right angles to each other—broad enough to admit of the passage of wheeled vehicles, were any to be seen in them—and kept scrupulously clean. A canal intersects the city, spanned by thirty-five bridges, of which fifteen are handsomely constructed of stone. The Dutch factory is placed upon a small fan-shaped island about two hundred yards in length, and connected with the mainland by a bridge. Until recently, the members of the factory were confined exclusively to this limited area, and kept under a strict and rigid surveillance. The old régime is now, however, rapidly passing away; and the history of their imprisonment, of the indignities to which they were exposed and the insults they suffered, has already become a matter of tradition.

The port of Hiogo is situated in the bay of Ohosaka, opposite to the celebrated city of that name, from which it is ten or twelve miles distant. The Japanese government have expended vast sums in their engineering efforts to improve its once dangerous anchorage. A breakwater, which was erected at a prodigious expense, and which cost the lives of numbers of workmen, has proved sufficient for the object for which it was designed. There is a tradition that a superstition existed in connection with this dyke, to the effect that it would never be finished, unless an individual could be found sufficiently patriotic to suffer himself to be buried in it. A Japanese Curtius was not long in forthcoming, to whom a debt of gratitude will be due in all time to come from every British ship that rides securely at her anchor behind the breakwater. Hiogo has now become the port of Ohosaka and Miacco, and will, in all probability, be the principal port of European trade in the empire. The city is described as equal in size to Nagasaki. When Kämpfer visited it, he found three hundred junks at anchor in its bay. The Dutch describe Ohosaka as a more attractive resort even than Yedo.

While this latter city may be regarded as the London of Japan, Ohosaka seems to be its Paris. Here are the most celebrated theatres, the most sumptuous tea-houses, the most extensive pleasure gardens. It is the abode of luxury and wealth, the favourite resort of fashionable Japanese, who come here to spend their time in quiet and pleasure. Ohosaka is one of the five Imperial cities, and contains a vast population. It is situated on the left bank of the Jedogawa, a stream which rises in the Lake of Oity, situated a day and a half's journey in the interior. It is navigable for boats of large tonnage as far as Miacco, and is spanned by numerous handsome bridges. The port of Hiogo and city of Ohosaka will not be opened to Europeans until the 1st of January, 1863. The foreign residents will then be allowed to explore the country in any direction, for a distance of twenty-five miles, except towards Miacco, or, as it is more properly called, Kioto. They will not be allowed to approach nearer than twenty-five miles to this far-famed city.

Situated at the head of a bay, or rather gulf, so extensive that the opposite shores are not visible to each other, Yedo spreads itself on a continuous line of houses along its partially undulating, partially level margin, for a distance of about ten miles. Including suburbs, at its greatest width it is probably about seven miles across, but for a portion of the distance it narrows to a mere strip of houses. Any rough calculation of the population of so vast a city must necessarily be very vague and uncertain; but, after some experience of Chinese cities, two millions does not seem too high an estimate at which to place Yedo. In consequence of the great extent of the area occupied by the residences of the princes, there are quarters of the town in which the inhabitants are very sparse. The citadel, or residence of the temporal emperor, cannot be less than five or six miles in circumference, and yet it only contains about forty thousand souls. On the other hand, there are parts of the city in which the inhabitants seem almost as closely packed as they are in Chinese towns. The streets are broad and admirably drained, some of them are lined with peach and plum trees, and when these are in blossom must present a gay and lively appearance. Those which traverse the princes' quarter are for the most part as quiet and deserted as aristocratic thoroughfares generally are. Those which pass through the commercial and manufacturing quarters are densely crowded with passengers on foot, in chairs, and on horseback, while occasionally, but not often, an ox waggon rumbles and creaks along. The houses are only of two stories, sometimes built of freestone, sometimes sun burnt brick, and sometimes wood; the roofs are either tiles or shingles. The shops are completely open to the street; some of these are very extensive, the showrooms for the more expensive fabrics being upstairs, as with us. The eastern part of the city is built upon a level plain, watered by the Toda Gawa, which flows through this section of the town, and supplies with water the large moats which surround the citadel. It is spanned by the Nipon; has a wooden bridge of enormous length, celebrated as the Hyde Park Corner of Japan, as from it all distances throughout the empire are measured. Towards the western quarter of the city the country becomes more broken, swelling hills rise above the housetops richly clothed with foliage, from out the waving masses of which appear the upturned gables of a temple, or the many roofs of a pagoda.

It will be some satisfaction to foreigners to know that they are not to be excluded for ever from this most interesting city. By the treaty concluded in it by Lord Elgin, on the 1st of January, 1862, British subjects shall be allowed to reside there, and it is not improbable that a great portion of the trade may ultimately be transferred to it from Ranagawa. There is plenty of water and a good anchorage at a distance of about a mile from the western suburb of Linagawa. The only other port which has been opened by the late treaty in the island of Nipon is the port of Nee-e-gata, situated upon its western coast. As this port has never yet been visited by Europeans, it is stipulated that if it be found inconvenient as a harbour, another shall be substituted for it, to be opened on the 1st of January, 1860.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

MASONRY IN SUNDERLAND.

"A QUERIST" inquired through your columns (vol. vi., p. 1121), if the composer of the ode, "Bring me, ye Sacred Choir," used at the dedication of the Phoenix Hall, Sunderland, was William Shield, of musical notoriety? No answer having appeared, may I venture to repeat the question, and also beg the further information as to the authorship of the words?—H. W. MOORE.—[The William Shield was Shield the composer, one of the happiest dramatic musicians that this or any other country has produced. The author of the words was Tipping Brown, M.D., one of the Masonic notabilities of Sunderland. Whilst on this subject it may be interesting to some, if not all, of our readers to know something of the history of Masonry in Sunderland, and we shall therefore make no apology for extracting from George Garbutt's Historical and Descriptive View of the Parishes of Monkwearmouth and Bishopwearmouth, and the Port and Borough of Sunderland, which appeared in the year 1819, and being locally printed and published, is of very rare occurrence. There is, at p. 287, a heading specially devoted to "The Masonic Lodges," which is as follows:—

"The origin of Freemasonry is very ancient, some of its advocates carrying its antiquity to the time of the building of Solomon's temple. Its introduction into England has been fixed at the year 1764, when Benedict Biscopius brought from the continent, to assist in the erection and decoration of the monastery of Monkwearmouth, 'painters, glaziers, freemasons, and singers;*' and it appears that from that period many buildings were erected by men in companies, who are said to have called themselves free, because they were at liberty to work in any part of England."†

The account then goes over the history of the Lodge at York and its foundation, and coming down to the time of the Hanoverian dynasty, we are told that:—

"Freemasonry was established in Sunderland in the year 1755, when a constitution for that purpose was granted by the Marquis of Carnarvon. It is dated Oct. the 7th in that year, and is directed to James Smithson, Provincial, who constituted the Lodge, then No. 207, though now from different intermediate erasements, No. 146."‡ "The first officers we find on record are John Thornhill, Esq., Master; Jacob Trotter, S.W.; John Rowe, J.W.; and the first D.M. who carried on the business of the Craft for many years was George Ogilvie, a man from every account profoundly skilled in all the secrets and mysteries of Freemasonry. The Lodge was held at the house of Adam Turner, Church-street, and was soon composed of the most respectable characters of the town and neighbourhood. The Masters who succeeded were Dr. Isaac Brown; William Gooch, Esq., comptroller of the customs; Robert Inman, Esq.; and many others of equal importance.

"After many fluctuations, and some changes of place, the Lodge fell under the direction of Captain George Thompson, who held the chair seven years, and under whose auspices the number of members was sensibly and respectably augmented. He built an elegant hall for them, the first stone of which he laid with the accustomed ceremonies and honours, the brethren having accompanied him to the site of the building in solemn procession, and it being the anniversary of his majesty's accession, the loyal brethren, in honour of the day, gave to their Lodge for the first time 'a local habitation and a name,' calling it from hence the King George's Lodge. The building being finished in due time, was solemnly dedicated on the 16th of June, 1778. On that occasion the Grand Lodge of England favoured the brethren with the music performed at the dedication of the Freemasons' Hall, which was admirably supported on the present occurrence by the principal vocal and instrumental performers round the country. From the hall the brethren proceeded to the assembly room, where the presence of above one hundred and twenty ladies added elegance and interest to the scene.

* Garbutt quotes Lambarde as his authority for this statement.

† Vide Etymology of "Mason," in Freemasons' Magazine, present series, p. 149.

‡ Since 1819, when this was written, the number has undergone other changes, and it stands at present as No. 111, on the Grand Lodge register.

An animated oration was delivered by William Hutchinson, Esq., author of a History of the County of Durham, &c. A hundred and forty Masons dined together, and the whole was concluded with festivity tempered with moderation.

"At the close of the year 1781, Capt. Thompson resigned the chair, and received a unanimous vote of thanks for the important services he had rendered the Lodge, and Tipping Brown, M.D., was chosen Master in his stead. Dr. Brown held the chair three years, and under his direction the Lodge flourished with increasing splendour and advantage. On the 19th of November, 1783, however, after having held a Master's Lodge, the hall by some accident took fire, some of the furniture, papers, &c., were saved, but much was lost and injured, particularly some valuable paintings, and the hall was entirely destroyed.

"The meetings were then held at one of the principal inns, where a subscription was entered into, ground purchased, and on the 5th of August, 1784, Dr. Brown laid the first stone of the Phoenix Lodge, attended by a numerous and splendid assemblage of Freemasons, who, clothed in the different jewels of their offices and orders, had accompanied him for that purpose. The architect was the late Mr. John Bonner, who, in the space of twelve months, completed one of the most beautiful edifices in England for Masonic purposes. On Tuesday, April 6th, 1785, the ceremony of the dedication took place, and was one of the most brilliant meetings Freemasonry had ever witnessed in this part of the kingdom. The following ode, written for the occasion by Dr. Brown, and set to music by Wm. Shield, Esq., was performed with the whole musical strength of Durham Cathedral and the surrounding neighbourhood. [Then follows the ode our correspondent inquires about, printed at full length]. On this occasion an oratorio was given in the church, and a masterly and suitable oration was delivered by the Rev. Thomas Hall, Chaplain to the Lodge; after which a sumptuous dinner was provided for one hundred and seventy-six of the brethren who attended, and the day was finished with conviviality and temperance.

"From that time down to the present day this Lodge has continued to meet in this elegant hall, the interior of which has lately been decorated and embellished in a tasteful and scientific style. The business of the Craft, carried on under the superintendence of several respectable gentlemen as Masters,* has been conducted with attention and diligence. Phoenix Lodge, No 148, meets every first and third Wednesday: present officers—Thomas Wilson, W.M.; William Nicholson, S.W.; John Lindsay, J.W.; David Hopper, P.M.; Thomas Thompson, Tyler; William Stephenson, Sec.; James Turnbull, S.D.; Thomas Noton, J.D.; Peter Augustus Galot, Org."

THE SEA CAPTAINS' LODGE.

"Soon after the formation of the first Lodge, in the year 1755, the number of brethren having rapidly increased, several gentlemen agreed to establish themselves under a separate constitution, and this, on their petition, was granted by the Marquis of Carnarvon, his warrant bearing date January 14th, 1757. They were established by the style and title of the 'Sea Captains' Lodge,' by John Thornhill, Master of the old Lodge, and his assistant officers. Their first Master was William Scolly, and the Wardens were Joseph Greenwell and Micah Wardell.

"From its commencement this Lodge has held an even course of industry and reputation—not much disturbed by accident nor made prominent by external variety. The early meetings seem to have been well attended, numbers were initiated, and the Masonic business (chiefly conducted by Mr. William Allison) appears to have been carried on with dignity and intelligence.

"In the contemplation of all institutions which are to be carried into effect by the energy of human powers, we, in general, find the establishment owing much of its success to the influence of circumstances which have arisen without preparation, or to the efforts of individuals, who have—perhaps by accident—taken a lead in the direction of the society. To the exertions of one who held the chair for many years is the Sea Captains' Lodge beholden for a long series of prosperity and good government. The person alluded to is the late John Biss, Esq., who fortunately was chosen Master in the year 1765, and continued in that office until the year 1784. During his administration Masonry was cultivated with ardour and diligence, order was enforced, conviviality was enjoyed, and the finances of the Lodge advanced to such a pitch of affluence as to supply, in the most ample manner, the conveniences or decorations of the institution, or be ready to answer the more interesting calls of general charity.

"From the period of his resignation the Lodges were not so well attended; and although a few faithful brethren preserved 'the sacred fire,' yet it must be acknowledged that Masonry, for a time, felt a very sensible depression. It was, however, destined that, as the energy of one man had brought the society into a state of reputation and prosperity, and as his loss had occasioned languor, and almost dissolution, so the exertions of another valuable individual should raise the drooping spirits, restore the accustomed vigour, and infuse life and spirit into all future proceedings.

"In the year 1791 the late Michael Scarth, Esq., became a member of the Lodge. To a mind well informed and a sound judgment he joined a facility of application and steady perseverance that would not easily abandon a design while any advantage could be procured to it, or, indeed, whilst the minutest part of it appeared unaccomplished. As soon as he was elected to an office, he resolved to use his influence and exertions to raise the Lodge to its former level. He commenced by improving the rules and by-laws of the society; for which purpose he visited the different Lodges in the neighbourhood, consulted their various regulations, and from them compiled and composed a code adapted to secure every fraternal and scientific purpose of the institution. His other exertions were equally judicious and beneficial; the Lodge flourished, and Masonry was promoted and respected.

* Tipping Brown, M.D., 1785-86; Mr. William Fergusson, 1787-89; Tipping Brown, M.D., 1790-96; Mr. Thomas Wilson, 1797, 1802; Mr. William Eden, 1803-9; Mr. Thomas Wilson, 1810-13; Mr. Thomas Robson, 1814; Mr. Thomas Bonner, 1815-16; Mr. Thomas Wilson, 1817-18.

"On the 27th of December, 1791, Rowland Burdon, Esq., at that period member of parliament for the County of Durham, was elected Master; the respectability of his name, and above all, the virtuous lustre of his character, gave new vigour and dignity to his proceedings.

"In 1792 the brethren showed a sense of the benefit they had received by appointing Mr. Scarth to be their Master. During his government Mr. Burdon laid the first stone of Wearmouth bridge. Mr. Scarth was honoured by the Provincial Grand Master with a blue apron; and in course of that year, he planned and brought into execution a charitable scheme of giving education to twelve poor children. The Lodge formed, and set apart, a fund for the purpose of supporting this institution which is at present under the superintendence of Mr. William Robinson, who has a very numerous and respectable school, and who was himself one of the first boys educated out of their fund; a striking proof of the utility of such establishments.

"The scientific and occult operations of the Craft are applied with skill, diligence, and respectful decorum, in this Lodge; in strict conformity to the mode promulgated by the United Grand Lodge in London. There is likewise a Royal Arch Chapter attached to it, the business of which is conducted with the utmost propriety. The Sea Captains' Lodge, No. 133, now known as the Palatine Lodge, No. 114, meeting at the Bridge Inn, Bishopwearmouth, meets every second and fourth Thursday in each month, at Mr. Forrest's, Queen's Head, Queen Street, in a very neat and compact room, built on purpose; except three months in the summer, when the members only meet once in each month. Present officers:—Thomas Hardy, W.M.; Pattinson Dixon, S.W.; Alexander Milne, J.W.; Christopher Hutchinson, Treas.; Rev. Birkat Dawson, Chap.; Richard Wright, P.M.; John Lipton Hutton, Sec.; John Gibson, S.D.; John Armstrong, J.D.; Gowland Sumner, I.G.; — Addison, Tyler.

"In addition to the Phoenix and Sea Captains' Lodges, two others have subsequently been established, viz.:—the St. John's Lodge, No. 118, now No. 91, which meets at the Lord Wellington, in the Low Street; present Master, Thomas Hobkirk, and the St. Paul's Lodge, No. 197,* which meets at the Fighting Cock Inn, Monkwearmouth. Present Master, William Tyzack."

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE MASONIC CHARITIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Frequent absences and pressure of business have prevented my replying at an earlier date to the letter of Bro. Thorne of Margate, which appeared in your number of 16th July last.

The worthy brother complains that the "appeal," as he terms it, of the Rev. Bro. Lyall and myself in reference to the Masonic schools, was "too indiscriminately made," and he intimates that it ought not to have included the province of Kent. Bro. Thorne could hardly have had before him our first communication and subsequent report when he wrote his letter. What was the nature of the letter we addressed in the first instance to the provincial brethren? It was simply an inquiry to this effect—What, in your opinion, is the best machinery that could be adopted in the provinces, with a view to make the Masonic schools better known, and probably result in increasing their funds?

It seems to me that had Bro. Lyall and myself transmitted this letter of inquiry to the provinces generally, omitting the province of Kent, we should have acted towards this province with a discourtesy of which we trust we are incapable.

After carefully collating the replies that were received, we drew up and presented our report. That report was taken into consideration at a court of each school, specially summoned for the purpose, and at each court the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

"That the report be approved; and this court, being much impressed with the importance of uniform action on the part of the supporters of the institution throughout the country,

* This Lodge we believe to be extinct; it is not to be found in our present Calendar.

earnestly recommends the brethren of the provinces to adopt the suggestions offered on page 9 of the printed report."

The suggestions alluded to were these:—

1. "That each province be requested to form a committee, to be called 'The Provincial Committee of the Province of * * *', for promoting the interests of the Masonic Schools' (or, if the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution should wish to be included, 'of the four Masonic Charities').
2. "That such committee do consist of a member of each Lodge in the province, to be annually elected or re-elected by the Lodge on the night of installation of W.M.
3. "That each Lodge be requested to transmit to the Secretary of each school (or charity) the name, title, and address of the brother so appointed.
4. "That the Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Master, and Deputy Provincial Grand Master, be requested to take the offices of President and Vice-President of such committee.
5. "That the said provincial committee be requested to hold a general meeting at least once a year, and to present to the Provincial Grand Lodge a report showing the results of the labours of its members individually and collectively."

I venture to submit to the worthy Kentish brother who has complained of the proceedings of Bro. Lyall and myself, that there is nothing, either in our preliminary inquiries, or in the above suggestions, that would have warranted our specially excluding the province of Kent; and as there is strong reason to hope that the recommendation of the special courts to adopt this organisation will, in a truly fraternal spirit, be very generally acceded to, I entertain an earnest hope, strengthened by the fact that the resolution above referred to was seconded by the very worthy Grand Master for the province, Bro. Purton Cooper, that the province of Kent will not form an exception.

I may add that, in accordance with a recommendation in our report, the annual statements of donations and subscriptions distributed at the anniversary festivals, and forwarded to the subscribers, will, in future, be arranged so as to show the district and provinces whence these contributions have been respectively received. Thus neither the province of Kent, nor any other province, will have ground for complaining that it does not receive its fair meed of credit for the support which its Lodges and brethren render to the schools.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
Yours truly and fraternally,
JOHN SYMONDS.

3, Ingham-court, Fenchurch-street, E.C.,
24th Sept., 1859.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—The report of the committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, dated 6th February, 1858, drew attention to the fact, that "many cases come before the committee recommended by long lists of Provincial Grand Officers and other influential brethren, none of whom, or their Lodges, subscribe to the institution."

Subsequently, the statistics given in a report from Bros. Symonds and Lall showed how few in comparison of the provincial brethren, even of Provincial Grand Masters, Deputy Provincial Grand Masters, and others resplendent in provincial purple, subscribe to either of the schools; and that whilst the benefits of these establishments are extended to a larger number of country than of London children, the chief portion of the funds is derived from the liberality of the London brethren, the number of subscribers amongst the latter (as stated in the pamphlet now before me) apparently being "about six times greater than in all the provinces combined."

This remarkable disproportion has, I trust, been reduced by the impression which that report and those statistics must have produced in several of the provinces, but there can be no doubt it is still much greater than it ought to be, looking at the Masonic rank, social position, and notorious wealth of many of the provincial brethren who still abstain from subscribing to the schools.

I have been led into these remarks by an examination of the balloting paper for the October elections, wherein I find that the proportion of candidates is as follows:—

	London.	Country.	Total.
For the Girl School	3	6	9
„ Boy School	9	10	19
So, for both schools...	12	16	28

The candidates from the provinces, and the children now in the schools from the same provinces, appear to be as follows:—

	Candidates for Girls School.	Boys School.	Children now in Girls School.	Boys School.
Cumberland	1	0	0	1
Devon	0	2	1	2
Durham	0	1	0	0
Essex	1	0	7	4
Kent	0	1	4	5
Lincolnshire	0	1	1	0
Monmouthshire	1	1	0	0
Northamptonshire & Huntingdonshire	1	1	0	1
Northumberland	0	1	0	0
Surrey	1	1	0	0
Sussex	0	1	0	1
West Yorkshire	1	0	4	1

These figures will have undergone some modification from elections since the date of the lists from which this statement is taken, but I have reason to think the proportions are not materially altered. Facts will, I believe, fully justify the assertion that none of these provinces, with the exception of Surrey and West Yorkshire, yet contribute to either of the schools as liberally as they ought.

The case of Devon is, to say the least of it, peculiar. Although the province has one child in the Girls and two in the Boys School (one of the latter elected only last April, and recommended by a goodly array of Past Prov. Grand Officers, not one of whom were subscribers), the Provincial Grand Lodge has deliberately rejected a motion to subscribe, and decided to expend its charity funds wholly within the province. Long may Devon enjoy the unenviable distinction of being the only province that profits, and seeks to profit, from the liberality of the Craft throughout the country, whilst keeping its own liberality entirely to itself.

Essex, it will be seen, has been remarkably prolific in candidates. The town of Colchester especially, which furnishes the one present candidate from this province, has four girls and four boys in the schools. Verily the Colchester brethren ought to be most liberal supporters of these two charities.

The province of Kent proudly boasts of having subscribed this year (out of the payment of 2s. per annum which each member makes to its own charity fund instead of to the General Fund of Benevolence) £30 to the charities of the Order. The subscriptions announced at the three festivals were, in round numbers, £6,000. Supposing that each child in the schools costs on the average £20 (and the cost certainly cannot be taken at less), the province benefits at this moment from the schools to the extent of not less than £180 per annum.

The province of Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire sends a candidate for each school. The same names are on the card recommending each case, and include twelve brethren of great distinction in the province, of whom one only (the Prov. G.M.) is a subscriber to the Boys School, and not one supports the Girls School.

All these are startling facts, which I commend to the serious consideration of my brethren.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours faithfully and fraternally,
Sept. 26th, 1859. FRATER.

THE BLAZON OF EPISCOPACY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—While I humbly kiss the rod, and thank any friendly critic in your columns for the detection of the errors of which I have been guilty, in respect of Bishop Stapledon's "bends," and the date of Bishop Parry's succession to the see of Rochester, may I be allowed to review my reviewer in one point, viz., the date of the decease of John Williams, Archbishop of York, which he assumes I am wrong in attributing to A.D. 1650, instead of 1660, when Archbishop Frewen was appointed. I claim as my authority the new edition of Le Neve's Fasti, by Mr. Hardy; upon reference to which, the date of Archbishop Williams' death is given as the 25th March, 1650, and is followed by the observation, "After his death, the see remained vacant ten years."

I am, Sir and Brother, yours most fraternally,
THE AUTHOR OF THE BLAZON OF EPISCOPACY.
Rectory, Sutton Coldfield, Sept. 21st, 1859.

[The reviewer's knowledge of the life of the archbishop, by Hacket, at once satisfies him of the justice of our reverend brother's correction. The error was caused by being entirely absent from all works of reference at the time the notice was written.]

THE MASONIC HALL, LEICESTER.

A.—LIBRARY, 17 by 25.

C.—ANTE ROOM.

B.—LODGE ROOM, 60 by 25.

D.—PRINCIPAL STAIRCASE.

GROUND PLAN.

THE MASONIC HALL, LEICESTER.

THE building, which is to be devoted solely to Masonic purposes, consists of two floors, the upper and principal one affording a Lodge room, sixty feet by twenty-five feet, and twenty feet high, for ceremonies and Masonic balls, for which latter purpose an orchestral gallery is formed; also a dining room, twenty-four feet by seventeen feet; and other rooms necessary for the purposes of the Craft. The communication from the ground floor is by a spacious staircase, six feet wide, leading to an open landing, which forms the approach to the principal rooms. On the ground floor are the entrance, ante room, kitchen, and residence for the Tyler. The front, as will be seen by our engraving, is of Italian character, and of red dressed brick, with Bath stone dressing and cornice. The polished alabaster shafts in the upper window jambs were kindly given by Bro. Broadbent, from his works near Leicester.

It is intended at a future period to convert the large area on the ground floor, under the hall, into a baqueting room, connecting it with the south east end of the Hall by an ante room and staircase, to be erected on the vacant ground at the side of the building.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Proverbs of All Nations, Compared, Explained, and Illustrated.

By WALTER B. KELLY. W. Kent and Co.

MR. KELLY tells us that British proverbs, for the most part, form the basis of this collection. They are arranged according to their import and affinity, and under each of them are grouped translations of their principal equivalents in other languages, the originals being generally appended in foot notes. By this means are formed natural families of proverbs, the several members of which acquire increased significance from the light they reflect on each other. At the same time a source of lively interest is opened for the reader, who is thus enabled to observe the manifold diversities of form which the same thought assumes, as expressed in different times, and by many distinct races of men; to trace the unity in variety, which pervades the oldest and most universal monuments of opinion and sentiment among mankind, and to verify for himself the truth of Lord Bacon's well known remark "that the genius, wit, and spirit of a nation, are discovered in its proverbs."

Mr. Kelly gives the following example of—

"CUSTOM. HABIT. USE.

"Use will make a man live in a lion's den.

"Custom is second nature.

"Cicero says nearly the same thing, and the thought has been happily amplified by Sydney Smith. 'There is no degree of disguise or distortion which human nature may not be made to assume from habit; it grows in every direction in which it is trained, and accommodates itself to every circumstance which caprice or design places in its way. It is a plant with such various aptitudes, and such opposite propensities, that it flourishes in a hothouse or in the open air; is terrestrial or aquatic, parasitical or independent; looks well in exposed situations, thrives in protected ones; can bear its own luxuriance, admits of amputation; succeeds in perfect liberty, and can be bent down into any forms of art; it is so flexible and ductile, so accommodating and vivacious, that of two methods of managing it—completely opposite—neither the one nor the other need be considered as mistaken and bad. Not that habit can give any new principle; but of those numerous principles which do exist in our nature it entirely determines the order and force.'

And he tells us the well known story about Tenterden steeple being the cause of the Goodwin Sands, but with this difference, that we really find that which seemed an utter absurdity to be a fact. He says:—

"After all, this is not so palpable a non sequitur as it appears, for, says Fuller, 'one story is good till another is told; and, though this be all whereupon this proverb is generally grounded, I met since with a supplement thereto: it is this. Time out of mind, money was constantly collected out of this county to fence the east banks thereof against the irruption of the sea, and such sums were deposited in the hands of the Bishop of Rochester; but because the sea had been quiet for many years without any encroaching, the bishop commuted this money to the building of a steeple and endowing a church at Tenterden. By this diversion of the collection for the maintenance of the banks, the sea afterwards broke in upon Goodwin Sands. And now the old man had told a rational tale had he found but the due favour to finish it; and thus, sometimes, that is causelessly accounted ignorance of the speaker which is nothing but impatience in the auditors, unwilling to attend to the end of the discourse.'

Our space being limited, we cannot go so far into the merits of this useful, painstaking, and amusing work, as we should desire, but we cordially recommend our readers to possess themselves of a copy, assuring them that an acquaintance with Mr. Kelly's Proverbs of All Nations will have its influence in adding a share to make them better and wiser men.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE sale of the Northwick collection of pictures was attended with so much uncertainty and doubt as to the final destination of the gems of the collection, on account of the number of purchasers on commission who were present, that the following ascertained facts as to some of these art treasures may not be unacceptable to some of our readers. Among the principal purchasers were the Duc d'Aumale, who secured several very choice examples, and among the rest the fine Perugino, 'The Virgin and Child,' for 850 guineas—the Dukes of Cleveland, Wellington, Newcastle, Hamilton, and Buccleuch, who each, through their agents, bought a number of valuable works—the Marquis of Hertford, Baron de Rothschild, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Glenborough, Lord de Lisle, Lord Lindsay, Lord de Saumarez, Sir T. Phillips, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Drax, Mr. Scott, Mr. J. E. Denison, Mr.

Baring, Mr. B. Owen, Mr. Holford, Mr. H. Butler, Mr. Hargreaves, Mr. Hardy, and other noble and distinguished collectors. The most extensive purchaser among the gentlemen alluded to above was Mr. Earl Drax, M.P., who is said to have bought upwards of one hundred pictures, several of them choice examples of the masters whose names they bear. They included, among a host of others, Claude's "Apollo and the Cumæan Sybil," 210 guineas; Sacchi's "Ascension of the Virgin," 200 guineas; Pinturicchio's "Nativity," 240 guineas; and A. del Sarto's "Charity," the figures life size, 210 guineas. Mr. J. Scott was the purchaser of Lingelbach's "Departure for the Chase," 105 guineas; B. Luini's "The Virgin gazing on the Infant Saviour," 200 guineas; "Girl with the Horn Book," by Schidone, 405 guineas; and the "St. John" of Carlo Dolci, for which he gave 2010 guineas, the highest price of any picture in the sale. The nobleman who bought most freely was the Marquis of Hertford, and among his purchases are included Gonzalez Coque's "Group of Family Portraits," 300 guineas; J. B. Weenix's "View in the Garden of a Chateau," 350 guineas; Conegliano's "St. Catherine," 800 guineas; Giorgione's "Cupid Wounded by his own Arrow," 1250 guineas; Velasquez's "Boar Hunt," 310 guineas; and a number of others. The Marquis of Lansdowne has acquired, for 700 guineas, Giorgione's "Musical Party," one of the most charming pictures in the collection, and a few others. Lord Northwick was also a large purchaser, and has secured upwards of sixty of the choicest paintings, comprising Maclise's "Robin Hood and his Foresters," for 1305 guineas; "The Stoning of St. Stephen," by Garofalo, 1530 guineas; Frost's "Diana and her Nymphs surprised by Actæon," 675 guineas; Danby's "Wood Nymph chanting her Hymn to the Rising Sun," 360 guineas; Redgrave's "Flight into Egypt," 350 guineas; Van Schendel's admired "Market Scene—Selling Poultry by Candlelight," 255 guineas; Rubens's large gallery picture of "The Lion Hunt," 300 guineas; G. Dow's "Portrait of Dr. Harvey," 120 guineas; Velasquez's "Lot and his Daughters," 140 guineas; and a number of others, including examples of Titian, Guido, Giorgione, Mabuse, Giotto, Vandyck, Fiesoli, Albano, and other famous masters, ancient and modern. Five pictures only were purchased for the National Gallery, namely, G. de Trevisio's "Virgin seated on a Throne, holding the Infant Saviour," 450 guineas; Giulio Romano's "Birth of Jupiter," 875 guineas; Moretto of Brescia's "Glorification of the Virgin," 550 guineas; G. Terburg's "Portrait of a Gentleman in Black," 65 guineas; and Masaccio's "Portrait of Himself," 103 guineas.

Messrs. Blackwood and Sons announce the publication of a library edition of the novels of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, to consist of forty-three volumes at 5s. each. The first work to be issued is the Caxtons, which will be commenced in October. The volumes will be brought out once a month, and be printed in large readable type. Judging by the great popularity which Sir E. B. Lytton's late works have attained, a large sale may be predicted for this series.

The following circular has been addressed by Dr. Vaughan to the parents of boys now at Harrow:—"Dear Sir,—The end of this term will bring with it the completion of the fifteenth year of my head mastership. I have resolved, after much deliberation, to take that opportunity of relieving myself from the long pressure of those heavy duties and anxious responsibilities which are inseparable from such an office, even under the most favourable circumstances. With how much reluctance I form and announce such a resolution, it is needless for me to say. I have no doubt that the governors of the school will elect as my successor in this important charge some one in whose administration, aided by the exertions of my present able coadjutors, you will have reason to feel entire confidence. I earnestly hope that you will find yourself able to allow the education of your son to be completed where it has been begun. I shall ever retain a grateful remembrance of the confidence which you have reposed in me, and a lively interest in the continued welfare and prosperity of this beloved and honoured school. I remain, dear sir, your faithful servant, CHAS. J. VAUGHAN."

Mr. John Weale has compiled in a comprehensive and distinct form for reference, a list, with statistical memoranda, of the various valuable architectural and engineering works, and works on military or naval sciences, that he has published during the period of thirty-seven years he has been in business: the full title of each publication is given, the date and total cost of the undertaking, and whether at the cost of publisher or author—a very model memorial of a London publisher's enterprise and industry. It is a valuable list in itself; and if, as the compiler suggests, it could be followed by other publishers doing the same, we should have an admirable summary of what has been done in this country in respect of art.

The Berlin Volkszeitung denies the statement made by many German and English newspapers, of the library of Alexander von Humboldt having been sold to Lord Bloomfield, on account of the trustees of the British Museum. The paper adds, that several gentlemen are still busy making a catalogue of the library, which will not be finished before the end of December, the books turning out to be much more numerous than was at first believed.

The French provincial papers announce that the yacht built at Syra for Alexandre Dumas has arrived at Cette. She is a galliot of 73 tons, with raking masts. The crew is composed of six Greek sailors, under the command of Captain Podinatas. The yacht is called the Monte Christo. Literary circles in Paris have been not a little amused, and some scandalized, by the exposure of a ruse resorted to by M. Alexandre Dumas in the late action brought against him by M. Merlieux. The reader is doubtless aware that when M. Dumas returned from Russia he published an amusing account of travels in the Caucasus, and that when this made its appearance M. Merlieux complained that he had made large draughts upon a book which he had published on the same subject. This soon became a subject of litigation, and M. Dumas gained a victory by convincing judge and jury that he was in no way indebted to M. Merlieux, but to a certain Captain Warner, "who," said he, "was my intimate friend; we lived, and hunted, and shot together for months in Circassia. He is a fine noble fellow, and has been aide-de-camp to Schamyl for thirty years. No man was more capable than he to give authentic accounts of Schamyl, for he never left his side during his many hairbreadth 'scapes and battles with the Muscovite." Upon this plea Dumas triumphed over Merlieux, who was condemned to pay the costs of his action. "People then began to ask (says the amusing correspondent of the Morning Advertiser) Which Captain Warner? Could he be our old friend of long-range celebrity, served up to us as a rechauffé by Lord Talbot, his former inveterate patron? At last we discovered the captain in the person of a cataloguing clerk at the Public Library here, name D'Epingles, an humble scribe, who has never left his garret in Paris for any voyage farther than St. Cloud or Asnières. He thought the moment opportune—the public ripe for a book about Schamyl; so he wrote one, and being in want of a name, he borrowed that of our late projectile friend. This discovery has got wind in literary quarters in Paris, and has subjected Dumas to much ridicule; but let those laugh that win—he won his action by pleading his intimacy with this mythical personage, and he can have the double satisfaction of laughing in his sleeve at the judges whom he has duped, and at the public whom he has gulled."

The many English friends of Director Haidinger, of Vienna, will be pleased to learn that his imperial majesty has lately been pleased to confer on this distinguished mineralogist and geologist, the title of Court Counsellor (Hof-rath; a very high distinction in the Austrian official sphere), "on account of his able direction of the Imperial Geological Institute," as expressly announced in the imperial rescript. All votaries of science must rejoice at so well deserved a favour having been thus bestowed by the sovereign, and will regard it as a symptom of real interest for science gaining ground in the governmental circle of the Austrian empire.

Messrs. Hogg and Sons publish a reprint of Mr. Frank B. Goodrich's "Man upon the Sea," under the title of "The Sea and its Famous Sailors," following up their series of "Books for the Young;" also announces "Pictures of Heroes and Lessons from their Lives"—both with illustrations.

The prospectus of the forthcoming meeting of the Association for the Promotion of Social Science, to be held at Bradford, on the 10th of October, and five following days, has been issued. The President for the year is Lord Shaftesbury; and the Vice Presidents are the Mayor of Bradford, Sir John Ramsden, Bart., M.P., the Bishop of Ripon, and F. Crossley, Esq., M.P.; the Presidents of Departments—Vice Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, "Jurisprudence and Amendment of the Law;" the Right Hon. C. B. Adderley, M.P., "Education;" Monckton Milnes, Esq., M.P., "Punishment and Reformation;" the Right Hon. W. Cowper, M.P., "Public Health;" and Sir J. Kay Shuttleworth, Bart., "Social Economy."

The botanical world have to deplore the loss of Professor Henfrey, of King's College, London, and member of several learned societies, who expired at Turnham Green on the 7th inst. Mr. Henfrey is extensively known for the excellent articles in the "Micrographic Dictionary," which he contributed in collaboration with Dr. Griffith, besides many interesting works on vegetable physiology.

Messrs. Constable and Co. announce a new and cheaper edition of Sir D.

Brewster's "Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton;" second series of "Horæ Subsecivæ;" and a "Monograph of Dura Den and its remarkable Fossil Fishes," by John Anderson, D.D.; also, by the same author, "The Course of Revelation."

The local journals speak highly of the exhibition of paintings now opened by the Worcester Society of Arts. More than four hundred works have been contributed by about a hundred and fifty artists, and among those most highly spoken of are (208) "Clapton, in the Vale of Portbury, with Portishead in the distance," by H. H. Lines; (165) "Market day in a Country Town: arrival of an Equestrian Troupe proclaimed by the Beadle," by G. B. O'Neill; (174) "Scene on the Coast of Devon," by H. Moore; (77) "Ben Ledi," a fine landscape, by B. Leader; and some good fruit pieces by W. Duffield. It is impossible to overrate the influence of these provincial exhibitions when as well managed as this appears to be, or to exaggerate the importance of their action in bringing together the artist and a public that is to be taught into buying.

Mr. Weale's well known rudimentary, educational, and classic series, will in future be published by Messrs. Lockwood and Co., of Stationers' Hall Court.

The Publishers' Circular says:—Mr. Thackeray's new monthly magazine will, it is decided, be published at the bold price of 1s., and a vigorous effort will be made to attain a success shadowed out to it by the great magazine of Messrs. Harpers, of New York, which, by a rare combination of good contributions from pen and pencil for 1s., circulates some 170,000 monthly.

The Bengal Hurkaru property was brought to the hammer the other day. A Jew bought the buildings for 161,500 rupees, but no likin could be found for the paper, burdened as it is with an annuity of 500 rupees a month to Mr. S. Smith.

We have good authority for contradicting a paragraph which appeared in the columns of a contemporary, to the effect that the Duke of Devonshire had authorized four eminent Fellows of the Society of Antiquaries to make a formal examination of the Perkins-Collier folio. We are told that there is not the slightest foundation for such a statement. His grace on leaving town simply handed over the folio to the care of his solicitor, with directions that it should be shown to Mr. Collier or any of his friends who were anxious to inspect it for the purpose of examining the margins with reference to the statements of Messrs. Hamilton and Maskelyne. Although not actually asserting it, our contemporary would, nevertheless, lead the literary public to suppose that a committee of examiners had been formally sanctioned by his grace; no such sanction has been given; nor we believe, has the Society of Antiquaries, a body, delegated to any of its members the task of examining into the authenticity or otherwise of the corrections.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

WARRANTS have been granted by the M.W. Grand Master for the following new Lodges:—No. 1,096, Warden Lodge, Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire; No. 1,097, St. John's Lodge, Maidenhead; No. 1,098, North Australia Lodge, North Brisbane, New South Wales; No. 1,099, Hanley Lodge, Dartmouth.

We greatly regret to hear that the contemplated banquet to Bro. Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Prov. G.M. of Norfolk, by the brethren of that province, has been postponed in consequence of the illness of the right worshipful brother, whose indisposition, however, though sufficiently serious to prevent his appearing in a hot and crowded room, does not, we are happy to say, involve any grave apprehensions.

A PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE for West Yorkshire is to be held at Huddersfield on the 5th inst., when the foundation stone of a new Mechanics' Institution is to be laid by the Right Hon. and R.W. Bro. the Earl of Ripon, Past S.G.W.

The M.W. Grand Master has appointed to hold a Provincial Grand Lodge of the Province of Yorkshire, North and East, at Richmond, on the 6th instant.

THE Prov. Grand Lodge of Warwickshire is summoned for the 11th instant, at Sutton Coldfield, on which occasion the Warden Lodge, No. 1,096, is to be consecrated, the R.W. Bro. Col. Vernon, Prov. G.M. for Staffordshire, having consented to perform the ceremony. Among the notices of motion is one, to present £21 and an annual subscription of £5 5s. to the Warwickshire Reformatory Institution for Boys and the Allesby Reformatory for Girls; and another, for presenting £52 for each of the Masonic schools, and to take such steps as shall secure a vice presidency to the Prov. Grand Master for ever. Divine service is to be performed at the parish church, and a collection made in behalf of the Masonic Benevolent Annuity Fund.

The consecration of the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge is appointed to take place at the Town Hall, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, on Thursday next, the 6th inst. The Right Hon. Earl Howe, G.C.B., the Prov. Grand Master, and his Prov. Grand Officers, will attend.

The Robert Burns Chapter of Instruction will resume its meetings at Comp. Sheen's, Sussex Stores, Long Acre, on Wednesday next, the 5th inst., under the immediate direction of Comp. Sheen, and will continue to meet every Wednesday until June.

The Strong Man Lodge of Instruction meets at Bro. Morbey's, Sun Tavern, Long Acre, for the first time this season, on Tuesday next, October 4th.

PROVINCIAL.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Lodge of Peace and Harmony (No. 462).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting at the Freemasons' Hall, in Bugle-street, on Wednesday, Sept. 31st, Bro. A. Fletcher, W.M., presided, supported by Bros. Webb, P.M.; J. R. Stebbing, P.M.; W. Miles, P.M.; W. Bemister, P.M.; H. Clarke, S.W.; W. Smith, J.W.; Geo. W. Clarke, Sec., &c., &c. After the confirmation of the minutes, the ballot was taken for a candidate for initiation, who was declared duly elected. Bro. J. Collis, of No. 152, and Bro. Angus, of Lodge No. 337 (Ireland), were balloted for as joining members, and elected. The candidate having been duly prepared, was afterwards initiated, and Bro. Stebbing, P.M., delivered the charge. The quarterly communication was laid on the table for the inspection of the brethren. A letter from Bro. Farnfield, notifying the proposed festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution, was read, and the Secretary was requested to superintend the collection of subscriptions and donations prior to the meeting. Bro. G. W. Clarke called the attention of the brethren to the great desire that existed for some more convenient mode for provincial brethren to exercise their right of voting in Grand Lodge, particularly in the election of those Boards which controlled Masonic affairs in connection with Grand Lodge. He considered it needless to remind brethren how seldom it happened that any officer of that Lodge was enabled to attend Grand Lodge, and their case was that of the great majority of country Lodges. Hence the necessity arose for some new method in exercising their judgment and power in those matters, with which the best interests of the Craft were most nearly identified. He had cautiously considered the subject, and having done so, he had come to the conclusion that if voting papers were allowed to be used by those brethren who, possessing the right to vote, could not attend Grand Lodge, the great grievance and difficulty could be got over. Deprecating everything of a party spirit in this as in any other effort in Masonry, he pressed on the careful attention of his brethren the following resolution which he would propose—"That an earnest application be made to the Board of General Purposes, to take into consideration and recommend to Grand Lodge, such an amendment of the laws in relation to the election of the various Boards appointed by Grand Lodge, as will enable the Masters, Past Masters, and Wardens of all Lodges (being entitled to attend Grand Lodge), to vote, by proxy or by voting papers." Bro. Miles, P.M., the father of the Lodge, seconded the resolution, which, after a discussion in which Bros. H. Clarke, Webb, Passenger and Stebbing took part, was carried unanimously. Bro. H. Watts (of Freemantle) was passed to the second degree. Bro. J. R. Weston, of Lodge No. 152, was proposed as a joining member. A candidate for initiation was also proposed, and the Lodge was closed in harmony at twenty-five minutes past nine, P.M. The W.M. presided at the banquet, and with his usual felicity sustained peace and harmony among the brethren.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Twelve Brothers' Lodge.—A meeting of the brethren was held at the Royal Hotel, on Thursday, the 22nd September, Bro. George Lungley presided as W.M. during the early portion of the proceedings. After the minutes of the preceding Lodge had been read, and the warrant of constitution also read, the brethren unanimously approved the nomination of Bro. J. R. Stebbing as W.M., and Bro. Lungley proceeded to install him in the chair accordingly. A letter was read from Bro. Dr. Norcott, who, through illness, was prevented from undertaking the duties of Senior Warden, to which he had been named in the warrant, and a vote of condolence was passed. The nomination of Bro. R. Parker was cordially approved, and a hope expressed that he would soon fill the W.M.'s chair. The ceremony of installation having been completed, the following appointments were made:—Bros. Capt. F. Woolley, S.W.; R. Parker, J.W.; C. Bromley (P.M.), S.D.; J. R. King (P.M.), J.D.; H. Clark (P.M.), I.G.; Geo. Lungley (W.M. No. 555), Tyler; G. W. Clarke (Prov. G. Sec.), Secretary. Bro. Dr. H. Clark was elected Treasurer. A communication from Bro. Farnfield, announcing the forthcoming festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution, in January, was read, and Bro. J. R. Stebbing, as W.M., informed the brethren that the rules of the Twelve Brothers' Lodge required the Worshipful Master to act as Steward of one of the charities during his year of office, he should be happy to do so in this case, and attend the January festival. He hoped to carry with him a handsome list of subscriptions and donations, and relied on the liberal aid of the brethren. This statement was received with acclamation, and the support of the brethren was promised in the laudable undertaking of the Worshipful Master. Bro. King, P.M., proposed, Bro. G. Lungley seconded, and it was resolved "That a representation be made to the Board of General Purposes of the great necessity that exists for the better representation of the provincial Lodges in Grand Lodge, and that it be suggested that the use of voting papers would be a means of enabling all brethren entitled to vote in Grand Lodge, to exercise that privilege in the election of the several Boards. An agreeable evening was spent by the brethren after the close of business, it being a rule in this Lodge to encourage conversational discussions on Masonic topics.

LANCASHIRE EAST.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—We have been requested to publish the following prayers delivered by Bro. the Rev. C. P. Nicholson, B.D., Prov. Grand Chaplain of East Lancashire, on the occasion of laying the foundation and cope stones of the Ashton-under-Lyne Infirmary, the former by the Right Hon. Milner Gibson, M.P., and the latter by Bro. Albert Hudson Royds, D. Prov. Grand Master. We should, however, have been better pleased had they been sent to us, with an account of the ceremony, at the time it took place:—

First Prayer.—Lord of all wisdom and might, thou didst lay the corner stone of nature; thou didst fashion the rude mass of matter; thou didst make the sea and the dry land; thy spirit disposed all things in order, and gave to them symmetry and beauty. When darkness enveloped the deep, thy word commanded the light. When thou framedst the worlds, when thou didst balance the universe, the arches of heaven rang with praise, "the sons of God shouted for joy." Gracious God, unerring Ruler of events, we would approach thee in deep humility, lively gratitude, and fervent praise. Look down upon us in mercy, from thy throne in the heaven of heavens. We are met together in thy name, trusting in thy care and love. Pour upon us the abundance of thy blessing: bring to a successful issue the undertaking thus begun. May this corner stone, the support and stay of the future building, be also an emblem of the benefits, constant and real, contemplated by the designed institution. May experience, skill, and kindness be brought to relieve the sickness, disease and anguish of suffering humanity, and may multitudes have cause for joy and thankfulness; Lord send forth thy light and truth to heal the disorders of our souls, strengthen us with might, raise up within us a building of righteousness, so that when our outer man decayeth and falleth into dust, our inward man, glorified and adorned by thy Spirit, may ascend to the grand temple above, to enjoy the brightness of thy countenance for ever and ever. So mote it be.

Second Prayer.—O God, our Creator and Preserver, we thank thee for all the mercies of the present life, and for the hope of glory which thou hast given us, in the world to come. Fill our hearts with joy, and our mouths with praise. Thou alone, the Master Builder of the universe, didst inspire the thought to found this institution, for the alleviation of the suffering, the restoration of the sick and infirm; may it prove a source of blessing to thousands; may thy providence raise up others to copy the example of its gracious benefactor. By deeds of mercy and charity may thy servants, whom thou hast prospered, prove the reality of their faith and the ardour of their love. Pour down thy blessing upon the architect engaged in the undertaking; fill him with knowledge and skill, vouchsafe thy care to the craftsmen, preserve them from all perils. Prosper the work of their hands upon them; yea, prosper thou their handy work, and to thy name be the glory and the praise. So mote it be.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

The annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Worcestershire was held on Tuesday, the 20th of September, at the Music Hall, Kidderminster, Grand Lodge being opened at half-past twelve o'clock, by the R.W. Bro. Henry Charles Vernon, Prov. G.M., in ample form and with solemn prayer.

The Prov. Grand Master was accompanied by the V.W. Bros. Vigne, P. Prov. S.G.W. of Somerset; Dr. Burton, P. Prov. S.G.W. of Staffordshire; D. R. Shuttleworth, Grand Lodge Representative in Switzerland, &c. Apologies were read from the Prov. Grand Masters of Staffordshire and Oxfordshire. All the Lodges were represented by some of their Officers, and many private members were present by the permission of the Prov. Grand Master.

After the minutes were read and the statement of accounts, a Worcester brother objected to the audit of the accounts being made without an order for that purpose being first given by the Prov. Grand Lodge, and the names of the Auditors being sanctioned also by the Prov. Grand Lodge. The Prov. G.S.B. rose to order, and pointed out Rule 9 of the by-laws, which invests the Prov. Grand Master with the sole power of appointing the Auditors. This matter then dropped, and the accounts were duly passed.

The V.W. Bro. W. Masfield, having been reelected Treasurer, by ballot, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master invested the Officers as follows:—Bro. Barber, W.M. No. 772, Prov. S.G.W.; W. Bristow, P.M. No. 313, Prov. J.G.W.; the Rev. T. W. Herbert, P.M. No. 313, Prov. G. Chaplain; the Rev. S. Franklin, Assist. Prov. G. Chaplain; H. Hill, Prov. G. Reg.; W. Masfield, P.M. Nos. 730 and 313, Prov. G. Treas.; W.

Howells, P.M. Nos. 730 and 435, Prov. G. Sec.; B. Brooks, P.M. No. 824, Prov. S.G.D.; Jabez Jones, P.M. No. 772, Prov. J.G.D.; Geo. Horton, P.M. No. 838, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; J. Burton, S.W. No. 313; Prov. G.D.C.; W. Wigginton, S.W. No. 819, Assist. Prov. Dir. of Cers.; F. Saunders, W.M. No. 730, Prov. G.S.B.; I. Fitzgerald, P.M. No. 523, Prov. G. Org.; G. B. Bradley, W.M. No. 838, Prov. G. Purst., Prov. G. Tylers as before.

At intervals during the Lodge business, the Prov. G. Organist played many pieces upon the beautiful organ, to the especial delight of the brethren. The march, on the entrance of the Prov. Grand Master and his Officers, was peculiarly appropriate.

A procession having been formed, the brethren went to the parish church of St. Mary, where divine service was performed. The ministers who officiated in the liturgy were the Rev. T. L. Cloughton, the vicar, and the Rev. Bro. T. W. Herbert, Prov. G. Chaplain. The choral portion of the service was admirably gone through by a selection of the choirs of St. Mary's and St. George's, and reflected great credit upon the Prov. Grand Organist, who is likewise their choir master. The responses were Tallis's, and the "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" Ebdon's in C. The anthem was Kent's "Blessed be thou."

The V.W. Assistant Prov. Grand Chaplain, Bro. Franklin, preached from 1 Corinthians xiii. 13: "And now abideth faith, hope, and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity." We present the conclusion of the rev. brother's very admirable discourse, as follows:—"St. Paul, in language purely Masonic, says 'Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease; whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away.' These gifts to the church are transient, and adapted to an imperfect state, because they would be useless in a state of beatitude and light. Even faith and hope, though essential to every one during his mortal pilgrimage, will have no place in the realms of bliss. 'Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face.' We shall no longer want the evidence of faith. The first step, being past, will be for ever done away. Then we shall possess the things we now long for. We shall not need the support of hope. Thus the second step will finally vanish. But when faith and hope shall have had their perfect consummation, charity will still remain. The third step penetrates the highest heavens, and can never be destroyed. And when the darkness of death is passed, and we are admitted into the Grand Lodge above, the region of eternal light, the bright beams of charity will brighten our souls, and we shall make one glorious company with angels and archangels, and the whole company of the just made perfect. One mind and one voice will animate that heavenly society, and that mind and that voice will celebrate the praises of undying love. All will unite in perfect harmony to adore Him who sits upon the throne. Mutually rejoicing in each other's happiness, there will be no hearts to relieve—no distress to commiserate—no tears to wipe away. This, then, is the system of charity that is taught in a Freemason's Lodge. Is it necessary to inquire whether you feel proud of a science from which such purity flows—from which such blessings are conveyed? Deprived of charity, pleasure with all its allurements—learning with all its privileges—wealth with all its splendour of enjoyment—authority with all its painted pomp—are but a solemn mockery. Though we may profess the gift of prophecy; though we may understand all mysteries and all knowledge—though by faith we could remove mountains—though we bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and give our bodies to be burned, yet if our hearts be not impressed and influenced with this heavenly charity, all these possessions, brilliant and imposing as they are, are nothing. In conclusion, let me urge upon you the duty—nay the privilege of cultivating not only in tyld Lodges, but in our commerce with the world, this most excellent grace. Let us, from the genuine principle of heavenly charity, practise mutual forbearance, and reciprocate a constant interchange of kindness and affection. If Freemasonry be a beneficial institution (as it undoubtedly is) let its fruits appear in the virtuous discharge of all the social duties of life; for the third degree points to a day of solemn responsibility, when the transient concerns of time shall have passed away; when the world and all its allurements shall have vanished like a morning dream; and sanctity of soul will alone enable us to endure the presence of the glorious Shekinah of God. As Masons, let us use the present world without abusing our fraternal privileges; for if all our time be expended in the requirement of worldly knowledge, or in the gaiety of worldly pleasure, to the neglect of that which is priceless and eternal, we shall be fatally convinced at that awful period when the ever blessed Lodge above shall be opened never to be closed; when the last arrow of the mighty conqueror Death shall have been expended, and his bow for ever broken, that St. Paul uttered the words of eternal truth when he said—"Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."

The collection after the sermon amounted to £6. It is almost needless to say that the Kidderminster folks mustered in great strength both in the church and in the street leading from the Music Hall thereto. A natural remark was, "Where can all the children possibly come from?" The number visible being actually astonishing.

On the return of the brethren to the Music Hall, the Prov. Grand Master announced the amount of the collection, and it was unanimously resolved to give the same to the Ragged Schools founded by the vicar, the Rev. T. L. Cloughton. Thanks were afterwards voted to him for the use of his church and for his assistance in the reading desk; to the Rev. Bro. Herbert, Prov. G. Chaplain, for his services; and to the Rev. Bro. Franklin, Asst. Prov. G. Chaplain, for his excellent sermon.

The V.W. Bro. H. M. Wainwright, P. Prov. S.G.W., then brought forward the following motion, of which he had given notice in the circular convening the Prov. Grand Lodge:—"That fifty guineas be voted out of the funds of the Prov. Grand Lodge to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, thereby creating the Prov. Grand Master a vice-president and governor for life." In introducing this motion, Bro. Wainwright enlarged upon our duties in connexion with furthering educational efforts, and upon the excellence of the two Masonic institutions established for that purpose. He trespassed then upon their time, he said, in consequence of an organized opposition to this movement by the Worcestershire brethren, several of whom had come over on purpose to support an amendment to his resolution.

A Worcester brother (W.M. of No. 772) called the P. Prov. S.G.W. to order, and stated that they had not come over solely for that purpose.

Bro. Wainwright then proceeded to comment upon certain resolutions passed by the Lodge Semper Fidelis, No. 772, and forwarded to the Prov. G. Sec. to lay before the Prov. G. Lodge. These resolutions were condemnatory of the propositions, and asserted that the donation would be a dangerous precedent to establish. The V.W. Bro. J. Jones, Prov. J.G.D., and W.M. of No. 772, again rose to order, and protested against any comment being made before those resolutions came before the meeting, and after some discussion the Prov. Grand Master resolved that they should not then be read. Bro. Wainwright then commented upon them hypothetically, and closed a long and able address by formally proposing the resolution.

The V.W. Bro. James Fitzgerald, Prov. Grand Organist, briefly seconded it.

The V.W. Bro. J. Jones, Prov. S.G.D., then addressed the Prov. Grand Lodge, stating that he attended as W.M. of No. 772, to move an amendment to the resolution proposed by Bro. Wainwright; previous to doing which he requested the permission of the Prov. G.M. to have the communication from the Secretary of No. 772 read to the Prov. G. Lodge.

This was ultimately acceded to by the Prov. G.M., who remarked at its close that the mode of addressing the communication, "Dear Sir and Brother," would have done from the Secretary of No. 772 to the Secretary of any other private Lodge—but that the Prov. G. Sec. should in courtesy have been styled "V.W. Sir and Brother." The communication was to the effect that the grant would prove mischievous in its character by establishing a very awkward precedent, and that it was not dictated by pure charity, inasmuch as an avowed object was the honouring the Prov. G.M. by making him a vice president. It would also stop the flow of private charity.

The W.M., No. 772, disclaimed any personal feeling in the matter, and hoped that his acting thus from principle would not be construed into a want of respect to the R.W. the Prov. G.M. He concluded by moving, "That this Lodge do proceed with the other business of the day."

A P.M. of No. 772, whose name we did not ascertain, seconded the amendment, which was opposed by Bro. C. F. G. Clark, P. Prov. J.G.D., who thought that the money ought to be invested at once for some charitable purpose, and not kept locked up in the coffers of the Prov. Grand Lodge.

The P.M. of No. 772 replied, and stated that when a new Prov. G.M. should be appointed he would think himself slighted and hardly used if he was not made a vice president also—consequently a second fifty guineas to each of the above schools would be looked for and required. He deprecated also the annual payment for insurance.

Bro. Clutterbuck, P.M. of No. 772, also contended against the grant being made, and said that it was a fallacy to vote the money and pay an annual premium besides. Why not let the amount of the annual premium be put by every year until it reached the sum required? If the resolution had said nothing about the vice presidency, however, he should not have objected.

Bro. Wigginton, Prov. G. Assist. Dir. of Cers., thought that the successor of the present highly respected Prov. Grand Master should be made a vice president, and therefore the grant would form a precedent for the Prov. Grand Lodge in future days; but this he said should not be regretted, and as to its being a burden upon the funds of the Prov. Grand Lodge, the brethren should bear in mind that the one hundred guineas alone was sunk; at the death of Bro. Vernon, the Prov. Grand Lodge would receive from the insurance company the £100, upon which they now paid premiums, and this £100, with only £5 additional burden upon the Prov. Grand Lodge, would secure for his successor the same honours and privileges. This would be the case in perpetuity for a trifling annual payment of £4.

The V.W. Bro. Herbert, Prov. G. Chaplain, highly approved of the resolution, and entered his protest against any delay in benefiting the funds of the charity. He also endorsed the statement of the Prov. G. Assist. Dir. of Cers. as to the freedom of the Prov. Grand Lodge funds from the incubus named.

The V.W. Bro. Barber, Prov. S.G.W., said that he should oppose the grant on account of the insurance policy, the keeping up of which he contended was a malappropriation of the Lodge money.

The Prov. Grand Master ultimately put the amendment to the meeting, when there appeared for it five (all brethren of No. 772), and against it twenty-seven. On the original motion being put, twenty-five voted for, and five against; the grant was therefore declared carried.

After some further but unimportant business was disposed of, the Prov. Grand Lodge was closed in ample form, and with solemn prayer. The brethren afterwards adjourned to banquet, when about fifty sat down to do justice to the fare provided for them in the Corn Exchange, by the worthy host of the Black Horse, Bro. Yeates. Some of the brethren went to dine at the Lion Hotel, which was most disrespectful to the Prov. Grand Master; besides being very unfair to Bro. Yeates, who was instructed to provide for eighty gentlemen. After the dinner at the Corn Exchange, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and heartily responded to. Some capital songs were sung, and a very pleasant evening was spent, the brethren separating about nine.

DUDLEY.—Vernon Lodge (No. 819).—The installation meeting of this Lodge and festival of St. John the Baptist took place on Wednesday, the 21st of September, at the Old Town Hall, Dudley. Lodge was opened at four o'clock, by the Worshipful Master, the V.W. Bro. Hollier (Mayor), P.M., No. 313, and the Past Provincial Grand Director of Ceremonies, assisted by his officers. The minutes of the previous Lodge having been read and confirmed, the V.W. Bro. the Rev. E. A. Gwynne, P.M. No. 435, and the Provincial Grand Chaplain for Staffordshire (Chaplain to No. 819) proceeded to install Bro. B. B. Smith as the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year; the ceremony being very correctly and impressively performed. The Worshipful Master then invested his officers as follows:—Bro. W. Wigginton, Prov. Asst. Dir. of Cera., S.W.; Thos. Wright, J.W.; Rev. E. A. Gwynne, M.A., Chaplain; Geo. Burn Lowe, Treas.; E. Poole, Sec.; J. C. Westley, S.D.; H. Peart, J.D.; G. H. Deeley, P.M. Nos. 838 and 819, and P. Prov. G. Supt. of Works, M.C.; J. Prince, I.G.; and James Leff, Tyler. Some other business having been disposed of, Lodge was closed with solemn prayer. The brethren afterwards dined at Bro. G. H. Deeley's, P.M. Nos. 838 and 819, and P. Prov. G. Supt. of Works, where brotherly love and harmony prevailed. Among the visitors were Bros. W. Sheppard, W.M., No. 313, W. Thompson, R. Light, Dr. Davison, S.W., No. 730, C. Russell, and G. H. Wilkinson.

MARK MASONRY.

PROVINCIAL.

HARTLEPOOL.—Eclectic Lodge of Mark Masters (No. 39).—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held in the Masonic Hall, on Friday, the 23rd of September, Bro. Hammarbom, W.M., presiding, supported by Bros. Tate and Hudson, S. and J. Wardens. Bro. David Cunningham (editor of the Stockton and Hartlepool Mercury) having been balloted for and accepted, was duly advanced to this honourable degree; another brother was also accepted, but absence from home prevented his attendance. The next business was the election of officers for the ensuing year, when the following brethren were unanimously re-elected for the year 1860:—H. A. Hammarbom, W.M.; T. P. Tate, F.S.S., Treas., and J. Mowbray, Tyler. The installation of the W.M. and investiture of the other officers will not take place before January. No other business being before the Lodge, it was closed in peace and harmony at the usual hour.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN.

IRISH MASONIC FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL.

THE pupils of this admirable institution were on Friday last most hospitably entertained by Bro. Henry B. Haffield, one of the governors of the school, at his country seat, near Carrickmines. The children were met at the station, Harcourt-road, by Bros. H. B. Haffield, S. B. Oldham, J. Whittington, J. Hill, J. Drummond, H. Vere White, &c. On their arrival at Carrickmines, they walked to the hospitable residence of Bro. Haffield, when, after a substantial and comfortable dinner, the worthy host proposed "The Health of her Majesty the Queen." The National Anthem was sung in a most effective manner by the children. Bro. Whittington then proposed "The health of Bro. Haffield and his amiable family," which was warmly responded to. Thanks having been returned by Bro. H. V. White, and a hymn sung by the pupils, the whole party adjourned to enjoy the beauties of the lovely country by which they were surrounded, and, after a delightful day, returned to town by the six o'clock train, highly gratified by the delightful day they had spent.—Daily Express.

COLONIAL.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

CAPE TOWN.—British Lodge (No. 419).—On the 24th June, the anniversary of St. John the Baptist, the Lodge was opened at eleven A.M., for the purpose of initiating several gentlemen; and at high noon precisely, Bro. Rowe, W.M., inducted Bro. M. T. King to the chair, and installed him in the office of W.M. for the ensuing Masonic year, Bro. King having been chosen by the brethren to fill that office. The new Master then invested his officers, and afterwards proceeded in procession round the grounds of the Lodge. The brethren adjourned from the Lodge to the Masonic Hotel to dinner; the greatest harmony prevailed and the brethren separated with peace, love, and harmony, at high twelve. The following were the appointments made by the W.M.:—Bros. S. Smithers, S.W.; G. McClear, J.W.; Solomon, S.D.; Doidge, J.D.; Sharpe, I.G.; Koller, Sec.; Russell, Treas.; Rowe, P.M.; Gungel, Tyler.

MASONIC BALL OF THE BRITISH LODGE.

The recall by the Derby ministry of Governor Sir George Grey, the able and popular viceroy of this flourishing colony, has been perhaps one of the most unpopular acts which have ever emanated from Downing-street. Irrespective of his public capacity (of which, as a Masonic organ, we are not called upon to speak), Sir George has won golden opinions from his brethren of the antient Craft, and the Cape Masons have not been behindhand in testifying their esteem and regret for his loss.

On Thursday, the 21st of July, upon the occasion of a Masonic ball given by the British Lodge (No. 419), the governor and his lady were present, and a most agreeable evening was spent within the walls of the Commercial Exchange at Cape Town, which, upon this occasion, was given up to the votaries of pleasure; the discourse in that area usually devoted to exchange and par, hides, tallow, and Constantia, being of unwonted vanities and most unmercantile tendency—crinoline, scandal, pic-nics and races, were the topics of the evening, Mercury and Pluto being fain to make way for Venus and Terpsichore.

The Masons of the British Lodge are justly proud of their hall, and the Commercial Exchange never looked grander; the splendid Masonic emblem was ranged round the walls with excellent taste, and conveyed a sense of mystery and beauty.

Sir George Grey is one of the brotherhood, and he was attended on this evening by all the leading officials and gentry of the town and vicinity.

The British Lodge was founded in 1811; it numbers one hundred and twenty members; and its operations are carried out with far greater spirit than are those of any other Masonic Lodge in the city, or indeed in the colony. The very large amount of British shipping which now arrives in Table Bay brings a vast number of British Masons to the colony, and the number of members is thereby increasing very fast indeed. The jubilee of the Lodge is to be celebrated in 1861, two years from this time, when, in all likelihood, it will be one of the largest Lodges in any British colony.

The arrangements of the ball committee were perfect. The band of the 59th regiment and the quadrille band were in the orchestra, and the music was excellent. A very splendid supper was provided, and at the supper table, Captain Hill, civil commissioner, presided. Sir George Grey, who was suffering from indisposition, was compelled to leave before his health was proposed, and thanks for his excellency were returned by the Attorney-General in the following words:—"Bro. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, under ordinary circumstances, I should certainly not feel myself at liberty to respond to the call that has been so unexpectedly made upon me. During the twenty years I have now held office in this colony, under six successive governors, who have come and passed away, I have made it a rule, which admitted of no exception, that, during what may be called the governor's tenure of office, his legal adviser should be silent in his praise. But there are exceptions to every rule, and the same feeling which has induced me to lay down that rule, and to maintain perfect silence with respect to other governors will now allow me to say with regard to the praise of the present governor—if I have ever expressed regret at the loss of governors who have left—I should express the same feeling with tenfold intensity with regard to governors who are recalled. Ladies and gentlemen, a meeting of this kind, assembled for a charitable purpose and the enjoyment of harmless pleasure, is no place for political discussions and the introduction of controverted topics. I advance no political opinion—I state no topic of political controversy, if I say in this large and respectable meeting what would be said in every meeting throughout the colony; and as the old Italian poet said that it would be sufficient to write on his tombstone the plain and simple word Tasso, so I say that it is only necessary to name the name of the Governor, Sir George Grey, to elicit the warmest regard and respect of all. It was the boast of Augustus that he had found Rome brick and had left it marble. That was not an unworthy boast of a great man and a great statesman. Without venturing to express the same thing in the same language, I say that Sir George Grey may say upon his retirement that he has, in a certain sense, in respect to the colony, found it brick and left it marble. Ladies and gentlemen, in everything connected with the progress of the colony, material, moral, or social, in every place where a good man ought to be found, in every place where a good statesman was required, in energetic action, in foresight and perception of consequences, there have we found our governor; and in all these things I think we have seen that whilst under Sir George Grey's administration we have been governed by a man and no slave. Ladies and gentlemen, since Sir George Grey arrived, party feeling that previously existed has been diminished, a strong feeling of unity has sprung up amongst us, and everything has tended to show that we were being moulded into a firm and compact mass by the master hand of a Master Mason. I say in everything which has reference to these considerations, we are better for the Governor, Sir George Grey, having been with us; and we can quite account for the deep regret which has fallen on the entire heart of the entire colony by the unexpected and stunning news that he has been recalled. I have gone further than I wished, encouraged by your sympathy, and willing to give your sympathy a voice. I part with that topic with a full heart. I am sorry that Governor Sir George Grey could not remain until now, and in his own pure simple Saxon style tell you what he felt. He stayed as long as he could, and it was a great compliment, and a great kindness to have come at all under the circumstances.

The Worshipful Master, Bro. King, then proposed the health of the chairman, Captain Hill, who, he said, had done all in his power to make the ball a successful one. Captain Hill, in returning thanks, said it was the stewards, and not he, to whom the thanks of the Masons were due.

Bro. Melville said, as an old Mason of the British Lodge, he felt compelled to remind the company of one toast that had not yet been drunk. No doubt among the many good things that had been said, there was so much to admire that, as was frequently the case, the best of all had been forgotten. He knew very well that there was not one man standing around him but would agree with him, that of all other men, the Attorney-General ought first to be remembered.

Bro. G. Prince proposed the health of Bro. Widdows, one of the oldest members of the British Lodge. Bro. Widdows said it was twenty years ago that a ball like this had taken place at the Cape of Good Hope, and as an old Mason, and one of the first members of the British Lodge, he could not feel other than gratified at the success of this undertaking. He had not expected to have been called upon to make a speech, but he thanked them exceedingly for the honour they had done him.

PRESENTATION OF A FAREWELL ADDRESS BY THE BRETHREN TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

On the 9th of August, the Freemasons in Cape Town met to present an address, from the brethren of the western province, to Sir George Grey. The brethren in the forenoon, dressed in their insignia, formed in procession and started for Government House. On arriving at the entrance the brethren filed off, and led by Bro. Brand, Deputy Grand Master of the Netherlands, the Rose Croix Freemasons, and Officers of the various Lodges, together with the general body of the Craft following, were ushered into the state room by Bros. Rivers and Major Travers. In the room the brethren formed themselves into a circle two or three deep, the Prov. Grand Master, with Bro. Fairbridge and other Past and Present Grand Officers occupying the head. His excellency then, in Masonic costume, accompanied by Bro. Captain Hill and several members of his suite, walked up to the centre of the room where he was met by the Prov. Grand Master and Bro. Fairbridge.

The Provincial Grand Master addressing his excellency said,—The members of the Craft of Freemasons have deemed it their duty to express to you their deep sympathy and the sincere regret which under present circumstances they feel. Their sentiments are contained in this address (pointing to the address in the hands of Bro. Fairbridge).

Bro. Fairbridge then in a clear and audible voice read the following address. During the reading of several passages his excellency seemed deeply affected:—"To his Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope. Sir and Brother,—Among the many addresses which, proceeding from all parts and all classes of the inhabitants of South Africa, bear witness to the profound and universal regret created by your excellency's unexpected departure from the scene of your successful public career, be pleased to accept from the Freemasons of the western province of the colony this their farewell testimony of fraternal regard and high personal respect. It is incompatible with the proper object of Masonry to enter into discussions of a political nature; yet it may be permitted to the members of an institution whose principle is peace and good will, and which prospers best where society is most settled, to add, as they desire to do, their testimony to the peaceful and flourishing condition which the land in which they live has attained under your excellency's administration, mainly attributable, as they believe, to your excellency's wise and able exercise of the responsible powers entrusted to you. We cannot forget that our fraternity, comprising men of all nations and all creeds, must necessarily be affected by the character of those whom it receives into its bosom; we, therefore, point with pride to the names of the many eminent and good men enrolled in the chronicles of the Craft; and now we have a pleasure in remembering that amongst those brethren who have stood in the front rank of practical humanity and real philanthropy, is one who has laboured with us—one who spared neither mind or body, nor purse, in his persistent efforts to raise the depressed savage to a level with civilized man—who has sedulously watched the spread of education—who has taken a warm personal interest in every measure conducive to our benefit, and whose whole private life has been an honour to Masonry, while it reflected fresh lustre on the high position he filled in Australia, in New Zealand, and in the Cape of Good Hope. You are about to leave us, sir and brother—probably for ever; but wherever you go, thither will follow you our best wishes for your happiness. And may the great Architect of the universe protect, bless, and prosper you and yours."

W. Bro. Sir George Grey, at the conclusion of the address, expressed himself as follows:—"Brethren, it is with great pleasure that I receive this address from so ancient a body and from one which eschews politics. To this provision of your Order I may say that, as governor of this country, I have adhered, for, although surrounded by subjects of a political nature, I struggled to keep myself so clear of these, that I might be identified with no party, or class, but might be able to labour for the good of all alike, with a mind undisturbed by prejudices and party feelings. It was in my mind a firm conviction that our Great Maker had not created races between whom inextinguishable antipathies were for ever to exist. But that we were all so formed that we might be mutually useful to each other, and might dwell together in peace and unity, finding in such concord our greatest common good and individual advantage, and I had such faith in my fellow men as to believe that, notwithstanding all the evil there is in our nature, there still existed, in most human breasts, such strong sympathies in favour of what was evidently good, and just, and fair, and righteous, that, although some might object to one proceeding and others to another, yet that the general leaning of the whole to that which they felt to be good would, if they saw I pursued those ends, lead them to pardon my very errors, and would always procure me such support as would bear me safely through difficulties, and that the pleasant sight might be seen of a country the population of which all dwelt in harmony and concord, although it consisted of many races, between some of whom much of ill feeling had for years existed. That I was not mistaken in these views, and that I have been nobly supported by many in my exertions, your presence here to-day, and your address, are substantial witnesses which would have been valuable to me at any time, but are especially so at the present moment. I therefore thank you for them, and especially for the kind solicitude with which you have had your address so beautifully illuminated, in a manner known to harmonize with my tastes. I shall ever preserve this as a record of your thoughtful kindness, and it shall be worthily bound, so as to form an ornament of the library I am endeavouring to collect for Australia. It may thus happen that, in after times in that country, those who in examining it admire the skill of the artist, and the kind thoughts of the donors, may envy that governor who, in the very hour of his apparent fall, received such a mark of affectionate regard.

The brethren then retired in order. A considerable crowd had gathered together to witness the procession, and the gallery of the state room was crowded by ladies, who seemed interested spectators of the scene.

THE NEW HOSPITAL AT CAPE TOWN.

The corner stone of the new Somerset Hospital, for which £20,000 was voted by the colonial parliament during last session, was laid on the 18th of August, by the governor. As it was understood that this would be the last public act of his excellency, it was resolved that a general holiday should be held in Cape Town as a parting tribute of respect. The shops and stores were all closed, and business was entirely suspended.

At two o'clock, the carriages of the Governor, Lady Grey, Major Travers, and Mr. Rivers, arrived at the south end of the enclosure, escorted by a detachment furnished by the volunteer cavalry.

Upon Sir George and Lady Grey taking their seats, the heads of departments and government officials took their stand in front, to their right and left; the Masons taking up the ground appointed for them to the right, fronting the Lion's Hill, and the Odd Fellows on the left, fronting the bay.

Bro. Scott Tucker, the architect, then advanced to the dais, and addressing the Governor, said:—"May it please your excellency,—a pleasing duty has devolved on me of being the first to thank you for the great interest you have taken in the noble institution which you have condescended to inaugurate this day; and I beg to thank you, in the name of all present, for undertaking that service. My next duty, as colonial engineer and civil architect, is to submit for your approval the plan of the building about to be commenced. And at the same time I have to intimate that all is now ready for the laying of the corner stone."

The Governor having expressed his approval of the plan of the proposed building, descended with Lady Grey from the dais, and proceeded to the stone, accompanied by Bro. C. J. Brand, Prov. Grand Master of the Netherlands; the W.M.s. of the Cape Town Lodges; the Colonial Secretary; the Chief Justice; the Treasurer-General; the Auditor-General; the Collector of Customs; the Surveyor-General; the Surgeon of the Hospital; Col. Hill; Lieut. Col. Burmester; Lieut. Col. Duprat; Lieut. Col. Eustace; Capt. Cloete; Lieut. Col. Scott Tucker, &c., &c.

On arriving at the place selected for laying the stone, Bro. Scott Tucker read to his excellency the scroll, and Bro. Van Tromp handed him the small box (containing the scroll and coins), for the purpose of its being placed under the stone. The scroll contained the following inscription:—

"This corner stone of Somerset New Hospital was laid with Masonic honours by his excellency Bro. Sir George Grey, K.C.B., governor and commander-in-chief of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, &c., &c. on Thursday, the 18th of August, 1859, in the 23rd year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria of England. Present: Bro. C. J. Brand, LL.D., D.G.M. National for the Netherlands; Bro. C. F. Juritz, P.M. W.M. of the Goede Hoop; Bro. B. J. van de Sandt de Villiers, W.M. the Goede Trouw; Bro. M. J. King, W.M. of the British; Bro. C. Fairbridge, W.M. of the Hope; the Noble Grand Travers of the Society of Odd Fellows; Vice Admiral Sir F. Grey, K.C.B., naval command-in-chief; his Honour Sir William Hodges, Knight, the chief justice of the colony; the Hon. Rawson W. Rawson, C.B., colonial secretary; the Hon. W. Potter, attorney general; the Hon. H. Rivers, treasurer general; the Hon. E. Mowbray Cole, auditor general; the Hon. W. Field, collector of customs; Charles Bell, Esq., surveyor general; the Hon. C. Jarvis, chairman of the municipality; H. Bickelsteth, Esq., M.D. surgeon to the hospital; Lieut. Col. Burmester, 69th regiment, commandant of the garrison; Col. Hill, in chief command of Cape Town."

volunteers; Lieut.-Col. Dupratt, volunteer artillery; Lieut.-Col. Enstace, volunteer rifles; Capt. Porter, Cape Town volunteer cavalry; Capt. Cloete, Wynberg volunteer cavalry; Lieut.-Col. J. Scott Tucker, volunteer rappers and miners, colonial engineer and architect to this building; and J. Reid, Esq., contractor for the foundations; and upwards of ten thousand inhabitants of Cape Town and its vicinity. God save the Queen."

Bro. Brand then presented to his excellency, on a red velvet cushion, a silver trowel, elaborately embellished and engraved, from a design furnished by Bro. M. T. King, W.M. of the British Lodge.

The stone having been laid in due Masonic form, and his excellency having declared the work "well-formed, true, and trusty," the cornucopia was handed to the Worshipful Master of the Goede Hoop Lodge (Bro. C. F. Juritz), who poured out corn on the stone; the Worshipful Master of the British Lodge (Bro. M. T. King) poured out wine; and the Worshipful Master of the Goede Trouw (Bro. B. J. van de S. de Villiers), &c. After this the Deputy Prov. Grand Master pronounced the following benediction: "The labours having been duly performed, let us now invoke the blessing of Him through whom alone our work can prosper. May the Great Architect of the universe pour down His blessings on the work now commenced. May He assist in the erection and completion of this building, and, in His great grace, preserve the workmen against every accident. May this intended hospital soon be finished, to receive the sick and the poor, so that they may bless the Lord for the great good He has done unto them! May the Lord bless the inhabitants of this place." "So mote it be."

The procession was then reformed, and his Excellency and Lady Grey returned to the dais, the troops firing a feu de joie, and the bands playing "God Save the Queen."

Bros. Brand, Hill, and King then advanced, and his Excellency having risen from his seat,

Bro. Brand addressed him as follows:—It becomes my pleasing duty to offer you, sir, a remembrance of the great work which you have now originated. The trowel is the emblem of our Masonic actions—of the architecture of our minds. You have now used it for a construction which, in the true Masonic principle, has for its object benevolence and charity. Your task has been a pleasant and a graceful one—ours is one of gratitude towards you, for having laid the corner stone of a hospital, which, we hope, under divine blessing, may prosper for the relief of the sick and the poor. Your work, sir, in this colony, during your government, has been immense, and of the utmost importance. No institution has felt your paternal hand beneficially dealing with its objects and interests. You have brought into existence what was still hidden in darkness; you have opened resources and originated measures most beneficial to the peace, happiness, and prosperity of this colony; and on this day—on the eve of your departure, as one of the last of your public beneficial acts—you have assisted in the commencement of a structure, for which its future inmates and the public at large will bless your name. I present to you, sir, this trowel, not only in the name of the Masonic brethren, but in that of all the colonists. The public demonstration of their approbation of your government, and of their high esteem towards your person, has been so general throughout the colony, that in our joint names, I offer you this symbol of love and charity. I offer it as a mark of our sincere gratitude for what you have this day performed, and of our warm sympathy and devotion towards yourself.

Bro. Sir George Grey, in replying, said:—It would have been impossible for me to have heard what you have said without experiencing feelings to which I cannot give utterance. I was altogether unprepared to hear such words on this occasion; and, therefore, I feel quite unequal to the task, pleasurable though it be, of fully replying to you. I can only say that as long as I live I will remember this scene, so striking in itself; and I will cherish in my heart the remembrance of the words which you have so kindly expressed. I shall always remember with pleasure that my duty here to-day was to help to carry on a good work, which had been begun years before. We have as yet simply entered on that which has been prepared for us by those who have preceded us. But I do hope that, if not immediately, at least shortly, those who are now alive will not be satisfied with having simply lent their presence here on this occasion. I assure you I will myself be only too happy to lend a willing hand in furthering the good work which I am about to leave behind me, and, at any time, I will, as I feel myself bound to do, respond to any application which may be made to me in its behalf; and, furthermore, I repeat, that as long as I live I will preserve this memento and carry in my memory the words which you have this day expressed to me in presenting it."

Three hearty cheers were then given by the assembled multitude, and his excellency and Lady Grey immediately afterwards took their departure, which was regarded as a signal for the crowd to disperse.

SYDNEY.

AUSTRALASIAN FREEMASONS' HALL COMPANY.

THE tenth half yearly meeting of this company was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Sydney, July 11th, Alderman John Williams, D. Prov. M. in the chair. The report for the last half year, as well as a general summary of the whole of the proceedings of the directors of the Hall company, during the five years of their direction, was brought forward for the inspection and approval of the proprietors, who expressed their approbation of the manner in which the affairs of the company had been conducted. Alderman John Williams, chairman and retiring director, was unanimously re-elected. Alderman Thurlow and Thomas May were elected auditors for the ensuing year. The chairman stated he was happy to inform the meeting that the Masonic Orphan Fund was the largest proprietor in the company, and he was satisfied that before the expiration of the term of office that they had just elected him to hold, that the Masonic Orphan Fund and the Lodges would be the sole proprietors of the property. A dividend at the rate of eight per cent. per annum was declared for the last half year. A vote of thanks proposed by Alderman Thurlow, and seconded by Bro. Bradford, to the chairman and directors, for their efficient management of the company's affairs during the past five years, was carried. This terminated the proceedings.

FRANCE.

GRAND ORIENT OF FRANCE.

DURING the course of his stay at Paris, Bro. Hyde Clarke, who is an old member of high rank under the Grand Orient of France and Supreme Council, spent some time on Masonic business. On his visit to the hotel of the Grand Orient, he minutely inspected the building under the guidance of the Grand Secretary, and spent some time in consultation with the Grand Officers on the present state of Masonry abroad, bestowing the evenings on visits to the Chapters and Lodges meeting there. Bro. Clarke was invited to bestow his labours on the reconciliation of Masonic difficulties in the East, and in the consolidation of French Masonry.

MARSEILLES.—Lodge La Verité, August 12th.—The members of the Lodge La Verité, having been informed that Bro. Hyde Clarke was in the city, on his way to embark for the East with his family, took measures for his reception. Shortly after his arrival the Secretary waited upon him at his hotel to request him to spare a time for receiving the Vénérable (W.M.), and to offer him the cordial services of the brethren. The same evening the W.M. attended him to the Masonic Hall, and the Lodge having been constituted, the W.M. announced to the brethren the presence of Bro. Clarke in the hall, when a deputation was appointed to receive the illustrious brother, and attend him with the honours due to his exalted rank. The deputation waited on Bro. Clarke, in the library, and a procession was formed consisting of the Standard Bearer and standard of the Lodge, the Deacons with their wands, the Masters of Ceremonies, the three most distinguished brothers of the Lodge, and the Ill. Bro. Clarke, S.P.R.S., escorted by Bro. Forty, S.P.R.S., and surrounded by the three lights. The procession halted in the centre, the brethren standing with swords drawn, when the W.M. met the illustrious brother, saluted him fraternally and led him to the chair, which the illustrious brother having occupied, resigned the gavel to the W.M., and was then conducted to the right of the chair by Ill. Bro. Forty, the brethren saluting with nine. The Worshipful Bro. Mitre, in a long and eloquent oration, congratulated the Marseilles brethren on the presence among them of one of the most distinguished ornaments of French Masonry and most enlightened contributors to English and American Masonic literature, whose labours for the propagation of Masonry in the High and Craft Degrees had been so zealous. Bro. Hyde Clarke replied at some length in French. At the close of the labours Bro. Clarke retired with due honours, and was escorted to his hotel by some of the brethren. On the morning of embarkation, W. Bro. Mitre attended Bro. Clarke at his hotel for the purpose of presenting to him some of the officers of the French government steamer Borysthène, in which he had taken passage, and to claim for him cordial attention.

Obituary.

BRO. CAPTAIN W. V. MASKELYNE.

WE have with regret to record the death of Bro. Captain W. V. Maskelyne, H.M. 7th Royal Fusiliers (of the Inhabitants' Lodge, No. 178, at Gibraltar), who was buried in that fortress on the 18th of September. Bro. Maskelyne first saw the light of the Order in the above named Lodge about a year ago; he had therefore not yet arrived at any of the higher honours of the Craft. He was called away from this sublunary sphere at an early age, under circumstances of a very melancholy nature. He had, with two other officers of the garrison, gone over to the neighbouring coast of Barbary, on a shooting excursion, as a little relaxation from their military duties, so trying to the constitution in this climate. Whilst there, the Emperor of Morocco died, the rupture took place between the Moors and Spaniards at Ceuta, and disturbances broke out in different parts of the Moorish empire; the party of sportsmen entered the town of Rabat just as the British residents were leaving it; they all embarked together in an open sailing boat, and had just got out of the harbour, when a party of Moors came into the town, raised the fanatical cry of "death to the Christians," and set about pillaging and destroying such property as the Europeans had left behind. The boat, detained by contrary winds, was six days reaching Gibraltar, and the exposure during that time to a broiling sun, together with the absence of the barest accommodation, brought on a violent fever in the case of two out of the three officers, and of the servant who accompanied them. With Bro.

Maskelyne it terminated fatally, the others are recovering. The deceased, who was universally beloved in the garrison, was interred with military honours, and followed to the grave, in addition to the officers and men of his own regiment, by a great number of non-commissioned officers of other regiments and corps, upwards of one hundred officers, and nearly the whole of the staff and departments, with a large concourse of the general public, the Rev. J. A. Crozier, M.A., chaplain to the forces, officiating. The funeral service of the Church of England being concluded, the usual volley was fired by the company hitherto commanded by the deceased, after which a large number of the brethren approached the grave, and one by one threw into it the Masonic spig, thus giving expression to a silent but heartfelt hope that it will please the Lord of life to raise our departed brother from the tomb of transgression to shine as the stars for ever and ever.

BRO. JOHN BARNES, P.Z.; P.M.; PAST GRAND STEWARD.

WE last week recorded the death on the 22nd ult., at his residence, No. 16, New Burlington-street, after a short but painful illness, of the esteemed Treasurer of the Old King's Arms Lodge, in the forty-sixth year of his age. Bro. Barnes was initiated in the Lodge of Tranquillity, No. 218, on the 23rd Nov., 1838, of which he was W. Master two years, 1841 and 1842, and a member to Dec., 1853. On the 14th Nov., 1839, he joined the Old King's Arms Lodge, No. 30, and became Master in 1844; he also served the office of Grand Steward from the same Lodge for the festival of 1844, and continued a member to the time of his death. He was elected a member of the Board of General Purposes for the years 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, and 1853: and was also elected one of the twelve on the Lodge of Benevolence from the time of the passing the resolution in 1850. Bro. Barnes was exalted to the degree of Royal Arch, in the Jerusalem Chapter, No. 218, on the 14th April, 1840; was one of the petitioners for the Old King's Arms Chapter, No. 30, the charter for which was granted on the 5th Feb., 1845; he was appointed the first J., and the following years filled the chairs of H. and Z. In 1850 he became a Vice President of the Institution for granting Annuities to Aged Freemasons, and a member of the committee of management, of which he was a regular attendant. On the 19th Feb., 1851, he became a governor of the branch of the institution for granting annuities to the widows of deceased Freemasons to these two charities; he was also an annual subscriber to each, and served the office of steward at four festivals. Bro. Barnes was also a Vice President of the Girls School, and a life governor of the Boys School, being also a liberal annual donor to the funds of these charities, of the committees of which he was an active member. The funeral of our respected brother took place on Thursday, at Kensal Green Cemetery, and all who knew him living, will feel that by the death of this excellent and kind hearted Mason, the Craft has lost a valuable member. The funeral cortege, consisting of an elegant hearse open at the sides, and five mourning coaches, left the late residence of the deceased in New Burlington-street at eleven o'clock in the morning. In the first two coaches were the principal mourners, the father of our deceased brother; Mr. Rutherford; Bro. W. F. Beadon, P.G.W.; Bro. Whitmore; the medical attendant of the deceased, Mr. A. M. Duff; Mr. S. Kenall; Bro. J. F. Franks; and Bro. Watkins, in whose house the deceased resided at the time of his death. In the other coaches were Bros. Crew, Paas, Farnfield, Binckes, Udall, and Geo. Barrett, who acted as pall bearers; Bros. Gale, Young, J. Levinson, H. G. Warren, and Garstin, of Welbeck-street, who, as an old friend, school-fellow, and brother, of the deceased, conducted the funeral. On the ground we also observed Bros. Thiselton, W. Davis, Caruthers, Clemmitt, and others. The deceased brother having been consigned to the grave, which a few years since received the remains of his wife, and the regular funeral service ended, Bro. Binckes briefly addressed the brethren on the loss they had sustained, and drew tears from many eyes of those who, as strangers, surrounding the grave, though they knew not the brother in life, felt how deep must be the loss to his friends of one so highly respected.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The health of all the royal family at Balmoral this week is reported as good as usual, and, with that exception, there is hardly any news. The Queen entertained the wandering philosophers from Aberdeen last week, as we have elsewhere recorded; and a privy council has been necessitated by the gravity of the state of public affairs. The Comte de Flandres, the Earl of Elgin, the Duke of Richmond, and Her Majesty's visitors generally have taken their leave, and Sir James Clark appears to be almost the only guest. Prince Arthur has been out with his father to learn the noble sport of deer stalking; but the Court Journal has not chronicled the number of fat bucks which have fallen to his rifle. The Queen has this week visited the Falls of the Garribalt, and several other picturesque spots within a drive of Balmoral; and among the families honoured with her visits have been the Earl and Countess of Fife and the Farquharsons at Invercauld.

FOREIGN NEWS.—From the letters of various correspondents there would seem to be a spirit of opposition to the government arising in the French journals, that will only be laid by the strong hand of power, if it can be laid at all. Of this spirit we may judge when we find it stated that the Gironde newspaper ventured to call the attempts to place Prince Napoleon on the Tuscan throne a "Napoleonic conspiracy," for which a warning was inflicted upon it. The government seems fully alive to its danger, however, and the Moniteur of yesterday contained a new imperial manifesto on the subject of the press. The official journal says:—"Under the pretence that the press is not free several journals direct their attacks against the decree of February, 1852, which go beyond the extreme limits of discussion, and are wanting in a respect for the law, which is inseparable with the royal exercise of liberty. Against writers, who have forgotten this, the government could have made use of the weapons at its command. Not wishing to do so the day after the measure spontaneously granted by the emperor, which released the press from the consequences of warnings received, the government, faithful to the principles of moderation, will, nevertheless, not fail in performing the duty which is imposed upon it, to make the law respected, and therefore informs the papers that it is decided no longer to tolerate these polemical excesses, which can only be considered as party manoeuvres." The King of the Belgians has left Biarritz for Genoa, via Marseille, where it is said he will confer with several important personages. It is supposed that the journey of his majesty is in some way connected with the proposal of a congress at Brussels. The report of the foundation of a kingdom in Central Italy, under the rule of the Count of Flanders, has been positively denied, and declared to be without foundation. Paris letters say that the policy of the Emperor of the French is one of delay, for the purpose of enabling the son-in-law of Victor Emmanuel to gain an important advantage. The French press is now assuming a rather defiant attitude towards the imperial government in reference to the reiterated restrictive laws against journalism. A telegram from Turin, dated the 24th, brings a summary of the reply of the King of Sardinia to the address of the Romagnese deputation. It is remarkable for the same ambiguity that marked his replies to the other deputations. He said:—"I am grateful for the wishes of the people of the Romagna, of which you are the interpreter before me. As a Catholic sovereign I shall myself always retain a profound and unalterable respect for the superior hierarchy of the church. As an Italian prince I am reminded that Europe, having in view the state of the Romagnese people, who demanded prompt and efficient measures of reform, has accepted formal obligations towards your country. I receive your wishes, and, strong by the rights conferred upon me, I will support your cause before the great powers. You may rely on their sense of justice. You may rely on the generous love of our country of the French Emperor, who will accomplish the great work of reparation he has so powerfully begun, and who, assured of the gratitude of Italy, and seeing the moderation which has characterized your resolution during the late moments of incertitude, will recognize that in the Romagna the mere hope of a national government suffices to put an end to civil disorders. When your numerous volunteers arrived, during the days of the national struggle, to enrol themselves under my flag, you knew that Piedmont would not go to war for herself alone, but for our common country. To-day the unanimity of your wishes and the order which you observe at home is very gratifying to my heart, and nothing better could ensure your future destiny. Europe will recognize that it is her common duty, and also her common interest, to finish the era of disorder, and thereby satisfy the legitimate desires of the people." A letter from Milan, dated Sept. 21, gives a lively picture of the state of feeling in the Milanese. The arrival of the deputations from Modena and Parma afforded the people of Milan an opportunity of displaying their love of liberty, and the illuminations upon that occasion appear to have been entirely planned by the inhabitants—the government, as such, taking no part in them. From Palermo we have news which singularly illustrates the state of society in Sicily. "Some hundreds of persons" have been arrested there, their sole offence being that they hissed the chief of police! We have papers from Madrid of the 22nd. The semi-official Correspondencia Autografa states that Spain is only seeking redress of grievances from Morocco, and does not contemplate conquest. The Tuscan Monitor says the Tuscans want to carry out the programme of the emperor, because the welfare of Italy and the peace of Europe require it. The States of Denmark have been opened. The president, in his speech, said:—"The government and the council of the kingdom had but to choose between federal execution and the suppression of the whole common constitution, in so far as it relates to Holstein and Lauenburg. Government has chosen the latter, although it does not recognize the competency of the federal execution." The Wiener Zeitung publishes an imperial letter addressed to the Minister of Finances, ordering the appointment of a commission, with special legislative powers, to organize extensive forms in the system of direct taxation. The president and secretary to the commission are Count Hartig, and Baron de Kalchberg, and the other members consist chiefly of the ratepayers in the different provinces. The Messenger of the Tyrol and Vorarlberg contains an official communication to the effect that the Emperor of Austria had, by an autograph letter, authorized the archduke governor to cause the committee of the States to deliberate on the projected provincial statute for the Tyrol and Vorarlberg. The Emperor of Russia left Saratov on Friday, for Moscow, from whence he was to proceed direct to Toula. The eastern mission of Lord Elgin seems to have miscarried.

in another direction, for the trade between England and Japan has been suspended, notwithstanding the recent treaty obtained by his lordship. And it is observable that the Japan treaty has, for the present, come to nothing, for the same reason that the Chinese might as well be torn up, namely, our determination to force a resident agent upon the government. The treaty with Japan made the same stipulation in this respect as did the treaty with China, but the Japanese feel this to be a very sore point, involving their dignity, and have therefore sought to confine foreigners to a small island a few miles from their capital, rather than allow them to enter the capital itself. The immediate consequence has been, as we have said, the stoppage of trade; there has been no bloodshed at Japan on this account.—The Bey of Tunis died on the 22nd inst. In consequence of the energetic measures taken by Rhasnodar, tranquillity has been maintained. During the interregnum, which lasted thirty-six hours, the presumptive heir, Sidi Sadok, was recognized as successor. He was installed as Bey on the 24th inst., and took the oaths to observe the constitution and laws granted to the country by his predecessor.—By the arrival of the Africa we have New York intelligence to the 14th inst. A fire had occurred at Halifax, Nova Scotia, destroying property to the value of a million dollars. It is asserted that the concentration of such a large portion of the United States fleet in New Granadian ports was purely accidental; they are merely there for orders and supplies. A revolution has taken place in Costa Rica; the president was seized in bed and carried off to Guatemala.—With regard to Italy, the Moniteur of Wednesday contains the following manifesto:—"Several foreign papers assert that the solution of the affairs of Italy will be obstructed by the desire which the emperor has to create in Italy a kingdom for a prince of his house. These rumours need not be refuted; in order to deprive them of every foundation it suffices, without mentioning the engagements made at Villafranca, to remind the public of the acts and words of the emperor both before and after that epoch." The second imperial manifesto on the French press has not acted as oil thrown on the troubled waters. It has, according to our Paris correspondent, created a profound sensation, and has roused a spirit of determined opposition which the French government may soon have occasion to rue. The Presse has a most cutting remark. The "Moniteur manifesto," it says, "is quite justifiable; it attacks the press, which is attacking the empire. Prince Napoleon was to arrive in Paris yesterday and the emperor is expected on Monday.—Advices have been received from Constantinople to the 21st inst. The journals from Constantinople announce that numerous arrests had taken place, in consequence of the discovery of a political conspiracy; but few details of the affair are published, as the journals state they have been forbidden to make comments on the matter until the judicial examinations have been concluded. Private letters state that the conspiracy was to have broken out on Saturday, but on the previous Thursday it was denounced by Serjeant Ariza. Vigorous measures have been taken by the Government. Two frigates have been moored before the Seraglio, and the squadron had arrived the day the mail left. Among the principal leaders of the conspiracy were two generals of division—Djaffir, of the Artillery, and Hossein, Governor of the Dardanelles—several colonels and ulemas. Djaffir was drowned in the Bosphorus. No Christians were compromised in the plot. The plan of the conspiracy was cleverly organized. The Europeans and the foreign ambassadors were to be protected by the generals of the rebels. The concession of the Bank has been made to Messrs. Gladstone and Rodocanachi.—The official journal of Darmstadt contains a decree for the renewal of the ordinance of 1850, which prohibits all subjects of Hesse Darmstadt from becoming members of any political society, established either in the interior or abroad.—The Senate of Frankfort-on-the-Maine has rejected the appeal made by the National Association against the refusal of the Director of the Police to sanction its statutes.—At Rome on Monday the Sacred College met, and appointed seventeen bishops. In the annual allocution of the Pope, his holiness alludes to the National Assembly of Bologna, and refers to the censure expressed by that assembly against the papal government. In conclusion, his holiness expresses a hope that the Romagnese will return to their allegiance to the holy see.

HOME NEWS—Cabinet councils at Downing-street have, three times this week, necessitated the presence of ministers in town, and the premier has at length dismissed them to their rural ease.—The Registrar General's return for last week presents a more favourable aspect than of late, and deaths have declined to the point from which they rose in June, being for the week 1058. There were only 61 deaths from diarrhoea. The births amounted to 1752. The week's mortality in the City was much below the average, the number of deaths being 40, whereas the average number for the corresponding period for the last three years was 50.—A Court of Common Council was held on Tuesday, the Lord Mayor presiding. After the transaction of some other business, the following motion was made by Mr. Henry Harris:—"That this court should not consent to any bill in Parliament having for its object the better regulation of the corporation of London, that does not protect the rights and privileges of liverymen of this City." To this proposition Mr. Abrahams moved the previous question, whereupon a discussion ensued, after which the amendment was negatived, and the original motion carried by 49 to 33. Deputy White then brought up a report from the City lands committee touching the Central Criminal Court, which, after some discussion, was agreed to and sent back for execution. Before the Court rose it agreed to grant, at the request of the Lord Mayor, the use of the Guildhall to the London Rifle Brigade.—The City Commissioners of Sewers have also met at Guildhall; Mr. Deputy Christie in the chair. The business was not very important.—The revising barrister for the Middlesex registration has held his sixth court within the polling district of Mile-end. A great number of cases were disposed of, and the court adjourned till this day. Mr. M'Christie also held his court for the City of London lists at the Guildhall.—Thomas Stowell appeared on a summons, before Sir R. W. Carden, at the Guildhall, on the 27th, charged with conspiring to defraud Messrs. Lockhart and Sons, manufacturers, Kirkaldy. It was alleged that goods had been ordered, and when obtained were disposed of at a sum considerably below that of cost price. The case was adjourned for additional evidence, and in default of bail the defendant, who has long followed the profession of common informer, was conveyed to prison.—The inquest on the bodies of the unfortunate men killed in the recent explosion of the boiler of an agricultural steam-engine at Lewes, has been resumed, and several witnesses were examined as to the state of the boiler, their evidence tending to show that the boiler was an old one, and constructed of an inferior material. The inquiry was again adjourned for the production of evidence of a scientific character. Two more victims have been added to the list of killed. One of the men conveyed to the Brighton Hospital died on Tuesday. His name was Cox, and he was an agricultural labourer attending the fair on business; the unfortunate boy Woodhall also died on Sunday night from the frightful injuries he received. This makes six in all killed by the explosion.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, yesterday, a first class certificate has been granted to Mr. Thomas Skeels Fryer, who had traded as a brickmaker and brewer at Chatteris, in the Isle of Ely. He had been in business for forty years, and during that period he had not only sustained a character of the highest respectability, but had been a magistrate for thirty years, chairman of the bench of magistrates, deputy lieutenant, and high sheriff of Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire. The commissioner, in awarding the certificate, said he felt bound to express a wish that Mr. Fryer might be again reinstated in the high position he formerly occupied, and to declare that he left the court without the slightest stain upon his reputation.—A very different kind of case was that of J. Hayes, a wine merchant, who had carried on business at 55, Old Broad-street, and in Gloucester-street, Pimlico, and who also applied for a certificate. He had been seven months in prison. The commissioner, in awarding a certificate of the lowest class, observed that but for the imprisonment already suffered, he should have ordered a considerable suspension, in consequence of the bankrupt having permitted a single creditor (the Union Bank) to sweep off the whole of his property, leaving not a farthing for the rest.—An adjournment was ordered in the case of Cuthbert Anthony Clarke, who had traded as a foreign warehouseman in Newgate-street, London, and in Slater-street, Liverpool, and who applied for a certificate.—A terrible explosion, attended with great loss of life, took place on Tuesday forenoon on the premises of Messrs. Pursall and Phillips, percussion cap manufacturers, Whittall-street, Birmingham. There were eighty women and girls in the manufactory at the time. The explosion originated in a room where the caps are "primed" with the detonating powder, and where there were five females at work. As soon as the fire engines had obtained a mastery over the flames a search was made amongst the ruins, and the result was, that up to seven o'clock no fewer than seventeen bodies had been recovered. Seventeen, who were more or less injured, were taken to the general hospital, and one of them died on the way thither. About one-half of the patients were able to leave the hospital last night, but five are in a precarious condition. One result of this catastrophe will be the compulsory removal of all such manufactories outside the town of Birmingham. This is the third explosion which have occurred during the last three months, one of them having six victims.—The revising barrister, W. M. Best, Esq., held his first court at Kennington on Wednesday, for the revision of the East Surrey registration lists. Much interest was excited in the proceedings, the objections being nearly three thousand in all. An adjournment took place. At the Guildhall Mr. M'Christie resumed his revision of the City of London lists, and adjourned till Friday. Mr. Shadwell also held his seventh court for the Middlesex lists at Bonner's-road, Victoria Park. A large number of objections were got through, and an adjournment was agreed to.—Hughes, the absconding bankrupt solicitor, who was brought in custody from Australia, underwent another examination at the Guildhall police court yesterday. The prisoner was again remanded for a week to allow of the evidence of certain witnesses at present in the country being heard for the completion of the case.—The four men, Couch, Merrydew, Baillie, and Simpson, remanded at Clerkenwell police court on a charge of stealing a large number of carts and vans in different parts of the metropolis, have been fully committed for trial.—Alderman Gabriel, of Queenhithe Ward, and Alderman Phillips, of Farringdon Ward Within, the gentlemen elected to fill the office of Sheriffs of London, and Sheriff of Middlesex, have been sworn in at a Common Hall of the Livery, at the Guildhall, before the Lord Mayor and other civic functionaries. The new Sheriffs having subscribed the usual oaths, Messrs. Eagleton and Gammon also took the ordinary oaths as undersheriffs. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Lord Mayor and Aldermen proceeded to the Aldermen's Court, where the new sheriffs were formally inducted.—The funds yesterday were for a moment firm at 95½, but in the later hours they dropped, and the quotation returned to 95¼ to ¾ for money and the account. Foreign stocks and shares were not quite so animated as on Tuesday, but prices on the average were pretty fairly maintained. In consequence of the final adjustment of the half-monthly accounts at the Stock Exchange the value of money rather advanced, but for ordinary discount the terms continued to range from 2½ to 2¾. Bullion continued to flow into the Bank, a further sum of £20,000 of the late arrivals having been sent into that establishment.

INDIA, CHINA, AND COLONIAL.—The advices from Calcutta state that the intelligence received from China has not had a very encouraging effect upon affairs in that presidency, and it was feared that peace would not be settled on a satisfactory and lasting basis. No great alteration had occurred in the state of the exchange, but trade was rather limited owing to the merchants being desirous of waiting the delivery of the letters by the incoming mail. A correspondence from Kiachta states, that the loss of the Chinese in the affair at the Taku forts was 1000 men killed; the number of wounded is not stated. And that the American minister had arrived at Peking, but is kept confined. Captain Vansittart is reported as having died of his wounds. Admiral Hope's state of health is serious. In the north and at Shanghai several Europeans have been murdered by the Chinese, which has led to further complications. Being yet entirely dependent upon non-official sources for information of the causes which led to the Peiho tragedy, the recent news from China must have been read with the greater attention; and in reference to the rioting and bloodshed at Shanghai, the telegraph gives the account of it in such a way as to leave an impression that it was connected with the new rupture in our negotiations with the Chinese. But this is not the case. The cause has to be traced to the kidnapping which the abominable coolie traffic creates, and the fatal consequences that have arisen would have come to pass, no matter though Mr. Bruce had no occasion to return to Shanghai. As to the course which our Government, in conjunction with the Government of France, intend to pursue in China, we remain much in the dark. All that slips out is only in the way of rumour. The last report is that of the Overland Mail, which asserts that Major-General Hope Grant is to have the command of the expeditionary force to China, and that no troops are to be despatched from England, but a force of 10,000 is to be sent from India, the selection of which will be left to the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief. This statement, however, does not agree with the statements that have appeared in the French journals, the editors of which profess to have more knowledge on such topics than we have ourselves. The steamer Celt has arrived at Plymouth, with the Cape mails, bringing dates from Table Bay to the 21st August. Great regret prevailed in the colony at the recall of Governor Grey. A severer drought than was ever known existed in the colony, and an enormous amount of stock had been lost, and the distress among the farmers was very intense.

COMMERCIAL AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts state that business had become more tranquil, although the operations were still in some departments on a satisfactory scale. At Manchester and Birmingham trade was not particularly active, but it was considered to present encouraging symptoms. In the neighbourhood of Norwich, Nottingham, and Sheffield, the transactions were unimportant, but at Wolverhampton the Continental orders exhibited an increase, with a gradually expanding business. The operations at Newcastle and Leicester showed that but for the late intelligence from China, greater activity would have been observable; as it was, the position of affairs was not unfavourable, the hosiery department in the latter town being remarkably active. At Halifax, Huddersfield, and Leeds a good steady trade was transacting, though there was no remarkable variation in the general quotations. The traffic returns of the railways in the United Kingdom for the week ending the 17th September amounted to £549,490, and for the corresponding week of 1858 to £513,290, showing an increase of £36,200. The gross receipts of the eight railways having their termini in the metropolis amounted to £246,963, and for the corresponding period of last year to £230,993, showing an increase of £15,965. The receipts on the other lines in the United Kingdom amounted to £302,527, and for the corresponding period of last year to £282,292, showing an increase of £20,235, which, added to the increase on the metropolitan lines, makes the total increase £36,200, as compared with the corresponding week of 1858. In the port of London during the past week there has been rather less activity. The number of ships announced inwards at the Customhouse as having arrived from foreign ports amounted to 270; there were six from Ireland, and 94 colliers. The entries outwards were 121, and those cleared were 90, besides 15 in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been seven vessels—viz., five for Port Phillip of 4748 tons, one for Sydney of 918 tons, and one for Portland Bay of 432 tons; the total amounting to 6098 tons. By the China intelligence it appears that a moderate business had been transacted in Canton and Hong-Kong, but there was not any great extent of operations, the principal demand being to supply immediate wants. Silk had improved, and tea was in better request at the late advance, but the free shipments to this country induced an impression that the trade would not be interrupted, and that there would eventually be some reaction in value. As the disposition was to facilitate exports with all possible despatch, supplies would be forwarded as quickly as possible, and already the statistics exhibited an increase in favour of the present season. The proceedings to-day at the meeting of the Brazilian Land and Mining Company were not very interesting, and were ultimately adjourned to receive the report of the agent sent out to effect the realization of the assets of the National Brazilian Association, in connection with which the new company was started.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

On Wednesday a favourable day and a most attractive programme of amusements and music attracted a great number of visitors to the palace on the occasion of the benefit of Bro. F. Strange, the contractor of the refreshment department, and he showed himself fully alive to the necessity of providing special attractions for the visitors. Bro. Strange arranged an English vocal concert, engaged the Cremona band, and obtained the services of the fine band of the Coldstream Guards and the juvenile band of Caversham House Academy. Bro. Strange wisely fixed the price of admission at one shilling; and, hoping for fine weather, waited the result of the announcements he had put forth of all these attractions. The vocal concert was supported by artists whose names are not generally included in Crystal Palace concert programmes. But, nevertheless, the operatic selections which they gave were exceedingly well received, and the selections from Lucia, Maritana, and the madrigal "Down in the flowery vale," especially deserve mention. Although, also, a comic singer is not usually to be heard at the palace, Mr. E. W. Mackney, the well known favourite of the Canterbury Hall, was enthusiastically applauded in his violin solo and comic song, "Tother side of Jordan," and although it raised some curious associations to see a nigger melodist occupying the Handel Festival orchestra, his performance hit the popular taste, and everything he attempted was encored. Out of doors the aquatic sports on the tidal lake excited great interest, and although the pair oared and scullers' matches which took place were not invested with all the excitement of the Henley or Thames regatta, still, despite the smallness of the sheet of water on which the events came off, a large amount of enthusiasm was manifested by the spectators. The pair oared race for two silver cups was decided in three heats. While the aquatic sports were going on the great fountains claimed attention, and although the wind was high, the elegant water devices were seen to a great advantage. After the fountains the attention of the visitors was concentrated in the balloon ascent. And at six o'clock according to announcement, Bro. Strange's second grand annual banquet was to take place. That some little delay occurred before the dinner was ready, and that it was long after six before active operations commenced, will be readily imagined, when it is stated that upwards of 450 guests sat down to table. However, from the moment knives and forks were set in motion the greatest conviviality and good fellowship prevailed; and when Mr. Newton, chairman in the absence of Mr. Bass, detained at home by a domestic affliction, gave out the usual loyal toasts, they were responded to with the utmost enthusiasm, which is always a characteristic of such festivals. Other toasts followed, including that of health and success to Bro. Strange; and, shortly after this had been drunk, with the usual honours, the company dispersed, very well pleased, apparently, with the day and evening's entertainment. The number present during the day amounted to 19,338; being, admissions on payment 16,192, by season tickets 3,146.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—The English Opera company commences its season on Monday next, with "Dinorah." The cast of the principal parts will be as follows:—Joel, Mr. Stanley; Corentin, Mr. W. Harrison; and Dinorah, Miss Louisa Pyne; and beyond a doubt "Dinorah" will be as popular as "Satanella," and will melt us each evening with all the lyric pathos of which Miss Pyne is capable. The public will hear Miss Pyne sing "Ombra leggiera," and she will sing it twenty times as often as Miolan Carvalho, and will be applauded, and Dinorah will run after her little goat, and the little goat will perversely run away from Dinorah. The Queen has taken a box for the season, and the list of supporters comprises many fashionable names.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"P. H., No. 419."—It is not only incorrect, but distinctly opposed to the Constitution, to give what is called the P.M.'s degree to candidates for exaltation to the Royal Arch, under the English Constitution.

"Z."—On the confirmation of the resolution of Grand Lodge, expunging No. 19 from the roll of Lodges, the Mount Sinai Chapter will cease to exist, until permission be obtained from Grand Chapter to attach it to some other Lodge.

BRO. WIGGINTON.—We have received from this brother suggestions and plans for a Masonic Hall and Club House, which shall receive due attention.

"A YOUNG MASON" must have forgotten his obligation or he would never have asked us the question.

"P. S."—The real number of Lodges in England is rather under one hundred, including the recent creations not yet consecrated.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1869.

CLASSICAL THEOLOGY.—IV.

MERCURY AND JUNE.

WE are all well aware that in order to acquire a thorough knowledge of an art or a science it is absolutely requisite, in examining their theories, to enter into their practical parts. Until then we cannot make ourselves accurately acquainted with the principles upon which they are founded. Something of this manipulation, or handling, must be considered particularly necessary in the study of mythology, since, without this it cannot be understood. This mechanical investigation, or analytical pursuit of it however, belongs to image worship and the evil one, and is among the arts and sciences untaught, forbidden, or rather hidden as sorcery. Nevertheless the true key to these secret depths may be found in the Bible. And therein is there not involved a far more important study—a study of all studies the most profound, and yet in itself so simple as to be easily mastered by all, although few have attained it, because few have humbled themselves as they ought. Consequently the mythological student, in a maze of difficulties, is too often tempted to relinquish his pursuit with the conviction impressed on his mind that it is either altogether fabulous, or else a history so perplexingly intricate and ancient as to be totally confounded and incomprehensible. This is not the case, since it may well be said whatever expands the range of human intellect increases our enjoyments, and what is of vastly more moment, leads us, as we have just intimated, to the tree of knowledge, fast by the tree of life, to partake of their fruit without a trespass and as our justified right, by our proper study of theology. “Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.” “When ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.”

Holy writ is not more wonderful as a history than it is for its ghostly truth. Speculative teaching is as unsound as it is unsatisfactory. There are two gates to certain instruction and immortal life, the strait gate and narrow way, and the wide gate and broad way. Every page, as relatively compared of the Old and New Testaments, guides our attention to the subject of good and evil spirits. Yet, although the Lord has himself said “Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven,” how few there are of the Christian church, who, if they have never seen a vision, or fancied they have heard the voice, or felt the touch of a ghostly being, will believe, or have been rightly taught to comprehend, that there are such things as visible ghosts and a real shadowy existence. We are told “nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest; neither anything hid that shall not be known and come abroad.”

The mysteries of good and evil, actual and vital angelic service and demoniac possession are believed by many whose living and interest are in the church; but for some reason it is thought we ought not to approve of such opinions any longer; they are considered unservient to the church (which we venture to assert has led to much infidelity); they are shunned as something to be feared by the clergy—and this we will venture, on strong grounds to condemn, as an error. According to the gospel of St. Luke, chap. x. “In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are delivered to me of my Father, and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.” And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, “Blessed are the eyes which see the things which ye see: for I tell you, that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.”

We may here observe that even if our extracts from the holy scriptures were not required (as they are) to help our readers to understand some remarkable truths—but were otherwise apposite, without being dragged into the subject—as we love God without fear, save the fear to displease him, we should not apologize for their being here, or for our making a proper use of sacred things—far from it.

In the great sacrifices to Mercurius or Hermes the Romans used to join together the statues of Mercury with those of Minerva, and call them Hermathenæ, that is, of both sexes, from Hermaphroditus, the son of Mercury—if we follow Cicero, Pausanias, and other learned ancients, they used to sacrifice to both deities upon the one altar. Those who escaped from any imminent danger always made a feast and burnt offering to Mercury. This consisted of a calf, and milk and honey; the tongue, out of honour and in reverence to Mercury’s lingual gifts, with a great deal of ceremony, they cast into the fire, and then the sacrifice was finished. The divination by sacrifice, that is, by the aspect and inspection of victims, called ἱεροσκοπία, but in Latin extispicium, included the divinations by the flame, fire, and smoke of the sacrifices. They who presided over them or practised these arts were called either ἱερομάντεις or ἱεροσκοποι. Sometimes there were used other magical inquiries and predictions, as those respecting the examination of the blood, and more particularly so in the divination by the dead—as of the Ψυχμαντεία, aut vero Psychomanteum—or let us say, as within the circle where they called up the spirits of the departed. The symbol or representative of Mercury was with the Greeks a herald. Thus, in their most solemn Eleusinia, he who after being initiated to the mysteries had the dignity conferred upon him of ἱεροφάντης, was supposed to be, and was by them meant, as the type of the Creator. He had three coadjutors; a torchbearer, typical of the sun; a herald, κήρυξ, a type of Mercury; and a minister, τον ἐπὶ βωμον, an emblem of the moon. The mystical dress of the initiated was deemed sacred, and kept for the Eleusinian occasions and festivals; when it was worn out it was consecrated to the two great goddesses Ceres and Proserpine, perhaps as an emblematical treaty of union between earth and hell as shown in the mother and the daughter. The feasts of Eleusis were celebrated at Athens and other cities in Greece once in every five years, and lasted from the fifteenth of the month Boedromion to the twenty-third, nine days, during which time it was not lawful to capture fugitives, to seize criminals, or to commence any kind of judiciary suit; to disobey these regulations subjected the offender to a fine of a thousand drachmæ; and under a fine of six thousand drachmæ, even ladies were prohibited to ride in a chariot, or an Athenian car, or in anything that gave them an air of superiority over the many who were looked upon as equal and fraternal by the wise ordinance of these great state civil and religious festivities. Nor can we refrain here from saying, that the ancient Greeks, when the city of Jerusalem did not lack idols, and the Athenians themselves could reckon not less, but far more than a hundred thousand deities, still made wisdom and virtue the foundation of their religion. In that olden time a citizen of Athens could not be admitted a member of its great tribunal unless he was known to be just, virtuous, and religious. With us women are considered inadmissible to sacred functions, but among the Greeks they were not. The consequence was, as might have been expected, that in the place of virgins at last they had to substitute old women; this did not answer. Nevertheless at first the priests and priestesses were drawn by lot from the sons and daughters of the most distinguished families; they were besides virgins esteemed of the most irreproachable conduct and reputation.

The vice of drunkenness was by the ancient Greeks ad-

judged so infamous, that if the drunkard committed a crime during his intoxication he was more severely punished than he would have been had he been sensible of the act, or sober when he committed it. But human laws, however wisely constructed on the principles of virtue and wisdom, are but human laws—are still but fallible, without a divine superintendence. We shall be able, we trust, as we go on, to show how an idolatrous religion must end in its own subversion; it did so end with this refined and philosophic people so soon as the gospel was disseminated. And for this simple reason, because the good in it was subordinate to the evil of it. Taking Solon for our guide, we should say the most perfect Pagan religion was the Grecian. At first the Greeks, like many other early nations, instinctively, that is, by the promptings of the soul, as created beings, sought God, the Creator and Saviour—not as his sons and daughters, nor as “his creatures,” but as an unknown God, in his works, and not in himself—in plain fact, as the “Ignotus Deus.” The earth, the sky, the sea, the sun, the moon, the stars, and all the host of heaven were worshipped by them, and to them they paid divine homage. Their religious duties they performed in sacred places; these consisted of three—prayers, sacrifices, and lustrations. Their object in praying was to obtain some desired good or avert some expected evil. In their ceremonies, they pressed the hand on the mouth before the deity of their adoration, and then extended it towards the image or the place where its emblem was kept. This ceremony, to substitute the Latin word for the Greek, was termed adorare. They usually prayed standing—in great danger or difficulty they knelt. They turned themselves towards the sun, so that they might look towards the east. In supplicating some bright celestial orb, by them deified, they used the form of lifting up the hands. Now all this appears to be very innocent. There is not much harm in turning oneself round to look towards the east, nor in lifting up our hands to some “bright particular star,” if we knew of nothing better to do; yet we might do many things perchance worse. However, when as a consequence of worshipping “other gods,” and many a god, instead of the one Almighty, we discover among the ceremonies of this first duty, without considering the others, that they stretched forth their hands towards the sea, if it was that element they were imploring, and that they smote the earth to invoke and address the infernal deities—such a spiritual Babel, such a scattering of prayers, are evidence in themselves that such a religion can be no religion at all—or it must be of the synagogue of Satan—the religion of Beelzebub (Baal). This is true with respect to heathen theology and its worship; yet the Greeks wished to be religious. The spirit of the true regenerated religion had never entirely abandoned them from the time that Attica was first peopled and Greece was known by the name of Javan, who was the son of Japhet. No sooner was the word of holy truth preached unto them than they recognized it, and St. Paul found all those who had that spirit in them soon became Christians. With Socrates, Plato, and the Peripatetics, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul was distinct from the belief in the immortality of the spirit; they had no doubt about the existence of the “Manes,” only of the eternity of the “Animæ” had they any doubts.

Contemporaneously with the adoption into their language of the names of the Egyptian divinities, the Greeks built temples in their honour adorned with their statues, and on them bestowed divine worship, in imitation of what they had seen in Egypt, whose people, perhaps, sought to imitate the Hebrews in constructing the innermost sanctuary, or sacred recess of their temples, the adyton of the Greeks, wherein they kept the emblems of their most high gods; doubtless they thought that these partook of the divine nature, which is not to be confounded with the fabulous character of them.

To unite two meanings in a symbol of Mercury both the Grecians and Romans usually hung a purse to his statue, containing a valuable piece of information in the place of a piece of money, to wit, his name of Dolius, the signification of which is, that he was the god of gain and the president of commerce, and therefore treachery and fraud were often consequences of traffic and profit.

Mercury is represented with wings. Homer has encased his gods in armour, and Milton buckled on his spirits strong and loud sounding harness: we are informed of the spasm that ensued in lopping off the shadowy limb which, like air, yielded and retaining its body undivided; of course it was beneath the great genius of the poet to mention how the mending of the armour was accomplished. They gave to these gods and spirits wings. We do not forget that the angels are sometimes recorded as being pennated; but the wings of Mercury were ridiculous, the ancients bestowed a pair on his shoes with the name of talaria; and a pair on his hat, or basin helmet, calling it his petasus, for since he was the messenger of the gods, they would have it he should run as well as fly; at all events, as Virgil says:—

“——Primum pedibus talaria nectit
Aurea, quæ sublimem alis sive æquora supra
Seu terram rapido pariter cum flumine portant.”

“His golden pinions on his feet he binds,
And flying, soars upon the lofty winds
O’er earth and sea, from realms to realms on high
With instant speed they bear him through the sky.”

We do not know whether this swiftness of motion, or his debit and credit, procured for him his rather bad name. He kept good company, and it is said “birds of a feather flock together.” Therefore, we are not going to rob him of his other pair of wings, the mystical mark of his sovereign power, namely, his magical wand, or rod caduceus:—

“——Ille patris magni parere parabat
Imperio,
Tum virgam capit.” * * *

With it he not only sealed the eyes in sleep, soothed the passions and appeased the anger of mortals, but also to conciliate the very immortals of—

“High heaven’s bright towers and low hell’s dark caves.”*

This faculty, or supernaturally pacific virtue was, for the first time by Mercury perceived to be in the rod, since it had been made a gift by Apollo, when upon his travels he witnessed a combat between two serpents. And, like some other great events and discoveries, it was brought about by the chance of cause and effect. He placed it betwixt them, and they became at once so mutually charmed and reconciled as to fondly embrace each other and to entwine evermore fast around the rod that corrected them. It is written, “Be ye as wise as serpents.”

But to fill up the blanks in our quotation and to refer our readers to the Æneid itself, we think may, perhaps, help us both in making out some of the offices and meanings of Mercury as described by those learned men who promulgated an unheavenly religion which outspread and ramified the whole world over up to the Christian era.

“——Hac animas ille vocat Orco
Pallentes, alias sub tristia Tartara mittit;
Dat somnos, adimitque, et lumina morte resignat.”

We herein see him as the messenger, angel, or minister of the gods, raised into his right place, having full power to attend upon the dying, in order to deliver their souls from the pains of death, and to show them their way to Orcus (hell), or the nethermost pit (Tartarus), as the case might be. Nevertheless, he also restored to renewed births and new bodies those souls of the good which had been sprinkled with the waters of Lethe, and cleansed of their light offences contracted in their former humane, charitable and benevolent state of existence in this world, after having completed their full time of blissful but insensorial life in that place of the infernal dominions, abounding with long extended plains of pleasures and delights, and "verdant fields such as with heaven's may vie," called Elysium, or the Elysian fields. These souls—or, to be corrected by Virgil, "Quisque suos patimur manes," spirits, we all must bear—ere they went out from the "ivory gate," had to drink of the oblivious stream, that thereby they might lose all memory of their happiness, and all consciousness of the miseries they had heretofore to endure in the flesh; so that when they had spent many ages in these fragrant bowers and shadeiest groves of their delicious Elysium, irradiant with stars of its own and its own sun, they were made once more willing to return even to the struggles and trials homogeneous with this world.

* The Egyptians painted the face of Mercury, in his image, partly dark, as the black, on one side, and fair, as the white, on the other, to indicate that there was a god over them both whose messenger was sometimes in communication with the infernals as well as the celestials.

The psychological sages and poets of the early literary epochs, could not but comprehend the a priori of good and evil, they had an insight of the Cabalistæ and the Masorithi, from which we have gained some knowledge. On the words, "For God doth know that in the day that ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil;" and, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil"—their religion was founded and confounded. They saw, as it were, gods and devils. Their own deep analytical investigations taught them to separate the departed good from the departed evil spirits, and to classify their gods. They drove the wicked out from heaven, and awarded to the pure of soul the flowery arcades, umbrageous fountains, and perfumed and ethereal temperate air of their Elysian paradise. At the same time they saw no banishment or reformation for the disembodied, unrefined, brutish and the like unclean spirits. It is true they chained them in the deep dungeons and blazing lakes of Hades—Ἅδης; so called from his dreadful gloominess, yet for all that they thought no place could or would hold them; and that they still remained at large the torments of mankind.

Among the generally known endowments of Mercury were his arts of speaking and constructing. He is reported to have been the inventor of weights and measures, contracts and bargains, and, what is more, of letters—these honours were his own. For the harp he gave Apollo it is said, that god of the muses in return presented him with his caduceus*, which, after he had stolen the other's lyre, made them friends again; or as the strange and incomprehensible story goes, a herdsman, whose name was Battus, saw Mercury stealing from the keeping of Apollo some of King Admetus's herd of cattle on the very day on which he was born; we marvel not then how he carried away the tools of Vulcan, the cestus of Venus, and, nearly, had he not been afraid, even the thunderbolts of Jupiter, as he did his sceptre. Vexed, and in anger, Apollo upbraided him and strung his bow not prone to miss; but, skilful as he was, within that little while he had stolen his lyre and his arrows from him. The philosophical poets wished to account for the appearance of the γαλαξίας κύκλος, that is, the occurrence of that white stream or cleft† of light, ycleped the milky way, by the tale that Maia's fair babe, whilst suckled once by the unjealous Juno, let fall some of her milk upon the heavens. Ovid elegantly describes how Battus was bribed to secrecy, and in which way Hermes tried his probity.

The Romans used to set up statues where the high roads crossed, and called them "indices;" they had an arm or finger held out to indicate the way; likewise, but not in like manner, they placed them in their highways, as the Athenians did at their doors, to drive away thieves. These Cyllenian statues, or Hermæ, were images having neither hands nor feet; we cannot tell to what Plutonic period or tertiary division they belonged, but the indices must have had a first cause. Mercury had disguised himself, and Battus was overcome by his inveigling promises, thereupon the former turns the latter into a stone, denominated index. We should not either lose sight of the girdle, the magic cestus—the daified thief took it from his sister, Venus. The truth is, the ancient literati had very little reverence even for their most high deities, of whom Mercury was one; they translated them into fables, monsters, and reptiles, with inclinations vilely suitable; a little mingling of earth with heaven, and a large admixture of hell. From the beginning antagonist to the true God, what was to be expected of such a religion but the mockery of righteousness?

* Hence all ambassadors sent to arrange peace were styled caduceatores; as those who proclaimed war were termed feciales.

† Aristotle, Plato, and his scholar Eudoxus, contributed much to the development of scientific astronomy. But Herschel, instead of making that light appearance in the heavens called the milky way or galaxy, a complex of stars, seems to be of the opinion which exhibits it as an opening or gulf in the ether, upon regions of light many degrees more intensely radiant than our own.

SYMBOLISM OF COLOUR.—II.

[Continued from page 244.]

CREUTZER ("Symbolik," vol. iv. p. 593,) fully admitting the existence of polychromic symbolism, also acknowledges the difficulty of now explaining it, from one of the causes that we have before stated—the scantiness of objects on which to operate.*

Gorres' "Mythological History," i. 291, is cited that Jupiter's image was earth colour, (asch grau und feuerfarbig) ash green and fire colour; Mars of a red stone; and Phœbus golden; Mercury of a blue stone; Venus red; the temple of the moon of a green colour.

This significance of colour descended to the early church and scriptural art. Mrs. Jamieson, in her "Legendary Art," (p. 18), has some pertinent remarks on the subject, here condensed:—

"In very early art we find colours used in a symbolical sense—certain colours were appropriated to certain subjects and personages, and could not be arbitrarily applied or misapplied. In the old specimens of stained glass we find these significations scrupulously attended to, thus:—White, represented by the diamond or silver, emblem of light, religious purity—our Saviour wears white after his resurrection; it was the colour consecrated to the Virgin, who, however, never wears white except in the assumption. Red,—the ruby signified fire, divine love, the Holy Ghost. White and red roses, love and innocence,—in a bad sense, blood and war. Red and black combined, purgatory and the devil.†"

Blue or sapphire: Christ and the Virgin have red tunics and blue mantles. In Spain the Saviour's is generally a deep rich violet. To St. John the Evangelist is attributed a blue tunic and red mantle, later colours sometimes red and green.

Yellow or gold is the symbol of the sun. St. Peter wears

* He says:—"The use which the ancients made of colour in their symbolism can now only be guessed at from the general destruction of their paintings: still it might be expected a priori, that the symbolical tendency of their minds would not have despised such means, more especially under the influence of their artistic skill. The Greeks, nearer than we to nature, and living under a joyous sky, most certainly observed exactly the effect of the different tones of light, and of the manifold play of colour in nature produced in the mind. Descriptions of paintings given us by Philostratus leave us no room to doubt that both light and colour were used by them with deep purpose and the fullest intention. With Philostratus, and in an Herculean painting, Bacchus has a red garment, as attributed to him in an inscription. Winkelman refers this to the colour of wine, for which may be adduced—First, the old practice of painting the images of this deity red, and not only of this deity, but also particularly of the other pastoral deities Pan, Priapus the Satyrs; nay, even according to Plutarch, of all the other divinities. By this glaring tint it was perhaps the intention to represent the full energy of nature, and when the practice was so general, as Plutarch tells us, possibly sometimes to make these glorious old Olympians thoroughly conspicuous."

† Monsieur Portal, in his fanciful treatise "Des Couleurs Symboliques," (8vo., Paris, 1827, p. 131,) fully corroborates Mrs. Jamieson for this union of red and black. "Le noir n'est pas une couleur, mais la négation de toutes les nuances et de ce qu'elles représentent. Ainsi le rouge designera l'amour divin; uni au noir il sera le symbole de l'amour infernal, de l'égoïsme, de haine, et de toutes les passions de l'homme dégradé."

a blue mantle over yellow tunic. In a bad sense it signifies inconstancy, deceit, &c.

Violet or amethyst is worn by martyrs. In some instances Christ risen appears in a purple mantle; Mary Magdalene, who as a patron saint wears the red robe—as penitent wears blue and violet (so the beautiful recumbent Magdalene, by Corregio, at Dresden, in bright blue; a copy in the National Gallery.)

Grey, the colour of ashes, signified mourning, humility, and innocence accused; hence adopted by the Franciscans.

Black expressed the earth, darkness, and its prince. In some illuminated MS., Jesus, in the temptation, wears a black robe. White and black united signify humiliation or mourning; hence adopted by the Dominicans and Carmelites.

Creutzer ("Symbolik" ii. p. 597, note,) mainly agreeing with Jamieson on the Christian symbolical colours, gives some points of comparison with those attributed to their heroes by the early German writers, citing some as his authority.

Jesus wears in old paintings, almost invariably a red garment, as Sol novus, a name given him by the Christian Fathers: so also the ancient deities of the sun. In the Nibelungen the hero Siegfrit is clothed in white (v. 1610.)

"—— Den helden vil gemeit

Von sne-blacher varve, ir ros unt auch ir chleit."

"The hero well disposed,

Of snow white colour was his steed and eke his robe."

And Flos, the hero of another poem, (Pal. MS. No. 362,) is painted red and white, whilst the significantly named Blautflos is blue. Again, in the Nibelungen Hagen and Dankwert, as the enemies of Siegfrit, appear black as devils (v. 1621.)

"Mit in chamen Dauchwart aut auch Hagen

Wir horen sagenmore, wie die degene

Von raben swarzer varve trügen richin chleit."

"With him arrived Dankwart and eke Hagen

We've heard tell report, how these thanes

Of raven black colour wore rich robes."

Notice is also given of the illustration by Grimm of a remarkable instance of colouring in the old poems of Tituril and Purcwal.

We can, however, rival these ancient Teutons in a master of poetic colouring, in our own Spenser, by a number of examples (due to the industry of Burnet, in his Treatise on Colours) collected from the Faerie Queen, where the attribute is, generally too, coupled with a moral purpose.

Thus:—

"Humbleness, as Humilita was, an aged aire all clothed in grey."—Canto x. 5.

"His Reverence: right cleanly clad in comely sad attire."—ib. 7.

"His Faith, Fidelia: she was arrayed all in lily white."—ib. 13.

"His Hope, Speranza: was clad in blue that her beseeemed well."—ib. 14.

"His Charity, Charissa: well in yellow robes arrayed."—ib. 30.

"His Falsehood — clad in scarlet red,

Purpled with gold and pearl of rich array."—Canto xi. 13.

"His Praise desire: In a long purple pall whose skirt with gold Was fretted all about was she arrayed."—Canto ix. 37.

"His Idleness — The nurse of sin Arrayed in habit black and amice thin."—Canto iv. 18.

The same author gives us also some further illustrations (p. 38). Colours have also a fitness according to the several personages represented. Thus, we read of the azure zone of Venus; the sea green garments of Neptune; and the red mantle of Mars. Yellow, observes Mr. Craig (Lectures, p. 175), is understood to represent power; purple, authority; violet, humility; green, servitude. Upon this explanation we are enabled to account for the invariable practice among painters of portraying the blessed Saviour of mankind in garments of red and blue; the red implies his comprehensive love to the human race, as well as the power to fulfil the dictates of that love; the blue his divine origin.

That the symbols in use amongst the various nations of antiquity we have just passed in review, from the earliest period in the Assyrian and Egyptian people, and thence descending to the Greeks and Romans, were afterwards taken up by the church—that these have not yet lost their significance and value in the minds of the people—may be proved from the existing and corresponding superstitions still prevalent amongst our own peasantry and the vulgar of every nation throughout Europe; our vouchers will be drawn from the folklore of them all—and to be enabled to compare them with the above more remote or classic examples, we will take the colours seriatim. As the objects of popular belief are the mere creations of fancy, the clothing these airy nothings in the mythical colours of antiquity can be but a vestige of the same ideas which ruled the earliest choice, an undercurrent of the primæval creed which still silently and unobserved guides the majority of the credulous or uneducated.

Red was the favourite mythic colour as of antiquity. If we but refer back to first tales of childhood, we find Little Red Riding Hood and Mother Red Cap possibly the earliest impressions we received of colour; and in the robin redbreasts our first infantile affection for the piety with which they covered up the babes in the wood; but as the choice amongst the feathered inhabitants was open, it colour may have given the impulse for its selection. Grimm tells us, however, that it had also its connexion with thunder (D.M., p. 167, note); "But the sitting redbreast or red tail seems to call down the thunder; was it from its red plumage that it was sacred to the red bearded god?" Both Jupiter and Thor are represented as red beards. For the latter, vide Grimm, p. 161. In the olden northern Sagas he (Thor) is always shown with a red beard, however his other attributes may differ. This must be referred to the fiery appearance of his lightnings, and p. 965, Douar (another name for Thor) is red bearded; and the proverb says, "Roth bart, dinevels art," redbeard, devil-fear." It requires, however, some consideration therefore to believe that the christian royal convert, St. Olaf of Norway's, red beard should have a similar intent, unless applied by his enemies, the still unconverted pagans. We need not, indeed, wonder to find in the Scandinavian mythology a similar practice to what was usual at Rome for their highest divinities. If we trust these later writers, the features of their earliest Jupiter, most probably the Ferrarius, were daubed over with a kind of red ochre; and as their triumphant warriors also aspired to the same distinction, we think the directors of the Roman court, if they got a bust of this ancient numen of Romulus, would not be far wrong to go to the ethnological figures of Dr. Lathom in the same locality, for patterns of polychromy with which to adorn his features, which the red and coloured streaks of these savages render so ugly to our present ideas.

Pliny, after telling us (Nat. Hist. xxxiii.) that the famous painters of Greece only used four colours for their immortal works, as is the generally restricted number in the instances above, goes on (xxxiii. 36):—

"Invenitur in argentariis metallis minium quoque et nunc inter pigmenta magnæ auctoritatis et quondam non solum magnæ sed sacræ. Enumerat auctores Verrius quibus credere sit necesse Jovis ipsius simulacri diebus festis minio illini solitam, triumphantumque corpora: sic Camillus triumphasse."

The use of the illini I think sufficiently shows that the colour was laid on in streaks or lines, and not as on the sphinxes and the statues at the Abou Simbel, to express the natural tint of their skin; nor does the following sentence from Arnobius (Contra Gentes vi.) seem to bear any other meaning:—

"Inter deos videmus vestros Jovis torvissumam fuorem minio oblitam minio et nomine Frugiferi nuncupatam."

The beauty or sanctity of the tint seems afterwards to have reduced the whole pagan Olympus to its use. In addition to its use for Pan and the other field deities, and for Mars, quoted above from Creutzer, we may bring the lines from Virgil (Ecl. x., 26):—

"Pan Deus Arcadis venit, quem vidimus ipse Sanguinei ebuli bacis, minioque rubentem."

Pausanias (in Achaïcis) tells us, as we might therefore expect, that the colour of Dionysius (Bacchus) was a cinnobar adornment (αγαλμα υπο κιννα βαρεως).

As thus, according to Pliny, red was the sacred and favourite colour in Italy, we certainly find it the prevalent hue affected by our modern sprites and goblins. It may be a legacy from our Roman conquerors, or something inherent in the strength and brilliancy of the colour that has gained it this preference.

The usual Christian name (if we may use this term for a goblin) attached to Goodfellow, of Robin, is but the familiar use of Robert; a name only derivable from roth-bart (red-beard), which gives our sprightly Robin Goodfellow identity with Thor and Jupiter; and Halliwell (Introduction to "Midsummer Night's Dream") tells us that this goblin is so named in a MS. of the Bodleian Library of the thirteenth century. Grimm gives it as his opinion that the favourite locality of the wild huntsman (wilde jäger), whom he identifies with Wustan or Woden, another northern deity, at Rodenstein in Odinswold, should more correctly be Red-stone or Rud-stone; which latter name is found in Holdernest in Yorkshire, and close to the church there is one of those famous druidical obelisks, of which the Devil's Arrows at Boroughbridge and the stone pillars in Angus are other examples, but which find their greatest number, originally five thousand, at Carnac, near Vannes, in Brittany.

The name Rotkuppchen (Red-cap) is as common in Germany as our Red Riding Hood or the Bonnet Rouge of the French, who have formed the fairy tale into a pretty opera, where the denouement with the wolf 'disguised as grandmamma,' "what great staring eyes you have," gives an excellent opportunity to the basso. Our Puck in Friesland is known by his red cap, and Pöhls (Harasagen, p. 273) says of Rotkmittachen at Altenau, he heard many funny pranks; and the ghost of a female, with the usual bunch of keys, showed itself at Ilfeld in a red gown; the famous goblin Hödekin, or Hüttchen (Capkin) was clothed in a red silk coat. Denmark has received this colour as a favourite for her trolls, as may be seen in Thiele's tales; his Ebethftawarfs were all dressed in pointed red caps, and they have transmitted the belief to their far northern dependencies of the Ferroe Islands and Iceland. Hecla not only gave these troubled spirits of the departed a fiery abode, but an appropriate red clothing.

Returning south, we find the human imagination has depicted the evil one of every colour to which he can attach gloomy or hateful ideas; black, of course, as the prince of darkness: he is called the grey man in Grimm's Deutsche Sagen, (No. 272), where he tires a poor man to death by carrying him up the castle hill of Auerbach, a pendant to the old man and Sinbad in the "Arabian Nights." Green seems principally to be ascribed to Satan by mariners and sailors, it being the hue in which they mostly fancy malevolent pixies, nissen, nereids, and all the fabulous monsters of the deep; but red is the most constant and recurring symbolical colour in which the imagination of most countries has arrayed him. A legend is found in the Sansitz to account as usual for a large white granite block, called the "White Stone," one hundred feet high, and probably druidical, when connected with larger and more extensive similar rocks in the neighbourhood and upon the boundary line of Bohemia—that it was formed by the devil's destroying the habitation of a holy anchorite whom he could not seduce, and breaking it in pieces. From that time on every 23rd April, St. George's day, he is seen by the foresters and woodcutters annually on that day, with fire streaming eyes and a large red mantle, with which he takes especial care to cover his cloven foot and dragon tail, looking after other prey; and as his appearance was always on the particular day he thence got called by the peasantry the Red George. We cannot, however, pursue this red symbol further; through Germany, in almost every collection of legendary lore, it will be found the predominant hue. Grimm's Deutsche Sagen, i., 47 and 48; Deutsche Mythologie, p. 431, et seq.; Temme, Pommersche Volk Sagen, p. 253; Wolf, Deutsche Sagen, pp. 239 and 373; with the Rotkuppchen in the old castle of Schwerin may be consulted.

Perhaps, however, before we pass over to our English red caps, we may mention the favour which red seems to have found also in America, along, possibly, with the royal green of Montezuma, before alluded to. Prescott (vol. iii., p. 334) speaking of some of the figures of the Aztecs, says:—

"The figures, as well as the buildings themselves, are found to be stained with various dyes, principally with vermilion."

And, in a note, he adds:—

"The fortress of Xochialco was also covered with a red paint (Antiquités Mexicaines), and a cement of the same colour covered the Toltec pyramid at Tcotihuacan, according to Mr. Bullock."*

Our English Cobolds also affected the same fiery colour, like Robin Goodfellow or Puck. Gervase of Tilbury, in his Otia Imperialia, tells us of a frolicsome elf, who took up his abode with Elias Stackpole, in Pembrokeshire, in the form of a red boy.

Our mediæval painters religiously expressed their detestation of Judas by depicting him with a fiery head of red hair and a red mantle; and red hair is generally objected to in the Kurmark. The children tease their playmates thus furnished with the platt Deutsch rhyme (rotkop, feuerkop, stekt de ganze welt in braut)—red beard, fire head, sets the whole world on fire. In Rome, however, the red, perhaps the auburn tresses of the northern Barbari, were in great request to furnish their females with the extraordinary wigs which we find on their busts. In the Epirus, however, the same designation, Phyrus, became a favourite epithet for the royal race of the Alenden, because when a dispute respecting the succession to the throne was referred to the Oracle at Delphi, the Pythia gave it to the first of the race, by the expression—"Let the red head (Πύρρος) have it." Our first toy, the plaything of our infancy, is the coral, and though nature gives it in two varieties, the white and red, we invariably prefer the latter, not only from its more conspicuous and resplendent tint, but also from another property which, doubtless, the veneration of our forefathers for the tint ascribed to it. Halliwell's edition of Brand's "Popular Antiquities," ii., 86, gives a quotation from the "Three Ladies of London," by which it would become a kind of healthmeter to the wearer, and therefore the most fitting for children. The words are—"You may say jet will take up a straw,

Amber will make one fat;
Coral will look pale when you be sick,
And crystal will staunch blood."

But the antiquity of the belief, as well as its being worn by children, must be ancient, as a passage quoted from Pliny immediately preceding, proves both usages amongst the Romans.

"Auruspices religiosum coralli gestamen amotiendis periculis arbitrantur et surculi infantie alligatum tutelam habere creduntur."

Even gold itself seems to have been more highly prized the higher hue of redness it possessed. The "red red gold" is never applied but to enhance the value of the mineral; and it seems to have been the livery of the goldsmiths, for in a pageant given by Hone ("Every-day Book," p. 672), of the city of London, for lord mayor's day, 1687, the mayor's company, the goldsmiths, gave a splendid exhibition. A large stage must have been used, for there appear "many rooms," amongst which "another apartment" with miners in canvas breeches, red waistcoats and red caps, &c. The goblins of the German mines frequently appear in similar red uniforms; and it is a question whether the gold is called red from their colour or the colour takes its rise from the dress. The expression is frequent in Germany, perhaps more so than with us. In the Nibelungen Lied we find it often, v. 1085-88.

* The bloody hand of Ulster is found not only on the walls of Urmal, but on the sculptured rocks of Ohio, as Squier tells us.

"Vil golt vater sotele, si fürten in dus laut
Zierliche schilde mit herlich gerrant
Brüh'eu si se Rine, sis der hoh gesit."

"Many saddles bossed with red gold they brought into the land, Richly sculptur'd shields, and robes both gay and grand,
In piles to Rhine they carry, to these spousals high."

And v. 1753-55.

"Do chom ir gesinde die trugen dar se haut
Von at rothem golde einen schilde raut,
Mit stahet herten spangen, vit michel unt breit."

"Following them their household, who carried in their hands
Shields of molten red gold, enriched with circling bands;
With hard steel bosses mounted, their size both large and broad."

Other uses of the word are found v. 281, 2437, 1728.

We cannot say that our own poetry, wherein the expression occurs, is so ancient, but we will quote a couple of extracts from Orfea and Heurodis in "Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," where the queen relates a dream which she had whilst sleeping under a tree, where—

"The king had a crown on his head,
It was not silver ne gold red;
All it was of precious stone,
As bright as sun, forsooth, it shone."

And farther—

"Amiddé the land a castel he seigh
Rich and real, and wonder high,
Allé the utmost wall
Was clear and shine of cristal,
And hundred towers there were about,
Deguiselich and batailed stout:—
The buttrees came out of the ditch
Of red gold y-arched rich."

These may be called subjective or inherent powers of the red colour, but objectively it had also the quality of imparting potency to any natural object of a deep red dye. The Scotch rowan tree or mountain ash is famous for its powerful action against witchcraft and its red berries. Chambers's "Popular Songs of Scotland," p. 110, say, of—

"Rowan tree and red thread
Make the witches tyne (lose) their sped," and that such a saying is prevalent over Scotland in the southern pastoral district, thus enlarged and varied:

"Black luggie, lammer bead,
Rowan tree and red thread
Put the witches to their speed."

A similar force is ascribed by our German neighbours to the dog rose and its red hugabirch. The attached legend states that when Satan was hurled from heaven, to be able to storm it again he created the dog rose with its thorns pointing upright to serve him as steps, but that the Almighty frustrated his purpose by changing their direction downwards. The red hip berry sprang necessarily from such a creative power.

I leave at present the consideration of the thorn and its red haws, because, to prove the mythical character of the shrub, I should have to show the verbal identification with the genuine name of Thor, and of Thor's again with Janus, which I have done in another place. Our space also forbids us to go into the symbolism of the other colours, and particularly of the many important considerations arising from the contrasted effects of white and black, on which almost the whole of the Slavonic religious and beliefs were based: the contrast between their white and black gods—Bielbog and Zerribog.

Literature.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

A PENSION of £70 a year has been given to Mr. Charles Duke Yonge, author of several Greek and Latin school books—notably of the "English Greek Lexicon," and the "Phraseological English Latin Dictionary"—for literary services.

Some days ago a daily journal announced, upon the somewhat singular authority of the New York Tribune, the entire restoration of Sir E. B.

Lytton's health. We regret to learn from another source that this statement is incorrect, and that Sir Edward still continues to suffer severely from illness. We quite agree with our contemporary the Critic, who says: "For some time past people have been inquiring what has become of Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer. That his health had suffered from his many labours, literary and political, and that a temporary cessation from all kind of work became necessary about the time of Lord Derby's famous appeal to the country, was well known. Afterwards it was reported that he was better, and would shortly be able to resume the normal activity of his life. Since that time, however, his name as it were disappeared from public records, and a kind of 'Oh! no, we never mention him' feeling seems to be entertained on the subject. This is far from satisfactory, and although we have no disposition to intrude upon a private sorrow, we cannot but regard Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer as public property; and, as such, the public ought to know something about him."

Photographs of the original drawings by Raffaele, in the royal library at Windsor, have been taken at the expense of the Prince Consort. The negatives of these impressions have been presented to the Science and Art Department of the Committee of Council on Education; from which copies will be supplied to schools of art, and the public generally, at the mere cost of paper and printing.

A portion of Dr. Pusey's "Commentary of the Bible," which has been so long in preparation, is now said to be almost ready for publication. It is upon the prophet Hosea.

M. Victor Hugo's two new volumes of poetry are on the point of being given to the public. They will form part of a grand work, entitled "La Légende des Siècles." The author has chosen this time a noble and gigantic scheme; he proposes, in fact, to write a poetic and dramatic history of the world; or, at least, of the great events in the records of human existence from the creation to the present age. The first volume includes the biblical and evangelical periods, the decline of the Roman empire, the rise of Islamism, and the history of chivalry, in two dramatic poems, entitled "Le Petit Roi de Galice" and "Evrardus." The second volume treats of Italy, from the dark ages to the Renaissance, Philippe II., maritime discovery, and includes a poem on the Swiss mercenaries of the seventeenth century. A Paris correspondent writes, "Some specimens that I have read exhibit much pathos and beauty; but there is little doubt that the great attraction of the work will consist in its political references."

Mr. Charles Hardwicke, of Manchester and Preston, a gentleman well known for his writings and lectures on the financial position of friendly societies, has just completed a work he has long been engaged upon, in which the whole question is popularly explained. The errors so frequently complained of are fully discussed, and the laws of finance, together with the conditions necessary to the future stability of these numerous and important social institutions of the provident operatives, are demonstrated.

Macmillan's Magazine will make its appearance on the 1st of November. The editor is to be Professor Masson, and among the leading contributors are named Mr. T. Hughes, the author of "Tom Brown's School Days."

A correspondent of a Manchester paper gives the following account of the result of the attempt to found a popular religious daily newspaper. "At the latter end of 1857, I was induced, at the very earnest solicitation of one of its agents, to become a proprietor in the 'National League Newspaper Company,' who proposed to commence a newspaper, to be called the Dial. The risk I undertook was not large, only five shares at £10 each, towards which I then paid a deposit of £2 each, making £10, besides some small charge for registration. I was informed that when a certain amount was subscribed the publication of the paper would be proceeded with at once, and that in the mean time only the interest of what was paid up would be required for preliminary expenses. Until June this year I heard nothing more of the progress of the Dial, when I was invited to a meeting of shareholders, where a reverend gentleman proceeded to lay before us the account of the Dial's troubles, to state its financial position, and then strove to inspire us with the belief that some day it would be successful. It appears that at its first stock-taking

	The amount of money subscribed was	And expended up to this time
May, 1857	£8,000	£6,000
May, 1858	27,000	14,000
May, 1859	31,000	16,000

So that if at May, 1858, the shareholders had pleased to close the company, out of the immense paid-up capital they would have been able to get only 10s. in the pound. My loss up to this time is only £5; but when the meeting began to realize their position that they and thousands of subscribers to the amount of £30,000 had had 50 per cent. of this amount so quickly disposed of before a pound had been spent in premises, machinery, or the consequent losses in commencing the publishing of such a paper, I believe they came to a conviction, the exact character of which may be inferred from the facts themselves."

A course of six lectures on Social Science—embracing the relations between Labour and Capital—is about to be delivered by Mr. William Ellis, under the authority of the Committee of Council on Education, at the South Kensington Museum. These lectures will be particularly addressed to school teachers, but the general public are to be admitted so far as there may be room in the theatre of the museum.

The Rev. E. Hatch, B.A., of Pembroke College, Oxford, has been appointed principal classical professor in the university of Toronto.

Mr. Antonio Panizzi, of the British Museum, has left Modena on his way back to England; but from Turin he will go to pay a visit to Count Cavour, at his country house of Leri.

Mr. Robert Chambers is engaged upon a volume refuting the antiquity of the Scottish Historical Ballads. We hear that he considers them to have been written in the early part of the eighteenth century.

Literary publications, meant as gifts for the celebration of Schiller's centenary birthday, begin to appear in Germany everywhere. Among them we notice a volume of writings by the father of Theodor Körner, Schiller's intimate friend, published for the first time on this occasion, and edited by Dr. Karl Barth, of Augsburg.

The Publisher's Circular gives an interesting and valuable account of the conventions entered into between France and other nations for the preservation of literary and artistic property. From France we learn that the Minister of the Interior has issued for the guidance of the préfets a résumé, in chronological order, of the instructions which from time to time have accompanied the conventions having for their object the protection of property in works of thought and art. These instructions are followed by a detailed analysis of the twenty-eight conventions concluded between France and the principal states of Europe.

A Fern Collector's Album has been issued by Mr. Robert Hardwicke, for the use of ladies and gentlemen who love to gather and preserve the beautiful ferns of Great Britain. This album is handsomely printed, in red type, on pages framed in a flowery border, and is mounted in a strong, showy case, glittering in scarlet and gold. Blank pages for the specimens alternate with descriptive pages; the whole, when filled with ferns and with the memories that may belong to the incidents of their collection, forming a handsome book.

The late Sir William Forbes, of Pitaligo, left a very curious work in manuscript, entitled "Memoirs of a Banking House," giving a history of his bank, which had never refused to pay its notes—almost the only old bank that could say so. These memoirs are being printed for private circulation.

The lecture season at the Royal Manchester Institution has commenced with the first of a course of lectures by Professor Owen, F.R.S., "On the Classification and Geographical Distribution of Recent and Fossil Mammalia." The professor commenced by stating that the study of natural history was an important one in the education of youth, on account of its impressing upon the mind the principles of order and arrangement, conditions well adapted not only to business habits, but to almost every form of active life. The various divisions of warm and cold blooded animals, with their distinctions of vertebrate and invertebrate, &c., were then pointed out; also the basis of classification by Aristotle, Linnaeus, and Baron Cuvier, with subsequent discoveries by the learned professor himself. There was a good audience.

Mr. Wallace, the English naturalist, has arrived at Menado, with the intention of spending some months in the Minahassa districts, for the purpose of making zoological collections, the requisite help having been granted him by government.

An election to one fellowship, now vacant in All Souls' College, Oxford, will take place on the 3rd of November next. Candidates are requested to call on the Warden on Wednesday, October 26th, between the hours of eleven a.m. and two p.m., bringing with them the following papers:—1. Testimonial of good conduct from their college for three years. 2. Certificate of baptism. 3. Certificate of having taken the degree of B.A., or of having passed all the examinations required by the University for that degree. 4. Certificates either (a) "of having been placed in the first class in one, at least, of the public examinations of the University;" or (b) "of having obtained some prize or scholarship within the University, unattached to any college or hall, and open to general competition among the members of the University." The examination will commence on Thursday, October 27th, at ten, a.m., in the college hall. Candidates will be examined in French and German, and special reference will be had to the studies recognized in the School of Jurisprudence and Modern History.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

ETYMOLOGY OF THE TERM "COWAN."

THE term Cowan has, among our brethren of the Free and Accepted Craft, a meaning and signification of its own, which is so well understood by every Mason, that there is no reason to speculate upon its Masonic interpretation here; but there is a dearth of information among us as to whence the term is derived, and what was its original import; and a note on this part of the inquiry may, perhaps, be interesting to your readers.

In the sense understood by us, it will be sufficient if we quote one or two examples of the use of the word in question; thus, in a song, "Once I was blind, and could not see," we have the following as part of the last verse:—

"Then round and round me he did tie
A noble antient charm,
All future darkness to defy,
And ward off Cowan's harm."

So also, in a song of Gavin Wilson's (vide Freemasons' Magazine, vol. iv., p. 873),—

"There once was a Mason who loved a long drink,
And a fop of a Cowan who fondly did think
Could he get him fuddled, and find out this wonder, He'd make all the Masons of Scotland knock under."

And in another song we are told—

"How happy are the antient brave, Whom no false Cowan can deceive."

Whilst another, entitled "We brethren Free Masons," declares—

"The name of a Cowan we'll not ridicule,
But pity his ignorance, nor count him a fool."

This term, too, has not been without its difficulties to many of the writers on Freemasonry, whether charlatans or not, and without giving undue prominence to the catchpenny tribe, one of the most popular of these revelationmongers, says, in a note, "The word cowan is a flash word peculiar to Masons. It signifies an enemy, but formerly was expressive of kings and all those who had the power to persecute, and who did persecute the associated Masons."

I do not take into account the meaning given to the term Cowan in the American Lexicons, Manuals, &c., as they appear to be equally in the dark with our own authors, and only reproduce the definitions we have usually met with. Nor have I encountered any real knowledge of the subject among those shining lights of the Craft who are thrust down the young Mason's throat as knowing the ceremonies and lectures by rote, and consequently to be venerated as great authorities; all they could tell me was the usually received sense of the word among us. I am in no way finding fault with the use of the word cowan, but I wanted to know how we obtained it, and from whence it came? No one knew. For a long time I gave it up as hopeless. I searched the Encyclopædias, the Britannica, Edinburgh, London, Metropolitan, National, and Rees's, and all without avail. I then turned to the dictionaries of Ash, Bailey, Bayle, Barclay, Boag, Halliwell, Lemon, Nares, Ogilvie, Richardson, Sheridan, Todd, Johnson, Webster, and Wright; but the word Cowan was not to be found in any of them. In Preston's Illustrations, 18th edition, page 80, is a note to the "Antient Charges," in which it is stated, "Twelvethly—That a master or fellow make not a mouldstone, square, nor rule, to no lowen" [this no doubt should be Cowan]; "nor let no lowen worke within their Lodge, nor without, to moulde stone." (See also Freemasons' Magazine, vol. iv., p. 352). And in Dermott and Harper's Ahiman Rezon, 7th edition, 1807, among the antient charges, No. V., entitled, "Of the Management of the Craft in Working," p. 37, it says, "But Free and Accepted Masons shall not allow cowans to work with them, nor shall they be employed by cowans without an urgent necessity; and even in that case they must not teach cowans, but must have a separate communication; no labourer shall be employed in the proper work of Freemasons."

Now these two extracts positively refer to an operative class called Cowans; and it occurred to me that as we symbolize many other matters connected with the handicraft of Masons, so we have treated the Cowans; and as speculative Masonry long held its head quarters in Scotland, the word might possibly be of Scotch extraction. For this I had reference to a work published in two vols. folio, in Edinburgh, in 1808, with a supplement of 2 vols. folio, published in 1825, and an abridgment in one vol. 8vo., published in 1846, in all three of which the word Cowan is given. This work, a book of the greatest value to the etymologist, may be thus described—An Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language: Illustrating the Words in their different Significations, showing their Affinity to those of other Languages, and especially the Northern; Explaining many Terms which, though now Obsolete in England, were formerly Common to both Countries, &c.; by John Jamieson, D.D.; and in that work we have the following definitions:—

"COWAN, s. a fishing-boat, &c.

"COWAN, s. 1. A term of Contempt, applied to one who does the work of a mason, but has not been regularly bred. (Scottish).

"2. Also used to denote one who builds dry walls, otherwise denominated a dry-diker. (Scottish).

"A boat carpenter, joiner, cowan (or builder of stone without mortar), get 1s. at the minimum and good maintenance." (P. Morven, Argyleshire Statistical Account, x. p. 267).

"Cowans, masons who build dry stone dykes or walls." (P. Halkirk, Caithness-shire Statistical Account, xix. p. 24).

"In the Suio-Gothic, or Ancient language of Sweden, it is kujon, or kughon, a silly fellow, hominem imbellum, et cujus capiti omnes tuto illudunt, kujon appellare moris est; (Ihre, Glossarium Suido-Gothicum, 2 vols. fol. Upsal, 1769). French: Coion, or coyon, a coward, a base fellow; (Cotgrave's French-English Dictionary, fol. Lond. 1650); Qui fait profession de lacheté, ignavus, (Trevoux, Dictionnaire Universel François et Latin, de 7 vols. fol. Paris 1752); The Editors of this Dictionary deduce it from the Latin quietus. But the term is evidently Gothic. It has been imported by the Franks, and is derived from kufw-a, supprimere, insultare."

The supplement stating;

"COWAN, s. 2. Applied to one who does the work of a Mason, add; COWANER is the only term used in this sense in Lothian."

So also on referring to DYKER, Jamieson tells us—

"DIKE, DYK, s. 1. A wall, whether of turf or stone. (Derived from the Scottish).

"3. A ditch; as in English although now obsolete.

"DIKER, DYKER, s. A person whose employment is to build inclosures of stone, generally without lime; often called a dry diker. (Derived from the Scottish).

"The dyker, as he is called, gets from £2 to £3 sterling, and sometimes more, for 8 months in summer." (P. Tarland, Aberdeenshire Statistical Account, vi. p. 209).

From the foregoing it is presumed that Cowan is derived in a twofold sense, the French application of the term suiting the speculative Mason, the Scottish the operative Mason; and from the charges above quoted, equally applicable in both senses to the Free and Accepted Masons. The Scottish Cowan, according to the operative craft, was a builder of walls of unhewn stone, and they were piled one on the other, either with or without mortar or mud, as is to be seen in Gloucestershire, and the lower part of Oxfordshire at the present time; and the stringent law that ordered no master or fellow to set him a mould stone, was made for the purpose of guarding their art from the uninitiated, so that those who only could pile rough materials on each other should not invade the trade of a Mason, or one that could both set and square the perfect ashlar.

If this meets with the approval of my brethren, I am content; but if any better derivation can be offered, no one will be more happy to receive it than—MATTHEW COOKE.

THE LATE BRO. COL. WILDMAN, PROV. G.M. FOR NOTTS.

An old member of my mother Lodge (No. 348) informed me that Colonel Wildman on visiting the Lodge, many years ago, related the following anecdote, as illustrating the beneficial operation of Masonry in a military point of view. During the battle of Waterloo he was unhorsed in one of the charges, and as he lay on the ground a French soldier was about to despatch him, when he made a Masonic sign, and a French officer rushed forward and saved his life; that they became separated almost immediately, and that he accidentally met his preserver some time afterwards in a Lodge in Paris, greatly, of course, to their mutual delight.—WILLIAM KELLY, Leicester.

BRO. STEPHEN JONES.

"Nearly opposite to the printing office" (Valpy's) "last referred to, was a small house occupied by Stephen Jones, a gentleman with whom I was on familiar terms for many years. He was secretary to a Freemasons' Lodge, and was occasionally employed by some of the publishers to edit and arrange miscellaneous papers, make indexes, &c. He first appeared in 1791, as abridging Barkes's Reflections; and two years afterwards his name was attached to an abridgment of Ward's Natural History, in 3 vols. In 1796 he produced 'a Biographical Dictionary in Miniature,' a copy of which he presented me, with his autograph; the first literary work I had then received, though I can now enumerate more than sixty volumes. He produced several other publications, which are specified in Watt's Bibliotheca Britannica, the last of which is 'a Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language,' a large octavo volume. The third edition of the work, now before me, has the author's autograph, with the date of 1798. He also edited a new edition of the 'Biographia Dramatica;' this was harshly criticised, when he published a pamphlet, entitled 'Hypercriticism Exposed,' in a letter to the readers of the Quarterly Review, 8vo. 1812. Towards the end of life, my respected friend, a man of mild disposition, strict honesty, great industry, and unblemished character, was embarrassed in circumstances, applied to, and derived pecuniary aid from, the Literary Fund. Dr. N. Drake, in a letter to Cadell and Davies, respecting his large work, 'Shakspeare and his Times,' says, 'S. Jones was the composer to my Essays on Periodical Literature, and I was perfectly satisfied with his accuracy and attention;' whence he strongly recommended him to those publishers to make the index to his two quarto volumes. It extends to six quarto sheets."—Extracted from the Autobiography of John Britton, pp. 301, 302; testimonial edition.—BENJAMIN BANKS.

FREEMASONS' WAGES IN A.D. 1443.

In the third vol. of The Antiquarian Repertory, edited by Francis Grosse and Thomas Astle, at p. 53, we have a table of the "wages of servants, presented A.D. 1443, xxiii. Hen. vi.—Roll. Parl. vol. v. p. 112," which is a petition to the Commons of this present Parliament to regulate the price of labour. The entries that affect the above heading, at the page quoted, are as follows:—"and 5th from the Fest of Ester unto Mighelmesse y^e wages of eny free Mason or maister carpenter excede not by the day iiid. with mete and drynk, and withoute mete and drink vd. ob.

"A Maister Tyler or Sclatter, rough mason and meen carpenter, and other artificers concernyng beldyng, by the day iiid. with mete and drynk, and withoute mete and drynke iiid. ob.

"And every oyer laborer by the day iid. with mete and drynk, and withoute mete and drynke iid. ob.

"And from the Fest of Mighelmasse unto Ester, a free Mason and a maister carpenter by the day iiid. with mete and drynk, withoute mete and drink iiid. ob.

"Tyler, meen carpenter, rough mason, and other artificers aforesaid, by the day iid. ob. with mete and drynk, withoute mete and drynk iiid., and every other werkeman and laborer by the day id. ob. with mete and drynk, and withoute mete and drink iiid. and who that lasse deserveth, to take lasse."

The above extract will at any rate settle the fact that the name free Mason was in use in the fifteenth century.—ANTIQUARIUS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

FUNERAL OF THE LATE PROV. G. M. OF NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—Not being entitled to attend the Provincial Grand Lodge of Nottinghamshire, and therefore not in a position to express what I wish to my brethren, I crave of you, as the acknowledged organ of the Craft, a corner in your next issue.

It is with feelings of acute pain that I say the Masonic body of this province was not represented at the funeral obsequies of our late Prov. G.M., whose spirit has gone to meet the Captain of his salvation, to dwell with him in peace for ever.

I do not write these lines out of a spirit of opposition to any brother, but I think a very great mistake has been made in not requesting every brother capable of attending to be present, and in a body to testify their respect for one so well beloved—our guide, our monitor, our friend.

The circular issued by the Provincial Grand Lodge on the 21st ultimo, without a Provincial Grand Lodge being summoned, was to "decide our actions until further notice." This circular seemed to interdict the Craft from being present on account of "the family wishing the funeral to be as private as possible," for it states, "under these circumstances, it is considered most respectful not to intrude upon the funeral solemnities."

Had the interment been strictly private, and taken place at Newstead Abbey, we might (other brethren are of my opinion) have borne the feeling of regret much better; but when the ceremony took place at a public cemetery, where a congregation of four or five thousand persons were assembled, and the funeral cortege nearly half a mile in length, it is a reflection on our governing body that we were not allowed to attend on Tuesday the 27th ultimo, to take a last farewell of him we esteemed so much, and pay a just tribute to the memory of our departed brother.

Next to the deceased's relatives the Masonic body was his family. Our chief was our father—we were his children.

It was not absolutely necessary that, by attending the remains of our deceased brother to their last resting place, that any additional expense should have been incurred by any member of the Craft for scarves and hatbands. Would it have been outré for the brotherhood to have attended in unostentatious black, with white gloves? Would this have proved very expensive to the Provincial Grand Lodge funds?

Had there been a celebration, where the Craft could attend with clothing, jewels, and regalia, perhaps they might have been summoned to muster in strength; but here, where a just tribute to departed worth ought to have been paid, they were not to attend. How some brethren seem to forget their higher and nobler duties.

Had the Masonic body attended the funeral of their late Provincial Grand Master, I have not the slightest doubt Mrs. Wildman (and deceased's noble brother) would have received it as a spontaneous brotherly feeling towards one whom they said they highly esteemed when living, and would have assisted in alleviating the pangs of regret at the loss of a much beloved husband.

Hoping some member of our Provincial Grand Lodge will deem it his duty to allude to this matter at the proper time,

I remain, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
Nottingham, Oct. 1st, 1859. Δ.

THE CRAFT IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The editor of the (New Brunswick) Freemasons' Monthly Monitor and Acadian Craftsman having been compelled to abandon the publication of that journal, some few months since, owing to the lack of encouragement received from many belonging to the Craft and, to quote his own words, "the most strenuous opposition from those who should have been our generous patrons and unflinching friends, and that too, because we have fearlessly denounced wrong doing and advocated the establishment of a better state of things," an occasional communication from one interested in the well being of the Craft in these parts may not prove unacceptable.

Before proceeding further I may as well say that one of the principal opposers of Bro. Willis's magazine was the then Deputy Provincial Grand Master, now about to be installed Provincial Grand Master—Bro. A. Balloch. His opposition is supposed to have originated by Bro. Willis inserting the proceedings of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland (copied from your journal) in the pages of the Craftsman, the name of Bro. Balloch appearing therein in connection with some charge made against him by Carleton Union Chapter. If the foregoing is not the reason, it must be on account of Bro. Willis having requested to see the patent of the D. Prov. Grand Master, in order to reply to a correspondent as to its legality. The request seemed to have greatly offended Bro. Balloch, and thenceforward Bro. Willis was interdicted from publishing the proceedings of the Provincial Grand Lodge, and all the influence which the D. Prov. Grand Master could exert was brought into requisition to crush the further progress of the Monitor and Craftsman. In my opinion Bro. Willis adopted a wise course by suspending its publication.

Since the discontinuance of the Monitor and Craftsman the fraternity in this and the neighbouring provinces have been without a medium through which information could be obtained, except the columns of your valuable journal. Some time since the Provincial Grand Lodge of New Brunswick engaged the services of Bro. Caleb Rand, of Massachusetts, U.S., to lecture and instruct the members of the Craft, in St. John's. A committee of management was accordingly appointed, and they solicited the co-operation of Hibernia Lodge (No. 301, registry of Ireland), who freely gave all the assistance in their power. Now, however much many in this vicinity may feel disposed to approve of the Massachusetts system, I cannot think it was proper to adopt it, and thus virtually violate one of the most important principles of the English Constitution. It seems somewhat anomalous that an English Provincial Grand Lodge should adopt a foreign system of work for its subordinates.

Royal Arch Masonry in this province at the present time exhibits every prospect of a prosperous future. I suppose you are already aware there has been a new Chapter established in St. John's, under the name of Hibernia Chapter (No. 301, registry of Ireland). It is attached to Hibernia Lodge, agreeably to the regulation which makes it necessary that a Chapter should be attached to some regularly constituted Lodge. The Scotch Chapter in this city has for some time been labouring under difficulties. First there was a dispute with the Prov. Grand Supt., Bro. A. Balloch, of the nature of which I suppose you are already acquainted, and if I mistake not, no amicable settlement has yet been arrived at. Then followed a difficulty regarding the Mark degree, and the authority under which it was conferred. This last trouble has, I believe, been satisfactorily arranged.

The order of Knights Templar, with its associated degrees, are in a prosperous state in this province. There are many good and valiant men already enrolled under the banner of the cross, and, we have no doubt, as time rolls on there will be a regular increase.

In your Magazine for August, I observe some remarks regarding the Provincial Grand Lodge of New Brunswick, and the manner in which Bro. Balloch managed to secure the office of Prov. Grand Master, and, if not considered amiss, I will occupy a portion of your space with a few observations on the subject. In the first instance I consider it was decidedly wrong that New Brunswick should consent to play second fiddle to any neighbouring province of greater or less pretensions. Probably this statement, to be understood, will need some explanation. Some years ago, it was concluded that the English Lodge in New Brunswick should establish a Provincial Grand Body—at that time the English Lodges were under the jurisdiction of Bro. Keith, Prov. Grand Master of Nova Scotia—this body was established, and Bro. Balloch appointed D. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Keith still retaining the position of Prov. Grand Master, although exercising very little authority in the jurisdiction. Now, I would ask, with all due deference to Bro. Keith, where is there any law to sanction a course of procedure such as this: one Provincial Grand Master ruling two Provincial Grand Lodges under the same jurisdiction, in separate provinces? I have frequently heard of brethren belonging to two subordinate Lodges under different jurisdictions, but I have never yet heard of one who occupied the position of Master in both Lodges at the same time; neither have I ever heard of one person holding the position of Master in two Lodges under the same jurisdiction. Here then, I consider the English Lodges in New Brunswick acted decidedly wrong. They should have considered well the step which they were about to take, and when they did make a move it should have been a judicious one. The whole affair seemed to have been hastily concocted, and still more hastily executed. A short trial of this first formed Provincial Grand Body in New Brunswick proved a failure, and then steps were taken to obtain the privilege of appointing or electing a Provincial Grand Master separate and distinct from Nova Scotia. After some considerable time the arrangements were effected, and Bro. Balloch, so I am informed, succeeded in securing his election in the manner described by your private correspondent of last month. Although obtaining the privilege of electing their own Provincial Grand Master was an improvement, still it did not go far enough. Why not endeavour to have the privilege of annually electing a Provincial Grand Master, then there would be no feelings of discontent. If the brother elected to this high position should act arbitrarily, or become distasteful to a majority of the body, they could console themselves with the reflection that in a few short months they would have the power and privilege of removing such brother from the office, and placing in his stead one more worthy of their confidence. That the present, or rather embryo, Provincial Grand Master does not enjoy the confidence of the Craft in this province, is quite evident to every brother who possesses the smallest share of discernment; and I firmly believe, in common with many others, that had his opponent possessed that enthusiasm which should characterize the actions of every brother occupying so high a position, no amount of exertion would have availed anything in favour of Bro. Balloch. In my opinion it would conduce more to the prosperity of the Craft and the peace of the Prov. Grand Master, did he possess in a greater degree the confidence of the brotherhood under his jurisdiction. Apart from all others, there is a class of the fraternity who firmly and conscientiously believe that, until an independent Grand Lodge is established in this province, similar to that of Canada, there cannot exist that degree of harmony which should characterize the actions of Masons; and although the number of the brethren holding this belief may not be very large, still they believe that in proportion as the members of the fraternity become better informed—in a word, in proportion as the brethren become reading Masons—so will their numbers increase. It would be folly on my part to enter into any lengthened discussion on this subject, when reasons, both powerful and cogent, have been freely and frequently given by far more learned and able Masons than,

Dear Sir and Brother, your humble Servant,
St. John's, New Brunswick,
September 17th, 1859. ALPHA.

THE CHARITIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—In transcribing my letter which you were good enough to insert in your last number, the following was omitted:—

The province of Sussex sends a candidate for the Boys' School. The circular recommending the case is signed by fourteen brethren of the province of Sussex and seven of the province of Hants. All but three are Provincial Grand Officers. Of these twenty-one brethren there are only two who yet subscribe to the institution.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours faithfully and fraternally,
Oct. 3rd, 1859. FRATER.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

THE WROXETER EXCAVATIONS.

THE Duke of Cleveland has let to the Committee of Excavations four acres of ground at Wroxeter, the two on which the excavations have hitherto been carried on, and two additional acres adjoining, to be kept permanently open to the public, and not to be filled up again. Four acres of the buildings of a Roman town in Britain, ruined in the fifth century, will truly be an interesting monument, and will be none the less interesting by contrast with the mediæval castles and abbeys with which the county abound. All that remains now is to obtain money enough to carry out actively the designs of the excavators, and, as the committee has done its best to carry out what it had undertaken as a public duty, it is to be hoped that the public will come forward liberally with subscriptions, and not let them fall short of funds. The recent excavations prove beyond a doubt that the whole mass of the ancient Roman city—that is, the floors and lower parts of the walls—exists underground, and also that a better place could not have been chosen for excavating than that selected by the committee. The southern, and, apparently, the western limits of the great building containing the hypocausts, and believed to be an establishment of public baths, have been found, and it appears to have formed a very extensive parallelogram. The space between it and the ancient street to the west, which occupied the site of the present Watling-street road, was covered with smaller buildings, including the supposed marketplace or bazaar, which are in great part now excavated. The southern wall of the great building is found to have bordered on another transverse street, and buildings are found to the south of this street also. The streets of Uriconium, in this part of the town at least, ran at right angles to each other. The more recent excavations have added considerably to the contents of the museum at Shrewsbury. Portions of columns have been found, which, like all the large hewn stones found here, have the "Lewis" hole for lifting them, and some have what appear to be Masons' marks, which, if they are so, would be a curious discovery. A perfect quern, or hand mill for grinding corn, has also been found, and a considerable number of personal ornaments (two of silver), with abundance of coins. Also fragments of a new description of pottery which has not been met with before. Among the animals' bones recently found is a very large head of an ox with its horns perfect. The bones of animals found in the excavations, which are very numerous, and have been all kept together, deserve well to be carefully examined by an experienced comparative anatomist.

LONDON AND MIDDLESEX ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE general meeting of this Association took place on Thursday, at Harrow, and we regret that want of space compels us to defer our account of the proceedings. A local committee, consisting of the Rev. J. W. Cunningham, vicar, Rev. R. I. Knight, Rev. B. H. Drury, Rev. R. Middlemist, Rev. B. F. Westcote, Rev. W. M. Hine, G. F. Harris, Esq., W. Bond, Esq., E. F. Elliot, Esq., G. G. Scott, Esq., D. Burton, Esq., E. Richardson, Esq., H. W. Esq., Hon. Sec. of the Society, was formed to make the necessary arrangements.

Poetry.

SELECTIONS FROM POETRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

A SONG.

BY THOMAS CAREW.

ASK me no more where Jove bestows
When June is past, the fading rose :
For in your beauty's orient deep
These flowers, as in their coaches, sleep.

Ask me no more whither do stray
The golden atoms of the day ;
For in pure love heaven did prepare
Those powders to enrich your hair.

Ask me no more whither doth haste
The nightingale when May is past ;
For in your sweet enchanting throat
She winters, and keeps warm her note.

Ask me no more where those stars light,
That downwards fall in dead of night ;
For in your eyes they sit, and there
Fixed become as in their sphere.

Ask me no more if east or west
The phoenix builds her spicy nest ;
For unto you at last she flies,
And in your fragrant bosom dies.

ON VIRTUE.

BY EVELYN.

FAIR Virtue, should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone ;
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one.
Thy rules are too severe and cold
To be embraced by vigorous youth,
And fraud and avarice arm the old
Against thy justice and thy truth.

He who by light of reason led,
Instructs himself in thy rough school,
Shall all his lifetime beg his bread,
And when he dies be thought a fool.
Though in himself he's satisfied,
With a calm mind and cheerful heart,
The world will call his virtues pride,
His holy life—design and art.

The reign of vice is absolute,
While good men vainly strive to rise ;
They may declaim, they may dispute,
But shall continue poor and wise.
Honours and wealth are made by fate
To wait on fawning impudence ;
To give insipid coxcombs weight,
And to supply the want of sense.

Thus mighty Pompey, whose great soul
Designed the liberty of Rome,
In vain did Cæsar's arms control,
And at Pharsalia was o'ercome.
His virtue constant in distress,
In Ptolemy no pity bred,
Who, barely guided by success,
Secured his peace with his friend's head.

And Brutus, whom the gods ordained
To do what Pompey would have done ;
The generous notion entertained,
And stabbed the tyrant on the throne.
This godlike Brutus, whose delight
Was virtue, which he had adored,
Haunted by spectres overnight,
Fell the next day on his own sword.

If, when his hope of victory lost,
This noble Roman could exclaim,
'Oh virtue, whom I courted most,
I find she's but an empty name ;'
In a degenerate age like this,
We, with more reason, may conclude
That fortune will attend on vice,
Misery, on those who dare be good.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

It would be ungrateful on our part were we not publicly to acknowledge the compliment paid to the Freemasons' Magazine by the Robert Burns Lodge (No. 25), in having elected Bro. Henry G. Warren as an honorary member.

We are happy to hear that Bro. Le Veau, P.G.S.B., is rapidly recovering from his late severe indisposition, having received great benefit from the sea bathing at Brighton, where he is now sojourning.

METROPOLITAN.

ROBERT BURNS LODGE (No. 25).—The first meeting of the season of this most excellent working Lodge, was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Wednesday evening, Oct. 3rd, Bro. Farmer, W.M., presiding, when Messrs. George, Ives, and Best, were duly initiated into the Order, Bro. W. H. Smith passed, and Bro. Hartley raised, the whole of the ceremonies being beautifully performed. The brethren, to the number of nearly fifty, afterwards adjourned to refreshment, the W.M. being supported on his right by the initiates and several visitors, amongst whom were Bros. Cottebrune, Figg, J. R. Warren, Diebritz, &c.; and on the left by the following P.Ms.—Bennett; Apted (Treas.), Newton (Sec.), Robinson, Dyte, Le Gassick, and Clements. The usual loyal toasts having been given, the W.M. proposed the health of the initiates, expressing the gratification he felt at their having entered the Order through the Robert Burns Lodge. Bro. George returned thanks in eloquent terms, and expressed the determination of the initiates to endeavour to make themselves acquainted with the beautiful principles and doctrines of the Order. The health of the visitors was responded to by Bros. Cottebrune, and J. R. Warren. The W.M. having returned thanks for his health being drunk, and the handsome manner in which it was proposed by Bro. Bennett, gave the health of the Past Masters, and stated that he had received a letter from Bro. Watson, who was in Dublin, expressing his regret that he could not be present, but assuring the W.M. that he should duly remember them, and at eleven o'clock drink to all their good healths, that being about the time he looked upon their toasting the Past Masters. Other toasts having been drunk, the Lodge resumed business; and at the suggestion of Bro. Clements, P.M., on the motion of Bro. Bennett, P.M., seconded by Bro. Apted, P.M., it was resolved that Bro. Henry G. Warren should be elected an honorary member, in testimony of the services he had rendered to the Craft through the Freemasons' Magazine, and their respect for him as an old member of the Lodge; the motion being supported by the W.M., and Bro. Newton, P.M. Bro. H. G. Warren briefly returned thanks for the compliment paid him, and assured the brethren that he had always had the greatest respect for the Lodge, and whether as a visitor or member, was proud of the esteem and friendship of the brethren. He thanked the brethren who had so kindly spoken regarding him, and his brother Clements for the suggestion of his election, whilst his thanks were no less due to those who had so kindly supported it by their votes, to many of whom he was a comparative stranger. The Lodge having been closed in due form, the brethren adjourned. In the course of the evening Bros. W. Adams, Nicolls, Braham, and others, added to the pleasure of the evening by their excellent singing.

LODGE OF INDUSTRY (No. 219).—On Tuesday evening, the 27th ult., at Dick's Hotel, Fleet-street, this Lodge began its Masonic session, and was attended very numerously. Three brethren were raised, and four were initiated, Mr. Charles Henry Butler, so well known as an indefatigable member of the common council of the City of London; Mr. Wesley, a grandson of the Rev. John Wesley; and Mr. Gardiner, a student of Durham University, were among the accessions to this Lodge. The visitors were numerous, and expressed their admiration of the working, for which the Lodge of Industry, under the auspices of Bro. Cotterel, its present Master, is gaining celebrity. Several new candidates were proposed by the Senior Warden, among whom was the Rev. Charles Henry Butler, A.B., the laborious and talented curate of St. Clement Danes. It gives us pleasure to see the clergy take an active part in our Lodges. Bro. Butler is a successful author in the department of fiction, and will give additional strength to the literary reputation of the Lodge, which already numbers several who have obtained a well earned fame in the world of science and art. At the previous meeting of this Lodge, among the members raised was Bro. Conon, of the Middle Temple, proprietor of the Bombay Gazette, and author of many of the able articles on political economy which appeared in the Economist during the discussion of the corn laws; Bro. Mather, of South Shields, by whom Professor Airey was so signally assisted in his experiments at the Hartlepool colliery, and who has rendered such services to the miners of the North, was also raised upon that occasion. So long as our Lodges gain such accessions, we shall have no occasion to answer the taunts of persons ignorant of our mysteries, that men are brought amongst us by their desire merely for convivial enjoyment.

INSTRUCTION.

CRYSTAL PALACE LODGE (No. 1,044).—A numerous meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday night, at the City Arms, West-square. The business of the evening commenced by the working of the ceremony of installation by Bro. Anslow, P.M. of the Lodge of Faith, which was performed in a style of excellence which excited the warmest approbation. Having installed Bro. Crawley into the chair, the brethren made the customary salutes; after which the usual addresses were given in a most effective manner, and the ceremony terminated. At its conclusion Bro. Crawley vacated the chair, which was resumed by Bro. Anslow, who proceeded to work the first, second, third and fourth sections of the lecture. On the motion of Bro. Smith, P.M. of the parent Lodge, a vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to Bro. Anslow, for the very able manner in which he had discharged the duties of the evening, which Bro. Anslow acknowledged in suitable terms. The anniversary festival of this Lodge will be celebrated at the above place on Monday evening next, upon which occasion Bro. Smith, P.M., will preside. Bro. Dr. Ladd, W.M. of the Lodge of Israel, was elected a member.

INSTRUCTION.

ROYAL ALFRED LODGE (No. 1082).—The winter festival of this Lodge took place on Thursday, the 29th of September, at the Princes Tavern, Princes-street, Soho, and could not appear in our impression of last week owing to the time of our going to press. The chair was occupied by the R.W. Bro. Joseph Smith, G. Purst., Bro. Osborne, as S.W., and Bro. Fry, as J.W., which offices they respectively hold in the parent Lodge. The Stewards for the occasion were Bros. Joseph Smith, W.M., No. 1082; Cottebrune, W.M., No. 1035; H. G. Buss, P.M. and Sec., No. 29, and Sec. of No. 1082; Walkley, P.M., No. 367; Osborne, S.W., No. 1082; M. Cooke, No. 29, and J. Boyd, No. 778.

The following brethren were present:—Bro. Farnfield, Asst. G. Sec.; Joseph Smith, G. Purs., W.M.; H. G. Warren, P.G. Steward; Potter, P.M., No. 9; Buss, P.M. and Sec., No. 29, and Sec. of No. 1082; Ireland, W.M., No. 205; Elms, P.M., No. 206; Snow, P.M., No. 206, and Prov. G. Standard Bearer of Sussex; Gurton, P.M., No. 211; Cottebrune, W.M., No. 1085; Osborne, S.W., No. 1082; Fry, J.W., No. 1082; Platt, J.W., No. 219; Payne, G. Tyler, No. 29; M. Cooke, No. 29; Workman, No. 206; C. Perkins, No. 368; Boyd, No. 778; Breckley, No. 1035; Czeszkowski, No. 1035; Neimke, No. 1035; and Bros. Hale, Johnson, Foord, Sutton, P. Davis, and Renwick, all of the parent Lodge, No. 1082, with Bro. Rapallo, of the Lodge of True Friendship, Calcutta.

At eight o'clock punctually the brethren assembled, and shortly after sat down to an excellent banquet. After full justice had been done to the repast, and the usual loyal toasts had been given, the W.M. briefly proposed the health of the Grand Officers, coupling with them the name of Bro. Farnfield, whom he regarded as an old Mason whose presence did them honour, and whose good deeds they ought all to emulate.

In reply Bro. Farnfield said, on behalf of the Grand Officers he returned them many thanks for the manner in which the toast had been received, and he hoped it was unnecessary to tell them that the Grand Officers were actuated by one motive only—to do the best, in their judgment, for the Craft, and expressed himself as flattered by the remarks of the W.M., though he could hardly lay claim to those good deeds Bro. Smith had thrust on him, but he had always done his duty to the best of his ability. The Craft had been pleased to indorse his attempts with their approval by increasing his salary, and he might perhaps be permitted to add that in doing his duty he was at all times willing, ready, and happy, to afford such information as his position allowed.

The W.M. next gave the P.Ms. of the Craft, and Bro. Gurton.

Bro. Gurton, in a neat speech, returned thanks for the P.Ms.

Bro. Farnfield having been entrusted with the use of the gavel, by the W.M., said, they were all well aware that as the Master had resigned his authority into his hands, of the use he should make of the opportunity. It was almost superfluous to mention the excellencies of Bro. Smith, but it was necessary to allude to them. The W.M. was never so happy as when he was in Masonry, he was a diligent and useful member of all the committees; always at his post, and always advocating the good of the Craft. They must remember that Bro. Smith was responsible for all their acts that evening, and was most anxious for the prosperity and advancement of the Lodge of Instruction. He was happy to find that the surplus cash was to be devoted to the charities, and he felt the work so good that he should follow Bro. Gurton's example, and become a joining member. He was strongly impressed with the necessity of Lodges of Instruction, where theory and practice could go hand in hand. Under the care of Bro. Smith he was sure they would prosper, for he never failed in anything he undertook, and, with Bro. Buss to second him, the Alfred Lodge of Instruction must prove a success which would redound to the credit of their W.M., whose health he begged to propose, as a worthy, just, and upright Mason.

Song—Bro. Platt—"The Temptation of St. Anthony."

The W. Bro. Smith returned his thanks for the kind and flattering manner in which his health had been proposed and received. It was true that he never was so happy as when he was in Masonry, and the more he was among Masons the better he liked them and their art, which made him anxious at all times to do his best. In forming that Lodge of Instruction, his chief motive was to help the younger brethren. It was not started to make it a large Lodge, nor to draw away Masons from other similar meetings, but was principally intended to make every member of the mother Lodge acquainted with the official duties; and as far as he was able it would always be his first duty, and his greatest pleasure, to afford them as much instruction as he could, for he held right that old Masons should take pleasure in meeting the younger brethren; and so long as he was in Masonry, so long the Alfred Lodge of Instruction should have his fraternal regard. For their reception of his name he thanked them. He resumed his seat amid considerable applause.

The W.M. then proposed the health of the Officers of the mother Lodge, and it gave him great pleasure to find every one of them in attendance that evening. The S.W., Bro. Osborne, was just a twelve-month old, and he was also S.D. of the Preston Lodge, No. 1068, which proved him to be a zealous and fast Mason. The J.W., Bro. Fry, was also going the right road, and at the same slashing pace, and he was happy to find their ambition was of the right kind, and getting them on in Masonry. Their Secretary, Bro. Buss, was well known as a zealous and good Mason who stood well with the fraternity, and was respected and esteemed by every one, always ready to oblige, and never failing in his duty, and he (the W.M.) believed that if the entire Craft were polled in Bro. Buss's name, not a single hand would be held up against him, on account of the good opinions he had won by his conduct and gentlemanly bearing.

Song—Bro. Gurton—"Twine me a bower."

Bro. Osborne, the S.W., said he was not one who made long speeches, but begged them all to receive his heartfelt thanks for the kindness with which his name had been proposed and received, and he hoped ever to make it his care that he should merit their kind regards. Bro. Fry, J.W., was extremely honoured and much obliged for the notice taken of his endeavours to do his best. Bro. Buss said that he felt very proud of the good character the W.M. had been pleased to give him, but if he held that position which Bro. Smith had alluded to among the brethren, he was still prouder of their kindness; and while he enjoyed such a reputation, and could count Bro. Smith as one of his friends standing at the head of the list, he hoped to continue and merit that character which Bro. Smith had so flatteringly allotted to him.

The health of the Stewards and Bro. Cottebrune was the next toast, the W.M. alluding to Bro. Cottebrune as a young but perfect Mason—one who had made rapid progress in the science, and was most deservedly respected.

Song—Bro. M. Cooke—"The New-made Mason."

Bro. Cottebrune replied to the W.M. on behalf of himself and the Stewards, and thanked the W.M. and the brethren for their very high opinion of his working, begging at the same time to assure them of his anxious desire to render all the assistance in his power to every Mason who sought it, and to the members of the Royal Alfred Lodge of Instruction in particular.

Bro. Smith, W.M., then proposed prosperity to the Freemasons' Magazine and Bro. Warren. They, the members, were considerably honoured by Bro. Warren's presence, as paying a mark of respect to so young a Lodge of Instruction that few could have expected. He regretted that he could not introduce Bro. Warren as standing at the head of a very profitable property, but he hoped that the Craft would warmly take up the matter, and see him safely over his difficulties. He respected Bro. Warren's policy. If you were wrong, Bro. Warren would tell you so, and you couldn't expect a lift from him if you did not deserve it. Moreover, the Magazine studied and advocated the interests of all; but it was impossible to please all, and as long as he held the same course of fair dealing, pleased, or displeased, the Craft were bound to respect him, and he hoped they would drink Bro. Warren's health, wishing him better prosperity.

Song—Bro. Rapallo—"Then you'll remember me."

Bro. Warren disclaimed the credit of paying any more particular attention to the Lodge than usual, but he might say that he was actuated by the friendly spirit between himself and Bro. Smith, whom he had known for twenty years; and where the latter was he was sure the members would be equally worthy of regard. He said he could not be accused of being a fast Mason. For some years he had worked strongly, and for a few years withdrew from Masonry only to return to his first love with greater affection. In his policy he had endeavoured to steer a middle course and scorned becoming a partisan, for Masonry was an universal brotherhood, and not to be split into sections and cliques. Bro. Smith had alluded to his policy, which was, and ever should be, to act conscientiously in supporting whatever was good for the Craft, and never flinching from speaking the truth in love. He was not a working Mason to the letter—for he held synonymous words to be equally good and to show that the brother using them understood the meaning of his part. In the prayers and obligations, however, he advocated every one being letter perfect, and would keep them distinctly to that mode. In conclusion, he begged to thank them all for his very kind reception, and assure them that whatever might ultimately be his position, he should always bear in mind that his primary duties were to promote the good of the Craft, and support their charities.

The W.M. next gave "The Masonic Charities," and remarked that the means of assisting them was within every brother's reach. He did not like the term charity, nor did he think assistance should ever be administered as charity, but accorded as an act of right and justice. He believed that in many Lodges these institutions were forgotten, or overlooked, for want of frequent reminders, and he always made it a rule whenever he could do it, to remind the brethren in their behalf. He also believed that well attended Lodges of Instruction did more than the mother Lodges to support, and spread abroad the utility of these blessings of the Order. He would also advocate the doing away with elections, and hoped to see the time when every aged Mason, widow, son, or daughter would find a home exactly at the time they asked for it and required it most. Having one on his right who was connected with the Asylum, he would couple Bro. Farnfield's name in conjunction with the toast.

Bro. Farnfield felt very much obliged for the introduction of the subject. He was happy to say that the charities were prosperous, not that they were yet in a state to meet all the demands that were made upon them, nor as fully beneficial as they might be, but still it would be ungrateful to their supporters to say they were anything but prosperous. There was great interest manifested for the Girls' School, and yesterday sixty of them had visited the Crystal Palace, and the children had a day of unqualified comfort and enjoyment at the cost of Bro. Strange (cheers), for which he considered the Craft were indebted to him. The prosperity of the Boys' School was on the increase, for on the morrow sixty boys would be admitted to the school-house; and he need not tell them that to feed and clothe them, greater exertions must be made. (Cheers.) On the behalf of the decayed brethren and their widows, he must express his thanks for Bro. Smith's and their sympathy. He also hoped to see the expense of a canvass abolished; and if each Lodge would subscribe one pound annually, there would be no necessity, for in the metropolitan district there were three hundred and forty Lodges. Now he must say, that the province of West Yorkshire was a mine to the annuity fund: they send their subscriptions in a lump, they all vote for one candidate, and their postage is all conveyed for one single rate. (Loud cheers.) With these few particulars he should, on behalf of the charities, echo the words of the W.M., wishing them prosperity, and thanking those who supported them by word or deed.

The W.M. said, they could not separate without drinking the health of Mrs. Whall, the widow of a Mason, and their hostess, who had catered for them so abundantly and excellently.

Bro. Osborne, S.W., returned thanks for Mrs. Whall, and observed that she was always glad to have Masons under her roof, and would spare no trouble or expense, as they had witnessed that evening, to make them comfortable.

Bro. Smith begged to apologize for having forgotten one of the shining lights at his elbow, Bro. Snow, P. Prov. Grand Standard Bearer for Sussex, a brother whose innate modesty was well known. (Owing to Bro. Smith's facetious remarks we, in common with all assembled, were so convulsed with laughter at his capital speech, that we could not follow him any further.)

Bro. Snow returned thanks.

The Worshipful Master was also glad to see Bro. Ireland, who with his usual good feeling and his numerous avocations, had not forgotten their humble Lodge, and he gave Bro. Ireland's health.

Bro. Ireland said, although a late visitor, he had just come from a Chapter of Instruction for the pleasure of meeting Bro. Smith and the members, and that he had attended to invite some of the brethren to a banquet to meet Bro. Brett (a member of the Alfred Lodge of Instruction) on his return home.

Song—Bro. M. Cooke—"Down among the dead men."

All business being over, the brethren separated, highly delighted with the evening's entertainment.

The banquet, being on Michaelmas day, was extravagantly supplied with members of the species of bird peculiar to that festal season, and was both profuse, substantial, and tasteful, giving unmixed satisfaction, and testifying to Mrs. Whall's anxiety to please her guests.

BANQUET TO BRO. BRETT, P.M. No. 206.

A COMPLIMENTARY banquet was given on Tuesday evening, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane, to welcome Bro. James Brett, P.M. of the Domestic Lodge, on his return from Australia. The gathering was not entirely of a Masonic character, but many members of the Craft were present, amongst whom were Bros. Marshall, P.M. No. 206; W. Carpenter, P.M. No. 206; Dr. Ladd, W.M. of the Lodge of Israel; Moore, J.W. No. 206; Haydon, S.W. No. 206; Brewer, W.M. No. 228; Elmes, Sec. No. 206; Cottebrune, W.M., Westbourne; Farmer, W.M. No. 25; J. R. Warren; S. W. Percy; Hart, Frank, and several other brethren. Bro. Charles Ireland presided.

About thirty sat down to dinner, which was provided in the usual style of excellence of Bro. Ireland.

The cloth having been drawn,

The Chairman gave the usual patriotic toasts, which were duly honoured, Bro. W. Carpenter, in a droll speech, returning thanks on behalf of the Army.

The Chairman said he had now arrived at what might be considered the most difficult part of his duty, which was to propose to them the toast of the evening, and to become as it were the exponent of their opinions and the mouth piece of their sentiments. Therefore, it was with considerable regret to himself that the task had not fallen into abler hands. He had to propose the health of a gentleman well known to them, and to celebrate his return to his native land. For some months past he had been estranged from them, but although personally absent from them he was always present in their minds and hearts, and whenever twenty or thirty were met together there was but one predominant wish amongst them, and that was for the safe return of Bro. Brett to his native country. (Hear, hear.) He not only lived in the hearts of his fellow men, but he was appreciated in his public capacity. He would not refer to the business which had caused his absence, and having traversed half the globe, they were glad to see him returned in health, for he was appreciated by every one who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He was esteemed for his virtues in private life, and his honour and integrity were unimpeachable. He said he was delighted to see him again amongst them, for they all knew what he was—a brother and a man, and he hoped they would make up for any deficiency on his part in expressing what he felt by drinking "Long life and happiness to Bro. Brett."

The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm.

Bro. Brett said: Gentlemen, in rising to reply to the remarks of my excellent friend, Bro. Ireland, and to acknowledge the kindness with which I have been received by you this evening, I feel myself embarrassed and pained, for your reception might well have overjoyed and delighted a better man, if he stood in my present position. I feel pained, because I am incapable of giving expression to my feelings for the way in which I have been received, and in a manner which the present occasion deserves. (Cheers.) I am delighted to be your guest this evening, and I am still more so to be received in so cordial a manner, not only in this room, but wherever, since my return, I have had the pleasure of meeting you. It is not my intention to refer to the business which caused me to leave this country, but I feel it due to you to say a few words as regards myself. When I received my instructions to leave England, I received them with sorrow and regret, from no fear of my life, the dangers of the sea, and so forth—although I was bound to consider all these on account of those I should leave behind me—but regret that I was about to part with friends with whom I had spent so many happy hours—regret that I might perhaps part with them for years, and perhaps for ever. But as a public man, on the other hand, I recollected that I had a duty to perform to the establishment to which I have belonged, and to my superiors, for whom I have worked for twenty years; and considering, too, that if I should meet with success, that on my return I should receive a genuine welcome from every brother and sincere friend. When I considered all these things, I hesitated not for a moment; but I certainly never thought or expected to be received in that hearty manner in which I have been received this evening. (Cheers.) I am sure those who know me do not expect me to make a speech, and I can but simply express my feelings, although not in the manner I could wish, and to thank you for the honour you have conferred upon me. If I have erred on any occasion, I hope you will consider those errors of the head and not of the heart (loud applause); and I trust that this meeting may be the commencement of many others where we meet together and rejoice in each other's success. I trust that you will pardon me for not fully expressing what I feel, and simply, but sincerely, I thank you for the kindness with which I have this evening been received. (Loud and continued applause.)

The Chairman then said he had a most important toast to propose, which was that of "The Press," and he need not remind them of the value of that great constitutional organ in giving free expression to their opinions. He gave in connection with this toast "The health of Messrs. Carpenter and Thompson."

Bro. W. Carpenter, in a very witty address said the chairman had rather inappropriately connected his name with that of the press, as he had not been in harness for the last six weeks, but after a short relaxation freed from the cares and anxieties of editorial life, he should again resume his duties. He dwelt at some length on the excellent qualities of his friend Brett, and said he felt delighted at his being again amongst them.

Bro. H. Thompson also briefly returned thanks for the manner in which his health had been drunk.

Mr. Brown gave "The health of their Chairman and worthy host."

The chairman briefly acknowledged the compliment, and trusted they would excuse any imperfections in the performance of his duties in the chair that evening.

The healths of Messrs. Hamilton and Howell were given, and drunk with great cordiality, to which those gentlemen severally responded.

Several other toasts were given and the evening was spent in the most complete harmony, and the company retired shortly before eleven o'clock.

PROVINCIAL.

CHESHIRE.

MEETING OF THE PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

The Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, Field Marshal Viscount Combermere, having appointed Wednesday, Sept. 28th, for the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge—in obedience to the summons, the brethren began to assemble from all parts of the province, at the Royal Hotel, Chester, at twelve o'clock. Their chief, who considers punctuality a Masonic virtue, arrived by rail from Combermere Abbey, at that hour, and received the congratulations of the assembled fraternity on his excellent state of health, at his extreme age—indeed, he never, for years past, looked in better health and spirits, and his Lordship showed his usual aptitude for business.

The Provincial Grand Lodge having been duly opened, the examination of the books of the several Lodges in the province was proceeded with by the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Bro. G. C. Antrobus; and the Provincial Grand Treasurer's accounts passed by three W.Ms. of Lodges in Cheshire, showed a steady increase in the benevolent fund.

The Provincial Grand Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. J. N. Tanner, then proposed in suitable terms the re-election of the Provincial Grand Treasurer, Bro. Bland, which was seconded by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, and carried unanimously.

Bro. Bland gave notice of motion, "that in consequence of the valuable services of the Provincial Grand Secretary, a committee should be appointed to consider what amount should be added to his salary for the very onerous duties he has to perform," which being seconded by Bro. Bennett, was carried. A committee was then nominated, consisting of five brethren—Bros. Antrobus, Bland, Tannert, Bennett, and Cruttenden.

A proposition and notice of a similar character was made by the Provincial Grand Chaplain, and seconded by Bro. Cruttenden, Prov. G.R. to present a jewel, or whatever else a committee named, might think best, in testimony of Bro. Twiss's valuable services as Provincial Grand Organist, which also passed with acclamation. At this stage of the proceedings, a collection was made for the Fund of Benevolence.

The Prov. Grand Master then proceeded to appoint his officers for the ensuing year, who were severally invested with the collars and badges of office, the fresh appointments being—Bros. MacIntyre, as Prov. G.D.; the Rev. B. Lowther, as Prov. S.G.W.; and Cope, as Prov. G.S.B.

All business being concluded, the Prov. Grand Lodge was then closed in antient and solemn form.

A large number of the brethren afterwards dined together; the Prov. Grand Master, Lord Combermere, presided, supported on the right by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, G. Crawford Antrobus, Esq.; Bro. Cruttenden, Prov. G. Reg.; Bennett, P. Prov. S.G.W.; John Lord Howard, P. Prov. G.D.; Bradwall, Prov. G. Sec. West Lancashire; MacIntyre, Prov. G.D.; Lloyd, Prov. G.D.; the Prov. G. Sec. of Oxfordshire; Cope, Prov. G.S.B.; Siddell, Prov. Grand Dir. of Cera.; Shaw, Prov. G. Purst.; Rev. B. Lowther, Prov. S.G.W.; Bland, Prov. G. Treas.; Griffiths, Prov. G. Sec.; Samuelson, Prov. G.D.; Willoughby, Prov. J.G.W.; Bully, Prov. G.D.; Dutton, P. Prov. G.D.; Lewis, Prov. G.D.; Twiss, Prov. G. Org.; Martin, Prov. J.G.W. of North Wales.

The musical performance was under the direction of Bro. John Twiss, Prov. G. Org., who presided at the pianoforte, assisted by Bro. Edmundson, of Stockport, and Bros. Sandy and Cuzner, of Chester, and gave universal satisfaction. After "Non nobis Domine."

The Prov. Grand Master proposed the first toast, "The Queen and the Craft," a toast which he said required no preface from him, as he was sure every good Briton, and particularly every good Mason, would drink it with heartfelt enthusiasm.

The Prov. Grand Master then gave "The Prince Consort, Albert Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester, and the rest of the Royal family."

The Prov. Grand Master then gave "the Army and Navy."

The Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Bro. G. C. Antrobus, then rose to propose the toast of "The Viscountess Combermere and the ladies." He said he was sure there was no brother present who did not congratulate the Prov. Grand Master on the restoration to health, after a severe illness, of Lady Combermere, a lady who possessed so many excellent virtues, and one also who took so great an interest in the Craft; witnessed by her attendance at the Prov. Grand meetings and her subscriptions yearly offered to the benevolent fund. To so noble an example of everything that is good, he was indeed proud to have the honour to propose the toast.

The Prov. Grand Master responded to the toast by observing that he must first express his thanks to the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, for the very kind and feeling remarks with which he had introduced the name of Lady Combermere. He assured the brethren that Lady Combermere did take a deep interest in everything relating to Masonry, and had it not been for her recent illness, she would have been present that day; and he begged to assure the assembled brethren, he was commissioned by Lady Combermere to state, how much she regretted not being able to witness the day's proceedings; and he hoped the brethren would accept his sincere thanks for the honour done in proposing the toast of Lady Combermere and the ladies.

The Prov. Grand Master gave, "The Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M."

The next Masonic toast was—"Lord Panmure."

Bro. Hornblower then rose and said, I have the great honour to propose a toast which I am sure, as Englishmen, you will drink with loyalty and enthusiasm. I give you "The health of our Provincial Grand Master, Viscount Combermere." Our Provincial Grand Master has done everything for Masonry in this county. We owe to him the prosperity we have in the numbers that flock to our Lodges. And as a soldier, I am sure you will drink his health with enthusiasm. His exploits are above praise, and I hope we may have many to follow in his footsteps. (Protracted cheering.)

The Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master said, I thank my brother Hornblower for the manner in which he has proposed my health, and I beg to thank the brethren assembled for the hearty, friendly, and fraternal manner in which they have drunk it. It has pleased the Great Architect of the universe to spare me to a very lengthened period of life, and to keep me in existence until I have seen the great object of my heart accomplished, and that is, the revival of Masonry in this province. I had a great deal to do when I promised the Grand Master of England, my worthy friend, the Duke of Sussex, to do my utmost to bring th about, and I should have failed in it had I not been assisted by the strenuous exertions of the late Deputy Grand Master of this province, and of Bro. Crawford Antrobus, who, since his appointment to that office, has been unceasing in his efforts to promote the interests of the Craft. Now I will challenge any Mason in England, or in the United Kingdom, to show us a province where Masonry is better attended to than it is in this one. Without the able assistance I have received, it would have been impossible to have effected what has been done. I can only say that as long as I have health and strength, so long will I attend to the duties of my high office; and I will endeavour by all the means in my power, and by strict impartiality, to preserve Masonry in this province in the way in which it is now carried on. So long as I can attend the meetings of this Lodge, and of other Lodges, so long will I continue to do it. My cordial assistance will ever be given to the interests of Masonry and to Masons. I beg leave to return thanks to you for the fraternal manner in which you have drunk my health. (The noble lord resumed his seat amid prolonged applause.)

The Provincial Grand Master next proposed, in succession, the toasts "Bro. Le Gendre, N. Starkie, Prov. Grand Master of West Lancashire," "Bro. Stephen Blair, Prov. Grand Master of East Lancashire," and "Bro. Sir Watkin Wm. Wynn, Prov. Grand Master of North Wales and Shropshire."

The Prov. Grand Master: I rise to propose the next toast, and I am quite certain you will drink it with as much satisfaction as I shall give it. I give you the health of "Bro. Crawford Antrobus." (Loud Cheers.)

Bro. Antrobus said: I beg to return you my warmest thanks for the way in which you have received this toast. I cannot take to myself all the praise the Right Worshipful Prov. Grand Master was pleased to give me this evening when he alluded to the aid I had afforded him in promoting the revival of Masonry in this province. I claim no merit on that account, and deserve no credit beyond that of hearty good will. I heard that Masonry was the bond of brotherhood, a means of promoting good will to our fellow men; therefore I became a Mason, and I have never repented that step. (Loud cheers.)

The Prov. Grand Master gave "The Provincial Grand Wardens of Cheshire."

Bro. Willoughby said: On behalf of the Provincial Grand Wardens, I beg to thank you. I esteem it a great honour to be an officer of this Provincial Grand Lodge. The Provincial Grand Master has alluded to the state in which he found the province when he received the appointment which I now hold, and he has congratulated us on the improvement that has taken place, and I will agree that the present condition of the province is mainly to be attributed to the efforts of our Provincial Grand Master. We are now in a most enviable position in comparison with what we were a few years ago, and I trust we may yet do more to honour the province, I allude to the charities in connection with Masonry. There are some charities carried on on a very large scale in the neighbourhood of London. There is a school in which the sons of our poorer brethren are being educated, and all the boys educated in that school have turned out worthy members of society, and of the girls school the same thing may be said, and even to a greater degree. The education received there is most excellent. I should be much gratified if the provincial Lodges would come forward in a body and do something more than they do for these charities. I know of £7,000 collected for their support, but of this sum £6,000 has come from the London Lodges, and only £1,000 from those in the provinces. Now, considering the number of the Lodges throughout the country, I think it is hardly fair in us to allow this great disproportion to exist, and it would be far better for the honour of this province, if we contributed more, according to our ability. I hope to see the day when the province of Cheshire will come forward in support of the charities, in such a manner as will add materially to their efficiency.

The Prov. Grand Master then proposed "The Provincial Grand Chaplain, Bro. Newall Tanner." "The Provincial Grand Treasurer, and other Provincial Grand Officers, past and present," and "The Visiting Brethren."

The Prov. Grand Master next gave "The Prov. Grand Stewards."

Bro. E. J. MacIntyre, after expressing his thanks for the way in which the health of the Prov. Grand Stewards had been drunk, said—I can assure you it will be our constant care to minister in every way we can to the comfort of the members of the Lodge, and we shall moreover be always delighted to see visitors to Chester, either in our private Lodge, at our ordinary meetings, or on occasions like this, when we have the honour of receiving the Prov. Grand Lodge of Cheshire. The Lodges of Chester have always been renowned for their hospitality, and I will answer for this Lodge, and I will also venture to do so for the other Lodge in Chester which has recently obtained its charter, that we will not depart from the example of our predecessors, but will always be ready to give a hearty welcome to visiting brethren from every quarter. (Cheers.) There were some expressions dropped by a brother, who recently addressed us, which I cannot help directing your attention to again. Bro. Willoughby has impressed upon us the necessity of not forgetting at our own banquets, that there are those places which are dependent upon us for their existence, the inmates of which in such a season as this especially, have the strongest claims on our consideration. Charity, we are often told, begins at home; and I am afraid it too often stops there. Let this, however, never be the case with regard to the Masons of Cheshire. I would also beg of you to recollect that the charitable institutions in the neighbourhood of London do not in the least belong to that place exclusively. The benefits they diffuse are spread over the whole of Masonry. I speak within my own knowledge, being a life governor of every one of those institutions, and I tell you that the applications coming in from the provinces are considerably greater in number than those we receive from London. We shall have, at our meeting on the 13th of next month, to take into consideration the applications that have already been sent in, and I can tell you that the applications forwarded from the provinces are as two to one when compared with those which have come in from London, where we receive so much the greater share of support. Those applications, however, will be considered impartially, and with sole reference to the special claims of the applicants. I would now offer the suggestion, that you should make your Prov. Grand Master a life governor of those institutions, a suggestion which I hope will be carried into effect. We do not expect to be able to do much, but we are endeavouring to add ten girls to the number educated in our school. We are in the habit of educating seventy girls, and a proposition will be brought forward and considered next month, to add ten to the number, and we could wish to make a similar increase in the boys school, and I hope we shall not be prevented by the want of funds. I think it would be paying a graceful tribute to the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, who has presided over the Lodge so many years, who has given so much satisfaction, and has contributed so much to the cause of Masonry, if you were to make him a life governor of these charities. He has been spared to see the day when, mainly through his exertions, Masonry has been resuscitated in the province of Cheshire, and I hope the Masons of Cheshire will show their gratitude to him by contributing nobly to the support of these schools, and let it be said that he was their first Prov. Grand Master who was made a life governor of these institutions. You have made me one of your stewards, and I will take care that there shall not be a single brother in the Lodge who will not have the opportunity of helping to bring this about—who shall not, at least, be asked to contribute. And I hope the Prov. Grand Master will accept the office, and when he is made a life governor of every one of our charitable institutions, I am sure the Masons of Cheshire will feel proud of having him in that position. (Protracted cheering.)

The health of "The Masters and Wardens of the Lodges in the province" was then drunk, and the list of toasts having been gone through, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master expressed his wish to retire.

The members then rose, and the noble lord having invoked the blessing of the Great Architect of the universe upon the brethren, was escorted down the room by the proper officials, amid the warmest demonstrations of affection and respect from all present.

The Deputy Prov. Grand Master then took the chair, and after a few more toasts the brethren separated.

DERBYSHIRE.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE CHESTERFIELD AND NORTH DERBYSHIRE HOSPITAL.

A grand public demonstration was made on Wednesday, Sept. 28th, in Chesterfield, on the occasion of laying the foundation stone of the intended new hospital, by the Marquis of Hartington, Prov. G. Master of Derbyshire. A more enthusiastic display of public feeling was never witnessed in Chesterfield on any previous occasion, and a considerable time may elapse before such manifestation may again occur. The most eligible site observed by the committee was that situate at Durrant-green and Holywell-street, immediately adjoining the residence of T. Carrington, Esq., which was considered highly favourable on account of the superior advantages it possessed for ventilation and drainage. The ground being the property of the Duke of Devonshire, an application was made to the late Duke, who, with that benevolence which characterized all his actions, promised the site, but passed to his eternal home before that promise could be fulfilled. The site was not to be absolutely given, but 100*l*. was to be paid as a nominal price for the purchase. The present noble Duke, who has the cause of charity at heart, having been made acquainted with the intention of his late lamented predecessor, most liberally expressed his desire to complete the arrangement, and to hand over the ground to the Hospital Committee.

The Hospital contains on the first floor two principal wards, each forty feet long, and over sixteen feet wide, lighted and ventilated by six large windows on opposite sides of the building, and warmed by open fire-places. On the second floor are two smaller wards, with the matron's bed room, servants' rooms, and store rooms. From the position of the building on the slope of a hill, a spacious basement is left at present unappropriated, but which can at any future time be made use of as occasion may require. The arrangement of the wards, with windows opposite to one or another on both sides, has been adopted in compliance with the expressed opinion of the medical profession in favour of such an arrangement, and with the approval of the medical gentlemen of the town.

The committee being of opinion that a public demonstration would more fully awaken public sympathy and support in their cause, determined that the laying of the foundation stone should be marked by a grand demonstration, and the Marquis of Hartington consented to perform the ceremony. The noble marquis being the Prov. Grand Master for Derbyshire of the order of Freemasons, advantage was taken of the circumstance to lay the stone according to Masonic usage. The Masonic arrangements, therefore, of the day were left to the management of the Scarsdale Lodge of Freemasons in conjunction with the brethren of distant Lodges, a great number of whom honoured the occasion by attending and assisting in the ceremony.

A public breakfast was provided in the Assembly-room of the Market Hall, at eleven o'clock. At the head of the table we observed E. G. Maynard, Esq. (Chairman of the Hospital Board of Management); his grace the Duke of Devonshire; the Marquis of Hartington, M.P.; Lieut.-Col. Cavendish; Hon. W. Cavendish; and a large number of other gentlemen.

Grace was said by the Rev. G. Butt, vicar of Chesterfield.

After breakfast, the Chairman rose and expressed the delight the Board of Management experienced in seeing so large a company assembled on occasion of such importance and interest to the town.

The Duke of Devonshire said: Ladies and gentlemen, I have been asked by your worthy chairman, and I would say a few words upon the occasion which has brought us together. My observations will indeed be most brief, as I believe this is merely a preliminary proceeding, the more important and interesting portion being that which is to follow when we have left this room. I shall therefore content myself with expressing the satisfaction it has given me to meet you here to-day. (Cheers.) I regard the event of the day as most significant of the increasing importance of this town and neighbourhood. (Hear.) Unfortunately we all know that with an increasing population there must be a corresponding increase of disease and accidents, and we must expect an increase of sickness and suffering. Especially is this the case in a district which is becoming the seat of manufacturing and mineral industry. (Hear, hear.) Whatever care may be taken to avoid accidents we know that they must occur, and we know that when such do occur how great is the contrast between patients sent to a small roomed, badly ventilated dwelling, with no conveniences, as compared with a large, healthy, and well conducted hospital, with medical and other assistance, and all those conveniences which can be afforded the patient. (Cheers.) In another point I take this opportunity of congratulating this town upon the prospect of its possessing a building which I have no doubt will be an ornament and a distinguishing feature. (Applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, permit me again to express the satisfaction it has given me to join in a movement of so much importance to the town and neighbourhood. (Loud cheers.)

Thanks having been offered by the Rev. George Butt, the company separated.

THE PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

The Marquis of Hartington, Prov. G.M. of Derbyshire, opened the Provincial Grand Lodge, at the Masonic Hall, at noon. On entering the Lodge Bro. Trimmell played an appropriate march on the harmonium, and the brethren rose to salute the Marquis. The Prov. G.M. was supported by the following Provincial Grand Officers:—Bro. Stone as D. Prov. G.M. (in the absence of Bro. Colville); Bros. Collinson, Prov. G.S.W.; Gamble, Prov. G.S.W.; Wright, Prov. G. Chaplain; Coulson, Prov. G.S.; Redfearn, Prov. G.S.D.; Prince, Prov. G.J.W.; Huggins, Prov. G.T.; Giles, G. Supt. of Works; German, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Kirkland, Asst. Dir. of Cers.; Trimmell, Prov. G. Org.; Wykes, Prov. G.S.B.; Ison, Prov. G.S.B.; Brearley, Prov. G. Steward; Spreechley and Sharpe; Gadsby, P. Prov. G.S.W. of Derbyshire; Burton, P. Prov. G.W. of Staffordshire; Carson, P. Prov. G. Pura; &c., &c. The following brethren were also in the Lodge:—Bros. Butel, S. Bennison, J. Cutts, W. J. Mackarsie, G. Kirkland, W. M. Hewitt, B. Mandale, H. Osborne, C. Haslam, J. H. Ramsden, J. Cartledge, F. E. Martin, J. Proctor, T. Evinson, T. Lloyd, J. Bunting, G. Fletcher, W. Clayton, W. Harner, G. B. Thorpe, M. Mee, Naiah, Thomas Hodgkinson, J. B. White, R. T. Gratton, J. E. Roberts, and S. Denham; Bro. F. W. Arkwright, Lodge of St. John and St. Paul, Malta. From Tyrian Lodge, Derby: Bros. James Crossley, John Winsor, John Gadsby, P.M., and W. Faulkner. Britannia Lodge, Sheffield: Bros. W. H. Naylor, W.M., E. Harrison, and J. Clayton. Arboretum Lodge, Derby: F. Huggins, J. Ison, Alonzo Thorpe, J. Borington, A. Whickner, Wilson Marsden, and Geo. Spreechley. Royal Sussex Lodge: Bros. Wykes, and J. Redfern, P.M. Forest Lodge, Mansfield: Bros. W. J. Neale, P.M., and C. Revil. Beaureper Lodge, Belper: Bros. T. W. McCallum, and J. Outram. Menturia: Bro. John Butterworth, W.M. St. Matthews: Bros. John Burton, and F. A. Edwards. Burslem: Bro. J. E. Armstrong, Prov. Grand Chaplain of Staffordshire.

It is calculated that from 1,000 to 1,200 persons started in the procession which extended from the Market-place to Durrant-green, on which the new building is about to be erected. The sight was imposing in the extreme.

On the procession arriving at the entrance to the ground, an open line was formed, and the Masonic portion of it passed through up to the stone, and the brethren halting and forming two ranks, through which the Prov. Grand Master advanced preceded by the Prov. Grand Sword Bearer, and followed by the brethren. The remainder of the procession was then admitted on the Hospital ground, and every eye was now fixed on that part of it where the ceremony was to be performed. The Marquis of Hartington then took up his position on the east side of the foundation-stone.

Mr. Maynard said—Ladies and Gentlemen, it is my place, as the Chairman of the Board of Management, to present this trowel to the Marquis of Hartington, and to request his Lordship in their name to do us the honour of laying the foundation stone.

The trowel was manufactured by Messrs. Rodgers, of Sheffield, and was a splendid piece of workmanship.

The Provincial Grand Master then stood upon the stone, and after the cheering had subsided, addressed the audience as follows: Ladies and gentlemen—You all know that a hospital has been founded, and is in existence in this town, but insufficient in size and position to meet the increasing wants of this town and neighbourhood. (Hear.) It is, therefore, intended to build a structure which shall be better adapted for its object than the one now in existence. I need not waste any words in proving to you that such an institution as this is wanted for this town and district. In a locality like this, where there are such great mineral enterprises being developed, steam engines, and other dangerous employments at full work, you are all but too well aware that the most lamentable and sometimes the most fatal accidents will occur, which it is impossible for the skill of man to guard against, but which it is his duty as far as he can to endeavour to alleviate. (Hear, hear.) Ladies and gentlemen, to the development of these great powers, through the wonderful force of steam, is owing the immense progress which this district has made within the last few years. To that cause is greatly owing the position of comfort and affluence which I see amongst many here around me, and you know it is to those who work for you at the risk of their lives, of their health, and of their limbs, that your ease and well-being is greatly owing. (Loud applause.) I do not feel that I am here to-day to plead the cause of this institution as one of charity, but that we are here to celebrate—to inaugurate the flourishing commencement of an institution which I have no doubt—I can have no doubt—that those who have commenced it will bring their work to a satisfactory and triumphant issue. (Loud applause.)

The Provincial Grand Master advanced to the east end of the stone, and, after adjusting it, a hymn was sung by the choir.

The Provincial Grand Chaplain having repeated a prayer, the Provincial Grand Master then addressed the spectators, according to ancient custom.

After the choir had sung the Benediction, the Prov. G.M. then struck three times with a mallet on the stone, and said, "May this undertaking be conducted and completed by the craftsmen according to the grand plan, in peace, harmony, and brotherly love."

The National Anthem having been sung by the choir accompanied by the bands, the assembly joining in the chorus, three cheers were given for the Marquis of Hartington, and the proceedings, which were of a highly impressive character, ended. The procession then re-formed and returned to the Market-place, where it dispersed amid several rounds of cheering.

The Freemasons concluded the interesting proceedings of the day by dining together at Bro. Wilkinson's, the Angel Inn, under the presidency of the Provincial Grand Master of Derbyshire, the Marquis of Hartington, M.P. There was a numerous attendance, the noble Marquis being supported by Bro. Thornhill, M.P., and the officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge. The vice-chairmen were Bro. Collinson, Provincial Grand Senior Warden, and Bro. Butel, Master of the Scarsdale Lodge, Chesterfield. Dessert having been laid on the table, and the Lodge closed tyled from the outer world,

"The Queen and the Craft," "The Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master of England," and "Lord Panmure, Deputy Grand Master of England," were drunk with Masonic honours.

Bro. Thornhill, M.P., rose to propose the next toast, and was received with considerable applause. He said—I have a toast to propose, which I am sure will be received with great pleasure by every brother present; it is the health of the Marquis of Hartington, M.P., Provincial Grand Master of Derbyshire. (Loud applause.) I beg also to thank him for coming amongst us this day, and for officiating in so able a manner at the laying of the foundation stone of our new Hospital. I would also remark that wherever works of charity are undertaken, you always find the Freemasons foremost in the work. (Hear.) I will not detain you longer, but call upon you at once to drink the health of the Marquis of Hartington, and thanks to him for his services this day. [The toast was honoured in a manner peculiar to Masons.]

The Marquis of Hartington said—Brother Masons, in thanking you for the compliment you have just paid me, I can but add very little, or indeed anything to what I said to you on a former occasion, at the time you did me the honour to install me as your Grand Master, when you so kindly received me, as you have also done on the present occasion. I then said how deeply gratified I was at the manner in which I had been received by you, and that I should always do what I could for the progress of Masonry in this province. (Applause.) I again say so. I beg to thank you for the cordial reception you have given me this day, and I also beg to thank you for the ready response you made to the call given by the Provincial Grand Secretary, inviting you to assist in the ceremony which has this day been so successfully inaugurated. (Hear.) I thank you most cordially for the assistance you have given me this day, and I am sure the inhabitants of this town and district thank you also; and without vanity I must say that they are indebted to the Freemasons for the most prominent part of the ceremony. The erection of a hospital is an enterprise which Freemasons would be sure to be foremost in, and I trust that you will take care that the work so well begun to-day shall be carried out properly. (Cheers.) I am very glad that so soon after my installation that I should have this opportunity of showing to non-masons, that we Masons are always ready and willing to respond to any good or charitable object that may be brought before them. The next toast, brethren, is "Bro. Colville, D. Prov. G.M., and the Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Derbyshire." (Applause). I am sure you all regret extremely the absence of Bro. Colville (cheers), who has this week taken off his apron and put on his sword. (Laughter). I merely mention this to show that he has not taken the example of the operative masons and struck work. (Laughter.) He is engaged with his troop of yeomanry at Derby, and therefore could not possibly be with us. With regard to the Provincial Grand Officers, there has been a good attendance of them to-day. Although some have been absent, Bro. Collinson and others have come, and I owe them sincere and hearty thanks for the support they have given me. I beg to propose to you "Bro. Colville and the Provincial Grand Officers." I beg to couple with the toast the name of Bro. Collinson, Prov. S.G.W. (Masonic honours). Bro. Collinson responded.

The Provincial Grand Master said, the day's arrangements had been most excellent, but there was one toast omitted from the programme, which he would take the liberty of proposing. It was "The health of the Bishop and Clergy of the Diocese," and uniting with the toast the name of their Provincial Grand Chaplain, Bro. Wright. (Cheers.)

Bro. Rev. G. Wright, in responding said, he had held the office of chaplain to the Derby Infirmary for twenty years, and almost at the same time that he received that appointment he also received that of Provincial Grand Chaplain from the hands of the late Duke of Devonshire. (Hear). The number of years he had been chaplain at the infirmary must have taught him something of the importance and necessity of hospitals, and no one could be more fully aware of the great need of such an institution in that part of the county. (Hear). A hospital is a thick volume of literature, from which any man can find some plain teaching. The erection of this hospital would relieve them at Derby in two ways. In the first place it would relieve them of patients. But that was not the most unfortunate part of it. He was afraid that it would take away some of their subscriptions. He trusted, however, that such would not be the case, although that was the impression on his mind.

Bro. Stone begged to propose the health of a brother with whom they were all well acquainted, and one who had rendered great service in the province of Derbyshire—he alluded to Bro. Butel, Master of the Scarsdale Lodge. (Cheers). He (Bro. Stone) congratulated the Scarsdale Lodge in making such a selection of Master, and he was quite sure that under his auspices the Scarsdale Lodge will become one of the first in the province. (Masonic honours).

Bro. Butel, acknowledged the compliment, and

The Provincial Grand Master gave "The health of the W.M. and brethren of the Arboretum Lodge," and expressed a hope that they might prosper as well as the name they bore had done. (Hear).

Bro. Collinson, W.M. of the Arboretum Lodge, acknowledged the toast, alluded to the prosperity of the Lodge, and expressed a hope that the brethren would attend the consecration of the Lodge, which would shortly take place. (Hear). In conclusion he begged to propose "The health of the W.M. and brethren of the Beaufreper Lodge." (Masonic honours).

The Provincial Grand Master, as W.M. of the Beaufreper Lodge, acknowledged the toast, and said he was indebted to that Lodge in a great measure for the position he now held, for had he not been made the W.M. of a Lodge, he could not have been installed as Grand Master of Derbyshire. Bro. Stone, who kindly officiated for him, had informed him that there is every prospect of their forming a good and efficient Lodge. (Hear).

Several other toasts were proposed and responded to before the company separated.

DURHAM.

Lodge of Industry (No. 56).—This Lodge was opened in due form, at the Grey Horse, Gateshead, on Monday, September 26th, the W.M., Bro. C. J. Banister, assisted by Bro. R. J. Banning, as S.W., and the rest of his Officers. Bros. Anty Clapham, W. Morrow, Thos. Cummins, and J. M. Harrison, P.M., No. 586. Also Bros. Jno. Forster, No. 756; I. Ion, and Thos. Reay, No. 793; I. Lynton, No. 957; R. S. Turnbull, No. 614; and a good attendance of the brethren. The voting papers were received for the Boys and Girls Schools, and the Secretary directed to forward them to the Prov. Grand Master as usual. Four gentlemen were proposed for initiation, and two as joining members. The business of the Lodge over, the Lodge was closed at nine o'clock. Bro. J. M. Harrison, P.M., No. 586, gave the lecture in the first degree.

HAMPSHIRE.

Basingstoke—Oakley Lodge (No. 995).—This Lodge was holden on Monday, Oct. 3rd, at the Lodge room. Bro. F. Perkins, W.M. of the Royal Gloucester Lodge, No. 152, Southampton, presided, in the absence of the W.M. Bros. Hammerton, S.W.; Challis, J.W.; Hillier, Treas.; How, Sec.; G. W. Clarke, Prov. G. Sec.; and several other brethren, were in attendance. The Secretary having read a letter from the W.M., explaining his absence, and requesting the assistance of some brother to act as W.M., Bro. Perkins took the chair, and the minutes were read and confirmed. The Lodge was opened in the proper degrees, and three brethren were raised to the degree of M.M. A candidate was afterwards initiated. A communication from the Royal Benevolent Institution was read, and ordered to be placed in the W.M.'s hands. The brethren present accorded their thanks to Bros. F. Perkins, Prov. S.G.W.; and G. W. Clarke, Prov. G. Sec., for their kindness in coming so great a distance to assist the Lodge at the shortest notice. Bro. Perkins expressed his pleasure and willingness to assist the brethren of the Oakley Lodge at all times; and as there were several young Masons present, he added that they might rely upon the most hospitable and fraternal reception whenever they visited the good old Gloucester Lodge, No. 152, over which he had the pleasure of presiding. The Lodge was closed in harmony, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

WINCHESTER.—Lodge of Economy (No. 90).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting at the Masonic Hall, adjoining the Black Swan Hotel, on Wednesday, the 29th ult.; when there were present the W.M. (Bro. Hasleham), Bros. F. La Croix, S.W.; Larkin, J.W.; Cowen, Sec.; Jacob, Treas.; and the following P.M.s—Bros. Sherry, Everitt, Levander, Durant, Oakshott; also Bros. Butcher, Best, and others. The minutes of the last Lodge having been read and confirmed, were duly signed. The Worshipful Master said that agreeably to the resolution of the last Lodge, he had communicated with the Grand Secretary, and enclosed the memorial signed by the members. He had subsequently received a reply, acknowledging the coming to hand of the document, and promising that it should be laid before the Board of General Purposes on the 20th September. And after the memorial had been duly presented at the board, he received another letter, which he would now read to the Lodge. It was as follows:—"Freemasons' Hall, London, W.C., Sept. 21. Worshipful Sir and Brother,—I have the honour to inform you that the memorial, dated the 31st August, 1859, and signed by yourself and seventeen other members of the Lodge of Economy, No. 90, was laid before the Board of General Purposes at their meeting held yesterday afternoon, and I am directed to inform you, and through you the other memorialists, that the subject thus brought to their notice will receive the most attentive consideration of the Board. By order of the Board, WM. GRAY CLARKE, G.S.—Bro. J. L. Hasleham, W.M., No. 90." Bro. Sherry said as he was the mover of the memorial, he would detain the Lodge just one moment. He thought the ready attention of the Grand Secretary was particularly kind, and he begged to move that the thanks of the Lodge be passed to him for his promptitude, and that the last reply be entered on their minutes. Bro. Everett seconded the proposition. Bro. Oakshott had not the least objection to the vote of thanks, though, at the same time, he did not know what the Grand Secretary had done to call for it. In common justice and courtesy they had a right to command a reply to their communication. Bro. Sherry was quite aware of that; but the Grand Secretary had met the communication most courteously and attentively, and replied by return of post. Bro. Everett said he was glad to recognize a likelihood of better feeling; at any rate there seemed to be more attention paid than in past days. The motion was then put to the Lodge and agreed to. Bro. G. P. Jacob, P.M., then addressed a few observations to the Lodge, in the course of which he alluded to the unpleasant and personal feelings which had of late been visible in the London meetings. He hoped, if the substance of their late memorial were carried out, it would prove the means of restoring good feeling on all sides. If certain members of the fraternity entertained different ideas, and there must be opposition, there existed no reason why gentlemanlike words and conduct should not prevail; and no bad feeling should be allowed to intervene amongst Masons under any circumstances. The Worshipful Master perfectly agreed with Bro. Jacob. He hoped to see all personalities cease in connection with Lodge business. The subject then dropped. The Worshipful Master then said he saw, by the quarterly communications received from Grand Lodge, that £1,750 more had been invested during the past quarter, in the Benevolent and General Purposes Funds. Bros. Sherry and Oakshott canvassed the votes of the Lodge for a boy named Pescott, of Chichester, as a candidate for the Boys Institution. The same was generally approved, and agreed to. Bro. Levander inquired about the new by-laws of the Lodge, and his query being satisfactorily answered by the Worshipful Master, the Lodge was duly closed, no other business coming before the meeting. There was a banquet afterwards, which passed off as usual most agreeably.

LANCASHIRE WEST.

GARSTON.—Lodge of Harmony (No. 267).—This Lodge held a meeting at the Wellington Hotel, Garston, on Monday, October 3rd. In the absence of the W.M., the Lodge was opened by Bro. G. Holme, P.M., assisted by the Officers of the Lodge—Bros. C. J. Banister, P.M.; S. Brabner, Prov. G. P.M.; John Pepper, Prov. G. Sec.; James Hamer, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Bros. M. J. McGowen, Thos. Benton, Josh. J. Duggan, and a good attendance of the members. The business of the Lodge completed, it was closed, and the brethren and visitors adjourned to refreshment.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

CONSECRATION OF THE FELHAM PILLAR LODGE, AT GRIMSBY (No. 1,094).

On Thursday, the 29th ult., an event took place in Grimsby which the brethren in that district will long remember with feelings of pleasure. This rising port, at one time the residence of our distinguished Bro. Dr. Oliver, has now for many years been deprived of the benefits of a Masonic Lodge. The Speena and Humber, a Lodge which a few venerable Masons still remember, and the Apollo, which, from its connection with the learned historian of Masonry, ought to have met with a better fate, have both been discontinued long ago. The love of the Craft, however, still lingered in the breasts of the brethren living in the town, and their numbers having recently been reinforced by the addition of several zealous and energetic members, it was determined that an earnest effort should be made again to revive the light of Masonry among them. Accordingly, in May last, a meeting was held, at which it was resolved to present a petition to the M. W. Grand Master for a warrant to enable the brethren to hold a Lodge, to be called the "Pelham Pillar Lodge," a name taken (we may explain in passing), from a lofty pillar erected in memory of a member of the family of Lord Yarborough, the noble Prov. G.M. for Lincolnshire. The M. W. Grand Master was pleased to grant a warrant in accordance with the prayer of the petition, under the name of the "Pelham Pillar Lodge, No. 1,094," holding its meetings on the first Thursday of the month at Chapman's Hotel. The objections against meeting at an inn are felt by the Grimsby brethren, their present location, we understand, being but temporary, and as soon as more eligible quarters can be obtained the Lodge will be removed. A spacious and convenient room has been obtained, which, with a few additional arrangements for securing greater privacy, will be well suited for the purpose. The furniture, jewels, &c., all of which are new, are very handsome, and reflect great credit upon Bro. Spencer, of Great Queen-street, by whom they have been supplied, as has also the very beautiful volume of the Sacred Law presented to the Lodge by Bro. F. P. Cupiss, the Treasurer.

The proceedings of constituting the Lodge commenced shortly after one o'clock, Bro. Waite, W.M. of the Lindsay Lodge, No. 1014, acting as installing Master, and discharging his important duties in so able and impressive a manner as to elicit the warmest commendations from the large assemblage of the brethren present. The Lodge having been duly constituted according to the usages of the Craft, Bro. Thomas Hewson, P. Prov. G.S.B., was installed Worshipful Master, and saluted by the brethren according to ancient custom. The Worshipful Master then appointed and invested the Officers, viz., Bros. J. Sarle, S.W.; W. J. Whalley, J.W.; F. P. Cupiss, Treas.; Jno. Whitford, Sec.; W. Marshall, S.D.; D. H. Bunz, J.D.; E. Henshall and S. Walmsley, Stewards; E. H. Clarke, I.G.; S. Hardcastle, Tyler. The business being concluded, the Lodge was closed in ancient form.

The brethren next proceeded to the Corn Exchange, whence a procession was formed to the parish church, a fine old Norman edifice, which has recently been restored with great taste. Prayers were read by Bro. the Rev. R. Ainslie, vicar of Grimsby, and an eloquent sermon preached by Bro. the Rev. E. R. Larken, P. Prov. G. Chaplain, Lincolnshire, which was listened to by the brethren with the utmost attention. The text was taken from Ephesians, v. 8, "Walk as children of light." The reverend brother said:—

"It were needless, even if it were possible, to point out minutely the blessings afforded to mankind by their Heavenly Father in his gift of material light, the creation of which is first recorded in his revealed word, in these simple but impressive words—"God said, Let there be light, and there was light." If we can imagine what the world must have been had this blessing been denied it, we can perhaps have something like an adequate idea of the value of the boon. All the beautiful forms and colours that now delight our vision, refine our taste, and enliven our fancy, would have had no existence, and we should have led a wearisome life in a gloomy and monotonous world. Nor can it be said, with any force of argument, that we should not have suffered had the blessing of light been denied to us because not being acquainted with its value we could not be conscious of our own want of it; for that very want of acquaintance and of consciousness would have been of itself a privation. Our finest sense and the one through which we are capable of deriving the highest gratification would have been lost to us, and the mere fact of our being unaware of what we might otherwise have enjoyed, would have been but a slight, a very slight alleviation of our misfortune. But thanks be to God, there is no need to speculate further on what might have been our condition and our sufferings in a darksome world. Light has been given, and it has blessed us to a degree of which we can only show our sense by our thankfulness, and never should we offer up the tribute of our gratitude to the Almighty for the many benefits bestowed upon us from his inexhaustible store, without including this among the number. Those who, by accident or disease, or rather by God's permission have lost the power of availing themselves of this benefit, could tell how great the loss of how many of the purest delights they have been deprived; and their declarations of misery at the want of that blessing which we enjoy should render us doubly sensible of, and thankful for the mercy which continues it to ourselves. If we could confer with one of these unhappy beings we should find that one of the greatest sources of distress to them is their inability to provide for their own comfort and security, to guide themselves amid the crowds of their fellow men, and to avoid the dangers which beset the path of all, but which those who are blessed with eye sight may, by the use of common vigilance, be tolerably sure of escaping. Many alleviations, I am aware, are found by the afflicted through public and private benevolence, by the care and consideration shown to them by the crowds through which they pass, and by the sympathy their privation always begets for them among their fellow creatures, and it is even true that to some the loss of one sense seems greatly to be made up by the additional acuteness of the rest—a wonderful instance this of compensation at the hands of our merciful Creator; but whatever exceptions we may find, the rule is true that they are deeply and sincerely to be pitied, from whom is withheld the unspeakable blessing of light. And, my brethren, if such be the case with material light, the light by which that body is guided in its daily intercourse with the world, and by which the eye is charmed in its survey of the glorious works of the Almighty—how much greater is the blessing, how much more valuable the gift of spiritual light, by which the soul is guided and directed in its weary pilgrimage through this scene of sin and suffering, to its home in the eternal city, and enabled to survey with gratitude and joy the rich provisions made by the love and mercy of God to reclaim it from all its depravity and impurity, and win it back to himself, a partaker of his ineffable glory in the palaces on high. Without this light what would have been the moral aspect of the world? As dark and dreary as would have been its material face had darkness prevailed over it from the beginning. What wonders should we have lost, and of what glories should we have been unconscious! From the beginning of man's existence upon earth, in the time of his innocency, this light has been vouchsafed unto him by his Maker in such a manner as the instruction of his dawning intellect required, and his infant vision able to bear. It was not wholly withdrawn after the period of innocency was over, but still given to those who diligently sought after it, and God has never failed to pour into their souls this his holy inspiration. By this light has the knowledge of his being, his unity and his attributes been maintained in the hearts of men from the creation until now. The philosophy of the heathen, which taught much of these mighty truths, owed all its power to the illuminating virtue of this influx, and to its more especial and abundant outpourings are we indebted for all that long chain of witnesses to the glorious facts of the existence of God, our relationship to him, the immortality of our souls, our duties in this life, and our prospects in the life to come. Whence but from this source came the supernatural wisdom of the royal sage of the times of the glory of Jerusalem, of him who was at once the king and the philosopher of his people, to whom was vouchsafed the invaluable privilege of building a holy temple to the Lord Jehovah? This goodly fabric—which had for seven years been rising from its foundations like some tall and spreading palm-tree, rapidly yet almost imperceptibly, surely and strongly, without the din of the workman's hammer, on which had been lavished the treasures of the east, and the labours of the cunning workmen of all countries—now stood forth in all its beauty and splendour. No longer did the ark of the Lord dwell under curtains; while the monarch of his people was sheltered by a roof of cedars, now at the completion of the work, it is borne with all the accompaniments of sacred pomp to a shrine benefiting in magnificence the treasure it received; and far surpassing in grandeur the palace of any earthly sovereign, even as the majesty of the God, who chose to place his name there exceeded that of the proudest of his creatures. Here at this solemn dedication the best and wisest of Israel, her princes, her elders, her warriors and her sages filled the courts of the temple, and were lifting up their hearts to the Almighty Father of their country; many were praying for the peace of Jerusalem, and while the smoke of numberless sacrifices rose to heaven, the ark entered the most holy place even under the wings of the Cherubim. Then was vouchsafed the Almighty's acceptance of the costly offering of his servant, and a symbol of his future more peculiar residence within its sanctuary. 'And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.' And even with this visible sign of God's more immediate presence before him, the monarch of Israel could regard it only as a sign, and not the reality itself. And in the course of that magnificent prayer which he then offered to the most high God (and which I trust no one who hears me this day will fail to study with reverence and devotion), burst into this striking apostrophe to the incomprehensible omnipotence of God. 'But will God indeed dwell upon the earth, behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee, how much less this house that I have builded.' Whence but from the light vouchsafed by God himself could come this power to bear testimony to this his most unspeakable majesty and glory? To what but to this light do we owe the testimonies borne to the Most High by the long line of seers and prophets of old? But as ages rolled onward these special and abundant outpourings of this light more rarely took place in the extraordinary measure in which it was shed on the monarch and the prophets of Israel, until at last an interval of four hundred years occurred, during which it seems to have been withdrawn altogether, and men were left to the ordinary teaching of the light upon their hearts and consciences, sufficient indeed to lead them in the right path if they would but seek it, but not coming with supernatural forces upon the soul, and thus irresistibly compelling convictions. You know in what a state of uncertainty, doubt, and distrust, both the Jewish and Gentile worlds sunk during this period. Indifferentism and scepticism had taken the place of religious faith and knowledge, and a formal attention to outward ceremonies had usurped that of the heart, so that the prediction of the prophet was fulfilled, 'Behold the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people,' and the time arrived for his invocation to be answered—'Arise, shine! for the light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.' Then came in rapid succession he who was not the promised light, but its forerunner and witness, and then the Sun of Righteousness himself with healing on his wings. Then did he, during the little while that He—the true light—was with his followers, teach them the way of truth and righteousness, and died at last to enable them to follow that way. Then came the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the glorious company of the apostles, and then followed the noble army of martyrs, who have been followed again by the holy church throughout all the world, in an acknowledgment and ascription of glory to the Most High. And although, my dear brethren, it is true that now the glory of the Lord does not visibly fill the sanctuaries of our worship, nor go before our hosts, nor meet us in the solitudes of the desert, nor does his power flash supernatural radiance into our souls, yet we have, in the sufficient teaching of his word and the grace of his Holy Spirit, enough knowledge of our God to make us, if we but will, wise unto salvation, and we may therefore truly be called the children of light." The reverend preacher then dwelt eloquently upon the grave responsibilities involved in such an appellation, and concluded in the following words:—"There are those before me, and whom I am called upon more particularly to address this day, on whom this responsibility weighs more heavily than on the general body of believers in the gospel. They are those on whose behalf this sacred meeting has been convened, who have met here for solemn prayer and heartfelt praise upon the auspicious occasion of establishing in this town a Lodge for the members of their ancient Order. On you, my brethren, the duty is incumbent to work not only as Christians, but as members of that Order you have voluntarily entered, and whose obligations you have of your own free will taken upon yourselves. It is not that anything can increase the weight of the obligation to holiness and virtue incumbent on the Christian; you were not bound any less to these things before you joined our Order, than you are at the present moment, but you have by joining it, and by your presence here to-day given testimony of your acknowledgment and acceptance of those obligations in your own persons; and therefore it is that you need the utmost jealousy and circumspection that you may not bring upon your Order the charge of uselessness, and on yourselves the charge of inconsistency. By your profession of righteousness thus publicly made, you are the further bound to let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven. May this day's solemnity leave its wholesome effect upon us all. May the work which we have this day dedicated witness a worthy fulfilment of the intent of its erection, and may we ever, through God's assistance, live in the spirit of the prayer of the royal founder of the Temple of the Lord, and in obedience to the precept of the Lord's apostle—"Walk as children of light."

THE BANQUET.

At the conclusion of divine service the brethren returned in procession to Chapman's Hotel, where at five o'clock an excellent dinner was provided. Between fifty and sixty of the Craft sat down to dinner, under the presidency of Bro. J. F. Waite, W.M., of the Lindsey Lodge, who was supported, right and left, by Bro. the Rev. E. R. Larken, M.A., P. Prov. G. Chaplain, Lincolnshire; G. Shark, Prov. G. Sec; H. Deval, Prov. G. Org., York; Thos. Hewson, P.M., No. 1094; R. Glover, W.M., No. 65; W. Banks Hay, P.M., No. 65; S. S. Walton, P.M., No. 311; T. Sissams, jun., P.M., No. 311; Chr. Ingoldby, S.W., No. 1014; Jas. Fowler, No. 1014; F. P. Cupiss, Treas., No. 1094; Alderman Adam Smith, No. 1094. The vice chair was filled by Bro. J. Sarle, S.W., No. 1094; supported by Bro. Marshall, S.D., No. 1094; S. C. Blakewell, P.M., No. 1014; James Glover, No. 65; J. Broadhead, P.M., No. 65; S. S. Walton, P.M., No. 311, while in other parts of the room we noticed Bro. W. Denison, S.W., No. 65; W. J. Whalley, J.W., No. 1094; E. H. Clarke, No. 1094; Ed. Henshall, No. 1094; C. M. Nesbitt, No. 1014; Thos. Ross, No. 65; M. Kemp, No. 65; J. G. Little, No. 65; Fras. Buck, No. 65; J. Ward, No. 65; — Hogg, No. 65.

The cloth having been drawn, the Worshipful Master gave "The Queen and the Craft," which was received with genuine Masonic loyalty and enthusiasm.

The Worshipful Master next proposed "The health of the Prince Consort, and the rest of the Royal Family." (Cheers).

The Worshipful Master had great pleasure in proposing "The health of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master," a nobleman whose long and invaluable services to the Craft the brethren were well acquainted with, and deeply grateful for. (Loud cheers).

The Worshipful Master then gave "The Right Hon. Lord Panmure, Deputy Grand Master, and the Officers of the Grand Lodge." (Cheers).

The Worshipful Master: The duty now devolves upon me of proposing to you the health of a nobleman and brother who is held in the highest esteem, not only by the Craft, but by the inhabitants of this borough generally. You will readily conceive that I allude to our noble brother the Earl of Yarborough. Closely connected as is that noble earl with you, and intimately known by you all, I am sure no words of mine are needed to secure to this toast that cordial reception it so heartily merits. (Loud and repeated cheers).

The toast was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm.

Bro. Ingoldby: I am called upon, Worshipful Master and brethren, to discharge a most pleasing duty—that of acknowledging the toast of their highly esteemed Provincial Grand Master. (Cheers). It would be unnecessary among the brethren to whom he is so well known to dwell upon his lordship's high position in the Craft—still less to enlarge upon his many eminent qualities in this ancient borough, where his lordship holds the distinguished office of high steward, and to whom the inhabitants owe so much. I am sure that I only express the heartfelt sentiments of the brethren, and of the town and district where they were assembled, in sympathizing with the cause of his lordship's absence, and in praying that he might long be spared to discharge the duties of those high offices which he so ably filled. (Loud cheering). They could not doubt that had his lordship's health permitted he would not have been absent from the inauguration of their new Lodge to-day, and the brethren while deeply regretting the cause of that absence would sincerely join with him in the hope that on future occasions they might be honoured with the presence of the noble earl, who by his many public and private virtues, and by the lively interest he had always taken in Masonry, had earned for himself that proud position in the Craft of which he was one of the most distinguished ornaments. (Loud cheers).

The Worshipful Master next called upon the brethren to drink the health of Bro. the Rev. C. Nairne, D. Prov. G.M., whose courtesy and attention deserved the warmest acknowledgments of the brethren. (Cheers).

Bro. the Rev. E. R. Larken briefly responded on behalf of Bro. Nairne who was prevented by illness from attending on this interesting occasion.

Bro. Sarle, S.W.: Worshipful Master and brethren. Before the next toast is proposed I am desirous, on behalf of the brethren of the Pelham Pillar Lodge to express how deeply we appreciate the honour which has been conferred upon us by the attendance of the Provincial Grand Lodge, and which has shed so great a lustre on the interesting and important ceremonies in which we have this day had the pleasure to participate. We feel, Worshipful Sir, that we have incurred a debt of gratitude which can never be effaced from our memories, for we hail their presence amongst us, not only as a proof of their zeal and solicitude for Masonry in general, but also of their fraternal affection for our infant Lodge. To our Very Worshipful and Rev. Bro. Larken our grateful thanks are most especially due for his ready acquiescence in the wish of the brethren to commemorate the opening of our Lodge by a public attendance at divine worship, thereby enabling us as a body to implore the Supreme Governor of the universe in our undertaking. And we trust that the divine truths inculcated in the admirable and truly Masonic discourse, this day addressed to us by our reverend brother, will create in us a more anxious desire to cultivate every Masonic virtue, and zealously to fulfil the duties we owe to God, to our neighbours, and to ourselves. (Cheers). I have now, Worshipful Master and brethren, great pleasure in proposing the toast which has been entrusted to me, and although I cannot but feel deeply sensible of my inability to perform this pleasing but important duty, in the manner to which it is entitled, yet I have the consolation of knowing that it will not suffer from the imperfections of the proposer. The toast requires no eulogium to recommend it to your notice, and as it is the delight as well as the duty of Masons to render honour to whom honour is due, I feel assured that it will be received by you with lively satisfaction, and responded to with true Masonic enthusiasm. And it is therefore with great pleasure that I propose the health of the Provincial Grand Lodge, united with that of our worthy and reverend brother, E. R. Larken, Past Prov. Grand Chaplain.

Bro. the Rev. E. R. Larken, in rising to return thanks, was received with loud cheers. The reverend brother expressed his gratitude to the brethren for the cordial manner in which they had responded to the toast, and assured them of the gratification he had experienced in attending the ceremonies of this day. He had also to thank them for the kind attention they had paid to his sermon; indeed he had never seen a more devout and attentive congregation, and he trusted that the impressions of this day's solemnity would long be felt by them, and by those also who, not being members of their venerable Order, had witnessed in their public assemblage in the house of God their anxiety to dedicate themselves to his service, and to implore his blessing upon the work they had undertaken. (Hear, hear). Again he begged to thank them on behalf of the Provincial Grand Lodge and himself for the honour conferred upon them.

Bro. Grieve, in highly eulogistic terms, gave the health of "Bro. J. F. Waite, W.M., Lindsey Lodge, No. 1,014," who had most ably and impressively discharged the duties of installing Master. The toast was responded to by the brethren with great enthusiasm.

Bro. Waite: I hardly know, brethren, how to thank you for the very flattering and kind manner in which my health has been proposed by Bro. Grieve, and received by you. I gladly came here to-day, at your invitation, to perform to the best of my ability a most interesting ceremony, thinking that by so doing I might in some measure show my consciousness of the great debt my Lodge is under to the brethren at Grimsby. However imperfectly I may have performed my duty, I hope you will take it as a proof of my sincere wish to be of service to you, and whenever I can render any assistance, believe me it will afford me the greatest pleasure to do the best I can to help you. (Loud cheers). The gratifying manner in which you have recognized my poor services leads me to hope that this day's is not the last ceremony I may perform in the "Pelham Pillar Lodge."

Bro. Ingoldby, in giving the health of the first Master of the Lodge, "Bro. Thomas Hewson," said it afforded him great pleasure to see the Lodge established under the guidance of so experienced and efficient a Mason. (Cheers). The Lodge, he trusted, having commenced under such favourable auspices, would long continue to prosper, and be the means through its faithful and zealous members of upholding and extending the principles of their noble Order.

Bro. Hewson most heartily thanked the brethren for their cordial reception of his name, and for having placed him in the honourable position of Master of the Lodge. It would ever be his desire to discharge his duties to the best of his ability, and with the co-operation of the officers and brethren, he felt sure that their infant Lodge would soon be recognized as one of the best in the province.

Bro. Marshall proposed the health of "The W.M. and brethren of the Humber Lodge, No. 65;" which was acknowledged by Bro. Denison, S.W., in an admirable speech, which we regret our space will not allow us to give.

Bro. Denison then gave "Success and Prosperity to the Pelham Pillar Lodge," which was received with loud and continued applause.

Bro. W. J. Whalley, J.W., responded. He duly appreciated the honourable position in which his brethren had that day placed him. From the day of his initiation he had felt it as a disgrace to their ancient borough that it could not boast a Masonic Lodge, and his constant exertions had been directed to the bringing about that which they had this day met to incorporate. (Cheers). The fact of our town having for so long a time been honoured by the residence of that illustrious brother, Dr. Oliver, ought to be an incentive to the brethren for increased exertions in the good cause. On behalf of the Pelham Pillar Lodge, he returned his sincere thanks to Bro. Denison for the handsome manner in which he had proposed the toast, and to the visiting brethren, not only for the cordiality with which they had responded to it, but for the kind and brotherly feeling evinced by them in coming to assist at the opening of their Lodge.

The Chairman and most of the visiting brethren having to leave at this stage of the proceedings, Bro. Hewson, W.M. of the Lodge, took the chair.

Bro. Jas. Fowler proposed the health of the W.M. and brethren of the Minerva Lodge, and expressed his pleasure in seeing among them so many brethren from neighbouring Lodges. Such interchange of sentiment and expression of fraternal feeling as prevailed at these happy meetings, proved that we knew "how good and joyful a thing it was to dwell in unity," and also that we wished to promote its growth among those without the pale of our Order. (Cheers). He regretted the early departure of the Hull brethren, as it made the toast he had to propose appear almost a matter of form, and he would, therefore, without further preface, give "The W.M. and brethren of the Minerva Lodge." (Cheers).

The toast was drunk with great cordiality.

A variety of other toasts were proposed, and most heartily responded to, including "The Visitors;" "The Brethren of Foreign Lodges;" "The Lindsey Lodge, No. 1,014," responded to by Bro. Blakelock, P.M., who first saw the light forty years ago in the now defunct Sperna and Humber Lodge;" "The Vicar, with thanks for the use of the church;" "The subordinate members of the Pelham Pillar Lodge," &c.; and the brethren separated after a most harmonious and auspicious celebration of the opening of their new Lodge, which has our heartiest wishes for its prosperity and success.

NORFOLK.

NORWICH.—Perseverance Lodge (No. 258).—The brethren held their regular monthly meeting at the Rampant Horse Hotel, on the 20th ult., Bro. James Dawbarn, W.M., in the chair, who opened the Lodge in the three degrees, when Bro. Plumbly was raised to the sublime degree of M.M.; the Lodge being afterwards closed down, Mr. Robert Thorns was initiated into Masonry; both ceremonies were performed by the Worshipful Master in a manner most impressive and satisfactory. The business being ended, the brethren retired to refreshment, and spent the evening agreeably.

NORWICH.—Social Lodge (No. 110).—The Provincial Grand Master having given his sanction to the holding a Lodge of Instruction under the Warrant of this Lodge, the provincial monthly meeting was held at the Royal Hotel, Market-place, Bro. A. F. Morgan, S.W. of No. 110, acting as W.M., opened and closed the Lodge in the three degrees, and performed the ceremony of passing in a most praiseworthy manner. By his indefatigable exertions to complete the circle of his Masonic duties, this brother has shown that whenever called upon to rule over his Lodge, he is fully prepared to do so, and that the dignity of the chair and the well working of the Lodge will not suffer in his keeping. The benefits arising from the establishment of this Lodge are becoming very manifest, tending as it does to develop the capabilities of those who are aspirants for the higher offices of the Order, as well as for the general improvement of its members, in proof of which many have qualified themselves for different appointments who otherwise might never have given their serious attention to the matter. Among these may particularly be noticed Bro. E. Hyams, who has greatly distinguished himself. Although the Lodge numbers nearly forty members, it is greatly to be regretted that, as to many of them, their names on the book form the only proof that they are enrolled as members of our ancient and honourable Order.

MARK MASONRY.

METROPOLITAN.

ST. MARK'S LODGE.—The first meeting was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Wednesday, October 5th, Bro. Sharman presiding, when Bro. Simmonds was elected R.W.; Bro. Fox D.M.; Loewenstark, S.W.; Arliss, J.W.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—Fowke Lodge of Mark Masters (No. 19).—A meeting of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Thursday the 29th ult. There were present Bros. W. Kelly, (Prov. G.M.M.), W.M.; Bankart, J.W.; Paul, S.D.; Clephan, Treas.; R. Brewin, I.G.; Bethrey, Director of Music and Ceremonies; and J. H. Garnar; visitors, Bros. Underwood, (D. Prov. G.M.M.), W.M.; Pettifer, S.W.; Windram, J.W.; Nedham, Secretary of the Howe Lodge, No. 21. The minutes of the last Lodge having been read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Bros. Rev. J. O. Picton, Lieut. H. Barber, G. F. Lloyd, G. A. Löhr, and B. Broadbent, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766, as candidates, when they were declared duly elected, and Bros. Picton, Barber, and Lloyd, being present, were advanced to the degree. The Right Hon. Earl Howe, Prov. S.G.W. of the Mark, was elected an honorary member of the Lodge. A formal resolution was passed for the removal of the Lodge from the Three Crowns Hotel to the Masonic Hall, two members (Bros. Clephan and Bankart) were elected to serve with the Worshipful Master on the committee of management for the building, and auditors of the Treasurer's accounts were also elected. A ballot was then taken for Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, when Bro. Kelly was unanimously re-elected. A bust of the late Sir F.G. Fowke, Bart., Prov. G.M. for Leicestershire, (from whom the Lodge derives its name), was presented by the present baronet. The Lodge was then closed in harmony.

LEICESTER.—Howe Lodge of Mark Masters (No. 21).—At a later hour of the evening a meeting of this Lodge was held, Bro. Underwood, W.M., in the chair; the same brethren being present, and similar resolutions connected with the Masonic Hall were passed. A ballot was taken for Bros. Gill, Morris, and Bembridge (as Tyler), all of whom were duly elected, and Bros. Gibson, Gill, and Bembridge, (of St. John's Lodge, No. 348), were advanced, the lecture of the degree being delivered by Bro. Kelly, Prov. G.M.M.; Bro. Underwood was re-elected W.M., and Bro. Gibson was elected as Treasurer; after which the Lodge was closed.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL ENCAMPMENT.

LIVERPOOL.—Encampment of Jacques de Molay.—This Encampment was held at the Masonic Temple, Hope-street, Liverpool, on Friday, September 28th. Sir Knt. James Heyes was installed Eminent Commander by Sir Knt. H. S. Alpess, P.E.C., and afterwards invested the following Knights as his officers for the ensuing year:—C. J. Banister, 1st Captain; R. Collins, 2nd Captain; J. Ellis, Prelate; L. Leather, Chancellor; J. H. S. Alpess, Registrar and Treasurer; Jackson, Expert; Ed. Pierpoint, Capt. of Lines; A. Smith, Equerry. The Encampment being closed, the Knights adjourned to refreshment, and spent a very happy evening. The Provincial Grand Conclave was holden next day at Ashton. Sir Knts. H. S. Alpess, James Heyes, and C. J. Banister, were the deputation from this Encampment.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty with her husband and family have been taking advantage of the splendid weather of the last week, and devoting themselves to out of door amusements of various kinds. On Friday last, the queen had a party at the castle, to which a few personal friends were invited. The Secretary of State in waiting on her Majesty is Sir George Lewis, and among the visitors have been Lord John Russell and Sir James Hudson, K.C.B., of diplomatic celebrity.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Imperial Court will quit Biarritz on the 10th instant, and leave Bayonne for Bordeaux on the 11th. After a sojourn of forty-eight hours in Bordeaux, they will leave for Paris, where they are expected to arrive on the 14th instant.—General Changarnier has returned to Paris from Belgium. Marshal Canrobert and Marshal the Duke of Magenta have quitted Paris for Nancy and Lille, to resume the command of their military districts. Lord Cowley had started for Biarritz to arrange, it is stated, with Count Walewski respecting the joint expedition to China. The King of the Belgians has left Marseilles for Switzerland. Sundry circumstances combine to show how much opposed is the Emperor of the French to the fortifications of Antwerp. The French bishops have taken up the cause of the Pope with great warmth, and in doing so one of them (the bishop of Poitiers) presents us with the following view of the Papal Government:—"The Roman Government, in its chief, its higher dignitaries, and its present representatives, is inferior to no contemporary government, and that in all the degrees of the central, provincial, and municipal administration it has nothing to fear in any quarter from a comparison of merit with merit, position with position, person with person." The French army of Italy will winter in the peninsula. General Ulloa and M. Montanelli have arrived in Paris from Florence. It is said that in addition to the steam ram Solferino, just laid on the stocks at Lorient, ten steam rams are in course of construction at other ports. Marshal Niel, on entering Toulouse at the head of a portion of the army of Italy, was very unfavourably received—some say hissed. The war of the French press against the government was boldly continued, and it is evident that the latter must take some stronger measure against the press if it is to be kept in order.—The Patrie states that it is asserted that the treaty of peace will be signed at Zurich next week; it also states on good authority, that the treaty would be a fulfilment of the preliminaries of Villafranca. Other questions arising out of the settlement of the affairs of Italy would be referred to a superior jurisdiction, by which it is evidently meant that a congress will be held.—A telegram announces that Austria has consented to reduce the share of the Lombard debt to be paid by Sardinia.

from four hundred millions to little more than half of that sum. The General Correspondence of Vienna says that the Archduchess Sophia, mother of the Emperor, is about to depart for Bavaria for an indefinite time. This is regarded (says the Correspondence) as a proof that the ultra Catholic party at Vienna is on the decline.—The affairs of Italy are likely to be settled in a manner that will soon enable the Italians to govern themselves. The most important piece of news is that the volunteers of Garibaldi and the troops of the Pope had a smart brush near La Cattolica, on the 25th ult. Garibaldi was taking measures to bring his cause to a successful issue. The Pope, indignant against Victor Emmanuel for his answer to the deputation from the Romagna, has sent his passport to the Sardinian ambassador at Rome. The King of Naples is said to have offered the assistance of his troops to the Pope; this is doubted, but should it prove true the probability is that the Neapolitan troops will join the standard of Victor Emmanuel. The question now arises, what will the Emperor Napoleon do? To add to the difficulties of the situation it is stated that the Pope and the French emperor are at variance. At Modena General Fanti has issued a spirited order of the day to the troops of the League. In the meantime the Italians in Tuscany and the Duchies are acting with moderation. All authentic deeds issued in Sardinia, Parma, Modena, and the Romagna, as well as judgments, are to have effect in Tuscany, and the uniform of the military is to be similar, and the Tuscan money is to bear the effigy and name of Victor Emmanuel. A decree of the provisional government of Tuscany states that in future every public act shall be headed thus—"Under the reign of his Majesty the King Victor Emmanuel," &c. Other decrees have also been published concerning the oath to the king and the fundamental laws of the country. The arms of Savoy were placed on all the public buildings, and on this occasion a religious festival took place. A Te Deum was performed in the Church of St. Petronia, at which all the authorities and an immense crowd were present. General Garibaldi and the Marquis de Pepoli have been received with great enthusiasm. The same festivals have taken place throughout the Romagna. By the latest advices from Gibraltar it appears that the lawless Bedouins in Morocco are still driving the terror-stricken Europeans to desert the towns and take refuge on board ship. The town of Mazagan had been attacked by these Arabs, in which they themselves lost thirty men.—We understand that the Russian ambassadors resident at the courts of France, England, Austria, and Prussia, have received orders to repair to Warsaw in order to confer with their sovereign, the Emperor of Russia, who will arrive at that capital on the 15th instant. The ambassadors are expected to reach Warsaw by the 17th.—The Europa has arrived at Liverpool with New York dates to the 22nd ult. General Scott had sailed for the Pacific, relative to the San Juan difficulty. The number of American troops on the island of San Juan had been increased to 500. Earthworks had been thrown up by the Americans, and their cannon commanded Victoria. Major General Harney declared he would call for volunteers if attacked. The British Admiral had refused to obey the orders of Governor Douglas to bring on a collision; and he had also refused to bring his fleet to the island, saying he intended to await orders from the home government. The relations between the American and British officers continued very friendly.

INDIA, CHINA, AND COLONIES.—The Shannon has arrived at Southampton with the West India and South Pacific mails. In Jamaica the weather has been favourable for next year's crop, but the want of rain is complained of in Barbadoes. The health of the island is, on the whole, good. Trade generally depressed. There is no news of political importance. From the South Pacific the news is meagre, but we have the information, from the Ecuador, of an armistice with Peru being settled. The India and China mails had not arrived up to the time of our going to press.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The return of the Registrar General again shows an improvement in the public health, the deaths last week amounting to 1,014, a number considerably below the average rate of the period. The deaths from diarrhoea were only 40, but from scarlatina the mortality was 80. The total number of births for the week was 1,578.—The revising barrister for the Tower Hamlets has held a court for the revision of the lists at Whitechapel. There were no objections, but merely a few claims from parties wishing to be registered. Mr. Best, the revising barrister for East Surrey, has held another court at the Vestry Hall, Camberwell, when a number of objections were considered, and claims allowed. The revising barrister for Finsbury, Mr. Macquoen, has concluded the revision of the lists for the borough. An objection was made against the Charterhouse brethren, on behalf of the venerable Archdeacon Hale, the master. After some discussion the case was adjourned till the 29th instant. Up to the 3rd instant the result of the West Kent revision shows a net gain of seventy to the conservatives. In South Essex matters are left much as they were.—On the 1st of October the medical schools of the metropolis opened for the winter session. At King's, Guy's, and St. Thomas's, the usual inaugural addresses were delivered. The attendance of students was very large, promising well for the winter session of the schools.—The Earl of Jersey died at ten o'clock on Tuesday morning. The deceased was the fifth Earl of Jersey. He was born in 1773, and had consequently reached the ripe old age of eighty-six. In 1804 he married the daughter of the tenth Earl of Westmoreland. His lordship filled the office of master of the horse from 1841 to 1846, and again in 1852. He is succeeded in his title and estates by his son, Viscount Villiers.—The City Commissioners of Sewers met on Tuesday at Guildhall. The only business transacted was, the reception of the quarterly report of Dr. Letheby on the sanitary state of the city, which was ordered to be printed, and a copy to be sent to every member of the corporation as well as to the members of the Metropolitan Board of Works.—At the Middlesex Sessions, the case of the "Queen v. Petersen," in which the defendant is charged with having created a disturbance in a place of public worship, in the parish of St. George in the East, was postponed on affidavit that the depositions could not be obtained in time to enable counsel to be properly instructed. The case was ordered to be brought on again next session.—The funds yesterday again experienced a slight advance, and Consols were quoted at 95½ to ¼ for money, and 95½ for the 11th of October. A moderate amount of business was transacted in foreign securities and railway shares, though the improvement was not important.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts indicate that business was steady, without immediate appearance of expansion. There was, nevertheless, greater confidence expressed with regard to progress in the latter portion of the year, when it was thought increased activity would be manifested. In Birmingham the operations had been on a moderate scale, at fair prices, but the orders from America had slightly augmented. At Manchester business had been but little affected by the last accounts from Calcutta, though transactions were still conducted on a steady basis. Although at Nottingham trade was stated to be in a quiet condition, it was, nevertheless, asserted to be satisfactory; and from Leicester the accounts, if anything, were more favourable, the hosiery departments especially having been active. The condition of affairs in Wolverhampton, Sheffield, Leeds, and Newcastle, presented little alteration, but the symptoms, so far as could be traced in the various branches, were not discouraging.—The progress of business in the port of London during the past week has not been quite so active. The number of vessels announced at the Custom House as having arrived from foreign ports amounted to one hundred and ninety-six; there were six from Ireland, and one hundred and eighteen colliers; the entries outwards were one hundred and thirty-three; and those cleared one hundred and seven, besides ten in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been six vessels.—The traffic returns of railways in the United Kingdom for the week ending the 24th September, amounted to £540,330, and for the corresponding week of 1858, to £502,240, showing an increase of £38,090. The gross receipts of the eight railways having their termini in the metropolis amounted to £242,602, and for the corresponding period of last year, to £225,634, showing an increase of £16,968. The receipts on the other lines in the United Kingdom amounted to £297,728, and for the corresponding week of last year, to £276,606, showing an increase of £21,122, which added to the increase in the metropolitan lines, makes the total increase £38,090, as compared with the corresponding week of 1858.

BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATIONS.—It is satisfactory to find that 1,555 lives were rescued in 1858 by lifeboats, other boats, and ships, and by the rocket and mortar apparatus, and that out of 1,395 lives in actual peril from shipwreck, 340 only were lost. This number is still too large; and it must not be forgotten that the average number of lives lost during the past seven years, including the number in 1858, is 745. We believe we are correct in stating that even now, before the winter has commenced, the loss of life from shipwrecks on the coasts and in the seas of the United Kingdom this very year (1859) has already reached the average number. It is, therefore, quite evident that the strenuous efforts which are now being made by the National Lifeboat Institution in this good work must not be allowed, on any consideration, to relax, for the stormy elements and the carelessness of man can only be counteracted by the best preparations and calculations. Ten thousand nine hundred and two persons have been saved from shipwreck by lifeboats and other means since the establishment of the National Lifeboat Institution: £28,061 have been expended by it on lifeboat establishments, and £11,651, besides gold and silver medals, for saving life have been voted. The committee of the institution make, therefore, a confident appeal to the generosity of the public, on whose support the continued efficiency and extension of the society depend.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BRO. STUBB'S letter has been received.

"J. W." shall be attended to.

"A PROVINCIAL GRAND OFFICER."—We would advise you to let the matter drop.

"AN INQUIRER."—Bro. Elisha Cooke is now at Newcastle.

"O. B."—Lord Panmure, Deputy Grand Master, will be our second portrait. We hope to publish it in November, but cannot pledge ourselves to the day.

THE LATE BRO. COL. WILDMAN.—Press of matter compels us to defer till next week, an interesting sketch of the career of this worthy Mason.

ROYAL ARCH: KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.—Several communications are in type, but arrived too late for this week's impression.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1889.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ZETLAND,
M.W. GRAND MASTER.

IN presenting our readers with a portrait of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, as the first of a series of distinguished Masons, it will naturally be expected that we should accompany it with a brief sketch of his lordship's career as a Mason. The Right Hon. Thomas Dundas, Earl of Zetland, Baron Dundas in the county of York, and a baronet, born Feb. 5th, 1795, is, we are informed by Lord Woodhouselee, "descended from a family to which the historian and the genealogist have assigned an origin of high antiquity and splendour, but which has been still more remarkable for producing a series of men eminently distinguished for their public services in the highest offices in Scotland." The immediate ancestors of the present noble earl were Lawrence Dundas, Esq., of Kerse, commissary general and contractor to the army from 1748 to 1759, and who was created a baronet on the 16th Nov., 1762. Sir Thomas married Margaret, a daughter of Major Alexander Bruce, of Kennet, by whom he had one son. Sir Thomas, born in 1741, succeeded to the title in 1781, and was elevated to the peerage as Baron Dundas, of Aske, county York, on the 13th August. His lordship married on May 24th, 1764, Lady Charlotte Wentworth, the second daughter of William second Earl Fitzwilliam, by whom he had issue six sons and five daughters. On his death in 1820, he was succeeded by his eldest son Lawrence, born April 10th, 1766, who was created Earl of Zetland in 1838. His lordship, who married Harriet, third daughter of General John Hale, had issue four sons and three daughters, and on his death in Feb., 1839, was succeeded by the present Earl, who married in September, 1823, Sophia Jane, daughter of the late Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., but has no issue.

His lordship was initiated into Freemasonry as the Hon. Thos. Dundas, in the Prince of Wales's Lodge, No. 324, on the 18th of June, 1830, and served the office of Worshipful Master in that Lodge. On the 25th of April, 1832, his lordship was appointed Senior Grand Warden, and paid the fine to the Fund of Benevolence, he not having served the office of Grand Steward. Upon the 24th of April, 1839, he was appointed Deputy Grand Master, and upon the death of the Earl of Durham, in 1840, Pro Grand Master, which office he held at the time of the death of the Grand Master his royal highness the Duke of Sussex, in April, 1843, a few days before that appointed for the Grand Festival. By a law passed only a short time before, it was declared that if the death of a Grand Master should take place between the annual periods of election, the Pro Grand Master—should there be such an officer—should execute the duties of Grand Master until the next period of election, and be invested with all the attributes and privileges of an actual Grand Master. The Earl of Zetland accordingly continued to exercise the duties of Grand Master until the 6th of the following March, when he was regularly elected, his installation taking place on the 24th of April, 1844. His lordship has since been annually re-elected; and though in our opinion it would be more to the advantage of the Order to have an occasional change, the majority of Grand Lodge have expressed a different opinion; and it must be confessed that if the office is to be continuous, there is no brother more worthy to fill it than the noble earl. Firm but courteous in his demeanour to all, his lordship has proved himself, even in cases of great difficulty, equal to the situation; and has determined to rule with impartial justice, even though it may involve the sacrifice of his own preconceived opinions. During his lordship's tenure of office Masonry has widely spread—there being at the time of his installation only 716 Lodges on the register, of which about 470 were in England—whilst at the present time the last number upon the list is 1101, of which 596 are in England—the total number, after deducting those recently expunged and the Canadian Lodges, being about 960; and if we have not succeeded in keeping the Canadian Lodges in connection with us, we believe that it is the proud boast of the large majority of the Canadian brethren that they took the initiative and their being from the Grand Lodge of England. In the distribution of his patronage—though it would be impossible that some should not occasionally be, and justly, disappointed—we believe his lordship has always exercised the utmost impartiality; when he has erred, it has arisen from the want of information which others ought to have supplied, or from his too readily giving ear to those whose duty it was to provide him only with trustworthy and accurate information; but sure we are that no brother has more truly the interests of the Craft at heart, or has a greater desire to advance brethren only according to their merit than his lordship. The prizes, however, are but few, whilst the claimants are many; and even the most deserving must therefore be occasionally disappointed in their aspirations.

We may here add that in addition to the other honours conferred upon the noble earl by his royal highness the Duke of Sussex, he received from his royal highness's hands the Provincial Grand Mastership of North and East Yorkshire, which he still continues to hold.

Our noble brother was exalted into Royal Arch Masonry in the Prince of Wales's Chapter on the 1st of June, 1832, and served the office of each of the Principals. Pursuant to the laws of the Order, his lordship became Second Grand Principal upon his appointment as Deputy Grand Master. As Pro Grand Master he became First Grand Principal immediately on the death of his royal highness the Duke of Sussex, and, of course, continued in that office upon being elected Grand Master—the Grand Master being at all times ex officio First Grand Principal.

It is worthy of remark that his lordship's family have ever taken great interest in the prosperity of the Craft, and that Lord Dundas, grandfather of the present Grand Master, was appointed Deputy Grand Master by his royal highness the Duke of Sussex on the day of his first installation as Grand Master in succession to his royal highness the Prince Regent. Lord Dundas continued in that office until the 21st of April, when he was succeeded by his son Lawrence, the second Lord Dundas. Upon his lordship going abroad, in 1822, he was succeeded in his office by General Sir John Doyle. On the 27th of April, 1825, his lordship was appointed Deputy Grand Master, and continued to hold the office until the 30th of April, 1834, when he was appointed Pro Grand Master, which office he held until his death, in 1839—he having in the previous year been created Earl of Zetland. His lordship was succeeded as Pro Grand Master by the late Earl of Durham, the then D.G.M., and the present Earl of Zetland, as we have stated above, was appointed Deputy Grand Master, from which time he has continuously been in office. The noble earl is a liberal supporter of our various charities, of all of which his lordship is president, having also served the office of steward at different festivals of those institutions. Prior to succeeding to the peerage, his lordship for some years represented Richmond, Yorkshire, in the House of Commons, on liberal principles, which he has since supported in the House of Lords, though never taking a very active part in politics.

BETHEL-GOLGOTHA.

THE next step in architectural progression—man having propitiated the divine wrath by sacrifice—would appear to have been the erection of some tent or house, within which the remains of sacred offerings might be stored away or lodged in the custody of the first fathers of religion. But this protection must have been altogether temporary; for, as the inhabitants of the earth increased and these necessities became multiplied, they were obliged to go from place to place; and this nomadic existence soon originated a practice which had obtained universality at a very early period in the history of the human race, viz.—that of transporting from place to place the gods of the tribe or the nation, so that worship might be performed at any suitable spot, or on any suitable occasion that might offer. It may not here be out of place to remark that, first and most universal in the early annals of religious worship, was that spirit of reproduction which was observable alike to the first hunter, and shepherd, and tiller of the soil. Hindoos, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans, in turn, had their deities personating the various functions of nature, of which this power of reproduction was considered first in importance. The command, “to go forth and multiply” given to man, as recorded in holy writ, would seem to indicate that this power was regarded as the most essential by the great leader and lawgiver of Israel, to whom the authorship of the book of Genesis is doubtless justly attributed.

But the emotion next in æsthetical import, if not coincident with the first observations of men, was that cold horror, that mysterious dread of destruction and its consequence, which the sight of death is calculated to excite in untutored natures. The first homicide and the first sacrifice on record were contemporaneous. When the first murderer beheld the slow outpouring of life in mortal agony, the gradual deepening and shortening of the draught which sustains it, the slow closing and glazing of the eye, the clammy coldness that crept over the body, “he went forth from the presence of the Lord,” but the consuming fire of remorse went with him, “an impenetrable darkness every day.” The altar was, upon this occasion, by the express command of heaven, both tomb and sanctuary; for the criminal received assurance, not by a mark set upon him, which is a false translation, but by a sign or token—which was to be understood as a proof that he should not perish by the hand of another.

It is not therefore difficult to trace how an air of sanctity came to be shed about the ancient pillar of testimony; how it came to be the depository of sacred records; how it became amongst some people the seat of judgment. Contracts we have seen were ratified by the imposition of hands upon an altar, even as late as the Crusades. Altars were subsequently erected in houses, in gardens, and on the banks of rivers. They were carried in front of hostile hosts, and the gods were alleged to fight on behalf of their favourite peoples, but they also became the tombs of mortuary chapels, upon which sacrifices were also offered up. It is worthy of remark, that the temple which David desired to erect for the tabernacle, but against which the prophet Nathan advised because of his having shed much blood, was the very spot where the destroying angel stood in the pestilence inflicted upon the hosts of Israel on account of David's ambition. A yet more remarkable tradition, as illustrating the tendency in the human mind to consecrate the abodes of the dead, is that the Golgotha of redemption, otherwise Calvary, was said to have been so called from the circumstance that the first of the human race was buried beneath it, and it was only meet that upon the grave of him who had brought sin into the world mankind should be redeemed.

The great, however, in course of time were not content with the estates which a few feet of earth would limit. The ancient sarcophagi were inscribed with the omnipotence of dead kings and the sanctity of defunct priests—were deposited in the pyramid, in whose chambers were celebrated the infatuating mysteries of a gross and declining philosophy. Some tribes cast mountains of earth upon their deceased chieftains, and thereupon raised pillars. In the valley of Jehosaphat are the tombs of some of the great ones of Judea, and near to it the Aceldama, the field purchased with the price, since restored, which Judas received for betraying the Redeemer. There the Jews bury their dead when the night has fallen upon the earth; and Rabbis from lands of exile, still faithful to the hope of their nation, come to lay their bones, and take one last look of the fragments of the temple of Mount Zion which lie scattered about the standing portion of the ruin, looking down from the sacred hill upon monuments of priest and prophet, lawgiver and king.

But here in Aceldama sleeps the stranger. Some fellow wayfarer from Mecca or the west may have woven or brought a chaplet, which he lays upon the stone at the head of the sleeper, and thus purchases one moment's respite from eternal oblivion. Beyond are “the tombs of kings.” Here is the sepulchre of Helena of Adiabene, who became, according to Josephus, convert to Judaism, and claimed, by her piety, to be laid at death at the foot of Zion. This royal cemetery reminds one of the tombs of Thebes; its portal is delicately sculptured, and it is hewn out of solid limestone. Four large apartments are shown, a vestibule to which is formed by a spacious and splendid portico; of these four three have in their sides recesses to receive the dead. Fragments of the great sarcophagi, their tenants passed through nature's bankruptcy, are scattered on every side, and green among the ruin, blushing in the very caverns of the dead, depend clusters of grapes peeping through luxuriant foliage, festoons of bright convolvulus of every tint and shade. A group of turtle doves, in which Palestine abounds, pour forth their soft but here peculiarly melancholy cooing morning and evening.

The outer court of the ancient temple is barely traceable. This was not the temple of Moriah which Solomon built, but that of Zerubbabel, the son of Salathiel, who led the first colony of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon. There was, indeed, here no ark of the covenant, no Urim and Thummim, between which was set the unalterable tetragrammaton, no teraphim, no holy fire, no cloud nor pillar of flame. It was rebuilt by Herod, only twenty years before the Christian era. The monarch proceeded by surrounding Mount Moriah with four walls, and directed each to a point of the compass. These walls were each a stadium in length, the enclosure embracing about a half a Roman mile. Around were buildings raised in terraces, each court thus elevated above the other, the sanctuary or temple in its now narrower sense being highest of all, so that it could be seen in almost every part of the city. “Its front,” says Josephus, “was covered all over with metal plates of great weight, which, under the rays of the sun, reflected back a glowing splendour dazzling to the eyes. To persons at a distance the temple appeared like a mountain covered with snow, for the parts which were not gilded were exceedingly white from the marble.” Somewhat like this was the appearance which the camp of Israel presented from the top of Mount Peor, when Balaam exclaimed (Numb. xxiv. 2, et seq.):—

“How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob,
And thy tabernacles, O Israel!
As the valleys are they spread forth,
As gardens by the river's side,
As ling aloes which Jehovah had planted,
As cedars beside the waters.”

Rows of marble pillars supported chambers roofed with cedar (Acts iii. 2–10), inside the court of the Gentiles, near which were on sale, oxen, sheep, doves, meal, and salt, and the tables of the moneychangers. Fourteen steps upward were inscriptions forbidding a Gentile, on pain of death, to proceed further, and within this was the women's court. Through the Beautiful gate you pass into the court of priests and Israelites, where stood the altars of burnt offerings. Twelve steps higher you come to the house of God, within which is the Holy of Holies. Hence you may view that "place of a skull" now covered with temples and minarets, and turbaned heads, and uncovered feet, within whose sacred precincts rests indeed the Holy One of Israel, and hither come the pious and superstitious of the earth to pray or quarrel. Here Gothic crypt and Byzantine arch mingle incontinently.

Thus, since the world began, have gone together in raising to the worship of the deity, the two great emotions of our nature—fear of God and the reverence it inspires; love of our kind and the gratitude it prompts to the giver of life and good. Victory is won in mourning. Our greatest sorrow is enshrined in a greater hope. We have prefigured in our monuments and our churches, allegories framed by the pious and the good of every age. The fruits and flowers are to us not merely enjoyments for the senses, but symbolic of the virtues which their beauty or their goodness typify. The temple is as it were the tributary crown rendered by man to his maker; the exemplar of the results of virtue and intelligence offered by the apprentice to the Great Architect who marks the beauty of its outline, the proportion of its parts, the regularity and uprightness of its structure. Care, steady perseverance, an object of good, including neighbourly love, and zeal, and piety, are needed in such a work. So may the architect be buried within the chancel without irreverence.

Viewing those sacred edifices and tombs, those scenes wherein the glory of the human race went from the fleshpots into the wilderness and received from the divine hand the law—where rose up the temples of the tribes, tier on tier, story and story, whose builders were men who adorned virtue scarcely less than it adorned them—may we not contemplate their works with pride, and whilst so employed emulate their virtue? On Golgotha stands the holy sepulchre, and upon it temples raised by human hands, but often profaned by inhuman practices.

"Not that the power of God is here
More manifest or more to fear;
Not that the glory of his face
Is circumscribed by any space—
But that as men are wont to meet
In court or chamber, mart or street
For purposes of gain or pleasure,
For friendliness or social leisure—
So, for the greatest of all ends
To which intelligence extends—
The worship of the Lord whose will Created, and sustains us still,
And honour of the prophet's name
By whom the saving message came—
Believers meet together here,
And hold these precincts very dear."

THE THEORY OF LIGHT.

AMONG the many interesting papers which were read before the recent congress of the British Association, at Aberdeen, was one by G. J. Smith, Esq., of Perth, on the "Production of Colour and the Theory of Light." The author said that, in attempting to explain certain natural phenomena, he could not satisfy himself by applying the principles of either theory of light; that many natural phenomena indicated beats or vibrations in the luminous ether very different from what science taught. That is, that there were greater intervals between them than Newton had demonstrated and scientific men believed. He therefore endeavoured to contrive a machine which should be able to make as many revolutions or beats in a second as he considered the effective vibrations of light were repeated in a second of time, and argued that by certain contrivances to produce light and shade in alternate vibrations he should produce colour. In plain terms, he had come to believe that colour is formed by alternate light and shade in various proportions. To prove this, he caused a white rag to revolve at various speeds on a black surface. His first experiment was to move a small slip of white cardboard over a black surface. By this motion he obtained a distinct blue. Afterwards, in different weather, the same thing produced a purple. He then made a disc with five concentric rings: one ring was painted one-third black, the rest of the ring being white; the next ring was two-thirds black and one-third white; the next was three-fourths black and one-fourth white; and the fifth half black and half white. This disc, when made to revolve, became completely coloured. There were no more blacks or whites visible, but five rings of different colours. On a bright day, with white clouds in the sky, the first ring was of a light green, much yellow; second ring, purple, very blue; third ring, nearly as first; fourth ring, purple, darker than second; fifth ring, pink. By means of eccentric movements a great variety of colours was obtained, amongst others a pure red and various shades of purple, pink, yellow, and blue. There was a great variety of discs, each having on it a different proportion of black and white. It was by such processes that the author was led to believe that he had demonstrated that colour is produced by a mixture of light and shadow at various intervals, and at least he was satisfied that the experiments were original and not to be explained by the present recognized laws. The author produced the same results by cutting out spaces in the white card and causing it to revolve on a black surface. He produced also similar phenomena by causing these figures to revolve when held perpendicularly and to take the appearance of coloured solids. He also caused these colours to be reflected on a white surface from the revolving disc. These experiments and the views drawn from them were used for the purpose of giving a theory of the prism to be published in detail; and, referring to the consequences of his experiments, the author said that, remarkable as these experiments are, they are not more remarkable than the results they lead to. They prove the homogeneity of the ether; they prove the undulatory hypothesis, but oppose the undulatory theory; they enable us to dispense with the different refrangibilities of the rays of light, as taught by Newton; they remove the necessity for the supposition of different lengths of waves or of a disposition in matter to produce waves of different lengths; they help to explain many of the phenomena of what is called the polarisation of light; they give a new explanation of prismatic refraction, and explain in a plain and simple manner many very interesting natural phenomena.

FREEMASONRY AND THE USEFUL ARTS.

MUCH has been said and written, and many speculations indulged in on the subject of the antiquity of our fraternity, and the influence which it formerly exercised over the spread of the mechanical and less useful branches of art.

However dim and however obscure may be the evidence which we are enabled to glean on these points from the past, there is yet sufficient to show that the world, in centuries gone by, was under vast obligations to operative Masonry, as a secret scientific institution or study; whilst we have the proud satisfaction of viewing it at this day, and in its free or speculative capacity, as one of the noblest and most benign of mere human institutions. We may leave the temple of Solomon in the ruins to which, in the lapse of ages, it has crumbled; we may turn from the stately and graceful monuments of Masonic skill found in Greece, when Greece was great; we may cease to linger over dim tradition, or evoke from remote ages the evidences of its usefulness, and in the comparatively present day find all the testimony which reason can desire. The present, however, we know; let us therefore, for a moment, turn to that which is assumed to be tangible in the past, not because, as we have said, of a demand for evidence, but a satisfaction of curiosity. In 1735, an able English writer made the following reference to the Dionysian artificers, who were celebrated for their abstemiousness, scientific skill and attainments:—

"They were a body of architects and engineers, who were employed in the erection of temples, theatres, and stadia, after the Ionic emigration, which took place when the Greeks had made a very considerable progress in the sciences. These, together with their sacred mysteries, the emigrants carried with them into Asia, where, after some years, the arts flourished with a prosperity unequalled, and an elegance of conception and execution which far surpassed the productions of the mother country. They were very numerous in Asia Minor, Syria, Persia, and India, and it is highly probable that they were employed, with the Sidonians, at the building of Solomon's temple. They were distinguished from the profane and uninitiated by their science and skill in architecture, by appropriate words and signs by which they could at once recognize their brethren in all parts of the globe. They were divided into different Lodges, distinguished by particular names, and so possessed of distinct jurisdictions, and each separate association was under the superintendence of a Master and Wardens."

Mr. Sharp, an Englishman, and an eminent and distinguished brother, in speaking on this subject, has used the following language:—

"To the disciples of Freemasonry our fellow countrymen are indebted for most of those splendid and majestic structures which even at the present day point their aspiring domes toward the heaven of heavens, and beneath which man breathes his prayer of peace and gladness; and to their predecessors in the Craft mankind are indebted for those stupendous monuments of human skill, the pyramids of Egypt, which, though many thousands of years have passed away, still exist—the temples of Memphis, Heliopolis, and Thebes, whose colossal ruins are to this day the wonder and admiration of the traveller—Persepolis, with its splendid palatial edifices of cedar—Babylon and her hanging gardens, Nineveh with her mighty walls, Baalbec and Palmyra still majestic, even in their ruins—the labyrinths of Egypt, Crete and Lemnos, and the marble glories of Greece—

— whose beauties a bright shadow cast,
And shed a halo round the mighty past."

In 1836, the celebrated Westmacott, in one of a series of lectures on artistic and scientific subjects which he delivered before the Royal Academy at London, said:—

"A taste for the fine arts was spread into almost all countries by the establishment of the fraternity of Freemasons, who had, it appears, under some peculiar form of brotherhood, existed for an immemorable period in Syria and other parts of the East, from whence some bands of them migrated to Europe, and after a time a great efflux of these ingenious men, Italians, Germans, French, Spanish, &c., had spread themselves in communities through all civilized Europe; and in all countries where they settled, we find the same style of architecture from that period, but differing in some points of treatment, as suited the climate, &c."

In our speculative capacity, we cannot rear temples to tell to future ages the story of our grandeur, but we can stamp upon the page of history and in every living tradition the imperishable record that Freemasonry now, as in ages past, keeps burning on her altar the quenchless fire of virtue; that she is still the handmaid of progress; that her course is onward, ever onward, and that she yet bears inscribed on her ample banner everlasting fidelity to the revealed laws of God.—American Freemason.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

I SEND you a short cutting from the current number of The Builder, believing it should find a place in your "Masonic Notes and Queries," as it regards the celebrated family of the Stones, one of whom was Grand Warden to Sir Christopher Wren when erecting St. Paul's, before the revival of Grand Lodge in 1717.—DESIGNER.

NOTABLES BURIED IN THE OLD CHURCH OF ST. MARTIN IN THE FIELDS.

"Amongst the painters and sculptors who were buried in the old church of St. Martin in the Fields, may be mentioned Nicholas Stone, the sculptor. There was a marble monument at the west end of this church to this artist:—

"In his lifetime esteemed for his knowledge in sculpture and architecture, which his works in many parts do testify; and though made for others will prove a monument of his fame. He departed this life on the 24th August, 1647, aged sixty-one, and lyeth buried near the pulpit of this church."

"This monument was adorned with his bust, finely carved in profile, with several tools used in sculpture, a square, compasses, &c. His son, also a sculptor, was buried in the same grave, September 17th, and his wife the following November the 19th, 1647.

"Nicholas Stone was born at Wandbury, near Exeter, in 1586, and, coming to London, lived for some time with Isaac James. He then went to Holland, and married the daughter of Peter de Keyser, for whom he worked at his profession as carver in stone. He returned to England, and was engaged in the building of the Banqueting House, Whitehall. No doubt the sculpture, scrolls, and other ornaments in stone were of his work. In the reign of Charles I. he obtained the patent appointment of Master Mason and Architect of the King's Works at Windsor Castle, &c., for which, saith the document, 'we do give him the wages and fee of twelve pence by the day.' Nicholas Stone had three sons,—Henry, Nicholas, and John.

"Henry, the eldest son, erected the monument for his father, mother, and brother, and carried on, in conjunction with John, the business of statuary after his father's death; though Henry addicted himself chiefly to painting, and was an excellent copyist of Vandyck and the Italian masters. Henry wrote a book, 'The Third Part of the Art of Painting.' This artist continued to reside on the premises which had been his father's, viz., a house, garden, and work-yard situate in Long Acre, which was rented from the crown at £10 per annum. Henry Stone died in 1653, and was buried near his father, where a monument was erected, and this epitaph written for him by his brother John:—

"To the Memory of Henry Stone, of Long Acre, Painter and Statuary, who, having passed the greater part of thirty-seven years in Holland, France, and Italy, achieved a fair renown for his excellence in arts and languages, and departed this life on the 24th August, A.D. 1653, and lyeth buried near the pulpit of this church."

[Here follow some complimentary verses.]

"John Stone, to perfect his fraternal affection, erected this monument."

"The last member of this family of artists was laid in the same church; and, to perpetuate their memory, their near kinsman added to the monumental inscription in the quaint style of the time—

"June 1699—

"Four rare Stones are gone,
The father and three sons,

"In memory of whom their near kinsman, Charles Stoakey, repaired this monument."

BOHEIM'S MASONIC SONGS.

In reference to the query on this subject in No. 11 of the Magazine, I beg to inform you, that in East Lancashire it is usual for Lodges to have Masonic books of songs; some ten or twelve copies in a Lodge. These are handed round to the brethren during the singing; the collection is a very good one, containing (besides songs suited for especial occasions), a variety of glees, catches, and duets. No song, other than pertaining to Masonry, is permitted to be sung except as a favour granted by the W.M. If a new edition of this book were published, I feel assured it would meet with a ready sale, as its value would be appreciated. The Secretaries of Lodges Nos. 50, 150, 226, and 333, could give further information.—H. I. HINXMAN, M.D.

THE LODGE OF ST. CUTHBERGA, No. 905.

In reply to your inquiry of August 20th, respecting our name, I have only to say that St. Cuthberga, from whom we have named our Lodge, was a local celebrity, having founded here, and being the first abbess of a nunnery of considerable note; and being, moreover, the sister of Ina, one of the most able and prosperous of the West Saxon kings from about A.D. 689 to 726. I presume our first Worshipful Master, in selecting the name, preferred adopting the name of a real character to any allegorical designations such as Faith, Unity, Fortitude, Benevolence, &c., &c.

In the article in which you make the inquiry, Wareham was misprinted Wrexham.—HENRY HERBERT, Sec. No. 905.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

A List of the Books of Reference in the Reading Room of the British Museum. Printed by order of the Trustees. 8vo. 1859.

To every student it must be a self evident fact that the assistance derived from catalogues in this wholesale publishing age, is of the utmost importance to him in the prosecution of his labours. Next to knowing what work to consult for any information we are in search of, is the knowledge of where the book containing it is to be found. These two preliminaries being mastered, the saving of time and labour to the inquirer is immense. The trustees have done good service to the frequenters of the reading room in issuing the volume at present under notice, and it is so indispensable that we are inclined to believe every reader will, in course of time, come to see the utility of such a companion on his desk at home.

The first paper inserted is a copy of the "Directions respecting the Reading Room of the British Museum," a paper to which every reader attaches his signature when he is first admitted.

We have next a folding "plan showing the arrangement of the library of reference in the reading room of the British Museum," which is tinted of various colours to show the classification of works on Theology; Law; Philosophy; Fine Arts; Biography; Belles Lettres; Poets; Bibliography; Classics; Geography, Voyages, and Travels; Topography; History; Literary Journals and Libraries; Encyclopædias; Dictionaries of Languages; Peerages, Genealogies, Directories, and Calendars. These occupy the presses ranged round the external circle of the Museum reading room, commencing with press 2,000, and ending with No. 2,121. The next circle, which is breast high, contains the New General Catalogue, and the Supplementary Catalogue. The inner circle comprises the Catalogue of Music, King's, Grenville, and the old Catalogues, as well as the Catalogue of Maps. On the inside of this circle is the Catalogue of MSS. and Parliamentary Indexes, &c., &c., while on a raised platform is the seat for the superintendent of the reading room, his assistant clerk, and three attendants, who receive the readers' tickets, and forward by other attendants the books required.

The preface opens with an assertion that the objects, nature of the collections, government and administration, are the same as at the time of its foundation, a century since, and states that no two public establishments can be well more dissimilar than the British Museum of 1759 and 1859. It enters upon the regulations at the earlier period, telling us how persons were admitted by tickets, and that in 1774 a committee of the House of Commons reported "That it was their opinion that the most probable method of obviating those inconveniences (the applications for tickets, which were sometimes months in arrear), would be by enabling the trustees to demand and receive money for the admission of persons to see the Museum on certain days in the week, some days and hours being still allotted for receiving persons gratis." Upon a division this proposition was lost by a majority of three—fifty-three being in its favour and fifty-six against it.

In the year 1810, the Monday, Wednesday, and Friday admission was adopted, "but even then, and for many years afterwards, the presence of a few hundred persons in the building was considered to call for special precautions to secure the preservation of order."

"This fear of the public has long ceased. Now all are admitted who present themselves, the only condition being that they shall be able to walk into the building." These efforts have not been thrown away, as 43,000 holiday folk have recently passed through the building in one day, without the slightest injury to the collections.

On the establishment of the reading room on the 8th of December, 1758, by the trustees, they ordered "that the corner room in the base story be appropriated for the reading room, and that a proper wainscot table, covered with green baize, in the same manner as those in the libraries, be prepared for the same, with twenty chairs of the same kind with those already provided for the several departments of the house."

"A corner room in the basement story, with one oak table and twenty chairs, forms a very striking contrast with the reading room of the present day, but it was not so bad as the indulged reader of modern times may imagine. A glass door opened from this reading room into the garden of Montague House, which was well cultivated and planted with goodly trees, and between which and Hampstead nothing intervened to obstruct the prospect or poison the air. We may smile now at the twenty chairs, but they proved more than sufficient for the demands made upon them."

The preface then deals with accounts of the visits of Gray the poet, and an extract from the Right Hon. Mr. Disraeli's edition of his father's Curiosities of Literature; but as these are too good to be severed from the book, those of our readers who feel interested should procure it for themselves. The covert sneer in the last sentence, "But it cannot be denied that at that time (the date of the elder Disraeli's first attendance) they (the readers) were select, which they certainly are not now," is, to say the least, uncalled for. Perhaps at that time the librarians knew more of their calling than they do now, and would not declare that they had twenty copies of a Shakespeare folio as, it is said, was done latterly; for we presume it must be "like master like man," when we see the junior members of that august body in every conceivable and inconceivable place during the hours of Museum business, such as riding on the knife-boards of omnibuses up and down Tottenham Court-road, as if to draw inspiration from the names on the fascias of the tradesmen's shops for materials towards their next poem, or slyly creeping into the reading room to finish the article already commenced behind the scenes in the public time, for the paper or magazine they write for.

"People living in glass houses should learn not to throw stones," particularly at those who are not so well provided for by the public as themselves.

But, to resume, we find the names of some of our most prominent divines and literary men as visitors for the purpose of study, and among them Drs. Lowth, Jortin, Blair, Kennicott, and Johnson, as well as Hume, Musgrave, Wray, Lord Morton, and others. Again does the cynic peep out in this part of the preface, as the list from which the above names are taken concludes thus:—"These are only specimens of the class of readers of that day. There were then no schoolboys coming for cribs, no smokers, no chess players working out problems, nor 'men of our college' asking for Punch, or complaining that they could not get the last novel within a few days after its publication." What can be meant by "no smokers," after stating Dr. Johnson was admitted a reader, we are at a loss to understand. Nor can we see how those who study chess problems should be objected to any more than lawyers' clerks, nor the young "men of our college" more than the men of no college, not even that model establishment where they paid extra for learning manners.

Passing onwards we come to some of the old regulations, one of which, in 1804, declared that "no reader (except in particular cases, at the discretion of the principal librarian) will be entitled to more than two volumes at a time, but they may be exchanged as often as he may require."

After narrating several important changes with respect to the officers, we come to the time of the French revolution, and then find the foreigners to have been largely admitted. These readers were French refugees, who had sought an asylum in our country, and to whom the stores of the national library were freely accessible.

We are next favoured by some of the notabilities of our later literature. Sir Henry Ellis, Sir Walter Scott, Sydney Smith, Charles Lamb, Mr. Hallam, and a Chinese gentleman, Yong Sam Tack, are cited as specimens of the time in question.

We are now arrived at the opening of the old reading rooms, and the gift of the king's library. After this we come to Mr. Panizzi's scheme for the new reading room; a design so excellent and well known, that each of our readers must be thoroughly acquainted with it from the descriptions inserted at the time in every journal in the kingdom. Giving him the largest amount of praise for the idea, and its happy accomplishment, we shall pass over the architectural details to offer one suggestion as to the practicability of opening four of the large squares of glass in windows situated N.S.E. and W., so that the air in the dome may be purified day by day—a feat no "apparatus" can do so well as open windows with a thorough draft.

Proceeding onward we come to an order of the trustees in 1857, "directing that the senior assistant keeper in the department of printed books should be transferred to the chief superintendence of the new reading room." And further on we learn he was "above all to afford all the assistance in his power to readers in their pursuits." Mr. Jones then goes on to say,—"The readers have thus placed at their disposal, for six hours every day, the services of a gentleman whose intimate knowledge with the Museum collections, extensive knowledge of the literature of his own and foreign countries, and acquirements as a linguist rarely to be met with, render him peculiarly fitted to carry out the chief object of the trustees, as expressed in their order. The very numerous applications made to Mr. Watts, in his capacity of superintendent, show the importance of the appointment, and with what judgment the trustees have acted in the selection of their officer."

To this account of Mr. Watts's fitness, no one who has had to consult him at any time can demur. Indeed, we think it falls far short of his merits; for not only is Mr. Watts all, and more than Mr. Jones gives him credit for, but he is emphatically and truly a gentleman, a few more of which genus we should have no objection to meet with in the Museum employes. In Mr. Watts, Mr. Panizzi, and the officers of the MS. department, who by the bye Mr. Jones carefully ignores, lie the whole worth of the Museum corps; they are the diamonds, set in the lead, that sparkle and show the true light, whilst the others serve as the dull foil to bring out their purer value.

We next come to the reading room staff. The superintendent has already been spoken of; the clerk, Mr. Glanville, who is ever ready to aid and assist; the three attendants who take charge of the readers' tickets—men without whom all who frequent the room would often be at a great loss; the attendant who keeps the books put by from day to day, and who would be of much more value if he did not so wantonly throw obstacles in the way; and to the other attendants without whose knowledge and aid, cheerfully rendered but badly remunerated, the thanks of every reader is due. It is to these last that the Museum readers are much indebted; they know books on every subject, where to find them, and to every inquiry are ever ready to afford information. Should an increase of salary be afforded, as it is currently spoken of, it is to this class of the Museum officials that it should be made, and not to those proposed, for they are well able from the sale of their very interesting works, and the handsome sums they obtain by writing for newspapers, &c., whilst they should be employed on other work, to magnanimously forego the increase, and petition for an augmentation to these attendants as the men who really do the work while they play.

The list has been carefully and judiciously prepared by Mr. Rye, who really has done his work, and done it well, and he has added a classified index of subjects, which will greatly facilitate every reader in finding the information he requires.

Vicissitudes of Families, and other Essays. By SIR BERNARD BURKE, Ulster King at Arms. Longman.
THERE is an old saying, but a true one, that "truth is stranger than fiction," and in many of the nobles and commoners' family traditions there are some of the most romantic legends to be found—legends which far outstrip the romance of the novelist. We remember in days long gone by, what a mine of wealth to us there was in Playfair's British Family Antiquity, Dugdale's Baronage, and much later in Craik's Curiosities of Family History, and the two series of Burke's Family Romance. From these sources Sir Bernard Burke has re-issued some of the tales incorporated in his former volumes, as well as those of the other authors before indicated, but this has been done in this instance in the pursuit of an uniform plan, viz., to trace the misfortunes that have befallen the great and mighty. These Vicissitudes of Families are narrated in a garb in which we could scarcely expect to find them coming from a King at Arms. They are not the mere dull chronicle, with dates and facts huddled together in close proximity, but readable by the fireside or in the home circle. To bear out our assertion we shall offer our readers a few extracts, and commence with the decadence of the Cromwells:—

"Thomas Cromwell, the Lord Protector's great grandson, was a grocer on Snow Hill, and his son, Oliver Cromwell, the last male heir of the family, an attorney of London. But it was in the female line that the fall was most striking. Several of the Lord Protector's granddaughter's children sank to the lowest class of society. One, after seeing her husband die in the workhouse of a little Suffolk town, died herself a pauper, leaving two daughters; the elder, the wife of a shoemaker, and the younger, of a butcher's son, who had been her fellow servant. Another of Oliver Cromwell's great granddaughters had two children, who earned their scanty bread by the humblest industry; the son, as a small working jeweller, and the daughter as a mistress of a little school at Mildenhall."

Sir Bernard Burke, as a true Irishman, as we take him to be, is, of course, a firm believer in the royalty of the various kings, and petty lords that took the name of kings in Ireland, and of whose deeds we have such stirring pictures in The Annals of the Four Masters, and such like works, and accordingly he favours us with the following account of the representative of the royal race of the O'Neills, a name more familiar to Saxon ears, from the recollections of the dramatic veteran, than the sceptered monarch; however, let us introduce

"Sergeant-Major Bryan O'Neill, youngest son of Sir Francis O'Neill, the sixth baronet, is now in his seventy-fifth year, and is a tall and distinguished looking man, in whose appearance and manners, notwithstanding his age and poverty, and the ordeal through which he has passed, may be traced the high lineage and noble blood of Clanaboy."

"And thus I close this sketch of the decadence of a branch of the royal house of O'Neill, in which the mutability of fortune is signally displayed. The descendant of Prince Niul of Scythia and Egypt, of Milesius, King of Spain; of the royal author, Cormac Uffadha; of Con of 'the hundred battles,' and Niall the Great; of the chivalrous Niall Caille, and Hugh Boy, and Brian Balv, and Henry Coach, and the gallant and dashing Colonel of Charles the First's dragoons at the battle of Edge Hill, the cousin of three peers and of a duke, and the lineal descendant of a hundred kings, is reduced to the humble lot of a discharged pensioner of the Crown, at two shillings and twopence a day, and occupies a room in a small shop in an obscure street, where his eldest son is a coffinmaker."

The struggles of great men have always been a theme to hang a moral on, but the endurance of woman has not commanded such applause, because their sufferings have been mostly of a domestic and private character, yet when this has not been the case, and the story of their woes have been made known, then it is that the old maxim, "suffer and be strong," is fully exemplified. Sir Bernard Burke tells his stories so tersely, and yet luminously, that we prefer letting him do so in his own language, rather than offer our readers an abridgment. The following is a grand picture of a suffering, yet determined, woman:—

"The year of famine came on, Government works were commenced, and the tenants soon ceased to pay any rents whatever, and as a natural consequence the owners of so many thousand acres were no longer able to pay up the instalments due upon their mortgages. Men acting in large bodies are seldom so merciful as when they are individually responsible for their deeds, and the Law Life Assurance Society formed no exception to this rule of general experience. They insisted upon the due performance of their bond, and that being under the circumstances impossible, this vast Connemara property came into the Encumbered Estates Court, and the famous old race of Martin of Ballinahinch was sold out: the times were the worst possible for an advantageous sale; and the assurance company bought in almost the entire of the estate, at a sum immeasurably below its real value, and quite inadequate, even with the produce of the remnant of the lands bought by other parties, to the liquidation of its heavy liabilities. Not a single acre remained for the poor heiress of what was once a princely estate, and while others were thus fattening upon her ancient inheritance, the 'Princess of Connemara,' without any fault of her own, became an absolute pauper

The home of her fathers had passed away to strangers, leaving nothing behind but debts and the bitter recollection of what she had lately been.

"In this total wreck of all her fortunes the ill-starred 'Princess of Connemara' retired to Fontaine l'Évêque, in Belgium, where for a short while she supported herself by her pen; but so scanty were the means thus obtained that she at length resolved to abandon the continent for America, hoping to find in the new world an ampler field for her exertions. Some friends of the family now came forward with a small subscription to enable her to carry out this object. Much it could not have been, for we find her embarking on the voyage in a sailing vessel, although she was far advanced in pregnancy. A premature confinement was the result in this den of misery, without medical attendant, without a nurse, without any one of the aids so indispensable at such a moment of danger and suffering. Can it be a matter of surprise to anyone that she died soon after she touched the shore, or, as some will have it, before she left the boat?

"With her has perished the last direct representative of her race, though even now the echo of their name has not passed away among the peasants. The people of Connemara yet speak of the Martins as being the legitimate lords of the soil, and never mention them but with affectionate regret."

"It only remains to add that this unfortunate lady has left behind her several works that prove her to have possessed more than the ordinary degree of accomplishments belonging even to her elevated condition. Of these the most popular are 'Canvassing,' which was published in connection with Banim's 'Mayor of Windgap,' and a work in three volumes called 'St. Etienne.' She was also said to have been a good Greek and Latin scholar, and must certainly have been familiar with French, since she contributed to French periodicals during her residence in Belgium. But, beyond all this, she was kind hearted and of a most independent character."

Sir Bernard Burke's last Essay in the Vicissitudes of Families, is devoted to inculcating a love for the study of Heraldry. From what we have written on this subject, in a late number, we presume none of our readers will be surprised if we advise them to peruse Sir Bernard Burke's essay for themselves, as we hold heraldry to be one of the most useful, and certainly one of the most graceful accomplishments a well read person can possess.

Robert Mornay. A Novel by MAX FERRER. 8vo. Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

WE have tales and novels to suit all classes, and shades of opinion from the everythingarian down to the anythingarian, but from those of a metaphysical turn we are almost always too anxious to escape. On taking up Robert Mornay we stumbled over some four or more pages of dry reflections, and found ourselves face to face with two characters, Robert Mornay and Harry Winsome, of course they were "as wide as the poles asunder" in treatment. The one was metaphysical, of shining ability, but uncertain of purpose; the other a happy-go-lucky sort of individual, always contented and making the best of everything. Our author's aim is sound, and points out the necessity of self denial and self control by illustrating the unfortunate effects of a want of these qualities. The story, as we are promised a sequel, it would be unfair to give an outline of, but there are, in spite of the philosophical tendencies of the book, some delightful episodes, one of which is so irresistible that we shall conclude our notice by the extract, whether fact or fiction we say not:—

"One day, when we were coming in from one of these sails, just barely gliding in, almost becalmed, I observed a lot of human heads approaching along the water towards the yacht. They turned out to be a swimming party, men and women (ladies, my dear fellow) swimming altogether. They came alongside our yacht, and Fry offered them refreshment, which, as they had swum two miles, he thought might be acceptable. 'If you have any coffee we should be glad to have it,' replied an English male head. It was our minister from Monaco, rather a fat man, who floated on his back remarkably well. Fry knew him slightly. 'Won't you come on board?' 'Thank you, but I don't think we are quite en règle—(the ladies had on a sort of very light bathing gown). Coffee was handed, therefore, to each of them from the gangway steps. 'Good coffee,' continued the male head. The nymphs had been helped first. Fry, meantime, was entirely occupied watching one of them float on her back, which the lady observing, said, suddenly, 'Won't you join us?' 'Thank you,' he replied; 'there seems to be a certain amount of novelty in the proceeding, and, in such company, I don't see how I can refuse. But how far are you going to journey thus?' 'To that village,' said a very pretty English girl, in reply, who was 'treading water,' her long hair having escaped the net, streaming down her back. 'What, that one there?' She pointed to one nearly three miles off. 'Yes; why not?' 'Because I should simply go down before I got there.' 'Why, it's nothing; we swam five miles the other day. You can come halfway, then.' The invitation was irresistible. Fry bolted down to the cabin, and presently reappeared in lighter but still decent apparel. In a moment he was also treading water by the syren who had enticed him to her element. 'Come along, Frankland,' he cried; but I resisted both the appeal of friendship and the bright glance of the water witch. 'We ought to think of turning back,' said the Monaco minister to his water party: there were some half dozen of them. 'Send my boat after me,' said Fry, 'and don't lose sight of me.' The water nymph laughed gaily, and the next moment the party were away, foaming through the water like a shoal of porpoises, every man but Fry with a cigar in his mouth. Fry was evidently lagging, but his particular syren dropped to the rear also. Fry told me after, 'Do you know, it was a very tempting thing to sham drowning, so as to make the witch hold me up; she looked so pretty, cleaving through the water close by me, flirting away with her eyes as calmly as if sitting in her crinoline on a drawing-room sofa. I have seen her in that position since, you know, and a very ladylike girl she seems. It was in consequence of this feeling that I said, 'I am going to sink.' 'Don't,' she said quite coolly; 'I shall be obliged to call the minister.' The witch looked mischievously aware of my plot. The threat rendered me doubly buoyant, and I struck out with renewed vigour at the thought of the fat man's arms round me. Altogether I had a very agreeable half hour in the water. When my boat came to pick me up I was quite sorry to leave so agreeable and unaffected a society; but I was getting fagged, and was obliged to give in. The minister took the trouble to come back several yards to shake hands with me. 'And you,' I said to the water sprite. She held out her hand, which I brought to my lips, and kissed most successfully, notwithstanding the difficulty—how could one be artificial in such an element!—the girl blushed, and they all swam away.'

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE Carthaginian curiosities in the British Museum, sent to this country by Mr. N. Davis, comprise a number of beautiful mosaics of the Roman period, which must have been very handsome indeed, in their day, and yet retain abundant traces of former loveliness. Perhaps, more valuable to the philologist than these, are a quantity of rude fragments of much earlier date, many of them bearing Phœnician inscriptions in a very excellent state of preservation. These treasures occupy the gloomy crypts that were once tenanted by the Assyrian antiquities.

The Publishers' Circular summarises issues of new books to be expected during the coming season:—Messrs. J. W. Parker and Son have in the press "Sword and Gown," by the author of "Guy Livingston"; "Misrepresentation," a novel, by Anna H. Drury, author of "Friends and Fortune"; "Miscellanies," reprinted chiefly from Fraser's Magazine and the North British Review, by the Rev. Charles Kingsley. Messrs. J. H. and J. Parker have in the press "A Manual for the Study of Monumental Brasses;" "The Military Architecture of the Middle Ages," translated from the French of M. Viollet-le-Duc; and the second and concluding volume of "Ancient Armour and Weapons in Europe," with numerous illustrations, by John Hewitt. Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co.'s list commences with their important new publication of a Monthly Magazine, under the editorship of Mr. Thackeray. Their new books will be "Sir John Bowring's Visit to the Philippine Islands in 1858-59," with numerous illustrations; Mr. Walter Thornbury's "Life in Spain;" Mr. Ruskin's "Elements of Perspective;" Captain Brigg's "Heathen and Holy Lands, or Sunny Days on the Salween, Nile, and Jordan;" Mr. Andrew Bisset "On the Strength of Nations;" and "Expositions of St. Paul's Epistles," by the late F. W. Robertson. Messrs. A. and C. Black, of Edinburgh, announce "The Church History of Scotland from the Commencement of the Christian Era to the Present Century," by the Rev. John Cunningham; "Paleontology," by Professor Owen; "A Compendium of English and Scotch Law," by James Patterson, M.A.; and Dr. Anderson's "Elements of Agricultural Chemistry." Messrs. Blackwood and Son announce a "History of the Church of Scotland from the Reformation to the Revolution," by the late Professor Lee; the third and fourth volumes of Sir W. Hamilton's works; a new edition of D. M. Moir's Poetical works; besides Mr. Oliphant's Narrative of Lord Elgin's Mission; and the New Library Edition of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's works.

The fourth season of Sunday music in the parks is over, and the report shows satisfactorily that the recreation is mainly self-supporting. Whereas the subscriptions to the music in the Regent's park amounted to £37, the sum derived from the sale of programmes was £197. In Victoria park, the disproportion was as great; the subscriptions being £9, the programme money, £107.

The Caledonian Mercury announces the acceptance by Sir David Brewster of the office of principal of the Edinburgh University.

M. Gachard, keeper of the records in Belgium, has published, under the title of "Correspondence of Charles V. and of Adrian VI.," a collection of state papers. While in Spain M. Gachard collected the letters of Philip the Second; and we are indebted to his labours for a most curious relation of the troubles in Ghent during the year 1539. His present work enables us to appreciate, documents in hand, the relations existing between the powerful rival of Francis the First and the Bishop of Tortosa, afterwards Pope Adrian.

The editor of the Boston Courier gives the following curious opinion of the merits of the English press. After complimenting a large portion of our press upon the ability employed upon it, the editor adds:—"But what I complain of is the excess of brilliancy and cleverness. The style is better than is usually found in our journals at home—less rhetorical and ambitious, with fewer ornaments, more condensed and pithy; but the elaboration is more inward than outward, and is shown in the substance more than the form. There is a constant ambition to be pointed and epigrammatic. At every few steps you come to some sudden turn, like a traveller on a road that is zigzagged up the sides of a steep hill. It is a style full of snap and coruscation. You see plainly that the first object of the writer is to say something smart and spicy, and that to find out the truth and tell it are only secondary objects with him. How often, after coming out of the reading room with the mind's eye dazzled and pained with the glaring colours on which it had been feeding, have I said to myself—What a comfort it would be now to turn to a page of Franklin's 'Autobiography,' or Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress!'"

The far famed geographer, Dr. Karl Ritter, died at Berlin, on the 28th of last month. Karl Ritter was born in Quedlinburg, in 1779; he taught when a young man at Schnepfenthal, then, later, at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and belonged since 1820 to the University of Berlin. His great work, which he continued for more than forty years, is of course left incomplete. Too grand in its conception for one man's life to finish, it will be the task of generations. His death came not unexpected, for he had been ailing for a long time; yet his loss will be deeply felt by all those who had the advantage of enjoying a more intimate intercourse with the great scholar, whose kind and amiable manner, noble and humane thinking, and unpedantic teaching, attracted towards him irresistibly pupils and friends.

The King of Bavaria, in recognition of the services of the Messrs. Schlagintweit, has conferred upon these distinguished travellers titles of nobility.

The Germans in Paris have appointed a committee to arrange a celebration of Schiller's birthday. At present it is proposed to hold the fête in the Cirque de l'Impératrice, in the Champs Elysées.

"Our one, our only magazine," says a New York letter, "is again in danger. We have been for many years dying for a magazine, and have been making divers unsuccessful attempts to have one 'of a high order,' that would rival your Blackwood or Fraser. Our last attempt was Putnam's Magazine, which, after a brilliant career of a few years, was at last driven into that last haven of all crazy literary craft—'first class wood engravings.' It failed to find refuge even here, however, and died a natural death in 1857. Immediately after some enterprising individual in Boston stepped into the breach and set on foot the Atlantic Monthly Magazine, which was to be kept up to the highest point of excellence by contributions from both sides of the Atlantic. The British quota, however, was not sent in very long, and it has owed a very remarkable success almost entirely to native pens. No magazine of similar standing and pretensions has in this country ever obtained so large a circulation, and remained so long in a decidedly prosperous condition. The articles were rarely either so elaborate or so profound, or even so varied in their interest, as those of its English contemporaries, as that ripe and careful cultivation, of which good magazine literature is the fruit, is by no means so general here as with you, but they were incomparably better than any similar recueil which has yet made its appearance on this side of the Atlantic, and has done a great deal both for American literary taste and reputation. It also, I am sorry to say, seems to be in danger. The publishers, the well known house of Phillips and Sampson, of Boston, last week suspended payment, owing to the death of the two leading members of the firm, and the magazine, though, per se, a decided success even in a commercial point of view, can hardly separate its fate entirely from that of the rest of the concern."

HUMOUR.—Humour, to be useful, must be kept in order. When the fairy realm is clear, the landscape bright, the actors in their proper places, it is an adjunct of delight,—a conservatory, so to say, of light, and flowers, and perfume, added to a room, into which you may step at pleasure. When it is out of order, it is a nuisance, a perplexity, a despair—a conservatory that lets in cold air, a smell of earth and of dying plants.

Poetry.

THE LANE.

BY REV. W. BARNES.

THEY do say that a travelling chap
Have put in the newspaper now,
That the bit of green ground on the map
Should all be took in for the plough.
He do fancy 'tis easy to show
That we can be but stumps at best,
For to leave a green spot where a flower might grow
Or a foot weary walker might rest.
'Tis hedge grubben, Thomas, and ledge grubben,
Never a done
While a sov'ren more's to be won.

The road he do say is so wide
As 'tis wanted for travellers' wheels—
As if all that did travel did ride
And did never get galls on their heels.
He would leave sich a thin strip of ground,
That if a man's feet in his shoes
Were burning and sore—why he couldn't sit down,
But the wheels would run over his toes.
For 'tis make money, Thomas, and take money,
What's sold and bought
Is all that is worthy of thought.

Years ago the lame sides did bear grass
For the geese to pull at wi' red bills;
They did hiss at the folks that did pass,
Or the boys that pick up their white quills.
But shortly, if four if or five
Of our goslings do creep from the egg,
They must mope in the garden more dead than alive,
In a coop, or tied up by the leg;
For to catch at land, Thomas, and snatch at land,
Now is the plan,
Make money wherever you can.

The children will soon have no place
Far to play in; and if they do grow
They will have a thin mushroom face,
With their bodies as sump as dough.
But a man's made of a child,
And his limbs do grow worksome by play,
And if the young child's little body is spoiled,
Why the man's will the sooner decay.
But wealth is worth more than health is worth,
Let it all go,
It will bring but a sovereign or two.

For to breed the young fox or the hare
We can give up whole acres of ground;
But the geese be begrudged for to rear
Our young children up healthy and sound.
Why there won't be left the next age,
A green spot where their feet can go free;
And the cuckoo will soon be committed to cage
For a trespass in somebody's tree.
For 'tis looking up, Thomas, and blocking up,
Stranger or brother,
Men mustn't come him one another.

One day I went in at a gate
With my child, where an echo did sound,
And the owner came up and did rate
As if I would cart off his ground.
But his field and his grass were all let,
And the damage that he could have took
Were, at most, that the while I did open the gate
I did rub round the eye on the hook.
But 'tis drive him out, Thomas, and heave him out.
Trample no grounds
Unless you be arter the hounds.]

Ah, the squire of Culverdell Hall
Was as different as light is from dark,
With some folk that, as evening did fall,
Had broke through long grass in his park;
For he went with a smile for to meet
With the trespassers, while they did pass,
And he said "I do fear you'll catch cold in your feet, You've a-walked through so much of my grass."
His mild words, Thomas, cut 'em like swords, Thomas,
Newly a-wet,
And went further with them than a threat.

SELECTIONS FROM POETRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

THE OLD MAN'S WISH.

If I live to grow old, as I find I go down,
Let this be my fate in a country town;
May I have a warm house with a stone at my gate,
And a cleanly young girl to rub my bald pate.
May I govern my passions with an absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as my strength wears away;
Wearing out my life's term by a gentle decay.

In a village retired, by a murmuring brook,
With the ocean at distance on which I may look;
With a wide spacious plain without hedge, row, or stile,
And an easy pad nag to ride out a mile.
May I govern, &c.

With Horace and Plutarch, and one or two more
Of the best wits that lived in the ages before;
With a dish of roast mutton, not ven'son, nor teal,
And clean—though coarse—linen at every meal.
May I govern, &c.

With a pudding on Sunday and stout brimming liquor,
And remnants of Latin to puzzle the vicar;
With a hidden reserve, too, of Burgundy wine
To drink the king's health as oft as we dine.
May I govern, &c.

With a good courage, thus may I face my last day,
And when I am dead may the better sort say—
"In the morning when sober, in the evening when mellow—
He's gone, and has not left behind him his fellow.
For he governed his passions with an absolute sway,
And grew wiser and better as his strength wore away;
Wearing out his life's term by a gentle decay."

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE GOVERNESSES' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I venture to ask for space in your columns to again call attention to the case of Miss Harriet Crane, a very interesting letter from whom you were good enough to insert in your number of April 20th, 1859 (vol. vi., p. 744).

This lady was in early life a pupil of the Girls School, to which she was admitted in 1799, through the influence of the founder, Chevalier Ruspini; she is now, in her seventieth year, a candidate for the Governesses' Benevolent Institution. At the election in May last, she was the highest but one of the unsuccessful candidates, and I have strong reason to hope that, if a vigorous effort be made at the election on the 6th of November next, an annuity may be secured to her for the remainder of her days. But there will be a severe struggle, as, out of one hundred and fifty-one candidates, only three are to be elected. I am endeavouring to obtain for her all the votes I can; and if brethren who are or who may become subscribers will kindly forward their votes to me, I will take care that they are duly recorded.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours truly and fraternally,
3, Ingram Court, Fenchurch Street, JOHN SYMONDS.
October 10th, 1859.

[We hear that our R.W. Bro. B. Bond Cabbell, Prov. G.M. for Norfolk, has given all his votes to Miss Crane, an example which we trust will be extensively followed.]

ALGERIAN SCENERY.—I have seen Swiss mountains and Lombard plains, Scotch lochs and Welsh mountains, but never anything so unhearthly, so delicate, so aerial, as the long stretches of blue mountain and shining sea; the dark cypresses, relieved against a background of a thousand dainty tints, and the massive white Moorish houses gleaming out from the grey mysterious green of the woods of olive trees; the foreground full of bluish aloes and prickly cacti, and the rocky slopes covered with curious and finely cut vegetation—cyclamens, large leaved ivory, and a profusion of African clematis, with large bells of greenish white; while for living interests, we have camels and asses ridden by white-clothed Arabs, and Moors in beautiful gay dresses, and representatives of almost every nation under heaven.—Bodichon's Algeria.

ANCIENT SYMBOLISM, ILLUSTRATED.

BY BRO. ROB. MARTIN, M.D., PAST DEPUTY PROV. GRAND MASTER OF SUFFOLK; AND P.E. COM. OF KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, &c.

To remain the unenlightened observers of certain forms and customs, and to witness from year to year the employment of peculiar symbols, still ignorant of their signification, is unworthy of the age in which we live. Few orders teem more with emblems of mysterious import than does that of Freemasonry; over the origin of some of these the dust and cobwebs of ages have accumulated, but patient investigation will clear them of their covering and establish the fact that they were not unmeaning baubles, but that they have been carefully handed down to us from time immemorial by our ancient brethren as the symbols and guards of our mysteries. Some of them are so exclusive in their import as to admit of explanation only in our Lodges, with the usual regard to secrecy and caution; while others, having peculiar meanings known only to the Craft, yet have equally belonged to the philosophy of the ancients, and admit of more full and more general elucidation—these may even become the subjects of written lectures without offering violence to the secret tenets of our Order. Of this class is the triangle or trowel, as it is called in Craft Masonry; and in treating of it, my endeavour will be to prove it one of the most ancient and important of our symbols; to trace it from the dawn of man's existence on the earth, through the dark ages of idolatry, to these our more enlightened times; and to show that although the name and nature of that deity of whom we considered it an emblem, was and is for a season lost to some of the sons of men, the symbol itself in every quarter of the globe has invariably maintained a sacred signification.

Six hundred and fifty-six years after the creation of man, and two thousand three hundred and forty-eight years before Christ, the universal deluge destroyed all mankind excepting Noah and his family; Noah's three sons were consequently the founders of nations. Japhet peopled the greater part of the west; Ham, Africa, where he was worshipped as a god; and Shem was honoured by the Hebrews his descendants. Smarting under the curse of their progenitor Noah, it was but a probable consequence that the observances of the patriarch would first be disregarded by the family of Ham; and accordingly we trace the origin of idolatry to the Phœnicians or ancient Egyptians, by whom signs, symbols, and hieroglyphical figures were employed as a means of preserving to their priests exclusively the secrets and mysteries of their ancient religion.

The triangle is the most ancient of the postdiluvian symbols; it was one of the hieratic or sacerdotal characters, abridged from the hieroglyphical signs adopted for the sake of convenience and expedition, and used by the priests in their records. The Abbé de Tressau, in his "Heathen Mythology" observes that in the temple of Jupiter Ammon, the figure of an equilateral triangle had reference to the division of the world; he states that almost all the learned men agree in considering that it refers to a confused tradition of the beginning of the world, nearly the same as related in the book of Genesis. Noah, say they, divided the earth among his three children, Shem, Ham, and Japhet. Africa became the possession of Ham; where he was afterwards known by the name of Jupiter. In Egypt there was a city consecrated to him; and the name of Ham bears great affinity to that of Hammon or Ammon, so celebrated among the nations of Africa.

Japhet, the second son of Noah, had for his share all the maritime parts of Asia, with the Archipelago and Europe, which caused him afterwards to be accounted god of the sea, and worshipped under the title of Neptune. Shem, third son of Noah, had the rest of Asia, where the worship of fire became almost general; which occasioning conflagrations that consumed several cities, procured for him the title of Pluto, or god of the infernal regions. Thus we see, in the earliest days of man's existence, although a deviation from the worship of the first great cause was permitted, still, in conformity with revelation, the idea of a triple godhead was established.

The late Sir William Jones has satisfactorily traced the origin of all the people of the earth to these three roots, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, agreeably to the account rendered in the tenth chapter of Genesis. In the ninth chapter you will read:—"These are the three sons of Noah, and of them was the whole earth overspread." On which the celebrated Wogan remarks:—"All mankind are of one blood and original, being descended of one common ancestor; and are therefore all brethren, and as it were, of one family. This consideration shows not only the reasonableness of that universal benevolence and kindness which God, the great Lord and Architect of all requires from us, but demonstrates the folly of that pride which puffs up one man against another. The rich and the poor meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all." A finer illustration of the level and the trowel than these words of Wogan convey, cannot possibly be given. That learned author, Faber, in his "Mysteries of the Cabiri," states that "under the name of Jupiter Ammon, or Protecting Father, Son of our Kindred (the word ammon in Hebrew has this meaning)—there is no doubt but the Egyptians worshipped their progenitor Ham. His title of 'Ammon' was also employed by the Phœnicians as a distinguishing form of appellation towards each other, as well as of solemn invocation to the Deity; from which ancient precedent we use the title of 'Lord,' and the French that of 'Seigneur,' to distinguish nobles."

Thus then the triangle was first employed as a sacred symbol in the land of Ham, deified and worshipped under the title of Jupiter, and I now proceed to trace it into the possession of Japhet. Many of the characters of the Greek language had of themselves other than alphabetical meanings, having been hieroglyphics of the Phœnicians or Egyptians, descendants of Ham, who having migrated into Greece (peopled by the descendants of Japhet), introduced many words from their own language, particularly those which were employed in the new laws, customs, and religions which they carried with them into Greece; and the Grecians in adopting their innovations made use of their terms, which quickly produced a confusion of the two languages—precisely in the same manner as our mother tongue admitted words and idioms from the successive conquerors of our country, until it became the mixed language which is now universally spoken among us.

The most ancient Phœnician letters, introduced into Greece by Cadmus, were sixteen in number. About the period of the Trojan war four more letters were added by Palamedes; and many years after, Simonides, by adding four others, completed the Greek alphabet. From the works of Berosus,

THE PHœNICIAN ALPHA.

Abydences, Polyhistor and Apollodorus, we learn that the deluge was the grand epocha of every ancient nation, and that until the time of Moses nothing appears to have been generally known antecedent to the time of Noah. The Egyptians, therefore, believing him to have been the first man and to have been floated into the world in an ark or ship,

THE COPTIC ALPHA.

used the Alpha or ship as a symbol of him, which figure or character was afterwards chosen by the Greeks as the first letter of their alphabet, and with very slight alteration adopted as their Alpha, which implied not only the first letter but the first of known human beings; and from them we copy the figure of speech, "the alpha and omega—the first and the last." It is a coincidence worthy of remark, and which may have escaped the observation of some brethren better versed in the Greek language than myself, that the alpha and omega, the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, are two vowels which when pronounced together form a Greek verb expressing the first and last act of animal existence, ἀω, σπῖρο, to breathe. In like manner with the appropriation of the ilpha to alphabetical purposes, the triangle, which had in the days of Ham been accepted as a symbol of the flood, and consequent division of the world, and afterwards as a representative of Ham or Jupiter, was selected by the Greeks as a letter corresponding to our D, and called delta, which was used as the capital of, and frequently substituted for the word Διός, the genitive case of Ζεύς, Jove or Jupiter, the supreme god of the heathens: thus meaning "of or belonging to the supreme God." Or the word may be considered as the adjective Διός, prestantissimus, "most excellent" or "most high."

THE GREEK DELTA.

Shem, Ham, and Japhet, being thus distributed over the world, all immediate descendants of Noah, who was the tenth generation from Adam, it may easily be conceived that their traditions would correspond respecting the flood and subsequent division of the world. Canaan, the son of Ham, who had received the curse of his grandfather Noah, was the first to fall from the worship of the living God, and consequently Egypt soon merged into the grossest systems of idolatry, which gradually spread themselves into the possessions of Japhet and of Shem; and we learn that in process of time these three roots or persons were by their descendants deified and worshipped singly—but, nevertheless, from an imperfect tradition of the flood, they were frequently united by an emblem, implying a triad, which for the present we will continue to trace in the possessions of Japhet.

In the ceremonial worship of Phrygia, the number three was employed with mystic solemnity; and in the emblematical hands, which were borne on the point of a staff or sceptre in the Isiac processions, the thumb and two forefingers are held up, to signify the three primary and general personifications. This emblem, like the triangle, is an hieratic or sacerdotal abbreviation of a more full and copious hieroglyphic, as will be seen on comparing it with those we are about to bring under notice. The hippa triceps at Corinth is an emblem of a more complex character, and, according to that learned author Briant, from whose book this drawing has been taken, is the figure of a female with three horses' heads, the latter forming an exact triangle. The figure of the female is allegorical of the ark or Noah, by both of which was implied fecundity, the one being frequently substituted for or mixed with the other (as has been already shown in the Phœnician ilpha) and the three heads refer to Shem, Ham, and Japhet. Another drawing of the same emblem gives more freely the figure of the hippa, or sea horse, perfecting the figure by the tail of a fish. This figure is not only a representative of Noah, who, like a fish floating on the waters, survived the flood; but was symbolical of the generative attribute. Our own familiar emblem of Neptune seated on a dolphin, and carrying a trident in his hand, is an ancient symbol of the flood, and its consequences; the ark is represented by the fish, Noah by the figure of Neptune, and his three sons by the trident. The placing figures upon some kinds of fish is a very ancient method of consecration or apotheosis. Fish were the natural emblems of the productive powers of the waters, they being more prolific than any other class of animals or even vegetables.

[THE EMBLEMATICAL HAND.

I will here venture so far to digress from my immediate subject as to copy a statement from Dr. Hale's "Vegetable Statics," which appears to contradict my assertion that fish are more productive than vegetables. He states that the produce of a single plant of the acanthum vulgare, in its fourth or most prolific year, supposing every seed to strike, would be 7,962 trillions, 624,000 billions—more than enough to stock all the planets in the solar system, so that no other plant could possibly grow, allowing only one square foot to each plant. On the other hand, Mason Good asserts that the power of fecundity in fishes surpasses all calculation, and appears almost incredible. A single herring, if suffered to multiply unmolested and undiminished for twenty years, would shew a progeny greater in bulk than the globe itself. These calculations are, I confess, beyond my power, but some of my readers may determine, perhaps, which has the advantage, the acanthum, which occupying one superficial foot to each plant can cover a surface equal to that of the solar system; or the herring, at least sixty of which may be stowed in the space allotted to one acanthum, and which will form a solid mass equal in bulk to the whole globe, occupying entirely the length, the width and depth thereof. While thus digressing, I will mention one animal which forms an object of domestic care, the prolific nature of which is perhaps not generally known, but has been accurately ascertained by several close observers; among them Hüber (says Dr. Mason Good) has sufficiently proved, that one single impregnation will serve to fecundate all the eggs which a queen bee will lay for two years at least (Hüber believes for the whole of her life), but he has had repeated proofs of the former, viz., two years. She begins to lay her eggs forty-six hours after impregnation, and will commonly lay about three thousand in two months, being at the rate of fifty eggs daily, thus one impregnation will to a certainty produce in two years (no accident happening to the queen), 36,500 fecundated eggs.

THE HIPPA TRICEPS.

THE SEA HORSE.

But to return; it will be found that the creative or generative attribute has ever formed a part of the divine triad of every nation; a more full account of which I reserve for its proper place in the concluding part of this essay.

(To be continued.)

BROTHER DISTIN, THE VETERAN TRUMPETER.—We understand that a Grand Masonic Concert is shortly to be given at Exeter Hall, under the distinguished patronage of the right honourable the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master, by Bro. Distin, sen., whose last concert took place at the Crystal Palace, in October, 1858. We have no doubt it will surprise many of our readers when we inform them, that instead of being a source of considerable profit to him, as he had hoped, the Crystal Palace Concert was, on the contrary, a severe loss (between £70 and £80), the enormous expenses incurred having absorbed the whole of his share of the proceeds. Bro. Distin has always been ready to give his gratuitous services on all charitable occasions, and now, after a career of half a century's labour as a performer on that most trying instrument, the trumpet, although he has had twenty-seven years' servitude under the Crown, viz., eleven years in the old militia, seven years in the Grenadier Guards, and nine years in the private band of George IV., he is without any provision, and now requires that assistance which he has ever been ready to render to others. We sincerely hope that his Masonic brethren and the public will respond to his urgent appeal.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

THE Provincial Grand Lodge of Monmouthshire is to be held at Monmouth, on the 25th inst., under the presidency of Bro. C. J. Kemys Tynte, M.P.

THE Gravesend Lodge of Instruction meets every Thursday evening throughout the year at half-past seven in the evening, at Bro. Baker's, Star Hotel, Parrock-street.

THE West Kent Lodge of Instruction, held under the warrant of the St. George's Lodge, No. 164, meets at the Globe Tavern, Royal Hill, Greenwich, every Thursday evening, at half-past seven. We are informed that the Lodge is proceeding favourably under the tuition of Bro. H. J. Hinxman, M.D. (No. 27). New members are added to the list weekly, and there is every probability of its becoming one of the best working Lodges in the county.

At the meeting of the committee of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution on Wednesday last, the gratifying announcement was made that of the £2,200 subscribed at the last festival in January, the whole has been collected with the exception of £20 from one Lodge. Two or three more such efforts and the whole of the candidates will be provided for. A few stewards for the next festival in January, 1860, are still wanted.

METROPOLITAN.

FREEMASONS' GIRLS SCHOOL.

A QUARTERLY Court of this School was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Thursday, October 13th, Bro. John Udall, P.S.G.D., V.P., in the chair.

The minutes of the various committees were read and adopted; these minutes contained a vote of condolence to the family of the late Bro. John Barnes, vice president of the charity, on the great loss they had sustained.

The minutes of the Audit Committee were then read and approved, the balance in hand being £1,084 18s. The Treasurer was requested to pay the quarterly accounts of £506 17s. 11d.; and on the building account, £66 4s. A report was also read from the Treasurer to the effect, that an additional £500 stock on account of the institution had been bought, in pursuance of a resolution of the last general meeting, and ordered to be entered on the minutes.

Bro. Udall moved that the number of children in the school should be increased from seventy to eighty. Their funds were yearly increasing, and he thought the time had arrived when the number of children might be increased. He had been informed that by increasing the number of children they might injure the health of those in it; but he had consulted the medical man and the matron, who assured him that the number might be increased to ninety or one hundred without danger.

Bro. Biggs seconded the proposition, which after a slight discussion was carried, it being stated that after providing for all expenses, £2,500 had been invested in the last three years, and that there was now a balance of upwards of £1,000 in hand.

The election for six children out of nine candidates was then proceeded with—and the poll was declared as follows:

Annie Kilpin, 1,775; Alice Freeman, 1,748; Emily Jane Nixon, 1,709; Emily Ann Morris, 1,670; Adela Annette Gray, 1,610; Lavina Watts, 1,621; Emily Mary Campbell, 358; Jemima Thomason Laws, 226; Mary Ann Emma Williams, 76.

The first six were declared duly elected.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and secretary closed the proceedings.

STRONG MAN LODGE (No. 53).—The first meeting of this Lodge for the season was held on Thursday evening, Oct. 6th, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane. The offices were thus filled—Bro. Lundy, W.M.; Bro. Dickie, S.W.; Bro. Ditchman, J.W.; Bro. Hales, S.D.; and Bro. White, J.D. The minutes having been read and confirmed, two gentlemen were introduced, and in due form admitted to the ancient privileges of Freemasonry; after which a brother was passed to the second degree. There being no other business, the Lodge was closed. After dinner the W.M. gave the usual toasts, interspersed with songs, and the greatest harmony prevailed, the brethren separating at an early hour.

TEMPLE LODGE (No. 118).—The opening meeting for the season of this Lodge took place on Tuesday evening, October 4th, and it was most numerously attended. The Lodge having been opened in due form and with solemn prayer, Messrs. Charles Jarman and Crispin Thomas Lynn were duly initiated into the ancient and honourable fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, and Bros. Aston, Doggrell, Smith, and Goldmidt were duly passed to the degree of F.C. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren dined together. The chair was ably filled by Bro. Hastelow, P.M., in the absence of the W.M., Bro. Charles Aldridge. In reply to the toast of "The Officers of the Temple Lodge," Bro. Edward Farthing, S.W., said they all felt it a most pleasing duty as well as their interest to do their best in seconding the efforts of Bro. Hastelow, who so ably filled the chair, and they would endeavour to make their Lodge noted throughout the Craft, not only as one of the best working Lodges, but for the efficiency of its officers. The Lodge was duly closed with solemn prayer at nine o'clock. The pleasures of the evening were much enhanced by the excellent singing of Bros. Perrin, sen. and jun., Farthing, Tuthill, &c., and the brethren separated, after the enjoyment of a most pleasant reunion.

PRUDENT BENEVOLENT LODGE (No. 169).—A Lodge of Emergency was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Saturday, October 8th, Bro. W.F. Blackburn presiding, when Mr. Carleton Baynes, C.E. (about to proceed to New Zealand), was initiated into the Order, and Messrs. Pegus and Pullen passed to the second degree. The regular session will commence on the 24th.

ST. JOHN'S LODGE (No. 106).—The annual meeting of this Lodge was held at the Holly Bush Tavern, Hampstead, on Tuesday, Oct. 4th, under the presidency of Bro. Henry Cornick, W.M. Bros. Adlard, Chadwick, Haward, and Houghton, having been appointed as an audit committee, the W.M. raised Bros. Slepper and Wolfe, and passed Bro. Burgoyne, to their respective degrees. The chair was then taken by Bro. Thomas Alex. Adams, P.M., when Bro. J. R. Smith, W.M. elect, was presented by Bro. Shury, P.M., and duly installed in the presence of a board of installed Masters, including Bros. H. Cornick, W. C. Haines, P.M., No. 196, Prov. G.M., Australia (Scottish); A. Hamilton, W. Sherry, J. R. Thompson, Sam. Aldrich, R. Hazard, F. Adlard, J. Smith, G. Purst; A. U. Thiselton, Shenton, Lowenstark, and Beckett. The ceremony of installation having been concluded, the new W.M. proceeded to invest Bros. Cornick as P.M.; Geo. Hart, S.W.; Geo. Pritchard, J.W.; R. Hazard, Treas.; Sam. Aldrich, Hon. Sec.; John Douglas, S.D.; F. W. Collins, J.D.; W. Rippin, I.G.; John Bradley, Tyler. The W.M. next inaugurated his year of office by installing Messrs. Garner and Gregg into office, performing the ceremony in a manner reflecting alike honour upon himself and the Lodge, noted as it has for some years been for the excellence of its working. Bro. Aldrich, P.M., then submitted a petition to the Lodge, which he had drawn up for presentation to the Board of Benevolence, praying for aid in behalf of one of five orphan children of the late Bro. Wesson, who was desirous of being apprenticed to a piano-forte manufacturer, the business of his late father. The petition was unanimously adopted, and the brethren present pledged themselves to support a younger brother in his candidature for admission to the Boys' School on the 17th inst. All business being ended, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to a very elegant dinner, presided over by Bro. Smith, the new W.M., supported by Bros. Cornick, Adams, W. C. Haines, Sherry, Hamilton, Thompson, Aldrich, Hazard, Adlard, Lowenstark, P.M.s.; Bros. Hart, S.W.; Houghton, J.W., pro tem; I. Douglas, S.D.; Collins, J.D.; Rippin, I.G.; Bros. Wolfe, Slagg, Muncey, Burgoyne, J. Ware, Isaac Douglas, Mathews, Giltro, Caney, Stephen, W. H. Rowe, J. T. Rowe, Dr. Winter, Haward, Fry, Wills, Chadwick, Davies, Holloway, Perry, Goddard, Capt. Thomson, and a number of visitors, including Bros. J. Smith, G. Purst; A. U. Thiselton, Secretary to the Boys' School; Haines, S.D., No. 1,006; R. Smith, Hughes, Austin, Goodwin, G. Smith, No. 28; Shenton, P.M., No. 40; Kendall, Hale, Jefferys, &c., &c. On the removal of the cloth, the usual Loyal and Masonic toasts followed. Bro. Smith, G. Purst, acknowledged the health of the D.G.M. and the rest of the Grand Officers, at the same time congratulating the Lodge that one of the P.M.s. of that Lodge, Bro. Adams, had been appointed as Asst. G. Purst, and the pleasure he felt in having to act with so energetic and zealous a brother. The initiates having replied to the hearty manner in which their healths were drunk, and expressed their gratification alike at the beautiful ceremony of their initiation and their reception into Masonry, "The Visitors" was drunk, and responded to by Bro. Thiselton and a brother at the bottom of the table, who announced himself as only an entered apprentice, and proved that he has to make himself acquainted with the first principles of the Order and at least two of the four cardinal virtues. Bro. Cornick, P.M., in a very eloquent speech, proposed the health of the W.M., and congratulated the Lodge upon the fact that he was one of their own initiates of but about four years since, who by his talent and assiduity had fairly won the position he held. He was sure that, distinguished as had been the annals of the Lodge under the rule of many of his predecessors, its character and prestige would be maintained and strengthened whilst governed by Bro. Smith. The W.M. replied and expressed his deep sense of obligation to the brethren for the support he had received since he had been in the Lodge, and more particularly to Bro. Aldrich, P.M., for teaching him the ceremonies, and Bro. Adams for imparting to him a knowledge of the fifteen sections. He pledged himself to use his utmost endeavours to support the dignity of the Lodge and the interest of their noble charities. The health of the P.M. was responded to by Bro. Adams, and "The Officers" by Bros. Adlard, Dir. of Cera., and Aldrich.

Hon. Sec., who called attention to the highly satisfactory state in which the funds of the Lodge stood. "The Charities," acknowledged by Bro. Thielton, brought the evening to a happy close, the speeches having been relieved by some excellent singing. We would suggest to the W.M. and to Bro. Dale, the respected host of the tavern, who is ever anxious to oblige his brethren—whether in or out of Lodge—that a slight alteration in the arrangement of the tables at future banquets would bring the brethren more directly under the control of the W.M., and at the same time tend to the comfort of the brethren themselves.

OLD CONCORD LODGE (No. 201).—The opening meeting of the season of this numerous Lodge, took place on Tuesday evening, Oct. 4th, at the Freemasons' Tavern; Bro. C. Maney, W.M., presided, supported by his officers, Bro. Swainston, S.W.; and Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin, J.W. The Lodge having been opened, and the minutes read, the W.M. in due form initiated Mr. John Tyrrell, Mr. Charles Albert Jecks, Mr. Alfred Bryant, and Mr. George Meddick, into the mysteries of this ancient and honourable Order. Afterwards Bros. Sinclair, Moginie, Creed, Wiseman, and Watkins, were raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons. The W.M. then proposed that the initiation fee be six guineas instead of five guineas as heretofore, which was agreed to. The W.M. then moved that one guinea be taken from each initiation fee towards the Benevolent Fund, which was also carried. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren, about sixty in number, dined together. For the first time in this Lodge, a voluntary subscription was entered into towards the Benevolent Fund, and a very satisfactory amount was realised therefrom.

DOMATIC LODGE (No. 206).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, at Bro. Ireland's, Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane. Bro. Robert Baker, W.M., presided; supported by Bro. Haydon, S.W.; Bro. Moore, J.W.; and Bros. Brett, Garrod, Marshall, J. A. Adams, and W. Carpenter. The Lodge having been opened with solemn prayer; Bros. McCarthy, Fagg ("Sam Collins"), Appleyard, and Hughes, were satisfactorily raised to the sublime degree of M.M., that impressive ceremony being performed in a style of excellence by the Worshipful Master. Afterwards Mr. George Tickel (captain of the Australian liner Agincourt) was introduced, and formally initiated into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. Before the Lodge was closed, Bro. Brett, P.M., brought before it the subject of the Freemasons' Magazine, and urged the great benefits it conferred upon the Craft, and on his motion, seconded by Bro. Garrod, P.M., a contribution was voted from the funds of the Lodge towards its support. A resolution, congratulating Bro. Brett, P.M., on his return to this country, was proposed by Bro. Garrod, seconded by Bro. Haydon, and carried unanimously. Bro. Brett acknowledged the compliment. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren retired to refreshment. Amongst the visitors were Bros. Matthew Cooke, Charles Sloman, A. Saqui, Bradley, (Lodge of Unions), Hall and Fry, (Royal Alfred), Stock, (Emulation), &c. After the loyal and Masonic toasts, the Worshipful Master, in very appropriate terms, gave "Their newly initiated brother, Captain Tickel." Bro. Tickel, in responding to the toast, said he was highly delighted at what he had seen of Freemasonry, although he could say little more in the first step which he had taken in the Craft, and he trusted, by application as a steady workman, that they would never regret the honour which they had conferred upon him. He had had the pleasure of bringing home their Bro. Brett, after a long and perilous journey, to whom he was greatly indebted for his introduction into Freemasonry, and he trusted he should prove a good workman in the Craft to which he had now the honour to belong. The Worshipful Master next gave "The health of the Visitors," coupling with it the name of Bro. Saqui, which was drunk with all honours. Bro. Saqui, in responding, said he felt proud of the opportunity which was now afforded him as a working Mason of thirty years' standing, of bearing his testimony to the excellent working of the Domatic Lodge. He could only say that if any brother was in want of instruction that he was at all times most happy to afford it to them. He felt highly gratified at the return of Bro. Brett, and it would be quite unnecessary for him to expatiate upon his Masonic abilities, as they were well known. Bro. Brett, P.M., proposed "The health of their Worshipful Master." He would shortly join the Past Masters at the left of the chair, but he was sure that he would do so with the good feelings of every brother of the Domatic Lodge. The Worshipful Master said he felt delighted at the manner in which Bro. Brett had proposed his health, and the cordiality with which it had been received, for which he sincerely thanked them. The Worshipful Master next gave "The Past Masters of the Lodge," for which Bro. Carpenter returned thanks in his usual happy strain, eliciting roars of laughter. "The Officers of the Domatic Lodge" was next drunk, and Bro. Haydon, S.W., in responding said, he wished to take that opportunity of paying a mark of respect to their Bro. Brett, with whom he had been associated for many years, and to congratulate him on his return, and also for having successfully accomplished the object he had in view which was independent of Masonry, and he would call upon them to join him in drinking "Health, success, and prosperity, to Bro. Brett." Bro. Brett said he thanked them sincerely, from the bottom of his heart, for the manner in which he had been received that evening and whenever and wherever he had met them, and with whom he had spent his happiest hours. Although he had been away, the Domatic Lodge had been uppermost in his thoughts, and he had even gone to bed and dreamt of them. He had the honour that night of introducing a gentleman into their Craft, whom he was proud to meet, and should be happy to introduce to his friends in the social relations of life. He thanked Bro. Haydon for the compliments he had paid him, but he felt a deficiency of words to express what he desired in thanking them for the way in which he had been received. Several other toasts were given and the evening was spent in a very agreeable manner, Bros. Sloman, Matthew Cooke, Saqui, and Beckett, contributing some choice songs. The brethren separated at eleven o'clock.

CRYSTAL PALACE LODGE (No. 1,044).—The closing meeting for the season of this highly flourishing Lodge, which although not much more than a year old, now numbers nearly ninety members, took place on Thursday, the 6th inst., in the south saloon of the Crystal Palace. Bro. Purbrook, W.M., presided, assisted by his officers, Bros. Handford, S.W.; Palmer, J.W.; H. T. Thompson, S.D.; Oliver, J.D.; Hill, Treas.; W. Blackburn (P.M., No. 23), Sec.; Smith, I.G. Amongst the visitors present were, Bros. J. Thompson, No. 752; Douglas, Neptune, No. 298; Tibbetts, P.M., Temperance, No. 198; Holman, W.M., Pythagorean, No. 162; Geo. Roberts, Temperance, No. 198; Collins, W.M., Beadon, No. 902; J. Emmens, P.M., Old Concord, No. 201; Heath, Britannia, No. 162; H. Thompson, Domatic, No. 206; and several other brethren. The first business after the opening of the Lodge was to raise Bros. Actin and Moore to the sublime degree of Master Mason, that imposing ceremony being performed by the W.M. in a very careful manner; he afterwards gave the traditional history, and also an explanation of the tracing board. Bros. G. Cooke, Fincher, Martyn, F. J. Smith, A. Dee Bartlett, and W. B. Healey, were then passed to the second degree in a very able and impressive manner. The Lodge was resumed to the first degree, and Messrs. Small, Thomas, Rose, Jones, and Weatherley, duly initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. A communication was received from the Grand Secretary, cautioning the brethren against certain pretenders to Freemasonry, who were going about to different Lodges representing themselves as belonging to the Lodge of Smyrna, but who were only impostors. The brethren were then called off from labour to refreshment, and upwards of sixty dined together; after which the W.M. gave the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, which were duly honoured, Bro. Collins, W.M. of the Beadon Lodge, responding to the toast of "The Visitors," and bearing testimony to the excellent working and hospitality of the Lodge. Bro. Smith, P.M., proposed "The health of the W.M., Bro. Purbrook," who, they were perfectly aware, was only a short time since initiated into the Beadon Lodge. He had that day taken the chair before half-past two o'clock, and had gone through the ceremonies of two raisings, six passings, and five initiations. That was the first time that he had ever performed the ceremony of raising, and that alone would be quite enough to stamp the Crystal Palace Lodge as one that had a Master worthy of presiding over them. The W.M. in responding, said the manner they had received the toast of his health was most gratifying to him, for as their Bro. Smith had said, he was a very young Mason, and if he had been able, he would have done better, but if he had satisfied the brethren, he was amply repaid. He concluded by giving "The health of Bro. Smith, their only P.M.," whose year of office had been one that every member of the Crystal Palace Lodge must be proud of, creditable to himself, and of advantage to all around him. Bro. Smith, P.M., thanked the W.M. for the manner in which he had been pleased to speak of him; but he had only done his duty. He did not think that would be the last time that he should meet them that year, but that they should have sufficient initiations to justify them in calling a Lodge of emergency. Indeed he should have his children and grandchildren in time to bring into it, and he trusted that the Crystal Palace Lodge would go on thriving, until it stood predominant in the Craft. The W.M. then in very flattering terms proposed "The Officers of the Crystal Palace Lodge," and said he felt especial pleasure in proposing this toast, as he had the honour of introducing most of them into Freemasonry. Bro. Handford, S.W., thanked the W.M. for the kind way in which he had spoken of them, but for himself he must acknowledge that he had grown a little rusty, and he took that opportunity of thanking those brethren who attended Lodges of instruction. He trusted that instruction would not be lost, and that having cast their bread upon the waters, it would be found after many days, that the instruction they had received would not die with their office, but should communicate to others what had been so liberally given to themselves. "The healths of Bro. W. Blackburn, Secretary, and Bro. Hill, Treasurer," were next given, those brethren severally returning thanks. The Lodge was then resumed, and Bro. Smith, P.M., gave notice that at the next meeting he should move that a letter for a Royal Arch Chapter be applied for in conjunction with the Crystal Palace Lodge. The proceedings were brought to a close before ten o'clock. Several brethren contributed some excellent songs during the evening.

INSTRUCTION.

CONSTITUTIONAL LODGE (No. 63).—At the meeting of this Lodge at the Jolly Sailor, Shadwell, on Monday, October 3rd, Bro. Smith, W.M. of the Lodge, presented in the name of the members a very handsome ornolu clock, manufactured by Bro. Eglesse, to Bro. Scotcher, the Secretary. Amongst those present were Bros. Shirley, P.M. No. 63; Dosell, P.M. No. 63; Mules, P.M. No. 63; Ingram, S.W. No. 63; Thompson, J.W. No. 63; Atherton, S.D. No. 63; Compton, J.D. No. 63; Shaboe, No. 63; Mason, No. 63; Whitely, No. 63; Ward, P.M. No. 580; Carpenter, No. 580; Stokes, S.D. No. 248; Harvey, No. 248; Rumbold, No. 248, &c., &c. A number of effective speeches were delivered at the festive board, and the brethren passed a very agreeable and harmonious evening.

CONFIDENCE LODGE (No. 228).—A meeting of this Lodge took place on Wednesday evening, October 5th, at the Bengal Arms Tavern, Biorhin-lane, for the purpose of working the fifteen sections. Bro. Brewer, W.M. of the parent Lodge, presided for the first time to put the questions. The sections were worked as follows:—first lecture, first section, Bros. Burch; second, Newall; third, Chancellor; fourth, Newall; fifth, H. Thompson; sixth, Brett; seventh, Analow. Second lecture, first section, Bros. Hollings; second, H. Thompson; third, Haynes; fourth, Analow; fifth, Moss. Third lecture, first section, Bros. Thompson; second, Newall; third, Moss. The Lodge having resumed to the first degree, a vote of thanks was proposed and carried to Bro. Brewer, W.M. of the Confidence Lodge, for the manner in which he had presided and in putting the questions that evening. Bro. Brewer acknowledged the compliment, and the Lodge was closed at half-past ten with solemn prayer.

PROVINCIAL.

CHANNEL ISLANDS.

JERSEY.—Lodge La Césarée (No. 860).—An emergency meeting was held on Friday, Sept. 23rd. The Lodge having been opened by Bro. Le Cras, W.M., in the first degree, the ballot was taken for Mr. William Croad, which was unanimous in his favour. The Lodge was then opened in the second and third degrees, and Bros. Moss and Dorey having passed satisfactorily the proper examination, were duly raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The Lodge was then resumed in the first degree, for the purpose of initiating Mr. Croad into the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry, at the conclusion of which ceremony, the Orator, Bro. Ratier, delivered an eloquent address on the elements of the science appropriate to the occasion, and suitable for the instruction of an Entered Apprentice. The business of the evening having terminated, the Lodge was closed at an early hour, and the brethren adjourned to partake of the accustomed frugal repast.

The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, Sept. 29th, the Master's chair being occupied by the W.M. Bro. Le Cras, and those of the Wardens by Bros. Baudains and Binet. After the opening of the Lodge in due form, and the confirmation of the minutes of the previous regular meeting, and also of the emergency meeting of the 23rd, the ballot was taken for Bro. Wm. Smith, and proved unanimous for his admission as a joining member. Bro. Noah Arthur, previously initiated, was examined, and his acquaintance with the science thus far having proved satisfactory, he was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. A donation of £1 to the Royal Benevolent Institution for male annuitants was voted. A proposition was made for the initiation of Mr. John Richard at the next meeting, which was duly recorded. A verbal communication was made by Bro. D'Allain from Bro. F. Rondeau, accompanying a donation of a collection of Masonic songs, by Bro. Edw. Brugières, of "L'Harmonie Universelle Lodge," Orient de Castres, France. This handsome present was gratefully accepted, and Bro. D'Allain was commissioned to transmit a vote of thanks to the donor. Moreover, Bro. Rondeau was proposed as a joining member of the Lodge. Routine business having been disposed of, on inquiry being made by the Worshipful Master as to whether any brother had sought to propose for the good of Freemasonry in general, or of this Lodge in particular, Bro. Hocquard, one of the oldest and most justly respected Masons in the province, rose and said: "Worshipful Master, Brother Wardens, and Brethren—I have just been informed by our esteemed Worshipful Master that we are about to lose the services and co-operation of our much beloved and respected Bro. Ratier, who, in his capacity as Orator, has so mainly contributed to the welfare and prosperity of this Lodge, and by his consistent and zealous maintenance of the principles of our Order as the rule of his own life and conduct, has exerted so beneficial an influence on Freemasonry in this province and wherever a knowledge of him has extended. I am convinced that I do but express the sentiments of all true Masons, especially of members of Lodge La Césarée, when I state that we cannot allow this occasion, lamentable as it is to us, to pass without entering into an arrangement, with the view of testifying to the estimation in which Bro. Ratier is held among us, by some distinct and special mark of our appreciation of his talents, as evinced by his able expositions of the tenets of the Craft and of his zeal and noble character as a Mason. From the time that he entered on his straightforward and manly—but at the same time, so far as regards his own feelings, modest—career among us, it may safely be affirmed that he has never for one instant deviated from a course most highly honourable both to himself and to the fraternity, and in every sense of the word truly Masonic conduct, so firm and consistent, yet so amiable, so zealous and energetic, yet so retiring, and unostentatious, is worthy of our sincere respect and admiration. I propose, therefore, that a document be prepared expressive of these sentiments, both in the English and French language, and that it be inscribed on vellum for the purpose of presentation to our worthy brother; and that an especial meeting of the Lodge be called, to which he shall be invited, as also to a banquet in his honour on the termination of the business, that we may have an opportunity of marking our sense of the value of his connexion with us in the bonds of fraternity, and of taking a last and formal adieu." Bro. Binet, acting as Junior Warden, gave his warmest support to the proposition just made, and stated that, having intimately known Bro. Ratier for the space of seven years, and critically watched his career under very trying circumstances, he desired most emphatically to endorse the sentiments of the last speaker, and to add that he had ever had reason to regard him as a true patriot, a faithful friend, an honourable man, and a true and consistent Mason. To this proposition all the brethren, with one accord, signified a hearty and cordial assent. Bro. Ratier rose, evidently overpowered with emotion at so unexpected and at the same time so unanimous and hearty a testimony to the respect and affection with which he is regarded by the Lodge. It is impossible to do justice to him in reporting his remarks on the occasion, and to the fervour of his utterance; which can be appreciated only by those who have had the gratification of hearing his orations and benefiting by his eloquence, in which the argumentative solidity of an able English speaker is combined with the impassioned tone and gesture of a French orator. He said: "Brethren, what I have done in connexion with our honoured institution and with that branch of it termed La Césarée, to which we belong, has been no more than my duty: however favourably you have been pleased to regard my feeble efforts, since I am a very old Mason, have made the subject a study for many years, and have felt bound, in honour and fraternity, to communicate to others so far as I have the power, the knowledge which I have been permitted to obtain. It has therefore been my desire, and I have esteemed it a privilege, to contribute to the dissemination of those beautiful truths and high principles which our Order inculcates, and more especially to endeavour to impress on all who have been brought under my influence, the supremacy of charity as a virtue of a most extended character, and which, in its widest sense embraces all others. Brethren, if the calls of nature, of country, of family, of affection, of duty, call me hence and induce me to quit you, be it only for a short season, or be it for a more extended period, depend upon and receive my earnest assurance that wherever my sphere of action may be placed, this Lodge shall never be absent from my mind, endeared to me as it is by so many valuable associations, and that I hope ever to be permitted to continue my association with it as one of its members. My desire, and so far as I may be allowed to look forward to the future, my intention is, to visit you periodically, and thus to have opportunities of maintaining and cementing our mutual intercourse; especially do I hope to be among you on the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone of the Masonic Temple which we have recently so nobly originated. I see around me many who are but in the commencement of their Masonic career, whom I have assisted to introduce into the bonds of fraternity, and who have received from my lips the first explanations of the ceremonies through which they have passed. I am particularly anxious to take advantage of this occasion to impress on the young Masons of this Lodge their duty to pursue the study with all possible zeal, to endeavour to labour in the cause as I have laboured, both in the acquisition of knowledge themselves and in imparting it to others, for the more they do so the more will their love of it increase and the more will they experience satisfaction in contributing to the welfare of humanity in general, but above all, so far as relates to our Order. I cannot conclude without uttering a disclaimer of monopoly of merit so far as regards the success and present position of this Lodge. If its apparent prosperity be, as I trust it is, solid and real, founded on a just appreciation of Freemasonry and on a consistent and judicious carrying out of its principles and precepts, such a result is due mainly to the efforts, example, and conduct of your most worthy Worshipful Master, Bro. Le Cras. His kind and conciliatory—yet firm—character, his strictness in always keeping in view and maintaining the landmarks of the Order, are especial objects of our admiration. I therefore most cordially invite and advise all the brethren to cherish these qualities in whomsoever you may appoint to rule over you, that they may prove as beacons and examples to their successors, and finally, that you will one and all strive to maintain that union and brotherly affection which will ever furnish the best guarantee of success." Thus terminated the proceedings of this most interesting meeting, and the Lodge was closed with the usual solemn rites, administered on the present occasion with more than ordinary seriousness, after the delivery of the effective address of Bro. Ratier.—H. H.

KENT.

GRAVESEND.—Freedom Lodge of Instruction (No. 91).—At the meeting of this Lodge at the Star Hotel, Parrock Street, on Thursday evening, October 6th, Bro. Nettleingham presiding as W.M., eight sections of the lectures were worked in a very creditable manner by various brethren of the Lodge. We understand that this Lodge of Instruction, which numbers forty-eight members, is making very great strides in Masonic knowledge.

LANCASHIRE WEST.

ROBY.—Alliance Lodge (No. 965).—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held at the Stanley Arms Hotel, on Tuesday, October 4th. The assemblage of brethren was pretty numerous, the W.M., Bro. G. A. W. Phillips in the chair. After the usual preliminaries had been gone through, the ballot was taken for Mr. Charles O'Dogherty, which proved unanimous, but that gentleman not being present for initiation, the W.M. at once proceeded to examine Bros. Trego, Tyson, and Williams, previous to their being passed to the second degree, which examination proved very satisfactory. The Lodge was then opened in the second degree, and the brethren passed. The Lodge was then closed to the first degree, Bro. Witter, S.W., giving notice of motion to rescind the alteration of the by-law relative to meeting in the months of January, March, and November. The W.M. drew the attention of the brethren to the West Lancashire Educational Fund, soliciting their donations and subscriptions for this worthy and charitable institution. His desire was amply responded to by the brethren. The Lodge was then closed in solemn prayer.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

CONSECRATION OF THE FERRERS AND IVANHOE LODGE, ASHBY DE LA ZOUCH (No. 1081).

On Thursday, the 6th of October, an event took place at Ashby de la Zouch which will be long remembered in that district with feelings of great pleasure. This town has been deprived of the benefits of a Masonic Lodge for the last eighteen years. The Ivanhoe Lodge commenced its career on the 30th of May, 1836, and after having thirty-six meetings and initiating seventeen members into the secrets and mysteries of the Order, it was closed in due form and adjourned sine die on the 7th of October, 1841. The Prov. Grand Master of Leicestershire being anxious to increase the number of Lodges in his province, and the love of the Craft still lingering in the breasts of several brethren living in the town, whose number was increased by several young and zealous Masons, it was determined that an effort should be made to revive the dormant Lodge. Accordingly, in January last a petition was presented to the M.W. Grand Master for a warrant to enable the brethren to hold a Lodge. The M.W. Grand Master was pleased to grant a warrant in accordance with the prayer of the petition, under the name of the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 1081, holding its meeting on the Monday after the full moon, in the Town Hall, the brethren having very great objection to holding their meetings at an inn, as unmasonic.

Bro. the Earl Ferrers, the W.M. appointed by the warrant, having died before the warrant was granted, some delay unavoidably took place, but Bro. Edward Mammatt having been appointed W.M. in the room of the lamented Earl Ferrers, the Lodge commenced working on the 15th of April, and continued to hold its meetings regularly until the day appointed for the consecration, Thursday, October 6th.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

A special meeting of the Prov. Grand Lodge was held at the Town Hall, Ashby de la Zouch, for the purpose of consecrating this Lodge, and other business. The following brethren of the province were present:—Right Hon. Earl Howe, G.C.H., Prov. G.M.; W. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M.; Windram, P. Prov. S.G.W., as Prov. S.G.W.; Edward Mammatt (W.M., No. 1,081), Prov. G.J.W.; Revs. J. O. Picton, and John Denton, Prov. G. Chaplains; Underwood, Prov. G. Treas.; Morris, Prov. G. Sec.; Paul, Prov. J.G.D.; Gill, P. Prov. S.G.D.; Brewin, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; J. H. Bobart, Prov. G.S.B.; Sheppard; R. Warner (P.M.), S.W., No. 1081; Redfern (Prov. S.G.D. for Derbyshire), No. 1081; R. Stone (P. Prov. S.G.W. for Staffordshire), No. 1081; Bithrey, P. Prov. G. Org.; H. T. Bobart, W. Bobart, G. F. Brown, F. Hamp, J. R. Bindley, J. Goodman, S. Love, W. Woodward, W. Mason, Henry Dicken, M.D., and William Canner, of No. 1081, and Charles Bembridge, Prov. G. Tyler. Visitors—Bros. J. Gamble, Prov. J.G.W. for Derbyshire; Rev. J. F. Bateman, P. Prov. G. Chaplain for Cambridgeshire; J. Fox Warner, P. Prov. S.G.D. for Staffordshire; C. T. Hawkins, Alfred Lodge, No. 425, Oxford; G. Tunley, J. Sherwin, W. Stanley, and W. Bowley, W.M., Abbey Lodge, No. 907, Burton-on-Trent; Alexander Davis, Somerset House and Inverness Lodge, No. 4; J. S. Staley, Lodge of Virtue, No. 177, Manchester; H. T. Wade, F. J. Ison, and G. Spreckley, Arboretum Lodge, No. 1,033, Derby, &c., &c.

The brethren proceeded, without Masonic costume, to Trinity Church, where divine service was performed by the Prov. Grand Chaplains; prayers being said by the Rev. Bro. Denton, the incumbent, and the sermon preached by the Rev. Bro. Picton, curate of St. George's, Leicester, from the text, "Six days shalt thou labour."

On returning to the Town Hall the Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in due form by the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, and with solemn prayer. The minutes of the last Grand Lodge, held at Leicester on the 14th ultimo, for the consecration of the Freemasons' Hall, were read and confirmed, and the Rev. Bro. Denton, who was then nominated as assistant Provincial Grand Chaplain, was invested.

The Prov. Grand Master reported that, in compliance with the request of the brethren, he had communicated to the Countess Ferrers the resolution of condolence, voted at the last meeting, on the decease of the late Bro. Earl Ferrers, Prov. J.G.W., and that he had received the following reply:—

"To the Right Hon. Earl Howe and the brethren of the Grand Masonic Lodge of Leicestershire.

"Gentlemen,—I have received with sincere pleasure your truly gratifying tribute of respect and sympathy on the death of my lamented husband, and the kind expressions with which you mention his memory will ever be cherished by his dear children and myself, with feelings of deep gratitude.

"Gentlemen, I beg to remain, yours most truly obliged,

"Stanton Harold, Sept. 20th, 1859. (Signed) A. FERRERS."

On the proposition of the D. Prov. Grand Master, the letter was ordered to be entered on the minutes.

The Prov. Grand Master having announced the special business for which the brethren had been called together, and in which personally he took so deep an interest, the Prov. Grand Lodge was closed.

Bro. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M., having taken the chair at the request of Lord Howe, proceeded to open the Lodge in the three degrees, Bros. Underwood and Windram officiating as the Wardens pro tem., and the Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge being ranged in the centre.

The petition and warrant having been read and the brethren having approved of the officers named therein, the D. Prov. Grand Master declared the members constituted into a regular Lodge. The ceremony of consecration followed; the first part of the consecration prayer being delivered by the Rev. Bro. Picton, and the second part by the Rev. Bro. Denton. The elements of consecration were carried in the procession by the D. Prov. G.M., and Bros. Underwood and Windram, P.Ms. of No. 348, and were presented to the Prov. G.M., who sprinkled them in the Lodge. During the ceremony, the anthems and musical responses, composed by Bro. Löhr for the dedication of the Freemasons' Hall at Leicester, and which have just been published by Chappell and Co., were performed, Bro. Gill, P. Prov. G. Org., presiding at the harmonium.

The consecration and dedication of the Lodge having been completed, the D. Prov. Grand Master installed Bro. Mammatt as W.M., who appointed and invested his officers as follows:—Bros. Warner (P.M.) S.W.; J. H. Bobart (P.M.) J.W.; Rev. J. Denton, Chaplain; H. T. Bobart, Sec.; Redfern (P.M.) S.D.; Mason, J.D.; W. Bobart, I.G.; Canner, Tyler.

A vote of thanks to the Rev. Bro. Picton for his excellent sermon having been passed, the Lodge was closed in harmony, after which the brethren adjourned to dinner at the Queen's Head Hotel, under the presidency of Earl Howe.

Several toasts were proposed and responded to, and the brethren separated after a most auspicious celebration of the consecration of their new Lodge, which has our best wishes for its prosperity and success.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge (No. 348).—The first meeting of this Lodge, after the summer recess, was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 5th instant. The following brethren were present—Bros. W. Kelly, P.M., and D. Prov. G.M.; Underwood, P.M.; Windram, P.M.; Gibson, P.M.; Gill, P.M.; Pettifer, P.M.; Morris, P.M., and Sec.; Crawford, P.M.; Kinder, P.M.; Cummings, S.W.; Nedham, J.W.; Morris, Bethell, Pennock, and Bembridge. Visitors—Bros. E. Benham, P.M., Middlesex Lodge, No. 167; Hardy, P.M.; Brewin, S.W.; Sheppard, J.W.; Johnson, Sec.; Bankart, P.M.; Lloyd, H. J. Davis, and Bithrey, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766. The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, Mr. L. A. Clarke was balloted for and duly accepted as a candidate for initiation. Bro. W. Jackson, having been desired to place himself in the centre of the Lodge, unaccompanied by the Deacons, underwent a highly creditable and satisfactory examination, after which, the Lodge having been opened in the second degree, he was passed thereto by Bro. Kinder, P.M., who presided in the absence of the W.M. Business having been resumed in the first degree, several resolutions were passed, among others a grant of £15 was made towards the fund for furnishing and decorating the hall, and an annual rent of £15 agreed to be paid for the use of the building. Bros. Crawford, P.M., and Cummings, S.W., were elected to serve with the W.M. on the permanent committee; and Bros. Windram, P.M.; Gill, P.M.; and Morris, were appointed purveyors, in conjunction with three brethren appointed by the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766. The resolution, pro forma, for the permanent removal of the Lodge from the Bell Hotel to the Freemasons' Hall, was on this, as on the former occasion, unable to be brought forward, owing to the unavoidable absence of the Worshipful Master. The formation of a Lodge of Instruction, for the joint benefit of the members of this Lodge, and of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766, was sanctioned. The D. Prov. Grand Master presented to the Lodge, in the name of the learned author, a copy of Dr. Hopkins's Lectures on Freemasonry, with which he had been entrusted by the worthy brother for that purpose, when in Jersey a few months since. A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Bro. Hopkins for his kindness, which the D. Prov. Grand Master was requested to convey to him. After the discussion of several matters of detail the Lodge was closed in harmony, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

PETERBOROUGH.—St. Peter's Lodge (No. 646).—At the last meeting the Lodge was opened in due form by the W.M., when the minutes of the previous Lodge were read and confirmed. Bro. Pooley having very satisfactorily answered the usual questions was then raised to the third degree. It was proposed by Bro. F. G. Buckle, seconded by Bro. Waitt, that Bro. Capt. Granville Wells, of the Lodge of Friendship, No. 345, Gibraltar, become a joining member. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren afterwards adjourned to refreshment.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

NORTH SHIELDS.—St. George's Lodge (No. 624).—We are glad to report that the Freemasons of North Shields have at length got a Masonic Hall in which they can hold their meetings without being subject to the caprice of "mine host," and the inconveniences of meeting in hotels. The brethren of St. George's Lodge have long felt the necessity of a private Hall, to obtain which a determined effort was made at the early part of this year, and by the united aid of the W.M. and brethren, together with the indefatigable exertions of Bro. William Twizell, P.M., as Treasurer, the "United Secession Chapel," Norfolk-street, was purchased, and plans prepared by Bro. Thomas Fenwick, P.M., for converting it into suitable rooms for Masonic purposes, besides arranging other portions of the property so as to make a pecuniary return to the members for the amounts invested in shares. We shall take an early opportunity of giving, in our "Architectural Chapter," a detailed account of the scheme by which the shares were got up, and would fraternally urge the consideration of similar schemes on the various members of Lodges throughout the country, feeling certain, that by the simple mode here adopted, Masonic Halls might be erected in many parts of this country. The alterations have been carried out by Bro. William Kelly, under the superintendence of Bro. T. Fenwick, P.M., the borough surveyor, and we have much pleasure in bearing testimony to the highly finished and satisfactory manner in which the work has been executed, reflecting great credit on all parties concerned. The building having been previously consecrated and dedicated to the G.A.O.T.U., the formal opening of the Masonic Hall took place on Monday, the 3rd of October, when the regular meeting of St. George's Lodge was held. The Lodge was opened in due form by the W.M., assisted by his officers and about sixty brethren. The Chaplain of the Lodge, Bro. the Rev. Dr. Jarbo, offered up a prayer specially prepared for the occasion. After the minutes of previous meetings were read, and several ballots taken, a deputation was announced from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Northumberland consisting of V.W. Bros. R. Medcalf, D. Prov. G.M.; John Hopper, P. Prov. J.G.W.; John Barker, Prov. G. Tress; Thomas Fenwick, Prov. G. Reg.; William Twizell, Prov. G.J.D.; Thomas Alexander, W.M., No. 793, Prov. G. Assist. Dir. of Cera.; Thos. Haswell, Prov. G. Org.; John M. Harrison, P. Prov. G. Org., and W. E. Franklin, P. Prov. G.S.B., who were duly received, and took their stations on the dais. After a candidate in attendance had been initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry, the V.W. Bro. John Walker Mayson, P.M., and P. Prov. G.S.W. delivered an eloquent and impressive inaugural address, which was listened to with marked attention and deservedly applauded. Amongst the brethren present in addition to those before-mentioned, we noticed Bro. R. Fisher, P.M., No. 586; Bro. A. Clapham, P.M., No. 56; Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, from Kentucky; Bro. J. G. Tulloch, P.M.; Bro. Robb, P.M.; Bro. W. Blackwood, P.M.; Bro. W. J. Kimpster, J.W., No. 56; Bro. G. Walker, J.W.; No. 614; Bro. W. Pearson, J.W., No. 793, and several brethren from the neighbouring towns. After several propositions of candidates for admission at next meeting, the Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to the Albion hotel, where refreshments had been prepared by Bro. Manning, of which about one hundred brethren partook under the able presidency of the W.M., Bro. Thomas Crawford, supported on his right by the V.W. D. Prov. G.M. of Northumberland, and surrounded by the members of the Provincial Grand Lodge; Bro. J. Poppelwell, S.W., occupied the vice-chair. Bros. Haswell and Harrison presided over the musical department, and the evening was spent with the perfect harmony which usually characterizes the meetings of the Craft.

A Lodge of Emergency was held on Friday, the 7th of October, and Bro. Elisha D. Cooke having kindly consented to deliver a lecture on the workings of Lodges in America, there was a good attendance of brethren. After a brother had been raised, Bro. Cooke explained the various workings, and delighted the brethren present by a lengthened explanation and beautiful illustrations of Masonry. A cordial vote of thanks was unanimously voted to him, after which the Lodge was closed in due form.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

HIGHBRIDGE.—Rural Philanthropic Lodge (No. 367).—The last meeting of the season of this most excellent Lodge was held at the Railway Hotel, Highbridge, on Friday, the 7th inst., Bro. Henry Bridges, P.M. and Secretary presiding. The Secretary having read a letter from the W.M. Bro. W. Harwood, explaining his absence, it was unanimously agreed that a letter of condolence be sent to him. The minutes of Lodge held August 12th, and the Emergency Lodge held on Sept. 16th were read and confirmed. The ballot was taken for Mr. J. D. Jarman, who being approved, was initiated into the Order. Bros. W. H. Castle and H. Leaker were then passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. On the motion of Bro. B. T. Allen, P.M., seconded by Bro. J. Duke, J.W., it was resolved, that Bro. William Clements, who was initiated on June 13th, 1809, in this Lodge, and had continued a member up to the present time, should be continued as an honorary member, in testimony of his long membership. Bro. Bridges then read a letter he had sent to the Grand Secretary on the 27th ultimo to obtain the Most Worshipful Grand Master's concurrence to the removal of the Lodge to the private room at the Railway Hotel, Highbridge, in the parish of Burnham, and also the answer received on the 1st instant from the Grand Secretary, containing the Most Worshipful Grand Master's permission to do so. It was unanimously agreed that the Secretary write to the Grand Secretary, Bro. W. G. Clarke thanking him for his prompt attention. The Lodge was then closed in due form and with solemn prayer, when the brethren, numbering twenty-eight, adjourned to refreshment; the evening was spent in a most agreeable manner, and the brethren separated at an early hour.

SUSSEX.

BRIGHTON.—Royal Oak Lodge (394).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting at the Old Ship Hotel, Brighton, on Tuesday evening, the 4th instant, the W.M. presiding, supported, with one unavoidable exception, by the whole of his officers. The Lodge having been opened, and the minutes of the previous meeting confirmed, a ballot for election and to join, was taken for six townsmen, the whole of whom were accepted. Mr. Muller, elected at the September Lodge, was then introduced and initiated into the secrets of Freemasonry. A proposition for membership was made.

The Lodge being closed, the brethren, forty-four in number, adjourned to the half-yearly banquet, the W.M. presiding, supported by several P.Ms. and the following visiting brethren:—Bro. G. E. Pocock, G.S.B. and Prov. G.S.; Bro. Chittenden, Nos. 338 and 1090; Bro. Corder, No. 338; Bro. Hearle, No. 338; Bro. J. Scott, W.M., No. 338. The banquet was all that could be desired, and the duties of chairman most ably performed by the W.M. Not the least agreeable feature was the compliments paid by Bro. Pocock and other visitors on the improved and excellent working of the Lodge. A very pleasant evening was passed, and the brethren separated at an early hour.

CHICHESTER.—Lodge of Union (No. 45).—At the monthly meeting of this Lodge, held at the Council Chamber, on Thursday the 6th instant, Bro. G. Molesworth, W.M., presiding, Bro. Percival Womham having given proof of his proficiency, was raised to the third degree by the W.M. Several communications were read by the W.M., among them one from the committee appointed to obtain aid for the Freemasons Magazine, this elicited the gratifying fact that in addition to three copies regularly forwarded from the office, several brethren were in the habit of receiving the Magazine through their regular booksellers. A letter from Bro. Farnfield, soliciting the Lodge to appoint a Steward for the First Annual Festival of the Royal Benevolent Fund, was referred to the next Lodge to ascertain if any Lodge of the province intended to send a Steward; the members of No. 45 being desirous to have a Steward for the next festival of the Boys School. The votes of the Lodge for the ensuing election of boys were given to a son of Bro. Pescott, a P.M. of the Lodge, and subscribing member for twenty-four years. Lodge closed in harmony.

YORKSHIRE (NORTH AND EAST).

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

ON Thursday, Oct. 6th, the meeting of the Prov. Grand Lodge was held at Richmond, in the rooms of the Lennox Lodge (No. 144), under the presidency of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M., who also retains the office of Provincial Grand Master in his own person.

The meeting was a numerous one, there being more than one hundred and fifty brethren present, including a number of visitors from Newcastle and the neighbourhood.

At three o'clock the Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in due form with solemn prayer. The Grand Master was supported by R.W. Bro. George Marwood, Dep. Prov. G.M.; Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, of Kentucky, U.S.; and Bro. E. D. Davis, from the Prov. Grand Lodge of Northumberland and Durham; the V.W. Bro. Rev. Edward Gambier Pym, M.A., Prov. G. Chaplain; and the V.W. Bro. Victor Williamson, Prov. G. Sec. of Oxfordshire.

The minutes of the last Prov. Grand Lodge being read and confirmed, the Most Worshipful Grand Master proceeded to appoint brethren to the various offices for the ensuing year, first observing, that with a view to confer as many honours as lay in his power amongst the distinguished Masons within the province over which he had the pleasure and honour to preside, he had concluded in future to change the Senior and Junior Grand Wardens in each year, and he had no doubt that by so doing the interest of the Craft would be better served than if the honours were confined to any individual.

There appearing no other business before the Prov. Grand Lodge, his lordship called on Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, of Kentucky, U.S., to explain the differences that exist between European and American Masonry.

Bro. Cooke hoped the brethren would not think he was dealing in flattery, but he felt that the privilege of addressing an assembly of Masons representing so much intelligence and high social position, was one that an older and more experienced Mason might be proud of. He did not rise to dictate what was right or wrong, nor would he even express an opinion of his own; he had not sufficient experience to justify him in any such assumption, but would simply state what the differences were, and leave them to be discussed by those who had a better right to approve or condemn. He then described many of the ceremonies. Bro. Cooke stated in the course of his remarks, that it was rarely if ever the case that Lodges met at hotels in the United States, but when not able to build halls of their own, they rented and furnished rooms, which were used for Masonic purposes alone. He added, that though the Masons of America were exceedingly anxious to establish a uniformity of work, yet the more intelligent members of the fraternity were devoting much time and attention to the principles and government of the Order, and endeavouring to unite in one great effort to purge the institution of its unworthy members, and by a constant watch at the outer door to prevent future impositions. He concluded by cautioning the Craft in their examination of Masons from America, expressing his gratitude for the honours the M.W. Grand Master had conferred upon him, and the kind attention the brethren had been pleased to give his remarks.

The Earl of Zetland thanked Bro. Cooke on behalf of himself and the Provincial Grand Lodge for the information imparted, and felt assured that the brethren present were obliged for the explanations.

The Prov. Grand Lodge was then closed in ancient form with solemn prayer.

At half-past six, about a hundred and thirty brethren sat down to dinner, at the King's Head Inn. The room was elegantly decorated with Masonic emblems, banners, and artistic devices in evergreens. A number of elegantly dressed ladies were present, for whom a collation was provided.

At the conclusion of the dinner, the M.W. Grand Master was loudly cheered on rising to propose "The health of her Majesty the Queen," which was drunk with much enthusiasm.

The toasts that followed were "The Prince Consort and the Royal Family," and "The Army and Navy." The M.W. Grand Master said that although we have not gallantry enough to admit the ladies to the secrets of our Order, yet they are always cherished in the true Mason's heart, and are ever welcome to our festive board, and called on the brethren to drink a bumper to "The Ladies," which was done in the warmest manner, followed by the old song, "To all good lasses, fill your glasses," &c., and the ladies withdrew amidst enthusiastic cheers.

The toasts which followed were, "The Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M.," "Lord Panmure, R.W.D.G.M.," "Bro. Marwood, R.W.D. Prov. G.M.," and the "Provincial Grand Officers, present and past."

The M.W. Grand Master next gave the health of Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, a distinguished brother from across the water, who he did not wish to go away without showing him proper respect. The health of Bro. Cooke, of Kentucky, was then drunk with the honours, and responded to by Bro. Cooke.

The healths of the "Visiting Brethren," Bro. Williamson, of Oxfordshire, and Bro. Davis, of Durham and Northumberland, was responded to by Bro. E. D. Davis, who, in the course of his remarks said that allusion had been made to the unwarranted attack upon the M.W. Grand Master, by a publication called the Masonic Observer; as for himself, he did not think it a matter to be much deplored, for as pure gold only received its due appreciation when contrasted with other metals, if Lord Zetland had never met with any of these attacks we should perhaps never have known how highly the Craft esteemed his real worth.

The toasts of the various "Lodges in the Province," responded to by the W.M. of the Humber Lodge, and that to "All poor and distressed Masons," brought this festival to a close at an advanced hour of the evening.

MARK MASONRY.

METROPOLITAN.

THISTLE LODGE (No. 3, under charter from the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters of England and Wales).—This Lodge commenced its autumnal sessions on Friday evening, October 7th, at Dick's Hotel, Fleet-street. Bro. Catterall occupied the chair with his usual ability as a Master, and with that tact as a chairman which he always evinces in any assembly over which he presides. The principal business of the evening was the election of a Master; the choice of the brethren conferring that dignity upon Bro. Figg, whose amiable and gentlemanlike bearing, and skill as a Mark Mason, ensure the good order and good working of the Lodge for the ensuing official year. Bros. Capt. Hamilton, Dr. Nolan, and Smith, (Editor of the Artisan), were appointed as an audit committee. The affairs of the Lodge are prosperous, but much will depend as to its future progress upon the appointment as officers by the incoming Master, of men of ability and regularity of attendance.

PROVINCIAL.

STONEHOUSE.—Lodge of Sincerity (No. 35).—On Monday, the 26th September, 1859, this new Mark Master's Lodge was opened in St. George's Hall, Stonehouse, Plymouth, under a warrant from the Grand Mark Lodge of England and Wales; on which occasion several Mark brethren were elected joining members, and four candidates were duly elected for and advanced to the degree. The ceremony was performed remarkably well by the W.M., Bro. Hunt, agreeably to the ritual furnished by the Mark Grand Lodge. Some old brethren of the Mark complain the modifications which have been introduced; one correspondent compares the ceremony, as performed on the evening of the 26th, to the play of Hamlet with the character of Hamlet omitted. The Lodge having been closed in form, the brethren subsequently adjourned to dinner, and after the usual Masonic toasts were given and responded to, success and prosperity to the Mark Lodge of Sincerity was drunk with the Masonic honours, and responded to most enthusiastically.

ROYAL ARCH.

INSTRUCTION.

MOUNT SINAI CHAPTER (No. 49).—This Chapter of Instruction continues to hold its weekly meetings at the Red Horse Tavern, Old Market-street. At our visit on Saturday evening last, we observed the very progress made by many of the Companions in working the ceremony of exaltation. The offices for the evening were filled as follows—Bro. Kirby, Z.; Collard, H.; Woodstock, J.; Taylor, P.S.; Queeley, &c. It has seldom fallen to our lot to witness such correct working, and we urgently recommend Royal Arch Masons anxious to improve in thisalted degree to attend this excellent Chapter of Instruction.

PROVINCIAL.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Gloucester Chapter (No. 152).—A convocation was holden on Thursday, October 6th, Comps. Martin, M.E.Z.; Bromley, H.; Hooper, J.; G. W. Clarke, Scribe E.; Kent, Scribe N.; Booth, Principal Soj.; King, P.Z.; Clark, P.Z.; Stebbing, P.Z.; Bemister Page, P.Z.; and several others, being present. The minutes of the former convocation were confirmed, and the several officers elected for the ensuing year. Bros. Col. Browne, Capt. Oldfield, and Lieut. Osborne were exalted to the supreme degree, Comp. J. R. Stebbing assisting in the ceremony. The lectures were beautifully delivered by Comps. Stebbing and Bemister. The Companions afterwards partook of the banquet, and an interchange of fraternal expression and good feeling closed a happy evening.

NORWICH.—Perseverance Chapter (No. 258).—The quarterly convocation was holden at the Rampant Horse Hotel, on the 14th ultimo, and was opened by Comps. W. Wicks, M.E.Z.; J. N. Dawbarn, H.; and E. Hyams, J.; Comp. Rev. S. Titlow officiated as E. The business consisted in exalting Bros. Colsey, Collinson, and Warnes. Comp. H. I. Mason, as P.S., was highly efficient in the duties which appertain to his very important office. The Chapter being closed, the Companions proceeded to refreshment, and passed the remainder of the evening in a most agreeable manner.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Chapter of Concord (No. 555).—This Chapter met at the Freemason's Hall, Southampton, on Wednesday, October 5th, Comp. H. Abraham presided as M.E.Z., assisted by Comps. Bemister, 2nd Principal, and Page as 3rd Principal; G. W. Clarke, Scribe E.; W. Barter, as Scribe N.; Booth, Principal Soj.; Passenger, T. P. Payn, and several other Companions. The minutes of the last convocation were confirmed. The several Companions proposed to fill the offices of the Chapter for the ensuing year, were duly and unanimously elected. Bro. H. Clarke, Sec. No. 152 and S.W. No. 462, was elected for exaltation; Bros. Clarke and Welch (S.W. 555) were afterwards exalted to the degree of Royal Arch Masons. Comp. Bemister delivered with great effect the historical lecture, and Comp. Abraham was equally successful in the mystical lecture. The delivery of the other lecture was deferred till the next meeting. The voting paper for the Girls School was signed, and directed to be sent to Comp. J. Rankin Stebbing, P.Z. Comp. Payne proposed, in very kind language, Comp. Perkins seconded, and it was unanimously resolved, "That in recognition of the honorary services of Comp. G. W. Clarke as Scribe E., from the opening of the Chapter to the present time, he be presented with a set of Provincial Grand Secretary's clothing, and that he be requested to accept it as a mark of appreciation of his assistance to the Chapter, and of the satisfaction felt on his appointment to the important office of Prov. Grand Secretary." The Companions then adjourned to refreshment, and closed the evening in harmony.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

METROPOLITAN.

KEMEYS TYNTE ENCAMPMENT.—An Encampment was holden on Friday, September 30th, at Bro. De Grey's, the Freemasons' Tavern, Woolwich, under the presidency of Sir Knt. Major Henry Clerk, E.C., assisted by Sir Knt. J. How, as 1st Capt.; Sir Knt. Figg, 2nd Capt.; the V.E. Fr. Dr. Hinxman, Prov. Grand Commander, as Prelate; Sir Knts. Laird, Taylor, W. Smith, and others. There was no business, as some Companions who had been balloted for and elected for installation did not appear. The Eminent Commander therefore worked the ceremony of installation to exercise his officers. The furniture and fittings of this Encampment are in most perfect order; and we were much gratified by an inspection of a very handsome present made to it by the E. C., Major Clerk; the donation consists of a silver gilt salver and a pair of cups, the bowls being glass and the stems of silver gilt; the cup of refreshment bearing Craft emblems, and the cup of memory those of the Templars.

PROVINCIAL.

PLYMOUTH.—Loyal Brunswick Encampment.—The regular quarterly meeting of this Encampment was held in the Freemasons' Chapter Room, St. George's Hall, Stonehouse, Plymouth, on Friday, the 23rd September, 1859, when Companion S. F. Brizzi, of Royal Arch Chapter Fidelity, No. 3, was duly installed a Knight of the Order.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Gloster Encampment.—This Encampment met on Thursday, September 30th. The Eminent Commander, Sir Knight Bromley, presided, assisted by Sir Knts. H. Clark, 1st Captain; J. T. Enright, 2nd Captain; J. R. Stebbing, Prelate; G. W. Clarke, Registrar; Geo. Lungley, and others. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Upon the motion of the Registrar, Sir Knts. Stebbing, H. Clarke, and Lungley, were appointed a committee to make arrangements for completing the equipment of the Encampment, prior to the next meeting. Some beautiful charge glasses were placed on the banquet table, being a sample of a set about to be presented to the Southampton Lodge by Sir Knt. Stebbing, and were greatly admired. The muster roll contains just double the number of members that belonged to the Encampment last year, which is a pleasing sign of the increasing interest taken in this degree.

INDIA.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE OF BENGAL.

A QUARTERLY communication of the District Grand Lodge of Bengal was holden at the Freemasons' Hall, on Friday, the 24th June, 1859, at which were present the R.W. Bros. John J. L. Hoff, D. Prov. G.M., as Prov. G.M.; Philip W. LeGeyt, P. Prov. G.M. of Western India; William Clark, Prov. S.G.W.; John B. Roberts, Prov. J.G.W.; Duncan Monteith, P. Prov. S.G.W.; William J. Judge, P. Prov. J.G.W.; John G. Llewellyn, P. Prov. J.G.W.; William H. Hoff, Prov. G. Sec.; Frederick Jennings, Prov. S.G.D.; Charles F. Tonnerre, Prov. J.G.D.; Thomas Jones, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Henry Fraser, P. Prov. G. Supt. of Works; William Handford, Assist. Prov. G. Dir. of Cers., as Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Alexander Speirs, as Prov. G.S.B.; John E. Clinger, Prov. G. Org.; Louis A. Emanuel, P. Prov. G. Org.; Joseph K. Hamilton, Prov. G. Purst.; and the representatives of various Lodges.

The District Grand Lodge was opened in form, and the minutes of the quarterly communication of the 21st March, 1859, read and confirmed.

The Deputy Prov. Grand Master informed the District Grand Lodge that Freemasonry was recovering from the injuries which it had sustained in the upper provinces of Bengal during the mutiny. Lodge True Brothers, No. 609, was again working at Dinapore; and Lodge Morning Star, No. 810, which had been quenched immediately after its reappearance previous to the disturbances, had again risen in December last, and a new warrant of confirmation had been procured for it from England. The warrant of the new Lodge, Hope and Perseverance, No. 1,084, at Lahore, had also been received from England, and forwarded to the Master. This Lodge was already so strong, that a Royal Arch Chapter was about to be attached to it.

The Deputy Prov. Grand Master announced his intention of conferring the rank of P. Prov. J.G.W. on W. Bro. H. D. Sandeman, Master of Lodge Hope and Perseverance, No. 1,084, in consideration of the valuable services rendered by him in the cause of Freemasonry in this province, and of the high estimation in which he was held in the Craft.

The Prov. Grand Secretary read the following letter from the Secretary to the Calcutta Freemasons' Hall Building Committee:—"Dear Sir and V.W. Brother,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st inst., and in reply to state for the information of the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master, that the committee appointed to submit a scheme for the erection of a Masonic Hall, have held several meetings on that subject, and that a minute plan, showing the description of the building they would recommend, its probable cost, as well as a scheme for raising the necessary funds, had been drawn up several months ago; but owing to a suggestion of one of the members of the committee to adorn the building with a balcony covered with corrugated iron, and dispense with the old fashioned verandah, it was necessary to make a reference to England, in order to ascertain the probable cost of the material which would be required for that purpose. Until a reply to that reference is received, the committee regret they shall not be able to submit the report in question; but they hope to be in a position of doing so before the third quarterly meeting of the Prov. Grand Lodge.—I am, dear Sir and V.W. Brother, yours fraternally, A. M. DOWLEANS, Secretary Freemasons' Hall Committee."

The Deputy Prov. Grand Master stated that he had confirmed the exclusion, from their respective Lodges, of brethren who would neither pay the arrears of their dues, nor appear in Lodge when summoned to show cause why they should not be excluded.

The Prov. Grand Secretary then read a letter from the Master of Lodge Humility with Fortitude, No. 279, relative to "J. Hardy alias Richard Henry Jones," who had been found guilty of having "forged and uttered a cheque on the Government Savings Bank for Rupees 230, in the name of James Stephen Morton," and also on a charge of "theft of some wearing apparel, the property of the said Morton," and sentenced to six years' penal servitude, and who it appeared had in April, 1858, been made a Mason in Lodge Humility with Fortitude.

On a motion made by W. Bro. Thos. Jones, Prov. G. Supt. of Works, seconded by W. Bro. A. Speirs, P.M., Lodge No. 1,058, with reference to the above letter, Richard Henry Jones was expelled from Freemasonry, and formal proclamation of his expulsion was made by the Prov. Grand Pursuivant.

The Prov. Grand Secretary then read the following report of the Finance Committee on the audit of the Prov. Grand Treasurer's accounts:—"District Grand Lodge—Balance of first quarter of 1859, £3,130 13s. 8d.; receipts during the second quarter, £1,111 14s.; disbursements during the second quarter, £885 7s. 1d.; balance in hand, £3,357 4s. 7d. Fund of Benevolence—Balance of first quarter of 1859, £1,852 10s. 5d.; receipts during the second quarter, £560; disbursements during the second quarter, £531; balance in hand, £1,881 10s. 5d."

On a motion made by W. Bro. F. Jennings, P.S.G.D., seconded by W. Bro. R. T. Callan, P.G. Steward, the Provincial Grand Treasurer's accounts, as audited, were passed.

It was moved by R.W. Bro. W. Clark, P.S.G.W., seconded by W. Bro. A. Speirs, that Rs. 491-10-3, expended on account of banquets in excess of the Grand Officers' quarterly payments, in consequence of the Grand Officers' Fund being deprived of assistance from patent fees, whilst the representatives of Lodges were continued to be received as guests, should be made up by a donation from the Fund of the District Grand Lodge.

W. Bro. W. Kirkpatrick, P.M. Lodge, No. 740, seconded by Bro. E. M. Rebeiro, J.W., Lodge No. 740, moved the following amendment:—"That the motion be postponed, and that the Resolution of the 28th December, 1857, which provides the mode in which the deficiency shall be made up, be carried out."

A discussion ensued regarding the banquet, which was followed by some very stormy proceedings and recrimination, caused by the publication of some letters in the Indian newspapers referring to Masonry in India, and particularly in that Prov. G. Lodge. Some brethren were present who were supposed to have communicated the information in question and to have originated the offensive comments in the journals; these brethren were taken to task in a style which showed that, unfortunately, strong language in Grand Lodge is not confined to Europe, but that coarseness and vituperation unworthy of gentlemen and of Masons, are to be found on both sides of the water. At the same time it cannot be denied that if the assertions made against these brethren be susceptible of proof, they have been guilty of most reprehensible conduct.

The Provincial Grand Secretary read, for the information of the District Grand Lodge, a letter addressed by the D. Prov. G.M., to the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of England, dated 3rd June, regarding a complaint made by Lodge Marine, No. 282, that an insult had been offered to the Past Master of that Lodge by the Scottish Lodge St. David in the East, and at the same time referring to the evils of a mixed jurisdiction in a Province.

The Deputy Provincial Grand Master drew the attention of the Masters of the Lodges to the 12th of the "Antient Charges," under which they had promised their attendance at the communications and committees of the District Grand Lodge.

There being no further business, the District Grand Lodge was closed in form.

AMERICA.

GRAND LODGE OF NEBRASKA.

THE Grand Lodge of Nebraska held its annual communication on the 14th June last. All of the subordinate Lodges in the jurisdiction, six in number, were represented. The M.W. Grand Master, Robert C. Jordan, delivered an able and instructive address. He makes some very sensible and judicious remarks upon the subject of there having been "no increase in the number of Lodges during the past year." He mentions that brethren in different portions of the territory had in contemplation the forming of three new Lodges, but he recommends a postponement of action in the matter.

GRAND LODGE OF WISCONSIN.

THE Grand Lodge of Wisconsin held its annual communication on June last. Eighty-four subordinate Lodges were represented. The M.W. Grand Master, Luther M. Tracy, read his annual address. He represents that peace and harmony prevailed among the brethren throughout the jurisdiction, and that at "no time since the organization of Grand Lodge has there been greater caution used in the selection of materials." He granted eleven dispensations for new Lodges, ten of which were granted charters, and the dispensation of the other was continued for another year. There are 107 Lodges in the jurisdiction, having a total membership of 3,363 Master Masons, 200 Fellow Crafts, and 311 Entered Apprentice Masons.

OHIO.

MASONRY in Cleveland is in a fine and flourishing condition. We have two blue Lodges, the Cleveland City, No. 15, of which Bro. Chas. A. Woodward is W.M., and Iris Lodge, No. 229, Bro. G. H. Burt, W.M., both of which for the last few months have been as busy as possible, holding meetings about every week, and we are glad to know that almost every candidate who has knocked at the door has been found worthy and well qualified. Webb Chapter, No. 14, of R.A.M., has also been busy, for, as the beauties of Masonry are revealed to the candidate he seeks for further light, and is desirous of climbing to the topmost round in the ladder ere he can relinquish his desire for more. Never has Masonry been in so flourishing a condition in this city as at the present time, and we sincerely believe that if the leading members of both Lodges will exercise due caution in the selection of candidates, seeing that none are permitted to enter but those who are properly vouched for and whose character and standing, like Caesar's wife, is above suspicion, then will Masonry continue to flourish for evermore.

Obituary.

THE LATE BRO. COLONEL THOMAS WILDMAN, PROVINCIAL GRAND MASTER OF NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

A BROTHER who forwards an occasional contribution to the Magazine thus alludes to the demise of the late highly esteemed Prov. G.M. of Notts:—"Our able chief has been summoned by the Grand Master of all to appear in his celestial Lodge, to undergo the ordeal, there to dwell for ever. A void has been created in the Craft in this neighbourhood not easily filled up. One has left us who loved Masonry for Masonry's sake. The sad event took place early on the morning of Tuesday, the 20th ultimo, at Newstead Abbey. Bro. Colonel Thomas Wildman was born August 27th, 1787, and for a period of nearly forty years enjoyed the esteem of the Free and Accepted Masons, having presided over the province of Nottinghamshire as Provincial Grand Master since 1824. Our deceased brother received his appointment and patent from the late Grand Master his royal highness the Duke of Sussex, whose friendship was esteemed by the deceased as one of the highest honours of his life. Although Masonry does not now stand very high in our province, still an immense deal of work has been done since Colonel Wildman's appointment. When he succeeded Sir John Borlase Warren in the high capacity of Prov. G.M., he found that Masonry had fallen into decay; he laboured hard, and was strenuously seconded in the good work by many able Craftsmen, and three additional Lodges were consecrated—the Commercial, No. 594, Nottingham; the Marquis of Granby, No. 658, Eastwood; and the Forest, No. 840, Mansfield);—and the science raised to a greater eminence in the province than it had been before. Those who have had the pleasure of co-operating with our brother in the solemn ceremonies of the Craft can well remember the deep feeling, earnest voice, and impressive manner with which he initiated the neophyte into the mysteries of our Order; and those who have noticed his courteous bearing to all, must say he was a true and upright Mason; his name ever being a stereotyped illustration of friendship, kindness, and brotherly love. So highly were his merits appreciated by the Craft, that they presented him with a magnificent testimonial on the 7th December, 1854. It consisted of a silver epergne, valued at two hundred guineas. The presentation took place at a banquet held at the Exchange Hall, Nottingham, at which our brother, the late Earl of Scarborough presided. At that festival Bro. Thomas Close, Prov. Grand Treasurer, pronounced a high but well deserved eulogium on the colonel's life and qualities.

Although our deceased brother had been suffering lately for many months from the gout, a disease which left no hope of his complete restoration to health, still there were no apprehensions of any immediate danger. On the 19th (the day preceding his decease) he wrote a letter to Bro. Percy, D. Prov. G.M., inviting him to Newstead for a day's shooting. Half an hour before that letter arrived in due course by mail, a special messenger came to inform him of the decease of his chief. The colonel, it appears, went to bed as usual on the evening of the 19th, but felt nothing inconvenient until twelve o'clock, when he experienced a difficulty in breathing. A messenger was instantly despatched for Bro. Hart, surgeon, of Mansfield, who promptly attended, but his spirit had fled. He passed away as a Mason should die, as calmly as he had lived. The disease had flown to his heart, and death was almost instantaneous.

Col. Wildman leaves a widow but no family, and was seventy-two years of age. Our esteemed brother entered the army in the year 1808 in the 9th Lancers, but subsequently exchanged into the 7th Hussars, and during that and the following year served with his regiment in Spain under Sir John Moore. He afterwards participated in all the actions in which his regiment was engaged in the Peninsula, in 1813-14, and was aide de camp to the Marquis of Anglesey at the battle of Waterloo. In the year 1818 he became the purchaser of Newstead Abbey, the ancestral estate of the Byrons, at a cost of £100,000. He retired from the army in 1837, and devoted himself to the duties of a country gentleman, in addition to which it was his greatest anxiety to preserve the ancient associations of Newstead. His kindness in throwing open this romantic spot at all times, often afforded the greatest delight to thousands of pleasure seekers and tourists; many pilgrims having gone thousands of miles to wander over the grounds and home of the poet.

The funeral took place on Tuesday, the 27th, the place of interment being Mansfield Cemetery. In consequence of the family wishing it to be as private as possible, it was considered more respectful for the Craft not to intrude upon the solemnities as a body. The procession left the Abbey between ten and eleven o'clock, and the body was received by the Rev. L. Jackson (private chaplain to the deceased), Prov. G. Chaplain and incumbent of Hucknall Torkard, who officiated. As a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, nearly all the factories and shops were closed in Mansfield, and the business premises of the brotherhood in Nottingham were partially closed.

THE LATE BRO. BARNES.

At the meeting of the Committee of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, held at the Grand Secretary's offices on Wednesday, October 12, Bro. Udall in the chair, the minutes of the last meeting having been read, Bro. Farnfield, the Secretary, called the attention of the committee to the loss which the institution had sustained by the death of Bro. Barnes, a Vice President, and one of the most active members of the committee, upon which it was resolved unanimously, "That this committee deeply regret the loss this institution has sustained by the lamented decease of our well beloved brother John Barnes, a Vice President, who for many years has promoted its general welfare and usefulness, both by his liberality and the time he has devoted to its interests whilst serving as a member of the committee of management; at the same time they desire to express their sympathy and condolence with his family in their sad bereavement." Resolved unanimously, "That the secretary be directed to forward a copy of the foregoing resolution to the father of the late Bro. John Barnes."

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty and her family continue all in good health, and it is announced that they will leave Balmoral this week. The Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales have been deer stalking, while we learn that the queen has made the acquaintance of Ben Muick Dhui and the Bettie of Gairn, besides excursions to Balloch, Buie, Loch Bullgich, Larich, Craig, Spanie, and various other picturesque localities with unpronounceable names. Her majesty returns to Windsor previous to her departure for Wales.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor and Empress of the French arrived in Bordeaux on Monday evening. They were most enthusiastically received, and general rejoicings took place in the city. The Cardinal Archbishop of Bordeaux, having addressed the Emperor Napoleon on his arrival in that city, in doing which he alluded to the temporal power of the pope, the emperor said he hoped that "a new era of glory will rise for the church on the day when every one will share his conviction that the temporal power of the pope is not opposed to the liberty and independence of Italy. The government which was the means of restoring the holy father to the pontifical throne would only give utterance to such respectful counsels as were dictated by sincere devotedness to the interests of his holiness, but his majesty cannot but be alarmed about the day, which is not far distant, when Rome will be evacuated by our troops, for Europe will not allow that the occupation of Rome by the French troops, which has lasted for ten years, should be prolonged indefinitely. When our army shall be withdrawn, what will it leave behind—anarchy, terror, or peace? These are questions the importance of which cannot escape any one. At the present time, in order to resolve these questions, it is necessary, instead of appealing to the ardent passions of the people, to search with calmness for the truth, to pray to Providence to enlighten the people as well as the sovereigns upon the wise fulfilment of their rights, and that they may well understand their duties." A new pamphlet has made its appearance in Paris, entitled, "The Emperor Napoleon III. and France." It is from the pen of M. de Girardin. The writer boldly pleads for more liberty and less governing. "Let everything," says the celebrated journalist, "be free."—The pope has rather ominously absented himself from Rome. "He will prolong his stay at Castel Gandolfo," we are told, "on account of the agitation reigning in Rome." A telegram from Rome says, that after the departure of the Pope a demonstration took place in honour of the Sardinian ambassador. Another demonstration is expected when the ambassador leaves.—A telegram from Paris, dated October 8, states that the French consul at Parma had received orders from his government to leave his post unless prompt justice is done and exemplary chastisement inflicted on the murderers of Colonel Anviti. Active measures are being taken to inflict condign punishment on the assassins of Colonel Anviti at Parma. The principal parties implicated have been arrested.—Garibaldi has issued a stirring appeal to the people of Lombardy. The hour of a new struggle, he says, is at hand.—Letters from Madrid report that the Spanish consul at Tangiers had received orders to leave his post on the 15th of October, and that hostilities would commence on the 18th should pending disputes not be arranged.—The conferences at Zurich, we are informed by telegram, make no progress. The several powers seem as far off as ever from agreement. Paris correspondents state that the impression there is general that the signatures to the treaty will shortly be affixed.—Additional discoveries have been made from Constantinople concerning the conspiracy, and it is asserted that incendiary machines have been discovered which were destined to burn the European quarter of the town. The ambassadors had held deliberations as to what measures should be recommended for public safety. Two of the conspirators brought before the Sultan proclaimed boldly the public wrong they conspired to redress, and accused the government of wasteful extravagance, of which the people and the army were the victims. The Grand Vizier had offered his resignation, but it had been refused, but evident disunion reigned among the ministry, and dissolution imminent. The Sultan has ordered the Viceroy of Egypt to oppose the continuation of the works at the Suez Canal. The Persia has arrived at Liverpool, bringing advices from New York to September 28, and from British Columbia to August 22. Colonel Rankin, an American official, had arrived at Washington from San Juan. According to Washington advices he stated that General Harney was instigated to occupy San Juan by Boundary Commissioner Campbell, who asserted that the American title was unquestionable. Harney, in a reply to Governor Douglas's protest, intimated that he landed his troops to protect American citizens from the insults and indignities of the British authorities of Vancouver's Island and the Hudson's Bay Company, who had seized an American citizen and forcibly transported him to Vancouver for trial. Governor Douglas had replied to Harney's note alluded to above, denying absolutely that there had been any outrage upon an American citizen. The governor's letter, which was a very temperate one, calls upon Harney to withdraw his troops, whose presence on the island was likely to complicate affairs.

INDIA AND CHINA.—By the telegrams in anticipation of the overland mail we learn from Calcutta that a large public meeting had been held at Calcutta to petition parliament for an inquiry into the affairs of India on the spot. The bill taxing trades and professions has passed its second reading, and been referred to a select committee. The Chamber of Commerce and other bodies have petitioned against it. An act has been passed enabling the Governor General to leave Calcutta for the north west, retaining full powers, for seven months. The clause in the Criminal Procedure Bill rendering Europeans liable to preliminary investigation before native magistrates, has been successfully resisted. The rebels on the Nepal frontier are still troublesome. Some of the discharged Europeans have already sailed from Calcutta. The behaviour of all has been good. — There is news from China to the 10th August. The Peiho and Grand Canal are blockaded by the British and French ships of war. Captain Vansittart, of the Magicienne, died on the 17th July; Admiral Hope is in a precarious state, and will have to be invalided. The American minister was still negotiating about proceeding to Peking. Ching-King-Kang, the celebrated leader of the rebels, has been killed by his own people.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The Social Science Conference has commenced its sittings at Bradford. The Bishop of Ripon preached the preliminary sermon, and Lords Shaftesbury and Brougham delivered addresses. The preliminary meeting of the International Association was also held. This body is presided over by M. Chevalier, member of the council of state of France. In the sections papers have been read on legal and social reform, one of these by Vice-Chancellor Page Wood, and another, on chancery reform, by Mr. Daniel, Q.C. The statistics of intemperance have also, of course, received a large share of attention. — We were in hopes that to-day we should have been enabled to announce a settlement of the dispute in the building trades; but as the masters' meeting was strictly secret, and as we were unable to ascertain the result of their deliberations, it is not in our power to state whether the employers decided upon withdrawing the "declaration." — The deaths last week were nearly a hundred below the average rate. The mortality from diarrhoea declined to 84, but there were 95 fatal cases of scarlatina and 11 of diphtheria; 22 children and 6 adults died from small pox. The total of deaths was 996, and of births 1757. The mortality returns for the week for the city are above the average of the last four years, the number of deaths having been 58. — The City Commissioners of Sewers sat this week at Guildhall. A report was agreed to for granting £700 for fixing charcoal purifiers in the air shafts of the principal city sewers, to be carried up above the houses. The attention of the court was called to the alleged irregularity in clearing away blood and offal from the slaughter-houses in Newgate-market, and the inspector of the district was ordered to summon in future all offending parties. Measures were also ordered to be taken to get rid of the existing nuisances in Leadenhall-market. Some conversation then took place respecting the difference between the mode of visiting common lodging-houses in the city and that in the metropolitan districts; but the chairman (Mr. Deputy Christie) reminded the court that there was no motion before it, and the matter dropped. — The Great Eastern arrived at Holyhead a little before four on Monday afternoon. She is reported to have behaved well during the passage. Judging from her performances, she would, it is thought, occupy thirty-six days to Melbourne. The vessel will, it is said, be at her present anchorage on Christmas Day. Her majesty will pay a visit to the great ship on the 17th or 19th inst. — The official inquiry respecting the loss of the Peninsular and Oriental steam ship Alma, in the Red Sea, was proceeded with at Greenwich on Tuesday. Sir John Bowring, who was a passenger on board at the time of the wreck, gave it as his opinion that from the clearness of the night the reef on which the vessel struck ought to have been descried at a distance of at least two hundred yards. Opposed to Sir John's evidence, however, was that of Mr. Gisborne, C.E., also a passenger, who thought the reef could not have been visible at that distance. A reexamination of the officers of the Alma was also made. — Mr. Macqueen, the revising barrister, has held a second court for the revision of the lists of voters for the city of Westminster, which brought the proceedings to a close. A considerable number of objections and new claims were made by the radicals, but none on behalf of the conservatives. The total gain in the conservative interest up to this time on the West Kent lists is two hundred and twenty-one. — At the Court of Bankruptcy, the case of J. E. Buller, money scrivener, of Lincoln's-inn-Fields, was brought under consideration, and an adjournment was ordered for two months, protection being afforded to the bankrupt, who surrendered in the course of the proceedings. His debts and liabilities are extremely heavy; but, according to his own estimate, the assets will eventually liquidate the whole of the claims that can be sustained against him. — From Leeds we have a painful narrative of an attempted wife murder. The husband has been apprehended. — Another of those colliery explosions which are now becoming so common has occurred. A poor fellow, whose carelessness apparently was the cause of the accident, has been killed by the explosion. — A horrible narrative of drunkenness and murder comes from the Potteries district. A number of pothouse scamps, not being able any longer to drink in a public house, got drunk in a field, and a brutal quarrel was the result, one of the drunken brutes being mortally stabbed by one of his companions. — John Norris, of De Beauvoir road, Kingsland, was charged before Mr. D'Eyncourt, at Worship Street, with forging and uttering certain receipts for the payment of money. Evidence was adduced to show that the alleged frauds had been committed on an estate of which the prisoner was sole executor. The prisoner was committed for trial. — An operative engineer named Robert Ritson was fined 25s., by Mr. Elliott, at Lambeth police court, for assaulting a fellow workman, the reason for such assault being that the complainant had presumed to do rather more work than Mr. Robert Ritson himself felt inclined to do. — Outrages on machinery employed in productive industry have been but too common in the neighbourhood of Sheffield of late. Another, which it is to be feared must be placed in this class, was perpetrated at an early hour on Tuesday morning in the little village of Eckington, when the scythe manufactory of Mr. Keeton was shattered to pieces by the explosion of a barrel of gunpowder, which had been conveyed into the premises. It is to be hoped that speedy detection and condign punishment will follow the perpetrators of this atrocity. — Yesterday transactions in the funds created a partial rise, but it was not supported, and Consols eventually left off 95½ for money and account. During the hours of business, however, bargains were effected at 96. Lower prices from Paris, and the apprehension of fresh difficulties between Louis Napoleon and the King of Sardinia caused speculative sales to be freely supported just before the close of the market.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

7 SPECIAL NOTICE.—A few proofs of the portrait of the Earl of Zetland (presented with our number of this day), on large paper, for framing, may be had, price 3s. each, India proofs 5s. each.

"H. D."—Put not your trust in books.

"G. C."—Your question shall be answered in extenso.

"A CORRESPONDENT," York.—Next week.

"J. O. E."—It is not imperative for the first Master of a Lodge to be a Past Master or even a Past Warden. The M.W. Grand Master can appoint, by the warrant constituting the Lodge, any Master Mason as the first Worshipful Master.

"O. P. Q."—Everything being done in due form, we should say a warrant for a new Lodge might be obtained in a fortnight or three weeks at farthest, it depending in some measure upon what part of the kingdom the Grand Master and the Deputy Grand Master may be in, the warrant requiring their signatures.

"J. W."—The advertisement in the Manchester Examiner, "Wanted to purchase a Craft Warrant," is illegal and unmasonic. Brethren would not be allowed to work under a warrant so obtained if it came to the knowledge of the Board of General Purposes, and it must do so if the returns are properly examined in the Grand Secretary's office.

"T. G."—Trust not in printed rituals.

"G. F."—1. It is most irregular to pass a strange brother without notice, and without a request from the W.M. of his mother Lodge.

2. The Lodge having been regularly opened in the various degrees, can be resumed as convenience may require without the ceremony of closing and reopening. At least that is the practice.

3. A brother may be proposed as a joining member whilst only a Fellow Craft.

4. An Entered Apprentice should not sit on the dais during Lodge business; but there is no absolute law against it.

5. It is not proper to confer a degree on a brother from another Lodge without a request from the W.M., unless indeed he has been initiated in a distant part of the world, with which it may be difficult to communicate, and he hold a Grand Lodge certificate.

6. If reports of the proceedings at your Lodge do not appear in the Freemasons' Magazine it is because they are not supplied to us, and it would be impossible for us to send reporters to private Lodge meetings a distance of 200 miles or more.

7. We do not make up our list of country appointments from the Calendar, but from returns made to us by the Lodges. Those which have not made returns are not noticed.

"J. M." is thanked for his photograph of the Masonic Hall, Newport, Monmouthshire. It is certainly a very elegant building.

THE PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF WEST YORKSHIRE.—In consequence of the pressure upon our columns, and the very imperfect report we have received, we postpone our account of the laying of the foundation stone of the Mechanics' Institution at Huddersfield.

"P. M., No. 655."—We can only imagine that the Lodge had been duly expunged before any attempt was made to resuscitate it by the brethren who were prepared to pay the fees. When a Lodge is once removed from the roll, it cannot be replaced. The Lodge was expunged in 1853, and the new warrant (No. 1073) for a Lodge of the same name, only obtained in the past year; and it was not expunged until the brethren had been repeatedly urged to make a return to Grand Lodge, and work it.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1859.

CLASSICAL THEOLOGY.—V.

JUPITER AND JULY.

IN the collective arrangement of the heathen mythology the gods were divided into four classes, the celestial, the terrestrial, the subterranean, and the oceanian.* But these again were severally sub-divided. Yet still, there was another description of them which might be considered as a separate class, although, strictly speaking, they formed three orders of themselves under their denomination of the second class. Thus the select, or superior gods, to whom was paid the highest worship, were styled Dii Majorum Gentium. Of these were the twelve most exalted, principal, and ruling Dii, called Concentes or the Dii Magni. These dignities were bestowed upon them because in all affairs of great moment, deliberation, and importance they were admitted to the confidence and council of Jupiter in his government of the universe. Genius was made a heavenly god; and, oddly enough, so was Bacchus, and Janus also. Including Pluto, Sol, as distinguished from the sun god, and Luna made distinct from the moon goddess, with Tellus and Saturnus—these eight complete the twenty which is the total of all the select and superior deities of the ancients.

The next in rank were the Dii Minorum Gentium, that is, gods translated from this earth into heaven, as Tully observes, "by right of their own meritorious qualities," for which reason they are also called, as we have observed, Adscripti dii, Patritii and Semidei; of these, in the manner described by Ovid, Æneas, by his mother Venus, was made a god.

"Lustratum genitrix divino corpore odore
Unxit, et ambrosia cum dulci nectare mixta Contigit os," &c.

"With divine odours, and sacred ambrosia mixed with rich nectar, he purified his body and deified him."

The next in order, among the ancient deities were the Minuti, more frequently called Semones, the Vesci, and the Miscellanei; these likewise were sometimes styled Patellari after the name of certain small pans in which sacrifices were offered to the gods which were thought to appease and please them. Their merits although sufficiently great to elevate them in the estimation of the people to a superior rank to merely mortal men were, nevertheless, still found wanting in the scale to advance them to a place in heaven.

To these again were joined an infinity of other deities, called Novensiles; such as by command of Tatius, the king, the Sabines brought to Rome; and to these, as some believe, we must add the gods and goddesses of conquered countries.

Lastly, to this vast class we must not neglect to add the Divi Penates, Penetrales, or secret spirits or gods, composing again three orders. So mighty were these, that one might suppose them to comprehend all the other orders; to which, indeed, they were thought to belong. As the great gods—"the gods of the country"—they ruled over kings and kingdoms; they watched over communities and cities; and, "as the small gods," they presided over particular houses and families. Then, not the least, and more truly as opposites to the deities of the cardinal vices, were those of the cardinal virtues, "through whose guidance, and aiding by our means," remarks Tully, in his perceptive way, "men are advanced to heaven." Some indeed, compute Minerva, and Jupiter himself among the Penates. But a prosopopæia, or personification, may substitute but cannot substantiate a personality or anti-type—Jupiter in what manner soever disguised to represent Jehovah, could only be a counterfeit.

In pantheology or mythistology, this plural rendering of gods, as in the Bible, has the significancy of spirits. God himself is represented by his holy angels. Satan himself is a person of numbers. Beel, Belzemen, Beelzebub, and Baal are all names of Jupiter, from Belus; but, as the son of

* The constituent elements of Aristotle. As here ranked, it signified that the deities were of, or belonging to, the air, the earth, the fire, and the water.

Saturn, we can trace him to the Satan called the Serpent, with as certain a genealogy as any can tag him to Nimrod or to Noah. We admit that his Egyptian name, 'Αμοῦν, was derived from the African 'Αμμον, or Hammon, in which respect, by a wonderful congruity of all accounts he was the first postdiluvian who caused an idol to be set up.*

The learned of antient ages have believed that up to the time of Noah, and the traditional confusion of tongues, the inhabitants of the earth spoke one language—or as it is more plainly expressed in the commencement of Genesis xi., "The whole earth was of one language, and of one speech;" some indeed go so far as to assert that all beasts understood this language. The same was said of the Saturnian age, in which one speech was common to men and brutes; then was no servitude, as we are assured by Ausonius, but perfect liberty prevailed. It may have been so—we do not venture to say it was, or it was not, or it may be so again. All that we require to know about it is—how "the serpent was more subtil" (cunning, nitid, thin, or rare), "than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." He said unto the woman, "Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" We have therefore a just right to presume that this animal could speak better than a parrot; or any other, not human, tangible thing; and we are able to premise that it could glide about in a tree and also move about erectly. No doubt then but these facile and fluent qualifications induced Satan to assume the serpent, or to make use of him as a ready factitious instrument to his hand.† At all events, something in the shape of a serpent we are told tempted the woman to violate God's orders, to eat of the only tree that was not then to be eaten of, the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, by which beguilement hell, death, and the devil became a part of our religious system. The consequences of the first disobedience to God's instructions were very terrible we all know. The tree of life was to remain in the paradise from whence man was driven, and a guard of one of the highest order of angels‡ was set upon it to prevent him from partaking of it. But Adam, with his eyes supernaturally opened, had beheld it; and we know in what way it has been typified as "the branch;" "the vine;" and the "bread of life;" our first parents, to their sorrow, gained a full knowledge of it.

* Asshur, or Ninus, was the son of this individual, and built the city of Nineveh so called after his name.

† We are not theorizing on the shape and size of this extraordinary serpent. Some ingenious guessers have surmised it to have been a crocodile! We cannot, however, suppose that Moses's rod was transformed into an alligator and then called a lizard. It appears to have represented the genus of the common serpent of the Asiatic charmer, although it might have been much larger. It was doomed to eat dust all the days of its life; there is, we may also remark, no mention made of its death; in fact it has been made to prefigure death itself, and Satan. This reptile has been the cause of a wide spread superstition; the heathens still think it retains supernatural acquirements. However, we can scarcely imagine that "that wicked one," who, in the presence of the Lord, said he came "From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it," stood, or "came hissing there" in the corporeal form of a serpent. "Olympias, the mother of Alexander, avowed to Philip, her husband, she had conceived Alexander not by him, but by a serpent of a great size." Philip in the latter part of his life declared that Alexander was not his son, and divorced his wife as guilty of adultery. At Epidaurus it was believed that Æsculapius, under the form of a huge yellowish serpent, gave notice of his approach by loud hissings. The worship of the serpent was not confined to the Epidaurians, nor alone to those places where Æsculapius had a temple. A serpent was adored in Egypt as an emblem of the divine nature; and in Cashmere there were no less than seven hundred places where carved figures of snakes were worshipped, this we find in Maurice's "Indian Antiquities." It was sacred to the healing god, and as a type of his office it is coiled round his wand; indeed in the prescriptions of the ancient physicians snake's flesh was often used. At Florence, in the Medici Gallery, there are two very fine antique statues of Æsculapius and of Hygeia, distinguished by these characteristics.

‡ It has been conjectured that there were different orders of angels with God when he created the earth; and in support of this theory, passages in the psalms and in the prophets have been brought forward. Christ (Mark, viii.) speaks of his coming "in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Also in John, x., he says "It is not written in your law, I said, ye are gods?" In Job xxxviii., v. 4, occurs the following remarkable passage: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? When the morning stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted for joy?" Saturnius of Antioch, who spread the heresies of Simon Magus, with some additions of his own, held the opinion (which is said to have been cherished by many Jews), that the world and man were created or made by gods or angels.

There were three influential sects among the Jews—the Sadducees, who believed in no spirit or resurrection; the Pharisees, who professed the doctrine of spirits, and the last day's rising again and judgment; and lastly, the Essenes, of which persuasion we feel assured the apostles were, and almost all those Jews who early embraced Christianity. These believed in the immortality of the soul, and of the resurrection of the dead, of the unjust as well of the just, in like manner as does the Christian. Essenism and Christianity have become, in fact, united—for Christ himself was an Essene, in his conformity to their ordinances as a Jew.

He wished all Jews and all mankind to be like what he was with respect to his commandments; even as a Son of God. Is it human nature for one brother to forgive another brother seventy times seven, if he says he repents? Or if we are smitten on one cheek do we give the other? Nay, do we unto others what we would they should do unto us? If we have not done so, why should we grumble that this state of things has not come to pass—or expect any other state of things so promised, so to happen as if we had done those things? Some may sneer, but this state of things is devoutly to be wished for.

Nearly two thousand years has it taken to humanize us with the leaven of Christianity, and to make us a little better than we were; but we may gratefully say, that at length we can show some evidence of progress. It is but a few years back that human beings were imbrutalized at the demoralizing halberts, by the sentence of five thousand lashes—a blood-beslained immolation—while, for a pennyworth of purloined cabbage sprouts, (instar omnium), they were hung up by the neck, at the rate of a round dozen per week. Hanging also may be condemned altogether, under the hypothesis, (fanciful or well founded) that the soul of a murderer is an unclean spirit, that will find somewhere, (who can tell where?) a "garnished" habitation for itself. Here, say the advocates of this hypothesis, we perceive that the ego, or ill^{us} ipse, by which is meant the idiosyncrasy, or personal identity, in the spirit, is no other than an evil thing, which has never been purified by repentance, or otherwise ameliorated by the spirit of prayer, nor by any exorcism, modified or corrected. So foul and unwashed a tenant savours of soot and damage.

Howbeit, let none faint; we are glad to agree with those ancient brethren in their investigation of the fathers, who said that "the greater the saint the more haunted by the devil." But this, even were we to add, "from the time of the righteous Job pleading his cause, to that of the holy St. Peter weeping for his offence," would still be too paradoxical an anomaly, did it not include a meaning of an anagogical nature and foreshadow an Almighty precognition.

As the high priest for ever after the order of Melchizedec, Christ was a Freemason, we know by his symbols as well as by his words. Our glorious brotherhood can understand these things; but there are those with the Bible before them—those pages they dare not gainsay—who will indirectly assert that the age of supernatural occurrences has passed; there is no longer such a dispensation as hearing by the ear, and seeing with the eye, what is not palpable. By most people such ideas are termed hallucinations. Now, with regard to heaven, our view is not the old Greek idea of Elysium; nor what is so much like it as almost to be mistaken for the same, the idea of paradise, which too many Europeans conceive. We pray, "Thy kingdom come on earth as it is in heaven"—that heaven wherein the morning stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted for joy "to see the foundations of the earth laid, or the corner stone thereof;" literally ours is the starry heaven.

† has been thought by some that until the Sabaoth of salvation or day of judgment, when there will be no more souls to save, and we shall all rest from our labours, the angelic host themselves will not be free from care, anxiety, and toil. We are told in Zechariah, that the angel or the Lord had to contend with Satan over the body of Joshua, and likewise, as it is written in the epistle of Jude, the Archangel Michael had to dispute with the devil about the body of Moses. All through the Scriptures, from the time of Lot at his threshold to the blood sweat hour of the Passion, there is the relation of the painful and terrible work of the angels. The personage called Satan is described as having his work; but where his work is he knows like Sisyphus he is condemned to labour in vain; so be it—the brand is not for our burning. This Satan we are told has contended with the Most Holy from the creation of the world with God to the ending thereof with Christ.

Some men there are, it cannot be doubted, who do not like social morality and who see nothing but puerile weakness in religious belief. We are instructed by the famous Phrygian philosopher Æsop, who rendered histories into fables because he dared not write in plainer language—"The frogs, under the government of a gracious ruler, wished to be thought more than frogs—full of peace and pride they forgot what they were and the careful watch over them of King Log: in fine, they petitioned Jupiter for another sort of king." We all know how justly he sent them a crane which swallowed them up alive.

But, we must return from this long digression, and endeavouring to make ourselves clearly and truthfully understood, we will consider the origin of Jupiter and the first cause of idolatry in connection with what we believe to be the truthful record of the history of Cain and his sons, and of Ham and his sons; which of course comprises the subject of the first and second peopling of the world.

(To be continued.)

EIKON BAZIAIKH.

It has been shown that the rise of architecture was coincident with the earliest wants of the human race. The period however embraced between the decline of the nomadic habits of the first tribes and the settlement of men in communities within walled towns, comprised an inconceivable variety of changes, which, though contributing largely to a final result, were themselves short lived. If a tribe or tribes migrated towards the equator, it is likely that the forms which nature presented to their eye, and by its means impressed vividly upon the mind, would be those with which they would adorn their abodes, and from which they would take their standard of the beautiful or the sublime. As men penetrated northwards, the outlines of nature suggested combinations altogether different; and between these extremes lay the sources of inexhaustible modifications. We can imagine the thoughts of an inhabitant of the desert who comes into an oriental grove abounding in palms, tamarind and orange trees, through which peer gorgeous flowers, interlaced in wonderful fantastic yet graceful fashion, as by the hand of a wood nymph, and to whose touch falls the ripe fruit, whose juice is like nectar to his parched tongue. Nor is it more difficult to realize the feelings of him who, fresh from the tents and flocks of his people, has ventured due north. To him the black mountain, topped by a thousand pinnacles, far as the eye can discern, and through which glitter the countless gems of the aurora borealis; the lake upon whose frozen border the solitary reindeer browses, and in whose bosom the glory of the northern heavens are reproduced, the scream of the eagle, the bark of the wild dog, and the melancholy voice of the bittern—must be things and sounds to take a form and shape in the mind.

There can be little doubt that the spirit which directs the emigration in either of these cases, is indicative of the end which will in either case be attained. The reveller in his newly found Eden models himself an abode fashioned upon the most beautiful shapes; and if he builds a temple, the forms of flowers and fruits and trees will manifest themselves in his designs. But satiety eats at the heart of the worshipper. He places a hideous monster upon a gorgeous altar. A gloomy asceticism drags him downward from his exalted conception of the Great Spirit, until he imprisons his God in a cavern. This may be assumed as the origin of the υπογαιοι, or cave temples. The courage, however, which conquers the earth over which it passes arrives at a very different conclusion. Each conquest unfolds new triumphs to be achieved. The forms of nature, though less brilliant, are more diverse, and what they want of brilliancy is compensated by their convertibility to typical meanings, by which faith is nourished and zeal warmed. Our poets have set value upon the daisy springing up in the waste places of the earth, as typifying faith, hope, and purity, whilst those of the east have none other meaning for the bright profusion that surrounds, than as semblances to gratify epicurean tastes. He who had to wend his way up the mountain, clearing the pathway as he went and instructed by the lesson which the uncovered bosom of the earth revealed to him, must have formed a higher conception of his own destiny and relation to the Godhead—at the same time that the notion of the omnipotence and benevolence of the Godhead was not diminished, but enhanced—than he who lay down amongst plenty, and to whose enjoyment the future appeared in the present.

We may pass in review the temples of Greece and Rome, as examples not only of dominant races, but embodying psychological phenomena, which have in every other outward form passed away. It would not answer any immediate purpose to enter here into details which would far exceed the limits to which we are confined, but we may say that in these crumbling monuments are found at once the glory of that great art which rears from the quarry the temples to the Most High, and the imperfections of every system of religion which attempts to combine the earthly and ethereal under outward visible forms.

It was not until architecture had become nearly extinct among the Romans, and when the seat of empire had been transferred to Constantinople, that a new system of religious architecture arose, as yet rude in form but containing within its rugged outline the elements of an original beauty—to which in after times new combinations were contributed, making the whole structure one in its appearance, in its arrangements, and for the uses to which it was to be given up singularly suitable. The change of religion under Constantine led to the destruction or destitution of many of the noblest temples of Rome. The Christian basilica had in many instances stripped the Pagan edifice of its columnar arrangements, bringing into harmony with the simpler and more exalted worship a somewhat severer taste, by which architectural redundancies were dispensed with.

The extent and magnificence of the architectural works of the Romans was unquestionably due to their knowledge of the properties of the arch. The Grecian taste, severe and chaste, had either rejected or did not know the property of the arch; but one obvious reason perhaps was that the Romans constructed most of their buildings of brick, whilst Grecian architects would condescend to nothing beneath stone. The barbarians, however, which surrounded the Roman empire were not long in completing the destruction of what remained of the glory of the vastest Pagan dominion the world had seen. Those countries which now received their Christianity from Rome, but did not themselves contain mines of architectural material in temples, amphitheatres, and palaces, were not slow to adopt those changes which convenience at first, and afterwards zeal, suggested to Christian neophytes. The first essays were necessarily rude, but rude forms by no means exclude originality of design. The Roman arch was preserved, but met, through a variety of modifications being applied, numberless new purposes.

The introduction of the pointed arch was a graft upon the early Gothic of northern Europe, as the circular arch of the Romans had been on the columnar arrangements of the Greeks. The result was, however, widely different. The amalgamation in the latter case destroyed the beauty both of the stock and scion, while in the former the stock contributed to the modification of its parasitical nursling, gradually gave up its heavy, dull, and cheerless form, and was eventually lost in its beautiful offspring—as the unlovely caterpillar is in the gay and graceful butterfly. Where originated, or by whom invented, the pointed arch has been for ages the subject of controversy, more fruitful however of fanciful hypothesis than reliable facts. Some have contended that it was at first suggested by the intersections of the semicircular arch; but if this solution of the difficulty were the true one it would hardly have taken seven centuries to make the discovery. The ornamentation of early Gothic structures must have frequently led to such intersections, and to a refined taste the new combination would have presented itself at a much earlier period. It has been again referred to the interlacing of the branches of trees when planted in parallel rows, also to a figure used on the seal of monastic establishments—to an imitation of wicker work—to Noah's Ark—to chance—and to other sources too numerous to mention. Its invention has been claimed by and alternately accorded to every nation in Europe.

All these opinions are put forward with more or less force of argument and show of reason. It is a fact, however, that the pointed arch made its appearance almost at the same time in different countries, and this fact would seem to import that it was rather an adaptation than an invention. If it had been an European invention, some specimens could be shown of a date anterior to others, for the difficulties which then presented themselves in travelling would be calculated to show a considerable difference in the dates at which it arrived at different places. There is another fact which strengthens the theory that it was an importation—namely, that its coming into general use was coeval with the return of the crusaders in the twelfth century. There are many analogous figures instanced in the form of drawing the cross, by those who visited the holy land, which would incline one to the belief that there was in the first instance found the prototype of this now far famed Order of Masonry. But whether this view of the case be the correct one, there seems no reason to deny its great antiquity; for it is undeniable that Saracenic nations used the lancet arch, as it has been by some not unappropriately termed.

Although it has not been discovered that the properties of this peculiar form of the arch were known to either the Egyptians or the Indians, structures have been found among those nations, in which chambers are adorned and apertures made in the form of the pointed arch, produced by battening or corbelling over. It would seem then not improbable that this form found in the east would suggest, and lead to its repetition, greatly improved by those who had a knowledge of the properties of such a mode of construction and a more scientific manner of constructing them.

The pointed arch does not seem to have come into Europe accompanied by its ordinary accessories in after times—its light clustered pillars, mullions, foliations, or featherings, and graceful tracery, which contribute so effectually to its light and elegant appearance. Venice appears to have been certainly the first adoptive parent of the style, for the earliest specimens are found there in private houses as well as in the famous basilica of St. Mark. Nor was the pointed arch an unworthy offering to christian architecture by those who had fought for christianity amid the sanctity of the places where christian precepts were promulgated, and upon the sepulchre where the earthly form of their divine Author was supposed to have been laid.

It has been shown that architecture had its origin in religious feelings and observances. Its noblest monuments, even among pagan nations, were temples to the Deity; and the rude nations of the north in the middle ages also devoted their energies to the construction of edifices dedicated to the worship of the Almighty; and when the light of learning had begun to shine on these same people, temple after temple gradually rose in the beautiful places of their land, in towns and cities, and the toil worn and weary approached with devotedness and humility, but with confidence and freedom, and poured out their misfortunes in prayer, and paid their grateful thanksgivings for the mercies that remained to them.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

LONDON AND MIDDLESEX ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE members of this association met at Harrow on the Hill, on Thursday, the 6th instant. The members and visitors assembled in the speech room of the school, and repaired to inspect the parish church and other objects of interest in the vicinity. The day being the anniversary of the founder, the bells rang, and the students celebrated the event by a holiday. A collection of antiquities was displayed in the statute room. Among these were Saxon crosses and ornaments found among recent excavations in London, ancient Roman fibulæ and hair pins, tiles from the old Temple church, coins in gold, silver and copper, specimens of Samian ware, molten nails from the great fire of London, Captain Cook's tea kettle, ancient black letter grants and other documents, all tending to throw light upon the history of forgotten ages. Some curious volumes were also exhibited—one the ΒΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ, a pocket manual of Charles II., bearing on the outside the cypher "C. R.," surmounted with a crown, and beneath a death's head. This curious volume, which was printed by R. Royston, of Ivy-lane, in 1649, contains an emblematical portrait of Charles I., and a portrait of the Prince of Wales in his nineteenth year. It is said to have been the constant companion of the "merry monarch." The title page bears the following quaint inscription: "The portraiture of his sacred Majesty in his solitudes and sufferings, with the papers which passed at Newcastle betwixt his Majesty and Mr. Alexander Henderson concerning church government, A.D. 1645; also prayers used in the time of his restraint." The church at Harrow contains a few fine monumental brasses, which escaped the zeal of the Puritans. Tracings of these, many evidently of Flemish origin, and dating from the thirteenth century, were exhibited. The church itself, which was restored about ten years since, under the direction of Mr. Gilbert Scott, is a fine building in the early Gothic style. The pews erected subsequent to the reformation were removed at the restoration, and oak benches substituted. In the course of removal some fine brasses were found, which are now converted into mural entablatures. The ancient door of the church, with a huge box lock three feet long, is still preserved in the north porch. The members having examined the fourth form containing the signatures of Lord Byron, Sir Robert Peel, Lord Palmerston, Mr. Spencer Percival, and others whose names have become famous, assembled in the speech room, under the presidency of the Rev. Mr. Cunningham, vicar of Harrow, when the business of the meeting was proceeded with. The chairman, on the part of the inhabitants of Harrow, welcomed the association to its classic precincts, and remarked that when he was invited to enrol himself as an associate, he not only gave his ready consent, but offered himself as an archæological specimen, being the oldest man in the parish. Mr. Henry W. Sass, the honorary secretary, having read the minutes of the last meeting, and letters of apology from Mr. Beresford-Hope, Lord Lonsborough, Lord Northwick, and others unable to attend, the Rev. Thomas Hugo gave an archæological and historical notice of Harrow. A paper by Mr. Niblet, on the ancient monumental brasses in the parish church was next read, and at the conclusion attention was called to the chalice from which Archbishop Laud received the holy sacrament on the evening prior to his execution. The cup, which is elaborately wrought in ivory, and with the cover stands twenty-four inches high, was given by the archbishop to his chaplain Hearn. This gentleman's daughter married the page of Master Wemley, by whom it came into possession of the Young family, its present owners. Archbishop Laud immediately previous to his execution also presented some gold coins to the son of Hearn. These were afterwards made into a medal commemorative of the faith of the deceased prelate, but in the fulness of time found their way, like other relics of the kind, into the melting pot. The formal business having been concluded, the associates and their friends visited the cemetery, the "Byron Tomb," as it is called, and other memorials of the poet. Among the relics shown at Harrow, and carefully preserved, is a piece of the panel of the pew in which Byron used to sit, with his name inscribed in pencil—"Byron"—and a brick (in a glass case) with the letters "R. Peel" engraved with a pen-knife. The baptismal font, of Purbeck marble, was likewise shown, and attracted attention as a curious illustration of the sculpture of the twelfth century.

SUFFOLK ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

THIS society held a meeting at Framlingham on the 7th inst., under the presidency of Lord Arthur Harvey. The members first met at Framlingham Castle, a large and somewhat perfect Norman building, where Mr. R. M. Phipson read a paper upon its history, elucidating his remarks with large plans of the castle in its past and present state. This remnant of antiquity appears to have been erected as early as Redwold, King of East Anglia, in 592, and afterwards, having been partially if not wholly destroyed in 1173, was rebuilt by Hugh Bigod, one of the Norman barons. Subsequently "Bloody Mary" made it the rallying point for her friends previous to her obtaining the crown, and upon her succession to the crown, gave it to John Howard, Duke of Norfolk, the descendants of whom sold it to Sir Robert Hitcham, who bequeathed it at his death to charitable purposes. The meeting, after visiting the castle, adjourned to the church, where Mr. Shawe Gowing read a paper on the edifice and the beautiful tombs of the Howards and the Earl of Surry (the poet) which it contains; and after visiting Dennington church, about three miles from Framlingham—a very beautiful structure—returned to Framlingham to dinner. In passing from Dennington to Framlingham, the society visited Parham Hall, the ancient seat of the Willoughby de Eresbys, a fine old moated grange of the fifteenth century. The day was exceedingly favourable, and the visitors appeared to enjoy themselves very much.

SIR CHRISTOPHER WREN'S CIPHER.

SIR DAVID BREWSTER, at the meeting of the British Association, gave some very interesting particulars of a cipher of our Grand Master Wren's, containing "Three Methods of finding the Longitude," by Sir D. Brewster.—Sir David said that at page 263 of his "Life of Sir Isaac Newton" the following paragraphs would be found:—"The bill which had been enacted for rewarding the discovery of the longitude seems to have stimulated the inventive powers of Sir Christopher Wren, then in his eighty-third year. He communicated the results of his study to the Royal Society, as indicated by the following curious document which I found among the manuscripts of Newton:—'Sir Christopher Wren's cipher, describing three instruments proper for discovering the longitude at sea delivered to the Society November 30, 1714, by Mr. Wren:—

OZVCVAYINIXDNCVOCWEDCNMALNABECIRTEWN
GRAMHHCCAW.

ZEIYEINOIEBIVTXESCIOCPSEDEDMNANHSEFPRIW
HDXAEIHXCF.

EZKAVEBIMOXRFCSLCEEDIHWMGNNIVEOMREWW
ERRCSHEPCIP.

'Vera copia.

EDM. HALLEY.'

We presume that each of these paragraphs of letters is the description of a separate instrument. If it be true that every cipher can be deciphered, these mysterious paragraphs, which their author did not live to expound, may disclose something interesting to science. Sir David Brewster went on to say that soon after the publication of 'The Life of Sir Isaac Newton,' he had received a letter from Mr. Francis Williams, of Grange Court, Chigwell, suggesting very modestly that as the deciphering of the cipher, as published, was so simple, he supposed many persons had already done so; but if not, he begged to say that the mystery could be solved by reading the letters backwards in each of the three paragraphs, omitting every third letter. He had, on the approach of the Meeting of the British Association, received permission from Mr. Williams to give an account of this section of Mr. Williams's method of solving the enigma. In his letter conveying the permission, which Sir David read, he suggested that "Sir Christopher Wren's object was to make it too mysterious to be of use to any one else. It is possible he may have wished to delay for a time the publication of his inventions, perhaps till he had improved his instruments, but was afraid that in the interval another would hit upon and publish the same discovery. He would send this cipher, then, to the Royal Society as a proof to be used at any future time." Sir David had the following explanation then, in accordance with Mr. Williams's suggestion, written upon the black boards, the letters to be omitted being written in small characters to distinguish them, and backwards :—

WAcCHhMArGNwETrICeBAnLAmNCdEWcOUcNDxINiV
AvCUzO.—Wach magnetic balance wound in vacuo (one letter a misprint). The omitted letters similarly read are—Chr. Wren, mdccxiv.

FicXhHEArDHwIPrPEeShANmDeDSPcOIcSEXTuIBEiO
NiEYIEZ.—Fix head hippos handes poise tube on eye (one letter a misprint). Omitted letters make—Chr. Wren, mdccxiii.

PicPEhSCrEWErMOeVInNGmWHdEEcLScFRxOMiBEv
AKzE.—Pipe screw moving wheels from beake. Omitted letters make—Chr. Wren, mdccxiv.

The three last omitted z's occurring in the first part of each cipher to show that that part must be taken last.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE LANCASHIRE SONG BOOK.

AN eminent brother told me lately, that in the Lancashire Lodges they are in the habit of laying on the table a book containing the words of a large collection of Masonic songs. Unfortunately he could not remember its title, and I should be obliged to any brother of that province who would kindly give me an exact copy of the title page, as I wish to see the work in question.—M. COOKE.

ADMIRAL SIR PETER PARKER, BART.

A biography of this distinguished Mason, who was Deputy Grand Master, is in preparation, but the writer is in want of information concerning his Masonic career, and would be glad of any dates that could be furnished him, more particularly those which are connected with his initiation, passing, &c., as well as the Lodge, or Lodges, to which he belonged.—SCRIBA.

THE STORY OF MISS ST. LEGER.

I have copied the following from an old magazine; though the story has often been told before, the present version may interest some readers of the Magazine; I therefore hand it to you for insertion if you think fit.—G. B. M. M., Cambridge:—

"The Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger was the only female ever initiated into the ancient mystery of Freemasonry. How she obtained this honour, we shall lay before our readers. Lord Doneraile, Miss St. Leger's father, a very zealous Mason, held a warrant, and occasionally opened Lodge at Doneraile house, his sons and some intimate friends assisting; and it is said never were the Masonic duties more rigidly performed than by them. Previous to the initiation of a gentleman to the first steps in Masonry, Miss St. Leger, who was a young girl, happened to be in an apartment adjoining the room generally used as a Lodge room. This room at the time was undergoing some alterations, amongst other things, the wall was considerably reduced in one part. The young lady having heard the voices of the Freemasons, and prompted by curiosity to see the mystery, so long and so secretly locked up from public view, she had the courage to pick a brick from the wall with her scissors, and witnessed the ceremony through the first two steps. Curiosity satisfied, fear at once took possession of her mind. There was no mode of escape except through the very room where the concluding part of the second step was still being solemnized, and that being at the far end, and the room a very large one, she had resolution sufficient to attempt her escape that way, and with light and trembling steps glided along unobserved, laid her hand on the handle of the door, and gently opening it, before her stood to her dismay, a grim and surly Tyler, with his long sword unsheathed. A shriek that pierced through the apartment alarmed the members of the Lodge, who all rushed to the door, and finding that Miss St. Leger had been in the room during the ceremony, in the first paroxysm of their rage, her death was resolved on, but from the moving supplication of her younger brother, her life was saved, on condition of her going through the whole of the solemn ceremony she had unlawfully witnessed. This she consented to, and they conducted the beautiful and terrified young lady through those trials which are sometimes more than enough for masculine resolution, little thinking they were taking into the bosom of their Craft a member that would afterwards reflect a lustre on the annals of Masonry.

"The lady was cousin to General Anthony St. Leger, governor of St. Lucia, who instituted the celebrated Doncaster St. Leger stakes. Miss St. Leger married Richard Aldworth, Esq., of Newmarket. Whenever a benefit was given at the theatres in Dublin or Cork for the Masonic Female Orphan Asylum, she walked at the head of the Freemasons with her apron and other insignia of Freemasonry, and sat in the front row of the stage box. The house was always crowded on those occasions. Her portrait is in the Lodge room of almost every Lodge in Ireland."

MOST EXCELLENT MASTER.

As Mark Masonry is likely to become a necessity in English Masonry, could there be any objection to the American degree of M.E.M. being generally adopted to distinguish their W.M.? The advantages of this will be so evident to every Mark Master that it is superfluous to enumerate them. The degree is extremely appropriate, and the brethren who had advanced thus far would have the defined series leading to the Royal Arch in other countries. Permit me to recommend this to the attention of the body of Mark Masters.—Δ.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Poemata. By ANTHONY ONEAL HAYE, of the Lodge Canongate Kilwinning, No. 2. 12mo. Paterson, Edinburgh.

It has been said, and truly, that the age in which we live is not a favourable one for the production of great poems. Compared with the earlier portion of the present century, when we had Byron, Scott, Crabbe, Moore, Shelley, Wordsworth, and many others, we have now but very few men of renown, and they, none of them, equal any of the forementioned; indeed, poetry has descended to the art of rhyme, and rhyme, in its turn, has much degenerated. Of rhymers we have plenty, and their productions are to be found, arrayed with gorgeous green and gold, at every railway bookstall, as well as in the "Poet's Corner" of almost every local journal; and still lower, descending through the epics of Messrs. Moses' own poet, until we arrive at the choice set of verses, on the benefit of economy, that is issued from the sign of the "black doll," in every crowded neighbourhood. Amid all this pressure of poetical fervour, alas! we have no poets, and sadly and sorrowfully are we obliged to tell our Brother Haye that we cannot recognize in him the coming man, so ardently expected by every lover of true poesy.

"Poemata" is a series of four larger and nineteen minor effusions. The subjects of the longest are "The Mirage of Life," "Darnick," "The Rose and the Stream," and "Phantom Love;" the lesser attempts are on various themes. Let us examine the first part of the first in priority, "The Mirage of Life."

Bro. Haye commences with an introduction that, at the first glance, told us he had not learned the trick of numbers or of measure; nor do we know who the second person, "when struggling with the motes of light," can possibly be intended for; but let it pass; perhaps it is our own obtuseness. Taking another portion of this invocation to the Great Architect, we have:—

"Oh, Thou, to whom the tempest-laden wave
Of life's uncertain tide is known—to whom
The minute particles of sea ground sand
Are writ—and all the vast unnumber'd leaves
That bud in spring and brown 'neath autumn's breath,
Are marked—aid my weak verse with thine inspire."

Now this is a fair specimen of the want of art in our Brother Haye; he takes one of the most beautiful images of holy writ, God's knowledge of the sands of the sea shore, and spoils it most admirably. What can it mean? Are the sands of the sea written and marked? or does the prayer, "Aid my weak verse with thine inspire," ask for an inspiration on the poet's weakness, or inspiration from God's own inspired word? Again, the word inspire is, if not bad English, at least very inelegant. The whole passage shows the mind of a poet, for every individual possessed of sufficient perception to see beauty, in whatever shape it is presented, is a poet in embryo; but it by no means follows that a poetical mind can clothe poetical thoughts with language, as is the case in the above extract, where nothing but a want of connexion and terseness of expression could have marred so beautiful an idea.

Again, in the concluding part of the introduction, we have a figure presented to us which upsets all our preconceived notions, of—

"The busy school: the ceaseless hum of tongues;
The unselt lesson and the master's frown:
The aching rod and withheld holiday."

Now, for the first time in our lives, we learn that the rod, and not the part on which it descends, is the aching member!

Look back to many a thrashing, as we can, still we have no remembrance of such a phenomena, nor do we believe any urchin of our acquaintance will endorse Bro. Haye's description.

Let us now turn to "The Mirage of Life," and endeavour to give its story. The last four lines of the Introduction ends thus:—

"I came one day upon a scroll hid in
A secret drawer of my bureau; 'twas writ
With a firm hand, tho' here and there a blur Told where a tear had fall'n. This was its strain."

The writer of the scroll was sitting, musing by firelight, when midnight overtook him, and he places a chair for a skeleton—

"Whose presence no one wots of but myself," and gazes upon it—

"till my fear became
A joy: my grief, gladness: like him who eats
The fatal death, and fattens on disease."

Then, after "the cupboard skeleton" has taken himself off, comes the retrospect of his childhood's charms. Then a picture of war. Next a landscape in harvest time, followed by the faces of those beloved in days of yore, and—

"The tears stole to mine eyes, when in the flame
Some dear friend's face shown full upon my view."

The scene, or rather the old familiar sport of faces in the fire, changes, and the beholder sees a tomb—

"The resting place of my heart's youthful core."

Lashed into madness at the sight, he apostrophizes the "impalpable shades," and upbraids them with their presence, asking them where the calm joy of heaven's fair courts is to be found? A voice from one of them tells him "there is no joy on earth; it must be sought above;" then, as his candle goes out, the ghosts or faces go out with it. After opening the window, and watching the stars—

"I sat awhile and gazed upon the scene,
So lovely in its tranquillity, and thought
How puny man appears, compared to God.
He who can move the hearts of crawling worms,
And raise a mansion towering to the clouds,
Cannot displace a star, nor force a wind
To be his slave."

Pacing around his room he describes it, and how in it he framed tales and legends, and in his musing we have the first gleam of a bit of good description, thus:—

"I coursed mine eye o'er all wild follies past,
And lived the moments bitter back again,
Like him who in a secret corner stores
Portraits and locks of hair—ribbons of blue
And divers colours—letters and odd things—
Remembrances of bygone, happy days,
Round which a thousand waking memories cling
Like bees around their queen."

We are then made acquainted with the fact, that the narrator cannot weep; that his is "a statued grief;" and that he has always sought for joy, defining what it is to him. Then there are reflections on what constitutes the aim of men, and moralizations on Wolsey, Saladin, Poe, Byron, and Shelley, telling us his hopes were for fame, and how it came upon him in the schoolroom; and also when he joined his country's (Scotland) banners against Napoleon, how he captured a standard, and received the Duke of Wellington's thanks, and found no joy in this. And thus ends the first part of "The Mirage of Life."

Without going through the second part, which is very much akin to the first, in being like Canning's knife-grinder, "Story, God bless you, I have none to tell, sir," and not offering any very particular beauties, we turn to the "Masonic Song," and present it to our readers, as a favourable specimen of Bro. Haye's powers, and thoroughly Masonic sentiments:—

"The fleeting years that glide away
Upon oblivion's wave,
Oft drop a wreath of heaven-born bloom,
To beautify the grave.
So with our heart's fond memory will Keep green this festal night,
And in the midst of coming cares,
Entrance us with delight."

"The year that's past, has had a cloud
Of glory o'er it shed;
A thousand flowers have sprung to life,
To elegise the dead.
Our temple, with a friendly hand,
Receives us to delight;
And after days will fondly recall
The pleasures of this night."

"Around are set our brethren staunch,
In love responding bands;
For, where the square and compass gleam,
Hands cling to brother hands.
And where the ever sleepless eye,
Beams on with radiance bright,
Each present Mason will remind
The pleasure of this night."

"The sun is dawning in the east—
His beams shoot to the west;
A star is glimmering in the sky
Above the Mason's crest.
Soon fall will feuds, fierce warfare's clang
Will cease the ear to fright;
But brother bands will join our hearts,
As joined are ours to-night."

"Old Time his watches still will ring,
Till days and years are gone;
And humble suppliants we will kneel
Before our Master's throne.
As thro' the lone and dangerous vale
We stumble without light,
Our eyes will hail the glorious beams
Which pierce that dreary night."

"And when our work and warfare's o'er,
Oh, may the light of Heaven
A halo shed around the path
Lost in the mists of even!
So that, when to our Master bound,
Our labours for requite,
We may, within the Lodge on high,
Forget death's gloomy night!"

Glancing our eye over the last page, we caught sight of a line that would sorely puzzle a cockney; it reads—

"Mortal, you may vainly veil woe."

Such obscurity and alliteration spoil many of Bro. Haye's efforts.

We cannot close these remarks without a few words of advice to Brother Haye. What we have written has been penned in sober truth, for a reviewer has no right to import his own prejudice into a notice which his readers look to for the real state of the case, and glad as we should have been to have accorded to our brother unlimited praise, yet justice demands that our verdict be a true one. Offering this to our brother in a fraternal spirit, we hope he will accept it as such, and permit us to advise him for the future. If so, we would strongly counsel him to avoid obscurity, to narrate naturally, to condense considerably, to revise continually, and to study the laws of verse and metre. Let him not be deterred at this, for one of our most elegant poets, Gray, in his Elegy in a Country Churchyard, has left the well-known lines behind him in manuscript transposed as follows, in each and every case retaining the measure and the sense. It stands in the copy published as "The ploughman homeward plods his weary way;" Gray's variations are:—

"The weary ploughman plods his homeward way.
The weary ploughman homeward plods his way.
The ploughman, weary, plods his homeward way.
The ploughman, weary, homeward plods his way.
Weary the ploughman plods his homeward way.
Weary the ploughman homeward plods his way.
Homeward the ploughman plods his weary way.
Homeward the weary ploughman plods his way.
Homeward the ploughman, weary, plods his way.
The homeward ploughman weary plods his way.
The homeward ploughman plods his weary way."

No doubt it may be said this is but changing the places of the words, and so it is; but it shows to what length an author who feels a line tries how far his idea will bear improvement before he gives it to the world.

Strongly advising our Brother Haye, who has no mean perception of the beautiful, and occasionally strikes out a brilliant idea, to polish his effusions carefully, to pause frequently and rewrite often, we yet hope to see another volume, of what we may be able to call poems, from his pen; and if he but takes our advice and improves, as we are sure he can if he will but study, no one will hail his labours more genially and fraternally than ourselves.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

Among the principal books in Messrs. Longman's new list of forthcoming works are:—Palleake's "Life of Schiller," translated by Lady Wallace; the third and fourth volumes of Capt. Brialmont's "Life of the Duke of Wellington," translated by the Rev. G. R. Gleig, M.A.; Moore's "Lalla Rookh," illustrated by John Tenniel; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," with a preface by the Rev. Charles Kingsley, with steel and wood engravings after designs by Charles Bennett; a new edition of "Italy in the Nineteenth Century," by the Right Hon. James Whiteside, M.P.; Vol. II. of the "History of France," by Eyre Evans Crowe; "The Sea and its Living Wonders," by Dr. George Hartwig; a "History of Constitutional and Legislative Progress in England, since the Accession of George III.," by Thomas Erskine May; the Abbé Domenech's "Seven Years' Residence in the Great Deserts of North America;" "Travels in Peru and Mexico," by S. S. Hill, Esq.; Vol. VII. of the Works of Lord Bacon, collected and edited by J. Spedding, M.A.; R. L. Ellis, M.A.; and D. D. Heath, Esq.; an improved edition of M'Culloch's "Commercial Dictionary;" a new edition of Dr. Ure's "Dictionary of Chemistry," by Henry Watts, B.A., F.C.S.; an entirely new edition of Ure's "Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines," edited by Robert Hunt, F.R.S., F.S.S., assisted by some of the first scientific men of the day, and many other minor works.

Mr. Bentley's literary announcements for the season include "Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury from the Mission of Augustine to the Death of Howley," by Dr. Hook, Dean of Chichester; "The Diaries and Correspondence of the Hon. George Rose," with original letters of Mr. Pitt, Lord Castlereagh, Marquis Wellesley, Mr. Wilberforce, Lord Eldon, Mr. Perceval, Lord Sidmouth, Lord Bathurst, with a correspondence with Lady Hamilton respecting Nelson and his daughter, edited by the Rev. Leveson Vernon Harcourt; "Say and Seal," by the author of "Queechy," &c.; "Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Right Rev. Richard Hurd, D.D., Bishop of Worcester," by the Rev. F. Kilvert, M.A.; "The English Satirists," with a Preliminary Essay on Satire; "The Autobiography of a Seaman," by Thomas, Earl of Dundonald; "Lives of the Princes of Wales," by Dr. Doran; "Anecdote Biography," by John Timbs; the third volume of M. Guizot's "Memoirs of my own Time;" the third and concluding volume of "The Life of Charles James Fox," by the Right Hon. Lord John Russell, M.P.; "The Court of England under the Reign of George III.," by J. Heneage Jesse; "Erin-go-Bragh, or Irish Life Tales," by W. Hamilton Maxwell; "Women Artists in all Ages and Countries," by Mrs. E. F. Ellet; "History of the Governors General of India," by John William Kaye; "Jean and Nicolette," by the author of "The Mill in the Valley;" "London and Paris, Social and Religious;" "Shakespeare Papers, or Pictures Grays and Gay," by Dr. Maginn; and numerous less important books.

The Academy of Fine Arts, at Paris, held a solemn meeting on the 1st of this month, for the distribution of prizes for painting, sculpture, architecture, and musical composition. M. Gotteaux was president; M. Halévy, secretary, spoke on the works of the pupils of the French painting school at Rome. After this the prizes were distributed; then M. Halévy spoke on Adolphe Adam; after which the solemnity was closed with the execution of the scene that had won the first great prize of musical composition.

It is said that M. Victor Hugo's new poem, "La Légende des Siècles," has made such an impression on the public, that more than 3000 copies of it were sold in ten days.

The Indian Lancet contains much matter that is interesting to the medical profession, and is, as far as circumstances will permit, what its name imports. There is a report on the sanitary condition of Indian jails, an epitome of medical news from the English medical journals, and original accounts of several cases in this country. The Indian Lancet is a bi-monthly publication, and deserves the support of the medical profession.

The entrance of the Museum at Berlin will receive a second door, one on which Art has been at work for thirteen years, and which is said by Berlin critics to surpass the celebrated doors of the Church of the Madeleine and of the Pantheon at Paris. The design of this work is by the architect Herr Hüller.

Mme. Lenormand's "Souvenirs et Correspondances Tirés des Papiers de Madame Recamier" have created quite a literary furor in Paris. Full of anecdote and reminiscences of this charming lady, who knew how to be attractive without being vicious, and in the midst of a kind of moral sink preserved a snowy purity that nothing could ever sully. This volume is the most readable that can be imagined.

The Philosophic Institution of Edinburgh will commence its new season on the 4th of November, when Professor Aytoun will deliver an inaugural address on "The Popular Traditions and Poetry of the North of Europe." The succeeding lectures include the subjects of Early Scottish History and Literature, by Mr. Carruthers—The Elizabethan Age, by Dr. Daniel—The Huguenots, and Protestantism in France, by Dr. Hanna—and the English Puritans, by Dr. Tulloch. In the miscellaneous section, there will be lectures on "China," by Sir John Bowring,—"Japan," by Mr. Oliphant—"Volcanoes," by Mr. Jukes—"The Phenomena of Superficial Formations," by Mr. Robert Chambers—"The Poetical Literature of the Elizabethan Age," by Mr. M'Donald—"Abstract Science in Relation to Industrial Applications, with Illustrations from Chemistry," by Professor Playfair—and "The Electric Telegraph," by Dr. Wilson.

Mr. W. Moy Thomas, who is so well known as a contributor to our periodical literature, and also as a learned and persevering archaeologist, has in the press a selection of stories, originally written by him for Household Words. The volume is to be called "When the Snow Falls," and will be produced by Messrs. Sampson Low and Son.

The Boston Courier publishes the following letter, which Lieut. Col. John S. Forster, of the Lecture Committee of the Mercantile Library Association, has received from Mr. Charles Dickens:—"I beg to assure you, in reply to your obliging letter, that you are misinformed, and that I have no intention of visiting America in the ensuing autumn.—CHARLES DICKENS."

It has recently been announced that the late Earl Minto has left a MS. work of "great interest and value," from which his admirers (if any) anticipate much. The name which the work is to receive, however, has not yet been announced.

The opening lecture for the winter session of University College, was delivered by Professor Newman last week, in the Faculty of Arts and Laws. The professor sketched the progress of philosophy and science in ancient Greece and through the Roman Empire, tracing the advance of learning and philosophy from Socrates and Plato to Cicero. Mathematics culminated into the wonders of astronomical science at Alexandria, and gave the Romans greater advantages than ever fell to the Greeks. The connection between astronomy and religion was then traced, and the lecturer came to the decay of arts and arms in Greece. Generalising upon his subject, the professor pointed out that it was not by the exclusive cultivation of one science that the mind is best educated. We need the cultivation of numerous branches to ensure the due cultivation of the mind. After the overthrow of the Roman Empire, education fell into neglect; but with the rise of the baronial and aristocratic power a superior training was required. Here the professor pointed out the assistance to mental education derived from physical training. In conclusion, the professor pressed upon all young men studying for professions, not to be contented with the mere requirements of the individual pursuit alone, but by strenuous cultivation to strengthen all their mental powers. A man of more learning than sense is like a general at Balaklava starving his troops for want of knowledge how to get at the stores which are within his reach. The object of the student should be to attain the power of arrangement and a sound judgment, by which to bring as it were into a focus all points of value. Variety of thought and versatility are best attained by broad and liberal culture; and there is a danger of beginning purely professional study at too early a period. A really liberal education makes the man a better citizen, and enables him to sympathise with all science, and to gain knowledge from every source.

Madame Dubois Davenne has been entrusted with the execution of Béranger's bust in marble, for the seasonal room (Salle de séance) of the French Academy.

MM. Garnier Frères have published a history of the late Italian war, entitled "L'Italie Confédérée." It contains the plan of campaign said to have been drawn up by Napoleon III. during his stay at Alessandria.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At the quarterly meeting of the province of West Yorkshire, on Wednesday the 5th, the Prov. Grand Chapter was held in the same building, and the Companions were admitted (after some discussion) in their Royal Arch clothing into the Provincial Grand Lodge. I beg to ask, was the law infringed?

The crowd being very great, the brethren were admitted so fast that they could not be proved separately, and a constant stream was the consequence. Was there not a want of firmness somewhere?

At the banquet, when Lord Ripon rose to speak, there was a general rush to hear him, at the doors; and before the people retired, the Deputy Prov. Grand Master's health was proposed and drunk with honours, in spite of an attempt to postpone them; the waiters also had a full view of the proceedings during the evening. Was this caution?

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours faithfully,
York, October 7th, 1859. A CORRESPONDENT.

PURCHASING A WARRANT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I was somewhat startled on looking over the advertisements in the Manchester Daily Examiner and Times, of Thursday, the 18th inst., to find an advertisement, of which the following is a verbatim copy:—

"FREEMASONRY.—Wanted to purchase a Craft Warrant, with or without furniture. Apply to Mr. W. Greenwood, M.A., Bacup."

What Mr. Greenwood, M.A., of Bacup, can want with a Craft Warrant, I cannot imagine,—clearly not to open a Lodge under its provisions, as the Constitutions (private Lodges, sec. 28.) are explicit enough on the subject; and as I do not know to what other useful purpose he can apply such a document, especially "with furniture," I think it my duty to bring the matter before your readers, and particularly before the brethren of the Samaritan Lodge, No. 358, Bacup, so that an eye may be kept upon Mr. W. Greenwood, to prevent his taking such an illegal step as, from his advertisement, as I understand it, he contemplates.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
Hartlepool, 14th October, 1859. T.

TESTIMONIAL TO BRO. CHARLES JONES, OF HOBERT TOWN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—I venture to transmit to you the accompanying correspondence for insertion, should you deem the same worthy of a space in your valuable periodical; and the expression of your opinion would be esteemed an additional obligation.

The circumstances attending the presentation were, you will perceive, consequent upon the removal of a deservedly esteemed brother from this to an adjacent colony, and as evidencing the beauties and truly Masonic principles of the Craft.

The testimonial consisted of a piece of penmanship, pronounced to be a masterpiece of calligraphy, and beautifully framed and glazed. I have the honour to be, Sir and Brother, your most obedient servant,

WM. BALES,
Sec., Tasmanian Operative Lodge, No. 345.
Hobart Town, Tasmania, 12th Aug., 1859.

"Tasmanian Operative Lodge, No. 345.
28th May, 1859.

"MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—By direction of the Worshipful Master, I have the pleasure to inform you that Bro. Edwards has been entrusted with the presentation, in such a manner as he may deem most fitting, of the testimonial, accompanied by a purse of twenty guineas, voted to you in open Lodge on the 21st April last.

"That such a mark of the estimation in which you are held by the brethren of this, your parent Lodge, will be gratifying to your feelings, I cannot entertain a doubt, and more particularly when you are acquainted with the alacrity with which the proposition was responded to by all who had the pleasurable opportunity of doing so.

"I deem it but due to our highly appreciated and long tried worthy brothers, James Alexander Thompson, and Richard James Edwards, to notify to you the fact of their being the proposer and seconder of this tribute to your worth, and their estimation of your truly Masonic character and standing in the Craft.

"Whilst your departure from amongst us is sincerely and unfeignedly regretted, our mutual hope is that the change may prove, to the utmost of your desire, really beneficial; and with our hearty and best wishes for the future happiness and prosperity of yourself, Mrs. Jones, and family,

"I have the pleasure to subscribe myself, my dear Sir and Brother,
Yours most faithfully and fraternally,
WM. BALES, Sec.

"To Bro. Charles Jones, late S.W., Lodge No. 345."

"Woolloomooloo, Sydney,
June 9th, 1859.

"MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have no words adequately to express the gratification and pleasure I feel upon receiving the handsome and valuable testimonial from the hands of our much respected brother

Edwards; and I desire to have conveyed to the Worshipful Master, officers and brethren of Lodge No. 345, the deep sense I shall ever continue to entertain of their munificence.

"The expressions contained in your letter, as also in the testimonial, are of such a flattering nature that I scarcely think myself worthy of them. Each have been seen by many old Masons whom I have met in Lodge in this city, and who have congratulated me upon the occasion, and feel proud that the members of No. 345 have been so mindful of the former humble services of a brother of the Lodge as to call forth such an expression of brotherly feeling.

"Allow me to say, dear sir and brother, that I have made my wife and children the recipient of the money forwarded to me, who join with me in their expressions of gratitude, and pray for the success and prosperity of yourself and the brethren of No. 345.

"Subscribing myself, faithfully and fraternally yours,
"Bro. William Bales. CHARLES JONES"

THE NECESSITY OF VISITING LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I beg to suggest a plan which I think would be to the great advantage of Freemasonry in general, and to every Lodge in particular, viz., for some Grand Lodge Officers to be nominated to visit periodically the country Lodges, so that they might ensure uniform and correct working. The work would then, perhaps, not be done in the careless manner which exists in some Lodges; for instance, the Deacons prompting the candidate who is about being passed or raised; and again, passing and raising a candidate without the proper examination, and afterwards getting the candidate up in that which he should have known prior to passing or raising. In my humble opinion, nothing requires to be studied so correctly as the science of Masonry, in which, above all others, there is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. Masonic ceremonies, well performed, are sublime, while slovenly and careless working are both ridiculous and disgraceful.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
Y. N. T.,
9 0 7.

Wintertown, 20th October, 1859.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

ST. JOHN'S LODGE (No. 1097), is to be consecrated at the Town Hall, Maidenhead, on Monday, the 24th instant.

THE fifteen sections will be worked at the Robert Burns Lodge of Instruction (No. 125), on Friday, Nov. 4th, Bro. T. A. Adams presiding as W.M. The annual festival is fixed for Nov. 10.

WE are happy to hear that Bro. Benj. Bond Cabbell, P.G.W., and Prov. G.M. for Norfolk, is rapidly recovering from his late severe indisposition, though we regret to add the sight of one eye has irretrievably gone.

THE BOYS SCHOOL.

A QUARTERLY court of the Boys School was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Monday, October 17th, Bro. John Udall, P.G.D., presiding.

The minutes of the last court and various committee meetings having been read and confirmed, the Secretary reported that since the last court, twenty-eight boys had been admitted into the new school, making a total of fifty-four. Twelve were to be elected that day, and four were being educated out of the school, of whom one was of the Hebrew persuasion; two, whose time was nearly out, would finish at their present schools, and one was imbecile.

The business having been disposed of, the election of twelve boys out of nineteen candidates was proceeded with—the following being the result of the poll:—

ELECTED.
1. Hand, Ernest (London)	5570
2. Saunders, Henry L. (London).....	5334
3. Wesson, Harold G. (London)	2625
4. Jay, Charles H. (London)	2526
5. McDowell, John (London)	2072
6. Gregory, Henry C. (London)	2038
7. Carlin, Herbert Samuel (London)	1667
8. Wentle, Edward (London)	1341
9. Dutton, Alfred W. (London)	1217
10. Kilpin, Edwin (Northampton)	1177
11. Johnson, Alexander (Newcastle).....	1096
12. Stark, George (Exmouth)	960

NOT ELECTED.

13. Morris, Chas. (London)	957
14. Pescote, Thomas H. (Chichester)	304
15. Campbell, Alfred C. (Monmouth)	201
16. Webber, Edward C. (Lincoln)	163
17. Clatworthy, John M. (Brixton)	82
18. Ashfield, Edward T. (London)	69
19. Davis, John W. (London)	15

It will therefore be seen that nine London and three country boys were elected—the number of candidates being twelve from London and seven from the country. The friends of candidates should be careful to poll all their strength, and not give away or lend their votes to other candidates under an idea of want of strength, as all votes now carry on to the next election; and it will therefore be seen that with exertion, his friends are pretty sure to carry the election of Morris on the next occasion. By careful attention to the accumulation of votes from election to election, the friends of almost every candidate will be sure to secure his election within a reasonable time.

A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

A word to the Secretaries of this and the other Masonic charities.—It is usual for the Secretaries of public institutions to make out a list of the successful candidates, with the numbers polled, and place it in the hall of the building in which the election takes place, for the information of all comers. The example might be worth following.

[We have received some strange communications relative to the continual disputes between the two masters; the absence of the head master for two or three days at a time; the want of system in the establishment, &c., which shall not escape our notice.—Ed.]

METROPOLITAN.

EASTERN STAR LODGE (No. 112).—The first meeting of the season was held on Wednesday, October 12th, at the New Globe Tavern, Mile End-road, Bro. H. J. Vousley, W.M., presided, attended by his Officers, and Bros. W. W. Davis, S. Marriott, and G. Allison, P.Ms. After the business was transacted the brethren adjourned to dinner, and in love and harmony passed a pleasant evening. There were several visitors, and among them Bro. Maney, W.M., No. 201; Bro. Enmens, P.M., No. 201, and Bro. R. Motion, P.M., No. 663. We understand that this Lodge is likely to have another removal, and it is rumoured that it will probably be located at Bro. Painter's, in Leadenhall-street; to western visitors this will be agreeable, as a more pleasant Lodge does not exist.

WELLINGTON LODGE (No. 805).—The monthly meeting, and the second for the season of this Lodge, was held on Tuesday evening, October 11th, at the Lord Duncan Tavern, Broadway, Deptford, Bro. Wadson, W.M., presided; assisted by Bro. Owden, S.W., and Welsford, J.W.; and there was a numerous assemblage of other brethren. The first business of the evening was to examine Bros. Prior and Pearce as to their proficiency in the first degree, after which they were, in due form, respectively passed to the degree of F.C. Messrs. Tee and Smith (the latter a gentleman of colour) were introduced, and in a most impressive manner, admitted to the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry. There being no further business, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren, numbering between thirty and forty, retired to refreshment; after which the usual toasts, both loyal and Masonic, were given, and the evening was spent in the most complete harmony, the business being brought to a close soon after ten o'clock.

PROVINCIAL.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

AYLESBURY.—Buckingham Lodge (No. 861).—At the regular meeting, held on Monday, October 17th, at the Royal White Hart Hotel, there were present, the Rev. Bro. J. C. Wharton, Vicar of Birtton, W.M.; Bro. J. How, S.W.; J. Grace, J.W.; Rev. Bro. Oliver; the other officers and brethren. A ballot was taken for the admission of the Rev. William England, of Boughton, near Newport Pagnel; Charles Davie Beauchamp, O.E.; and George Cartwright, O.E.; and these gentlemen being present were initiated into Masonry by the W.M., who, in commemoration of his first performing the rite, presented the Lodge with a pair of columns. The J.W. also presented the Lodge with a ballot box. A vote of thanks to each of those reverend brethren was moved by Bro. How, and seconded by Bro. Williams, S.D., duly put and carried with acclamation. The S.W. proposed Bro. George States, P.M., No. 166, as a joining member. The Lodge was closed in love and harmony, and adjourned till January. The brethren dined together, and separated at an early hour.

CHESHIRE.

BIRKENHEAD.—Mersey Lodge (No. 701).—On the 18th instant the regular meeting of this Lodge was held in the Angel Hotel, Birkenhead, when Edward Ernest Ward Kirkby, a young gentleman (son of the S.W.) who has latterly distinguished himself at Cambridge, was initiated by the W.M., Bro. J. Griffith. After the usual business had been transacted the Lodge was called to refreshment, provided by Bro. Morton. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were then drunk, including that of Bro. Samuel Moss, V.W. P. Prov. J.G.W. of Gloucestershire and Cheshire, accompanied with the following memorandum, which was ordered to be inserted on the minutes, and a copy thereof inscribed on vellum presented to Bro. Moss:—"A portrait of our respected Treasurer, Bro. Samuel Moss, V.W. P. Prov. J.G.W., &c., in the costume of the rank he so deservedly holds in the Craft, and the expense thereof defrayed by a general subscription among the members of the Lodge. Resolved, That the same be framed and placed in the Lodge room as a continued memento of the truly fraternal esteem and regard in which Bro. Moss is held by every member of the Lodge for the devotion manifested by him in promoting its welfare, more especially for the care, attention, and ability with which he has uniformly managed the funds of the same during the last fourteen years. The Lodge at the same time desires to record its high appreciation of the merits of Bro. Moss as a distinguished Mason; its grateful and fraternal regard for him as a brother; and its sincere and heartfelt wishes that it may please the G.A.O.T.U. to bless his declining years with health and happiness—the sure concomitants of a well spent life."

DEVONSHIRE.

STONEHOUSE.—Lodge of Sincerity (No. 224).—At a regular meeting held pursuant to notices, at St. George's Hall, East Stonehouse, on Monday, Oct. the 16th, at seven o'clock, P.M., present, Bros. R. R. Rood, W.M., in the chair; Lord Graves, S.W.; Rev. G. Knowling, J.D.; Tripe, P.M., P. Prov. S.G.D., Treas.; Spence Ball, Sec.; Ridley, S.D.; Rae, J.D.; Benton, acting I.G.; Hunt, P.M.; Cole, P.M.; Dowse, P.M.; Tincoll; Cater; Walker; Kadri; and visiting brethren—Gibson, No. 270; Owen, No. 288; Watson; Vowel, No. 728, Irish Constitution; Samuels, No. 270, the Lodge being opened, the minutes of the preceding meeting were confirmed in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee of General Purposes. The bill for a perfect ashlar was ordered to be paid and a donation of £1 was voted towards the fund now raising to support the publication of the Freemasons' Magazine. Mr. John Wintherbotham Batten was then balloted for, and having been elected was introduced and initiated into the mysterious secrets of Freemasonry. The working tools were explained by the J.W. The charge was given by Bro. Tripe, and the lecture on the tracing board by the W.M. Several brethren were then proposed as joining members, and Mr. J. W. Raines as a candidate for Masonry. The Lodge was closed in peace and harmony at a quarter past nine o'clock.

TORRES.—Pleiades Lodge (No. 1012).—The annual dinner of this Lodge was holden at the Seven Stars Hotel, on the 7th instant. There was a goodly attendance of the brethren and visitors to witness the ceremony of the installation of Bro. Thos. Hunt Edmonds as Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. Bro. Edmonds was presented by Bro. J. J. Blake, P. Prov. G.W. of Surrey, and the ceremony of installation was performed in masterly style by Bro. Henry Bridges, P.M., who also had previously initiated Mr. John Heath, jun. The following are the officers for the present year:—Bros. T. H. Edmonds, W.M.; J. Powning, S.W.; J. Slatyer, J.W.; S. F. Shairp, Treas.; T. Lidstone, Sec.; Rev. Spear Cole, Chaplain; W. H. Watson, S.D.; J. Heath, J.D.; H. Bartlett, I.G.; J. Phillimore, B.C.L.; I. Marks, Steward, and J. Thomas, Tyler. All business being done, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment. The health of "The Visitors" was drunk and responded to by Bros. J. J. Blake, P. Prov. G.W. of Surrey, and Col. Morris, P.M. The brethren separated at an early hour.

DURHAM.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—St. Hilda's Lodge (No. 202).—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at Bro. Carman's, the Golden Lion, on Monday, the 10th Oct., the W.M. (Bro. Oliver) presiding, supported and assisted by Bros. Ridley, Toshach, Twizell, (No. 624); Tulloch, (No. 624); Hinde, S.W.; and Buckland, J.W. After the minutes had been read and confirmed, a ballot was taken, when three gentlemen were initiated, one passed, and two raised, into the several degrees. On the motion of Bro. Ridley, P.M., the following resolution was carried unanimously:—"That this Lodge do contribute the sum of twenty guineas as a donation to the Girls School, for the daughters of indigent and deceased Freemasons, to constitute the W.M. a life governor, so long as the Lodge exists; and also, the sum of ten guineas to the Boys School." A large, handsome, and elaborately engraved set of silver working tools, for the use of the Lodge, enclosed in a beautiful mahogany case, was presented by Bro. H. Hewison, P.M.; the present was accompanied by a letter from Bro. Hewison, expressing his inability to attend from ill health, tendering the gift in appropriate and expressive terms for the many kindnesses shown him by the brethren, more especially while presiding over them as W.M. Bro. Toshach, P.M., proposed, and Bro. Ridley, P.M., seconded, a cordial vote of thanks to Bro. Hewison, which was carried by acclamation. Bro. E. D. Cooke, of Kentucky, was present during the evening, and delivered a short address. After several propositions had been received, the Lodge was closed in due form. A Lodge of Instruction, in connexion with St. Hilda's Lodge, is held every Thursday evening at eight o'clock, in the Lodge room, Bro. Ridley, P.M., being the W.M.; Bros. Roddam, S.W.; and Buchanan, J.W.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT BERKELEY.

TUESDAY, the 4th inst., welcomed the assemblage of a numerous body of the brethren, at the Berkeley Arms, Berkeley, where the Prov. Grand Lodge was opened in due form at two o'clock.

There were present, the R.W. Bro. the Hon. James Dutton, Prov. G.M., on the throne; the V.W. Bro. Newmarch, D. Prov. G.M.; Bros. Pearce, Prov. S.G.W.; Cornwall, Prov. J.G.W.; T. G. Palmer, Prov. G. Treas.; Little, Prov. G. Chaplain; Col. F. W. F. Berkeley, M.P., Prov. G. Reg.; Trinder, Prov. G. Sec.; Cottle, Prov. G.S.D.; Gainer, Prov. G.J.D.; Wallace, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Geo. Smith, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; A. Slead, Prov. G.S.B.; J. O. Smith, Prov. G. Org.; Grist, Prov. G. Purst. All the various Lodges in the province were well represented. Amongst other brethren present were Bros. Sir M. H. Beach, Bart., Gwinnett, Brandon, Alex. Williams, &c., &c.

After the minutes had been duly read, and confirmed, the Prov. Grand Treasurer reported the funds to be in so flourishing a state that it was decided to double all the subscriptions to the Masonic charities. There was no other business, and the Prov. Grand Lodge was duly closed.

The brethren dined together afterwards, and after spending the evening in harmony and brotherly love, departed to their respective homes at an early hour.

HEREFORDSHIRE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT ROSS.

A COMMUNICATION of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Herefordshire was holden on Monday, the 10th inst., at the Royal Hotel, Ross. The R.W. and Rev. Dr. Bowles (vicar of Stanton Lacy), Prov. G.M., presided.

The Provincial Grand Lodge having been opened, the following appointments were made:—Bros. the Ven. Archdeacon Freer, Prov. S.G.W.; Daniel Fisher Collins, Prov. J.G.W.; Rev. C. Allen and Rev. W. Morriah, Prov. G. Chaplains; James Williams, Prov. G. Treas.; Frederick Davison, Prov. G. Sec.; Capt. Aynsley and Thomas Donne, Prov. G. Deacons; Capt. Peyton, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; William Phillips and A. Myers, Prov. G. Dirs. of Cers.; Francis Lewis, Prov. G.S.B.; Henry Collinson, Asst. Prov. G. Sec.; John Cheese, Prov. G. Org.; John Sparkman and A. Osborne, Prov. G. Pursts.; Edward George, William Russell, Henry Pitt, G. Harry Piper, and W. Minett, Prov. G. Stewards; John Bather and C. Geary, Prov. G. Tylers.

The routine business of the Prov. Grand Lodge having been completed, the brethren adjourned.

A dinner afterwards took place under the presidency of the Prov. Grand Master, at which about sixty or seventy gentlemen were present. We have been informed that various individuals, not members of the Craft, were admitted to this dinner party, but that nevertheless, all the usual Masonic forms were observed except the important duty of keeping the Lodge close tyled against intruders.

Dinner being over, and "Non Nobis" having been performed by the choir,

The Prov. Grand Master gave in succession, accompanying each with appropriate remarks, the health of "The Queen," and "The Prince Consort, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." These toasts were honoured with true Masonic loyalty.

The Prov. Grand Master said: I now rise to propose the health of a nobleman, to whom every Mason in England owes a direct and personal debt of gratitude. I mean my noble friend the Earl of Zetland, who fills the high and important office of Grand Master of our Order, and who is ever ready to support and extend the genuine principles of Freemasonry—principles grey with the hoar of ages, sanctioned and protected by the most dignified and illustrious characters in church and state in almost every country in Europe, and eminently calculated to unite men of the most opposite religious persuasions in the zealous and loving pursuit of one common object—the glory of God and the good of men (cheers). To submit to the powers that be, to obey the laws which yield protection, to conform to the government under which they live, to be attached to their native soil and sovereign, to encourage industry, to reward merit, and to practise universal benevolence, are the fundamental tenets of Masons. Such, brethren, is the nature of the fraternity whose origin may be dimly traced in the faint and shadowy mists of an antiquity so remote that the mystic hieroglyphics of Nineveh and Memphis have lately awakened from their sleep of ages to bear testimony to its truth, and to prove that even in the thick darkness of that olden time there glimmered a light afar off which the ancient Masons saw with the eye of faith, and towards which they groped their way by patient continuance in well doing, believing that it was a light which shone, however dimly, from their Father's house, to guide them on their way towards a better country; and being persuaded that the time would come when the whole earth should be filled with its glory!

"How favour'd are our eyes

That see this heavenly light;

Prophets and kings desired it long,

But died without the sight."

Brethren, I ask you to evince your fraternal regard and respect for our Grand Master the Earl of Zetland, and the confidence you have in his Masonic administration, by drinking his health with every possible demonstration of respect.

The Prov. Grand Master thus proposed the health of Lord Panmure, the M.W.D.G.M. of the Order:—He is a nobleman ever ready to support Lord Zetland against those somewhat unfair attacks that have recently been made in Grand Lodge by a composite Masonic party, who are everlastingly holding up their rushlight in the eyes of the Grand Lodge, exclaiming "Behold the sun!" (Cheers and laughter).

Bro. the Ven. Archdeacon Freer said the pleasure of proposing the next toast had fallen to his share. They were all deeply indebted to the Rev. Dr. Bowles, his learned, valued, and much-esteemed friend, for having accepted the office of Prov. G.M. of that province. They well knew that at the time he accepted that office, Masonry was at a low ebb within the province of Hereford; but they had only to look around them, if they did not look also to the Lodges at Hereford and Ledbury, to see the vast increase and resuscitation of Masonry which had taken place under the auspices of his rev. friend. (Applause). They were, therefore, all deeply indebted to the Prov. Grand Master. There were a few lines which struck him as being very apposite:—

"Tis this and 'tis that,

They cannot tell what,

That so many great men of the nation

Should aprons put on,

And make themselves one

With a Free and Accepted Mason."

No doubt it did create astonishment and surprise, and give rise to a considerable amount of wonder, that his rev. friend should come so many miles to hold this Lodge; that gentleman on his left should come from London and its neighbourhood; that his friends on his right should come from the centre of Worcestershire; that he himself should come from the coast of Cardigan, and others from equal distances, for that which astonished the world. Some might suppose they came merely for the sake of enjoying the banquet; others might suppose they only came to luxuriate in those habiliments and articles of clothing of which they knew not the mysterious meaning, but which they (the Masons) knew to have a deep meaning. But they had not met merely to gratify their appetites or their love of finery, nor altogether for the empty purposes of mere barren society. Freemasonry was supported by his rev. friend, and himself, and everybody else in the room, because it was a type of great and lofty objects; because, next to the inspired volume, he believed there was nothing which could afford a system more calculated to benefit mankind than Freemasonry would. (Cheers). They had but to look upon the precepts it inculcated, and obey the dictates it held forth, to study the mysterious meaning of those emblems which were announced in the lectures, to become good citizens, good subjects, honest members of society, and good Christians. They were taught to reverence the power of the supreme Architect of the Universe, and look forward to that time which sooner or later must overtake them, when this world and all upon it should pass away, when they should stand before the tribunal of the great Judge of this earth, and whatever their station had been here, high or low, rich or poor, they should all be equal as brethren. The benefits of Masonry were great and incalculable, and unknown to the uninitiated: they had been vastly increased in this province by his rev. friend who occupied the chair, and whose health he had the greatest pleasure in proposing.

The toast was honoured with the greatest enthusiasm, evinced after the peculiar fashion of the Order. When the excitement had partly lulled, the Prov. Grand Master rose to respond, and was again applauded. He then said—Brethren, it is useless to pause any longer in the vain attempt to gather up fitting words in which to express my gratitude for the enthusiastic manner in which you have received this toast. But the reception you have given me to-day shall be treasured up as long as life and memory are vouchsafed to me, in the innermost recesses of my heart, as a proof of your brotherly regard beyond all price, and as a token that my Masonic government of this province is honoured with your approval and support. (Cheers). Brethren, allow me to pass at once from myself, and proceed to the business of the day. I rejoice in being supported on this occasion by so many brethren of high social position and influence, and of great energy of character. I rejoice in having been enabled to bestow the purple upon some of those brethren who have so zealously and efficiently aided me in infusing new life and vigour into our Lodges; and I gladly avail myself of this opportunity of expressing my most grateful acknowledgments to every one of those gentlemen, and more especially to my venerable friend and brother, Archdeacon Freer, to whom we are all so deeply indebted. (Applause). I would also congratulate you upon the rapid advance which Masonry is making in this province; and permit me to add that I shall anxiously look for those works of charity and love which are the graceful and fitting result of such an advancement. Brethren, I cannot too earnestly impress upon your minds that benevolence is the central principle of Masonry, and that works of goodness are the only works which the Great Architect of the universe will recognize when His voice breaks the long silence of the centuries, and he comes to give to every Mason his hire, beginning from the last unto the first. Conceive of Masonry in this spirit, and then you will perceive that it is not a dream, but a reality befitting the gospel of human brotherhood. (Great applause). It does not consist, as some men imagine, in a social gathering like the present, nor in a set of ancient formularies, transmitted to us by far back ages; neither does it consist in the jewels which glitter on the breasts of some of the brethren around me. No, these are but the types and symbols of our Masonic faith; and the brother who is content to slumber behind these decorative types and suggestive symbols, is but half a Mason—dwarfed and stunted in his Masonic growth; and his Masonic clothing and decorations, however gorgeous and attractive to the eye, are but as the swaddling bands with which, in darker times, the human body was compressed. It cannot be too frequently repeated, that brotherhood is the Mason's work—that deeds and not decorations make the Mason. Let us act upon these great Masonic truths, and instead of being so anxious to be invested with the purple, and to have these symbolic jewels placed upon our breasts, let us be more anxious to have the eternal truths which they typify so ingrafted in our souls that they may entwine themselves with our Masonic consciousness, and become the governing principle of our lives. In addition to the good works we do in Lodge, let us sanctify social meetings like the present, by doing some deeds of unselfishness and charity, and thus transform and elevate even these low things of earth, our meat and drink, by spiritualizing them into means of charity and brotherly love. In other words, let us prove to those without that Masonry is to do good; to sow broadcast the seed of active and large hearted benevolence, and to sow in faith, with a thorough conviction that there is no blight or mildew which can turn the harvest of our benevolence into a failure, and that in the long eternity which lies before the soul, every grain will come up again with an increase of thirty, sixty, or an hundred fold. (Much applause). Act thus, brethren, and when you go to that place where your Masonic works will follow you, and stand before Him who has declared that He will not be unmindful of our works and labour that proceedeth of love shown for His name's sake, you shall enter into that Eternal Lodge which is glittering with pearls and gold, and radiant with uncreated splendour; you shall behold the Great Architect and Ruler of the universe, seated upon the celestial throne, clothed in light and glory, and you shall hear the joyful words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." (Renewed and long-continued plaudits followed this speech).

Bro. Davison, Prov. G. Sec., proposed better health to the R.W. Bro. H. Seymour Westmacott, the D. Prov. G.M. of Herefordshire, who was taken suddenly and seriously ill on his way to join this party.

The Prov. Grand Master returned thanks in eloquent and touching language for the absent Brother: he had been honoured with Bro. Westmacott's friendship for many years, and he joined most heartily in the wish that it would please God to spare his life. (Applause).

Bro. Luckes, Prov. G.D. of Gloucestershire, proposed the health of the Provincial Grand Masters of England, and, as secretary to the charities in his province, adverted to some instances in which their administration had been productive of the most beneficial results.

The Prov. Grand Master said: This will be my last appearance before you on the present occasion, and as I apologize for again intruding, I hope you will listen while I propose the next toast. I should not have risen to propose it if I had not felt that I should have been wanting in duty to those Prov. Grand Officers who have given me such efficient support, if I deputed anybody to propose it. It is "The health of the Provincial Grand Officers," and I shall couple with it the name of my excellent and venerable friend, Archdeacon Freer. I do not couple his name with this toast on account of his wealth and station, for these are mere accidental accompaniments, which in themselves have no claim to our respect; but I do so on account of his personal qualities, his intellectual and moral worth, his frank, generous, and true heart, his strength of principle, and his dignity of character. Brethren, allow me to express my earnest desire and hope that you will receive this toast with acclamation, for it is such men as the Archdeacon who will, in God's good time, become fellow-workers with Him, in bringing about the brotherhood of nations.

Bro. the Ven. Archdeacon Freer, in responding briefly to the toast, said he was not ashamed to avow that he was very much gratified to find that he was somewhat of a favourite among them. If he had acquired that favour, and with it a share in their good will and sympathy, he knew he owed it but to one cause—an earnest endeavour to act up to the performance of his duty. There was one little secret which he had always endeavoured to act upon in his transactions with other persons; and that was to put himself in their position, and to endeavour as much as he could to "do unto others as ye would they should do unto you." That simple rule, if acted upon, would make them all general favourites with one another. He had permission to propose "The Provincial Grand Wardens and other Grand Officers," who occupied situations of the highest importance in Masonry, and deserved the warmest acknowledgments for their services.

The toast was acknowledged by Bros. Warner, Donne, and Aynsley, for the "Palladian," "Vitruvian," and "Loyal Eastnor" Lodges.

The Rev. Bro. Allen proposed "The health of the Visitors," which was responded to by Bro. the Rev. T. H. Bird.

Some other toasts followed, and the harmony of the meeting was prolonged with unmitigated enthusiasm, until the Prov. Grand Master vacated the chair.

KENT.

GRAVESEND.—Lodge of Freedom (No. 91).—On Monday evening the brethren of this Lodge held their usual meeting at the Town Hall, Gravesend. The attendance of the brethren was numerous. Bro. Pottinger, W.M., presided, assisted by Bros. J. J. Everist, Sec. pro. tem. and S.W.; Thos. Nettingham, J.W.; F. Nettingham, S.D.; E. Bryant, J.D.; E. Hill, I.G. Bro. Cramcour was raised to the third degree; and Mr. Henry G. Farr was initiated into the secret mysteries of Free masonry, by the W.M.: after which the Treasurer stated that the office of Secretary was vacant. The W.M. gave up his right of nomination to the office, and the consequence was that Bro. Spencer, P. Prov. G.J.W., was unanimously elected. Three gentlemen were then proposed, and ordered to be placed on the next Lodge summonses to be balloted for, and, if accepted, to be initiated. The Lodge having been duly closed, the brethren adjourned to supper at Bro. Seager's, the Nelson Inn. To the toast of the visitors, Bro. Roseborough Sharnan returned thanks. He said he had been much pleased with the mode in which the Lodge business had been conducted. It spoke well for the condition of Masonry in the province that, in so small a place as Gravesend, so large a number of brethren could be got together at an ordinary Lodge meeting.

LANCASHIRE (EAST).

BURY.—Lodge of Relief (No. 50).—The usual monthly meeting of this old established Lodge was held on Thursday evening, the 13th instant, at the Hare and Hounds Inn, Bro. John Redfern, P.M., acting as W.M.; Bro. John Parks, S.W.; and Bro. George M. Tweddell officiating as J.W.; when two brethren were passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and a candidate (for whom a unanimous ballot had been taken on the previous Lodge night) was initiated into the Order. A joining member and a new candidate were proposed to be balloted for at the next meeting, after which the brethren adjourned for refreshment, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given. In the course of the evening, Bro. Wardhaugh being called upon for a song or recitation, said that he was sorry that he was no singer, but he had no objection to recite a song which he had just composed, and which he accordingly gave, in his usual excellent manner.

LANCASHIRE (WEST).

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT LIVERPOOL.

A Provincial Grand Lodge was holden on Tuesday, the 11th instant, at the Temple, Hope-street. Although there are twenty-eight Lodges in the province, returns were made from only twenty-four. The R.W. Bro. Sir Thos. Hesket, Bart., D. Prov. G.M., presided, and the following Prov. Grand Officers also attended:—Bros. Thos. Littledale, Prov. S.G.W.; Samuel Y. Hess, Prov. J.G.W.; Joshua Walmsley, Prov. G. Treas.; Rev. John Dunkley, Prov. G. Chaplain; Hugh Edwards, Prov. G. Reg.; Thos. Wylie, Prov. G. Sec.; Lord Skelmersdale, Prov. S.G.D.; William Davis, P. Prov. J.G.D.; Peter Maddox, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Joseph Hamer, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Joseph T. Bourne, Prov. G.S.B.; Horatio Cambell, P. Prov. G. Purs.; John Mulineux, Prov. G. Org.; Samuel P. Brabner, Prov. G. Purs.; W. Allender, Prov. G. Steward; Mason, Prov. G. Sec.; Pepper, Prov. G. Sec.; Wearing, Prov. G. Sec.; and H. S. Alpass, Prov. G. Sec.

There were also present upwards of one hundred and twenty other brethren from the various Lodges in the province.

The Prov. Grand Lodge having been opened in due form, Lord Skelmersdale was appointed Prov. S.G.D. by the D. Prov. Grand Master. The musical brethren sang the late Bro. Mulineux's anthem, "To heaven's high Architect all praise," followed by solemn prayer, Bro. the Rev. John Dunkley acting as the Provincial Grand Chaplain.

The Lodge then proceeded to business. Bro. Thos. Wylie, Prov. G. Sec., read the minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge, in which reference was made to the purchase of land in Hope-street, for £1,600, for the erection of a Masonic hall. An announcement was made to the Prov. Grand Lodge that a few of the brethren had subscribed a sum for the purpose of presenting Mrs. Margaret Swift, of Liverpool, with a handsome dressing case, in acknowledgment of the great and uniform interest she had taken in the progress and dissemination of the principles of Freemasonry; of her support of the Educational Fund of that province; and of her contribution towards the funds for the building a Masonic hall. They wished in that public way to bring the present before the brethren of the province.

Bro. Davis, P. Prov. S.G.D., proposed that the sum of fifty guineas be given towards the erection of a Masonic hall in Liverpool, and also that the sum of twenty-five guineas be given towards the alteration of the Temple. The resolution was seconded by Bro. Alpass, Prov. G. Steward, and was carried unanimously.

Bro. Wylie, Prov. G. Sec., then read the following report of the Prov. Grand Lodge proceedings for the present year, in which there was nothing of importance but the addition of another Lodge, increasing the number in the province to twenty-eight. A warrant of constitution had been granted for a Lodge at West Derby, under the title of the Croxteth Lodge, No. 1,088, to Bro. Charles M. Marshall, but owing to his severe indisposition and subsequent removal from this part of the country, the warrant was returned to the Prov. Grand Lodge, but was subsequently granted to Bro. John Lord Howard, P. Prov. S.G.D. of Cheshire. The province had again to deplore the loss of one of its able past officers, by the lamented death of Bro. Alexander C. Jeffrey, Prov. G. Sword Bearer, whose brotherly kindness and charity were proverbial, and won for him the grateful acknowledgments of numbers of persons who are still recipients of his bounty and the assistance which his kind and benevolent disposition secured for them. Of him it might indeed be said that he caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. By a communication from Grand Lodge it would be found that Bros. Page and Golpel have been permitted to join the assemblies of their brethren after an absence of nearly thirty years. There had been no meetings of the committee of the Benevolent Fund during the last year, though they had received a petition from Bro. Berry, P.M., who had unfortunately suffered great distress through becoming bond for a relation. The sum of five guineas was voted to him. The sum of ten guineas was voted to the Boys School, and a similar sum to the Girls School, London.

Bro. Walmsley, Prov. G. Treas., moved "That the sum of fifty guineas be given next year towards the funds for the erection of the intended hall." He was sorry to say that the whole of the Lodges in the town had not yet gone to the hall to hold their meetings, had they all done so the expenses of the hall would be much lessened. He could not see the reason why any should hold back. He also drew the attention of the brethren to the case of Miss Day, whose father had not been long enough belonging to the Order to entitle her to the benefit of the funds of the West Lancashire Institution, and desired that something should be done for her.

Bro. Gambell, P. Prov. G. Purst., knew Bro. Day, who had died suddenly, and an effort was being made to place his daughter to some business by which she would be enabled ultimately to get her living. He concluded by moving that the sum of five guineas be given her out of the Prov. Grand Lodge funds, which was seconded and carried.

Bro. Wylie, Prov. G. Sec., called the attention of the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master to the very indifferent manner in which some of the books of Lodges were kept. He believed one or two brethren had been omitted from the list of those contributing towards the educational fund. He therefore suggested that an alphabetical list of the names of all members of a Lodge be kept. He could not refrain from stating that the register, books, and returns of the Merchants Lodge, No. 294, reflected the highest credit for the manner in which they had been kept.

Bro. Walmsley was then elected Prov. G. Treas. for the ensuing year. The Prov. Grand Lodge was then resolved into a court of governors of the West Lancashire Institution for the Education and Advancement in Life of Children of Distressed Masons.

Bro. Gambell read the minutes of the institution, in which mention was made of the various sums granted to the children who were the objects of its charity. Bro. Fenton had been chosen to supply the place of Bro. Jeffrey, deceased, as medical adviser to the institution. Bro. Collins was reelected solicitor to the town; Bro. Brabner was reappointed Treasurer, and Bro. Gambell was then reappointed Prov. G. Secretary.

Bro. Walmsley said he felt great pleasure in moving a vote of thanks to Bro. Gambell for his active and energetic services to the institution. He appeared to be never ceasing in his labours for the charity, and every one must know that the attention required for office must occupy a vast amount of time and entail a great deal of labour, which Bro. Gambell always gave most cheerfully. No one in the province, he was satisfied, worked as hard as he did.

Bro. Younghusband had much pleasure in seconding the proposition, for he said night after night they would find Bro. Gambell labouring in that building in behalf of the institution, and for the Order in general. He knew of no man who worked so laboriously. Bro. Younghusband, seconded by Bro. Wylie, then moved a vote of thanks to the committee and officers of the educational institution, which was carried unanimously.

Bro. Brabner, the Treasurer, read a statement of the accounts of the institution, which showed that upwards of £156 had that day been received from the various Lodges towards the funds, making the amount then in hand for purposes of education, £3,000.

Bro. Hamer, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera., proposed, and Bro. Lambert seconded, that instead of one general balance sheet, each Lodge should have a balance sheet of its own, printed at the expense of the funds of the institution, which resolution was carried.

Bro. Walmsley afterwards called the attention of the brethren to the invaluable services of Bro. Gambell, for whom a subscription had been set on foot, to present him with a testimonial worthy of his zealous services, but he had obstinately refused to receive anything. It was afterwards suggested to present Mrs. Gambell with a silver sea service, but this had also been denied them by Bro. Gambell, who at length said if the brethren persisted in their intention, he would withdraw from any active connexion with the institution, or with the business of the province. Now, as they could not possibly think of injuring his feelings, or dispensing with his services, they therefore asked him his advice in reference to the money subscribed, and he replied that they would best consult his feelings if they would devote the amount exclusively to Masonic purposes. Under these circumstances the brethren had no alternative but to return the money subscribed, or pay it into the funds of the institution, and elect Bro. Gambell president of the institution, which would cost fifty guineas to make him a life member; Bro. Younghusband therefore proposed, and Bro. Maudsley seconded, that Bro. Gambell be elected president of the institution, which was carried unanimously.

This concluded the business of the Prov. Grand Lodge, which was then closed in ancient form.

Upwards of eighty of the brethren afterwards dined at the Adelphi Hotel, under the presidency of Bro. Thomas Littledale, Prov. S.G.W., in the absence of the Prov. Grand Master from illness, and of the D. Prov. Grand Master from a previous engagement. The usual complimentary speeches were made, and a pleasant evening was spent.

LIVERPOOL.—St. John's Lodge (No. 971).—On Wednesday evening, the 5th instant, the brethren of this Lodge held their usual monthly meeting at the Caledonian Hotel, Duke-street. There was a large attendance of visiting brethren, amongst whom were—Bros. Richard Spurning, No. 245; Hy. Spurning, No. 310; M. Atkinson, No. 294; J. Swift, No. 310; P. Le. Bantiller, No. 722, Jersey; J. C. Banister, P.M., No. 267, W.M., No. 56, Prov. G. D.; James Woods, No. 360; F. J. Audsley, J.W., No. 360; Thomas Page, No. 294; E. Hughes, No. 179. Mr. Richard Picking and Mr. John Mines were initiated by the W.M., Bro. W. T. May, in a masterly manner; who afterwards passed Bros. Jones, Thomas Kay, and P. Le Bantiller, to the degree of Fellow Craft. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Lodge was reduced to the first degree, when the brethren were called from labour to refreshment. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and heartily responded to. In giving the health of Bro. Le Gendre N. Starkie, R.W. Prov. G.M. of West Lancashire, the W.M. said he had hoped that the health of the Prov. G.M. would have admitted of his being present on Tuesday at the Prov. G. Lodge, for all regretted his absence from their annual gathering. The health of Bro. Sir Thomas Hesketh, was afterwards given. Bro. Weidam proposed success to the West Lancashire Masonic Institution for the education and advancement of children of distressed Masons, which was warmly received. In urging the claims of the institution he expressed a hope that every brother would contribute towards the funds. For the small sum of five shillings per annum three children were entitled to the benefits of the institution. They would find that the claims of those entitled to benefit had been most promptly attended to, and a more deserving charity could not be found beyond the Craft. He instanced the case of one deceased brother who had left two children, but who were not claimants on the funds from the fact that the father had not subscribed his five shillings. In conclusion, he hoped every one would come forward and subscribe in behalf of so noble and excellent an institution. (Applause). The healths of the newly initiated brethren were afterwards given, those of the officers of the Lodge and the visiting brethren. The W.M. read several petitions for relief, at the conclusion of which liberal allowances were made for their less fortunate brethren and connexions. The Lodge was then closed in harmony.

SUFFOLK.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT WOODBRIDGE.

THIS Prov. Grand Lodge was holden on Wednesday, the 12th inst., at Woodbridge, and was numerously attended. The weather being unfortunately very wet, prevented the demonstration from being so imposing as it otherwise would have been, and the number of spectators was consequently much smaller.

The business of the day commenced by the Board of Finance sitting at the Bull Inn, Bro. Freeman, D. Prov. G.M., in the chair, when the accounts were audited previous to being submitted to Grand Lodge for confirmation.

At the Lecture Hall in St. John-street, the Prov. Grand Lodge was opened in due form, and with solemn prayer, by the Grand Registrar, Bro. F. Roxburgh, acting as Prov. Grand Master.

The Prov. Grand Secretary stated that no return had been received for two years from the Lodge of Fidelity (No. 813), and the Prov. Grand Master requested the Secretary to summon that Lodge, to show cause why they were not represented.

The minutes of the last Prov. Grand Lodge, held on the 24th Sept. 1858, as well as those of a Special Prov. Grand Lodge held 16th February, 1859, were read and confirmed. The proposed code of by-laws were put to the Lodge seriatim, and agreed to.

The report of the Finance Board, held in the morning, was read and adopted.

The Prov. Grand Master said the next matter he had to bring before them was the state of the Masonic charities.

The D. Prov. Grand Master read a letter from Bro. Symonds, stating his inability to attend that day, and requesting that the resolutions as proposed by Bro. Symonds might be read and introduced into the province of Suffolk.

It was moved that the Worshipful Master of every Lodge in the province, having made their returns to Prov. Grand Lodge, be members of the Provincial Committee for promoting the interest of the four Masonic charities, and that each Lodge be informed thereof.

The Prov. Grand Master then appointed his officers as follows:—Bros. Rev. F. W. Freeman, D. Prov. G.M.; Spencer Freeman, Prov. S.G.W.; John Gissing, Prov. J.G.W.; Richard F. Jennings, Prov. G. Reg.; Rev. R. N. Sanderson, Prov. G. Chaplain; Edward Dorling, Prov. G. Sec.; Neeve, Prov. S.G.D.; Noble, Prov. J.G.D.; Luff, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Bays, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera.; Findley, Prov. G. Asst. Dir. of Cera.; Ball, Prov. G. Org.; Sams, Prov. G.S.B.; Randall, Prov. G. Purst.; Bros. Wilmhurst, Ward, Corder, Harrison, Grey, and Goodall, Prov. G. Stewards.

The Provincial Grand Lodge, all business being concluded, was then adjourned in due form.

The brethren proceeded to the fine old church of St. Mary's; where prayers were read by Bro. the Rev. Edward Carwitham, Prov. G. Chaplain, Essex. The sermon was preached by Bro. the Rev. R. N. Sanderson, second master of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School at Ipswich. The preacher took for his text 1 Kings, c. vi., v. 7, "And the house when it was in building was built of stone, made ready before it was brought thither; so that there was neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building." Upon this text the rev brother delivered an admirable and eloquent discourse, which we hope to lay before our readers at an early opportunity.

The brethren could not fail to be struck with the beauty of the fine east window, presented by the late D. Prov. Grand Master for the province—Bro. George Thomas, of Woodbridge, who was an excellent and liberal supporter of Freemasonry.

The brethren returned in procession to the Lodge, where a collection was made for the Provincial Fund of Benevolence, and the Lodge was then closed in due form.

At the dinner in the afternoon, which was held at the Corn Exchange, Bro. F. Roxburgh, Grand Registrar, presided over an assemblage of brethren numbering about one hundred.

After the dinner the Grand Registrar gave "The Queen"—coupling with it, "The Craft," "The Prince Consort the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." His Royal Highness the Prince Consort was a warm supporter of the arts and sciences. He had sedulously devoted himself to those matters—which Masons so much prized.

The Grand Registrar then gave "The M.W.G.M. the Earl of Zetland." He was glad they were ruled over by a nobleman possessing such high and distinguished qualities. And he was glad to say further—that which he could not say the last time he had the honour of addressing them—that he was free from the attacks of those who sought to detract from his merits. The Craft now fully appreciated the worth of their Grand Master; but they were, after all, not fully aware of the time, patience, perseverance, and attention that the noble lord gave to the business of Freemasonry. He (the Prov. Grand Registrar) said "last time," in reference to the slanderous and calumniating remarks which were made in a publication afterwards repudiated, as he knew it would be, by the province of Suffolk. The dissensions—if he might so term them—existing in Grand Lodge had, he hoped, for ever ceased; and he fervently trusted they might proceed, under the rule of so amiable, courteous, and honourable a Grand Master with the great business of Freemasonry, without discussion leading to no particular result. Grand Lodge used to last beyond eleven o'clock, and the discussions therein were not often found conducive to practical utility. The time occupied in the business of the Craft was not used as it might have been. The last time Grand Lodge met, however, the business on the paper was over by half-past nine o'clock. The Craft, he repeated, fully appreciated the merits of the noble lord their Grand Master. He hoped, then, that there would always remain on the Masonic throne of England one so competent and so fitted in every way for the distinguished office he held as was the Earl of Zetland. The Grand Registrar said that the Queen herself could no more carry on the government of the country by herself without competent ministers, then could the Grand Master carry on his business in Freemasonry without competent officers. He deemed that the Grand Master had acted wisely in selecting for his deputy so able a man as Lord Panmure, than whom no one could better discharge the duties of his high office. He was sure he was speaking the sentiments of the brethren, when he said that no one endeavoured more, so far as in them laid, to perform their duties zealously and faithfully than did his lordship and the Grand Officers of England. It was a most serious duty to select from so many brethren on whom to confer the honour of Grand Officers. The Grand Master, he believed, endeavoured to exercise the strictest impartiality in selecting only those who were most likely and best calculated to advance the interests of the Craft. And those chosen, he believed, were anxious and determined to discharge their duties to the best of their ability. So long as they did so they would obtain not only the support of the particular provinces to which they belonged, but to the Craft at large. He would couple with the toast of "Lord Panmure and the Grand Officers of England," the name of Bro. Scott, Past Grand Deacon of England, an excellent supporter of the charities, and one who was a very zealous attendant in the discharge of his duties, especially in his Lodge (Antiquity). He was a Past Master of two years' standing, and he need only add that they had but to know him to appreciate him.

Bro. W. P. Scott briefly responded, sincerely thanking them for a compliment he feared he did not deserve. He believed the Grand Officers were anxious to discharge their duties, and that they succeeded. As for the attacks on the Grand Master, which had been spoken of, he felt that that nobleman could afford to bear them, because he knew and felt, that after all, he had done his duty. As for himself, he felt that he had but performed his duty imperfectly—still he thanked them for their kind reception of his name.

Bro. the Rev. F. W. Freeman, D. Prov. G.M., of Suffolk, said it was his duty to introduce the toast of "The Grand Registrar of England," now acting as their Prov. Grand Master. They were considerably indebted to him for the care and attention which he had bestowed upon the province since it had been under his charge. He for one appreciated his actions, and he was sure the whole of the brethren in the province coincided with him. Since they last met, it had been his duty to call them together in February to consider a charge made against them as a body in the province of Suffolk. But still he believed that that charge was not levelled against them so much as against him who occupied the chair, and those who attended with him. He (the speaker) did not regret the part that he had taken in the matter; on the contrary, he rejoiced at it, for it gave him an opportunity of meeting with the brother who made the charge, and of obtaining the most ample explanation of the matter. He hoped they were not likely to have a recurrence of unseemly discussion in Grand Lodge; three or four times that he had been there, he had been exceedingly disgusted at the manner in which matters had gone on, whilst the real business of the Craft had been neglected, because certain brethren tried to show off their ability and eloquence. He believed there was not a more upright man in the councils of the Craft than the Grand Registrar of England. (Hear, hear). He called on them, then, to hail his name with all due honour—for he was sure he deserved it.

The Grand Registrar returned thanks, saying that no task combined pleasure and pain more than did the response to this toast—pleasure on account of the generous manner in which they had received the mention of his name, and pain that he could not adequately express the satisfaction which their reception had given him, not only now but during the whole time the province of Suffolk had been under his charge. During that time he could assure them that his office had been rendered anything but disagreeable. It had been most grateful to him to preside over the province, and the courtesy and kindness he had experienced had been such that the termination of his connexion with them—necessary as it was—could not be looked upon by him but with extreme regret. Still he felt proud to say that he desired it to be terminated; for he held it to be good for the province that it should have as its head its own Prov. Grand Master. He would do all in his power to procure a good and fitting representative, whose actions would be beneficial to the province and to the Craft. It was not because he felt the office a laborious one, nor its duties irksome, that he suggested the desirability of a change. But it was because he thought it would be better for the province; and he could assure them that whenever his efforts could be of service to them either as their representative in Grand Lodge or in any other way, those services would always be at their command. He trusted that the province would soon have a ruler of its own, who would be of service to it in every way. He assured them it would give him pain to leave them, but it would also give him pleasure to leave them under the care of a fitting successor.

The Grand Registrar next gave the "D. Prov. G.M. and Officers of the province," complimenting them on their energy and efficiency. No one could have attended more zealously to his duties and to the interests of the Craft than the worthy D. Prov. Grand Master. Indeed he had taken such care that no province in England was better worked or better regulated than the province of Suffolk. Their best thanks, therefore, were due to him.

Bro. the Rev. F. W. Freeman returned thanks for the complimentary manner in which his name had been received, which had really deprived him of words adequate to express his feelings. Still, however much he might feel his inability—at the same time he held an honest desire to promote as far as he could the interests of Freemasonry, especially in that province. In fact its interests were dear to him as his life's blood. He loved them as he loved his own brother. He was exceedingly attached to the working of Masonry; and he would never allow anything that he could possibly prevent to interfere with his attendance at a Masonic meeting. He had hoped to make the round of the different Lodges in the province. He did start, and he was stopped by two or three Lodges. But now as winter was coming on, they might perhaps receive him with more cordiality. If they saw the pleasing countenance of their Master, it might at least gladden if it did not enlighten. He at any rate was anxious to pour into their wounds the oil of human kindness, and to instil into them a little patience and perseverance.

The Grand Registrar next gave "The Visitors." They had visitors from London, to whom he was sure they gave a hearty reception. He was personally very glad to see them.—Bro. Cockle, a member of his old Lodge; Bro. Ireland, the eminent instructor in Freemasonry, second to very few; and Bro. East, who represented the Freemasons' Magazine. Of the Magazine he would say, that so long as it continued the course it had already pursued, in detailing for the information of the Craft at large, the proceedings of Grand Lodge fairly, honestly, and truly, and in comments upon them also in a fair and manly spirit, it would receive the support of the Craft. He might add, that in recommending it to their support, he recommended it as the organ of the Craft at large. It was highly desirable that they should have some reliable organ in Masonic matters; and not only this, but one which would give the Craft all information on matters relating to Freemasonry. (Hear, hear). The course adopted by the Magazine of late must have been such as to recommend it. It was not for him to advise them, that was not his business, they must judge for themselves, but for himself he thought the Magazine reported the proceedings faithfully, and deserved support, not only in the provinces but in London. (Hear, hear.)

The toast having been warmly received, Bro. Cockle highly complimented the province of Suffolk on the help it had rendered to the cause of Freemasonry; and regretting the discussions which had taken place, and which had been adverted to, hoped they should never see them repeated. He trusted, in conclusion, that they all heartily and willingly recognized the manner in which the business of Grand Lodge was managed by the M.W.G.M. and all his officers. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. Ireland assured them, in returning thanks, that it gave him the greatest pleasure to visit such a Provincial Grand Lodge.

Bro. East returned thanks on behalf of the proprietors of the Freemasons' Magazine, assuring the brethren that it was their earnest and increasing endeavour to render their publication in every way deserving the support of the Craft.

The Grand Registrar next gave "The Provincial Grand Officers of the present year." They had been appointed under the belief that they were in every way fitted for the offices to which they had been appointed, and for the business of the promotion of the interests of the Craft in that province—as such he hoped they would give satisfaction. (Hear, hear). In making the appointments he had an eye to the province working well. He hoped they would not accuse him of being martinetish when he said that he should like to see the province of Suffolk second to none, either in Grand Lodge or in any other way throughout the Order.

Bro. Freeman, Prov. Grand S.W. and Bro. Gissing, Prov. Grand J.W., briefly returned thanks, acknowledging the compliment which had been paid them: the latter brother expressing a hope that subscriptions would increase so as to enable them to do more for the widows and for the boys schools. (Hear, hear).

The Grand Registrar next gave the "Prov. Grand Officers:" one of them had been especially known to him, and whom everybody who knew him esteemed—Bro. Head. (Hear, hear). He compared that brother to Dickens's character of Cheeryble.

Bro. Head, in returning thanks, urged on them all attention to the charities. If they would only let him have their votes, he would look after getting in the candidates. Provide them with the money only, and the candidates should be provided for. (Hear, hear). He complimented Bro. Aldrich upon being as anxious as any brother in the Craft about the charities. He looked upon the girls' school as the best establishment in the kingdom. Last week they had admitted twenty-eight boys, twelve to be elected on the 17th—making altogether sixty-eight—all within a few months. (Hear, hear). They had added to the building, and had expended £1200 lately. He was anxious that it should stand as high as the other school, and he hoped they would work to that end. (Cheers).

The Grand Registrar then proposed the health of the Prov. Grand Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. R. N. Sanderson, who gave them such an excellent sermon last year, and who had so kindly performed a similar generous office in the present. It was not often they found from the pulpit—at any rate from so young a man—such discourses as they had heard on those two occasions. (Hear, hear.) They should ever appreciate them from their rarity. He should request permission for that sermon to be printed on behalf of the province itself. A sermon more eloquent it would be difficult to hear. He was delighted to think that their Prov. Grand Chaplain had fulfilled his office with so much credit to himself.

The reverend brother in returning thanks said, that it was the second time he had had occasion to respond to the toast of his health, and it was the second time he had been asked to permit his sermon to be printed. He had been received by the brethren with very great kindness, which he attributed more to their benevolence than to his own merits. It was a great honour conferred upon him that the Prov. Grand Lodge offered to take the sermon out of his hands, with his permission, and to print it. If they thought it so worthy, it was theirs, and he hoped it would prove acceptable. To the Prov. G.M. he returned his sincere thanks, for it was not the first time he had experienced his courtesy and kindness. And he would next turn to the brethren and say, that he came amongst them as it were a stranger, but as a brother, and as such he was received. Nay, he would say that he had never failed to meet with that brotherly feeling, kindness, goodwill, and thorough goodheartedness, which every Mason hoped to meet with at the hands of the brethren of the Craft. He assured them they might rely on his serving the Order to the best of his ability, and especially in the province of Suffolk.

The Grand Registrar then proposed the health of "The Prov. G. Sec.," Bro. Dorling. (Cheers). Circumstances had induced that respected brother to tender his resignation. But it was an honest compliment to Bro. Dorling to say that those circumstances scarcely justified him in taking the step of tendering his resignation. He (the Grand Registrar) deemed it beneath an excellent officer and a Mason, like Bro. Dorling, to take umbrage at some petty expressions which had fallen and to treat the matter as one of consequence. He felt convinced that though Bro. Dorling might feel, and not without reason for the moment, that expressions had been used which were both painful and improper, yet he did not feel himself justified in accepting Bro. Dorling's resignation, and felt happy to have the opportunity of proposing his health as Prov. G. Sec. (Cheers). The manner in which they had received this mention of the act which he had performed in declining to accept Bro. Dorling's resignation, told him how that act was justified. He believed that he had acted in accordance with the feelings of the province at large. He held it to be a principle in Masonry as in the law, in the army, or in the navy, to keep good and true officers so long as they could; for they might get worse where, perhaps, it would not be easy to find better. As to Bro. Dorling in his office, he had pleasure in saying they could not well get a better man. He had done much indeed for the province. They knew him, perhaps, better than he himself did—but he doubted much whether any of them could appreciate his services more than he did—and therefore he heartily proposed his health. (Loud cheers).

Bro. Dorling, in reply, said that for ten years he had received their kind consideration. For ten years he had fulfilled the duties of his office without a hitch of any description to mar them. He certainly had felt certain remarks that had been made very keenly; and he had in consequence thought it right to tender his resignation, in order that they might elect some one in his place. He had done the best in his power for the Craft, and he hoped he should live for many years longer to perform them with credit to himself and honour to the province of Suffolk. (Loud cheers). Nothing gratified him more than to see the Craft flourishing. Nothing that he could do would afford him higher satisfaction than to feel that he was at any time of service to them; and he trusted that they would find him ever desirous of performing his duty to the province and the Craft in general.

Two or three minor toasts followed, after which the proceedings terminated in harmony and peace.

SUSSEX.

BRIGHTON.—Royal York Lodge (No. 394).—A Lodge of Emergency was held at the Old Ship Hotel, on Tuesday evening last, when Messrs. Robinson, Longhurst, and T. Ancock were initiated by Bro. Moppett, W.M., into the secrets and mysteries of Freemasonry. This Lodge, under improved management, is making steady progress, and bids fair to take high rank in the province.

BRIGHTON.—Royal Brunswick Lodge (No. 1084).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 13th inst., at the Old Ship Hotel. The Lodge was opened at five o'clock by the W.M., Bro. John Bacon, P. Prov. S.G.W., who was supported by Bro. Ambrosini, Prov. G. Steward, as S.W.; Bro. E. Martin, J.W.; Bro. Freeman, Prov. G. Supt. of Works, S.D.; Bro. R. Legg, J.D.; Bro. Wilkinson, P.M. No. 338, Sec.; Bro. Corder, I.G. The minutes of the previous meeting having received confirmation, the Lodge was opened in the second and third degrees, when Bro. Langworthy was admitted and raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The Lodge was resumed in the first degree and closed. The brethren then adjourned to refreshment. Among the visitors were Bros. Scott, W.M. No. 338, and Prov. J.G.D.; Moppett, W.M. No. 394, and Prov. Grand Asst. Dir. of Cers.; E. J. Farmer, P.M. No. 338; Tatham, S.W. No. 338; Wood, P.M. No. 394, and P. Prov. S.G.D.; Stuckey, P.M. No. 338; Curtis, J.W. No. 394; Hearle, No. 338; Booty, No. 338; Ransford, jun., London; Bull, No. 394; Cunningham, No. 394, &c. The usual toasts having been disposed of, Bro. Pocock, G.S.B., and Prov. G. Sec., replying to the health of the "D.G.M. and Officers of Grand Lodge," the W.M. gave the "Past and Present Provincial Grand Officers," coupled with the name of Bro. Furner, and expressing the obligation of the Sussex brethren to that body of officers for the successful efforts made to reconstitute Masonry in the province. Bro. Furner replied and expressed his pleasure at witnessing that evening the admirable working of the Brunswick Lodge. "The Visitors," coupled with the name of Bro. Scott, was next given from the chair, to which Bro. Scott at some length replied, bearing testimony to the worth of the Brighton Lodge of Masonic Instruction, and the proficiency attained by the Brunswick brethren. The gavel was then entrusted to Bro. Pocock, Prov. G. Sec., who pleasingly introduced the health of the W.M., referring to his industry in behalf of Masonry and his great zeal for the prosperity of Lodge No. 1084. The W.M. returned thanks in one of his usual happy speeches. The "Officers of the Brunswick Lodge," responded to by Bro. Bonner, I.G., and the "Tyler's toast" followed, and an agreeable evening was brought to a conclusion.

WARWICKSHIRE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT SUTTON COLDFIELD.

THE Provincial Grand Lodge assembled at Sutton Coldfield, on Tuesday, October 11th, under the presidency of the Prov. Grand Master, Lord Leigh.

The Prov. Grand Lodge having been opened in due form, his lordship proceeded to appoint his Officers for the year ensuing, as follows:—Bros. Chandos Wren Hoskyns, D. Prov. G.M.; Clerk, Prov. S.G.W.; Robins, Prov. J.G.W.; Bedford and Dickens, Prov. G. Chaplains; Wm. Lloyd, Prov. G. Treas.; Overill, Prov. G. Reg.; W. R. Kettle, Prov. G. Sec.; L. Cohen, Assist. Prov. G. Sec.; L. Linyard and Bromwich, Prov. G. Deacons; C. W. Elkington, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; J. H. Bedford, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Blake, Assist. Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Weiss, Prov. G.S.B.; Hudson, Prov. G. Org.; Read, Prov. G. Standard Bearer; Briggs, Prov. G. Purst.; Cope, Hewett, and Collins, Prov. G. Tylers.

After the appointment of the Prov. Grand Officers, the Prov. Grand Master proceeded to consecrate the new Warden Lodge, No. 1096. After the appointment of the Officers of the new Lodge, the business of the province was proceeded with.

Upon the motion of Bro. C. W. Elkington, the sum of twenty guineas was voted towards the testimonial to be presented to Bro. Wm. Lloyd, Prov. Grand Treasurer, and twenty-five pounds to the reformatories of the county, with eight guineas as an annual subscription.

The sum of one hundred and fifty guineas was voted to the Prov. Grand Master to be applied to the Masonic charities; on the motion of Bro. Dee, seconded by Bro. C. W. Elkington, to be appropriated as follows:—fifty guineas to the Girls School, fifty guineas to the Boys School, fifty guineas to the Royal Masonic Annuity Fund.

The sum of fifteen guineas was then voted to a distressed brother, and the Prov. Grand Lodge was adjourned.

The brethren then proceeded to the parish church, where an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. Bro. Bedford, Prov. Grand Chaplain, and W.M. of the Warden Lodge, No. 1096, which we shall publish in an early number; prayers were read by the Rev. Bro. Codrington, P. Prov. Grand Warden, of Oxon, and the Rev. Bro. Kiddoe.

On the return of the brethren, after votes of thanks to the Chaplain, and a vote of five guineas to the charities of Sutton Coldfield, the Prov. Grand Lodge was closed in ancient and solemn form.

The brethren dined together in the evening, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Lord Leigh, presiding, supported by Bros. Bedford and Dickens, Prov. G. Chaplains; Elkington, Prov. G.S.B.; Dee, Kettle, Newton, J. W. Lloyd, Empson, P. Prov. S.G.W.s; the Officers of the year; Bros. Baron Webster Codrington, P. Prov. S.G.W., Oxon; the Rev. Bro. Downes, Prov. G. Chaplain, Staffordshire; Dr. Burton, P. Prov. S.G.W., Stafford; Edwards, P. Prov. S.G.W., Stafford; Garland, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera., Lancashire; Harry Winton, P. Prov. G.D., Sussex, and other visitors. About seventy brethren were present, members of the Prov. Grand Lodge.

The toast of "The Queen and the Craft" having been duly honoured; The Prov. Grand Master next proposed "The health of the Earl of the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M.;" the excellence of whose administration, he observed, was evidenced by the rapid increase of Masonry; the Lodge which had that day been consecrated bearing the No. 1096.

The Prov. Grand Master then gave "The Deputy Grand Master and the Grand Lodge of England;" connecting the name of Bro. Elkington, P.G.S.B., with the toast.

Bro. Elkington replied, expressing his hope that ere long some other Warwickshire Mason might be found eligible for office in Grand Lodge, if only to save the brethren the monotony of a standing dish, in the shape of an annual acknowledgment of this toast from himself.

Bro. Bedford, Prov. G. Chaplain, then rose and said, that having been honoured with permission to propose the next toast, he could not use that power with more chance of universal approbation, than by proposing the health of their Prov. Grand Master. He might detain them long by enumerating the various excellencies of Lord Leigh in every relation of life, both in and out of Masonry; but to do so would not be acceptable to that spirit of manly modesty which distinguished that excellent nobleman. He would, therefore, only quote the immortal Pickwick, and say that Lord Leigh was universally known to be a "kind, excellent, independent, spirited, fine hearted, hospitable, liberal man."

Lord Leigh, in a few appropriate and feeling words, thanked the brethren present for the cordial way in which his health had been received, and expressed his sincere devotion to their service as the presiding officer of the Freemasons of Warwickshire.

The Prov. Grand Master said he had a toast to propose, which might appear to have displaced some of the usual toasts of the evening; but, for a reason somewhat personal to himself, he desired to lose no time in drinking "Prosperity to the Royal Town of Sutton Coldfield." The brethren generally might not be aware that the corporation of that ancient borough had recently done him the honour of electing him their high steward, and it was a matter of the greatest gratification to him that the second occasion on which he had entered the new town hall was that of a Masonic gathering. The Warden of that ancient corporation, Bro. Webster, had shown his zeal for Masonry by hurrying from Paris to be present at their meeting. He thought, therefore, that the health of "The Warden and Prosperity to the Town of Sutton," would be an acceptable toast to the Masons of Warwickshire.

Bro. B. D. Webster returned thanks, expressing his hope that he might soon improve in knowledge of the Craft, in zeal for the well being of which he trusted no Mason present could exceed him. On the part of the corporation of Sutton he bid the brethren welcome to the Town Hall.

Bro. Webster then proposed "The Visitors."

Bro. Dr. Burton returned thanks in an able and humorous speech, expatiating on the advantages of mutual intercommunication between Lodges.

Bro. Dee proposed "The D. Prov. G.M. and the Grand Lodge of Warwickshire," especially dwelling on the loss which the Prov. G. Lodge sustained by the absence of Bro. Hoskyns at the Social Science Congress.

Bro. Clark returned thanks.

The R.W. Prov. G.M. then proposed, "Success to the Warden Lodge, No. 1096." This was the fourth Lodge consecrated in the province since his accession to the office of Prov. G.M., and he hoped it would be inferior to none in the province. They had as Master the Prov. G. Chaplain, of whom he would only say that they had heard him preach thrice since last year, without being tired of him. For Senior Warden they had their Bro. Webster, whose zeal had been shown by the exertions he had made to attend the meeting of that evening; and as Junior Warden, a distinguished Mason from Oxfordshire (Bro. Codrington) whom he rejoiced to see among them. Under such auspices he trusted the new Lodge was sure to succeed.

Bro. Bedford acknowledged the toast.

Bro. Dickens, Prov. G. Chaplain, proposed "Lady Leigh and the Ladies of Warwickshire," which was acknowledged by Lord Leigh and by Bro. Weiss.

After the toast "To all poor and distressed Masons," the brethren separated.

WILTSHIRE.

TROWBRIDGE.—Lodge of Concord (No. 915).—This Lodge held its first meeting for the season on Tuesday, the 11th inst., present, Bros. Levander, W.M.; F. Webber, P.M.; Sylvester, S.W., pro tem.; Grimes, J.W., pro tem.; Stauncomb, Sec.; Burt, P.M. No. 961, and other brethren. After the usual Lodge business had been disposed of, the Worshipful Master said that he wished to call the attention of the brethren to a subject, which he was happy to see had lately attracted notice in the neighbouring province of Hampshire, and which he hoped would soon be taken up in other provinces. He alluded to the very inadequate representation of country Lodges in the Grand Lodge of England. From the inconvenience and expense necessarily attending a journey to London, it was found that the attendance of provincial brethren at the quarterly communications was very small indeed compared with that of the London brethren. He held in his hand a copy of a paper supplied by the Grand Secretary (see Freemasons' Magazine for Sept. 10th, p. 193), giving the number of London and provincial brethren at the several quarterly communications during the last two years. From this it appeared that the total number of provincial brethren present in Grand Lodge from June 3rd, 1857, to June 1st, 1859, amounted to 268, giving an average of about thirty at each meeting; while the London brethren numbered 1,522, which gave an average attendance of about 170, or nearly six times the number of those from the country. The largest attendance of country brethren during the last two years was at the quarterly communication of last March, when forty-six were present, while there were 213 London brethren. On one occasion (Sept. 2nd, 1857) there were only seven provincial brethren in Grand Lodge, and on two other occasions only eleven. It was not necessary to go further into details to show that the London brethren had virtually the whole management of the affairs of the Craft in their own hands. It was hopeless to expect it should be otherwise, while they had such facilities for voting in Grand Lodge compared with those enjoyed by the country brethren; for a country Mason might be as earnest and zealous in the cause of Freemasonry as a London Mason, and yet find it impossible to leave his business, perhaps for two days, in order to attend Grand Lodge. At the same time, it seemed only fair that all the members of Grand Lodge should have the privilege of giving their votes on matters concerning the welfare of the whole Craft, and that it should not be enjoyed solely by those who from their residence in or near the metropolis, or from their position and means, were enabled to attend the quarterly communications without personal inconvenience. He trusted the time would soon arrive when this evil would be remedied, and he thought the legitimate way of obtaining the removal of the grievance was to bring the matter before the notice of the Grand Lodge, as had been lately done by a Hampshire Lodge, by a memorial, in which he heartily concurred. He should, in conclusion, beg to propose the following resolution:—"That an application be made to the Board of General Purposes, representing the necessity that exists for the better representation of country Lodges in the Grand Lodge of England, and praying that the Board will take into consideration and recommend to Grand Lodge such an amendment of the existing laws as will enable the Masters, Past Masters, and actual Wardens of all Lodges to vote by proxy, or by voting papers." Bro. Webber, P.M., said it seemed only reasonable, considering the number of Masons in the country, that they should have an equal voice with their London brethren in the government of the Craft. He thought nothing could be fairer than the plan suggested, and he therefore had great pleasure in seconding the proposition of the Worshipful Master. Bro. Burt thought that if this plan were adopted, not only would country Lodges be better represented, but greater unanimity would prevail in Grand Lodge than sometimes appeared there. He hoped that other Lodges in the provinces would adopt similar resolutions. After some further discussion of the subject, the resolution was carried unanimously by the brethren, and the Secretary instructed to write to the Board of General Purposes. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned.

YORKSHIRE (WEST).

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE HUDDERSFIELD MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.

THIS ceremony took place on the 5th instant. A procession was formed at the present institution, at noon, and proceeded through the principal streets, arriving on the site about one o'clock. Some seven thousand persons were assembled to witness the ceremony, greater interest being felt on the occasion as it was known that the Right Hon. the Countess of Ripon would lay the foundation stone. The Freemasons having assembled within the site of the intended building, the stone was then laid by the Countess of Ripon—the usual Masonic ceremonies (we are told) being performed, but we have not been favoured with any account of them.

A brief prayer was offered by Bro. Dr. Senior, of Wakefield, Prov. Grand Chaplain of the Order.

The Earl of Ripon, P.G.W. then said—Ladies and gentlemen, I most heartily congratulate you upon this occasion, when we have assembled under such propitious circumstances to lay the foundation stone of a building which, I trust, through many generations will confer benefits upon this town and neighbourhood. I have for many years watched the progress of the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution, and having, as I ought to have, deeply at heart all that concerns the welfare of the town, I am proud to think that your Mechanics' Institution stands in the foremost place amongst the institutions of this country. It is, then, a just and worthy tribute which the townsmen of Huddersfield have paid to that institution, that they are about to raise for it a more worthy building than that in which its labours have hitherto been conducted. It is true that those studies which build up the spiritual man are not dependent upon the beauty of the material walls in which they may be carried on, but now that this institution has stood the test of almost twenty years, it is full time that its labours should be honoured and that it should hold the position to which it is entitled among the buildings of this beautiful town. But I have peculiar reason, to congratulate you on account of the circumstances under which this stone has been deposited, and I think it a most fortunate circumstance that this stone of the Mechanics' Institution should have been laid by the fraternity of Freemasons. When the committee requested the great Provincial Lodge of West Yorkshire to officiate on this occasion, I think they took a step which was consistent with that course which I trust will ever guide the conduct of Englishmen; because, by so doing, we have been enabled to combine ancient principles and time-honoured institutions with the last outgrowth of modern intellect, and because the foundation stone of this building has been laid upon the same principles on which have been built, and long I trust will stand, the constitution and the prosperity of this country. On the other hand, as a Freemason, I rejoice that we have taken this part to-day, because it is entirely consistent with the principles of our Court. Those principles, rightly applied, lead to the promotion of virtue and of brotherly affection; and this building is raised for the purpose of promoting the education of the most numerous class of the population—of that class which, as Mr. Shaw has truly said, is the foundation, and the only sure and safe foundation of the social fabric. If that be so, then surely it is a good work—a Christian work, a work of public spirit, that we should endeavour to make that foundation as firm and sound as we can. But while we have laid this stone with this rejoicing, and with the sun thus smiling upon us, let us never forget that the ceremony has been hallowed by the presence and prayers of the ministers of religion, and that without that sanctification we have no right to look for success in this or any other work. I feel that you will pardon me if, before I conclude this congratulatory address, which is to bring to a termination the ceremony of this day, I venture to return my warmest thanks to you on my own behalf, and on that of my dear wife, for the manner in which you have received our performance of a duty which we most gladly undertook at the request of the committee. We should indeed be ungrateful if we had not been happy to have assisted on this occasion after the debt of gratitude which we shall always owe to the people of Huddersfield. I feel no small emotion in addressing you, for it is the first occasion on which I have had the honour of appearing before a Yorkshire assembly since that close tie, which for some years bound us, was finally severed, and you will pardon me if I avail myself of this opportunity to assure you that the grateful recollection of your past confidence will never fade from my memory—and that if it ever be in my power to contribute in any degree to the advantage or the good either of Huddersfield or the West Riding, you have only to command my services. I believe that no act which could have been performed is more calculated to benefit this district than that which we have discharged to-day—and I trust that for many years yet to come, within the walls of the building now commenced, there may be educated a generation of men worthy of the fame of Huddersfield and of the name of Englishmen. I believe that the principles upon which this institution is conducted are calculated to promote that great end, and from the bottom of my heart I pray God that it may please Him to bless this work, to grant that it may lead to the intellectual development of your town, and to the mutual union and combined action of all classes within it.

The National Anthem was then sung, and cheers were given for the success of the institution, for the ladies, for the Earl and Countess of Ripon, and for the trade of Huddersfield.

In the evening a soirée was held in the Gymnasium Hall, under the presidency of the Right Hon. the Earl of Ripon. The noble chairman on rising to address the meeting was received with loud cheering. He remarked that the occasion which had brought them together was not a common one. They had often met year after year to learn what had been the progress of the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution, and to express their continued approbation of the work in which its members were engaged; but that day they were met for a further object, and they had witnessed the interesting ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a new building in which, in the future, were to be held the meetings of the classes, and in which the daily work of the institution was to be carried on. He congratulated them upon the step which had just been taken; and having watched for some years the progress of that institution, he was convinced they had done well in coming forward so nobly, and subscribing the munificent sum of £4000 for the purpose of providing a more fitting locality for conducting the business of the institution. He believed he might say without any hesitation that the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution was a model institution of its kind. He did not think that in this opinion he was carried away by feelings of partiality; and he believed also that the gentlemen upon the platform, who had hitherto been strangers to them, had visited that town because the fame of the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution had spread far and wide amongst those who felt an interest in public education. It would be easy for him to prove his position, and to show that, in many respects, that institution was entitled to be regarded as a model one. In the first place, it was really a Mechanics' Institution. They were often told, "Oh, these institutions are all very well; they do a certain amount of good in the way of educating their members, but those members are not drawn from the working classes, and the title which has been given to these Mechanics' Institutions is one which they have no right to assume." Now, whatever might be the case elsewhere—and he did not deny that this criticism was sometimes applicable—it certainly was not applicable there; for Mr. Curzon had just told them that nine-tenths of the fortnightly members were drawn from the working classes—so that, whatever good work the institution was doing in that great hive of industry was applied really to the mechanics and artisans who were engaged in daily labour in connexion with the trade of the town. Not only, therefore, had the Huddersfield Institution a right to vindicate its name as a Mechanics' Institution, but also the mode in which it had conducted its affairs was such as really to come up to the idea, which the friends of such institutions were apt to set before them. They heard it constantly stated, at meetings of that kind, that the Mechanics' Institution was the college or university of the working classes, and that it should stand to them in something of the same relation which the universities and colleges stood to other classes of society. It was, he feared, but too true that in very many instances these high aspirations were not fulfilled, but the course of study which had been steadily pursued in that institute from its very foundation was such as really to justify them in claiming for it the position which was so often attributed to such institutions—for the work which went on in the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution was really the work of teaching and of mental development. It was not only that they had a reading room, a news room, and a library—all of which were established for objects by no means to be despised, but over and above them all they had in that institution—and it had been made from the beginning the main aim of its managers—a large machinery for the especial purpose of guiding, and teaching, and training the minds of its members. Now, if mechanics' institutions were at all to do the work which they professed to do, it must be done in this way; and if what he had stated of this institution was true, as he believed it was, then he thought they had a right to say that it deserved the title of a model mechanics' institution. It had attained to that position, not from any peculiar privileges which it possessed, but because its friends did not rely upon walls, because they did not look to a fine building, but carried on their work on sound principles, and laboured with the single object of benefiting their fellow-townsmen—the working classes of Huddersfield. Success had not made them forget that the real objects of a mechanics' institution was not that they might hear distinguished men make speeches, but the daily work of affording the means of intellectual development and training to its members. (Applause). The institution had now entered upon a new phase of its existence. It would no longer be housed in obscurity, but be ever before the eyes of the public in a building of its own, provided by the generosity of the inhabitants; and he hoped that in its new abode it would continue to be animated by the same spirit which had hitherto characterised it. The time had passed when these institutions were under the cloud; and now that they were bursting into the full sunshine of popular favour, he hoped they would occupy a still wider field of utility. Their object was not to teach their members a little of everything—which was a very bad thing—but to unfold and strengthen the intellects of their members by calling into exercise those mental faculties with which God had blessed them. Believing that the educational machinery of the Huddersfield Institution was specially suited for such an object, he had great pleasure in being present on that occasion. After regretting the absence of Mr. Brooke and Miss Laycock, the noble earl continued by remarking that an opinion prevailed in some quarters that the development of the intellect deteriorated those other qualities which peculiarly distinguished Englishmen. He believed that to be an immense error. He believed that the more intelligent they could make a man, the better he would discharge any duty which might devolve upon him. A forcible illustration of this had recently come under his notice. Several gentlemen connected with volunteer rifle corps were sent to the school of musketry at Hythe, and so rapidly did they master their rifle practice, that they soon surpassed all competitors, whether in the regular army or not, and General Hay assured him that it was entirely owing to their superior intelligence. He had himself found, in the management of a department of the public business, the great advantage of an intelligent, educated clerk. No routine nor experience would supply the want of intellectual development; and they might rely upon it that a man of education would always beat an uneducated man, no matter in what position he was placed. The working classes might rely upon it that the shortest and surest route to political and social elevation was to be found in the development of their intellects; and the community at large might rely upon it that the greatest safeguard for that elevation was in the education of the working classes. With an empire, the extent of which excited the rivalry, if not the envy, of surrounding nations, it behoved them, in that sea-girt isle, not to waste any portion of that material, political, and intellectual advantage which they possessed. It was only by a determination to maintain and develop that English spirit to which they owed their proud position, that their power could be kept intact. He was not one who despised those magnificent qualities displayed in the hour of danger by Englishmen in every clime, but it was not upon their strength, or even their courage, that they could safely rely. Other nations had entered into the race of competition with them, and it was only by the development of those intellectual qualities to which he had referred, not in any particular class, but in all classes of the community, that they could hope to maintain their pre-eminence. If they did this, he had the utmost confidence in their maintaining the proud position which their ancestors had won. It might be asked what had mechanics' institutions to do with this? He replied that, as the character of a town depended upon the character of its individual members, so would the character of the nation be influenced by those institutions which were planted in the various localities of the empire. The work of mechanics institutions might seem small, but it was part of a great whole. If they went on with that work the great object to which he had alluded would be attained; if they suffered it to decay they would sap the foundation of the greatness and prosperity of England.

MARK MASONRY.

PROVINCIAL.

BIRKENHEAD.—Joppa Lodge of Mark Masters (I.C.) No. 5.—The annual meeting of this well worked and flourishing Lodge, for the election of R.W. Master, Wardens, and other officers, took place on Tuesday, the 27th ult., at the Park Hotel, Birkenhead. After the induction of Bros. Henry Charles Lucy and John Scourfield, the brethren proceeded to the election of Right Worshipful Master, and chose, without opposition, Bro. Henry Bulley, late S.W., who appointed Bro. Wilson, S.W.; and Bro. Platt, J.W. The immediate R.W.M., Bro. Platt, said, that he considered it right to bring the subject of the Mark clothing before them with the view of receiving the opinion of the brethren in reference to it. The Lodge had now ample funds, and he therefore considered it desirable to complete the furniture and clothing of the Lodge. He had ascertained that the clothing adopted by the London (S.C.) Mark Lodges and those that were under charters of Lord Leigh were similar, so that if the Grand Lodge of England adopted Mark Masonry, and there was a strong belief prevalent that it would, their clothing would still be the same. It was ultimately agreed that Bro. Platt should ascertain the cost of the clothing, and other particulars thereto appertaining, and report at the next meeting of this Lodge. The Lodge was afterwards closed in antient form, after which the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

HYDE.—Fidelity Lodge (No. 31), E.C.—A meeting of the Lodge was held on the 15th inst., at the usual place of meeting, the Norfolk Arms Hotel, Hyde, when a candidate was duly advanced, and two others, unavoidably absent, reserved for the next meeting of the Lodge. The principal business of the day was the installation of the W.M. elect, Bro. S. P. Leather, 18^o, by the immediate P.M. of the Lodge, Bro. John Yarker, who, after a short address explanatory of the qualifications, &c., requisite for the office, received the candidate's assent to certain questions involving the duties incumbent on the W.M., and after solemn prayer the candidate was duly installed as W.M. of the Lodge for the ensuing year. The new W.M. was then saluted, and the following officers appointed and invested, an appropriate charge being delivered to each:—Bros. John Brierley, S.W.; Geo. P. Cooke, J.W.; John Yarker, W.M. and Chaplain; Jas. Relph, J. L. Rookliffe, James Jackson, M. S. and T. Cos, Chas. C. Worthington (previously elected), Treas.; James Huxton, S.D.; James Wilson, J.D.; Luke Adshead, Dir. of Music and Cers.; Walter Johnson, I.G.; and Jesse Taylor, Tyler. An address to the Worshipful Master, officers, and brethren, concluded the ceremony. An excellent dinner was provided for the brethren by the proprietress of the hotel, and in the course of the evening the following toasts were given:—"The M.W.G.M. of M.M., Lord Leigh," "The R.W.D.G.M. the Earl of Carnarvon," "The Grand Officers." The health of the immediate P.M. of the Lodge was then proposed by the W.M., who, on returning thanks, adduced some proofs of the antiquity and great utility of the degree when properly understood, and expressed a hope that the officers would render every assistance to their W.M., not only by their punctual and regular attendance, but by strenuous exertions in attaining a correct knowledge of the duties incumbent upon them in respect of their several offices, and concluded by proposing the health of their esteemed W.M. Bro. Leather returned thanks in a very appropriate speech, expressing his determination to do everything in his power to forward the interests of the Lodge, and in proposing the health of his officers expressed a hope that they would do all in their power to assist him in this object. Bro. Cooke, J.W., appropriately returned thanks for "The Officers," and "To all poor and distressed Masons" terminated a highly agreeable evening. It is purposed, ere long, to establish instruction meetings in the degree, and great hopes are expressed of the ensuing year being a highly prosperous one for the Lodge.

ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

MOUNT SION CHAPTER (No. 169).—The first convocation of this excellent Chapter was held on Monday evening, October 10th, at Radley's Hotel, New Bridge-street, present, Comps. Johnstone, M.E.Z.; J. Loag, H.; and H. Muggeridge, as J.; Comps. Partridge, Goodwin, and How, P.Zs., and several other Companions. There was no particular business, but a prosperous season with plenty of work is expected.

IRELAND.

On Thursday evening, October 6th, being the usual monthly night of meeting of the members of Lodge No. 15, there was a large attendance. As Bro. John FitzHenry Townsend, LL.D., D.G.M. of Ireland had signified his intention of presiding on the occasion, a banquet was prepared, but owing to indisposition his presence was unavoidably prevented, much to the disappointment of the brethren. After the initiation of two candidates into the mysteries of the Craft, and other routine business, the brethren sat down to supper. Bro. Major Herbert took the chair, at the request of the W.M., Bro. Paul Limrick. The following brethren were present:—Dr. Hadden, S.W.; Frederick P. E. Potter, J.W.; John Francis Lewis, Sec. and Treas.; Elijah Dudley, S.D.; Richard Beamish, J.D.; George Robinson, J.P.; Richard H. H. Becher, J.P.; Edward Doherty; William W. Henderson; John Lewis (Grove); Philip Atteridge; Samuel K. Vickery; Richard Kingston; James M'Carthy Lewis; John William Potter; Robert R. Rountree; John O'Donoghue, &c., &c. On the removal of the cloth, the usual Masonic toasts, &c., were proposed and received with due honours. We are happy in being able to record the prosperity of this Lodge, which is doubtless one of the largest and most influential Provincial Masonic Lodges in Ireland.

COLONIAL.

CANADA.

LAYING THE CORNER STONE OF ST. JAMES' CHURCH, LONDON (CANADA WEST).

On Friday, the 9th September, the M.W. Grand Master of Canada, accompanied by the officers of the Grand Lodge, and a large body of brethren from the various western and eastern Lodges, performed the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the new church of St. James, in connexion with the established church of Scotland. The day was very fine, and the ceremony passed off with the greatest possible éclat.

The brethren assembled at the Lodge room, Richmond-street, at high noon, and having formed in due order, proceeded to the Tecumseh House, to escort the M.W. Grand Master, Col. Mercer Wilson, and the other Grand Officers, to the Lodge room.

The Grand Lodge was then opened in due form. We observed the following brethren among the number present:—The M.W. Bro. W. M. Wilson, Grand Master; R.W. Bro. Thompson Wilson, Deputy Grand Master; R.W. Bro. G. W. Whitehead, as S.G.W.; R.W. Bro. James Daniell, as J.G.W.; R.W. Bro. Rev. Alex. McKidd, as G. Chaplain; R.W. Bro. D. Curtis, as G. Treas.; R.W. Bro. H. D. Morehouse, G. Reg.; R.W. Bro. Thomas B. Harris, G. Sec.; V.W. Bro. the Rev. S. B. Campbell, S.G.D.; V.W. Bro. T. W. Thomas, J.G.D.; V.W. Bro. C. L. Davis, as G. Supt. of Works; V.W. Bro. P. Francis, as G. Dir. of Cers.; V.W. Bro. E. Heathfield, Asst. Dir. of Cers.; V.W. Bro. G. Masson, G.S.B.; V.W. Bro. John Harrison, as G. Org.; V.W. Bro. W. P. Vidall, as G. Purst.; V.W. Bros. T. Mackie, J. Boyd, A. G. Smyth, G. M. Wilson, G. Stewards; Bro. T. McMullen, G. Tyler. In addition to the foregoing, representatives of the following Lodges were also present:—St. George's, St. John's, and the Kilwinning, of London; St. Thomas Lodge; Mount Brydges Lodge; Albion Lodge, of Newbury; St. John's, of Delaware; St. Paul's, of Lambeth; St. John's, Strict Observance, and Barton, of Hamilton; King Solomon's, of Woodstock; St. John's, of Ingersoll; King Hiram, of Tilsonburgh; Great Western, of Windsor; Sharon, of Sharon; King Solomon, of Toronto; Norfolk, of Simcoe; Wilson Lodge, of Waterford; St. Lawrence, of Montreal; Detroit Lodge; Warren Lodge, of Fingal; Bro. Harper, the P.J.G.W. of the Prov. Grand Lodge, Durham, England; Welland Lodge, of Fonthill; St. Mark's, Port Stanley; St. John's, Toronto; Valley Lodge, Dundas; Brant Lodge, Brantford; Port Huron Lodge, Michigan; Lodge No. 125, England.

After certain business had been transacted, the procession, under the command of the Grand Director of Ceremonies, again formed in the following order:—Visiting brethren from Lodges at a distance; junior Lodges; city Lodges according to number; Past Masters; Royal Arch Masons; Knights Templar; Grand Sword Bearer; Officers of Grand Lodge and the Grand Master. A military band headed the procession, performing appropriate airs. The brethren then proceeded to the ground, in Richmond-street, where the ceremony was to take place: and a more imposing array of brethren belonging to the Order of Freemasons never before gathered in this city since the laying of the foundation stone of St. Paul's Cathedral. The numbers could not have been fewer than two to three hundred, and as they proceeded two and two, arrayed in the full insignia of office, from the M.W. Grand Master of Canada, down to the simple Master Mason, presented an imposing spectacle. We question if a more respectable body of men could be gathered than those who took part in the procession.

Arrived at the ground, the brethren, under the able direction of Bro T. Francis, G. Dir. of Cers., formed two lines, between which the M.W. Grand Master, accompanied by the Grand Stewards, followed by the officers of the Grand Lodge, Sword Bearer, Knights Templar, Royal Arch Masons, and Past Masters, followed by the brethren of the various Lodges, passed up to the platform, on which the ceremony was to take place. The stone which was destined to be laid was already suspended, and in another below was a receptacle wherein to place a vase containing various documents, provided for the occasion. The M.W. Grand Master, and the various officers of the Grand Lodge, the Rev. Bro. Nichol, &c., gathered round the stone, when the proceedings of the day commenced by the assembly singing the Hundredth Psalm.

The Rev. Bro. Nichol then read the seventh chapter of the second book of Samuel, and engaged in an extempore prayer. The M.W. Grand Master then addressed the spectators in the following terms:—

"Men, women, and children, here assembled to-day, to behold this ceremony, know all of you that we be lawful Masons, true to the laws of our country, and established of old with peace and honour in most countries, to do good to our brethren, to build great buildings, and to fear God, who is the Great Architect of all things. We have among us concealed from the eyes of all men, secrets which may not be revealed, and which no man has discovered, but these secrets are lawful and honourable to know by Masons, who only have the keeping of them to the end of time. Unless our Craft were good and our calling honourable, we should not have lasted so many centuries, nor should we have had so many illustrious brothers in our Order, ready to promote our laws and further our interests. To-day we are here assembled, in the presence of you all, to build a church for the public use of this city, which we pray God may prosper, if it seem good to him, that it may become a building for good men and good deeds, and promote religious harmony, and brotherly love till the world itself shall end."

Response—"So mote it be."

The Grand Chaplain then offered up the following prayer:—"Great Architect of the universe, maker and ruler of all worlds, design from thy celestial temple, from realms of light and glory, to help us in all the purposes of our present assembly. We humbly invite thee to give us, at this and all other times, wisdom in all our doings; strength of mind in all our difficulties; and the beauty of harmony in all our communications. Permit us, thou Author of light and life, great Source of love and happiness, to erect this temple, so that hereafter it may be solemnly consecrated to the honour of thy glory. Glory be to God in the highest."

Response—"As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen."

The Grand Secretary then read the translation of the following Latin inscription, recorded on a parchment beautifully engrossed by Mr. Symmonds:—"Dei Omnipotentis Gratia, Nono die Septembris, A.D. MDCCCLIX, Anno Lucis 5859, et vicesimo tertio regni Victoriae nostrae charissimas principis Magnae Britanniae, Hiberniae, Indiae, possessionumque in Europa, Asia, Africa, America, et Australasia positarum Reginae, illustrissimo Edmundo Walker Head Equite, Britanniae Septentrionalis Americae, Praefecto, ingenuo Gulielmo MacBride, Praetoris Urbani Munere Londini fungente, Venerando Johanne Mac Murphy, conventus presbyterialis ecclesiae cum Scotiae conjunctae in Canadianae regione constitutae Moderatore, lapideum anguli principem hujus sedis sacrae nomine Sancti Jacobi appellatae collatis a pecunia aedificatae in cultum Supremi, Gulielmus Mercer Wilson, curio maximus a summo concilio vestustorum liberorum probatorumque Latomorum comitatus secundum vetera artis tectoriae instituta posuit; quod Deus secundet."

The above was engrossed on a large sheet of parchment, and a translation in English, also engrossed by Mr. Symmonds, was prepared to be placed in the vase, together with other documents. The following is a copy of the translation:—

"By the favour of Almighty God, on the ninth day of September, A.D. MDCCCLIX, of the era of Masonry, 5859, and in the twenty-third year of the reign of our beloved Sovereign Victoria, Queen of Great Britain, Ireland, India, and of the dependencies thereof in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia; the Right Honourable Sir Edmund Walker Head, Baronet, being Governor-General of British North America; William M'Bride, Esquire, being mayor of the city of London; Reverend John MacMurphy being moderator of the synod of the Presbyterian church of Canada, in connexion with the Church of Scotland, the corner stone of this St. James's Church, erected by public subscription for the worship of the Most High, was laid by William Mercer Wilson, Esquire, Most Worshipful Grand Master, attended by the Grand Lodge of Antient Free and Accepted Masons of Canada, according to the ancient usages of Masonry; which may God prosper."

The vase was then taken by the Grand Treasurer, Bro. W. Muir, and put in the receptacle provided for it. The following documents were first placed inside:—

List of officers of the Grand Lodge of Canada; list of officers of St. John's Lodge, London; list of officers of St. George's Lodge, London; list of officers of Kilwinning Lodge, London; list of officers of St. James's Church Building Committee and Proprietors; Coins, Canada decimal coinage, twenty, ten, five, and one cent pieces; copy of Free Press, Sept. 9th, 1859; copy of Prototype, Sept. 9th, 1859; copy of "Proceedings and Acts of the Synod of the Church of Scotland in Canada, 1859;" Parchment Record of the ceremony in Latin; translation of the same on parchment; copy of the Ode and Psalm sung on the occasion.

A quantity of pitch was then placed round the glass, rendering it perfectly impervious to the atmosphere, the sides of the vase being surrounded by deposits of stone, sand, &c. The vessel being secured in the receptacle in the stone, and it being levelled, a quantity of mortar was spread over the top ready for the descent of the "corner stone." The stone was then let down with three regular stops, the fraternity singing the ode "Hail, Universal Lord!" The band then struck up the National Anthem.

The Most Worshipful Grand Master then addressed the Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master, Bro. T. Wilson, as follows:—"You will now cause the various implements to be applied to the stone, in order that it may be laid in its bed according to the rules of architecture," which was accordingly done. The M.W. Grand Master then directed that the stone should be squared, levelled, and plumbed. The ceremonies having been performed, the M.W. Grand Master said: "Having full confidence in your skill in the royal art, it remains with me to finish our work." He then gave three knocks on the stone, saying, "Well formed, true, and trusty; may this undertaking be conducted and completed by the Craftsmen according to the grand plan, in peace, love, and harmony."

The cornucopia, and cups with corn, wine, and oil were then handed to the Deputy Grand Master, and Senior and Junior Grand Wardens, who in succession handed them to the Grand Master. He then scattered the corn, and poured the wine and oil upon the stone with the accustomed ceremony. The M.W. Grand Master then pronounced the following benediction:—"May corn, wine, and oil, and all the necessities of life abound among men throughout the world, and may the blessing of the Supreme Grand Architect of the universe be upon the undertaking and all connected with it; and may the same Providence preside over and preserve it from ruin and decay, to the latest posterity."

The M.W. Grand Master having examined the plans of the church, directed (in the following words) that they and the implements should be returned to the architect:—"Bro. Architect, the foundation stone of St. James's Church, planned in much wisdom by you, being now laid, and these implements having been duly applied to it, and proved it, I return them to you in full confidence that as a skilful and faithful workman you will use them in such a manner that the building may rise in order, harmony, and beauty, and, being perfected in strength, will answer every purpose for which it is intended, to your credit, and the honour of those who have selected you."

The brethren then gave three loud cheers, and the ceremony was concluded. The whole was conducted in a most imposing manner, and was witnessed by a large concourse of spectators. Immediately afterwards, V.W. Bro. Wm. Muir, as chairman of the Building Committee, presented the M.W. Grand Master with the trowel which had been used on the occasion, which is of solid silver, exquisitely chased, and bears the following inscription:—"Presented to W. M. Wilson, Esq., M.W. Grand Master of Free and Accepted Masons in Canada, by the Building Committee of St. James' Church, London, C.W. 9th Sept., 1859."

The M.W. Grand Master in returning thanks said, that he should retain the trowel as a memento of the kindness of the Building Committee, and as a souvenir of one of the most interesting ceremonies he had ever taken part in.

The Rev. Bro. Nichol then addressed the assembled brethren and spectators as follows:—

"We have assembled here to-day for a great purpose, to erect another temple to God, another church to his Son. In the true and catholic spirit of our holy religion, we hail the occasion as one of glory to God, and of good will to man."

"I am glad to see around me, on the present occasion, the ancient Order of Freemasons, to which we are indebted for those noble specimens of Gothic architecture, which have come down to us from the middle ages; and to the security of whose organisation, as well as the zeal with which they preserved their noble art, we owe the preservation of architectural principles, which might otherwise have been lost in the ignorance and tyranny of barbarous ages, and the highest cultivation which architecture has yet received since the palmy days of Greece, when Phidias breathed his spirit into the stone, and the temples of Athens rose to be perpetual monuments of genius and taste."

"The humble edifice, of which we have been now laying the foundation stone, has no pretensions. It is the church of a poor people, and in a community scarcely yet advanced to recognise, with much effect, the precepts of architecture. But I trust it will soon be obvious to the citizens of London, that it is rather in advance—not behind—the styles previously in use; and I feel confident that it will possess sufficient beauty to lead the eye of the stranger, as he enters the city, to rest with pleasure upon it. It is a Gothic building of the fourteenth century—a period when the mind of Europe was still wrapped in slumber, though shortly to awake—when the schoolmen were wasting their acute and powerful intelligence in light and frivolous warfare—and when the science of architecture was almost the only branch of human invention which was worthy of the European mind."

"But, my friends, we must never permit the love of architecture, nor the reverence for antiquity to interfere with the true character, and the holy purpose of the house of God. Far better that we should worship under a thatched roof, than that the power and simplicity of the gospel should be wanting. It is in vain that we tread the tessellated court and the mosaic pavement, in vain that the eye, captive, roams over the magnificence of groin, and arch, and vaulted roof, if the heart ascends not unto God in pure and fervent love. No canopy so suitable and soul inspiring for the worshipper as the azure dome of heaven—no gaze so serene and sanctifying as into the bright clouds, beyond which lie the glory and majesty of the Godhead: no neighbourhood, no company, so rich in association, so full of benefit as the proofs around us of a creating hand, and a bountiful Providence."

"It would be unbecoming in me to allow this occasion to pass without adverting to the connexion which this church will maintain as an outpost of a national and venerable institution, which in its long experience has seen both trouble and prosperity, and is still prepared to fight the battles of her Lord and King. For more than three hundred years the Scottish church has raised its blue banner aloft, and left the impress of its doctrines and its discipline upon the minds of her people. Perhaps in no country has the mark been so clear and distinct."

"The bare simplicity of the ritual has transferred itself to the character; and in the clear, resolute and steady purpose of our countrymen, as you find them in all the countries of the world, do we behold in another form the naked and stern simplicity which belongs to her worship. It may be that the system of Scottish worship has stretched its severity into ruggedness; a feeling of this kind is arising within the church itself, and it is not improbable that in the next quarter of a century you may behold changes which will improve and commend, and, not as a few would think, deface and destroy its ancient forms. But let the church of our fathers always hold fast by the truth. If she cannot refine to the eye of sense without imperilling the integrity and simplicity of her doctrine, then perish all outward forms rather than the truth as it is in Jesus should be lost to a single soul.

"Nor ought I on this occasion to overlook the fact that the Scottish church is now not one, but many. Children have gone forth from her, and in some parts of these colonies, of which this city is one, the children are stronger than the mother. I trust that the parent has some of the perpetual youth of Christ about her, and that she will yet give good signs to the church and the world of a healthy vitality. Presbyterians are divided. It is, perhaps, a fault of theirs that they are naturally inclined to divide. Well, there is a division, a variety which is neither displeasing to God nor offensive to man—such as we see abroad over all nature in the dispensations to our fellow creatures—such as we shall doubtless behold in the kingdom of heaven, when all the tribes, and tongues, and kindreds, and nations shall stand around the throne. But there must be no bitterness in it, no persecution, no undue elevation of ourselves, no false and unmerited depreciation of others. With regard to the Presbyterian church of Canada, however, I believe the days of division are soon to cease. The opinion is fast taking hold of the people, and even of the clergy (who are generally the last to retire from the ancient strongholds) that old country divisions have no proper place here, and that it is best for the interest of the Presbyterian cause in Canada to have but one Presbyterian church. I pray God that he may soon accomplish this most desirable object.

"But, the church which we all love most I hope is the church of the living God, the holy and peculiar people, whom God gathers from every denomination, and from every clime—who walk with him upon the earth, who reign with him in the glory of the sky. It will be the privilege of our various churches that through the instrumentality employed in them, they furnish a few to this illustrious band. And of Zion it shall be said, this and that man were born in her. I trust, therefore, that while we offer up prayer to Almighty God for a blessing upon this sanctuary, and an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the means of grace which are employed, that our hearts may be full of interest and love for the whole kingdom of Christ. O, may it be the happy portion of these lands, to which God has imparted so much fertility and beauty, to carry upon their bosom a people, rich in all the graces of Christian truth and charity, inheriting the virtues which have placed high in the scale of nations, the noble races from which they have sprung, and seeking to provide for their children, and for the wandering sons of Europe, a home, where liberty and happiness, peace and religion, shall flourish together. There is, we may be sure, a great destiny before these countries, with their immense capabilities. Westward the tide of emigration will hold its way, so long as an outlet is afforded to the teeming population of European countries; and vast as is this continent—boundless, apparently, as are her forests and prairies—the time will come at length (unless the manifest purpose of God should change), when the woodman's axe will no longer resound through the opening space, nor the buffalo roam over his wide and ancient pasture ground—when from shore to shore, from east to west, nations will flourish and fulfil a purpose in the world. We who live on the banks of these mighty lakes, and of the noble river which they send to the sea—who are planted on the highway of this continent—may well look forward, with profound interest, to the unopened volume of the future. When our day and our destiny come, we may not be unworthy of the place which God has assigned to us."

The M.W. Grand Master then stepped forward, and congratulated the building committee on the progress they had already made in the erection of the church, as also the citizens of London in requiring the building of such an edifice amongst them. It was, he said, perhaps as well that there are divisions in the church of Christ, and he sincerely believed that it tended to advance the interests of Christianity, and our common humanity to be thus divided. The body which he had the honour to represent was undivided, and their great object was, to advance the cause of mankind, and to cherish those feelings of charity which tend to alleviate the ruggedness of our nature. He hoped that the time would soon come, when the sentiment expressed by one of the noblest sons of the Craft, in the words of the Scottish bard, would be realized, and he thought that he could not do better than by quoting them:—

"Then let us pray, that come it may,
As come it will, for a' that;
When hand to hand, the world around,
Shall brothers be for a' that."

The fraternity then reformed, and proceeded in the usual order, headed by the band, to the City Hall, where the Grand Lodge was closed in due form. Thus terminated one of the most pleasing ceremonies that has ever been witnessed in this city.

The style of this church is a kind of Gothic, much in use in the latter part of the fourteenth century. The design is the same as the new Trinity Church, Edinburgh.

At four o'clock the fraternity, together with a number of invited friends, assembled at the Tecumseh House to partake of dinner. After thanks had been returned, the Grand Master said that all those present were not members of the Masonic Craft, but he had been told that they were "right good fellows," and on that account he would alter the regular system of toasts. He hoped they would continue to enjoy themselves, and that the remaining proceedings of the day would be characterized by the same feeling of love and brotherly kindness that had already been evinced. He called upon them to respond to the toast "The Queen and the Craft."

Captain Wilson, P.G.D., then rose and proposed "The health of the Most Worshipful Grand Master." He said that it was unnecessary for him to make any remarks, as the fraternity were well aware of the service that had been rendered to the Craft by Colonel Wilson, and he would consider that he would only be hurting his (Colonel Wilson's) feelings were he to say anything in his praise.

The M.W. Grand Master said it was with the greatest pleasure and gratification that he received the testimony of respect and confidence that the brethren had expressed towards him. It was pleasing to know that his services had been acceptable to the Craft, and he hoped that he would continue to merit their confidence. The proceedings of the day had been to him of a very gratifying character. He had been in London on former occasions, and he was glad to see that notwithstanding the hardness of the times, there was still vitality left. He remembered passing through London in the year 1832, and so small a place was it then, that he and a friend who was with him could not find it, and after they had rode a short way out of the then village, they asked a man on the road where London was, and the man told them that they had just passed through it. He had visited it since on several occasions, and he had made the acquaintance of several worthy men who were not connected with the Craft. He hoped to spend many more happy days in London, and be present on such occasions.

The remaining toasts were principally of local interest.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty has at length brought her visit to the Highlands to a close. Last Friday the Queen, the Prince Consort, and the Princesses Alice and Helena, left Edinburgh for Loch Katrine, to inaugurate the waterworks that are constructed for the conveyance of the water of that lake into the city of Glasgow. The capacity of these works is equal to 50,000,000 gallons a day for one hundred and twenty days, the aqueduct thirty-seven miles in length, and the time occupied in construction three years. All passed off well, and the royal party left for Holyhead, where they arrived at seven in the evening. Her Majesty has since arrived at Windsor Castle from Penrhyn Castle. The Prince of Wales has left Buckingham Palace for Oxford. On Monday the Prince Consort visited the Great Eastern.

FOREIGN NEWS.—We learn by telegram that the treaty of peace between France and Austria has been signed at Zurich. The announcement of the treaty having been signed has not caused any excitement in Paris, as it is considered the treaty is a nullity as to its effect on the settlement of the Italian question. The Press jeers at the treaty, and says it justifies both those who announced the speedy conclusion of peace, and those who alleged that nothing had been settled. The Emperor Napoleon has refused to receive a deputation from Bologna; Dr. Kern, representative from Switzerland, had arrived in Paris, and General Dabornida has had another conference with Count Walewski. Although the French papers are prohibited from publishing the protests, &c., of the bishops, their reverences are not deterred from doing it themselves, and continue to do so perseveringly. An official intimation has been sent to all the French journals not to publish any document, pastoral letter, circular, or protest, that the bishops may put forward, and to abstain from commenting on those already published, or on the critical position of the Papacy. It appears that the absolutist party in Paris is loud in asserting that the archdukes will be restored, and that both England and France will support it in the coming congress. The Univers takes advantage of the statements made by Mr. Wakley on the subject of the alleged murder of illegitimate children in workhouses, and asserts that it is an English institution, and that it is the result of parliamentary government. The French system of warnings, from which Algeria had been so far free that they could not be issued without the sanction of the minister of the interior, has been extended to the press of that colony, in the same manner that it is now practised in France. Paris correspondents again mention the different measures resorted to by the French government for the protection of the seaboard, and, among others, that of the invention of a platform, something in the nature of a turn table, to be erected on different points of the coast, by which the guns can be readily pointed in any direction, as pivot guns now are.—A letter from Milan, dated the 16th inst., laments the paucity of news, and mentions the fact that not only are plain hints given to the conductors of the press to temper the vivacity of their criticisms on the Emperor of the French, but severe restrictions are put upon the vendors of newspapers, who are compelled to resort to various tricks to dispose of their political wares. The Lombardia, however, ventures to comment on the question of the maintenance of the temporal power of the Pope, which it calls "a serious impediment to the development and the progress, not only of Italian nationality, but of the true religion of Christ."—From the Central Italian States we learn that Signor Farini, dictator of Parma, has issued a circular addressed to the representatives of Parma at foreign courts, setting forth the reasons of the provisional government for desiring annexations to Sardinia. The Parmesan Government have arrested several individuals suspected of being concerned in the murder of Anviti.—According to accounts from Naples it appears that the prefect of police had been dismissed, and the minister of police has resigned, and that the king having become aware of the bad system pursued by those functionaries, had caused an order to be sent to the provincial prefects to pay less attention to the proceedings of private individuals, and more to their proper duty. A communication from Naples, of the 12th, says M. Ajossa, formerly intendant of Salerno, is now the leading man in the ministry; he it was who caused M. Governa, the former prefect of police, to be dismissed, the conduct of the latter having created much ill-will against the government. Warlike preparations were carrying on with activity.—A telegram from Breslau informs us that the Emperor of Russia will arrive there on Saturday, and the Prince Regent of Prussia on Friday next.—A telegram from Constantinople, dated Tuesday, states that the Grand Vizier, Ali Pacha, has been dismissed, and Mehemet Kupriali had succeeded him; it further says that Faud Pacha is expected to go out. Hussein Pacha, who was mixed up in the late conspiracy in Turkey, when questioned on the subject returned a haughty answer, which induced a supposition that a fresh conspiracy was expected to break out.—According to a telegram from Madrid, the Government of Morocco had promised to satisfy the demands of Spain, and Spain had thereupon demanded guarantees against further disturbances of the peace, requiring an immediate answer.—The Arabia, which left Boston on the 5th and Halifax on the 6th instant, has arrived at Liverpool. Lord Lyons had a protracted interview with the American Secretary of State, but nothing had been done in the San Juan affair pending the receipt of the views of the English government, which were expected by the next arrival. General Walker had again sailed on a filibustering expedition against Nicaragua. The result of the second day's cricket match between the Eleven English and Twenty-two of the United States, was—the English players' first innings, 156; United States first innings, 38; second innings, 35, with seven wickets to go down, and 83 runs to obtain, or they will be beaten in one innings. The aeronauts, La Mountain and Haddock, descended on the great Canadian wilderness, where they were rescued from starvation by a gentleman who was hunting. Venezuela continues in a disturbed state, but the fighting was in favour of the government troops.

INDIA, CHINA, AND COLONIES.—By the arrival of the overland mail we are in receipt of advices and papers from Calcutta to the 9th September, and from Hong-Kong to the 24th August. At Calcutta the public attention was principally directed to the new taxing measures of the government, which had met with rather strong opposition in the Council Chamber, and had, in consequence, undergone some modifications.—There is not much news from China, but the important information had reached Hong-Kong that Mr. Ward, the American minister, had been courteously received by the Chinese authorities, and had entered Peking, where he was to exchange the ratified treaties. It is rumoured that the Russians exchanged ratifications with the Chinese three months ago. The Russians were assembling a large fleet at the mouth of the Peiho.—The Bombay mail, we learn by telegram, arrived at Aden on the 6th inst. The latest date from Bombay is the 27th ult. Central India remained unsettled, the Wagheers were still in insurrection, and the frontier districts of Nepal continued to be occupied by the Nana and his followers.—The Parana has arrived at Southampton with the West India and Pacific mails. The complete wreck of the Paramatta is almost certain, but she is not yet abandoned. Trade in the West India Islands is still dull. A revolt has been discovered in Chili.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The Premier has been consulting with his colleagues in cabinet council almost every day this week.—General the Earl of Westmorland, G.C.B., and G.C.H., expired on Sunday evening at Apethorpe House, the family seat in Northamptonshire, after a short illness.—By a notification from the War Office it appears that government have resolved to increase the supply of rifles to the volunteer corps from 25 to 50 per cent. The quantity of ammunition to be supplied at cost price is also doubled. Several other advantageous arrangements are in prospect.—The proceedings of the Social Science Conference terminated on Saturday. Although a whole week was dedicated to the business of the Congress, and the various sections applied themselves most studiously to their duties, several papers sent in remained unread. The meeting at Bradford has been a most successful one, and the various valuable papers read must tend to the advancement of the moral and social welfare of the kingdom.—A court of aldermen was held on Tuesday, the Lord Mayor in the chair, when Mr. James Abbiss, the newly elected alderman for Bridge Ward was formally presented to the court, and took the usual oaths and his seat. He was then warmly congratulated by his brother aldermen. Alderman Rose moved, "That it be referred to a committee to take into consideration the laws relating to the sworn brokers of the city, and to report thereon." Alderman Sydney said Alderman Rose had given no reason why his motion should be adopted, and as the government would doubtless, in their bill, deal with the subject, he (Alderman Sydney) would move the previous question as an amendment. Some discussion ensued on the point; after which the amendment was negatived, and the motion agreed to.—The official report of Mr. Traill, the magistrate, and Captain Walker, nautical assessor, respecting the loss of the Alma steamer in the Red Sea, has been issued by the Board of Trade, together with their decision upon the matter. The report stated that Mr. Traill considered the loss of the ship as proceeding from the default of the chief officer (Mr. Davies) in not paying due attention to the bearings of the Great and Little Harnish, and in consequence not hauling the ship up soon enough and far enough to avoid the danger, which, had he consulted the chart, must have appeared to him directly in his course. The certificate of Captain Henry was returned to him. The report concluded by recommending a light to be placed on one or two points indicated. The Board of Trade suspended Mr. Davies's certificate for twelve months. The deaths in the metropolis last week were only 902, a fact which shows that the health of London is in a satisfactory state, being about 200 deaths below the estimated number. The only unfavourable features exhibited are the still high mortality from scarlatina, and the tendency to increase of small-pox. The births during the week numbered 1627. The return for the City is also favourable.—The City commissioners of sewers met on Tuesday at Guildhall. A precept having been recently received from the Board of Works requiring payment on the 30th of April next, from the commissioners, of £7,800, due from the City, a rate was now ordered to be made for that purpose. The medical officer presented his weekly report on the sanitary state of the City.—A man named Charles Warklett has been brought before Mr. Yardley, at the Thames police-court, charged with wilfully setting fire to the house of his master, Mr. Greenaway, tailor, Limehouse. Late on Sunday evening it was discovered that the house was on fire in three different places, which being with some difficulty and damage extinguished, the prisoner came forward and voluntarily confessed that he had set fire to the house; alleging, too, that he was induced to the act by friendly feelings towards his master. This statement was repeated at his examination, and the prisoner was committed for trial.—John Silvester, a cigar maker of Commercial-road, was committed for trial by Mr. Selfe, at the Thames Police-court, on the charge of stabbing with intent to murder, a police-constable, who was about to take him into custody for assaulting a woman with a poker.—On Monday the case of the robbery from Mr. W. Griffiths of upwards of £400 in notes and cheques, came before the recorder at Manchester. The examination lasted the whole day. Some of the notes were for a large amount, and were discounted by two men, M'Guinness and Walmsley. Walmsley was discharged, but M'Guinness, Sparks, and a woman named M'Kinney were found guilty, and were sentenced, the former to seven years, the latter two to four years each of penal servitude.—On Tuesday last Mr. Serjeant Payne concluded an inquiry at the Common Pleas Court, Guildhall, into the cause of the late disastrous fire in Bucklersbury, on the 7th instant. Evidence having been taken at some length as to the origin and progress of the fire, and the nature of paraffin oil, the jury returned the following verdict:—"That the fire was accidental, and the jury are of opinion there was great neglect and a thorough absence of the necessary precautions. The jury are further of opinion that paraffin oil, when stored in such large quantities, is of a character dangerous to the immediate neighbourhood." Mr. T. Atkinson said the suggestion of the jury would be attended to. In future the company would only keep small quantities upon the premises for immediate use or supply.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts state that the general tone of business was not discouraging, and that the impression was favourable with regard to the condition of trade at the conclusion of the year. A greater disposition was manifested on the part of buyers in Manchester to take goods, and prices were easier, but the extent of operations was not for the moment important. In Birmingham, an increase in trade occurred late in the week, the manufacturers having received a variety of orders on American and Australian account.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE PROV. GRAND LODGE AT ROSS.—"An Old P.M." is thanked for his communication on the subject of the Prov. Grand Lodge of Herefordshire, which shall receive our careful attention.

"H. H."—JERSEY.—A communication of great length is unavoidably postponed this week.

"J. W."—Our opinion has been more than once expressed—all such publications are rank impostures.

"B."—Bro. Hyde Clarke is at present resident in Smyrna.

"ALPHA."—In a week or two we will endeavour to meet your wishes.

"B. A., OXFORD."—The Wardens have no right to occupy the Master's chair, even when ruling the Lodge.

"CAER."—We do not know that the present Emperor of Russia is a Mason; we never heard that he was. The Emperor of Brazil is a Mason.

"LECTURER."—Write to Bro. Matthew Cooke, 78, George-street, Euston-road.

No. 1099.—Next week.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1859.

ΕΙΚΩΝ ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΙΑ.

THE dissolution of the Roman empire set free that current of thought which had for ages been flowing upwards, and of which the mighty influence was vastly increased by a profoundly organized repression. It would be a curious speculation to trace the working of that law which overtakes the steps of power, and as if with a breath, dissolves into mist the muniments and splendour of overgrown states.

When the fiat was issued, Roma est delenda the furthest ends of the world heard and rushed to be witnesses of the judgment.

There cannot be the slightest doubt that the new religion which had been born amongst the olives of Gethsemane, and was baptized in the blood of the Holy One on the Golgotha without the city, contributed more than any other influence to the imperial catastrophe. The new philosophy was radical in its operation. It had in its precepts the highest elements of success. It sank deeply in the gentler nature of woman, and woman grafted it on the tender mind of infancy, when in its growth it deepened and widened the nobler sentiments without doing harm to the courage or the stern resolution which the period of manhood entails.

In no art is this coming together of the nations of the world more clearly indicated than in architecture. In no art is more faithfully illustrated the hope of religion, the gentleness of charity, the unfaltering fortitude of faith. The tent of the wanderer grew, as it were, into a domed pinnacle of marble and gold. Side by side, taking, however, each its complexion from the different characters and manners of its authors, grew up the pointed arch and the pointed—but more oriental, lighter, and somewhat fantastic—dome and cupola. Each distinguishes a school of architecture, but the latter has been greatly degraded from its original purpose. Both advanced in development until too profuse and luxurious ornament had obliterated the original outline. The tide of immigration which travelled along the shores of the Euxine and crossed the Hellespont in the ox hides with which the Tartars' tents were covered, to whom not the climate but the luxuriance of eastern Europe was new—imported in this exodus such outlines as were suggested by the undulating plains over which they had been accustomed to roam, and which they had left, but whither they had no disposition to return.

The circular form was evidently the form which seemed to them to have the most capacity for convenience. This form, it would seem, recommended itself, if we would argue from its prevalence at any particular era, to the inhabitants of the east.

The rotunda was, originally, to the pagan of the plain, what the square apartment hollowed from the rock was to the pagan of the city. At first a rude circular wall of stones: it grew in height and width to be the temple of the astronomer, wherein the living fire was kept ever kindled, and around whose walls were represented the constellations of the heavens. But the circular form might have been necessary as well as convenient. One of the earliest forms of religious ceremonial was the procession in a circle. In many of the ancient sacrifices it was customary to conduct the victim at a certain distance around the simulacrum. There was a symbolic meaning, too, attached to the circle as the emblem of eternity, having neither end nor beginning, which has survived the pagan rite, and is to this day found to be taken with the same meaning by the superstitious but devout children of the Byzantine churches. The procession by torch light in the Eleusinia was evidently of oriental origin; and the sacred way over which the statue of Jakchos, the son of the goddess Demeter, decorated with a garland of myrtle, and bearing a torch in the hand, was carried on the sixth day of the Eleusinian rites, was also a circular route.

The columnated rectangular system of Greek architecture was capable of a purity and severity unattainable in any other form, and therefore the circular, except for barely monumental purposes, was religiously excluded. But when the Roman arch came into vogue, the endless variety of the circular form became understood. Still it does not appear to have suggested itself as applicable to religious edifices. The Colosseum and other circular buildings designed to hold immense numbers of the people, and the Pantheon, afford specimens of the round buildings of ancient Rome. As the empire declined, luxury contributed combinations of the circle and the square undetermined by any fixed rules. The inharmonious blendings are discoverable in many of the remains of Roman art. The custom of the Romans to build almost entirely with brick favoured this license. But when the finger of the Almighty had written upon the throne of the Cæsars as he had formerly written upon the walls of Babylon, that the idols should be thrown down, and that a purer worship should exalt the sanctuary of the heathen, a new direction was given to religious art. The change was not perhaps immediate, but in a century it was complete. The doors through which an excited multitude used to pour now admitted the humble Christian alone, who approached with holy fear, and communed personally with the Deity. Where the laws had been accustomed to be explained, where men bargained—where the edicts of power had been usually promulgated—where were the statues of the deities which represented the greatness, the glory, the prowess, the wealth of Rome, of her soldiers, her judges, her senators, her proconsuls—where her heralds shouted that Carthage was overthrown, that Jugurtha was subdued—where Cicero declaimed—where Cataline lorded it, and fretted his short hour—even there, in the heart of an empire, was built the first Christian church in the form of a cross, the εικων ελευθερια, or symbol of deliverance, the memorial of the greatest crime since the world began, but also the emblem of mercy eternal and illimitable.

When the seat of empire was transferred to Byzantium, the incursions that had been upon old forms in art by new phases of opinion, which were altogether as distinct as they were novel (and were not so despised), were not long in producing their legitimate effect; the same devotion which added arms or transepts to the Roman basilica, also added arms to the circular or domed buildings, so as to represent a cross. The arbor infelix of Cicero, the instrument of shame and disgrace, the infelix lignum of Seneca, the "accursed tree," was now raised on high by kings. The cross indeed had been used by pagan nations as a holy symbol, but it seems to have been very different in form. At Susa we read of a stone cut with hieroglyphics and cruciform inscriptions, upon which there appears the form of a cross. In the Brahminical dispensation the cross was regarded as the symbol of the divinity. A cross was set on the temple of Serapis as the Egyptian emblem of future life; sometimes it represented the four elements. "The sign of the cross," says Justin Martyr, "is impressed upon the whole of nature. There is hardly a handicraftsman but uses the figure of it among the implements of his industry. It forms a part of man himself, as may be seen when he extends his hands in prayer."

Another old writer, Minutius Felix, says—"Even nature herself seems to have formed this figure for us. We have a natural cross on every ship whose sails are spread; in every yoke that man forms; in every outspreading of his arms for prayer."

Thus the form of the cross already found in the arrangements of nature, and among the heathen as the symbol, was yet more forcibly suggested to the early Christians as the distinguishing badge, of their faith. Enthusiasm brought forth new forms out of a new light of faith, and discovered new applications for forms that had become obsolete. It would seem as if the old and the new were to meet upon the shores of the Bosphorus. Churches were built with pointed domes, to which were attached graceful minaret burnished with gold, and at a cost which only devout kings could endure. But here, on this spot, were fought the fiercest battles of differing sectaries. The great precept of Christianity recommending brotherhood was for a time abandoned for personal pride or inconsiderate zeal, and the bases of the marble temples were washed with blood for a period of two centuries.

But in eastern, as in western Europe, there were found men who were superior to the temptations of religious strife. The pointed dome assumed a more definite form, and became associated with a new order of architecture. The form of the cross was, for the most part, retained as the ground plan of the Christian church. Pious men now bethought them of studying the outlines of noble structures, or the combinations which the aspect of the grand and beautiful in nature might suggest. In process of time a brotherhood was formed. This spirit reached its height about the period of the Crusades. It became an act of devotion to erect votive chapels, to endow monasteries, to enrich shrines—and was thought a graceful act of knighthood. The priest was frequently the architect, and the consequence was, a greater diversity from the established forms.

We read at this period of octagonal churches, sexagonal churches, and others. Octagonal within a square, octagons within octagons, and polygons within polygons. But all these were peculiar to the east. That the form adopted when Christian architecture became a regular profession, and the main features of the new art became established by authority, was a combination of the square and the circle there cannot be any question. The same feeling which added transepts to the Roman basilica would, by the quadrature of the oriental rotunda, and by extending the intersecting naves beyond the circumference, effect the desirable object. There are several specimens of the Byzantine round church extant, the most perfect being that of St. George of Salonica, built about the end of the fourth century, and which measures one hundred and twenty-four feet in diameter, surmounted also by a dome of eighty feet in diameter.

The Byzantine churches do not appear to have at any time approached the oblong rectangle. The church of the Holy Apostles, which is described as comprising everything which is most varied and elegant of this school in the seventh century, is a square surmounted by a double narthex and five domes. The church of Santa Sophia exhibits a Greek cross surmounted by a cupola, thirty-three feet in diameter. But in no part of the world did architecture have to encounter so many disturbing causes as in the capital of the lower empire. The Greek church, or that division of the primitive church included within the limits of the old Greek territory and the new Roman capital, should have been the oldest christian community. Athens was first amongst the christian cities, and had heard the words of Paul preached in the very hearing of its gods, if we may so speak of the marble effigies by which they were represented. The gospels of Matthew and Mark, written in Attic Greek, were read in the gardens of Academe where once were heard the magnificent rhapsodies of heathen philosophy—where Plato harangued, and Socrates questioned.

But whatever may have been the design favoured at a later period by the architects of Byzantium, the outlines of the western Gothic, so far at least as the arrangement of the ground is concerned, are coincident and referable to the same motive. What Byzantine religious architecture might have become had peace been suffered to exist long in this beautiful region, it were now profitless to speculate. But the corruption of the pure faith soon overlaid the principles of the art that sprang from it; and the faith and its product at length went down into ruin together. Such a result has overtaken kingly pride and prelatic arrogance from the beginning of time down to the present moment.

DINING AND DRINKING TOASTS.

UPON the kindred subjects of after dinner speechmaking and hearty toast drinking, Freemasons are certainly not the least qualified to give an opinion; and we believe that most of the brethren will agree that both of these institutions are pleasant ones, and productive of good feeling, and indeed of a certain amount of even intellectual gratification. The custom is not confined to our body, but is a truly national one; its merits have been perceived by appreciative foreigners, and weak imitations of British festivity have been found prominent among the latest developments of German and French civilization. The latter gay nation have indeed not only adopted the toast as a political and social medium of opinion, but have actually incorporated the very word itself into their much vaunted language, where it holds an honourable brevet rank in company with its congeners "le sport," "boule-dogue," "jockey," "groom," "le boxe," "redingote," "un grogs," and others. But though the present emperor himself has—with a just conception of the truly valuable in English manners (of which, as of the truly worthless, he has had sufficient opportunities of judging in his time)—availed himself of this great institution on some occasions which have become historical—to "porter un toast" has never been a successful effort on the part of a true-born Frenchman, and has generally resulted in the substitution of a speech for a sentiment, or has disgusted the British observer by the cloudy way in which the proposer has endeavoured to elicit the enthusiasm of his audience. The most successful efforts ever made in this way by our "faithful allies" were assuredly those which were produced in the joint campaigns in the Crimea, where John Bull's jollity under difficulties seemed to give an impulse to his more mercurial brothers in arms, and to impart a feeling of good fellowship and joviality not by any means innate in the Gallic character.

Frequent repeated failures in this line at home in France, have ended in ridicule; and the wonder of untravelled Frenchmen, which might have been fostered to admiration as well as imitation, has culminated in some instances in disgust. True it is that this is in most cases to be attributed to the prejudice and conceit which form part of the national character; but constant breakdowns have had something considerable to do with it. Upon this subject we perceive some amusing and sensible remarks in the columns of a daily contemporary:—

"At a dinner of the Agricultural Society of Blaye (Gironde) a few days back, the Marquis de la Grange thus expressed himself—'I will not propose a toast! Toasts, with their accompanying addresses, are an importation from England; they are stiff and starched, are indistinct like foggy Albion herself, are intoxicating like porter, heavy like beer. I prefer the good old fashioned custom of our forefathers, simply drinking healths without a remark. They did not speechify—they drank; they did not enter into historical disquisitions, often erroneous, did not pronounce eulogiums which are too generally silly or false—they expressed their sentiments by acclamations. Down, then, with English toasts and imitations! Instead of changing this joyous table into a parliamentary tribune, let us be faithful to the past and to the traditions of France.'

"He then proceeded in terms of fulsome adulation, to propose the Emperor's health. Quelle mouche vous a donc piqué, Monsieur le Marquis? Why go out of your way to fall foul of manners and customs of which you are profoundly ignorant? Why, at least, not practise what you preach, and propose the emperor's health without comment? Instead of this you raise a convivial question of no inconsiderable interest; you make a speech over the mahogany against all after dinner speechifying, and when you have said your offensive say against a neighbouring nation, you expect no dog to bark after you, Sir Oracle, and fancy you have put down postprandial oratory for ever! You talk of the joyousness of a French dinner table. Never was a less appropriate remark—understanding it in the sense used by you, as applicable to public dinners.

"A French dinner party in a private house or in the salon of the Trois Frères may be a very joyous thing if it be composed of good fellows, although they may all talk at once instead of listening to one another as foggy Englishmen prefer doing, and although, unless tempted to remain by a game of lansquenet, they break up at the end of two hours, and disperse to play dominoes and drink beer among strangers in the cafés on the Boulevards. But a public banquet without speeches is the dullest affair in the world; it is a gross feed, and nothing more. There is no more joy about it than there is in dining at the table d'hôte of the Hotel du Louvre. You talk, perhaps, to your right and left hand neighbours, whom you may or may not know; the buzz and the clatter prevent anything like general conversation, and you may go away without a laugh or mental excitement of any kind to quicken the circulation of the blood, and counteract the effects of repletion.

"There is a rationale about the management of an English public dinner which the Marquis de la Grange does not understand. Speeches may be, and often are, prosy and wearisome; but without speeches there can be no homogeneity in an assemblage of fifty or two hundred men. Without speakers to direct the general stream of thought, and cause all hearts to vibrate simultaneously to one and the same chord, a public dinner party is as much a mob as an army without officers. And after all the cant about long speeches being a bore, it generally happens, in accordance with the natural arrangements of society, that the speaking department falls into the hands of those best qualified to do justice to it.

"If the Marquis de la Grange should ever do London the honour of a visit, I hope he will go to a Theatrical Fund dinner, or to some entertainment at the London or Freemasons' Tavern, at which some of our leading statesmen, or the princes of art, science, and literature dilate upon the special object of the gathering to an admiring public. When he observes the instantaneous silence which follows the word "order" from the chair, the respectful attention with which, in the interests of a necessary social institution, the most humbly endowed speaker is listened to, and the manifestations of intense satisfaction which greet the accomplished orator, or the eminent public man, he will perhaps instead of decrying the imitation of English toasts, regret that his countrymen do not imitate them better. He will have an opportunity of convincing himself that the foremost men in England do not disdain to cultivate the difficult art of appropriate speaking at public festivals, that the practise of the art promotes a close fraternization and sympathy between different classes of society which it is next to impossible to attain in any other way, and that an English public dinner, so far from being a mere joyless and monotonous meeting, at which people eat and drink more than usual, is a feast of reason and a flow of soul marked by distinguishing features and characteristics which cause the partakers to remember it for years with pleasure, and to look forward to its annual repetition with delight."

THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE.

AT the recent Provincial Grand Lodge of Suffolk, held at Woodbridge, on the 12th instant, under the presidency of the R.W. Bro. F. Roxburgh, Grand Registrar of England, acting by virtue of his office as Prov. Grand Master (that office being now vacant), the following excellent discourse was preached in St. Mary's Church, before the brethren, by the Rev. R. N. Sanderson, second Master of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, at Ipswich, who had that day been appointed Prov. Grand Chaplain:—

"AND the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither, so that there was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building."—1 KINGS, vi. 7.

TRULY it must have been a strange sight to have stood on one of the hills of Jerusalem, and to have beheld rising in such majestic silence the temple which was being builded to the glory of the Most High, by Solomon, the son of David. Strange it must have been to mark how, day by day during those seven years, the mighty pile grew and increased, yet noiselessly. All the materials were prepared at a great distance; the stones were hewn in the quarry, there squared, marked, and numbered; the timbers were felled and prepared in the forest of Lebanon, there squared, carved, marked and numbered also; thence they were conveyed to Jerusalem, and there set up with wooden tools in silent beauty.

"No workman's steel, no ponderous iron rung,
Like some tall palm the noiseless fabric sprung."

And herein, brethren, the temple was most plainly declared to be a work of God; for our Grand Master builded not of his own wisdom, but as he had been taught of God by the mouth of David his father. And if we were to seek for some mark to distinguish the works of man from the works of God, it might well be that of quietness and peace. Go by one of our factories on some Sunday, and you know that it is a day of holy rest, because there is no noise, not a sound, within those lately so busy walls. Man's work has ceased. Go by it the next morning, and there is the hum of voices, there is the sound of wheels, there is the clank of engines, and you know that man's work is going on; for in all the works of man, noise and tumult are the tokens of industry and progress.

But go again into a young plantation—what do we see there? No mortal could tell at what moment any of these trees, soon to grow to giant strength, first began to live. No mortal can mark and measure the progress of that growth, so steady, yet so noiseless; for when God works, we may see that which is done, but the doing of the work is hidden alike from ear and from eye of man.

And so Solomon, King of Israel, when he was building a house for the Lord God, was taught (as far as possible for man) to build it in the same way as the Great Architect of the universe builds the mighty temple of nature—and to carry on the work in stillness and in silence.

It is not to my present purpose, brethren, to show how in this, as in other respects, the temple on Mount Moriah was a figure of that more glorious temple built without hands, of which our Lord Jesus Christ is the head corner stone, elect, precious, and into which we also as lively stones are built up into a habitation for God through the Spirit. But there is another point of view from which we may profitably regard the passage of my text, and it is to this that I now propose to direct your attention, and to show to my brethren in Freemasonry a curious parallel which we may draw in Masonic allegory between the life of a true servant of God and the work of a wise builder. Brethren, we are each of us bound, whether initiated or not, to be labouring with all our might in the erection of an acceptable temple to the Most High God. By the various works of an upright and holy life we are bound to be rearing an abode for him, of which he may say, "This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell, for I have desired it." A devout life is this temple; and the stones of which it is builded are the works of truth and love, tried and approved by the square of God's word, and the compasses of self convincing conscience. Follow me, I pray you, while I endeavour to trace the likeness between this great work and the course through which we in Masonry have to pass. It is the allegorical representation of the life of the good man. Poor and ignorant, all unconscious of the way in which he walks, and of the work which has to be done, he is placed in the course of divine providence at that mysterious portal which is the entrance to the service of God. He stands in that way in which to rush madly forward is inevitable ruin; to retreat is destruction no less certain, but more ignominious. Ere the light of reason has dawned upon his infant mind, many an earnest prayer rises up before the throne of God from those who watch over his tender years, that the Great Architect of the universe may be pleased to endue him with a competency of his divine grace, to enable him to unfold the beauties of true godliness to the honour and glory of his holy name. The kind care and attention of parents and teachers lead him on further still, until at last, though without quite understanding why it must be so, he learns that a great and solemn duty is incumbent upon him, and that the Almighty Master awaits the service of a soul now first beginning to be conscious of its powers and responsibilities.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. With the first conscious resolve to dedicate a heart purified from every baneful and malignant passion to the glory of God and to the welfare of man, a new light breaks upon everything. Darkness has fled, and that which was till now unknown becomes plain. The vowed servant of God no longer is guided either by blind instinct or implicit reliance on the teaching of others, but goes boldly on his way, walking by the triple light of God's revealed will, of sound morality, and of watchful self control. He is greeted as a brother by brethren; he learns to distinguish those who are engaged in the same noble work as himself; he learns to feel that he is in truth a member of a vast fraternity which embraces all mankind; and his love, looking through every distinction of rank, country, and colour, extends itself as far as from east to west, as wide as from north to south, as deep as from the surface of the earth to the centre, even as high as the heavens. He receives the tools which enable him duly to calculate his work, and to go forth with patience and industry to accomplish it, and the tongue of good report tells loudly that a true brother is employed in building a temple to the name and glory of the Most High God in strength higher than his own.

I said that this temple must be builded of the works of faith and love. It is so. Heavily through the burden and heat of the day the Mason must toil in the quarry of this world to shape the materials which are to be laid in the house of God. Rough and unhewn are the stones on which his hands, armed with the chisel of industry and the hammer of perseverance, must carve, mark, and indent. Wild is the wood in which his axe must fell and hew the beams ere they can be fitted for the sacred structure; yet such is the heaven taught wisdom which guides him, that when they come to be set up, we may well say that the whole is the work of the Great Architect of the universe, not of human hands.

But follow me, brethren, further yet, when by the divine grace assisting, the hard stone is squared, and the stubborn beams are shaped so as to become fit materials for the spiritual temple which is to be reared. Let us for a while contemplate the work as it grows and grows, and draws nearer and nearer to its completion.

Holy is the ground upon which that temple stands. It is hallowed in virtue of a triple offering. Hallowed it is, and bought and consecrated for ever to the worship of God by the priceless offering of the blood of that "more acceptable victim," our Lord Jesus Christ, "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," sanctified by which it remains, unmeet for any meaner use than the service of Almighty God. But alas! though all unmeet for such defilement, yet the fraud and malice of the devil, or our own carnal will and frailty oftentimes pollute that consecrated dwelling; often when God in his love is willing to come and make his abode with us, we by our own self-will and disobedience drive him away from us. What shall purify the spot which we have polluted so that he may return to it again? Blessed be God, brethren, the tears and prayers of penitence rendered acceptable by that first and only sacrifice of atonement, appease an offended Lord and turn away his hand as the hand of the angel was stayed at the threshing floor of Araunah the Jebusite, by the penitential offering of David. God forgetteth not to be gracious, but turns to that temple from whence arise thenceforth the constant sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving, the oblations and costly offerings of a grateful and pardoned soul, the third pure offering by which that abode is hallowed. Such is the ground upon which the temple stands. Its foundations are laid deep in wisdom, that wisdom which we are exhorted to seek for as for hidden treasures; that divine illumination without which any frail and sinful man in seeking to serve God, would be only like one that is deaf, whose fingers wander at random over the keys of a musical instrument producing only some vague and jarring sounds, the effect of which he knows not. The walls are builded up in strength, that heavenly strength lent by God himself, to support his servants under toils and difficulties beneath which unassisted human nature would faint and fall, but aided by which the hands which hang down are lifted up and the feeble knees are braced anew, and the holy work goes on approaching ever nearer and nearer to the likeness of the divine plan. Beauty shines through the whole design, in symmetry and order. No grace or virtue is pushed forward by the wise master builder so as to seem discordant with or to conceal another, but each piece being laid in its due place by a judicious hand the whole work rises in wondrous harmony, and he ascends when he wills by the step of faith, hope, and love, which resting on the blessed volume of God's revealed will, conducts him in heart and mind into that sanctuary where is the very presence of God. With freedom, fervency, and zeal, he serves his heavenly master. No slavish fear checks and fetters the glad offering of his love. No coward chills smother the glow of energy with which, urged on by that love, he takes his work in hand afresh day by day; no dull sloth entices him to loiter over his task while aught remains to be done.

It may be, perchance, that his place is but a humble one, and that, well satisfied with that portion which the providence of God has allotted to him, he seeks no higher grade, covets no higher glory than faithfully to have filled a lowly post. Well is it for him if it be so, and God's everlasting blessing rest on and prosper such humble and retiring souls! But nobler yet is he who, having first sought to give glory to God and love to man, boldly stretches forward, and extends his researches into the more hidden mysteries of nature and of science. Yet even here, the same wisdom from on high which bade him go about the one needful task in quiet and in calm, governs and directs him in the wide field which opens before him. It may be that learning is his glorious pursuit. The tongues of distant nations and speeches now forgotten may become as familiar to him as the language which he lisped on his mother's knee. The records of old kings whose very names have become matters of dispute for the scholar, may yield up their secrets to his piercing eye. Oratory may enable his words to thrill a nation's heart, and awake drowsy souls to the high and honourable pursuit of what is great and noble. Logic may become his instrument to direct him into the knowledge of truth, and the baffled sophist may slink scowling from his presence. Numbers, geometry and astronomy may become alike his servants and his guides, may teach him to measure the surface of the earth, trace his way across the realms of ocean, or direct his gaze to follow the path of comets and worlds unknown, through the boundless regions of space. Music may rise beneath his touch, breathing echoes fresh from fairy land, or strains that emulate the angelic songs. He may design wondrous works of mechanic skill, throwing slight but imperishable bridges across hitherto impassable rifts and mountain gorges, yoking the powers of steam in bands, and bidding the mysterious agencies of electricity and magnetism do his errands and bear his words across the pathless waters. His hand may give birth to paintings which rival ideal beauty; he may shape

"The stone that breathes and struggles,
The brass that seems to speak;"

disease and pain may look on him and fly; the returning bloom of health may rekindle the pale cheek, and renovated strength may lift up the enfeebled frame at his bidding. All this and much more he may do—yet of all this he never forgets the great, the only real aim; he knows that all this can serve no higher use than to help worthily to adorn that temple, to the erection of which he has devoted his life. Humbly he pursues his high and noble work, never unconscious of the loving gaze of that all-seeing eye of the Grand Geometrician which is continually watching over him. In strength his work is established on the right hand and on the left, that God's name may rest there for ever. Whatsoever he does in word or deed, he does all to the glory of God. Alas! brethren, did we but set this end more fully before us as the one object worthy of rational and responsible man, what glorious creatures should we be, even fallen and marred as we are. But it may not be! Follow me on while I trace out the parallel yet a little further.

Many a temptation from without, many a lust from within, warring against the soul, have hindered the glorious work from reaching its fulness. Long watchful care has baffled them many a time in their attempts to meddle with and mar that design of the Master Builder which was none of theirs, till at last many of them seem to have withdrawn from their unhallowed confederacy. But three deadly foes still remain, in whom is concentrated the malice of the whole. Who shall be in this life entirely conqueror over the world, the flesh, and the devil? What son of Adam shall so entirely repair the image of his Maker as not to follow his forefathers to the grave? True, the great and useful lesson which we learn in life has been studied well, by such a man as I have been endeavouring to describe. Safely he has been conducted through the intricate windings of this mortal life, and now he practises the lesson which he has learned, the lesson which teaches him how to die. Death, which for him has no terrors, has wrought upon him the worst it can. His work is over, the builder is smitten, his mortal body is lowered into the grave to be turned into corruption; but is this all? Does his great King leave him to an unhallowed repose? No! The bright and morning star has arisen. Even in the keep of death the right hand of the Saviour's righteousness shall hold him up, and raise him to a place of peaceful rest near the sanctuary of his presence, there to wait until in due time to the faithful and true the real secret, the secret of God himself, shall be revealed.

Then, brethren, if this be so, let us go on calmly with our work. Let the world be content to believe that there can be nothing done which is hidden from its prying gaze, and that if there were, it would show itself in vain noise and bustle and turmoil, as the way of the world is. Be it ours rather to help to labour for God in the majestic silence which marks the growth of his temple, and to wait patiently for the wages of our toil, until our heavenly Grand Master's day; being well assured that in due season we shall receive our reward.

Reverently shading our eyes, lest we be blinded by excess of light, let us look on, dear brethren, upward and upward still. What we see I will not dare to describe, save where inspired truth leads the way. What says St. John? "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. . . . And he showed me that great city, the heavenly Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God. . . . And I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. . . . And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their honour and glory to it."

Yes, well beloved brethren, when that day shall come, the former things shall have passed away. Ended will be then the work; completed will be then the Grand Arch which the Almighty Architect has now been nearly six thousand years in building, and on it shall be set the sapphire throne of God; while below it shall be unveiled the pure and spotless altar from which shall rise the ceaseless incense of the praises of the redeemed. No need there of mysterious sign and symbol, of guardedly imparted token or word—we shall know as we are known; and the last secret, the Lord of Sabaoth himself, whom now we see but as in a glass darkly, in his works and gifts of love, shall then be visible to us face to face. What joy we shall have in that presence, I may not attempt to say; more it will be than we ever in our best and purest hours ever realized of heaven and heavenly love; more than in vision or revelation was ever made known to prophet or apostle of old, for all these things have been seen by and known to man; but "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Now therefore to him, the Great Architect of the universe, the triune God Most High, let us ascribe all honour, power, wisdom, and glory, henceforth and for ever.

MASONRY, AS IT IS.

From the American Masonic Mirror and Keystone.

THERE have been of late years various opinions expressed, both outside and within the Order, as to the precise benefits it confers upon the world. This is an utilitarian age, and everything must of course be measured by the standard of utility. With regard to Masonry, it is but just. It certainly has professed to possess within itself means of usefulness not enjoyed by kindred associations. It has, indeed, not only professed but proved itself in bygone years, to be a blessing to the nations. Has Masonry descended from her exalted position? Has she fallen into the sere and yellow leaf of decay? These are the questions which have pressed upon the minds of Masons, and have met with a ready answer from those least able to answer the profane. From our own members, those who stand within the sacred fane, we listen to glowing panegyrics upon the virtues of Masonry, praise so hyperbolic as to trench narrowly on the ridiculous; and anon, to lamentations so mournful and profound, as to sink the heavens into the profundities of bathos. Now, both are partly right and partly wrong, Masonry still stands as a light set upon a hill, its brilliancy, perhaps, somewhat dimmed. Her province is still to enlighten the understanding, to succour the distressed. Her sphere of usefulness, however, has been somewhat curtailed. The territory which she once occupied, almost exclusively, has been invaded. We live in an age when true philanthropy rests not in theory but expands into practice. There is a struggle between the great ones of the earth, the great in goodness, in the cause of truth and humanity. All around us the workers are up and doing. The work which Masonry once regarded as almost exclusively hers, must be shared with others, so that she is not so much a necessity as in the days of yore, when oppression ran riot, and poverty was not only a misfortune but a curse. Other agencies have been called forth in these days of light and power, which far transcend her in their means of usefulness—both morally and physically. Of this we have no doubt, nor do we stand alone in this opinion. Moral and religious teachers have arisen, the field of whose exertions is far wider than that of Masonry. The benevolent societies of the day are more prolific of good, because they possess greater means and power. The passage of years has brought this about, not, we think, any remissness on the part of Masons, or carelessness in the discipline of the Order. Masonry cannot be considered the necessity she once was, except, perhaps, in one respect. In this one particular she will stand alone, so long as the present constitution of things exists. She forms the only perfect brotherhood. The distinctions of the world, the distinctions which rank or wealth confer, she reckons not, but as matters of accident. She is yet no leveller. She preaches not the equality of men as citizens of the world, as planners and actors on life's arena. Profound intellect, indomitable energy, are not vouchsafed to all, and these form the sliding scale of life; place some at the top, some at the bottom of the hill, we never find all remaining on a level. Then the fortuitous circumstances which none can either seize or repel, give a shove up or a shove down, making all the difference in the world among the contestants. Masonry looks to the heart alone. She teaches, and successfully too, that man must regard his fellow as a brother, no matter how exalted or how mean his condition; and on the floor of the Lodge all are so regarded. Where else does man meet man as his equal—his equal in the power of living and acting well, neither superior or inferior, as worldly circumstances may have elevated or depressed? We certainly find no such equality represented in the church, political arena, or exchange. We do not see it strictly acknowledged in the various benevolent associations. But in Masonry it is a cardinal principle. The peasant and the peer are equal, provided both act up to the principles of truth and virtue. We mean, of course, when they meet as Masons. Masonry, as we have remarked, does not ignore the distinction which God himself has planted in the world, when we meet on the open stage of life. But, still the principle which in the Lodge room is developed into action, loses not its influence when we leave. It causes us to be watchful of thought and action, lest we unnecessarily offend. It keeps brightly glowing that flame which should warm every heart, that of love and kindness. The lessons taught in a Lodge—lessons of humility, yet of trusting love, cannot be forgotten. Thus, then, the necessity of constantly inculcating, by precept and example, this law of brotherhood, makes Masonry still a necessity. She is, for this one great purpose, as potent now as in past years. In the Lodge rooms alone, are precept and example on this important point, combined. As an intellectual agent, her influence may have decayed; as a moral teacher, her lessons may have lost to a certain extent their power; but, as a socializer and humanizer of man, she stands pre-eminent. Can she socialize or humanize without making men wiser and better?

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE LATE LORD DUDLEY COURTIS STUART.

I SHOULD be glad to be informed, through the "Masonic Notes and Queries," whether the late Lord Dudley Stuart was a Mason. I heard several persons, at the last election for this borough, assert that he was one of the brethren, but, as they were all strangers to me, I have some doubts as to the accuracy of their knowledge.—MARYLEBONE.—[The late Lord Dudley Stuart was a Mason. He passed the chair of the Polish Lodge (No. 776) in 1851. He also served the offices of 3rd and 2nd Principal of the Royal Arch Chapter, and was elected to the first chair, but owing to illness was never installed. His lordship was also S.G.W. of England in 1852. For a short obituary notice of this patriotic and noble brother, "Marylebone" is referred to p. 96 of the Masonic Mirror, for the year 1854.]

PRIVILEGES OF THE FOUR OLD LODGES.

In 1717, when the Grand Lodge was resuscitated, it was resolved "That every privilege which they collectively enjoyed by virtue of their immemorial rights, they should still continue to enjoy; and that no law, rule, or regulation to be hereafter made or passed in Grand Lodge should ever deprive them of such privilege, or encroach on any landmark which was at that time established as the standard of Masonic government."

Now, I see nothing of this kind in our present Book of Constitutions, nor is the dispute about privilege clearly set forth by which, for some years, Bro. Preston ceased to be a member of the Lodge of Antiquity. I would therefore request the favour of a reply to two questions, viz.:—What are the peculiar privileges of the four old Lodges (if any)? and when were they abrogated?—JAS. C . . . H.

GRAND PORTRAIT PAINTER.

It is on record, that at a Grand Lodge, holden on the 23rd of November, 1783, an addition was made to the number of Grand Officers, by the appointment of the Reverend William Peters as Grand Portrait Painter.

As one of your previous notes has told us that he was one of the great artists of his day, and produced several pictures still held in deserved esteem, there seems to have been nothing objectionable in the appointment. My question, however, is not as to the propriety of conferring such an office, but to ask who have been his successors?—MAIL-STICK.

WAS THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON A FREEMASON?

The three greatest generals of modern times are objects of interest to every one. Washington has long since been known as a Mason; the Duke of Wellington has been clearly proved to have been one of our Order by several of your correspondents; and I now venture to inquire if the Emperor Napoleon was a Mason?

I remember having heard, or read, long before I took notes of particularly striking events, or information, that Napoleon had been initiated much against the desire of the fraternity, and that in consequence he was subjected to some exceedingly rigorous ordeal, and afterwards, on some occasion, the nature of which I cannot charge my memory with, he endeavoured to use the prestige of his membership in the furtherance of his schemes of universal dominion. Be this right or wrong I feel sure, from the attention paid by your correspondents to a similar inquiry in your pages, that I have only to ask, to ensure the solution of my query from some of the well read contributors to your columns.—INQUIRER.

MASTER OF THE VALLEY.

Where can any account of this association, said to be Masonic, be found?—A. F. L.

INEDITED MASONIC CURIOSITY.

In the multiplicity of reprints of Masonic documents which have issued from the press during the last quarter of a century, the following curious single sheet, in answer to Samuel Pritchard, printed at Dublin in 1725, seems to have been overlooked, and may be worthy of preservation among the Masonic Notes of the Freemasons' Magazine. It is entitled "The Free Masons Vindication, Being an Answer To a Scandalous Libel, entitled the Grand Mystery of the Free Masons, discover'd," &c.

"Wherein is plainly prov'd the falsity of that Discovery, and how great an imposition it is on the Publick.

"Invidiâ sicuti non invenere Tyranni

"Majus Tormentum.—Hon.

"Sic Murus Athenis esto

"Nil consicere tibi, nulla pallescere Culpa.—ib.

"E Cælo descendit γυῖθι σαύρον.—JUV.

"Having read a Paper lately publish'd, which has strove to deceive the World by a pretended Discovery of the Manners and Customes of the Free Masons at their Assemblies, Meetings, &c., We of that Society thought it incumbent upon us to say something in Answer to it, not so much on account of the Paper itself, which deserves nothing but Ridicule (as we shall sufficiently show) to any understanding Man's Consideration; but to undeceive those who have suffer'd themselves to be impos'd on by such an intolerable Abuse. Not that we by this reflect on those Gentlemen's Judgements, for they not knowing are the more liable to the Imputation; tho' one wou'd hardly suppose a secret that has never been divulg'd since this Order first commenc'd, shou'd now be expos'd on such groundless, and I may say hardly credible, Reasons. Our Antagonist tells you it was found in the Custody of a Free Mason who died suddenly; now we think that Excuse the most ridiculous in the World; for if We were so indiscreet as to Commit our Orders to the Care of each Person of our Society, We cou'd not expect but it wou'd have been discover'd by many Mischances before this Time; but We are much more careful in things of such Importance, and never leave it in the Power of the wisest Observer to discover the least hint of our Designs. Your Author's Fable We don't think it worth while to answer, since it so much reflects upon himself; for he has made his Discovery scarce equal to the Solution of his Enigma. If we shou'd attempt to answer him Paragraph by Paragraph, it wou'd spend more Time than We can at present allow, since it is from first to last one continued Piece of Nonsense; and cou'd with more Reason (as did [tho' upon a different Occasion] an eminent Divine) put a Mentiris to the End of all his Affirmatives; for it appears at first View more like a jargon of Contradictions, than a premeditated Composition.

"The Free Masons have been allow'd to be the most ancient and honourable Society in the World, and both are and have been compos'd chiefly of the principal Nobility; but 'tis the same thing with our Author; the more excellent the subject, the Jest will pass the better; and nothing can please so well as a Fool that has lost his Manners; but what cou'd be his design is hard to be understood, or what exalted Ideas he has conceiv'd of us to make him bestow such uncommon Terms of Art on us, we can't imagine. In our Health, that he has taken such extraordinary Pains to anatomize, he owns we are a very noble and ancient Fraternity, and makes ourselves allow it to be a wonder-Mystery; altho' his Fable gave him the Lie no less than a Page before; whether this be Ignorance or Impudence I leave the World to Determine.

"The Author has taken a great deal of pains to very little purpose; and has been at a greater deal of trouble to make himself Intelligible, than an Antiquated Apothecary; for the utmost of his Discovery leaves his Reader in a greater Dilemma than ever, and sufficiently shows how much it wants an Interpreter. What could induce him to be so ridiculous as to Write, or so imprudent to publish, is perhaps hard to be determined, if Hunger or Envy were not the chief Motives. Be that as it will, we believe that those who have got Mr. Informer's Instructions will be as much at a loss to discover a Freemason as if he had still conceal'd his directions, and will, like himself, for ever remain in Ignorance.

"What we intend by this Discourse is not to honour our Author so far as to think him worth Contradiction, but to put his Readers in mind to consider their infallible Receipt a little more narrowly, and not be too confident in their belief of a Fable. Having, therefore, performed what we intended, we think it time to bid our Author adieu, and to take this Advice, either never to write, or to write something nearer sense than his last. But as he in the beginning of his information introduces himself with a very handsome apropos Fable, we shall condescend so far in imitation of him, to conclude with another, and to tell him, "That a Fox once having observed a large bunch of excellent Grapes hanging in a very tempting Posture over his Head, strove, with the hazard of his neck, by a great many Leaps, Springs, and other Stratagems, to lead away captive this Bunch, that by its alluring colour and magnitude, had dar'd to provoke his Appetite; but after many dangers escaped, difficulties overcome, a few Limbs disjointed, and other chances of war, having found it impossible to compass his desires, he began, by the instigation of his longing stomach, to curse and abuse what he had spent so many hours and received so many bruises in attempting to recover. Adieu."

J.A., P.P., D.D.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Young America Abroad in Europe, Asia, and Australia. By GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN, of Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A. London: Sampson Low, Son, and Co., 47, Ludgate-hill.

THIS work has attained a well merited popularity in the United States and in Great Britain. The author is a regular go-a-head American, a fast man, in the unobjectionable sense of that phrase. His views of political, commercial, and social progress are such as might be expected from a talented and enterprising American. His observing faculties, as a phrenologist would say, have been more developed than his reflective organs. He sees quickly, and judges rather too quickly, yet his judgments are seldom illiberal and never ungenerous. The intelligent reader must be often struck with the clearness of Mr. Train's perception amidst scenes and circumstances entirely new to him. It is impossible for us always to concur in his opinions, but we very freely render homage to his abilities. His views of China and the Chinese, and especially of the rebels against the Tartar dynasty, are formed upon imperfect data. His denunciations of the vile coolie traffic are just, manly, and humane. He does not spare his own countrymen when they are blameable, either in connection with the coolie trade or any other of their misdeeds. He, however, relied too implicitly upon information afforded to him by American consuls and merchants, in describing the condition and commerce of the British "Straits settlements;" his error in this respect is especially exemplified. Some of his descriptive chapters are admirable, and occasionally rise to eloquence. It is instructive to peruse his critiques upon East Indian governors and officials; their arrogance, hauteur, exclusiveness, and contempt for the people they govern, are depicted well and truly. The faults of Mr. Train's style are—an air of affected smartness, a sort of slap dash manner of treating important and grave subjects, as if he desired credit for an off hand and bold manner of writing, and considered himself a very great authority. This has led to severe criticism in the Anglo-Indian reviews, although the newspaper press of India, the Straits, and Hong Kong have passed a very favourable judgment upon our author. He would do well in his next edition to omit or modify some of his notices of social life amongst Europeans and Americans in the various places which he visited. There are redundancies and inelegancies which also demand a careful pruning of the next issue. Allowance ought to be made in these respects, as the chapters of his book first appeared in the New York Herald as letters from "our own correspondent." It is necessary, however, in order to gain for the book the reception which its many merits deserve, that the author should subject his present edition to a revision which rhetoric and good taste require at his hands. No Englishman can read Mr. Train's spirited and genial book without pleasure and instruction.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE Germans in London intend to celebrate Schiller's centenary birthday. A committee for the purpose has been formed, which, we understand, has entered into negotiations with the directors of the Crystal Palace.

"The committee of the fête of Schiller," says a communication from Berlin, "has just published the programme of what is to take place here. On November 9, the eve of the fête, there will be a grand procession with illumination, and coronation of the colossal statue of Schiller in one of the public squares; on the 10th a holiday in all the schools and colleges; distribution of popular writings on the life and works of the poet; distribution of albums, lithographs and other prints, medals, statuettes, &c.; extraordinary representations at all the theatres and other places of public amusement; at night, a general illumination. On the 11th, concerts and banquets in different districts of the city."

The Philosophic Institution of Edinburgh will commence its new session on the 4th of November, when Professor Aytoun will deliver an inaugural address on "The Popular Traditions and Poetry of the North of Europe."

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. Graves, the well known print-seller of Pall Mall. The print department of the British Museum is deeply indebted to this excellent judge of engravings.

A few days ago, Professor Leopold Ranke, the well known historian, published the first volume of a new work on the history of England in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. A Berlin correspondent says:—"The book is written with the usual diplomatic finesse of the author, and will be of great interest to those who prefer the delineation of character and portrayal of motives to the exhibition of the general features and aspect of the time. Ranke has always been the historiographer—not of peoples, but of states; and in his new book he has not deviated from the path in which he has gained so many well deserved laurels. But the principal merit of the work is the exactness of investigation in a field which, as yet, is but so imperfectly known, and where most of the documents are like the sleeping princess, still in expectation of the fairy prince who comes to break the charmed spell. As was to be expected of an author of his tendencies, he speaks with the greatest respect of Macaulay, therein differing from some of the acknowledged writers of history in Germany. Indeed, he himself is not less opposed to the prevailing direction which these writers take than is his English confrère."

It is reported that the classic pile at Newstead, the residence of the late Bro. Col. Wildman, together with the estate, exceeding 3,000 acres in extent, will shortly be brought to the hammer in one lot. The late lamented owner of Newstead purchased the estate in 1818 for £94,000; and since that period very large sums of money have been expended in improving it. It is to be hoped that the future possessor may have as much regard for the memories and associations of Newstead with Byron as were constantly evinced by the gallant colonel.

We have to note the death of Sir Thomas Tassell Grant, a most useful public servant, and a man of very high merit as a practical inventor, at the age of sixty-four. To his genius the public is indebted for the steam machinery used in the manufacture of biscuit, which affects a saving to the country amounting annually to £30,000—a new life buoy—a feathering paddle wheel—the patent fuel which bore his name—and the apparatus for distilling fresh water from the sea. The last invention is in all respects the most signal and most important. Though broken in health, he stuck to his duties, and literally died in harness. Few men, even among his devoted class, ever deserved better of their country than Sir Thomas Grant.

The Opinione of Turin says:—"M. Passerini has written to Baron Ricasoli, minister of the interior, to announce that he has discovered in the government archives at Florence a volume of letters of Machiavelli in the handwriting of Senator Bertolini, and collected by him for publication. This copy, which was amongst documents lately presented to the archives by the Marquis Bertolini Carregas, will compensate the loss of a great number of autograph documents of Machiavelli which have been carried abroad during the last sixty years."

In the notice of the British Museum reading room catalogue, in the last number of the Athenæum, the reading room is spoken of as containing "about sixty thousand volumes," accessible to the frequenters. This, we are since told, was inadvertently said. About sixty thousand is the number of volumes in the reading room, but of these the greater number stand on gallery shelves not free to the reader. The volumes freely at the reader's hand, and described in the catalogue, are about twenty thousand. The works in the upper galleries do not consist of works of reference; but of the largest and most miscellaneous collection of journals, magazines, reviews, annuals and almanacs ever yet assembled under one roof. The error is of no importance; but we correct it because it is an error.

Mr. Thomas Alton, long connected with the London press, and during the last ten years with the Toronto Globe and the Detroit Free Press, was found dead in his bed, at Detroit, on the 27th ult., at the early age of forty-five. He left some large sums of money in two banks, of which the local judge at the inquest took possession.

Messrs. Griffin & Co. are preparing for publication a "Handbook of Contemporary Biography," on the plan of stating facts, not attempting estimates or venturing on comparisons. This is the true principle in dealing with living men, whose fame may be in contest, even though their influence may be established as a fact. If Messrs. Griffin will severely observe their own principle, they may obtain assistance for their work, and respect for it when done.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Examiner speaks of a forthcoming history of the Crimean war, from the pen of the author of "Eothen." He says:—"Mr. Kinglake spent some time on the scene of operations; his powers as a writer are too well known to need praise; and what is perhaps quite as important, he is to have the use of the papers of the late Lord Raglan. I believe that he enjoyed his lordship's acquaintance; and I find it very generally anticipated—certainly in military circles—that the result of the work will go far to the vindication of his lordship's character as a soldier. With the exception of an article of Mr. Haywood in the North British Review, nothing like an authoritative answer has yet been given to the attacks of the Times correspondent, and the libels which M. Bazancourt compiled for his depreciation and the glory of the French army."

Some of our contemporaries announce the preparation of a new edition of "Tennyson's Poems," with illustrations. There is a mistake in this announcement. About a year ago Mr. MacIise executed some very beautiful and fanciful designs in illustration of "The Princess." These illustrations will be published as a Christmas book. No other pictorial edition of Tennyson is in course of preparation.

Messrs. Hurst and Blackett announce the following works in their list of new publications in preparation:—"Poems," by the author of "John Halifax, gentleman," with engravings by Birket Foster; "The Upper and Lower Amoor, a Narrative of Travel and Adventure," by Mr. Atkinson, author of "Oriental and Western Siberia," in two volumes, with numerous illustrations; "The Life and Times of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham," by Mrs. Thompson; "Pictures of Sporting Life and Character," by Lord William Lennox; "Mr. and Mrs. Asheton," a novel, by the author of "Margaret and her Bridesmaids;" and new works of fiction by the Hon. Mrs. Norton, Miss Kavanagh, Mrs. Howitt, Mrs. S. C. Hall, the author of "Margaret Maitland," &c. The next volume of Hurst and Blackett's "Standard Library" will comprise Sam Slick's "Wise Saws and Modern Instances."

Messrs. Saunders, Otley, and Co., announce for publication in the present month: "Nelly Carew," a novel by Miss Power; "The Memoirs of a Lady-in-Waiting," a novel, by the author of "Adventures of Mrs. Colonel Somerset in Caffraria;" "Irene," a novel, in three vols.; "Helen Lester," a novel, by the author of "Garestone Hall;" a translation of Balzac's "César Birotteau;" "Pre-Adamite Man;" "On the Steep Alp," a collection of Swiss Legends; "Echoes from the Harp of France," by Mrs. Carey.

Mr. Skeet's announcements are:—"Literary Reminiscences and Memoirs of Thomas Campbell," by Cyrus Redding, Esq.; "Travels in Morocco," by the late James Richardson, edited by his Widow; "My Study Chair, or Memoirs of Men and Books," by the late D. O. Maddy, Esq.; "Four Years in Burmah," by W. H. Marshall, Esq., late editor of the Rangoon Chronicle; "Too Much Alone," by F. G. Trafford; "Stockwell House, or Keeping up Appearances," by Cyrus Redding, Esq.; "Before the Dawn," by Kate Crichton; "Rich and Poor," by the author of "Gladys of Harlech."

The Publishers' Circular gives a few items of literary news from America: "Our original publications since my last letter consist of—a new volume (vol. vii.) of Appleton's 'American Cyclopaedia;' 'The Empire of Russia,' by the Rev. John S. C. Abbott; vols. vi., vii., and viii. of Richard Grant White's edition of Shakespeare; 'The Book of the First American Chess Congress,' by Daniel Willard Fiske; 'Life of Alexander von Humboldt,' by R. H. Stoddard; and 'Beulah,' a novel, by Augusta J. Evans, of Mobile. 'The Headsman' forms the new volume of the Illustrated Edition of Cooper. Apropos of this edition of Cooper's novels, I would beg leave to express the opinion that it should receive the attention of the English trade. The illustrations are good, very good, true to American life, and well engraved. The letterpress and other mechanical execution is as far superior to the ordinary run of American books as are the Chiswick to the ordinary run of English books, and, if times have not altered, Cooper's novels are very popular, and constantly read. We have reprinted from recent English issues, 'A Student's Hume,' 1 dol., and 'Out of the Depths,' 1 dol. The republishers of 'Out of the Depths' are doing their best to make a sensation work of it, by advertising and puffing in the true American style. Mr. Charles Reade's 'Good Fight' is reprinted in Harper's Weekly, with all the illustrations as in Once a Week. A new book by the author of 'Queechy' and 'Wide, Wide World,' is announced under the title of 'Say and Seal.' Also a new story of considerable length, by Fanny Fern, is said to be nearly completed; of its character, plot, and name, nothing is known. The eighth volume of Bancroft's 'History of the United States' is in the press, and nearly ready for publication. I have heard that it is Mr. Bancroft's intention not to extend this history beyond the first years of the independence, he being of opinion that the state of the country subsequently has been of too experimental a character to form subject for the historian of the present day. The works of the late Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, are to be published by Messrs. Appleton, in five vols. 8vo. The following books are also announced for publication this autumn: 'Gold-foil Hammered from Popular Proverbs,' by Timothy Titcomb; 'Footfalls on the boundary of Another World,' by the Hon. R. Dale Owen; 'Calhoun and his Contemporaries,' by Mr. B. A. Reynolds, of Mobile; 'The Prairie Traveller, a Handbook for Overland Emigrants,' by Captain R. B. Marcy, U.S.A.; 'Preachers and Preaching,' by the Rev. Dr. Murray; 'Women Artists in all Ages and Countries,' by Mrs. Ellet."

Poetry.

LEIGH HUNT.

BY MARY COWDEN CLARK.

THE world grows empty; fadingly and fast
The dear ones and the great ones of my life
Melt forth, and leave me but the shadows rife,
Of those who blissful made my peopled past;
Shadows that in their numerousness cast
A sense of desolation sharp as knife
Upon the soul, perplexing it with strife
Against the vacancy, the void, the vast Unfruitful desert which the earth becomes
To one who loses thus the cherish'd friends
Of youth. The loss of each beloved sends
An aching consciousness of want that dumbs
The voice to silence—akin to the dead blank
All things became, when down the sad heart sank.
And yet not so would'st thou thyself have view'd Affliction: thy true poet soul knew how
The sorest thwartings patiently to bow
To wisest teachings; that they still renew'd
In thee strong hope; firm trust, a faith imbued
With cheerful spirit—constant to avow
The good of e'en things evil, and allow
All ills to pass with courage unsubdued.
Philosophy like thine turns to pure gold
Earth's dross: imprisonment assumed a grace,
A dignity, as borne by thee, in bold
Defence of Liberty and Right; thy face
Reflected thy heart's sun 'mid sickness, pain,
And grief; nay, loss itself thou mad'st a gain.

COO-EY!

WHEN travelling the lonely bush
Where, save one's tramp, a solemn hush
Pervades the twilight scene around
And seems to hold the trees spellbound
They look so ghostly, tall and grey,
Like mutes about the perished clay—
At such a time one starts to hear
The native cry, shrill, sharp, and clear,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!
Awakening the birds in fear.
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!

I heard it once, it proved a guide
To one who, but for me had died.
Two maddening days he had been lost,
He worshipped me because I crossed,
By chance, that unfrequented way—
And brought him where the foot track lay,
How often he had called in vain
Along the forest tangled plain,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!
No one at hand to cry again,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!

At moonlight I have heard that sound
Dance o'er the white uneven ground—
Of worked out gold fields—desert save
The mound which marks the digger's grave,
And bears a flower—an acted prayer
Memento of affection there.
And I have heard it many times,
In different spots and even climes,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!
Unearthly, piercing, weirdlike chimes,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!

From passing ship when out at sea
That thrilling cry has greeted me,
And once in England where I stayed,
With those with whom my youth had played,
I heard—when last I could have been Expectant—'twas so changed a scene—
In Regent-street, at early night
That sound, with half perplexed delight,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!
In Regent-street, midst gas beams bright,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!

I turned and saw a friend I knew,
My hand in his Masonic grew.
Myself and he—good heart alive!
Had worked together in one drive,
Together we had made our piles,
Together travelled weary miles.
How glad from him was I to hear
The well known cry salute my ear,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!
Born of another hemisphere,
Coo-ey! Coo-ey!

HAIL TO THE CRAFT.

BY BRO. JOHN WHITEMAN, OF MELBOURNE.

HAIL to the star of Masonry, whose pure and radiant light,
Resplendent shines o'er land and sea, by day as well as night;
How great its charm there's none can tell, but those who know its pow'r;
Its mystic, magic, working spell, to cheer life's darkest hour.
'Tis a glorious star, and sheds its ray
O'er all the world, from day to day.

Hail to the gem, true charity, oh! may it e'er be worn
By every Mason, just and free, the Order to adorn;
Hail to the three grand principles on which Freemasons rest,
Fraternal love, relief, and truth, enshrined within each breast,
Pure satisfaction will impart,
To the just and upright Mason's heart.

Hail to the Craft, whose secret arts and hidden myst'ries hold
A wondrous power o'er all the hearts of Masons, young and old;
And while that power retains its sway with undiminished might,
With fervent zeal and freedom pay glad homage to the bright
Pure star, that shines and sheds its ray
O'er all the world, from day to day.

Hail to the Craft, to which belongs a great and mighty band,
Of brethren fam'd in art, in song, the noblest in the land;
Princes and dukes its rank still seek, where'er its flag may wave,
It welcomes all the just, the free, but ne'er admits the slave.
All hail to the Craft, it still shall be
The Craft we love—Freemasonry!

MASONIC SONG.

BY BRO. WARDHAUGH.

A MASON's Grand Lodge is the world—
And all the pure things that are in it
(By sun gold tipped, by moonlight empearl'd)
His signs and his tokens infinite.
Ay! and here are the pillars of beauty,
A fair dappled carpet well spread,
And officers charg'd with the duty
Of seeing the Master obey'd.
Sing success to the sons of the square,
Wherever their homes they may be;
There's a true Mason's Lodge everywhere,
'Midst the brave, the good, and the free.

Let us make this short life then a pleasure,
Emblazon'd by symbols sublime;
Let us gauge out our work with due measure,
To please our Grand Master divine.
And let us be kind, my dear brother,
Be upright and square in our dealings—
True Freemasons one to the other
In this wide Lodge of thoughts and feelings.
Sing success to the sons of the square, &c.

CANDOUR.—The good humoured and candid answer of a learned and rather long winded preacher of the old school always appeared to me quite charming. The good man was far from being a popular preacher, and yet he could not reduce his discourses below the hour and a half. On being asked, as a gentle hint, of their possibly needless length, if he did not feel tired after preaching so long, he replied, "Na, na, I'm no tired;" adding, however, with much naïveté, "but, Lord, hoo tired the fouk whiles are."—Dean Ramsay.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF HEREFORDSHIRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—The proceedings at the late meeting at Ross as reported in the local journals and also in your columns, would lead the public and the Masonic readers to imagine that under the Provincial Grand Master, Masonry had reached to a glorious state of perfection in that province.

I pledge my Masonic honour that the following is the true state of the Masonic matters; and if the Provincial Grand Master, instead of preparing a grand speech to attract vainglorious approbation, would give some time to the Masonic working of the province, then these eulogistic remarks would be more in place.

Now for the real business of the meeting. In the first place the W.M. of the Vitruvian was ordered to open his Lodge in the first degree: this was done, but afterwards this was thought unnecessary, as the matter was treated with indifference, and the Lodge was never closed! The Provincial Grand Master who has done so much for the revival of Masonry could not open his Grand Lodge and read from a memorandum the formula. How does this agree with the first step in Masonry? Now for the Officers—the Deputy Grand Master, no doubt a very worthy Mason, but resident in London, and the Provincial Grand Master being also non-resident, it does not appear that we have officers to aid the cause of Masonry in the province. The Provincial Grand Secretary is also a resident in London. As for the Provincial Senior Grand Warden, Archdeacon Freer, a more worthy gentleman could not be found, but his appointment is in direct violation of the Book of Constitutions, as he has never served the office of Master of a Lodge, and is thus quite ineligible, masonically speaking. But more is to come—he is appointed Assistant Deputy Grand Master! and although never a Master, wears the Past Master's levels on his clothing.

This is a specimen of the state of things. There were also gentlemen invited to the banquet who were not Masons; and the reporters (not Masons) of two local papers were invited and attended in order to give the Provincial Grand Master's prepared speeches to the world. Luckily for the sake of Masonry they were not present within the Lodge, although they could have easily gained admission, as the brethren went in and out of the Provincial Grand Lodge during business without any challenge; in fact, the Provincial Grand Tyler remained within the Lodge.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
AN OLD P.M., AND IN THE PROVINCE.

MASONIC CHARITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It gave me great pleasure to read in your report of the Provincial Grand Lodge meeting for Warwickshire, that the noble sum of one hundred and fifty guineas was voted to the metropolitan charities, viz.: £52 10s. to the Boys School; £52 10s. to the Girls School, and £52 10s. to the Royal Masonic Annuity Fund—the effect of this being that the R.W. Provincial Grand Master (Lord Leigh) will be made a vice-president and governor of each of these charities for life. In the Provincial Grand Lodge for Worcestershire, held at Dudley in 1858, a similar motion was brought forward by a Dudley brother, but having reference only to one institution, that of the Girls. This was opposed, if my memory serves me truly, by a Worcester brother, but was carried by a large majority. At the Provincial Meeting at Kidderminster, in September last, a further donation of £52 10s. was proposed to the Boys School, but again opposed by some brethren from the city of Worcester, though unsuccessfully. Next year I hope that a similar sum will be likewise voted to the Royal Masonic Annuity Fund. Why the Worcester brethren should so systematically oppose these grants (or rather the brethren of one Worcester Lodge only) is a mystery to the brethren in other parts of the province. In the four Dudley Lodges, and at Stourbridge and Kidderminster, the notice of motion which was given was freely discussed, and an unanimous resolve made to support so desirable an act—an act having for its object the furtherance of true Masonic charity. They also highly approved of the honour it would confer upon their much respected Prov. Grand Master, Bro Henry Charles Vernon.

But in order to disarm opposition on the score of a too liberal grant from the funds, it was resolved to insure the life of the Prov. Grand Master, so that when his life should "fall in" (as the actuaries have it), the Provincial Grand Lodge should have, without trenching any farther upon its funds, the wherewithal to benefit the charities again in like manner, and again to confer honour upon their R.W. Prov. Grand Master. This, however, one Worcester brother declared would be a malappropriation of the Lodge funds—a proposal, by the bye, that was made by the head of one of the first legal firms in the country—and therefore, one would have thought unobjectionable on the part of legality.

One objection was that the grant would become a "dangerous precedent." That it will become a "precedent" is sure enough, and the Warwickshire meeting is likely to make it a still stronger one, but how it can be a "dangerous" one "deponent knoweth not." I should like to know how the exercise of Masonic charity can ever become a "dangerous" act—perhaps some of the Masonic lights of the good old city of Worcester will kindly and charitably (for it would be charitable if indeed there was danger), inform us.

I hope to see other Provincial Grand Lodges following in the footsteps of Worcestershire and Warwickshire, and thus assist in the enlargement of the operations of the "metropolitan charities," so called by a Worcester brother—the following list of boys, elected at the last meeting of the Boys School, will show with what correctness:—London boys, five: Dutton, Wintle, Wesson, Jay, and Carlin—Country boys, seven: Stark, Johnson, Kilpin, McDowell, Gregory, Saunders, and Hand. In the face of this, how can the institution be stigmatised as purely "metropolitan?"

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

H. WIGGINTON, S.W. No. 819,

October 26th, 1859.

and Prov. G. Asst. Dir. of Cers.

WAILE O' WIGS.—A facetious and acute friend of mine, who rather leans to the Sydney Smith view of Scottish wit, declares that all our humorous stories are about lairds who are drunk. Of such stories there are certainly not a few. One of the best belonged to my part of the country, and to many persons I should perhaps apologise for introducing it at all. The story has been told of various parties and localities, but no doubt the genuine laird was a laird of Balmamoon, and that the locality was a wild tract of land not far from his place called Munrimmon Moor. Balmamoon had been dining out in the neighbourhood, where, by mistake, they had put down to him after dinner cherry brandy, instead of port wine, his usual beverage. The rich flavour and strength so pleased him that, having tasted it, he would have nothing else. On rising from the table, therefore, the laird would be more affected by his drink than if he had taken his ordinary allowance of port. His servant Harry, or "Hairy," was to drive him home in a gig or whisky, as it was called, the usual open carriage of the time. On crossing the moor, however, whether from greater exposure to the blast or from the laird's unsteadiness of head, his hat and wig came off and fell upon the ground. Harry got out to pick them up and restore them to his master. The laird was satisfied with the hat, but demurred at the wig. "It's no my wig, Hairy, lad; it's no my wig," and refused to have anything to do with it. Hairy lost his patience, and anxious to get home, remonstrated with his master, "Ye'd better tak it, sir, for there's nae waile o' wigs on Munrimmon Moor." The humour of the argument is exquisite, putting to the laird in his unreasonable objection, the sly insinuation that in such a locality, if he did not take this wig he was not likely to find another. Then what a rich expression, "waile o' wigs." In English what is it? "A choice of perukes." There is nothing in the English comparable to the "waile o' wigs."—Dean Ramsay.

ITALIAN PROVERBS.—Says Guicciardini, "Do all you can to seem good, and the better shall it be for you." In another place, speaking of gratitude in return for favours received, he says, "Look for assistance only to those who are so situated that they must needs serve you, and not to such as you have served," &c. How infinitely higher and nobler is "Gianni's" standard of moral worth when he says, "Goodness takes up no room;" and better still, "Whoso doeth good, hath goods;" or, with honest trust in his fellow creatures' gratitude, "Service kindles love"—"He that gives discreetly sells dear"—"Almsgiving never made any man poor"—"Helpfulness never comes home without his wages." And what a noble refutation we find of Guicciardini's perfidious counsel "Deny stoutly what you would not have known, or affirm in like manner what you wish to be believed, because though there be many contradictions, nay, almost certainties against you, your doing so may gain over the judgment of him at least who hears you." Now listen to Gianni's homely jingle on the other side of the question, "Clean lips and even hand, go free through every land."

ANCIENT SYMBOLISM ILLUSTRATED.—II.

BY BRO. ROB. MARTIN, M.D., PAST DEPUTY PROV. GRAND MASTER OF SUFFOLK; AND P.E. COM. OF KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, &c.

THE MYSTIC TRIANGLE.

THE beautiful lotus of the Nile is another emblem which equally applied to Noah, to the ark, and to the generative power; for, as at the overflowings of the Nile that lovely plant floats on the surface while all other vegetation is immersed beneath the rapid waters, it reminds the Egyptians of the flood, and is adopted by them as the symbol of the ark. The mystic symbol called a modius, or πολος, from polus, multus, is the bell or seed vessel of the lotus, or water lily (nymphaea nelumbo of Linnæus), which being of a nature reproductive in itself, was also adopted by the ancients as a symbol of the reproductive powers of the waters which spread life and vegetation over the earth, and was on that account received as an emblem of Noah, from whom sprang all the nations of the world.

In this curious and very ancient arkite hieroglyphic, copied from the rare work of Kircher, it will be seen that the god representing Noah, and rising from the lotus or ark, forms one triangle with his right arm, a second with his left, and suspends a third from his shoulder, emblematical of his three sons.

NOAH ON THE LOTUS LEAF.

For ten generations from Noah we read of no manifestations of the Deity to his rebellious subjects, till the time of Abraham who was the tenth from Noah, and who, about one thousand nine hundred and twenty years before Christ, was directed of the Lord to go into Egypt, where it would appear he attempted to draw back the Egyptians from idolatry, and in some degree for a time succeeded; yet three centuries and a half after that period, Egypt was found by Moses in the depths of idolatrous delusion. From the date, however, of his inspired teaching, we trace in all the subsequent triads indicative of the Deity a close resemblance to our accepted doctrine of the Trinity, symbolized by our triangle—a first great cause, at whose fiat the world and all that therein is, was created—a generative attribute, by whom all things were made, and without whom was not anything made that was made—and the emanating spirit.

Orpheus, whose principles the Pythagoreans adopted, and who lived before Hesiod or Homer, went for instruction, about twelve hundred years before Christ, into Egypt, and thence brought the following definition of a Deity:—"There exists an unknown being who is the highest and most ancient of all beings, and author of all things; this sublime being is life, light, and knowledge." The celebrated prayer of Agamemnon to the gods when he called upon them to attest and confirm his treaty with Priam, about eleven hundred and thirty years before Christ, will probably suggest itself to the remembrance of some of my readers. He gave a complete abstract of the elementary system on which the mystic triangle was founded, naming first the awful and venerable Father of all; then the sun, who, by his light and heat, superintends and regulates the universe; and lastly, the diffusion of the great active spirit which pervades the waters, the earth, and the regions under the earth. Again, the supreme triad at Hieropolis appears in the temple of Samothrace, in three celebrated statues called Venus, Pothos, and Phaethon, or Nature, Attraction, and Light. According to Kircher, the globe, the wing, and the serpent formed the trinity of Egypt. In O'Brien's history of the round towers of Ireland will be found several instances of triads in the original Iran or Persian and Irish religions.

The tetragrammaton of the Essenes had a strong affinity to our equilateral triangle, and was clearly expressive of a trinity in unity; it was communicated in a whisper, according to Tarphon, and under a disguised form, so that while its component parts were universally known, the connected whole was an incommunicable mystery. The symbol by which the name was designated consisted of three Jods, with the point Kamelet placed under them to express the equality of the three persons of which they believe the godhead to be composed. Another celebrated symbol of this august name was, the disposal of three points in a radiated form, so as to represent an imperial diadem. Visible traces of this triune doctrine are discovered not only in the three principles of the Chaldaic theology, in the triplasios mithra of Persia, in the

THE TETRAGRAMMATON OF THE ESSENES.

THE IMPERIAL DIADEM.

triad of India (where it was promulgated in the Geeta fifteen hundred years before the birth of Plato), but also in the tanga-tanga or three in one of the South Americans. Abundant evidence can be adduced of the doctrine of the Trinity being well known to the ancient Jews. The letter Schin of the Hebrews, was adopted as a mysterious emblem to designate the tetragrammaton, and hence it was highly esteemed and worn on the head phylactery of the HEAD PHYLACTERY OF THE ANCIENT JEWS.

Jews. The effects of inability to pronounce this letter are well known, or should be, to every Fellow Craft.

In the phylactery or mezuroth, which the ancient Jews fastened round the left arm, the word Shaddai was inscribed at length; this word contains both the Schin, the acknowledged symbol of the three hypostases, and the Jod, the initial letter of the word Jehovah. A plate showing these letters so applied, is a curious remnant of Jewish antiquity to be seen in the Pantheon Hebraicum, and shows how early the Jews entertained the notion of a heavenly Triad, and yet how anxious they were at the same time to express the unity. The Hebrew Jod, in their mystical alphabet, is designated by an equilateral triangle, to denote the Trinity, and a single Jod to express unity. The ark and two cherubims are considered by some Hebrew writers as symbols of a trinity.

TRIANGLE, EXPRESSIVE OF TRINITY.

JOD, EXPRESSIVE OF UNITY.

In the system of Pythagoras, the equilateral triangle represents the Deity. Pythagoras taught that whatever had a middle was a triform, and the triform figure constitutes perfection.

TRIANGLE AND JOD, EXPRESSIVE OF TRINITY AND UNITY.

It was esteemed the most sacred of emblems; and when an obligation of more than usual importance was administered, it was given in a triangle, and when so taken, none were ever known to violate it. "So highly," says Bro. Oliver, "did the ancients esteem this figure, that it became among them an object of worship—they gave it the name of God."* From

* The word יהוה Y, H, V, H, or, as pronounced and written by us, Yehorah or Jehorah (the vowels in the Hebrew language not being written but punctuated) was held by the ancient Hebrews in extreme the mystic import of the triangle arose the importance attached by authors of every age and nation, sacred or profane, to the number three. Rabbi Haydon said there are three lights in God, the ancient light or Kadmon, the pure light, and the purified light; symbolizing the Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian types or dispensations. I will here enumerate the most prominent of the threes, commencing with those mentioned in the Old Testament.

First, then, Adam had three sons, Cain, Abel, and Seth. Noah had three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. There were three stories in the ark. The promise was made to three, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Three men came to Abraham on the plains of Mamre. Joseph was three years in prison. Balaam smote the ass three times. Moses was hidden by his parents three months. There were three days of darkness in the plagues of Egypt. Moses, Aaron, and Miriam came to the tabernacle by command of God. Moses smote the rock three times. "Three times a year shall all the males appear before the Lord." Exodus xxiii. Hannah took with Samuel three bullocks. Three times did the Lord call Samuel. Elijah cast himself three times upon the son of the widow of Zarephath. Nebuchadnezzar cast three worshippers of the true God into the burning fiery furnace. Daniel prayed to God thrice each day. Isaiah walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign. Holy, holy, holy, occurs in Isaiah and Revelations in reference to the Godhead. The command not to go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days was three times enforced. Leviticus viii., 33-35. Jonah was three days and three nights in the fish's belly. God commanded him to go to Nineveh three times.

In the New Testament, we observe that at the transfiguration three men were overshadowed by a cloud, the Saviour, Moses, and Elias, while three were on earth. Thrice did Peter deny his master. Thrice did the Saviour pray in the garden. Thrice did the three Apostles sleep on that occasion. Before three persons was our blessed Lord taken, Caiaphas, Herod, and Pilate. Three were crucified, our Saviour and two thieves. At the third hour—Mark xv., 25. Three hours was there darkness over the whole land, from the sixth to the ninth hour. Three days was the Son of Man in the grave. Innumerable other instances of the remarkable occurrences of the number three could be readily selected by a diligent inquirer from the volume of the Sacred Law; we will, however, now notice uninspired authorities, both sacred and profane.

There were three sybils, and three of their books were kept. In the Oracles of Zoroaster we find the following expression, "For the mind of the father said that all things be cut into three." There are three abodes of man, heaven, earth, and hell. The best authors on the Hindoo customs inform us that when a Hindoo widow burns herself on the funeral pile of her dead husband, she encompasses it three times. It was an invariable practice among the ancients when they deified any one to attribute to him three properties, or three qualities, which they considered essential to the character of a godhead.

The Greeks and Romans observed the number three, and was never uttered. The Greeks paid it the same adoration, and called it Tetragrammaton, which means "the word of four letters" (τέτρα γράμμα). The Hebrew word יהוה Ye Ho Va H, or "God" is composed of the past tense of the verb "to be," Hovah, and one additional Jod, which, as has been shown, symbolized unity; and made it perfect, or expressive of all times, past, present, and to come, thus Jehovah literally means "I am, have been, or shall, or will be!" "Pythagoras," says Oliver, "confided the secrets of his sect only to those sworn on a triangle, and held the oath so taken to be most sacred, swearing by the number four, which they wrote by ten Jods or dots in the form of a triangle, so that the three sides of the figure consisted each of four dots. This was taken from the nomen tetragrammaton of the Grecian Jews, who, having a notion of a Trinity expressed the Trigonon Mysicum. The triangle answering to the four letters יהוה 'I am, was, and ever shall be,'" especially at funerals.* In the Greek church during their ceremonies, the archbishop holds in his hand three tapers, which are intended to represent the Trinity; they approach so closely at their extremities, that their flames mingle into one, symbolical of a Trinity in Unity.

In Pope's translation of Homer we read—

"They drive their horses thrice about the dead, Lamenting."

In Dryden's translation of the eighth eclogue of Virgil, we find—

"Around his waxen image first I wind,
Three woollen fillets, of three colours joined,
Thrice bind around his thrice devoted head,
Which round the sacred altar thrice is led.
Unequal numbers please the Gods."

Another passage, "Ter circum accensos," &c., is thus translated:—

"Well armed thrice round the pile they march on foot, Thrice round it rode, and with a dismal shout Surveyed the rolling flames."

Shakspeare also notices this mystic number. In Macbeth he introduces three witches, they dance round the cauldron three times. The first witch exclaims, "Thrice the brindled cat hath mewed." The second witch—"Twice and once the hedge pig whined."

Sufficient has been advanced to prove that the number three was received with mystic signification. When represented by a triangle in the school of Pythagoras, it has been connected with the idea, of rule or government; and thus we distinctly trace it in our science of Masonry.

O'Brien states that the first name given to our body was saer, which word has three significations—first, free; secondly, Mason; thirdly, Son of God. We recognize three Grand Lodges; we have three grand pillars—wisdom, strength, and beauty; three principal Masonic virtues—faith, hope, and charity; three grand principles in our order—brotherly love, relief, and truth.

From Denon, Champollion, Belzoni, Salt, Dr. Young, and others, we learn that the unity of the Deity was represented in Egyptian hieroglyphics by a rude sort of mallet or hammer, and a plurality of gods by three of the same to represent the triad; and hence our three hirms symbolical of our rulers and the power they possess. Three colours were ordered to adorn the robe of Aaron (Exodus xxviii., 25), blue, purple, and scarlet; these are the three used in the Royal Arch. Taut or Thoth, among the Egyptians, is emblemized by three crosses united at the feet; the symbol on our Royal Arch badge is thus formed. The three principal pyramids of Egypt form, on every side, an exact triangle: their true Coptic name is Pire-monc, or Sun-beam, they having been erected as temples to the Sun, or Buddh, in honour of the generative attribute.

Antonio de Solis describes the Mexican shrines to have been of similar figure, each side forming an equilateral triangle.

Acosta, in his history of the Indies, speaking of the American Indians, says they worship a direct trinity in unity, for in Cuquisaco there is a certain oratory where they worship a great idol whom they call tanga-tanga, which signifies one in three and three in one.

Pythagoras, Plato, Numenius, and other Greek philosophers, taught the doctrine of the Trinity, and employed as its symbol an equilateral triangle, which I have now traced through two of the three grand postdiluvian divisions of the world. That portion allotted to the virtuous Shem, in whose seed was the promise, remains for discussion. I shall defer

* At the entrance of the Elysian Fields, or abodes of the blessed the Greek fables place Cerberus as a guard. He is represented by the figure of a dog having three heads. The three heads denote the three funeral cries over the corpse; hence the derivation—ceri, an exclamation, and ber the grave; the grave or vault, cerber; or Cerberus the cries of the grave. The ceremony of interment was ended by thrice sprinkling sand over the aperture of the vault, and thrice bidding the deceased adieu.

the consideration of the subject to another paper, in which I shall endeavour to prove the universal acceptance of the emblem in that portion of the globe; together with the extreme antiquity of its adoption into Masonry, its different natures, their separate properties, and respective applications to the several degrees of our fraternity, from the Entered Apprentice, to that of the Knights Templar, proving it to be our alpha and omega, present in all degrees, urging us from the following consideration to the practice of benevolence and charity, that charity which vaunteth not itself, which sayeth not to his neighbour, "Stand thou afar off, for I am holier than thou," but which admits that if for some wise purpose the pillar of cloud still presents itself to the heathen nations, and for a season prevents them seeing the error of their ways, so strong is the affinity between the elementary principles of their false creeds and the truths of revealed religion, that they must have originally emanated from the same divine source, and that although the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness for the present comprehendeth it not, one single gleam from above, in God's appointed time, can dissipate the mist, and place our heathen brethren on "the level of ourselves."

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

PROVINCIAL.

BERKSHIRE.

CONSECRATION OF ST. JOHN'S LODGE, NO. 1097, AT MAIDENHEAD.

A WARRANT having been obtained, the consecration and opening of this Lodge was fixed for Monday, October 25th, and the rooms of the Orkney Arms Hotel, where it is to be held, not being sufficiently spacious for the ceremony, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master granted a dispensation to celebrate the consecration at the Town Hall, the use of which was conceded by the mayor. At high twelve, near forty brethren being present, a Lodge was opened by the W. Bro. Jeremiah How, P.M., and Prov. G. Dir. of Cers. Hertfordshire, who was authorised by the M.W. Grand Master to perform the ceremony of consecration; Bro. Astley, Prov. G. Supt. of Works, Berks, filling the Senior Warden's chair; and Bro. Bursey, of No. 839, being the J.W.; the Rev. Bro. W. A. Hales, No. 201, being the Chaplain on the occasion; Bro. Geo. States, P.M., No. 166, acting as Dir. of Cers.

The petitioners for a Charter of Constitution being arranged, were presented by Bro. Dr. Harcourt, Prov. D.G.M. of Surrey, and their petition and the warrant having been read by the Prov. G. Sec., Bro. How addressed the brethren to the following effect:—

"It is customary on such important occasions as that of planting a shoot from the Masonic stock, for the brother upon whom the mantle of authority may for the time be placed, to offer a few remarks that may seem pertinent to the occurrence. Without attempting to enter into a history of our institution, it is undoubted that Freemasonry has, in some form or other, existed from the earliest ages of the world: it was practised among the Latomi or sacred builders of Egypt, and the skilled artificers of Phœnicia, who were the architects of the glorious house of God, raised by Solomon, some of whom it has been recently discovered planted a colony in Europe and were the parent race of the Etruscans—by the prophet Daniel, who is known to profane history by the name of Zerdusht or Zoroaster—it was adopted by the Magi in Persia—and by Pythagoras it was founded in Greece. With all these people it was connected with the priesthood, to which class in fact, until modern days, all learning and knowledge was confined. In the mists of ages it is difficult to trace how it came into Britain, but it must have been very early. It has exhibited many phases by the changes society has undergone, and our business is now the condition of Masonry in this country. I may notice that since 1813, when the United Grand Lodge was solemnly constituted and its ritual and practice rendered uniform, its Lodges and members have greatly increased—nearly seven hundred Lodges having been added to its roll; and since the period that Lord Zetland was elevated to the distinguished position of its chief, three hundred and eighty-six new Lodges have been created. This increased spread of Masonry is the best proof that can be offered of the good government of the executive. Freemasonry has prospered more in some localities than others, and in this province a movement has been made which promises to advance Freemasonry. With this Lodge there are but five Lodges, and one Royal Arch Chapter. I think a Chapter ought to be attached to every Lodge. In Bucks we have but one Lodge—it is going on well, we had three initiations there last Monday. There has been some neglect in calling the brethren together, but this is to be remedied, as annual meetings will be held in future. Next year I have been told the Prov. Grand Master will hold his Grand Lodge at Aylesbury, and although we cannot expect so goodly an assemblage as attended at Reading, yet it is to be hoped that every Mason of the province that can, will not fail to attend his lordship's bidding, and thus give encouragement for future meetings. As a member and officer of the Buckingham Lodge, I trust the first visit of our Provincial Grand Master will be honoured with the presence of the brethren of the other Lodges. The D. Prov. Grand Master and the Prov. Grand Sec. on all occasions evince their zeal in favour of the institution; their efforts require aid on your parts by regular attendance and efficiency in the work. It may not be out of place to mention that besides the system of Masonry as established by the United Grand Lodge of England, there has for a long period existed, and we have now in practice, other rites—the Knights Templar, and the various degrees under the denomination of the Antient and Accepted Rite—these form what is generally termed Christian Masonry, and have met with much encouragement in the higher walks of society; and as the recipients of these grades must have been duly admitted to the three symbolic degrees, the more advanced or historical degrees satisfy the scruples some entertain with respect to the universality of Antient Masonry. Thus they are entitled to consideration, as they have undoubtedly been a means, if not of adding many gentlemen of high position to our Order—certainly we may say of rendering their attachment to Masonry more permanent. Some Masons consider the degrees I am speaking of as novelties—but it is not so—they undoubtedly originated in the thirteenth century with the Knights of the holy wars. The only two that are practised to any extent are the Templar and the Rose Croix, both very interesting, and deserve the encouragement they have received, and many brethren who occupy high positions in the Craft have connected themselves with these rites. Our excellent friend Dr. Harcourt is one of the ornaments of the Rose Croix, and a better man or more zealous Mason than the D. Prov. Grand Master of Surrey does not exist. You will find a full account of these rites in the Freemasons' Magazine of 1858. In returning to that part of the institution of Masonry under which we meet to-day, and more especially with reference to the brethren who are to be constituted into, we trust, a just, perfect, and regular Lodge, I venture to offer a few words of counsel. Among the various duties incumbent upon you, remember there is none more essential to the preservation, none more efficacious to the welfare of our institution, than unanimity; and while particularly interested in the welfare of the Lodge to which you individually belong, be regardless of the general welfare, prove your fidelity to our laws and constitutions by discountenancing every deviation from its principles, and avoiding every innovation in its established practices. And the best plan to preserve good working is, that at every meeting the officers and senior brethren should by practice instruct the juniors. Thus by keeping the precepts Freemasonry teaches constantly in your minds, your conduct in the world cannot fail to feel its influence, and by evincing in practice those principles we profess in theory, our institution will have a good report of all men. Remember, brethren, the interests of Freemasonry are in your hands; be careful therefore not to blend it with your weaknesses, nor stain it with your vices. Consider how much the world expects of you, and how unwilling to make you any allowance. Consider with what fidelity you ought to support the character of the Order, and thus render the name of Freemason illustrious, and as designating worth and virtue of superior stamp. It is incumbent on you "to walk in wisdom towards them who are without," doing nothing to render your principles suspicious, or disgrace your institution in their eyes, so that nothing should increase former prejudices against it; for be assured, that if in your conduct you forget that you are men, the world with its usual severity will remember you are Masons. May the Lodge we are met this day to constitute maintain a high credit in the increasing list; and as a chief means to attain that object, let its founders ever bear in mind that they ought to be as careful whom they introduce into their Lodge, as they would to their own family, and that one whom they would hesitate to admit to their own domestic circle is unfit for admission into their Lodge. Let the Master and Wardens be careful to preserve order and regularity, and to be mindful that solemnity characterizes their ceremonies, for it must not be forgotten, that without any bias to a particular creed, the connection between Masonry and religion is absolute, and cannot be destroyed. Masonry contributes to promote the social happiness of man in this world by the practise of virtue—religion promises happiness in a future state; hence Masonry must be considered the handmaid of religion, because the practise of moral and social virtue, though it cannot absolutely save, is an essential condition of salvation. To be a good and perfect Mason, a thorough knowledge of the volume of the Sacred Law is essential. It is the great fountain of Masonic laws, and draughts from that spring will render the mind more clearly able to understand the symbolic language of our institution. This added to a strict observance of the rules of our Order, renders Freemasonry a sure foundation of tranquillity amid the disappointments of life. In youth it governs the passions, and employs usefully our most active faculties, and in age yields an ample fund of comfort and satisfaction. The great boast of our Order is to be the dissemination of peace and goodwill to all mankind. These humane sentiments have found advocates and apostles through all time: they are in the book of Job, the oldest work extant, and in the Psalms of David; they were propounded to the Greeks and Romans, and they formed the preaching of John the Baptist, and in the system of ethics propounded in the Sermon on the Mount by Him "who spake as never man spake"—and hence we may affirm, if all men were Masons, swords might be beaten into ploughshares, and there would be war no more. It seems not out of place to allude to the predominating vice of our own age—the worship of mammon—and it may truly be said that this idolatry is more extensive now than when Nebuchadnezzar set up the pillar of gold in the plains of Dura; the difference is, that the sackbut, harp, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, are not required to make men worship gold. With the vice of avarice that of selfishness is always allied—the love of self, which the world calls prudence, which is really carelessness for the welfare of others, predominates every rank of life. Now this cold and calculating feeling forms no part of a Mason's creed, and ought to prove no part of a Mason's character, and hence we may congratulate ourselves that with the bane we have the antidote. I trust that as speedily as possible arrangements will be made for establishing a benevolent fund, and in connection with that object, you will occasionally send a representative of the Lodge to the festivals in aid of the charities. The funds of those glorious emanations of Masonry, although large, are not always equal to the demands. Our charitable institutions, as you are aware, are framed to meet every case of distress and need, and in the fluctuations of commerce, we cannot say which of us, or our families, may require their assistance.

"The widow's tear—the orphan's cry—
All wants our ready hands supply
As far as power is given,
The naked clothed—the prisoner free,
These are thy works sweet charity,
Revealed to us from heaven."

The imposing solemnity was gone through in a manner that gave satisfaction to every one present; the musical arrangements being conducted by Bro. Charles Venables, assisted by Bros. Dyson and Tolley, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor; the musical service, including the 133rd Psalm, and a hymn, "Laud the Great Architect divine," the responses, and sanctus; these were all sung most effectively, and added much to the success of the ceremonial.

The consecration ended, Bro. How resigned the chair to Bro. John B. Gibson, Prov. G. Sec. of Berks, who then proceeded with the installation of the W.M. (Bro. E. P. Cossens), named in the warrant as the first Master, who was duly proclaimed and saluted in the several degrees, Bro. Gibson delivering the addresses in his accustomed admirable manner. Bro. Charles Venables was invested as S.W., and Bro. John Langton as J.W.; the other offices are to be filled at the next meeting of the Lodge, which is to be held on the second Monday in November.

A ballot was then taken for the admission of the following gentlemen, which being unanimous in their favour, and all being present, they were initiated into ancient Masonry in the most perfect and effective way by the W.M., Bro. Jordan, acting as S.D.:—Henry Willey, Williams, George Bowyer, Thomas Greenhalf, Hodges, William Harding, Merritt, and William Skindle, sen.; also Henry Howard, as serving brother.

At five o'clock, the Lodge was closed in ancient form, with solemn prayer, and the brethren removed to the Orkney Arms Hotel, where an excellent dinner was prepared, at which thirty-six brethren assembled around the W.M., who was supported on the right by the V.W. Bro. Robert Gibson, Prov. D.G.M., Berks; V.W. Bro. George Harcourt, M.D., Prov. D.G.M., Surrey; Bro. W. Blenkin, P. Prov. S.G.W., Surrey; Bro. E. Astley, Prov. S.G.W., Berks; on the left by Bro. J. How, the Consecrating Master; Rev. Bros. Hales and Roberts; Bro. J. B. Gibson, Prov. G. Sec., Berks; Bro. Jordan, P. Prov. G. Reg., Berks; etc.; and among others present were Bro. Henry Garrod, W.M., No. 1069; Bro. W. H. Cave, Prov. Assia. G. Dir. of Cera., Berks; Bro. George States, P.M., No. 166; Bros. Pullen, L. How, Wigginton, and others.

Due honour having been done to the toasts, "The Queen and the Craft," "The M.W. Grand Master," "The Deputy Grand Master and the rest of Grand Officers," the health of the Marquis of Downshire, Prov. Grand Master, was responded to by his worthy Deputy, Bro. Robert Gibson, whose own health, given with good effect by the W.M., came next in order.

The R.W. Bro. Gibson said that there were few occasions in his Masonic career that gave him more heartfelt pleasure than the present meeting, and he trusted that he should be enabled to visit the St. John's Lodge on future occasions, so satisfied was he with the opening meeting.

Bro. How, having obtained permission, proposed the toast which came next in order, referring the brethren to the admirable manner in which Bro. Cossens commenced his duties, for never had he seen the ceremony of initiation more perfectly gone through. He trusted that the success of the Lodge would be commensurate with the zeal exhibited by its first Master, who, although now for the first time elevated to that distinguished position, was evidently a master in the art. Although not included in the toast, Bro. How said he could not but allude to the satisfactory manner in which the W.M. was aided by his Wardens, and he was sure all would acknowledge it were difficult to find many young Masons more efficient officers than Bros. Venables and Langton. The health of the W.M. was most warmly greeted.

Bro. Cossens, in reply, referred to the difficulty felt by most men in finding words to express their feelings, in similar situations, when the tongue fails to give utterance to the outpourings of the heart. He had laid the foundation of a column, the capital on which must be placed by his successors. In acknowledging the personal compliment he could but say his heart must be cold which would not be warmed to enthusiasm by so warm a greeting.

This toast was followed by Lindsay's "Excelsior," most beautifully sung by Bro. Dyson.

The R.W. D. Prov. Grand Master of Surrey having obtained the Master's gavel, said that, in all societies there must be instructors, and in the great and glorious association of Masons, such practised professors of the art were especially required. We could not pay proper homage to the Great Jehovah unless our solemn rites were carried out with all due observance. They had met to solemnly consecrate and dedicate a Lodge, and unless that ceremonial were efficiently performed, the opening would badly foreshadow the future of its career. The Master and Wardens, without the advantage of an elder brother in the Craft in their advent, would be wanting that prestige essential to success. Bro. Harcourt said he would appeal to all who had witnessed the imposing solemnity of consecration, whether they had ever seen the rite more efficiently performed. Had the founders of the Lodge selected a brother who was not thoroughly conversant with his work, those who came far and near might have looked slightly upon the labours of the day, but a wise choice had been made on this occasion, and the result was that the day's proceedings were most satisfactory, and could never be effaced from their memories. Bro. Harcourt concluded by proposing the health of the Consecrating Master.

Bro. How replied in terms fitting to the kind reception he had met, and tendered his thanks to those who had assisted him, especially Bro. George States, his efficient Director of Ceremonies.

The Worshipful Master next proposed the health of two brethren who had so essentially rendered service in the business of the day, he alluded to Bro. John Gibson, the installing Master, so well known to every Mason in the province as most zealous in the cause, and to whom personally he was so much indebted for his kindness on this and on all occasions. With that brother he would unite the Rev. Bro. Hales, who so well discharged the sacred duty of Chaplain.

Bro. J. B. Gibson, in a brief reply, congratulated the Master, Wardens and Brethren on the establishment of the Lodge and the successful way in which it commenced.

Bro. Hales also congratulated the Master on the encouraging way in which the new Lodge had started into being. Some time ago he had seen a very venerable warrant for the constitution of one of our oldest Lodges. It was wormeaten, but there, still full to the view, were inscribed the names of the brethren by whom the Lodge was originally worked—nearly two hundred years ago. He wished that two centuries hence (he spoke under permission of Dr. Cumming, who now limited the existence of the world to seven years), when all around him were gathered to their graves, that the name of their honoured Master might still survive, and that in the still surviving warrant, he, though dead, might continue to speak. Their Master had that day crowned the summit of a noble pillar whose base was built on the imperishable foundation of right and truth. The reverend brother went on to remark on the goodly number of initiates who had that night entered the rank and file of Masonry. He would tell these brethren that in so doing they had not honoured Masonry, but Masonry them. They were now charged with a double responsibility. Let them walk wisely before those who were without. If they ever forget that they were men, the uninitiated world would soon remember that they were Masons. Bro. Hales concluded by reading the address of a foreign nobleman to his son on the occasion of his initiation.

We must abridge the addresses of the brethren whose healths followed, but it were uncourteous not to notice that of "The Visitors," who formed the greatest portion of the assembly; and to this Bro. Dr. Harcourt in responding said, how much obliged they were by being favoured with the invitation to so happy and auspicious a meeting. By a train of fortuitous circumstances he was placed in a high position in the Craft, and endeavoured on all occasions to carry out his vocation with integrity. He called the attention of the new made brethren especially to one great feature of our institution, and urged the support of the cause of charity. The healths of Bros. Ashley and Jordan, as also the Wardens, the Initiates, and others, were given and responded to; and the meeting broke up soon after nine o'clock.

CHANNEL ISLANDS.

JERSEY.—Lodge La Césarée (No. 860).—An emergency meeting was held on Monday, October 3rd, in conformity with the resolution passed on September 29th. The chair was occupied by Bro. Schmitt, who performed the ceremony of initiation, and admitted to the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry Mr. Le Sueur. For the last time the brethren had the gratification of hearing from the Orator, in his official capacity, an able exposition of the tenets of the Order, so far as they are developed in the first degree. At its conclusion, the W.M., Bro. Le Cras, announced that he was about to enter on the important and gratifying, yet sorrowful, business of the evening, and having called upon the Director of Ceremonies to conduct, and the two Deacons to escort, the Orator to the front of the pedestal, he addressed him briefly, but with much feeling, in the following terms:—"Bro. Ratier, you are aware of the object of our meeting this evening, namely, to present to you an address on your departure from among us, an address which has been voted by the Lodge with the most perfect unanimity and sincerity, and which expresses the high honour, respect, and esteem which your conduct has gained for you in the hearts of all of us. We should be unjust towards you if we expressed unavailing regret on the severance of your connection with us; for you go to revisit your native country, to embrace an aged father, to take your proper place in the domestic circle, and to receive the hearty congratulations of the friends of your youth. Great as must be your delight on the renewal of all the early associations of your life, we entreat you to carry away with you an assurance, that those friends whom you are about to rejoin will not, nay, cannot be more sincere than those whom you are quitting, in whose hearts you will ever hold a firm and enduring place. Without farther preface, I call upon Bro. Du Jardin to read the document which has been prepared for this occasion." This was as follows:—"Dear and honoured brother, — Your native country is reopened to all her sons, and you avail yourself of the event to return to the cradle of your childhood, the scene of the labours of your early manhood, the home of your affections and aspirations. We rejoice and grieve at the event. We are glad, because an estimable citizen is restored to his country, to his family, to the friends and compeers of his youth and after life; because, in the position to which he is restored, he may and will be in a position to render greater services to the cause of humanity and progress, than he could in this circumscribed locality; because in the love of his family and the esteem of his fellow-citizens he is about to find some compensation for the privations and sufferings he has endured during the bitter period he has passed through—of proscription and exile. But we grieve at your approaching departure, because it deprives us, individually, of a warm and most kind and valued friend; and because the public of this island loses thereby the benefit of your intelligent and disinterested counsel and advice, which have so frequently and usefully been laid before it, and generously placed at its service. As members of the ancient Craft of Freemasons, we, more than any others of this community, regret your departure. You have, indeed, while among us, been the model of a true Mason. None more than you has, even amid extreme provocations, carried into the profane world the admirable spirit of self-abnegation and persevering fraternity. None more than you has contributed in this island to the rehabilitation of Masonry. And to you it is mainly owing, that the present prosperous state of the Lodge "Césaire" is attributable. Your native country beckons you home; and an enlarged field of duty and services unrolls itself before you. Go, then, brother; private friendship must yield to public duty. But go, accompanied by our respect and regard as men—by our affection and gratitude as Masons—by our most sincere and devoted friendship both as men and as Masons. Whatever the political chapter of accidents may bring forth, may you never cease to remember that the spirit which dominates the Lodge you have so effectually contributed to raise to its present high position, is, and will ever remain, one of peace on earth and goodwill among men. Farewell; may the Great Architect take you under His especial protection; and may we—labourers both in the vineyard and the highway—hope one day to meet in His Universal Temple! On behalf of the Lodge, Philip Le Cras, W.M." At the conclusion of the reading of the address it was handed by the Worshipful Master, amid the acclamations of the brethren, to Bro. Ratier, who, in returning thanks, paid a high compliment to the Worshipful Master and the Past Masters, to whom he said: "Without your vigorous co-operation and that of all the officers who contribute to the efficiency of the working, we should not at this moment be able to congratulate ourselves as we may justly do under present circumstances on the success which crowns our united efforts." The Lodge was closed in harmony and brotherly love, and soon after six o'clock the brethren adjourned to dinner in another room. The Worshipful Master presided, supported by a large number of Past Masters. More than fifty of the brethren were present on the occasion, but only three visitors, among whom was the Prov. Grand Master, Bro. J. J. Hammond. Upon giving the health of the R.W. Bro. J. J. Hammond, Prov. Grand Master of the Channel Isles and the Provincial Grand Lodge, the Prov. Grand Master returned thanks briefly; and though a Jerseyman by birth, requested permission to speak in English as the language most familiar to him. He contented himself with a simple acknowledgment of the compliments. Bro. Du Jardin, Prov. G. Treas., also acknowledged the toast on behalf of the Prov. Grand Officers. Bro. Le Cras, W.M., then said—"Brethren, I rise to propose the toast of this evening, namely, 'Prosperity, long life, happiness, and honour to our illustrious Bro. Ratier.' It was my desire to place this duty in the hands of some other brother who has not yet taken a part in any portion of these proceedings, and who may be more capable than myself of doing justice to the subject; but true to Masonic order and discipline Bro. Ratier has expressed his desire to the contrary, and on this occasion, at least, his wish is a law to which I bow; brethren, we are met to offer him our adieu. He goes to visit his aged father, from whom he has been separated for some years, to meet the members of his family who are longing to receive him among them, to mingle again with his former companions in the scenes of his youth, whose smiles will recall the recollections of days long passed. Brethren, let us unite again in assuring our valued friend and brother, that nowhere will he find those who entertain feelings more cordial and sincere than those by whom he is at this moment surrounded." Bro. Ratier rose, and made an effort to speak, but, overwhelmed by his feelings, he said—"Brethren, I have already expressed my gratitude. I can now say nothing more; I am full of emotion." Bro. Du Jardin proposed the health of the newly initiated brother. Bro. Le Sueur having returned thanks, Bro. Schmitt rose to propose the health of the visitors. Bro. Aland, P.M. of an Irish Lodge in Jersey, desired to return thanks for the honour. He disclaimed any high pretensions as to his quality as a Mason, though he believed that in his expressions Bro. Schmitt was influenced by the most sincere motives. Whatever failings he might have, he trusted that he never failed in a communion of feelings with members of the fraternity. Bro. Bisson, an Australian brother, coming from the antipodes, was anxious to express his acknowledgments, and to remind the brethren that the telegraph wire, which would soon flash messages hence to Australia, is an appropriate emblem of the communion of sentiment existing in the minds of Masons, though on the opposite side of the world. He could fully sympathize with the Lodge in the loss it was about to sustain, and trusted that another able orator would speedily rise up to supply the vacant place. Bro. Ratier next proposed the health of the W.M. He said, "I am personally grateful to him, because on the present occasion he has been as effective and energetic and thoughtful as he ever is, in omitting nothing which could contribute to my own comfort, in the course of the proceedings connected with my final adieu. The Lodge, therefore, has reason to hold him in the highest estimation, since the firmness and courtesy of his own demeanour inspire others with the same sentiments, and produce a powerful influence on its prosperity. The same kind attention and consideration on his part is extended to all impartially, whether members of this Lodge, visitors at its meetings, or brother Masons, wherever they are brought into communication with him." The W.M. in reply said—"If I have in any way deserved the merit attributed to me, I beg you, brethren, to believe that I have felt a sincere pleasure in performing the duties connected with the chair. I desire to express my hope, that the next W.M. will be fortunate enough to have a worthy representative of Bro. Ratier, to aid him with his counsel, to guide him by his example, and to work with the same zeal that he has exhibited. Bro. J. J. Hammond, Prov. Grand Master, gave the next toast, to the health of those who constituted the strength, vigour, and beauty of the Lodge, namely, the Past Masters, whose experience always availed much in the government of its affairs. He considered that Bro. Dr. Oliver was quite right in describing their relation to the Lodge as the same that money is to war, sinews to the flesh, and the soul to the body. Bro. Du Jardin, P.M., was glad to find, that notwithstanding the importance of the special object of this meeting, the former services of the Past Masters were not forgotten, and especially that they were appreciated by the Prov. Grand Master, for that the good opinion of their fellow Masons was an ample repayment. He was proud to have been one of the founders of Lodge La Césaire, in which the old Norman French language was adopted, but had never anticipated that it would be able to boast of so many distinguished members, among the foremost of whom stood Bro. Ratier. Would that all the brethren understood as well as he does the mission of Freemasonry. To his teaching, he and many others were deeply indebted, by which means they had been instructed in their Masonic duties, and had been induced by his example to practise them. Bro. Ratier said—"Brethren, there is another health which is too important to allow of its omission on an occasion like the present. It is that of our esteemed Bro. Hopkins who has favoured us with his presence this evening, and whom I beg to introduce to you as the representative of the press, the able and independent advocate of all that is good, and true, and beautiful, in connection with our Order, and as the representative of English Freemasonry." Bro. Dr. Hopkins, P.M. No. 51, replied at considerable length; he said:—"I have felt it a duty to be present on this interesting occasion to join you in the expressions of esteem and respect for our excellent Bro. Ratier, to show my sympathy in your regret at his departure, to assist in paying him all the honour which is so justly his due, and with heart and soul to unite in prayers and best wishes for his health, happiness, prosperity, and usefulness, wherever he may be placed by Providence, with a sincere desire that he may be blessed in his restoration to his domestic circle in his native country. The main business of the evening is over, and after paying honour to your distinguished guest and to the heads of our Masonic Order, you now descend to the small fry, in which I may consider myself to be included, and as therefore we can claim no high honours, we may be excused if we make ourselves heard by our much speaking. Though, however, individually I can claim no distinguished position among you, and no high consideration; such is not the case in regard to the toast with which my name has been connected, namely, 'The Liberty of the Press,' which is so important that it requires a more able advocate, and one officially connected with it, to do it justice. Permit me to make a few observations in reference to myself. A year and a half ago I came to Jersey a stranger; it is hardly right to use such a term among Masons, still in one sense I was a stranger. Looking around for means of usefulness, and thinking that I could not fail to find them in the Masonic Lodges, I visited all of them with this view, endeavouring to carry out my desires in the best spirit, with a sincere wish to be useful and to derive benefit from intercourse with the Craft. Circumstances occurred which it is not desirable now to enter upon, but with which many of you are acquainted. Misconceptions were unfortunately formed respecting my objects and intentions, and I had no alternative but to withdraw from communication with those who could so mistake me, I trust, in ignorance of my real character and Masonic antecedents. In this state of things, having been invited by your respected Worshipful Master to attend the meetings of La Césaire, I was received most kindly. Here then I felt that I could enjoy Masonic intercourse, and enter on a sphere of usefulness, as well as cultivate the feelings and virtues, and benefit by the privileges, of the Craft. Here I thought I could find a home which would be congenial to me, for I found that you had enlarged views, that you had noble projects in hand, that you contemplated great efforts for the advancement of the Order, and especially of your own branch of it, of a kind similar to those with which I had to some extent been connected elsewhere. These matters, together with a hearty reception, enlisted my sympathies with you, even though under the disadvantage of hearing your business conducted in a language only to a limited extent familiar to me. This fact alone gives evidence of the universality of Freemasonry, and shows that it is difficult to interpose a barrier where Masonic hearts beat in unison and in sympathy. Worshipful Master and brethren, accept my hearty thanks for the kindness and consideration I have received at your hands, though not yet a member of your Lodge, being still affiliated with my mother Lodge, No. 51. It now only remains to say a few words on the toast with which my name has been unworthily connected—the liberty of the press. Accident having brought me into communication with a gentleman connected with the Jersey press, I have been induced, as an occasional contributor, to take up many local matters, and to lay before the public considerations in regard to them, I trust without giving offence to any parties, for with me it is a sacred obligation, that a stranger here, in a district whose laws and politics differ from his own, is bound in honour not to encroach upon the rights of hospitality, or to render himself obnoxious in any respect. There is another publication to which it is well known that I have been a constant correspondent since I came to Jersey, and in which you as Masons are especially interested. I am anxious to impress this upon you, and to urge the duty of giving it support and encouragement among all members of the brotherhood. I allude to the Freemasons' Magazine, in which your proceedings have recently been recorded, especially in reference to the great work you have in hand, namely, the erection of a Masonic temple. I have reason to know that I have been the means of spreading among the English brethren an acquaintance with the zeal, energy, and success of this Lodge, where otherwise there would have been ignorance on the subject, and of thus exciting sympathy on your behalf in the efforts you are making, though I would have wished that it had been exhibited in a more substantial and tangible form. Still your proceedings have been regarded with admiration, and you have received some little assistance. Go on, then, and continue to render yourselves worthy of it. It has been remarked as the opinion of brethren connected with other Lodges in Jersey, that it is undesirable thus to publish Masonic proceedings even in our especial organ. Had I considered that such was the feeling in La Césaire, certainly such correspondence would have been discontinued, but I believe that a contrary feeling exists, otherwise many of you would not have been so ready to furnish information avowedly to be so applied. Those of other Lodges who think differently, need not fear any intrusion into their sanctity, or any publication of their affairs, so far as I am concerned. Brethren, accept my thanks for your patience in having borne with me so long in these remarks, and for the honour you have done me in connecting my name with so important a toast as the press, especially as a means of advocating the cause of liberty. This interesting meeting was brought to a close by Bro. Ratier, who most appropriately on this occasion, at the close of his term of exile, and with touching expressions, proposed the usual parting toast, "All poor and distressed Masons, &c." A number of excellent songs varied the proceedings.—H. H.

DEVONSHIRE.

PLYMOUTH.—St. John's Lodge (No. 83).—The brethren of this Lodge held their monthly meeting at the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday, October 4th, when, as usual, a great many members were present. Bro. Gover, W.M., having opened the Lodge in due form, the minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed. The Lodge was then opened in the second and third degrees, when Bro. Huet, who had made such progress as was satisfactory to all present, was advanced to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The Lodge then resumed in the second degree, and Bro. Finmore was passed to the degree of a Fellow Craft. After which the Lodge was closed to the first degree, when Mr. Hawkes having been balloted for and unanimously elected, was most impressively initiated into Masonry. These beautiful ceremonies were performed by the Worshipful Master with that care and solemnity which is not only appreciated by every member of the Lodge, but also by the many visitors. Resuming the business of the evening, the Worshipful Master submitted to the brethren the propriety of petitioning the M.W. Grand Master, praying permission might be granted to the members of St. John's Lodge, No. 83, to wear a centenary medal, the Lodge having been instituted upwards of one hundred years; he had not the least doubt but that their petition would be graciously responded to, and he would recommend that a committee be formed, open to the Lodge, for carrying out its details. During a short interval of temporary absence of the Worshipful Master, Bro. Maynard, P.M. (P. Prov. G. Treas.), took the chair, when Bro. Dupree, S.W., called the attention of the brethren to the fact that the time was nearly expired when Bro. Gover, the W.M., would retire from his office which he had so ably filled for nearly two years, during which time (although the duties of his office had sometimes been very arduous) he had never been absent, but was ever ready to impart to others those principles which had raised the Lodge to that Masonic excellence of which they were proud, and which all good Masons valued and admired. He therefore deemed it a privilege to propose that a testimonial be presented to Bro. Gover as a memorial of the love and esteem in which he was held by every member of the Lodge. This was seconded by one who is venerable in Masonry, Bro. Maynard, P.M. (P. Prov. G. Treas.), whose eulogium on the Worshipful Master gave great satisfaction to the Lodge. The proposition being put, was carried unanimously, with a resolution that a Lodge of Emergency should be called that day fortnight, of which every brother should have due and timely notice, to settle the nature of the testimonial, and when it should be presented. The Worshipful Master having returned to the Lodge, resumed the duties, and on the conclusion of the business the Lodge was closed in peace and harmony.

The Lodge of emergency was holden on October 18th, when the members were punctually in attendance and strong in numbers. By special request Bro. Maynard, P.M., (P. Prov. G. Treas.), took the chair, and opened the Lodge. He then, in a very lucid speech, explained to the brethren that they had met to decide on the testimonial to be presented to Bro. Gover, their W.M. He believed they were all of one opinion that Bro. Gover was deserving a handsome testimonial, and he was sure they would present him with something that would be becoming Lodge No. 83, and that he might really be proud of. Bro. Dupree, S.W., suggested for the brethren's consideration, that as they were about to present a testimonial to the W.M., he was most anxious it should be one that not only could be appreciated by him, but that should also be valued by his family, and over which, in years to come, each might linger with delight, knowing it to be the reward of duty. He would, therefore, recommend that a portrait of the W.M. should be taken in oil, believing that would give the greatest satisfaction to every member of the Lodge. He would propose that a sufficient sum be voted by the Lodge for the purpose of presenting the W.M. with this portrait, and that it be presented to him on his retiring from office. Bro. Holmes, J.W., seconded the proposition with Masonic warmth. Bro. Brewer, P.M., Secretary; Bro. Ferris, P.M.; and Bro. Hartfoot, S.D., warmly supported the S.W.'s proposition, and thanked him for his zeal. The proposition was then put to the brethren by Bro. Maynard, P.M. (P. Prov. G. Treas.), and carried unanimously; after which the Lodge closed in peace and harmony.

DARTMOUTH.—Hauley Lodge (No. 1099).—The formation of a Masonic Hall, in which the meetings of this Lodge will take place is being proceeded with; and it is sought to accomplish the matter rather effectively. The port of Dartmouth is rather an interesting place, in a Masonic point of view, from it being the port of the channel most easily made (as between the Start Point and Berryhead adjoining Torbay) by mariners, it was sought in early years by the "worthies of Devon," as the starting point for their exploration. Hence sailed Davis, and discovered the "Straits" which bear his name, and Gilbert on his discovery of Newfoundland; and Sir Walter Raleigh made it his favourite port. A portion of the prisoners of the Spanish Armada were landed, and eventually found their tomb here. At the siege of Calais in 1347 (Edward III.), Dartmouth stood third in the list of eighty-four ports of this kingdom which furnished ships and men for that expedition. A goodly line of merchant princes have lived and moved and had their being here. Chaucer, in his Canterbury Tales, hath it—

"A shipman was ther, woned for by west
For ought I wote he was of Dertemouth."

To such an extent did they carry on business, that it was said of one of them,—

"Blow the wind high, or blow the wind low,
It bloweth fair to Hauley's Hoe," and it is in honour of this worthy man, merchant, and Mason, who built the handsome town church—the only other church at that time being on a high hill adjoining the town—that this newly constituted Lodge is formed. In the Newfoundland fishery business, this port did the boldest stroke, at one time finding, fitting out and maintaining upwards of two hundred sailing craft for that purpose, which were regularly hauled up and repaired here during the winter season; the men for the most part living as a portion of the family of the merchants, and the apprentices being put to school. There is many a legend, and many a good tale told of those days. The peculiar construction of almost all the stores on the banks of the river, and principally with Newfoundland timber, with the remains of two flourishing firms still actively engaged in the trade, are the sole evidences which remain of this formerly bountiful source of revenue, the direful effect of the introduction of free trade into that colony by the act of Lord Castlereagh. So things languished on, and the Lodge, No. 303, then existing here, languished too: till the charters of incorporation granted by Edward III. and subsequent monarchs, were disannulled by the Municipal Reform Act, when a singular exodus then took place, all the principal inhabitants, on whom the others mainly depended for existence, leaving the town to its fate, when its property fell to decay, and has since occasionally passed from hand to hand at a little over the cost of transfer. The Lodge dropped for want of support; but a new era is about to dawn on the powerful aid of the railroad being invoked on its behalf. Newcomen, who invented the first self acting steam engine, was a tradesman of Dartmouth; his invention is to bring out the latent resources of his native town a century after; and with them, if it please the G.A.O.T.U., the benefits and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. So mote it be. The following are named in the warrant for the new Lodge, No. 1099:—Bros. Henry Bridges, W.M.; Thomas Lidstone, S.W.; and R. C. Mortimore, J. W.

DURHAM.

GATESHEAD.—Lodge of Industry (No. 56).—The Lodge was opened at the Grey Horse Inn, on the 24th inst., by Bro. C. J. Banister, W.M., assisted by Bro. Henry Hotham, P.M., as S.W.; Bro. R. J. Banning as J.W., and the other officers of the Lodge. Bro. Harrison, P.M., presided at the harmonium. The minutes being confirmed, Mr. R. S. Bagnell, jun., and Mr. Henry Bagnell, were balloted for and duly elected. Bros. T. Reay and J. B. Browning were also elected joining members. Mr. J. A. Bramwell, who was elected at last meeting, and the Bros. Bagnell, being in attendance, were initiated into the Order by the Worshipful Master. Bro. George Greene wishing to take the third degree, was examined, and raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason; the Worshipful Master explaining the tracing board and giving the lecture.

KENT.

CHATHAM.—Royal Kent Lodge of Antiquity (No. 20).—The brethren of this Lodge met on Wednesday last, under the presidency of their W.M., Bro. Charles Isaacs, whom we were happy to see so far restored to health as to be able to resume his Masonic duties. The business of the evening consisted of raising Bros. Griffiths and Brander, who proved their proficiency in the former degrees, and passing Bros. Brouncker and Beadnell. Bro. Cutbertson begged that the Worshipful Master would be kind enough to resume the Lodge of Instruction, as there were several young members desirous of making themselves acquainted with the various duties required in the Lodge. They had seen the position the Worshipful Master had been placed in on several occasions through not having qualified officers to assist him in carrying out his duties, but there were many who would pledge themselves to attend the Lodge of Instruction under his presidency if he would only give them the opportunity. The Worshipful Master was pleased to find there were some of the brethren anxious to assist him in the working of the Lodge, and would feel most happy to give them all the instruction in his power—for which purpose a preliminary meeting will be held at the Mitre Hotel, on Thursday evening at eight o'clock. Several gentlemen were then proposed for initiation, and the brethren adjourned to an excellent dinner, presided over by the Worshipful Master. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were responded to; by the health of the Worshipful Master was proposed in the kindest terms by Bro. Saunders, Prov. G. Treas., who said that the brethren were delighted to see Bro. Isaacs again presiding over them and hoped the G.A.O.T.U. would grant him health and happiness for many years. The Worshipful Master replied, thanking the brethren most sincerely for the very kind and fraternal manner in which they had received the toast. Several other toasts were proposed and the brethren departed well pleased with their meeting.

FAVERHAM.—Lodge of Harmony (No. 155).—A deputation of the members of this Lodge lately waited upon Bro. Chas. Isaacs, W.M. Lodge No. 20, and Prov. G. Sec. for Kent, requesting he would be kind enough to assist them in resuscitating their Lodge, there being eight gentlemen desirous of being initiated therein; and stated that although the dues had been regularly remitted to the Grand Lodge, there had been no working for many years, and the brethren only met from time to time to make their annual returns. Bro. Isaacs at once promised them all the assistance in his power, and said he had no doubt but that he should find several brethren willing to assist him in carrying out the object, for which purpose a meeting will be held at the Ship Hotel, Faversham, on Monday, the 31st October, at two P.M., when the Lodge will be opened, and the various candidates proposed for initiation, also any joining members. The deputation thanked Bro. Isaacs most sincerely for the kind and courteous way in which he had received them. There will be in this revived Lodge a good chance for any aspiring Masons, who are desirous to attain the Master's chair.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

LEICESTER.—John of Gaunt Lodge (No. 766).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, on Thursday evening, the 20th instant—present: Bros. C. J. Willey, W.M.; Brewin, S.W.; Sheppard, J.W.; Kelly, D. Prov. Grand M. and P.M.; Clephan, P.M.; Bankart, P.M.; Kinton, P.M.; Johnson, Sec.; Davis, S.D.; Garner, I.G.; Lloyd, S. Harris, &c. Visitors.—Bros. John Townsend, P.M., No. 164, Greenwich; W. Richardson, No. 400; and Windram, P.M.; Gill, P.M.; Cummings, S.W.; and Nedham, J.W. of No. 348. The Lodge having been opened, the minutes of the last meeting, including the permanent removal of the Lodge to the new Masonic Hall, were read and confirmed. Several matters of business relative to the Hall were discussed; two brethren were elected to serve on the committee of management, in conjunction with the W. Master; and three brethren were appointed to act as purveyors for the victualling department, in conjunction with the like number nominated by St. John's Lodge. There were several candidates for passing and raising, but owing to illness and other causes, they were unable to attend. The Lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to the supper-room, and separated at an early hour.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Lodge de Lorraine (No. 793).—In the absence of the Worshipful Master the Lodge was opened on the 21st instant by Bro. S. Bell, P.M., Bro. Cook acting as S.W.; Bro. Winter as J.W.; and the rest of the officers of the Lodge being at their posts. The acting Worshipful Master initiated a candidate into the mysteries of the Order, and Bro. C. J. Banister raised Bro. Laws to the sublime degree of Master Mason, explaining the tracing board and giving the charge. The business of the Lodge over, it was closed in form, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment and spent a happy evening.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

DUDLEY.—Vernon Lodge (No. 819).—This Lodge met at the Old Town Hall, Dudley, on Wednesday, the 19th instant, under the presidency of Bro. E. Hollier (Mayor), P.M., in the absence of the W.M. Lodge was opened and closed in the three degrees. Several communications from Grand Lodge, and elsewhere, being read, it was resolved that the votes of the Lodge be given to Ellen Campbell, a candidate for admission into the Girls School. An application was then read from the committee appointed to obtain support for the Freemasons Magazine. The whole of the brethren present agreed that it was highly desirable that this, the only organ of the Craft, should be supported, but that as the Lodge already took in the Magazine, and the members individually did all they could for an extended sale, it was thought desirable, in the absence of many members, to postpone the consideration of the subject to the next night; and on the motion of Bros. Wigginton and Wright, it was resolved to give notice in the circulars, that a donation to the Magazine would be proposed on the following night. An opinion was expressed that if the price was reduced to fourpence, the sale would be very greatly increased, the Magazine being thought by many to be much too dear. The members present hoped that all Lodges not now taking it in would subscribe at once. There being no further business, the Lodge was closed in due form, and with solemn prayer.

[If the brethren will guarantee us a remunerative sale, the price shall be reduced, but experience has told us that a large sale cannot be obtained in the Craft.]

ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL.

PLYMOUTH.—Chapter of St. John (No. 83).—This Royal Arch Chapter assembled at the Masonic hall, Union-road, on Friday, October 21st, at seven o'clock, for the purpose of balloting for Bros. Gover, Dupre, Holmes, and Harfoot, who are respectively W.M., S.W., J.W., and S.D. of Lodge No. 83. The members present were Comps. Pollard, Gambell, Fould, Watts, Ash, Thomas, and Morgan. The Chapter having been opened, Comp. Ash proposed, and Comp. Thomas J. Watts seconded a proposition for the exaltation of the brethren above named, and, on the ballot taking place, five Companions voting, Bros. Gover, Holmes, and Harfoot were declared not elected, but Bro. Dupre was unanimously elected; this brother for some time refused to avail himself of the honour conferred, but at the earnest solicitation of those who had been disappointed he gave a reluctant consent, and was exalted accordingly, the ceremony being performed by Comp. Holland in his usual style. There are several members of Lodge No. 83 who are waiting to be exalted in this Chapter, but after the reception their W.M., S.W., and S.D. have met with, we think they are likely to wait some time before they allow themselves to be similarly distinguished.

LEICESTER.—United Chapter of Fortitude and Saint Augustine (No. 348). A quarterly meeting of this Chapter was held in the Freemasons' Hall, on Monday last, at which the following Companions were present:—E. Clephan, M.E.Z.; Joseph Underwood, H.; Henry Kinder, J.; W. Kelly, Prov. G.H.; W. J. Windram, P.Z.; W. Pettifor, P.Z., as P.S.; George Bankart, E.; W. Cummings, N.; H. Gill and J. D. Paul, Assist. Sojs.; R. Brewin; I. Spencer; M. Nedham; A. J. Davis; and Pennock, Janitor. The Chapter having been opened by the Principals in solemn form, and the minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Bros. Charles Joseph Willey (W.M.), Lieut. Harby Barber, and W. Silvester Bithrey, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, (No. 766), as candidates for exaltation, who were declared duly elected, and Bros. Willey and Bithrey being in attendance, were exalted by the M.E.Z.; the historical lecture being delivered by Comp. Kinder, J.; the symbolical, by Comp. Kelly, Prov. G. H.; and the mystical by the M.E.Z. Comp. Gill presided at the organ during the ceremony. Resolutions were passed for the permanent removal of the Chapter from the Bell Hotel to the Freemasons' Hall, for the election of two members of the committee of management for the building, in addition to the M.E.Z., &c., &c. The next meeting will be held on the third Monday in November, for the election of officers, &c.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CONCLAVE OF LANCASHIRE.

On Thursday, the 29th September, a Provincial Grand Conclave was holden at the Swan Inn, Ashton-under-Lyne, by the V.E. Sir Knt. Matthew Dawes, Provincial Grand Commander of Lancashire.

The Encampment of Loyal Ashton-under-Lyne Volunteers, which has been established more than sixty years, and is, in point of seniority, the second Encampment in the province (ranking next after the Jerusalem Encampment in Manchester), was duly opened by Sir Knt. Dr. S. D. Lees, the E.C., at half-past two o'clock; and shortly afterwards the Provincial Grand Officers entered in procession, marshalled by Sir Knt. W. H. Wright, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers. and Past G. Standard Bearer; the Prov. G. Organist, Sir Knt. Joule, presiding at the organ. The V.E. Prov. G. Commander, and his Deputy, Sir Knt. A. H. Royds, were received under the arch of steel.

The Provincial Grand Conclave was then opened in ample form by the V.E. Prov. Grand Commander, after which the alms of the asserbled Knights were collected by Sir Knt. S. B. Eveleigh, officiating for the Prov. G. Almoner, Sir Knt. William Romaine Callender, jun.

The Prov. G. Dir. of Cers., Sir Knt. W. H. Wright, then brought forward his motion, which was seconded by Sir Knt. Dr. S. D. Lees, and carried unanimously. That each Prov. Grand Officer who fails to attend the Provincial Grand Conclave shall be fined one guinea, unless he has previously sent, in writing, to the Prov. Grand Chancellor such an excuse as, when read in Provincial Grand Conclave, shall be deemed satisfactory by the Knights in such Conclave assembled.

It was also proposed by the Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies, seconded by Sir Knt. Banister, and carried unanimously, that one of the circulars convening every meeting of an Encampment in the province of Lancashire be sent to the V.E. Prov. Grand Commander; and that the Prov. Grand Chancellor do communicate this resolution to the Registrar, or to the Eminent Commander of every Encampment in the province.

The accounts of the Prov. Grand Treasurer, Sir Knt. Stephen Smith, were then audited and found correct, by Sir Knts. Mattinson and H. A. Bennett; and on the proposition of the V.E. Prov. Grand Commander, seconded by Sir Knt. Newall, Prov. G. First Captain, Sir Knt. Stephen Smith was again unanimously elected Prov. Grand Treasurer, and the thanks of the Provincial Grand Conclave were tendered to him by the V.E. Prov. Grand Commander for his past services.

Specimens of jewels for the Prov. Grand Officers, which had been obtained by Sir Knt. S. Smith, were then submitted for the approval of the Provincial Grand Conclave; and it was decided, on the motion of Sir Knt. the Rev. J. B. Phillips, seconded by Sir Knt. W. H. Wright, that the selection, the quality, the number, and the price of the jewels should be left to the decision of the V.E. Prov. Grand Commander and his Deputy; and it was also determined that, notwithstanding the usage prevailing in the Grand Conclave of England and Wales respecting the custody of the jewels, each Provincial Grand Officer should be entitled to retain the jewel of his office in his own possession during the period for which he holds his appointment. A short discussion then took place respecting the adoption, by every Encampment in the province, of the code of by-laws printed and circulated as a model, by the Deputy Prov. Grand Commander, Sir Knt. A. H. Roysds, when it was considered most desirable that such should be the case, each Encampment modifying certain of the stipulations to suit their several circumstances; and the Prov. Grand Chancellor was directed to write to the Registrar of every Encampment in the province, for a copy of such by-laws as they, at present, possess, in order that the Prov. Grand Commander may be informed how each Encampment is regulated.

The V.E. Provincial Grand Commander then appointed the following Knights as Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year, viz.:—Sir Knights A. H. Roysds, Deputy Prov. Grand Commander; Thomas Bridson, Jun., Prov. Grand Prior; Henry Bridson, Prov. Grand Sub-Prior; Dr. R. F. Ainsworth, Prov. Grand First Captain; Charles Chandos Pole, Prov. Grand Second Captain; Rev. E. J. Bolling, Prov. Grand Prelate; Rev. J. B. Phillips, Assistant Prov. Grand Prelate; G. J. French, Prov. Grand Chancellor; William Harrison, Prov. Grand Vice-Chancellor; Dr. S. D. Lees, Prov. Grand Registrar; William Romaine Callender, Jun., Prov. Grand Chamberlain; Thomas Parker, Prov. Grand Hospitaller; Robert Munn, Jun., Prov. Grand First Expert; Reuben Mitchell, Prov. Grand Second Expert; William Greenwood, Prov. Grand First Standard Bearer; George Mellor, Prov. Grand Second Standard Bearer; S. B. Eveleigh, Prov. Grand Almoner; William Henry Wright, Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies; Richard Cope, Jun., Prov. Grand First Aide de Camp; James Gorton, Prov. Grand Second Aide de Camp; G. P. Brockbank, Prov. Grand First Captain of Lines; Henry Hibbert, Prov. Grand Second Captain of Lines; H. S. Alpas, Prov. Grand Sword Bearer; William Roberts, Prov. Grand First Herald; J. L. Hine, Prov. Grand Second Herald; John Musgrave, Prov. Grand Superintendent of Works; B. St. John B. Jouis, Prov. Grand Organist; Richard Crabtree, Prov. Grand Banner Bearer; and Sir Knight William Dawson was re-appointed Prov. Grand Equerry.

The committee of nine was then nominated in the usual manner—five, viz., Sir Knights L. Ormerod, H. S. Alpass, H. A. Bennett, S. Smith, and William Romaine Callender, Jun., being proposed by the Prov. Grand Conclave; and four, viz., Sir Knights A. H. Roysds, H. Bridson, W. H. Wright, and E. Barlow, being named by the V.E. Provincial Grand Commander.

The V.E. Provincial Grand Commander then addressed the Prov. Grand Conclave, touching upon the statistics and satisfactory progress of the Order, and the necessity of caution in admitting visitors on account of the spurious warrants emanating from Bristol, under which some Encampments had been formed, and on various other matters relating to the discipline and management of Encampments generally; after which he closed the Prov. Grand Conclave in solemn form.

The banquet was attended by thirty-three Knights, and the Provincial Grand Commander was supported on his right by the Deputy Prov. Grand Commander, Sir Knight Roysds, and by the Grand Chancellor of the Order, Sir Knight John Masson, who came purposely from London to honour the Provincial Grand Conclave of Lancashire with his presence; and on his left by the Assistant Prov. Grand Prelate, the Rev. J. B. Phillips, and by Sir Knight Dr. S. D. Lees, the Prov. Grand Registrar. The usual loyal and Templar toasts were given and responded to, and the Knights separated about ten o'clock, after having spent a most agreeable evening.

COLONIAL.

NEW ZEALAND.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CANTERBURY.

THE following somewhat meagre account is taken from the Lyttleton Times:—"The fact that a Provincial Grand Lodge has been already constituted in this province deserves a word of comment. It might have been naturally expected that some one of the older provinces of New Zealand, where Masonry must have taken root years before Canterbury was founded, would have been selected as an object of favour; but it has not been the case; and Canterbury has the honour of having distanced all her New Zealand fellows in the competition for advancement in Masonry.

"A proposition had been made from Wellington that Canterbury and Nelson should join her in petitioning the Grand Lodge of England for a patent uniting the three in one jurisdiction, it being necessary that at least three private Lodges should exist where a Provincial Grand Lodge is to be constituted. The overture was not accepted from this side, it being apparent that but little advantage could be gained by attempting to bring together the officers of Lodges at so great a distance from one another. The Lodge of Unanimity had at this time been in existence in Lyttleton for several years, having been founded by the exertions, amongst others, of Bro. A. J. Alport, its first Master, and previously Master of a highly honoured London Lodge, who united to himself the requisite number of zealous Masons, and on petition, obtained a constitution from the Grand Lodge of England, under which the Lodge was opened in full form on the 26th of May, 1853.

"In the meantime, from the first year of the settlement, the brethren had been meeting weekly for business purposes, under a warrant from the Pacific Lodge of Wellington. A year afterwards, as might be expected, the tide of Masonic zeal flowed over the hill on to the plains, where a considerable number of brethren rallied round Bro. C. B. Fooks, a Mason, then of upwards of thirty years' standing, and now rewarded for his energy and zeal in the Craft by appointment to the dignity of Deputy Prov. Grand Master. The second Lodge of Canterbury was opened in Christchurch before the termination of the year 1854, under the title of the St. Augustine Lodge, where its earliest members united to themselves rapidly a continually increasing number of accepted brethren. Two Lodges were then in active operation, and to obtain a deputation for the exercise of the authority of the Grand Master of England within the territory thus newly acquired for Masonry, it needed only that a third Lodge should be added to these two. The great advancement made by Kaipoi in material prosperity began now to attract to it a large population, among whom, of course, were many brethren of the Craft, some of whom had attained already high honours in Masonry and in the world at large. It became their earnest wish to constitute themselves into a Lodge as soon as practicable, and the desire was fostered by all Masons in the settlement; a petition was accordingly transmitted to England, praying for a constitution for the Southern Cross Lodge of Kaipoi.

"Contemporaneously with this petition, [another for the constitution of a Prov. Grand Lodge was forwarded, that the deputation might take effect as soon as the third Lodge which was to render it legitimate should commence to exist. The task of forwarding the prayer of the petitioners was entrusted mainly in England to Bro. Capt. Simeon, the well known colonist; this gentleman used such strenuous exertions to obtain the boon desired, that in a short space of time the prayer was granted, and a deputation was made out in due form, which arrived in the colony by the mail in June last. The Prov. Grand Master appointed Bro. C. B. Fooks his deputy, who fixed the 19th July as the day for inaugurating the Grand Lodge, and investing the Grand Master. One of the first acts was to inaugurate the Kaipoi Southern Cross Lodge, whose constitution had also arrived; which was done in due form on the 12th instant.

"At nine o'clock in the morning of the 19th the handsome hall of the Lodge of Unanimity was thrown open, for the inspection of ladies and such of the public as were invited by the brethren. At half-past ten the doors were closed, and the brethren assembled, to the number of sixty or upwards, proceeded with the ceremonial of the day, after which the Provincial Grand Lodge went to church in the following order:—Band of instrumental music; Tylers with drawn swords; visiting brethren; brethren of the Southern Cross Lodge; brethren of the Lodge of St. Augustine; brethren of the Lodge of Unanimity, walking two and two, according to seniority; the Prov. Grand Tyler with drawn sword; Officers of the Prov. Grand Lodge; walking singly, and according to seniority; the Prov. Grand Secretary with Book of Constitutions; the Prov. Grand Chaplain, carrying bible, square, and compasses, and supported by the Prov. Grand Stewards; the Prov. Grand Pursuivant; the Deputy Prov. Grand Master; Bro. J. C. Watts Russell, Prov. Grand Master; supported by two Grand Stewards; Tylers with drawn swords.

"Coming down the hill to the church, the procession formed an imposing object, all the brethren being in full Masonic costume. On reaching the church porch the procession opened out right and left, allowing the Grand Master to enter the building first, and the others in the order of seniority. Prayers were read by the Rev. R. R. Bradley, and a sermon of great eloquence and forcible argument was preached by the Venerable Archdeacon Mathias, the Grand Chaplain, taking his text from the verse—"Glory to God on high; and on earth peace, goodwill towards men." We cannot refrain from expressing here our sense of gratification at this admirable discourse, explanatory of the precepts of the Order, acceptable both to the initiated and the uninitiated. After the sermon a collection was made, as announced, to augment the funds required for building the new stone church of Lyttleton, which the venerable preacher referred to in his discourse as the first holy edifice of permanent character undertaken in this province, and one therefore with peculiar claims upon the support of the public and the Craft. The sum collected amounted to about £16.

The church being left in the order in which it was entered, and the procession being formed as before, the hall was again sought, and the respective ceremonies of inauguration, consecration, and dedication were performed by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, assisted by the Prov. Grand Chaplain and officers of the Prov. Grand Lodge. The Provincial Grand Master was then installed in due form; and when this and other necessary business of the Lodge had been completed, the appointment of the officers of the first Provincial Grand Lodge of Freemasons was proceeded with. The roll, as far as it has been completed, is thus filled up:—Bros. J. C. Watts Russell, Prov. G.M.; C. B. Fooks, D. Prov. G.M.; A. J. Alport, Prov. S.G.W.; W. Donald, Prov. J.G.W.; Ven. O. Mathias, Prov. G. Chaplain; W. G. Brittan, Prov. G. Treas.; C. E. Fooks, Prov. G. Sec.; C. W. Bishop, Prov. S.G.D.; Brandon, Prov. J.G.D.; J. Wylde, Prov. G. Organist. The appointments to the other offices were postponed.

The Masonic hall had been richly decorated for the occasion, reflecting great credit upon the skilful brethren who designed and carried out the work. Among the prominent features was a handsome organ front, from behind which, under the direction of the appointed organist, beautiful and appropriate anthems and other music issued, accompanying the various parts of the ceremonial.

At the conclusion of the business so far, a short adjournment took place, after which the brethren assembled again at Bro. A. J. Alport's store, to partake of an excellent banquet set out there under the charge of Bro. Gee. At this assemblage some truly Masonic orations were delivered, including an eloquent address (not entirely confined to Masonry) from his honour the Superintendent. During the banquet, occasion was taken to lay the foundation of a benevolent fund, to be appropriated as may hereafter be required; for of course it cannot be imagined that, amongst the number who rank under the banners of the Order, occasion will not arise for the bestowal of liberal charity. No time was unduly lost over the dinner table, and, all important business having been transacted, the brethren separated at an early hour. Thus ended this grand Masonic gathering, which, though it is to be expected and indeed hoped that in the advancement of the Order future displays will in some points surpass it, can nevertheless at all time never be equalled in honour and interest as the first of its kind in New Zealand.

We should not omit to mention, that the exceedingly elegant clothing of the Prov. Grand Officers, was supplied by Bro. Spencer, of Great Queen-street, London, and are in every respect worthy of his establishment.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

THEATRICALS AT HYDE.

On Tuesday evening, October 11th, Shakspeare's noble tragedy of "Othello, the Moor of Venice," was performed in the Hyde Theatre, under the patronage of the W.M. and brethren of the Lodge of Industry, No. 465, for the benefit of Bro. Matthew Wardhaugh, of No. 50. There was a goodly company of Freemasons and their families present; and the representation of the piece was such as gave general satisfaction; the part of Othello being admirably sustained by Bro. Wardhaugh, and that of Emilia by his talented wife. The evening's entertainment concluded with a petite comedy.

Obituary.

BRO. WILLIAM MAY, P.M.

We have to record the decease on the 16th instant, of Bro. William May, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. The deceased brother, who was greatly respected as a worthy man and Mason, was the Senior Past Master of the Knights of Malta Lodge, No. 58, Hinckley, of which he was a most useful and active member, having for many years acted as Secretary. He had been for some time past in declining health, but never failed to be present in his place at the meetings of the Lodge. Shortly before his death he requested that the members of the Lodge would follow his remains to the grave, and bury him as a Mason, which was accordingly done, a dispensation for the purpose having been granted by the D. Prov. G.M. His loss will be severely felt, particularly by the many young members of the Lodge.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The Queen held a Privy Council on Saturday, at Windsor, at which Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued to the 15th December. The royal family continue in good health. Among the visitors to her majesty this week have been the premier, the Duke of Somerset, the Earl of Elgin, Viscount Sydney, and the Right Hon. C. P. Villiers. Sir James Clark has retired from the post of personal physician to the Queen, having filled that office for the last twenty-seven years; he is succeeded by Dr. Baley. There is a misconception very prevalent as to the date when the Prince of Wales will be of age. An act passed in 1842 provided for a Regency until the Prince was eighteen; after this date he was to be considered of age should any unforeseen event take place, the aversion of which we all most sincerely and heartily pray. Otherwise he will not be considered of age till he is twenty-one, and will not take his seat in the House of Lords till that period arrives. George Prince of Wales, afterwards King George III., was introduced into the House of Lords on the 13th of November, 1759, and George (his son) Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV., was introduced on the 11th November, 1783; George III. having been born June 4, 1738 (N.S.), and George IV. August 12, 1762. Sir George Lewis has answered several applications to the effect that it is not intended to have any particular demonstration on the Prince's coming birth-day.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The French Emperor and the Imperial Court will leave for Compiègne on the 31st inst. The Duke de Padoue has returned to Paris, and will resume his official duties at the end of the month. General Bedeau and Dr. Lausedat have availed themselves of the amnesty, and returned to France. "An impression continues to gain ground," says the Paris correspondents, "that a rupture between the Governments of France and England is to be feared." Some circumstances which lead to this conclusion are adduced. That some foundation exists for the opinions expressed would seem to be shown by the gloom and depression on the Bourse. The French, Spanish, and Russian squadrons are all collected within sight of Gibraltar, in the Bay of Algeiras. The Phare de la Manche, an authority on French naval affairs, announces that orders have been received in all the ports to suspend provisionally the preparations for China. The Ministers of Justice has "invited" the judges, law officers, and magistrates, to abstain from appearing in public in coloured clothes, and requires them to wear black suits and white cravats; they are also to abstain from smoking in the streets and sleeping at their country houses. The only object of such an edict as this must be to disgust honourable magistrates, and make them resign their posts, which will then be filled with pliant satellites of power.

The Tuscan Monitor publishes a decree of the provisional government, enacting that all public establishments, as well as the army, are to be called royal, "as in other parts of the states of King Victor Emmanuel;" and also professes to give the reply given by the Emperor of the French to the deputation from Florence, viz.:—"The emperor does not consider himself sufficiently released (abbastanza sciolto) from the engagements entered into at Villafranca to give any other advice save that of the restoration, with ample guarantees for independence and liberty. The emperor always decided not to permit any intervention, even that of Naples.—The papal government has received intelligence that the Bishop of Rimini and other priests had been imprisoned, and that the authorities at Pesaro had seized letters from emissaries exciting to rebellion the provinces now held in submission by the papal troops. The Pope has returned to Rome, to the not unmixed delight of his subjects. The interview between the Pope and the King of Naples has been adjourned. His Holiness has despatched an English prelate named Talbot to the Court of Naples, in order to explain the cause of the adjournment of the interview. The official Giornale di Roma confirms the arrest of the Bishop of Rimini. Many priests have quitted the country in the neighbourhood of the Romagna on account of the intrigues of emissaries, and in fear of disturbances. Conferences have been held between the Pope and the Duc de Grammont, on the subject of which complete secrecy was observed; but it is stated that the ordinances for granting administrative reforms are now ready, and will shortly be made public. The Paris correspondent of the Indépendance of Brussels states that the Pope entertains the idea of reconstituting the order of Knights of Malta on a military footing. There would be a regiment called after each Catholic state, and composed of subjects of that state. The writer adds that though the project is certainly entertained, there is little chance of its being realized.—We learn by telegram from Madrid that the Spanish Government had declared war against Morocco. The declaration had been received with the greatest enthusiasm by the Cortes, the people, and the press. Correspondencia Autografa announces that the corps d'armée destined for operation in Africa will most likely be organized about the middle of this week, when General O'Donnell will take his departure. The same journal says,—"We do not yet know if the Spanish Consul at Tangiers has arrived in Spain," and that the minister of the Emperor of Morocco had intimated to the Spanish chargé d'affaires that though he was empowered to treat with Spain, he was not authorized to consent to so large a cession of territory as that required.—Advices have been received from Constantinople to the 19th inst. Four chiefs of the late conspiracy have been condemned to death—namely, Hussein Pacha, a mufi, a colonel, and an individual who was to have killed the Sultan. These condemnations had provoked a fermentation among the populace, and direct threats of revenge had mysteriously reached the palace of the Sultan. The executions have been delayed. The Sultan has written a letter to the ministers, reproaching them that the reforms have been incomplete.—A Milan correspondent, writing on the 22nd inst., says that, by way of corollary to the announcement of the establishment of peace, the Italian press talks of nothing but war and military preparations, and he then gives extracts in proof of his statement; while, on the part of Austria, no means are neglected to prove that the rough schooling to which she has been subjected, has not been lost upon her. Rifled cannon are to be cast, new muskets are to be supplied to the troops, but the most notable fact is, that the fortifications at Mantua and Verona, are undergoing continual repairs.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The Registrar General's return for last week again exhibits a satisfactory state of the public health. The deaths were 910, being about 200 less than the estimated average for the season. The number of births was 1,790. There was an extraordinary fall in the temperature during the week; the thermometer in the shade stood at 64 degrees on the Sunday, and on the Saturday fell to 28 degrees, or 4 below freezing point. On the 4th of October the mean temperature was 68 degrees.—It is authoritatively stated by the Irish papers that Mr. Cardwell, chief secretary, has informed their lordships the bishops of his inability to reply to their "resolutions" of August last. The subject, it appears, is to be made a cabinet question. Meanwhile, however, the prelates have taken their measures, and are determined, by energetic action, to prove that they are resolved to carry into effect their educational scheme entire. A board of directors has been appointed, and an address adopted for the management and future government of the Catholic University.—At the Middlesex sessions, three persons of respectable appearance, sisters, named Julia, Ann, and Kate Nash, were indicted for several robberies. They were young women who had been practising for some time the trade of shoplifting, and being dressed in a fashionable manner, and not creating any suspicion, they were very successful in their operations. It was stated that they were the daughters of a highly respectable person, now dead, who had given them the education of ladies, and they were very accomplished; they were not pressed by want, but it seemed that they had a penchant for thieving. They had been previously tried and had suffered twelve months' imprisonment. They were now found guilty, and the Assistant Judge commented in a severe manner on the conduct of the prisoners, and then sentenced them each to three years' penal servitude.—At the Central Criminal Court, Leonard Duckworth Barlow surrendered to take his trial for wounding Hannah Edwards with intent to do her grievous bodily harm, and, notwithstanding a very able defence by Mr. Sleight, he was found guilty of wilfully wounding, and sentenced to twelve months' hard labour.—On Wednesday last, Mr. Tallent, a bookseller, of Paternoster row, who was summoned before the magistrate, at Guildhall, for refusing to pay a church rate in the parish of St. Faith the Virgin, grounded his objection on the Popish practices in the church. The churchwarden, in answer, stated that the service was intoned, and that was the worst feature in it. Ultimately the summons was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, the prosecutors being left to seek their remedy in the ecclesiastical courts.—An explosion of fire-damp took place on Saturday morning, at Washington Colliery, near Newcastle, by which three men and a boy lost their lives. The bodies of the unfortunate miners have been recovered, and an inquest was opened on Monday evening to ascertain the cause of the catastrophe.—At the Court of Bankruptcy John Lockhart Morton, merchant, of Finch-lane, Cornhill, passed his final examination. His case has already acquired so much notoriety that it is scarcely necessary to remind our readers of his conviction some time since, and sentence of four years' penal servitude, in consequence of the extensive forgeries (exceeding £20,000) he had committed on several discount banks. The accounts show liabilities to the extent of £125,000, but of these it is not expected that more than £70,000 or £80,000 will eventually be proved against the estate. It is said that the assets will realize £40,000, but the official assignee has hitherto received only £9,553, and this amount will shortly be made applicable to a dividend of about 8s. or 4s. in the pound on the claims at present established.—Benjamin Chowder has been examined at Marlborough-street Police Court relative to a charge of fraud and perjury in the disposal of a quantity of household furniture to a lady. The question of perjury arose from a declaration made to the effect that there was no encumbrance, whereas it was asserted that a bill of sale had been executed on the property. Mr. Bingham remanded the case, and admitted the accused to bail.—A woman named Susannah Brooks, in whom the passion for drink had overcome every natural affection, was sentenced to six months imprisonment, by the magistrate at Worship-street Police-court, for neglecting, starving, and cruelly ill-treating her children. It was stated that the prisoner had not been sober for the last two years; but the prospect of six months' total abstinence appears to act like a charm, restoring her to perfect consciousness.—The Earl of Jersey, who only succeeded to the title on the 3rd inst., is now lying dead himself, having expired on Monday last. He is succeeded by his son, a boy of fourteen.—The Lord Chief Baron has granted an application for the postponement of the trial of Sarah Jane Wiggins, for the murder of a child, to next the session.—Francisco Guimaraes, a Portuguese seaman, was indicted for the wilful murder of Philip Barker, master of the barque Margaret, on the high seas. Several witnesses having been examined for the prosecution, the counsel for the defence said the only answer that could be given was, that the prisoner was not in a state of mind at the time that could render him accountable for his actions. The jury, however, found him guilty of wilful murder, and the learned judge (Mr. Justice Williams) passed sentence of death upon him in the usual form. Harriet Haslett, charged with the manslaughter of Richard Haslett, her infant child, by exposure and neglect, was declared not guilty, and discharged.—

The storm of Tuesday, which continued and increased on Wednesday morning to almost a hurricane, as experienced also in the metropolis, has told with fearful effect on the shipping on all parts of the coast. In the channel especially the devastation was great; and it is to be feared that the reported wreck of nearly one hundred vessels, with a proportionate loss of life, will prove to come far short of the full extent of life lost and property destroyed.—The funds yesterday were not very animated, but they showed greater strength in the later hours, and consols for money were last quoted 95½ to 96, and for the account 95½ to 96. Foreign securities were heavy, and in some cases a decline was quoted; but railway shares exhibited firmness, most descriptions partially recovering from their former dulness. There were no bullion operations at the bank; the rate for discount was fairly supported at about 2½ per cent.; and upwards of 150,000 sovereigns were advised by the Maid of Judah from Sydney.

INDIA AND COLONIES.—The Bombay mail brings news of considerable interest. Central India is still in an unsettled state; a large number of the rebels are sheltered in the scattered towns and villages. In Jhansi the fugitive sepoys are still troublesome. Feroze Shah is at the head of a large number of rebels. In Northern India the frontier districts of Nepal are still occupied by the Nana, with some 12,000 adherents; so that it is not surprising that the Bombay Gazette, which records these facts, should add that the campaign must be resumed very soon, and that the preparations for it have already commenced. The discharged men of the artillery and other European corps are now on their way to the presidencies. The difficulty is not quite over yet. The captains of some of the ships very naturally object to convey the released corps without an adequate quota of royal regiment soldiers to strengthen the hands of discipline, and although the China disaster at Peiho looks so ugly, requiring prompt and vigorous retribution, the government does not appear to be inclined, so far as we can learn, to employ the homeward-bound men on this service, even if they should be willing to cancel or postpone their discharge. Many of the men, especially the really good soldiers, would gladly reconsider their resolve to throw up a well-paid service; but mauvaise honte prevents their signifying a change of mind in the matter without some colourable pretext for so doing. If the government offered them fair terms, put before them in a proper way, to wipe off the disgrace, and the British blood which has been spilt in China, we feel confident that many would have given in. A meeting of the inhabitants had taken place at Calcutta, on Sept. 23rd, to protest against the Licensing Bill, and to petition Parliament to establish local representative councils in India. Government securities were unaltered, with a downward tendency.—The mail packet Norman has arrived at Plymouth, with the Cape Mails. She left Table Bay on the 20th ult. There is no political news; the Parliament stands prorogued to the 16th November. The severe drought which had prevailed had ceased; trade was good, and the prospects of the colony flourishing.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews of the state of trade show that business is gradually assuming a more healthy appearance, though no further important rise has taken place in price. In Birmingham the home and foreign orders are increasing, the transactions forward stimulating activity. At Halifax, Bradford, and Huddersfield, a fair reasonable demand exists, and it is presumed that the year will terminate in a satisfactory manner. The operations at Manchester have been on an enlarged scale for general business, but the department connected with India had been less buoyant the last few days. In the neighbourhood of Leeds and Leicester the manufacturers are better employed, the inquiry for winter goods having augmented. From Nottingham the report is that trade is steady, though the approaching season will, it is thought, be satisfactory. At Sheffield a good business has been transacted in steel for America, but general mercantile affairs have only been partially active. The Irish linen trade is firm and improving.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A PROV. J.G.W."—Your suggestion shall be taken into consideration.

"J. J."—The election of the Grand Master takes place in March.

"BELL."—Inadmissible.

"THE CHARITIES."—Our correspondent's letter shall be returned to "Finter."

"P.M."—The P.Ms. have no power to overrule the decisions of the Lodge.

"A YOUNG MASON."—We prefer a P.M. for Secretary; but there is no law on the subject.

"SCOTLAND."—The account of the proceedings at the inauguration of the Zetland Lodge, Grangemouth, arrived too late for our present impression.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1859.

EIKON EKKAHΣIAΣEIKH.

At the invasion of the Turks and Moors in the east and south of Europe, religious architecture had in those regions become greatly degenerated. Indeed it had been matter for surprise to have found it otherwise for the reason already assigned—namely, the fierce and bloody contests that took place for dogmatic ascendancy. The practical advantages of Christianity had been ignored for some filmy abstraction, and men instead of following precepts upon the value of which there could be no discussion, must inquire into the nature of God before they could obey his commandments. The result was unavoidable, men vaunted their knowledge of the unknowable—and in the confusion which smote their pride, fell back for support upon a furious intolerance.

But in the north and west of Europe, Christianity had taken deep root. So different seemed its development, that it appeared more like a reformation of the manners of the rude races of the North than a revolution of thought. Barbarous customs were indeed relinquished, but there was nothing like subversion. The same simple tastes continued to prevail. Thus, while Christianity was torn by polemical ferocity in the East, on account of the undeterminate relation of the divine Spirit to the poor comprehension of man—in the West its precepts were practised because controversy was yet unknown, and the lord and the serf knelt on the same floor, and asked for the same mercy and favour, ignoring the difference of their relative positions in this, for the knowledge of their equality in the next world.

The stimulus given to ecclesiastical architecture in France and England at this time was exceedingly great. It has been doubted whether the Anglo-Saxons built churches of permanent character; but it would seem that the organization of the clergy was sufficient to render such edifices absolutely necessary, and there are several remains of Anglo-Saxon towers which should set the question at rest. It appears, at the same time, that none of these buildings were at all comparable with the least celebrated of those which were built by the Normans.

In Dugdale's Monasticon there is a very remarkable illustration of the zeal of the Normans for magnificent churches. William the Conqueror had vowed that if his expedition against England should prove successful, he would build an abbey in honour of the Most High God, which he would liberally endow. In the hour of triumph he gave orders therefore, for building the Abbey of Battle, near the scene of conflict. It happened that when the foundations were dug, no water could be found; the architect therefore recommended that some other site should be chosen; and begged of William to be informed of his pleasure. "Work on! work on!" cried the king, "if God gives me life there shall be more wine for the monks of the abbey to drink than there is now clear water in the best convent in Christendom." William and his wife Matilda had already founded two abbeys at Caen, which had just been completed. Upon the settlement of his empire the conqueror again turned his attention to religious architecture, and superintended himself the details of Battle Abbey, Norman art being at this period at its zenith.

The nobility had been accustomed to build magnificent churches upon their domains in Normandy, and their success in England was almost immediately followed by the diffusion of similar tastes. Their first care was indeed to build fortresses, to secure their English possessions. However rapaciously the Normans may have possessed themselves of the resources and wealth of their new conquest, they certainly scattered them abroad with a not unsparing hand. The erection and restoration of ecclesiastical buildings proceeded so rapidly, that before the end of the eleventh century their strongholds and religious establishments were distributed over the remotest parts of the country. "You might see," says William of Malmesbury, "churches rise in every village, and monasteries in the towns and cities, built in a style unknown before. You might behold the country flourishing with renovated sites, so that each wealthy man accounted that day lost to him which he neglected to signalize by some munificent action."

The Norman architecture is a link between the Roman and the Gothic; and we find in it much that recalls the memory of the one at the same time that we observe in it a great deal that connects it with the other. The arches are circular not pointed, but the shafts and columns are of such variety as to illustrate the progress of the new style which at a later period came into vogue. Polygonal shafts, the prototypes of the clustered pillar and plain rectangular piers, are sometimes met with. The walls are so thick and massive that buttresses are not required, and where these appear, they are used rather as essential to the general design than to the strength of the building. The windows are small, divided frequently by two lights, the arch being here reproduced on a smaller scale within the external arch. Circular windows are often met with, divided by small shafts, from which sprung the wheel windows of a later date. The cornices are extremely bold, and supported by corbels of fantastic shape, sometimes monstrous and grotesque heads, sometimes exaggerated forms of animals; but sometimes the cornice consists merely of a band indented and forming a parapet.

The details of the Norman style are exceedingly varied. The decorations are, however, simple and harmonious. We shall have several opportunities as we proceed, to bring before the reader specimens of the most celebrated of these buildings. The capitals retain most of the peculiarities of the classic form, but in somewhat more of a campanulate form, with a massive square abacus. The foliage with which these are adorned follows no particular rule. Sometimes instead of foliage the capital is adorned with elaborate interlacings of stonework.

The mouldings and running decorations are also exceedingly various, and are referable, like the capital, to the classic idea. The antique scroll work is found in innumerable modifications. There are some ornaments which are peculiar to the Norman style—such for instance as the chevron or zigzag, which will be found in the greatest profusion and in its most elaborate application in Durham cathedral. Frets, reticulations of various forms, right angled and triangular lozenge shaped cabled spiral ranges of beaked heads, and billeted, sometimes used in arches, sometimes in horizontal bands, were all more or less used, but a general uniformity was maintained.

It is upon the church doorways that the Anglo-Norman architects seem to have lavished their greatest display of ornament. These principally consist of an arch, which is a repetition of several enriched bands one within another, and surrounded by an archivolt. These bands admit of every variety of ornament, and the archivolt is decorated either with floral designs, symbolic groups, heads of figures, or even groups of human forms, and terminated at either extremity with a bust or other large figure. The doors themselves were usually arched, but instances are found where the door is square, the space occupied by the arch being filled up with sculpture. But perhaps the most remarkable, and certainly not the least beautiful, of the characteristics of the Norman style, was that interlacing of arches which covered the face of the building. Sometimes these arcades are simple, when they admit of greater scope of treatment, but the interlaced form gives to the aspect of the building an appearance of lightness, gracefulness, and uniformity. These peculiarities are found in greatest profusion in the cathedral at Canterbury, Christ Church, and Winchester cathedral. In the cathedral at Norwich they appear as a band between the upper and lower windows. The whole facade of Rochester cathedral is covered with this beautiful archwork, and the ancient parts of Lincoln cathedral. The flat surfaces within these arches are sometimes also richly decorated, as in the church of St. Augustine, at Canterbury.

The Latin cross, as we have shown, had become the established form for churches of the larger class, but the east end frequently terminated in a semicircular apse, and the circular formerly predominated in the appendant chapels, as may be seen at Canterbury, Norwich, or Gloucester. The interior elevation of the Norman church is best exhibited in Durham cathedral, which consists of the line of lower arches, surmounted by the triforium and clerestory. The intersection of the cross was covered by a tower, low, but pierced with arches for windows, and forming a sort of lantern. The west end is usually flanked by two other but smaller towers, and frequently as the angles of the building fall forward, they are surmounted by square or octangular turrets, formed of groups of columns and arches, admitting of great variety and beauty in the arrangement.

The twelfth century was extremely prolific of fortresses and churches. Henry I. was a great builder of both; but in the following reign the country became, as we are told in the Saxon chronicle, "covered with castles and every one built a castle who was able." So numerous had these fortresses become and so turbulent the various orders of the state, that long before the death of Stephen these fortified castles amounted to nearly twelve hundred in number. But it is singular that we owe to this period also some of our principal ecclesiastical edifices. The wealth of the bishop and the baron had exceeded all proportion to the wants of either. There was no way of disposing of it but to bury it in the earth or exchange it for the support of followers, which were not less necessary to the priest than to the knight. The abbot on his mule could summon as many stalwart retainers to his service as the belted and spurred noble who waged endless war upon his neighbours. The only difference was that the territorial policy of the one was defensive, that of the other aggressive. It was seldom however that the clergy were molested. Their spiritual powers were at that time ample to restrain any attempt upon their revenues; their resources were constantly increasing, and it is doubtful whether in those days the internecine war that was waged by rival barons did not greatly contribute to increase them, for there were votive offerings, masses, prayers, promises, indulgences, and penitential impositions—for which there was likely to be a much greater demand in time of war than in time of peace. Of these resources some idea may be formed from the example of Bishop Herbert Losing, who removed the episcopal see of Thetford to Norwich in 1094. This prelate had out of his own resources established a large community of monks at Thetford before transferring his see to Norwich. In Norwich he built and established a very large monastery, defraying the expense entirely out of his private fortune. He further erected the magnificent cathedral which remains as a monument of his munificence to this day. It is singular indeed that William of Malmesbury, who may be presumed to have been well informed on matters of this kind, tells us that "he was by no means a rich bishop." The meaning of this is perhaps that he was poor for one of his order.

There were other bishops of the same date who seem to have had surpassing notions of the extent which a Christian church should occupy, and the splendour by which it should be characterized. There was one Mauritius, Bishop of London in the year 1086. This prelate began to build a church upon a plan so vast and magnificent that it was looked upon as a rash and presumptuous undertaking, but it was remembered that his wealth was reputed to be inexhaustible, his zeal unrestrainable. The fruit of this zeal has been lost to his posterity, if indeed it ever came to maturity. Roger Bishop Sarum (1107—1139) was another enormously rich prelate. "He built his cathedral in such a manner," says William of Malmesbury, "that it yielded to none and surpassed many." He also erected several castles and strongholds upon his estates, and built numerous mansions of "such unrivalled magnificence that in merely maintaining them his successors will toil after him in vain." The abbey of Malmesbury was built, established, and endowed liberally by this prelate, but the fragments of Sherborne Castle are all that remain of the noble works which drew forth the encomiums of the chronicler. The noble cathedral of Durham was founded at this date (1093) by William de Carilepho; Chichester, by Bishop Ralph (1091); Peterborough, by Ernulph (1107); Rochester, by Gundulph (1077); Hereford, by Robert de Losing (1079); Gloucester, by Abbot Serlo (1088); Oxford, by Prior Guymond (1120.) We should indeed include most of the ancient religious edifices in England.

The Tower of London is also the work of Gundulph of Rochester, who, though a bishop, was the ablest architect of his day, and was at the head of a body of "Masons who built many wonderful works of castles as well as churches." Peter, Bishop of Colechurch, built the first stone bridge across the Thames, 1176. Blois, Bishop of Winchester, founded the monastery and hospital of St. Cross for the relief of poor travellers, the revenues of which have accumulated to so vast a sum as to amount within comparatively a few years to half a million of money.

But we must leave particular instances to future opportunities. Such was the public spirit of the ecclesiastics of that day—whatever may have been the faults of the system which produced them, they were evidently superior to many of the temptations of their position, and spent their lives in preserving what a later age happily enjoys—the treasures of ancient learning and the traditions of art and religion. Those glorious structures which, where the violence of man has not forestalled the destroying hand of time, remain to us as the monuments of genius dedicated to religion, afford a testimony unimpeachable to the energy and piety of their authors, and call forth an admiration not to be measured even by the mighty works that have been executed in our day. Along their aisles where falls the many coloured light, sober and shadowy yet deep and warm, we read the last verse of life's epic in the carved casque and armour of the knight, the prelate's crozier, and the king's sceptre. That beautiful sculptured form with cold looking marble rose in its stony hand covers, like the binding of a book, many a chapter of romance, love, and poetry. Men who have penetrated inaccessible wilds, and women whose smile and prayer have made the wealth of the dungeon—upon which fortitude leaned on its way to the scaffold—sleep here, at peace. Requiescant!

Silence seems to whisper to the intruder that he may not stay in her domain. But those massive columns, the vaulted roof, the statues of faith and hope and charity, seem to proclaim that not the least compensation for the toil of life spent in the achievement of good is the repose which it furnishes to the pilgrim, and the food for meditation. Nor is it only as the founders and authors of our glorious cathedrals that these prelates are entitled to our admiration. There is great reason to believe that their enlightenment on many points of faith as well as art far outstripped the time in which they lived, and that not by their skill alone, but also by their piety, in an age of lawlessness and violence, they gave temples which were to be reserved for a faith as pure as their own to dwell in. They need no monument. There is in the prayers and music of Sabbath pealing thanksgiving from a thousand hearts; theirs is in the voice of mourning, and tears of awakened penitence—their monument indeed is the work of their own hands, but the dwelling of the Most High.

PREACHING AND INSTRUCTION.—A worthy old clergyman having, upon the occasion of a communion Monday, taken a text of a simple character, was thus commented on by an ancient dame of the congregation, who was previously acquainted with his style of discourse:—"If there's an ill text in a' the Bible, that creetur's aye sure to tak it."—Dean Ramsay.

TRUE FREEMASONRY.

We extract the following from the American Masonic Mirror and Keystone, in which it was communicated by a correspondent dating from St. Denis, Baltimore County, Maryland, who describes a visit to the Howard Lodge, located at Elkridge landing, "just across the Patapsco." Our Scottish brethren are indebted to the Howard Lodge, and the Grand Lodge of Scotland will not do its duty if it does not send out some honorary acknowledgment of so truly a Masonic kindness performed towards one of its members. Bro. C. S. Law, or Bro. Donald Campbell, should see to this:—

"In my rambles round about the Patapsco I found myself in the village where the good brethren of Howard Lodge have their temple. My visit was to me propitious; for it was the day set apart by the brethren for the completion of a great and glorious work which they had commenced many months before. I was cordially and fraternally invited to join them; and very soon I found myself standing by a green mound in the quiet grave yard, which lies just beyond the village. The Master, and the Senior, and the Junior Warden were there, with several of the brethren. It was their second meeting around this grave. The first was to lay in it the cold remains of a stranger brother. Now, they were assembled to raise to his memory a white stone, whereon was inscribed the following:—"William Crawford, born October 23, A.D. 1788, A.L. 5788. Died March 29, A.D. 1859, A.L. 5859. A tribute of respect by Howard Lodge, No. 101, A. F. A. M."

"The fact that the stone which the brethren had just raised, marked the last resting place of a stranger brother, excited within me an earnest desire to know his history, and the circumstances which caused this exhibition of fraternal regard on the part of Howard Lodge. The kindness of my brethren soon put me in possession of the story of his afflictions, and of their pleasure in attending him in his last days. And in commendation of them, for their devotion to the principles and teachings of our great fraternity, I beg to lay before you some of the incidents which then came to my knowledge.

"About two years since, William Crawford, a native of Scotland, applied for employment at the Avalon Nail Works, situated on the Patapsco, a short distance from Elkridge Landing. He was an old man, nearly three score years and ten. He could do but little, for his strength was gone. The humane proprietors of the works, however, employed him, and he earned his pittance regularly until sickness overtook him. He was a stranger to all about him. Without friends or relations, he was about to die

"'Beneath a stranger air,
A pilgrim on a cold, dull earth.'

But in his last and bitter extremity, when all his little savings were gone, and want and helplessness were only left to him, he bethought him of the lessons which he had received in another land, near half a century ago. Those words, which were then communicated to him by the instructive tongue of his Highland brother, came back to his memory in words of living fire. Having ascertained that a Lodge of Masons was held at the Landing, he sent for one of its members, and modestly related to him the story of his life. Our good brother of Howard soon found that the old man was a true and tried brother, companion, and Sir Knight. He communicated to his Lodge, at its next meeting, the facts which he had discovered; and the Lodge promptly directed that the old brother should receive all the attention and assistance necessary to render his condition comfortable, and smooth his way to the grave. He came almost penniless and friendless, but now by the aid of that he was rich in the fraternal affection of true and devoted brethren and friends.

"'Hieroglyphic bright,
Which none but Craftsmen ever saw;'

"He was at once removed to a pleasant and quiet home in the midst of the village, and watched and nursed by the brethren, who seemed to rival each other in their kindness and devotion to the old and dying brother. Months rolled on: and the stranger still lingered on his bed of suffering. At length the treasury of the Lodge was empty. What was to be done now? Was the old man to be left to the cold charities of the world? The brethren said nay; for they were bound to him by an indissoluble chain of sincere affection, and what the treasury of the Lodge could not furnish, their free and open private purses supplied; and the wants of their brother were still as promptly met, and his pillow still as gently smoothed. Again months rolled on; and the old man's sufferings, and the cares and attentions of our brethren were at an end. The old man died, away from his home, a stranger in a strange land. But he had found friends, though strangers, who had ministered to his wants and sympathized with him in his declining days. His last moments were calm and peaceful, and surrounded by his devoted brethren, his spirit passed away to the upper and better world. His funeral was attended by the Lodge, and his body deposited by them in the cold grave, with the solemn and impressive service of our Order, added to which was an eloquent address by Bro. McCabe, of Baltimore, who had been specially invited for that purpose. But, not content with that, which they had already done, the brethren again assembled around that grave, and marked the last resting place of William Crawford, by erecting to his memory the marble slab which I have already described."

PSEUDO MASONS.

It will probably be in the recollection of most of our readers, that some weeks back we had occasion to call their attention to the proceedings of a body calling themselves the "Reformed Order of Memphis." At the time we warned several of our correspondents that the persons in question had no right to the title of Masons, and that they were acting without any authority or warrant from the Grand Masonic bodies here or abroad. We also expressed our opinion that their meetings were in direct contravention of the law, and that in point of fact they were liable to prosecution as members of an illegal secret society. It is indeed strongly suspected that the primary aim of this society was political, whatever may be its objects at the present time; and it is certain that the founders were French political refugees, who have taken refuge in London in consequence of the events which have occurred in France of late years.

We are, therefore, not surprised, that upon the facts of the case becoming known to the Executive of the Order, prompt measures have been taken to enlighten the Craft as to the proceedings of this spurious association, and as to the consequences of becoming connected with it. The following official document has been promulgated among the various Lodges of the Craft, and will no doubt have the desired effect of discouraging any further attempts at proselytism on the part of these adventurers.

We regret to find that at Stratford, in Essex, sufficient inquiry has not been made into the constitution and origin of this society of "Philadelphes," and that they have succeeded in enrolling several of our countrymen. It will be seen that the names of the officers of the so-called "Stratford Lodge" are all English.

"Freemasons' Hall, London, 24th October, 1859.

"DEAR SIR AND WORSHIPFUL MASTER,—I am directed to inform you that it has come to the knowledge of the Board of General Purposes that there are at present existing in London and elsewhere in this country, spurious Lodges claiming to be Freemasons.

"I herewith furnish you with a copy of a certificate issued by a Lodge calling itself 'The Reformed Masonic Order of Memphis, or Rite of the Grand Lodge of Philadelphes,' and holding its meetings at Stratford, in Essex.

"I am directed to caution you to be especially careful that no member of such body be permitted under any circumstances to have access to your Lodge, and that you will remind the brethren of your Lodge that they can hold no communication with irregular Lodges without incurring the penalty of expulsion from the Order, and the liability to be proceeded against under the Act 39 Geo. III., for taking part in the meetings of illegal secret societies.

"I am further to request that you will cause this letter to be read in open Lodge, and the copy of the certificate to be preserved for future reference in case of necessity.

"I remain, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

"WM. GRAY CLARKE, Grand Sec.

"N.B.—It is to be observed that the original certificate contains various emblematical devices which it has not been deemed necessary to have copied.

[COPY.]

"Au nom du G. Conseil Gén. de l'Ordre Mac. réformé de Memphis, sous les auspices de la G. Lodge des Philadelphes, à tous les Maçons répandus sur les deux hémisphères—Salut, amitié, prospérité, courage, tolérance :

"Nous Vénérable et Officiers de La Loge Egalité, O. de Stratford, assemblés, par les nombres mystérieux connus des vrais Maçons, certifions et attestons que le T. Ch. F. —, né à —, le — mil huit cent vingt huit, possède du premier au troisième — de l'O. et fait partie en cette qualité de cette Resp. Loge.

"En conséquence nous invitons toutes les Loges à le reconnaître en sa qualité, à l'accueillir fraternellement, et à lui prêter aide et protection au besoin.

"Fait et délivré dans un lieu éclairé d'un rayon divin, où règne la paix, la vertu, la science, et la plénitude de tous les biens.

"O. de Stratford, Essex, le — jour de —, An de la V.L. 000,000,000 (— E.V.)"

"To all whom it may concern, these are to testify that our Bro. —, who hath signed his name in the margin hereof, was regularly received into Freemasonry, and admitted to the third degree in the Equality Lodge, and that he is duly registered in the book of our Order accordingly.

"In testimony whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names and affixed our seals.

"At Stratford, Essex, the — day of — A.L. 000,000,000 (— 1859, V.E.)

SIGNATURES.

"Le Ven. de la L. ROBERT MEIKLE; le 1er Surveillant, LEAMEN STEPHENSON; l'Orateur, JOHN Stewart; le Trésorier, E. TURNER; le 2me Surveillant, DAVID BOOTH; le G. Expert, STEPHEN SMITH; le Secrétaire, WILLIAM COX; COUNTERSIGNATURES.

"Enregistré au G. Liv. d'or du G. Conseil gén. No. — Le Président, CT. VEILLARD, 33°; l'Arch. gén. de l'O., Br. DESQUESNES; le Secré. gén. de l'O., J. BALAGUE. Vallée de Londres, le jour de —, 1859. (E.V.)

"Ne Varieteur. Timbré et scellé par nous, G. des Sceaux et Timbres de la Loge, F. SCHROEDTER."

THE QUEEN OF SHEBA.

THE following discourse was preached before the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, Lord Leigh, and the Provincial Grand Lodge of Warwickshire, on Tuesday, October 11th, at the parish church of Sutton Coldfield, by the Rev. Bro. Ryland Bedford, Provincial Grand Chaplain, and Worshipful Master of the new Lodge the "Warden," No. 1,096.

"THE Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold a greater than Solomon is here."—MATTHEW, xii., 42.

NOTHING, brethren, should be more instructive to us—who, alas, are so apt to become partizans of our own ideal in opinion, and to lose sight of the faults of those who generally adopt our standard of profession, while we unsparingly criticise those who are unwilling to submit to our own canon of rectitude—than the view which the holy gospels give us of the expressions of illimitable knowledge, combined with unfathomable charity, in the conversations of our blessed Lord. He, who saw every vain, weak, false, or malicious desire of the human heart, saw even in those whose ears were dull, so that they were deaf to his message of salvation, some latent good, which still found favour and praise from his tender lovingkindness. While he sternly and severely rebukes the failings, the inconsistencies, and shortcomings of his own followers, he finds something to approve in the conduct of the sincerely scrupulous though selfrighteous Pharisee; in the centurion whose secular discipline had taught him unhesitating faith; in the schismatic Samaritan, who showed in act and deed his real appreciation of the import of the second great commandment of the law; even in the publican and harlot—nay, in the very heathen themselves—he finds something to approve, and some lesson of good for the imitation of his own disciples. Here, in the text, we have an instance where the laudable thirst for knowledge of a heathen princess is held up for the imitation not only of the faithful few who surrounded their Lord to draw instruction from his lips, but of all who hear and believe in his name, of all to whom his religion is a living reality, till time shall be no more.

"The Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation and shall condemn it." Nicaules, Queen of Ethiopia or Sheba, is the person here spoken of, who, stirred by the report which had reached her, even at so great a distance, of the magnificence and wisdom of the great monarch of the Jews, came in person to confer with him and to consult the treasures of his mind, from the same motive as other heathen potentates were wont to repair to the reputed seats of oracles. The journey must have been long and tedious and argued in her an unwonted desire of obtaining instruction and a sincere appreciation of the superiority of moral truth to the empty counterfeits of godless philosophy; for we are not to suppose that her journey was occasioned solely by the desire of viewing the splendour of King Solomon's royal state, the discipline and economy of his government, or those wonders of mechanical and architectural science which surrounded him on every side. Had her views been bounded by these advantages alone, her pilgrimage would not have deserved commemorative notice of the great Lord of heaven and earth. It must have been the instruction concerning Jehovah and his law, and the tutored worship, which she coveted to receive, and which the great interpreter of the spiritual mysteries of nature felt pleased to impart. Though we find mention of many things which excited her admiration, the first point which she is recorded as esteeming worthy of mention is Solomon's wisdom, and the last is his piety. Not the architectural splendour of Tadmor and Lebanon, and the vast newly completed temple; not the administrative ability with which the affairs of Israel were so prosperously conducted, nor the profound insight into the wonders of creation possessed by him, who—

"every creature knew,

And spake of every plant that sips the dew," though all these were so surprising that "that there was no more spirit in her," for she had never seen the like—not these things, we read, were the subject of her grateful mention, for the wisdom of the inspired king made a greater impression upon her than all his prosperity and grandeur.

Now, do we, brethren, who place the example of the illustrious founder of the temple, nominally as our object of study and appreciation, take as accurate a view of his fame and the true merits of his wisdom as this potentate of heathenness from the barbarous wilds of torrid Africa. Remember we are to submit to a comparison with her unenlightened faith, and a reference to her rude though energetic practice. In that great day when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, she who left her own land and strove with toil and pain to come within reach of the highest words of wisdom which ever issued from the lips of created man, will stand at that awful tribunal as a witness against the progress and the civilization—aye, and the religion too—of the great and advanced age of the world in which we live. In this perhaps we may prove to have overshot the mark, and to bear a less favourable comparison than in our pride we could suppose possible for those who live in so wondrous an age of intelligence and so favoured a land in doctrine as this to which we belong.

What was this wisdom which she sought? We must seek for its exposition in the works which yet remain to us out of the innumerable treasures of the fertile mind of the wise king. Let us hear the "conclusion of the whole matter," summed up in the deliberate sentence of the great teacher of the Hebrew kingdom, at a time of life when he was falling into the vale of years, and desired to leave on record his deliberate view of human life, and its true end—"Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."

Here, brethren, is a system of morality plain, practical and applicable to the circumstances of every mortal upon earth. It does not require the acute intellect of the philosopher and the sage; it does not seek for the extended influence of the man of wealth or of position; it involves no busy life of struggle in the arena of public employment, nor the self imposed asceticism of the hermitage or the cloister. In an humble, useful, charitable life, doing good to men for God's sake, and so keeping the two great commandments at once of the old and new law, it recognizes the true ideal of the godly upon earth; it makes no nice distinctions, yet marks a course which none can tread in mortal strength, or finish without reward which angels covet. It is no light thing, this wisdom of Solomon; it is no small thing to be born a man with all the various relations to our fellowmen, each full of its correlative results, to meet and influence each onward pace for good or ill. To accomplish but a part of that which is here suggested, how great the devotion required—and yet how plain. The man who lives in the faithful practice of the maxims of the Masonic order, may appreciate the problem here presented to us, and see in the beacons of our system the reflected light of the divinely illumined sage. Brotherly love embodies the second great command of the new law; and what do we mean by truth, but that every one of us should live in constant consciousness of the presence of his Maker, not trying in vain device or hypocritical folly to make ourselves seem something that we are not, nor hiding our heads like Adam in fallen Eden, fancying, like the silly bird of tale, that our blindness is that of omniscience. Perhaps, again, we see in this plain statement a warning against those systems by which men in every age have sought to evade a simple straightforward submission to the plainly revealed will of God. What they seek is to be saved on their own terms, and so they build up Babels as roads to heaven, motley structures of fact and falsehood, and theory and system, welded into one inharmonious whole in so ingenious a fashion, that they have not the heart to expose their idol and their toy to the rough blow of criticism, which they know would scatter it at once to atoms. This is the case at the present day, an age when religion is so popular, when the profession of it is a matter of continual boast, and some sacrifices even are really made for its sake—and all the while the flood of ungodliness is well nigh universal, steeping in stagnant worldliness millions of immortal souls, and only leaving the true inquirer after wisdom one or two cheering points on which to fasten his aching eye. For the rest, he sees but the man of pleasure and of fashion making his religion minister to his artistic elegance and refined excitement. He sees the keen man of business striving to make a compact with his God, as impious as that of the robber chieftains who endowed churches with their illgotten gains, endeavouring, by his respectability and charity, and orthodoxy, his constant attendance at church, and his occasional appearance at some religious or charitable meeting, to salve the rankling sense that there are details of his trade or profession on which conscience does not dare to dwell. He sees the mass of mankind, the multiplied units of the religious world, thinking more of their own souls, than of their God and Saviour; bringing into their prayers that old self which they are always thinking about; trying to get themselves saved (by God's help, as they say), though if they thought they could be saved without God's help, it would make little difference to them—blind to the glorious fact that heaven is God—that in beholding in him the Ruler and Manager of this world, bringing good out of evil, blessing and guiding all things and people on earth, is the life of the soul; for the soul would be worth nothing if there was no God to glory in, no blessed Jesus in heaven to work for and delight in.

What marvel then that the wisdom of Solomon falls on deaf ears in such times as these. It would never be heard at all if it were only accessible on the same conditions as in the case of the queen of the south: but we, brethren, have it daily brought before us in every holy ordinance and divine privilege which we are blessed to enjoy. Every good word, every act of pious self-denial and Christian charity, should teach us the lesson of Solomon. Nay, more—we have a clearer light and a more heavenly revelation—a greater than Solomon is here. In the full glories of the Christian dispensation, in the knowledge that unless we have faith in Christ, and unless all good works spring from that faith, our deeds are as nothing in God's sight; in exalting divine grace, and placing in its true light all human merit, our faith does most emphatically and vastly exceed the highest system and the clearest view ever vouchsafed to saint or prophet of the old dispensation. The true grace of God, and his mercy and love, are the acknowledged source of all that is good in us, and all that is good done by us. Our faith should drive from us all pride, vain glory, and hypocrisy, for it makes God everything and us nothing. And yet, when we look at the sad counterfeits of religion which prevail in the present day; when we see men who ought, if they truly believe the principles they profess, to be united in all good works of godliness and charity—disunited and disheartened, because of the fearful want of Christian sympathy and love which they meet with among the men with whom they are associated—and because of the tendency to seek for points of difference instead of those of agreement, and for excuses for schism, instead of means of binding up together in one body the members of Christ—the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. These petty jealousies, these reproaches, heart burnings, and malicious slanders are surely no part of the religion of love. They are earthly, sensual, devilish; they proceed from that device of Satan which ruins so many souls by making them take words for things, and leading them to forget that the eye of Omniscience having witnessed all, and the mind that embraces past, present, and future, with equal minuteness and equal certainty, having retained all—the sentence pronounced upon each child of Adam will be founded on complete and unerring knowledge of what he has been and all that he has done. Little will it then avail that the professors of religion have eaten and drunk in their Lord's presence, and taught, aye, though with the eloquence and popularity of an apostle, in his streets. By their fruits they will be known, though "we speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, we are but as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

Brethren in Masonry: dearly beloved—whom I have been privileged to address already, thrice during the past year, I will not again urge at length those considerations which I have already striven under God to place before you, to the utmost of my feeble powers. If, as I hope and trust, you do really perceive and appreciate the true value of the wisdom of Solomon, you will make your profession of Freemasonry a thing of deeds, not words; you will strive to render our Order indeed a guild of humble workers together with God, striving above all things to spread in your respective localities the great Christian principles of "peace on earth, goodwill towards men," not perplexing yourselves and injuring others by unseemly contentions about points of party strife, but writing on your hearts the words of the prophet "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justice and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

And to you brethren, as dearly beloved, among whom I was born and bred, and with whom I am connected by a link even higher than that of Masonry, inasmuch as the message of our blessed Lord and Master is greater than the wisdom of Solomon. I beseech your prayers for our newly founded undertaking, that the blessing of the Most High may rest upon it as erst upon the temple at Jerusalem, and make it an effectual handmaid of true piety and charity among us. Pray for me that I may be enabled at all times to speak in the spirit of true wisdom, fervent love, and godly fear, and for all who undertake the duties of our charitable association, that they may devote themselves to those duties in humble dependence upon the principles of true religion and godliness.

Nor let us forget, while we offer our prayers for a blessing on our future labours, to return our grateful thanks to the Almighty Ruler of the universe for favours already received. Let us make our offerings in his temple with a grateful heart, and join with one accord, in heart as well as voice, and say—

"I will sing unto the Lord a new song. O Lord, thou art great and glorious, wonderful in strength, and invincible.

"Let all creatures serve thee, for thou spakest and they were made, thou didst send forth thy spirit and it created them, and there is none that can resist thy voice.

"For the mountains shall be moved from their foundations with the waters, the rocks shall melt as wax at thy presence, yet thou art merciful to them that fear thee.

"For all sacrifice is too little for a sweet savour unto thee, and all the fat is not sufficient for thy burnt offering, but he that feareth the Lord is great at all times."

THE AFRICAN LODGE.

IN the American Mirror and Keystone, we find a copy of the original charter of the African Lodge of Boston, No. 459, of which "the original, as it was received from London, is still preserved in the archives of the National Grand Lodge of Coloured Masons, at Boston, Mass." It is as follows:—

"A.G.M. To all and every our Right Worshipful and loving Brethren, we, Thomas Howard, Earl of Effingham, Lord Howard, &c., &c., Acting Grand Master under the authority of His Royal Highness Henry Frederick Duke of Cumberland, &c., &c., Grand Master of the Most Antient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons, send greeting:

"Know ye, that we, at the humble petition of our right trusty and well beloved brethren, Prince Hall, Boston Smith, Thomas Sanderson, and several other brethren residing in Boston, New England, in North America, do hereby constitute the said brethren into a regular Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, under the title or denomination of the African Lodge, to be opened in Boston aforesaid, and do further, at their said petition, and of the great trust and confidence reposed in every of the said above named brethren, hereby appoint the said Prince Hall to be Master; Boston Smith, Senior Warden; and Thomas Sanderson, Junior Warden, for opening the said Lodge, and for such further time only as shall be thought by the brethren thereof, it being our will that this our appointment of the above officers shall in no wise affect any future election of officers of the Lodge, but that such election shall be regulated agreeable to such by-laws of the said Lodge as shall be consistent with the general laws of the society, contained in the Book of Constitutions; and we hereby will and require of you, the said Prince Hall, to take special care that all and every the said brethren are to have been regularly made Masons, and that they do observe, perform and keep all the rules and orders contained in the Book of Constitutions; and" further that you do from time to time cause to be entered in a book kept for that purpose, an account of your proceedings in the Lodge, together with all such rules, orders, and regulations as shall be made for the good government of the same, that in no wise you omit once in every year to send to us or our successors, Grand Masters, or to Rowland Holt, Esq., our Deputy Grand Master for the time being, an account in writing of your said proceedings, and copies of all such rules, orders, and regulations as shall be made as aforesaid, together with a list of the members of the Lodge, and such a sum of money as may suit the circumstances of the Lodge and reasonably be expected, towards the Grand Charity. Moreover, we hereby will and require you, the said Prince Hall, as soon as conveniently may be, to send an account in writing of what may be done by virtue of these presents.

"Given at London, under our hand and seal of Masonry, this 29th day of September, A.L. 5784, A.D. 1784.

"By the Grand Master's command,

"R. HOLT, D.G.M.

"Attested, WM. WHITE, G.S."

[Seal of the Grand Lodge of Masons in London.]

"RECEIPT OF PAYMENT.—Rec. 28th February, 1787, of Capt. Jas. Scott, five pounds, fifteen shillings, sixpence, being the fees on the warrant of constitution for the African Lodge at Boston.

"For the Grand Lodge of the Society of Free and Accepted Masons.

"£5 15s. 6d.

"WM. WHITE, G.S."

[According to the American papers, there is a body of coloured Masons who still act under this warrant, though it has long since disappeared from the roll of English Lodges.—ED.]

THE ROMANCE OF MISFORTUNE.

FROM the annual report of the New York Masonic Board of Relief, for 1859, we make the following interesting extract:—

"A young lady of refinement, on the 7th of April, 1858, marries in England, and on the 1st of May following this couple arrive in New York, with previous preparation, for successful settlement in Rochester. His means, though large by the common estimate of this country, were small for the son of a wealthy English gentleman. The desire to economise was natural and strong, and made the importunities of a fellow countryman easily successful in inducing him to take a house in Cedar-street. At half-past ten, P.M., on the 4th of May, on a night boat to Albany, the lady repairs to her berth; the husband unable to procure one for himself, promising to remain at the cabin door. At four, A.M., she arises and requests the maid to call her husband, but the cabin door is locked. At five the agent calls for her tickets, and is told 'my husband has them.' A moment passes, the agent calls again, and then how that young, innocent and confiding heart is torn by these words of death, 'I cannot find your husband—he is overboard.' We need not stop to describe the scene of overwhelming grief and crushing agony that followed. During that hour of suffering to an innocent being, so sadly and suddenly bereaved in a foreign land, among strangers, there was one who, as master of that ill omened craft, with a tearless eye and a heart of stone, could belch forth his command, 'Be still.' But he was not a Mason. But there was another there whose sympathy, too deep for tears, found expression in effectual and Masonic aid. After days of ineffectual effort to find the missing husband and brother, the unfortunate widow was returned to New York, where her case was finally laid before the Board of Relief, on the 17th of May, 1858, but not until by the counsel of suspected advisers, she had determined to leave for Europe at once (if the means could be obtained, for all was lost with her husband), with acquaintances who were returning, saddened and discouraged by her misfortunes.

"The hope of yet finding her missing husband, with the most solemn pledges of protection and support, were alone sufficient to change her purpose, and so far remove her fear of troubling others, as to induce her to take up her temporary home with the author of this report.

"The British consul and other high officials were consulted; a detective was employed, and on the morning of the 20th the body was found floating in the river near Newburg. Boacon Lodge, at Mateawan, near Fishkill, caused the remains to be buried in the most beautiful part of their rural cemetery. But on the 21st, ere the announcement could be made, with the return of some relics found upon the person, confidence having supplanted fear and excitement, nature in its relaxation had yielded to mental derangement. Upon the return of comparative health, after the lapse of weeks, she was accompanied to the grave, and sent on her way free toward the bosom of home.

"Could the fraternity of New York have witnessed the scene of that last visit at the grave, when, alone with the author of this report, she repaired to the sacred spot to weep and pray, and embrace the very earth; or could they have witnessed her departure for Europe, and seen how, standing upon the upper deck, supported on either side by the highest officers of a noble steamer, the chief of them a Mason, her gratitude was evinced by tears and exclamations, waving back her thanks from the utmost limit of vision, every heart would have rejoiced in the glory of Masonry, and every tongue would have cried out, 'Let it be established for ever!'"

ARCHÆOLOGY.

CURIOUS MANUSCRIPT.

A VERY curious manuscript was presented to the Antiquarian Society of Yorkshire in 1818. It contains sundry rules to be observed by the household of Henry VIII., and enjoins the following singular particulars:—None of his highness's attendants to steal any locks or keys, tables, forms, cupboards, or other furniture, out of noblemen's or gentlemen's houses where he goes to visit. No herald, minstrel, falconer, or other, to bring to the court any boy or rascal, nor to keep lads or rascals in court, to do their business for them. Master cooks not to supply such scullions as go about naked, nor lie all night on the ground before the kitchen fire. Dinner to be at ten, and supper at four. The Knight Marshal to take care that all such unthrifty and common women as followed the court be banished. The proper officers are, between six and seven o'clock every morning, to make the fire in, and straw, his highness's privy chamber. Officers of his highness's privy chamber to keep secret everything said or done, leaving hearkening and inquiring where the king is, or goes, be it early or late, without grudging, or mumbling, or talking of the king's pastime, late or early going to bed, or any other matter. Coal only allowed to the king's, queen's, and Lady Mary's chambers. The queen's maids of honour to have a chet loaf, a manchet, a gallon of ale, and a chine of beef for their breakfasts. Among the fishes for the table is a porpoise, and if it is too big for a horse load, a further allowance is made to the purveyor. The manuscript ends with several proclamations. One is to take up and punish strong and mighty beggars, rascals, and vagabonds who hang about the court.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

WAS THE FIRST NAPOLEON A FREEMASON?

IN reply to "Inquirer," I can inform him that the Emperor Napoleon the First was a Freemason, and initiated into the Order in consequence of rumours from the Roman Catholic priesthood at that epoch, that Freemasonry was held under the garb of secret societies, in order to conspire against the government." Napoleon, to assure himself of the truth or falsehood of these reports, became initiated, and visited several Lodges in Paris in disguise, but was recognized; at all events, he was perfectly satisfied of the false accusation. By referring to "Clavel on French Masonry," "Inquirer" will gain more information than I can give him.—W. H. BERNHARD, S.P.R.C. and K.T.

NAPOLEON THE FIRST A MEMBER OF THE ORDER.

I notice in a recent number of the Magazine, you ask if the Emperor Napoleon was a Mason. There was an old Frenchman in the State of Indiana, some eighteen months since, that asserted he had sat in a Lodge with the Emperor Napoleon.—E.D.C.

WAS THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE A FREEMASON?

I am unable to reply to the above query satisfactorily, but I feel pretty certain that he was. I base my opinion on the fact that, in the year 1805, the Empress Josephine assisted the Baroness Deitrich to perform the part of Grand Mistress of an Androgyne Lodge named the Lodge of Free Knights and Ladies of Paris, which held a most brilliant and enchanting festival at Strasbourg. Knowing how jealous the emperor was of the empress keeping any event from his knowledge, and how very particular he was in respect to her associations, it appears to me to be very unlikely he would have permitted her to have been a Masoness if he had not himself been a Mason.—CHAS. T.

WAS THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE A FREEMASON?

In answer to the above inquiry consult Dufay's Confessions de

Napoléon, (2 vols. Paris, 1816.) Avec une Gravure représentant l'Initiation de Napoleon par les Illuminés.—CHABOT.

SONG AGAINST THE CHEVALIERS DE LA PURE VERITE.

It is asserted that a Masonic grade was formed among the students of the University of Paris, which called itself the "Chevaliers de la pure Verite," and that in order to suppress the association, the Jesuits hit upon the following novel method of rendering the Lodge hateful. They parodied one of the songs of these knights, and distributed copies among all those of their fellow students who were not members of the society, with a strict injunction that on every non-member meeting with a member of the Lodge, they should sing one or two of the most ridiculous lines in the hearing of the latter. This plan was effective; for shortly after the Lodge was entirely abandoned. Can any one tell the querist what was the original song, or furnish a copy of the parody?—LEVALC.

INITIATION OF HIS SON BY A FOREIGN NOBLEMAN.

In most of the early books on our art there is printed "A speech of a foreign nobleman on receiving his own son into Masonry." Who was the nobleman alluded to?—SENEX.

BRO. JAMES M'CONOCHIE.

At the time Professor Robison published his Proofs of a Conspiracy against all the Religions and Governments of Europe, and sought to implicate the Masonic brotherhood, Bro. James M'Conochie delivered A Short Defence of British Free Masonry before the Lodges Nos. 20, 25, and 299, all of Liverpool. Who was Bro. M'Conochie, and what is remembered of him in Liverpool?—G. B.

MASONIC LODGES REGISTERED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

As there are various spurious Lodges now meeting in London, and the evil seems to be gaining ground, permit me to suggest, as a note, that there is an Act, 39 Geo. III., in which certain certificates are bound to be made to the clerk of the peace for every Lodge holding its meetings within the county, and that under that Act every Lodge, whether regular or irregular, is liable to be treated as a seditious society if it neglects its registration. All Masters of Lodges should look to this and see that they are properly registered, and then there would be no difficulty in suppressing those spurious Masons, who meet in holes and corners to the detriment of the Masonic character.—LEX MASONICA.

MASONS TURNED ACTORS.

In Hitchcock's Historical View of the Irish Stage (2 vols., 12mo., Dublin, 1788), vol. i., p. 56, is the following, which may be worth preserving in these columns:—

"Masonry, that cement of society, and most benevolent of all human institutions, that divine emanation of love which unites all mankind in the brotherly bands of affection, had, in this kingdom, through some unaccountable neglect, been suffered for many years to lie buried in the shade of obscurity, and its excellent precepts to remain untaught. About this time (1781), however, the clouds which overshadowed it passed away, and its refulgent brightness broke forth to cheer and illuminate the world; several Lodges which had lain dormant were revived, and several new ones constituted. As it needed only to be known to be admired, many of the first characters in the nation, on its revival, pressed forward and requested to be admitted members of this ancient and honourable society.

"Amongst many good effects arising from the renovation of this institution, the theatre experienced its share. Masons are, in general, warm friends of the drama, which they deem essential to the cause of virtue; and as charity is one of their leading principles, they constantly devote the profits arising from one night's performance at the theatre every season towards the relief of their distressed and indigent brethren. At this time their laudable zeal carried them so far as to make them bespeak the tragedy of Cato, then remarkably popular, the male characters of which were all performed by gentlemen Masons: the prices were advanced, and so crowded or brilliant an audience had never at any time been seen in this kingdom."

E. C. H.

DERIVATION OF THE WORD "COWAN."

No one seems to have replied to Bro. Matthew Cooke's note on the above, so I am inclined to offer you the accompanying from Dr. Oliver's dictionary as coming more within the pale of our Masonic interpretation. Under the head Cowan, Dr. Oliver says:—

"From the affair of Jephthah, an Ephraimite was termed a 'cowan,' or worthless fellow. In Egypt a 'cohen' was the title of a priest or prince, and a term of honour. Bryant, speaking of the harpies, says they were priests of the sun; and as 'cohen' was the name of a dog as well as a priest they are termed by Apollonius 'the dogs of Jove.' Now St. John cautions the Christian brethren that 'without are dogs' (κύνες), cowans or listeners; and St. Paul exhorts the Christians to 'beware of dogs, because they are evil workers.' Now κύνες, a dog, or evil worker, is the Masonic cowan. The above priests, or metaphorical dogs, were also called ceryonians, or cer-cowans, because they were lawless in their behaviour towards strangers. A writer of the Freemasons' Quarterly Review thus explains the word: 'I trace it,' says he, 'to the Greek verb ακούω, to hear or listen to, from which it is but parce detorta; and we have high authority for so importing words from one language to another.' Our illustrious brother, Sir Walter Scott, makes one of his characters in Rob Roy say: 'She does not value a lawsuit mair as a cowan, and ye may tell Mac Cullum More that Allan Iverach said aye.'" (CRAFTSMAN.

THE LECTURES IN RHYME.

I have seen a scrap of one of the lectures in rhyme, or more properly doggrel, and am told they were much used amongst the Masons of the past century. I should be glad to meet with one if any brother will point out where my curiosity can be gratified. That which I have seen runs thus:—

"An E.A. I presume you have been?
J. and B. I oft have seen.
A M.M. I was most rare
With diamond, ashlar, and the square.
If a M.M. you would be,
You must understand the rule of three,
And M.B. shall make you free,
And what you want in Masonry,
Shall in this Lodge be shown to thee.
Good Masonry I understand;
The keys of all Lodges are at my command."

INVESTIGATOR.

THE CHAPTER OF ARRAS AND CHARLES EDWARD STUART.

Information is wanted by the undersigned, as to the exact share the Chevalier Prince Charles Edward had in giving a warrant to the Chapitre d' Arras in 1747?—JACOBUS.

MASONIC ARBITRATION.

Among the old Charges there are some curious specimens of the manners and customs of our earlier brethren, one of which I will transcribe. In the last, headed "Finally," published in Smith's Freemasons' Pocket Companion, (8vo. Lond., 1736), p. 22; it concludes thus:—

"And if any of them do you injury, you must apply to your own or his Lodge; and from thence you may appeal to the Grand Lodge at the Quarterly Communication, and from thence to the annual Grand Lodge, as has been the ancient laudable conduct of our forefathers in every nation; never taking a legal course, but when the case cannot be otherwise decided, and patiently listening to the honest and friendly advice of Master and fellows, when they would prevent your going to law with strangers, or would excite you to put a speedy period to all law suits, that so you may mind the affair of Masonry with the more alacrity and success; but with respect to brothers or fellows at law, the Master and brethren should kindly offer their mediation, which ought to be thankfully submitted to by the contending brethren; and if that submission is impracticable, they must, however, carry on their process or law suit, without wrath and rancour (not in the common way) saying or doing nothing which may hinder brotherly love, and good offices to be renewed and continued; that all may see the benign influence of Masonry, as all true Masons have done from the beginning of the world, and will do to the end of time."

Can any one furnish a case in which Masonic arbitration has been adopted in conjunction with the above charge? If so, when, where, and who were the brethren, and its occasion?—JURISPRUDENCE.

SCOTTISH LADIES IN THE OLDEN TIME.—One of these Montrose ladies and a sister lived together; and in a very quiet way they were in the habit of giving little dinner parties, to which occasionally they invited their gentlemen friends. However, gentlemen were not always to be had; and on one occasion, when such a difficulty had occurred, they were talking over the matter with a friend. The one lady seemed to consider such an acquisition almost essential to the having a dinner at all. The other, who did not see the same necessity, quietly added, "But, indeed, our Jean thinks a man perfect salvation." There was occasionally a pawky semi-sarcastic humour in the replies of some of the ladies we speak of that was quite irresistible, of which I have from a friend a good illustration in an anecdote well known at the time. A late well-known member of the Scottish bar, when a youth, was somewhat of a dandy, and, I suppose, somewhat short and sharp in his temper. He was going to pay a visit in the country, and was making a great fuss about his preparing and the putting up his habiliments. His old aunt was much annoyed at all this bustle, and stopped him by the somewhat contemptuous question, "Whaur's this you're gaun, Robby, that ye mak sic a grand wark about your claes?" The young man lost temper, and pettishly replied, "I'm going to the devil." "Deed, Robby, then," was the quiet answer, "ye need na be aye nice, he'll just tak ye as ye are!"—Dean Ramsay.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, of the Most Ancient and Right Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, at its several Annual Communications from A.L. 5854 to 5858 inclusive.
Muscatine: Reprinted by Order of Grand Lodge, 1858.

An examination of the massive volume before us has impressed us with a powerful conviction of the indefatigable energy which is characteristic of our American brethren. Here we have printed for circulation among the various Lodges and private Masons of the state of Iowa, a handsomely printed volume of more than seven hundred pages, containing the entire proceedings of the annual communications of the Grand Lodge of Iowa for the last four years. To our English ideas there appears at first sight something of parade and fuss in thus recording every trivial speech and in multiplying copies of business correspondence which is frequently of a mere routine character; but that there are great advantages derivable from this and similar proceedings does not admit of a doubt. The American talent for amplification of minutiae is certainly strongly displayed, and among the registered speeches and letters of so many men of different degrees of ability there will be found of course a large amount of twaddle, or at least mediocrity, the poverty of which is counterbalanced however by the discovery here and there of a vein of originality, or a sententious utterance embalmed in the numerous orations which stud these pages; and which in several instances are worthy of preservation and hold out a brilliant example to brethren in responsible posts upon our side of the water.

English and Scottish brethren accustomed only to the labours of a quarterly communication of Grand Lodge (with perhaps the occasional addition to their labours of an adjournment), will perhaps be surprised to read of a Grand Lodge such as that of the state of Iowa meeting in regular session of four days at a time, commencing their labours at eight in the morning, and (with intervals twice in the day of an hour and two hours) continuing the work of Grand Lodge until ten at night. It is true that the time thus occupied is not all in what we should style "business"—many hours being passed in speechifying under the name of addresses and charges—while those objects which are generally with us supposed to be gained by an attendance at the Grand Stewards' Lodge, or at any well constituted and accurately working Lodge of Instruction are entered upon in the Grand Lodges over the water—possibly, we must say, pour passer le temps. Be that as it may, the fact of a body of the brethren meeting for so long a term in a country where commerce is supposed to be the primary object of existence, shows an amount of devotion and self denial (considering that time with Americans is emphatically money) which may be taken as a silent reproach by many brethren here who, with all their professions of love for their Order, can seldom spare time to display their skill as Craftsmen.

The business of each communication of course comprises the appointment of officers, and the auditing of accounts; but in addition to these well known duties, there is the reception of numerous voluminous reports upon all kinds of subjects from numerous committees, some of which would have been no great loss if they had never been read in the Grand Lodge, much less printed afterwards. Many orations, as we before observed, are interspersed in the course of the proceedings—for the man in the States who cannot make a speech, either of fustian or sense—is nobody, and takes rank accordingly; and a Grand Master who failed to give an opening address of at least an hour's duration would at once be considered as wanting in a necessary gift, and would speedily become unpopular with the brethren. Among the mass of these speeches, here and there matter of interest occurs; and a not unpleasant feature is the care taken to draw the attention to the merits and attainments of brethren who have passed from this scene of toil to rest in the Grand Lodge above. It is not necessary that the deceased brother should have been a member of the assembly addressed, though that might attract more immediate sympathy; but, happily for our Order, the universality of our brotherhood prevents any lack of brilliant examples, in our ranks, of virtue, perseverance, and scientific excellence; thus we find Bro. John F. Sanford, M.V.G.M., alluding to the death of the well known Dr. Kane, in the following terms:—

"Not so exclusively causing a sense of sorrow to the fraternity in this state, but equally so to the brotherhood throughout the world, of which we are a part, is the death of our distinguished brother, Doctor E. K.

Kane, who departed this life on the sixteenth of February last, in the city of Havana, Cuba. The mention of that name, which history has made immortal, and whose glory will grow brighter as time flows on towards the illimitable ocean of eternity, awakens feelings of responsibility which repress every attempt at eulogy. The disposition to pronounce encomiums must yield to sorrow, and, in fact, grief with us is the most besetting eulogy,—much less shall I attempt to pourtray the incidents of his life, which were so closely crowded into its brief period. This I leave to those whose genius, like his, will enable them to fix upon an accomplishment the impress of immortality, for of this kind must be the only labour which posterity will receive and cherish. But Doctor Kane was a brother; he was a Mason, who in all the achievements that go to make up the sum of his glory, illustrated the highest qualities which could adorn his profession as such. In this light it is appropriate for us to pause within these sacred walls and yield sad homage to his memory.

"In this expression of sorrow for the early death of a brother so distinguished in the annals of science and philanthropy, we but mingle our emotions with millions of men in all lands; for it was his high privilege to employ his genius and his energies for the good of the whole world. Whether in the polished and noble circles of Europe, amid the arid sands of Africa, under the burning sun of Asia, or battling with the elements in the icebound regions of America, that quality of his heart, and those capacities of mind which impelled him to sacrifice everything for the good of his fellow men, blazed forth in characters of living light, and now constitute for us a guide in the path of duty, and a great example in the pursuits of life.

"Brother Kane was a man of commanding intellect, of inflexible energy, and a true and industrious votary of science. He possessed the wisdom and virtue which make a great and enduring character, without offices, emoluments, or military renown. He lived in an age unparalleled in the annals of the world for splendour and brilliancy of its talents and worth—for the profoundness of its philosophy and the magnificence of its oratory—yet so long as the millions of orbs which deck the polar night with their glittering beams shall mingle their radiance with the eternal glaciers of the Polar sea, so long shall his name be known and honoured in the schools of science and philosophy.

"Doctor Kane honoured the institution of Masonry in his heart. He appreciated its tendency to perfect the Christian virtues in man, and loved it. He felt that it contributed to the preservation of the exalted rights and liberties of human nature, and cultivated it. He knew that it was preeminently an institution of friendship and social benevolence, and carried it with him to the ends of the earth.

"He exhibited the virtues and graces so beautifully typified by the numerous emblems of our Craft, and having marked his path with glory, he approached death's narrow isthmus with firm and dauntless step, and from thence his great and impetuous spirit, which had sought through life to discern the mysteries of God's universe, took a nobler flight."

An oration deserving of special note is one by our very worthy brother and esteemed contributor, Bro. Rob Morris, Grand Master of Kentucky, who last year enlightened the brethren of Iowa, in Grand Lodge assembled, with an address on the principles and history of the Order, fraught with information and sparkling with happy illustration and poetic diction, which well earned the compliments and votes of thanks which were tendered to the speaker on its conclusion.

A subject of great interest is the assembling of a National American Masonic Convention at Washington, in 1855, for the purpose of forming a General Grand Lodge of America or federative head. The Grand Lodges of the various states are, we are told, divided in opinion as to the necessity and expediency of this movement, the majority (among which is Iowa) being opposed to it. The opponents consider that this would be a work of supererogation, since unity of interest at present exists among the Grand Lodges of the United States, and mutual confidence prevails.

The Appendices to the volume contain a great deal of interesting information, and will repay examination. A code of Masonic law, generally adopted in America, is not without its value, though many of its provisions are we hope seldom called into action. We are sorry a few pages further on to stumble over a list of "expulsions" and "suspensions,"—the former numbering eighty-five and the latter more than a hundred delinquents. Surely there must be something rotten here, or there must have been an undue exercise of severity.

Among other subjects of interest to brethren we find lists of all the various conclaves, encampments, and consistories of the higher degrees in the United States. There is also a list of foreign Grand Lodges, with their rulers and secretaries; we trust the correctness of this return is not to be judged of by what we find under the head of "England," where one "Daniel Clarke" is given as the Grand Secretary—otherwise the list will be hardly of much use in correspondence.

Turning, however, from minor faults, we can fairly say that great praise is due to the secretaries and committees to whom the getting up of this elaborate book has been entrusted; a few years of such labour, and the foundation of a Masonic history of our times at least will have been securely laid—a little more compression, in mercy to the future historian, is to be recommended, indeed, lest he should be overwhelmed by the embarras de richesses which will await him.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

PROFESSOR MONIER WILLIAMS writes to the Times respecting the question as to the use of the Roman alphabet in India.—“Those of your readers who were interested in the discussion which took place in your paper not many months since on the subject of the introduction of the Roman alphabet into India, will be glad to hear that the movement is now making rapid progress in the Madras Presidency. Dr. Cardwell, the well known author of the ‘Dravidian Comparative Grammar,’ has become a complete convert to the feasibility of the scheme. An able pamphlet from his pen, in the form of a letter to Sir Charles Trevelyan, advocating the substitution of our simple system of writing for the complicated scratches which now block the path of knowledge in India, is at this moment exciting great interest among learned natives at Madras. The truth is that the Hindoos, especially the Tamil race, in the south, are a shrewd people, keenly alive to the advantage of adopting our European improvements and inventions. They are now beginning to perceive that the Roman character, as used by us, is adapted to the expression of all their languages, and that they can be no losers, and perhaps great gainers, by giving it a fair trial. It was thought by many that the educated Mahomedans would feel themselves aggrieved by the movement. That this is a mistaken idea is proved by a letter which has lately been addressed to the editor of a Madras paper by a learned Moslem, whose character (as I am assured by Sir Charles Trevelyan) ‘is highly respected at Madras.’”

A letter from Florence says:—“The veteran littérateur, Nicolo Tommaseo, a Venetian, who has resided in Turin for the last ten years, has now taken up his abode in this more genial Tuscan capital. We have here also Francesco Ferrara, an exile from Sicily, who was, since 1849, a professor of political economy at Turin, and is now to fill the same chair at Pisa, and to become one of the greatest ornaments of that time-honoured university. His colleague, Professor Mancini, a Neapolitan, is also here, and will deliver public lectures in one of the halls of the Riccardi Palace. The late emancipation of Tuscany thus brings some first-rate literary notabilities of the peninsula into this town, which may well now, more than ever, set up its claim to the proud appellation of the Athens of Italy.”

A Belgian, M. Telephore Lois, of Gembloux, has accepted the invitation of the Brazilian government to navigate the Amazon river from its source to its mouth. M. Lois has engaged sixty-four bold men to try the adventure with him, and has informed the Royal Belgian Academy that, should he perish in the undertaking, he had taken measures to have his manuscripts and collections delivered to the Academy.

The Scotsman says that the Rev. Dr. Eedale having invited a few of those interested in the proposed establishment of a college for educating the daughters of ministers of the church of Scotland, and the professors in the Scottish universities, to confer together in Edinburgh on Friday last, the meeting was attended by the Rev. Drs. Hunter, Grant, Robertson, Stevenson, and Nisbet; Professors Bennett and Crauford; the Rev. Messrs. Gray, Weir, Adamson, and Eedale (secretary). The prospects of the institution having been explained by Mr. Eedale, it was unanimously agreed that these were such as to justify a confident hope of success, and render it necessary that the draft of the proposed constitution of the college should be prepared; and that it would be of advantage that a brief statement of the nature and advantages of the scheme should be prepared in such a form as might, either by deputations or otherwise, be presented to presbyteries and the public. Drs. Grant, Robertson, and Bennett, and Mr. Eedale, were requested to prepare these documents before the 22nd November, in order that they may be submitted to the consideration of a meeting of subscribers, which Mr. Eedale was directed to intimate, will be held on that day in the offices of the church, at two o'clock, P.M. The institution, we are glad to say, is rapidly approaching completion.

A new paper, the English Mail, is being projected for circulation throughout Australia and New Zealand. To use its own words—“It is intended not only to supply colonists with a clear and condensed summary of all the general news of the month—foreign, commercial, and domestic—but also to be an ‘echo’ (as it were) of public opinion on all matters of interest relating to Australasia as daily expressed in the mother country. Such a paper, conducted on such principles, cannot fail to be a great boon to our great southern colonies.”

Mr. Weale, the scientific and mechanical publisher, has lately printed for private circulation, “Statistical Notices of Publications on the Constructive Arts,” which is intended by its compiler as a practical answer to statements which have been put forth by Englishmen as well as foreigners, that we in England lack enterprise in issuing and incurring the expense of those works essentially useful to an industrial and wealthy community.” It is a list of all the publications which have been published by Mr. Weale since he has been in business, with an estimate of the cost of producing each work, either real or approximate. Within a period of about thirty-six years this single publisher has issued more than four hundred separate works; besides several large series of rudimentary treatises and classical works. His three series of educational books cost, the first, £14,000; the second, £43,500; and the third, £8,500; whilst against twenty-five items selected out of the list, sums are set down amounting together to £67,185. Thus we find that upon twenty-eight literary enterprises, every one of which depended upon the patronage of a very exclusive class, no less a sum than £128,185 have been expended—a striking proof both of the interest felt in scientific subjects throughout this country, and of the spirit with which scientific enterprises are carried out. We hope that Mr. Weale’s example will be followed by more than one of his brethren. Information of this sort cannot but be of the greatest interest, not only to scientific men, but to bibliographers.

Mr. Vane St. John, a younger member of that family so well known as comprising several of the ablest writers of the day, has in the press a novel called “Undercurrents,” the book will be published by Mr. Tinsley, of the Strand.

The authorities of Berlin have opened the museum and picture galleries in the Lustgarten on the Sundays with the greatest success. Crowds gather in the Egyptian hall, admire the marble Apollos and Minervas, pore over the wondrous allegories of Kaulbach and Cornelius, without apparent injury to their morals, though very much it is rumoured to the loss of the wine cellars and dancing gardens. So, at least, says a friend in Berlin.

An illustrated bi-monthly miscellany, styled “All India,” is shortly to be published at Madras. It will be the size of the Saturday Review. It will contain editorials on Indian topics, an original nouvellette, a poet’s corner, the latest fashions, and literary, artistic, and scientific gossip. The fashions are to be decreed by a lady.

The first volume of the “Travels of Ladislaus Magyar in Southern Africa” has just left the press at Vienna. M. Magyar, a native of Maria Theresopol, who was educated in the imperial naval academy at Fiume, has resided at Bihe, in Southern Africa, since the year 1849, and has explored countries which are hardly known by name to the European world. The adventurous traveller married the daughter of the ruler over Bihe, and her slaves accompanied him in his first journeys into the interior. The late Dr. Charles Ritter, the geographer, accepted the dedication of Magyar’s work a few months before his death.

A report is current in Paris, that M. de Lamartine proposes to give a course of lectures in the Palais de l’Industrie, on literary subjects, something analogous to the cours which he has lately published, and which several of his friends thought at the time, and advised, should be given orally. The rate of admission is said to be fixed at five francs each person. When de Lamartine can invite the Parisians to hear him lecture on liberty, he may possibly fill the Palais de l’Industrie, but not at five francs a head even then. The chateau which is now being built for the poet is situated near that of Rossini, and close to the site of the late Ranelagh Gardens.

The Paris correspondent of the Telegraph remarks that if ever England gave France real cause for jealousy, it is on account of Shakspeare. His fame spreads in all directions with rapid strides. His genius is eminently opposed to French ideas of literary excellence; yet his name is daily in the mouths of the most eminent men here, and the translations of his works increase and multiply. It was but the other day that a son of Victor Hugo entered the field; now the son of M. Guizot is about to give his countrymen a version of the immortal dramas. M. Butat, of the Moniteur, is also engaged on the same subject, and his translation is to be illustrated by Gustave Doré; then, a reprint of M. La Roche’s translation is in the press, for the firm of Hachette and Co.; and, lastly, in the list of Shaksperian labours, M. Philoxène Boyer commences immediately his second annual course of studies of Shakspeare at the reunion of the learned societies.

ANCIENT SYMBOLISM ILLUSTRATED.—III.

BY BRO. ROB. MARTIN, M.D., PAST DEPUTY PROV. GRAND MASTER OF SUFFOLK; AND P.E. COM. OF KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, ETC.

THE MYSTIC TRIANGLE.

IN the first part of my treatise upon the mystic triangle, I commenced by showing that, immediately after the flood, the triangle was received by the first Phœnicians as a symbol allusive to that great event, and to the subsequent division of the world by Noah among his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japhet, of which three founders of nations it formed an appropriate emblem; that in the land of Ham (Africa) commenced the custom of paying divine honours to ancestors, a custom which has since become general throughout the globe. I shewed you that Ham was deified and worshipped by his descendants under the title of Jupiter; and that with reference to his third share of the world, the equilateral triangle was received not only as a symbol of the flood and its consequences, but of Ham individually. I explained that by the Phœnicians this emblem was carried into Greece, where, together with the ilpha, the circle, and many other symbols, it was appropriated to the use of alphabetical characters; that it (the triangle) was adopted as the letter delta, corresponding to our D; that it was used as the capital of, and frequently substituted for the word Διός, which being the genitive case of Ζεύς, (Jove or Jupiter) means "of, or belonging to the supreme God;" that the same word, Διός, equally represented by a triangle or delta, and employed as an adjective, was translated "Most High;" and thus the elevation of the symbol from the mere representative of the flood to that of the Deity himself was rendered easy.

Having, with this more important signification attached to it, traced the triangle from Phœnicia into Greece, I continued to follow it through the Isiac worship and ceremonial observances of Phrygia, where the three personifications and attributes of deity were invariably emblemized by figures implying a triad, among which were exhibited the Emblematical Hand, the Hippa Triceps of Corinth, the Hippa perfected by the tail of a fish; the Modius of Egypt, the lotus of the Nile, and many others. Having traversed Africa and Europe, we considered the tanga-tanga of the South Americans, thus tracing the mystic triangle and its sacred import throughout the two divisions of the world allotted to Ham and Japhet; nor were convincing proofs of its not having been confined to idolators, but of its existence as a symbol of divine signification among the ancient Jews of both these divisions, wanting to our subject.

The mystic import of the number three, as derived from the equilateral triangle, was also explained, and instances of its application quoted in every quarter of the globe as well as from every class of authors, sacred and profane. Nor were instances wanting to prove the application of the figure, both to geometrical and architectural purposes.

And now—having thus briefly referred to the heads of my former chapters—I proceed to trace the symbol through the remaining third division of the world, the land of the virtuous Shem, in whose seed was the promise, and from whom, though now sunk in gross idolatry, historians assert, first emanated the most valuable of our arts and sciences, proving that not only the light of day, but the light of knowledge, first dawned upon us from the east.

Escaped from the horrors of the general deluge, the immediate descendants of Noah in the line of Shem, who settled in Asia, inhabited the regions nearest the great range of Taurus in the Median mountains, and near the heights of Caucasus. They established their first schools in caverns, in opposition to the practice of the sons of Ham, who erected the tower of Babel, and in after days the pyramids of Egypt, with other temples to Belus, or the sun; but as this point will form a subject for future consideration, I will not in this place anticipate it.

From the heights of Caucasus the Shemites emigrated into Tartary, and with them successive colonies of priests, professing the religion of Buddha or Boodh, gradually dispersed themselves over Asia, throughout which country, although symbolical worship eventually effaced the pure patriarchal religion, traces are still left of their having once received the doctrine of the covenant. According to the Hindoos, with whose modification of it we are best acquainted, the supreme, ineffable God, called Brame, or "the Great One;" first produced Brahma the creator, from whom proceeded Vishnu the preserver, and Seeva the destroyer, who is also the regenerator; for according to the Indian philosophy, nothing is destroyed or annihilated, but only transmuted, so the destruction of one thing is only the regeneration of another. Now Brame, producing Brahma, Vishnu, and Seeva, has so strong a similitude to the patriarch Noah and his three sons, Shem, Ham and Japhet as to need no comment.

Postellus states, however, and so does the learned Doctor Hyde, that Brahma must have been Abraham; the former adds that the tribe of Brahmins were the descendants of that patriarch, by his wife Keturah, (Genesis xxv. 1), and were so called quasi "Abrahmanes." The Arabs—who are descended from Abraham, by Ishmael, and are jealous of the invaded honours of that great patriarch, their progenitor—contend that Brahma and Abraham are the same. If so, however, the trinity of Brahma, Vishnu, and Seeva, instead of being Ham, Shem, and Japheth, is the three with whom the covenant was made, Abraham Isaac, and Jacob. Leaving this to the learned, I see no difficulty in supposing that to the righteous Noah and to Shem, as in after days to Moses, Daniel, and Isaiah, a clear definition of the Holy Trinity—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—had been vouchsafed, and that all subsequent triads were mere symbols of that divine union.

The antiquity of the Hindoo sacred writings is extreme; Sir William Jones assigns the date of one thousand five hundred and eighty years before Christ to the Yajush Veda, one of the three sacred Vedas—which period is nine years prior to the birth of Moses, ninety before his departure from Egypt with the Israelites, and three thousand four hundred and twenty-one from the present time. In the caves of Elephanta, near Bombay, supposed to have been excavated shortly after the flood, the presiding deity was represented with three heads. On the opposite page is a drawing of it by the Rev. Mr. Maurice. In this cavern or temple there were also three original Vedas, or books of holy writ.

Their Geeta contains the following remarkable passage—confirmation strong of their worship of a Trinity in Unity, or Deity of triple attribute:—"They who serve even other gods (says this holy book) with a firm belief, in doing so, involuntarily worship me. I am He who partaketh of all worship. I am their reward. I am the ineffable, infinite, and eternal God." In the Elephanta caverns just noticed, according to Bryant, one thousand years before Plato, or one thousand four hundred and twenty-nine years before Christ, a trinity of gods was not only taught but symbolized by a triangle. The Indian history of the Mahabharat also alludes to and designates a plain triad of divinity.

The three personifications of the Deity—Brahma, Vishnu, and Seeva—are only one in essence, and were, as shown in the engraving, anciently worshipped collectively under the title Trimourti. Though the followers of the two latter, namely Vishnu and Seeva, now constitute two opposite and hostile sects, they nevertheless join on some occasions in the worship of the universal triad, expressed by the mystic word Om, or On, or more frequently by the trilateral word A U M.

With the Brahmins the number three has, as already shown in the other divisions of the world, a mystic import. They offer up their devotion three times a day; during their religious ablutions they immerse the body three times in the purifying wave. They wear next their skin the sacred zenmar or cord of three threads; this sacred cord can be woven by no profane hand, the holy Brahmin alone can twine the hollowed thread ; it is made with the utmost solemnity, and with mystic observances. In the Ayeen Akbery, the mode is thus described :—"Three threads are first twisted together, then they are folded into three, and twisted again, making it to consist of three times three ; this is folded again into three, but without more twisting, so that they are three distinct cords, each being one, but composed of three. Each end is fastened with a knot, and thus a figure is formed resembling the Jod of the Hebrews, their acknowledged symbol of God." Tavernier, in his account of the Benares pagoda, states that its deity is saluted by prostrating the body three times ; he is adorned with a triple crown, and bears in his hand a three forked sceptre. Throughout India (says Maurice) the sun, the moon, and Mercury, under the triune name of Buddha, for ever occur in the varied page of their mythology. But this I shall more fully elucidate when treating of our Masonic observances.

SEEVA, BRAHMA, VISHNU.

And now, having dwelt some time in Hindostan, we, like the sons of Shem, will emigrate, noticing, as we travel on, that according to Oliver Rudbeck, even in the remote islands of the Pacific Ocean, peopled from the Malay shores, the supreme deities are God the Father, God the Son, and the Bird or Spirit.

Dr. Parsons and the celebrated Van Strahlenburgh, after remarking how universal a veneration prevails through all northern Tartary for the sacred number three, mention a race of Tartars called Takuthi, who are idolators, and the most numerous people of Siberia ; they adore an invisible god, under three different denominations. Colonel Grant thus translates their vernacular tongue, descriptive of this deity and his attributes—first, the creator of all things ; secondly, the god of armies ; thirdly, the spirit of heavenly love proceeding from the other two.

The Japanese, from their constant intercourse with the Chinese, have adopted nearly the same religious creed. Their most ancient religion however is that of Sinto, who was the offspring of the sun, the founder of the ancient royal family, and of the empire. It has been already explained that the Egyptian Osiris or the sun, was the great patriarch Noah, and that Ham his son was the founder of his nation. The similarity of the Japanese Sinto, the offspring of the Sun, or Noah, is too striking to require elucidation ; were it otherwise, their numen triplex, or triple deity, would set the point at rest. We here perceive how closely it resembles the triple emblems which in my former remarks I submitted. This deity, possessing three heads, is furnished with four pairs of hands ; multiplicity of members was with the ancients of all nations a mode of expressing power or majesty, and has been copied by the poets—Homer gives to Briareus an hundred hands, and the watchful Argus has an hundred eyes.

NUMEN TRIPLEX JAPONICUM.

China, one of the countries apportioned to Shem, and in which we as Britons must at this time feel strong political interest, has within its vast territories three established religions. It has also a fabulous chronology similar to that of the Hindoos, and almost equally extravagant. The Tenkis, or ages which elapsed from Pan-kow, the first man, to their prophet Confucius, about five hundred years before the Christian era, are variously estimated from two hundred and seventy-six thousand years to ninety-six million nine hundred and sixty-one thousand seven hundred and forty years. There is this important distinction however between the Hindoos and the Chinese—that while the Hindoos admit these chronologies into their Vedas or sacred books and implicitly believe in them, the better class of Chinese treat their fabulous records not only with contempt as puerile and ridiculous, but with horror as profane. The first dawn of authentic history of China commences with the government of Foui two thousand nine hundred and fifty-three years before Christ, or four thousand seven hundred and ninety-five years from the present time.

"Religion," says Dr. Lardner, "in China differs from all other great kingdoms of Asia in this particular, that with all others it has been administered by a powerful priesthood, supported by the state, resting on a complicated creed, and surrounded by the pomp of superstitious rites; but in this country the national religion, or at least that professed by the learned and the great, which has always laboured to proscribe every other, is founded on simple principles, comprising scarcely anything worthy the name of idolatry." The belief of an almighty superintending power under the name of Tien, heaven, or of the great Shang-ti, or spirit, with sacrifices offered on certain high occasions, comprehend the circle of their orthodox faith and observance.

According to Du Halde, they have however in this Shang-ti, or unity of godhead, a distinct trinity which refers to a mysterious principle or power called Tay-ki, which operating through certain active and passive agents, called Yang and Kin, has given form to the various objects which compose the universe. The appointment of rites solemnized in honour of the great Shang-ti, and the instruction of the people in their duty to him, are mentioned among the highest claims of the first emperors to the gratitude of posterity.

Confucius, who founded his system upon the reverence for ancient times, became himself the chief authority upon which the Chinese sought to form their belief. Warmly animated by religious sentiments, he treated the subject in a lofty tone and inculcated the necessity for performing the ceremonies due to Tien or Shang-Ti, but unhappily not with a view to eternal but temporal advantage. He taught the all but idolatrous veneration for ancestors, in honour of whom were erected the halls of ancestors, round which Ellis says that tablets bearing their names are ranged, to whom prayers and sacrifices are offered.

The veneration of ancestors equally pervades all the religious sects of China. These sects have, however, ample precedent for deifying their illustrious progenitors.

Poetry.

THE EVENING WALK.*

BY THE REV. W. BARNES.

Come let's go down the grove to-night;
The moon is up, 'tis all as light
As day, the wind does blow enough
To shake the leaves, but 'tis not rough.
Come, Eetty dear, take for old time's sake
Your hooded cloak, that's on the pin,
And wrap up warm, and take my arm,
You'll find it better out than in.
Come, Eetty dear; come out o' door,
And take a sweetheart's walk once more.

How charming to our very souls,
Were once your evening maiden strolls,
The while the setting sunlight dyed
With red the beeches western side.
But long before your finger wore
The wedding ring that's now so thin;
And you did share a mother's care
To watch and call you early in.
Come, Eetty dear; come out o' door,
And take a sweetheart's walk once more.

And then again when you could slight
The clock a-stricken late at night,
The while the moon with rising rim
Did light the beeches' eastern limb,
When I had bound your finger round
With this gold ring that's now so thin,
And you had none but me alone
To take you late or early in.
Come, Eetty dear; come out o' door,
And take a sweetheart's walk once more.

* From a volume of poems in the Dorset dialect.

But often when the western side
Of trees did glow at even-tide,
Or when the later moon did light
The beeches' eastern boughs at night,
And in the grove where folk did rove,
The crumpled leaves did fly and spin,
You could not share the pleasure there.
Your work or children kept you in.
Come, Eetty dear; come out o' door,
And take a sweetheart's walk once more.

But cares that sunk your oval chin
Against your bosom's lily skin,
For all they made our life so black
Are now all lost behind our back,
So never mope, in midst of hope,
To slight our blessings would be sin.
Ha! ha! well done, now this is fun;
When you do like I'll bring you in.
Here, Eetty dear; here out o' door,
We'll take a sweetheart's walk once more.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE LATE MEETING AT ROSS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—I was surprised on seeing it announced in your Magazine of the 22nd inst., that at the banquet following the Prov. Grand Lodge of Herefordshire, at Ross, which was presided over by our Prov. Grand Master, "all the usual Masonic forms were observed except the important duty of keeping the Lodge closely tyed against intruders." As one who was present, I can assert that the usual Masonic forms were not observed, and very properly so, from the circumstance stated in your report, that "various individuals, not members of the Craft, were present." Whether for the sake of giving admittance to two or three strangers, Masonic banquets should be deprived of their time honoured observances, is a matter of opinion—I am of opinion they should not; the Prov. Grand Master of Herefordshire thinks otherwise.

Had your own reporter been present in the Prov. Grand Lodge, he might very properly have alluded to the helter skelter mode of admitting brethren, and to the reading of our ancient formularies by those who should have set a more perfect example.

I am, Sir and Brother, your obedient servant,

A FREEMASON.

Herefordshire, 28th Oct., 1859.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—In the Freemasons' Magazine of the 22nd inst., brought to my notice—under the head of "Boys School" you have given currency to a statement respecting myself. I feel bound to give it a positive denial, and do trust, that in common fairness, you will insert this in your next number, if only for the sake of the "good cause," which might be prejudiced by a statement if allowed to remain uncontradicted. You have the means of ascertaining the real truth through the medium of the House Committee, which brethren at a distance have not, and therefore need not be imposed upon by "strange communications."

"Audi alteram partem" is a maxim which, as editor, I feel sure you will uphold; and could I leave the establishment, I should have been glad to have called upon you.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

C. WOODWARD, Head Master.

Lordship Lodge, Wood Green, Tottenham,
October 28th, 1859.

THE ROYAL MASONIC BOYS SCHOOL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—In your Magazine of the 22nd ult., you state, to use your own expression, "We have received some strange communications relative to the continual disputes between the two masters; the absence of the head master for two or three days at a time; the want of system in the establishment, &c., which shall not escape our notice."

Now, upon a subject which not only affects the character of the head master—and that most seriously, but also may prove very detrimental to the interest of this noble institution, every caution should be taken before any such report as you have made be put in print.

Allow me to inform the brethren at large that the above statement is a base fabrication, and a more barefaced lie was never brought before the public with such boldness and audacity. After the strictest investigation into the matter, I find there is not one word of truth in any part of the report stated in the Magazine.

At the conclusion of your report you state that "the strange communications shall not escape your notice;" let me remark that where the interests of several children at the present time, and I trust of hundreds hereafter, are dependent, the least you could do would be to publish in full these strange communications, and not only the communications, but also the names of the parties; for surely no Mason is so base as to write such reports without letting his name be known. I ask the whole Masonic body if, in their opinion, the originator of such reports as you have received has fulfilled that part of his obligation wherein he promises to support his brother's character behind his back the same as in his presence.

But the matter does not rest here, for not only is a man's character threatened, and an injury done to the institution, but the very House Committee are charged with not doing their duty; for is not the want of system complained of, the regulation of which belongs to the House Committee—with regard to them, let their works clear their character from blame.

I need not say more upon this subject, as I hope and trust it may be taken up by the General Committee and the affair be properly investigated; and, if justice be done, you will report the result of the investigation in your Magazine, that all who have seen the base and false report may also see the justification of a noble Mason's character.

Finally, allow me to state that, at a time when the Magazine is much in want of support, the publication of such false accusations will not only prove detrimental to, but also be the ruin of the Freemasons' Magazine—which I am sure is a welcome visitor at many a Mason's house, so long as the subjects contained in its columns are written with a true Masonic spirit, and are not detrimental to Masonry in general, or the charitable institutions which are the pride and boast of English Freemasons.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours very fraternally,
JOSEPH BRAITHWAITE,
Lodge No. 225.

Nov. 1st, 1859.

[We are most happy to receive corrections of any of our statements—but we do not think there is any necessity for the strong language of Bro. Braithwaite. We alluded to the reports that were current regarding the school guardedly—with the view, not of injuring the institution, but of putting an end to those reports should they be incorrect, having at the same time determined, should no other brother do so, to bring the matter before the General Committee. With regard to Bro. Braithwaite's accusation that we have told a "barefaced lie" with "boldness and audacity," we can afford to treat it as it deserves. But when Bro. Braithwaite tells us, that "after the strictest investigation into the matter" he finds "there is not one word of truth in any part of the report stated in the Magazine," we are bound, though reluctantly, to inform Bro. Braithwaite that in his investigations he has evidently neglected seeking official evidence on the subject. The minutes of the House Committee, which we have inspected, prove that not only have there been differences between the masters, and that almost immediately on the appointment of the assistant, but that he has appealed to the House Committee to define his duties, considering that too much of the superintendence of the school was cast upon him by the head master. After hearing both sides of the question (the head master stating that Mr. Riley had voluntarily taken the superintendence of the boys, both in the playground and the school), it was resolved that the two masters should draw up a statement as to what they considered their respective duties, and submit it to the House Committee. We maintain that no school can flourish with differences between the masters, and it would be better that one or both of them should retire, than that the usefulness of the institution be injured. Bro. Braithwaite has thrown out a challenge which we willingly accept. We will, Providence permitting, meet him before the General Committee, and shall not be afraid to publish the result of any inquiry that may be entered into.—ED.]

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEM.

A PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE of Northumberland is summoned for the 14th November, to be holden at the Grey Horse Inn, Gateshead, under the presidency of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. John Fawcett. The banquet is to take place at the Queen's Head Inn.

METROPOLITAN.

NEPTUNE LODGE (No. 22).—At a regular Lodge held on Thursday, October 27th, at Radley's Hotel, New Bridge-street, there were present Bros. Robert Farran, W.M.; Boughey, S.W.; A. Pratt, J.W., and the rest of the officers. A ballot was taken for the admission into Masonry of Messrs. George Water Constable, James Henry Allingham, and George Wayland Taylor, which being unanimous in their favour, and the brethren being in attendance, they were duly initiated. Bro. Blake was raised to the third degree. There was a goodly attendance of P.Ms., including Bros. Batty, Partridge, Clarke, Wilcox, Bone, and Goodwin. At nine o'clock all business being ended, some thirty-six brethren partook of refreshments, and in social harmony finished the evening. Bros. How, Catling, and Hart were guests, and in responding to the toasts of "The Visitors," Bro. How adverted to the fact, that in each and every Master of the Neptune, the brethren had not only one who was a regular attendant, but who discharged the duties of his office with consummate ability; the Wardens, too, were always up to their work.

TEMPLE LODGE (No. 118).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, the 1st inst., at the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street. Bro. H. Hastelow, P.M. (in the absence of Bro. C. Aldridge, W.M.), presided. Bro. A. Day, S.W.; Bro. E. Farthing, J.W.; Bro. Beard, Sec. and S.D.; Bro. Southall, J.D.; and Bro. Barnett, I.G. The Lodge having been opened in due form, and the minutes read, Bros. Jarman and Lynn were introduced, and having given signs of their proficiency, were passed to the second degree. The Lodge having been opened in the third degree, Bros. Aston, Doggrell, Smith, and Goldsmidt were severally raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons, that solemn rite being performed by Bro. Hastelow in his usual impressive manner. This being the whole of the business, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren, amounting to upwards of forty, sat down to a well spread banquet. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and the evening was spent in a most agreeable manner, with some excellent singing by several of the brethren.

LODGE OF FAITH (No. 165).—At the recent meeting of this Lodge, held at Anderton's Hotel, Bro. Stewart was duly installed W.M. by Bro. Arnold, P.M., assisted by a large board of P.Ms, the ceremony being most impressively performed. The Worshipful Master then appointed and invested the officers for the ensuing year as follows:—Bros. Clothier, S.W.; W. Odell, jun., J.W.; Cobham, S.D.; Hart, J.D.; and Pope, I.G. Bro. Carter, P.M., who had been re-elected Treasurer at the previous meeting, was re-invested with the badge of office, and Bro. Anslow, P.M. received the responsible appointment of Secretary to the Lodge. Four gentlemen were initiated into the Order in a most masterly style, and a brother was raised to the third degree. At the conclusion of the business, the brethren, numbering upwards of fifty, adjourned to refreshment, and passed a most pleasant evening.

OLD CONCORD LODGE (No. 201).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern, and was as usual very numerous attended. Bro. C. Maney, W.M., presided, supported by Bros. Kennedy, Jackson, and Emmens, P.Ms.; Bros. Swainston, S.W.; and the Rev. J. Laughlin, J.W. The Lodge having been duly opened, and the minutes read, Bros. Tyrrell, Jacks, Alfred Bryant, and George Maddick, were passed to the second degree. Messrs. Joseph Chaplin, Alfred Duncan Meddick, Leopold Levisohn, William Filmer, and William Taylor, were then severally introduced, and in a most impressive manner initiated into the secrets and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. A letter was received from the Grand Lodge, cautioning the brethren not to receive amongst them any members of the spurious Lodges, established under the title of "The Reformed Masonic Order of Memphis, or Rite of the Grand Lodge of Philadelphia." On the motion of Bro. Emmens, it was agreed that the usual Masonic ball of the Lodge be held for the benefit of the Masonic charities. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned for refreshment. The W.M. in giving "The Queen," said it would be unnecessary for him to enlarge on her virtues, but in giving that toast he wished to associate with it the name of a member of the Craft, which was her son-in-law, Prince Frederick William of Prussia. This was drunk with the usual Masonic honours. "The M.W., the Earl of Zetland," and "The Right Hon. Lord Tamuro," were also given and honoured. The W.M. in giving "Their newly initiated brethren," said it must be to him, as W.M., a great pleasure that evening to receive five gentlemen whom he could now call brethren, who had selected the Old Concord Lodge as the one in which they were to be brought into the light of Freemasonry, and he trusted that they would never regret having done so. Although there was a numerous Lodge, there were plenty of opportunities afforded to enable the brethren at no distant period to occupy the position which he then had the honour to fill; but to enable them to do so they must be frequent in their attendance at Lodges of Instruction. He was highly gratified that they had selected this Lodge, where they would meet with that good feeling and brotherly love which should at all times characterize Freemasons. Bro. Alfred Meddick returned thanks on behalf of himself and brother initiates. "The Visitors" was given and responded to by Bros. Hughes and H. Thompson. The Worshipful Master in giving the health of Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin, J.W., said he had had the pleasure of introducing two clergymen into their Order, and he should be happy to see every Lodge have its Chaplain. He did not think if they went from the Archbishop of Canterbury down to the poorest curate they could find a more worthy man than their Bro. Laughlin. Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin said that their present W.M. was the sixth he had seen in the chair, and he could sincerely say that he never regretted having joined Freemasonry, for he admired the Order in general, and had the utmost esteem for that Lodge in particular. He joined Freemasonry from a favourable opinion, preconceived of the institution, having inherited that idea from his father, who told him that to be a good Mason he must be a good man, and since he had joined it he had spent in it many happy hours. In the Old Concord Lodge he had never seen anything but peace, and he could entirely join with the W.M. in thinking that the initiates had made a good selection in joining that Lodge. He could not sit down without addressing a word or two to those brethren who had newly joined them, and he agreed with their W.M. that he was glad to see ministers of religion join their Craft. Ignorant persons might speak against Freemasonry and attempt to excite a prejudice against it, calling it a secret society and not a religious body, but persons who knew nothing about such things had no right to talk about them. It was true they did not initiate them into any particular dogma of faith, either as Christians or Jews, but they admitted all who had a belief in the Supreme Being, and who also believed in future rewards and punishments, as given to them in the revelation contained in the volume of the Sacred Law. They admitted no one who did not believe in the Great and Supreme Power who was the source of all light, and through whom they were joined together by a bond of love and charity. There was a time when Freemasonry possessed all the light of religion which then existed—when Freemasons only lived in the love and unity of God, believing in rewards and punishments, but which doctrines it was dangerous to avow, and that led to their being bound together as a secret fraternity. Those times were happily past, and now they had the light spread, east, north, west, and south, and he hoped soon would be realized the wish of the G.A.O.T.U., that the world might become one great Masonic Lodge, bound together by the sacred ties of brotherly love, relief, and truth. Their object was to secure these advantages to worthy men, and worthy men alone; and he thought their newly initiated brethren would do well to take the advice of one of their visitors, to attend Lodges of Instruction for they could not be cognizant from what they heard in the Lodge-room of the science which they would hear explained to them in their beautiful sections and lectures; for there they would hear explained the divine revelation calculated to make them look at it with awe and wonder—which they never had done before. Whether they took the lights thrown upon them by the Old or New Testament, they all acknowledged and rejoiced in the work they were promoting. He hoped that they would be regular in their attendance at their Lodges, and be frequent visitors at Lodges of Instruction, by which they would be furthered in their progress in their Masonic duties. A Masonic Lodge was, in its making, the best form of government, the officers paying a willing obedience to the Master, who was also himself liable to another control. The Master of the Lodge could not be a despot, because his duties were limited by the Book of Constitutions. The more they advanced in peace, so would the happiness of the world be promoted; and unlike those who engaged in political controversy, which only set men together by the ears, their object was to make them subjects of God, of love, of peace, and order. Long might the Old Concord Lodge flourish, and be what it professed to be, a Lodge of concord and unity. The W.M. then gave the Past Masters of the Lodge, for which Bro. Emmens returned thanks, and said he would at all times be most happy to carry out the duties of the Lodge. Bro. Jackson, P.M., in giving the health of the W.M., said little eulogy of their W.M. was needed from him, as they all knew what he was as a Mason in the Lodge as well as a private friend, and in either case they knew as much about him as he did. As to the working of the Lodge, it must have met their approbation; and whether in or out of the Lodge, he was at all times ready to carry out their views and increase their comforts. The W.M. said if he carried out the duties of the Lodge to their satisfaction, it would in future times be a great comfort to him to know that he had merited the good opinion of the brethren of that Lodge. Since he had presided, he had endeavoured to keep up their name of "Concord," and he should always do so as long as the G.A.O.T.U. spared him to be a member of the Old Concord Lodge, and do all he could to promote its interests. The W.M. next gave "The Officers of the Lodge," to which Bro. Swainston responded. The pleasures of the evening were greatly enhanced by some excellent singing by Bros. Wooliams, Meddick, and Emmens.

MANCHESTER LODGE (No. 209).—At a meeting of this Lodge held at Bro. Clemow's, Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on Thursday, October 20th, Bro. Dr. John Hunt, W.M., presided, supported by Bro. Norman, P.M., as S.W.; Bro. Hopekirk, J.W.; Bros. Collard, Levinson, and Izod, P.Ms., and many other brethren. Bro. Underwood was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and Bro. Clemow was elected a joining member. At the conclusion of business the brethren adjourned to banquet, and the evening was spent in the utmost harmony.

INSTRUCTION.

JUBILEE LODGE (No. 85).—A meeting of this Lodge was held on Sunday evening, at Bro. Ireland's, the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane. About sixty brethren were present,—the occasion being the working of the fifteen sections. Bro. Anslow presided; Bro. Rogers acted as S.W., and Bro. Cottebrune as J.W. The sections were worked as follows:—First lecture—first section, Bros. Hoode; second, Hales; third, Rogers; fourth, Bertram; fifth, Ireland; sixth, Moor; seventh, J. R. Warren. Second lecture—first section, Bros. Handford; second, Druker; third, De Solla; fourth, Fisher; fifth, Rogers. Third lecture—first section, Bros. Cottebrune; second, Ireland; third, Brett. A vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Anslow for presiding and putting the questions, who expressed the high gratification he experienced in seeing so many brethren present that evening to aid him in working the lectures. Some new members were elected, and the Lodge adjourned at ten o'clock.

PROVINCIAL.

BERKSHIRE.

MAIDENHEAD.—St. John's Lodge (No. 1097).—The names of the initiates, at the opening meeting, given in our last number incorrectly, are Henry Willey Williams; George Bowyer; Henry Howard Hodges; William Skindle, jun.; William Harding Merritt, and Thomas Greenhalf as a serving brother.

DURHAM.

GATESHEAD.—Borough Lodge (No. 614).—A Lodge of emergency was held at the Grey Horse Inn, on Wednesday evening, October 26th, when the Lodge was opened by the W. Master, Bro. P. S. Gillies, assisted by Bro. Thomas Cummins, P.M., and the officers of the Lodge, in the presence of a good attendance of members. Mr. August Ferdinand Rosenberg, Mr. Ernst Biesterfeldt, and Mr. James Nelson, who were balloted for and approved at the last regular meeting, were admitted and initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry in ancient form by the W.M., in his usual impressive manner. The Lodge was visited by Bro. J. T. M. Harrison, P.M., who kindly presided at the harmonium, and Bro. Furst, of Lodge No. 586. The Lodge having been closed in harmony, the brethren adjourned to refreshment, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were proposed and responded to. The health of the newly initiated brethren was proposed, after which Bro. Dickson sang the "Entered Apprentice's Song." There was some good singing by Bros. Weyerang, Nelson, and others.

ESSEX.

ROMFORD.—Lodge of Hope and Unity (No. 259).—The regular meeting of this Lodge took place at the White Hart Inn, on Thursday, the 27th instant, at two o'clock P.M., the W.M., Bro. W. Pulteney Scott, P.S.G.D. presiding. The Lodge was opened in the three degrees, and Bros. Rev. W. Field, A.M., and E. S. Tudor, were raised to the sublime degree of M.M. Lodge was then resumed in the first degree, and two gentlemen ably initiated by the W.M. into Freemasonry. Bro. I. G. Matthew was then elected W.M. for the ensuing year, and Bro. Adlard, P.M., re-elected Treasurer. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned to dinner, which was presided over by the W.M., Bro. Scott, P.S.G.D.; Bro. A. U. Thiselton (Secretary to the Boys' School, and Secretary of the Lodge) occupying the vice-chair. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to, and the brethren separated at an early hour, after spending a very happy evening. Bro. T. P. Tate, Treasurer, No. 774, Hartlepool, and three other brethren, were visitors.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

DURSLEY.—St. John's Lodge (No. 1063).—The regular monthly meeting of the brethren of the above Lodge was held on Tuesday, Oct. 18, at the Old Bell Hotel, at which the Rev. G. A. M. Little, W.M. presided. The Lodge was opened in the three degrees, and Bros. W. Vizard and E. Gazard were raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The ceremony was performed by the Worshipful Master in a most impressive manner. The business being concluded, the Lodge was closed in harmony, and the brethren retired to refreshment, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Gloster Lodge (No. 152).—The brethren held their usual meeting at Freemasons' Hall, Bugle-street, on Thursday, the 13th of October. Bro. Abraham, P.M., filled the chair, and raised Bro.

Pearce and Weston to the sublime degree of Master Mason, in that impressive manner which reminded the brethren of the pleasure they so often experienced by the efficient working of Bro. Abraham during the two years of his Mastership. He was supported by Bro. Fletcher, W.M. of Lodge of Peace and Harmony, and Bro. J. R. Stebbing, W.M. of the Lodge of Twelve Brethren, and a numerous attendance of members of the Lodge, of Past Masters, and visiting brethren. Bro. Fletcher, the W.M. of the Lodge of Peace and Harmony, in a speech full of the most Masonic expressions, invited the Worshipful Master, officers, and brethren of the Royal Gloster Lodge to a banquet of the Lodge over which he presided, which invitation was accepted in language equally pleasing by the acting Worshipful Master. The Lodge was then closed, and a large number of brethren dined together. The usual toasts were given, and some very happy and Masonic responses made.

STAFFORDSHIRE.

STAFFORD.—Staffordshire Knot Lodge (No. 1,028).—This Lodge, though only founded in 1858, is making very satisfactory progress, having now twenty-seven members. The monthly meeting was held at the Grand Junction Railway Hotel, Stafford, on Tuesday, October 10th, Bro. Chas. Trubshaw, W.M. (P.M. No. 674, P. Prov. S.G.W. Staffordshire), presiding, supported by the whole of his officers and eight members of the Lodge, who were honoured by the presence of Bro. Charles Stuart Law, one of the Grand Stewards of Scotland, and also Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 48, of Edinburgh. After a successful and unanimous ballot had been taken for Messrs. G. C. Bancroft; J. Loxdale Warren, jun., and G. Gordon Warren, they were severally initiated into the mysteries and privileges of the Order. Bros. the Rev. G. F. Clark, and Capt. Salt, M.P., were then duly passed to the second degree. Bro. Thomas Aston was also raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The whole of these ceremonies were performed by the esteemed W.M., in his usual impressive and masterly manner. He expressed himself much pleased with the attention of the several candidates. The business of the Lodge being concluded, and the Lodge duly closed, the brethren retired to refreshment, and spent a happy evening.

ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

ROBERT BURNS CHAPTER (No. 25).—This Chapter held its first convocation for the season on Tuesday, the 25th, at the Freemasons' Tavern, Comp. Allen, Z.; Hewlett, H.; Harrison, J.; and the other officers being present. The business of the evening consisted in exalting Bros. Clements, P.M., No. 25; Nicholls, No. 25; Clark, No. 745. The Chapter was then closed, and the Companions afterwards dined together, Comp. Allen, M.E.Z., presiding. The customary toasts having been given, Comp. J. Savage, S.G.D., returned thanks, and, for himself and the other Grand Officers, thanked the Companions for the compliment that had been paid them. The M.E.Z. then proposed "The Visitors," including among them Comp. Dr. Nolan, who had so kindly honoured them with his presence. Comp. Dr. Nolan remarked that the visitors could not but feel honoured by the good wishes of the M.E.Z. He heartily congratulated the Chapter on the events of that day. For himself he would say it gave him great pleasure to be present, and, with the other visitors, could not but be pleased with the auspicious prospect which the Robert Burns Chapter presented, and gratified with the hospitality with which they been received, for which, through him, they returned their most grateful thanks. The M.E.Z. then proposed "The newly exalted Companions." Comp. Clements, for himself and Comps. Nicholls and Clark, thanked them for the hearty response with which their healths had been drunk; he could but very inadequately express the pleasure he experienced at having taken another step in Freemasonry. He felt grateful for that brotherly feeling in admitting them to a participation in the privileges of their exalted degree, and their most earnest endeavours would be stimulated to deserve the honour of being admitted amongst them by a constant desire to preserve that good name in the Chapter which they had hitherto maintained in the Craft, whether as Companions of the white or Companions of the red. After the other usual routine toasts the Companions separated.

UNITED PILGRIMS CHAPTER (No. 745).—A convocation of this Chapter was held at the Manor House, Walworth, on the 20th ult. The ceremonies of installing the Principals, and exalting a candidate, were performed by Comp. T. Alex. Adams, P.Z., of Chapter No. 206, in his usual able, impressive, and solemn manner. Comp. C. Ireland (W.M. of No. 205) was installed First Principal; Comp. D. R. Farmer (W.M. No. 25), Second Principal; and J. R. Warren, Third Principal; a committee of Companions was appointed to select and report a suitable place of meeting, circumstances having arisen to necessitate the removal of the Chapter.

SCOTLAND.

GRANGEMOUTH.

PROV. GRAND LODGE OF STIRLINGSHIRE.

TUESDAY, the 18th inst., having been appointed by Colonel Sir Alexander Gibson Maitland, Prov. G.M. of Stirlingshire, for the consecration of the Zetland Lodge, Grangemouth, No. 391, and the installation of its office bearers, the Prov. Grand Lodge assembled there on that day. In the absence of the Prov. Grand Master, the R.W.D. Prov. G.M. Bro. Dyson, presided, supported among others by Bros. J. Peebles, Prov. S.W.; R. Rutherford, J.W.; D. Stewart, Treasurer; Wm. McLeay, Secretary; Rev. Andrew R. Bonar, G. Chaplain; Peter Gardner, S.D.; J. Murphie, J.D.; Alexander McEwan, Sword Bearer; Stenbridge Rae, Grand Organist; W. M. Bryce, Grand Marshal; Thomas Robertson, Grand Tyler. Among the acting Prov. Grand Stewards, we observed Bros. Charles Stuart Law, Charles Donaldson, J. Murr, A. Robertson, and J. W. Storrer.

The Prov. Grand Lodge being opened in due form by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, the consecration ceremony was ably performed by the Rev. Prov. Grand Chaplain; the Grand Organist conducting the chanting of the various anthems in a manner we have seldom heard equalled.

At the conclusion of the consecration, the following office bearers were installed by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master:—Bros. Simpson, W.M.; Lang, D.M.; Denovan, S.M.; Watson, S.W.; Allan, J.W.; Walker, Treas.; Clarke, Sec.; Hodge, S.D.; Dalrymple, J.D.; Mitchell, I.G.; Clarke, Tyler. These brethren being invested with the various insignia of their respective offices by Bro. Chas. Stuart Law, W.M., No. 48, who delivered an appropriate charge to each, the Prov. Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form, the brethren proceeding to the church, where divine service was conducted by the Rev. Andrew Bonar.

At five P.M. the brethren returned to the hall, where dinner was prepared for about one hundred and fifty, presided over by Bro. Dyson, R.W.M. of the "Ancient," supported by Bro. Simpson, the newly installed Master of the Lodge; the Rev. Bro. Bonar, acting G. Chaplain; Bro. Law, G. Steward of the Grand Lodge of Scotland; Bro. Downing Bruce, R.W.M. of the St. John's Lodge, Alloa. Bro. J. Peebles, of the Ancient, occupied the chair of the S.W.; and Bro. Rutherford, of the Ancient, that of the S.W. After the usual loyal toasts had been gone through,

The chairman craved as the next toast, the "Grand Lodge of England;" and the way which he alluded to the M.W.G.M. the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, as a nobleman and a brother Mason, found its way to the hearts of all the assembled brethren; the "Grand Lodge of Ireland," coupled with the name of the Duke of Leinster, came next in rotation, followed by the "Grand Lodge of Scotland and the Duke of Athole."

The next toast was given from the chairman, the "Army and Navy," and which was very ably replied to by Bro. Downing Bruce, who, after a very enthusiastic allusion to the daring deeds of our soldiers in the Crimea, the noble and successful struggle they had in India, and the recent operations in China, wound up in a very quiet and telling manner how the spread of Masonry had been accomplished throughout the world through the influence of the British army.

Bro. Law then rose to propose the health of the Prov. G.M., Col. Sir Alexander Gibson Maitland, Bart., and after passing several eulogiums upon him as a man and as a soldier, he congratulated the brethren of the province in having as their head one of the best Masons in Scotland, whose military duties at Aldershot alone prevented his presiding on the present occasion. (The toast was received with immense cheering.)

The chairman afterwards gave what may be considered the toast of the evening—"The Prosperity of the Lodge Zetland," and enlarged on the duties that devolved on a Freemason, not only in the Lodge, but also in his outward walk and conversation through life; and in continuation said, "it must have been very gratifying to the brethren assembled to witness the inauguration of a Lodge which promises to be one of the most successful in the district. My brother officers and myself have derived the greatest pleasure from assisting at the ceremony of the consecration of this Lodge—a Lodge which was founded in the purest spirit of Freemasonry, and which offers every prospect of being conducted on these high and benevolent principles, which may be denominated the corner stone of the great temple of Freemasonry. I am sure I only speak the sentiments of the brethren assembled when I say that we wish the Zetland Lodge every prosperity; may its officers be animated with the love of 'light,' that they may be able to dispense information to the brethren, and to convince them that all science and art are but lines that radiate to the Great Architect of the universe; and the gratification he would feel in meeting with them in the Lodge Ancient, No. 30, either as a body, a deputation, or individually, he hoped to be able to express at an early day." The toast was received with great applause.

Bro. Denovan, S.M., in reply, said—Right Worshipful Sir and Brethren—I feel proud of the honour that has fallen to my lot in receiving the commands of our Right Worshipful Master to reply to this toast, and I beg to thank you and the brethren most cordially for the kind manner in which success to the Zetland was given and responded to. It had long been felt that there ought to be a Lodge of Freemasons in Grangemouth. Numerous communications were held by the brethren, who, being few in number, for a long time the obstacles to such an institution were deemed insurmountable; but, though few in number, the brethren were very enthusiastic, and animated by the fact that Masonry is in possession of "light," a "light" whose universal diffusion over the world is rapidly hastening the time predicted by our immortal bard, when—

"Man to man the world o'er Shall brothers be and a' that."

I say inspired by these feelings, and encouraged by the most liberal offers of financial support from several gentlemen who had not at that time seen the "light," but who, I am now proud to say, have joined the brotherhood, and are an ornament to the Craft. We petitioned the Grand Lodge and obtained our charter in February last. I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without bearing testimony to the cordial assistance we received from the neighbouring Lodges Nos. 17 and 69, who not only signed our petition, but, as I understand, instructed their proxies to give it their unqualified support at the quarterly meeting of Grand Lodge. You, Right Worshipful Sir, have perfected the elevation of our temple by the admirable manner in which you have performed the ceremony of the consecration. I trust that the many virtuous precepts that you have so impressively inculcated will long be remembered and acted upon by the officers and brethren of the Zetland Lodge. I have only to add that, in the name of our Lodge, I again beg to return you our best thanks for your presence on this auspicious and memorable occasion, and I assure you that, whenever opportunity presents, our brethren will be happy to renew the bond of brotherhood either in your Lodge or that of our own.

Bro. Denovan said—I beg to propose the health of the W. Master, who has presided with so much ability, and that in a manner both courteous and dignified, and who, from his skill and intimate acquaintance with Freemasonry, has dispensed so much "light" and information among the Craft. This is a day that our Lodge will mark with a white stone, a day that will always be remembered amongst the proudest of our annals. The grace and dignity with which Bro. Dyson has presided at the ceremony of the consecration, has given the greatest satisfaction to the brethren of our Lodge, and I may add to the brethren of all the Lodges present. Being but a young Lodge, we trust we shall often have the benefit of his admirable instructions; and we are assured from the courteous manner with which he has presided this evening, that we will meet with a brotherly reception whenever we shall have occasion to ask for further instructions.

The R.W.M., Bro. Dyson, in a neatly worded speech, feelingly replied, and expressed his thanks for the truly Masonic manner in which his health had been proposed and responded to by the brethren, and his gratification to be assured that they were satisfied with the manner in which he had performed his duties as representative of the Grand Lodge.

The chairman gave the different Lodges, according to seniority, who had honoured the Lodge with their presence, and which were in succession very ably replied to by their R.W. Masters. Bro. Law, in reply to No. 48, was peculiarly happy in his remarks, and by the witty and humorous allusions in his address, contributed a great deal to the hilarity of the brethren.

The R.W. Master shortly afterwards rose, and said the honour of proposing the next toast devolved on him, and requested the brethren to fill up a bumper to the health of the "Visiting Brethren," who, although not forming deputations, were there as representatives of their Lodges, and begged to couple it with the name of Bro. G. F. Adamson, of the Lodge St. Andrew.

Bro. Adamson having returned thanks, the health of the "Ladies" was drunk, and the Prov. Grand Master then gave the last toast of the evening, "Happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again," which closed the proceedings of a day, the like of which the youngest inhabitant in Grangemouth may never live to see again.

The arduous duties of Grand Marshal and Director of Ceremonies, were performed by Bro. W. M. Bryce, Grand Tyler of Grand Lodge, in a manner which elicited the approbation of every brother present.

INDIA.

LAHORE.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A MASONIC HALL AT ANARKULLEE.

THIS ceremony took place on the 6th of September, and was a great success; the weather is described as delightful, and through the exertions of the managing committee accommodation was plentifully provided for European ladies and gentlemen on the one side, and for the native chieftains and notable townsmen of Lahore on the other. The station band was in attendance and enlivened the scene by playing some very pretty selections and airs while the company were assembling. If the brethren of the Lodge took pains to render the ceremony a pleasing one, they were certainly well rewarded by the vast concourse of spectators who graced it with their presence. Among the native chiefs, who were about one hundred and fifty in number, we observed the son of Nawab Imam-ood-deen, Dewan Ajoodia Pershad, Sirdar Jyemul Singh, Sirdar Nehal Singh, Bhase Charunjeet Singh, Bhase Nundgopal, the Nawabs of Mundote and Mooltan, Ali Reza Khan, Ahmed Ali Khan, &c., &c.

A form of divine service was prepared for the occasion by the Prov. G. Chaplain, printed both in English and Oordoo, and distributed freely to all.

Punctually at the hour which had been fixed for the commencement of the ceremony, the brethren of the Lodge, accompanied by their Chaplain, occupied the space which had been reserved for the purpose between the long lines of seats under the Shumeenah and in front of the stone, which was now swinging from its blocks in mid air.

The Senior Warden, Bro. W. E. Ball, addressed the Worshipful Master as follows:—

"Right Worshipful Brother Sandeman.—On behalf of the Masons of Lahore, I request you to commence this building, which is to be dedicated to the purposes of Masonry at Lahore. The brethren feel that to no one could this task more appropriately fall than to yourself, not only on account of your high Masonic rank, but because you have already founded the Lodge in their hearts. They therefore hope you will complete the good work by presiding at the material establishment of the temple—which they trust may long stand as a memento of its founder and as a token of their Masonic faith.

The Right Worshipful Master replied:—"Brother Senior Warden, I have pleasure in acceding to your request, I feel it a high privilege to be thus permitted to commence a building, which will I trust form a lasting monument of Masonic zeal and enterprise at this station. Before, however, proceeding with the ceremony, it behoves us to seek the blessing of the Great Architect of the universe upon our proceedings, for except "He build the house, we shall but labour in vain."

The Prov. G. Chaplain, the Rev. C. Sloggett, then commenced the ceremony in the following terms, the responses being made by the brethren:—

"Our help is in the name of the Lord,

"Who hath made heaven and earth."

The earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is: the compass of the world, and they that travel therein.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall rise up in his holy place?

Even he that hath clean hands and a pure heart: and that hath not lifted up his mind unto vanity, nor sworn to deceive his neighbour.

He shall receive the blessing from the Lord: and righteousness from the God of his salvation.

The Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

O Lord God of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. So mote it be.

This prayer followed:—"Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings with thy most gracious favour, and further us with thy continual help, that in all our works begun, continued, and ended in thee, we may glorify thy holy name; and, finally, by thy mercy obtain everlasting life. O eternal Lord God, our only help and strength, without whose blessing no work of human device can prosper, be ready, we beseech thee, to bless this work in which we are now joined: give to all engaged in promoting it, and to all who may hereafter assemble within the completed fabric of its building, a spirit of obedience and of love to thee, that through the language and by the acts of outward symbols, they may be able continually to lift up their hearts to thee, and studiously to avoid whatever may be inconsistent with their Christian feelings and profession; that so they may be able to 'hope and persevere' to the end in the way of eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—So mote it be."

The plans of the intended building were then delivered to the R.W. Master, who spoke as follows:—

"Brethren, it is a gratifying thing to us to be here assembled to commence a building which is to be dedicated solely to the purposes of Masonry, that mysterious system which has stood from the foundation of the world, and which rests on the secure basis of brotherly love, relief and truth, and the practice of every social and moral virtue. It is gratifying to think that so small a body of men should have so willingly and cheerfully come forward to aid in this good work, and it is a sure earnest, under God's blessing, of the future welfare and prosperity of the Craft at this station. And yet we have performed no more than a duty, for with the knowledge that it is irregular, indeed wrong to hold a Masonic Lodge in any place that is, at other times, used for secular purposes, it was our duty to make an effort to raise for ourselves a suitable building in which we might uninterruptedly, hold our mysterious and exemplary meetings.

"From the plan of the building, which has been so tastefully designed by our excellent Bro. Stone, it appears that it will comprise, besides the Masonic Temple, every convenience that is absolutely necessary for the comfort of the brethren, and even for the entertainment of and hospitality towards strangers, while by an admirable arrangement on the part of our brother architect, additional rooms can be added, without injuring the symmetrical appearance of the whole, and with very little additional expense. The principal features in the building, as it will at first stand, are—a capacious Lodge room or temple, with side rooms attached to it for the observance of certain forms which I am not at liberty now to explain, and a large banquetting hall with necessary appurtenances: also a very handsome entrance and portico. As funds will permit, it is hoped that the building will be enlarged by the addition of rooms for the accommodation of a serving brother (to live on the premises), and perhaps of a reading room and other desiderata. I hope that, from the foundation laid to-day, we may, ere long, see a superstructure perfect in its parts and creditable to its builders."

At the conclusion of this address the architect presented the R.W. Master with a handsome silver trowel, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to R.W. Bro. H. D. Sandeman on the occasion of laying the first stone of Lodge Hope and Perseverance, No. 1,084, of which Lodge he was the founder and first Master; Lahore, September 6th, 1859."

with which some mortar having been spread, the station band played "God save the Queen," and the stone was lowered slowly into its bed. Certain Masonic forms in the proving of the stone were then gone through, the plumb rule, level, square, &c., being handed to the Master by the proper officers in succession.

The foundation stone, a beautiful block of white marble, had been exquisitely prepared after a design drawn by the architect of the building. The face of the stone shows an ornamental panel in relief bearing the following inscription in large capital letters:—"This stone was laid by R.W. Bro. Hugh D. Sandeman, W.M. of Lodge Hope and Perseverance, No. 1,084, in the presence of the Wardens and brethren of the Lodge and of the residents of Anarkulle, the 6th September, 1859."

On the stone being proved to be correct, the devotional service was resumed by the Chaplain, and at the conclusion of the ceremony the R.W. Master having placed some coins on the stone for the benefit of the workmen, addressed the native chiefs in the vernacular tongue to the following import.

"Chieftains,—As you have attended our ceremony, it is necessary that I should address to you a few words regarding our Order. What has now been performed is a matter of great importance to us, though not apparently one of any great interest in the world, and yet it is one of interest to the world, for our first principles are brotherly love, relief and truth, and the practise of every social and moral virtue which benefit the world at large. As Masonry ever flourishes in times of peace, and suffers by war and discord, so do we fervently pray to the one great God who made all mankind, for the time when the lion and the lamb shall drink at the same well, and the whole world shall be linked together in one vast and happy brotherhood. The natives of India usually designate our Craft as 'Jadoo,' or witchcraft; although we do not exercise any supernatural power, yet a society in which from the earliest times, men of all nations and creeds have been able together to praise and worship one God, without offending against the tenets of their particular religions, is indeed wonderful. Our ceremony is now concluded, and I assure you that we feel it a great honour that you should have taken the trouble to grace it with your attendance; in my own name therefore, and on the part of my brother Masons, I wish you long life and prosperity."

At the conclusion of this ceremony, the brethren, with a select number of their guests, repaired to an excellent dinner, which had been provided for fifty persons, including the Rev. Bros. Sloggett (of Anarkulle), and Murray (of Meean Meer), Davies, secretary to government; Temple, commissioner; Egerton and Cooper, deputy commissioners of Lahore and Umritsur; Majors Baker, Medley, and Hyde; Captains McAndrew and Shuttleworth; Aitchison and Thornton, C.S.; Ommanney, assistant commissioner; Stone, Furnival, Robinson, and several others.

The chair was filled by R.W. Bro. Sandeman, who was supported by Bro. W. E. Ball, S.W.; Bro. R. E. Egerton, J.W.; and Bro. H. Herbert, Secretary.

After the healths of the Queen and the M.W. Grand Master, the R.W. Master gave the health of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Hoff, a gentleman who, without neglecting the duties of his own station, had worked with great energy and zeal for the interests of Masonry in this province. His zeal had been rewarded by the Grand Lodge of England, and he had a yet greater reward in being affectionately regarded by every Freemason in Bengal who was under his rule.

The Right Worshipful Master then proposed "Our able Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Robert Montgomery." This gentleman had raised himself solely by his own energies to the proud position of ruler of a province; he had been rewarded by his Queen, and received the public thanks of the first nation in the world. It was difficult to know whether to admire most his cool and intrepid bearing in times of war and danger, or his great administrative talent in times of peace. He was beloved by all, and they were fortunate in having such a ruler at the helm.

"The Army and Navy," "The health of Bro. Temple (Commissioner of Lahore)," and "The Guests" followed.

The Rev. Bro. C. Sloggett rose and asked all present to join him in a bumper to the health of the R.W. Master in the chair. Bro. Sandeman had exerted himself in many ways for the general good of the station, and he was well completing his career in the Punjab by having laid the foundation stone of the Lodge which he had been the means of founding. Bro. Sandeman was about shortly to leave them for a higher appointment at Madras, and he hoped that he would long remember Lahore, as a place where his loss would be felt, and where he had made many friends and not a single enemy.

The Right Worshipful Master said that he was indeed gratified with the kind and hearty manner in which this toast had been both given and received. In his efforts to foster Masonry at Lahore, he had been well rewarded by having excited so much zeal in the minds of the brethren, which was well proved by the fact of their having, though so few in number, amassed sufficient funds to erect for themselves a Masonic Hall. He should certainly ever look back to his residence at Lahore with most measurable feelings, as a place where he had been treated with so much kindly consideration, and where he had made so many good and sincere friends.

Some other toasts followed, and the proceedings were brought to a close by a health to "All poor and distressed Masons," when the Right Worshipful Master left the chair and the company rapidly broke up.

AMERICA.

CHICAGO.

GENERAL GRAND LODGE OF THE UNITED STATES.

In the month of September last, a convention of delegates from various Grand Lodges met and adopted a plan for a North American Masonic Congress, to meet triennially, for the consideration of questions immediately connected with Ancient Craft Masonry, without powers, and having no permanent officers but a secretary.

The following is the result of their labours:—

"In order to form a closer union and increase of harmony among the Grand Lodges of America—to secure and cultivate fraternal relations with the Grand Lodges of the world—to extend our knowledge of the history, work, symbolism, philosophy and jurisprudence of Craft Masonry—in order that questions of law jurisdiction may be equitably and permanently adjusted—that all agitated questions of general Masonic interest may be considered and determined for the general benefit of Masonry, we propose the following articles of association:—

"Art. 1. The Grand Lodges of North America do hereby form a North American Masonic Congress.

"Art. 2. This congress shall consist of three representatives from each Grand Lodge in North America assenting thereto. Representatives to be selected as each of the Grand Lodges may severally determine.

"Art. 3. The officers shall be a President, and a senior and junior Vice-President and Secretary, who shall be elected at each session, and, except the Secretary, the official duties of each shall cease with the close of the session.

"Art. 4. There shall also be elected at each session three permanent committees, each consisting of five members.

"1st. Committee of international correspondence.

"2nd. Committee of work, symbolism, and philosophy.

"3rd. Committee of jurisprudence, embracing Masonic history and antiquities.

"The Chairmen of the several committees shall constitute an Executive Committee, to supervise and direct the correspondence, and in connection with the Secretary, prepare reports and present business for the next meeting.

"The meetings of congress shall be called to order by the Secretary, or, in his absence, by the Chairman of committees in the order named.

"Art. 5. Meetings shall be held triennially, on the Friday preceding the second Tuesday of September, and in such place as the congress may from time to time determine.

"Art. 6. The representatives of the majority of the Grand Lodges, associated, shall be necessary to form a quorum.

"Art. 7. The congress may take cognizance of all cases of difference which may occur between two or more Grand Lodges. Provided the parties shall mutually submit the said difference to its decision.

"Art. 8. The congress may consult and advise on questions of Masonic law and jurisprudence, to the end that a uniformity of law and usage may be accomplished; but it shall not assume the exercise of any power in the enforcement of its decrees, except such as may result from the mere force of opinion.

"Art. 9. It shall be in order at any session of this congress to provide for the reading of papers or essays, or the delivery of discourses upon Masonic subjects.

"Art. 10. The incidental expenses of each congress, necessary to the transaction of its business, shall be borne by the Grand Lodges, parties thereto, being equally divided among them.

"Art. 11. The ratification of these articles by five Grand Lodges shall be sufficient for the organization of the congress.

"Art. 12. No change in these articles shall be made without the consent of three-fourths of the Grand Lodges, parties thereto.

"Art. 13. Any Grand Lodge may become a member of the congress by adopting these articles of associations.

"Art. 14. Should any Grand Lodge desire to withdraw from this congress it can do so; but it is expected, as a matter of Masonic courtesy that it will adopt a resolution to that effect, in open Grand Lodge, and give notice thereof to the Secretary of the congress.

"Supplementary Articles.—When five Grand Lodges shall have ratified these articles pursuant to the provisions of Article 2, and shall have notified a Secretary, to be hereafter elected, of such decision, he shall thereupon issue a circular to the several Grand Lodges specified in Article 2, inviting them to affiliate with this body, and to assemble in congress, at the city of —, on the Friday preceding the second Tuesday of September, 1862.

"In testimony whereof, we, the delegates to this congress, have hereunto set our hands to the foregoing articles at Chicago, in the State of Illinois, this 14th day of September, 1859, subject to the ratification thereof by our respective Grand Lodges. All of which is respectfully submitted."

The brethren of Chicago gave the delegates a very elegant banquet, and through Grand Commander Blarney, tendered them a warm western welcome. Appropriate responses were made by Lewis, Pike, Mackey, and Tucker.

The next meeting is at Memphis, Tennessee.

THE BATTLE MONUMENT, LAKE ERIE.

The corner stone of this monument, to commemorate Perry's glorious victory in Lake Erie, was laid with Masonic ceremonies at Gibraltar Island, on the 10th September, by the Grand Master of Ohio, the M.W. Bro. Stokes.

The stone was deposited at 3.45 P.M., and the grand officers having each applied the appropriate instrument—the square, the level, and the plumb—the Grand Master declared it to be “well formed, true, and trusty.”

GRAND CHAPTER OF NEW JERSEY.

The annual convocation of the above M.E. body was held at Trenton, on Wednesday, September 7th. The following new Chapters were warranted: Bearley, No. 6; Union, No. 7; Mount Vernon, No. 8; and Harmony No. 9.

The following are the officers elect for the ensuing year:—Comps. William W. Goodwin, Grand High Priest, Burlington; Thomas J. M. E. Corson, Deputy Grand High Priest, Trenton; Leopold Lithauer, Grand King, Jersey City; Daniel A. Holmes, Grand Scribe, Eatontown; William H. Jeffries, Grand Treasurer, Salem; John Wolverton, Grand Secretary, Trenton; Edward Connor, Grand Captain of the Host, Burlington; A. G. Gilkinson, Grand Principal Sojourner, Jersey City; S. L. Johnson, Grand Royal Arch Captain, New Brunswick.

OFFICERS OF THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Elected Thursday Afternoon, September 15th, 1859.

B. B. French, Grand Master, Washington, D.C.; David Goodlow, Deputy Grand Master, Kentucky; Winslow Lewis, G. Generalissimo, Massachusetts; J. V. B. Delany, G. Captain General, Illinois; Charles Marsh, G. Senior Warden, California; A. T. C. Pierson, G. Junior Warden, Minnesota; John W. Simons, G. Treasurer, New York; Samuel G. Risk, G. Recorder, Louisiana.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR IN AMERICA.

GRAND COMMANDERY OF NEW YORK.—This M. E. body met at Utica on the 27th and on the 28th. Elected Charles G. Judd, of Penn Yan, G. Com.; F. Chamberlain, D.G.C.; Z. Priest, of Utica, G. Gen.; J. T. Wilbur, of Hornellsville, G.C.Gen.; Salem Town, of Aurora, G. Prel.; W. F. Holmes, Rochester, S.G.W.; E. P. Breed, New York, J.G.W.; J. S. Perry, Troy, G. Treas.; R. Macoy, New York, G. Rec.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—There is little to report this week of the proceedings at Windsor. The Queen continues in good health and, with her children, walks and rides daily in the environs of the castle. The principal visitors have been the Dukes of Kent, the Duke of Cambridge, the French ambassador, and Mme. de Persigny and Mr. Sydney Herbert. The Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia, according to present arrangements, will arrive at Windsor Castle, on a visit to Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, this day. The infant Prince Frederick William Victor Albert will not accompany his illustrious parents, it being the law in Prussia that the heir apparent shall not leave the country without the permission of the Diet.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor of the French, with the imperial court, were to have left Paris for Compiègne on Tuesday or Wednesday. Well informed Paris correspondents say that, notwithstanding all the threats and cajolery of the imperial government, it is manifest that France has lost the goodwill of Russia, excited the hatred and distrust of Germany and England, and forfeited the powerful support of the church, her only compensation being that she has obtained a close alliance with Austria, which may be regarded rather as an incumbrance than anything else. It is asserted that the joint expedition of France and Spain against Morocco was organised at Madrid during the visit of Marshal Pelissier; and he alludes to a report that a secret treaty was concluded at the same time between the two countries, pledging France to support Spain in the enterprise at all hazards. The Patric asserts that the congress will take place, the adhesion of the British cabinet being no longer doubtful, and adds, that even the absence of England would not have prevented the meeting. It is pleasant to observe that, in presence of the virulent abuse which is poured out upon England by the French press, one writer—a statesman remarkable for his talents and high character—has dared to take up his pen in our defence in a masterly article in the Courrier du Dimanche, upon the various questions now occupying the public mind, and in which he protests against the insane denunciations against us. The Moniteur contains the following notice: The Correspondant has received a first warning for an article by the Count de Montalembert, entitled, “The Pope Pius IX. and France in 1849 and 1859.” The Moniteur states the reasons of this avertissement, viz., that in condemning the war carried on by France, in Italy, as having caused the annihilation of the temporal authority of the Pope, the article has quite distorted the results of the war, and calumniated the policy of the emperor. It is also insulting to the nations allied with France, and the comparison which the writer of the article designedly and offensively makes between the names of Machiavelli and those of Napoleon III. and the King of Sardinia, is detrimental to that respect which is due to the emperor. The Ami de la Religion has also received a first warning for having published the above article of the Correspondant in its columns. The Moniteur contains an article which first gives an account of the attacks of the Moroccans on the French territory during the months of August and September last. The article then proceeds thus:—“The daring and the culpable behaviour of those tribes deserved a severe chastisement. The whole western portion of Algeria was continually in an agitated state. The safety of the tribes under our rule was everywhere seriously threatened; it became necessary to act with energy, and therefore an expedition was decided upon.” The following telegraphic message received by government shows that this expedition has begun its work with determination:—“General Martimprey to the General Randon, minister of war.—After an engagement of three hours the 2nd regiment of Zouaves fixed its victorious eagle on the defile Ain-Tacouralt, where the whole expeditionary corps bivouac. We have no serious losses.” Beni Snassen, having received strong reinforcements, commenced hostilities on the 17th ult., by a well sustained musketeering fire, but he did not dare to approach our position.—By the Madrid journals we are informed that the news of the war with Morocco had been received with the utmost joy throughout Spain. On the other hand, we are told that the Emperor of Morocco, irritated by the energetic attitude of Spain, had withdrawn his propositions. The Europeans were rapidly retiring from Tangiers. Marshal O'Donnell was to take his departure from Madrid on Tuesday. Offensive operations against Morocco will commence on the 7th or 8th of November. General Zabala will take the command in chief of the army until the arrival of the Count de Lucena. Generals Olano, Taron, and Quesada, left on Saturday for Algiers. A semi-official communiqué in the Paris papers runs thus:—“The statement that France has supplied Spain with resources for operating against Morocco is not correct. France does not co-operate with Spain in her operations against Morocco. In spite of this communiqué, letters from well-informed persons state most positively, that M. Mon has made a request for materiel of war, to which Marshal Randon, Minister of War, has given his consent. The official denial given to the statement that France was to find materiel of war for Spain in her enterprise against Morocco to be quite in keeping with the Moniteur's denials of military and naval preparations, being made before the breaking out of the war in Italy. A circular has been addressed to the diplomatic corps, informing the foreign powers that Tangiers, Tetuan, and Larrache have been declared in a state of blockade by the Spanish Government.—General Garibaldi has been summoned to an interview with Victor Emmanuel. This meeting has some connection, it is said, with the letter of the Emperor to the King, and although it has given rise to much conjecture, care will be taken, no doubt, to prevent the real nature of it from transpiring. It is stated that a considerable increase will be made in the budget of the Marine Department. It is asserted that M. Ratazzi will take ad interim, the portfolio of the minister of justice. The Piedmontese Gazette publishes the new Provincial Communal Act. The object of this act is to create a system of centralization, in the political machinery of the government, and to decentralize in matters of administration. In all parts of the state the communal franchise will be increased. The new kingdom will be divided into seventeen provinces. A governor will be placed at the head of each province, with the Government Council. The governor will represent the executive power. The same official journal publishes another, regulating the terms upon which the new loan is to be effected, namely, by authorising the sale of four millions of Rente by public subscription, to bear interest from the 1st of January, 1860. The issue price will shortly be fixed. We have also received information that the National Bank will resume cash payments on presentation of its bank notes on the 1st of November. The people of Lombardy assert that they have many reasons to be dissatisfied with the position assigned to them by the treaty of Villafranca, which, it is asserted, must be carried out to the letter. The Opinione, of Turin, an organ of the Sardinian government, declares that the cabinet of Turin has not adhered to the arrangement made at Zurich, and adds that in case of an attack on Romagna Piedmont will take the field in her cause.—According to advices received from Sicily the insurrection there has not ceased. The insurgents have withdrawn into the mountains. The brothers Mantichi are at the head of the movement. Reinforcements of troops are being continually despatched by the Neapolitan government to quell the insurrection. Numerous arrests have taken place at Palermo, Catania, and Messina. General Filangieri has again resumed the direction of the ministry of war. The full strength of the army of the Abruzzi has been made up and has been provisioned. The said army retains its character of a corps of observation. Secret agents maintain the agitation. A general feeling of uneasiness pervades the public mind, caused by various kinds of apprehensions.—From Zurich we learn that a conference took place there on Saturday, at which all the plenipotentiaries were present. Count Karolyi arrived on Friday evening. It is stated that the congress will soon commence its labours.—The New Prussian Gazette of the 29th ult., says that the project for reorganising the Prussian army was signed by the Prince Regent on the previous day. Great preparations are making in different parts of Germany to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of Schiller's birthday, the 10th of November.—Advices from Constantinople to the 26th ult. state that the new Grand Vizier insists, in the first place, that the culprits in the late conspiracy shall not be executed. To this the Sultan has readily given his consent. The sympathies of the population continue to be in favour of the accused. The Grand Vizier demands complete reforms, and wishes that the chief religious dignitaries should contribute largely to the public taxes, and that the Sultan should sacrifice one-third of his own revenue. The Grand Vizier having met with resistance to these measures among his colleagues, a modification of the ministry will, therefore, take place. It is stated that Ethena Pacha will succeed Fuad Pacha. The chief of the general staff, Riza Pacha, has been banished.

—The staff of General O'Donnell was to leave Madrid about the 3rd or 5th inst. Preparations are being actively made in every branch of the War Department for the expedition against Morocco.—The Moniteur of Wednesday contains the following:—The Duke of Padua retires from the post of Minister of the Interior on account of ill health, and the Emperor has named M. Billault as his successor. Their Imperial Majesties arrived last evening at Compiegne, and were received with much cheering by the people. The Dresden Journal asserts that England will send a representative to the approaching congress without making any condition. The same journal says the congress will in all probability meet at Paris.—According to the Espero, of Turin, the Sardinian Government had resolved on suspending for an indefinite period the opening of the subscription to the loan. It appears that the people of Lombardy are little satisfied with the way in which they are treated by the Sardinian Government. The letter of the Emperor to Victor Emmanuel has created great dissatisfaction.—The Journal du Havre states the French intend establishing a naval station in the Red Sea, in imitation of the English.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The grand conservative banquet given to the Earl of Derby, Mr. Disraeli, and the members of the late ministry, took place at Liverpool on Saturday. The banquet was preceded by the presentation of an address to the Earl of Derby from the conservatives of Liverpool. The scene was a splendid one. The galleries of the banquetting room were filled with ladies, dressed in the colours of the conservative party in the borough, the ladies of Liverpool being the genuine "Lancashire witches" so renowned for beauty. The Earl of Derby made a very eloquent address, which we recommend to the perusal of our readers. It, as well as those of Mr. Disraeli, Lord Malmesbury, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Pakington, and others, will be found fully reported in the various journals. The meeting went off with great spirit, and will tend to assure the conservatives of the three kingdoms, by the evidence it affords of the union and cohesion among their leaders, as well as of the patriotism and sincerity by which they are animated.

—At a meeting of archdeacons of both provinces, held on the 18th instant, a declaration was unanimously adopted in favour of maintaining the law of church rates. The document bears the signatures of sixty-one archdeacons. A petition was also adopted at the same meeting, for a similar object, in the event of a bill being brought into either house of parliament for the abolition of church rates.—The low temperature during the past week caused a rise in the mortality of the metropolis. The total number of deaths was 1,048, being an increase of 128 over the number in the previous week, but yet less by 77 than the average rate. The number of births was 1,645. The Registrar General's quarterly return presents a favourable view of the state of the country; it shows that marriages are more frequent, the rate of mortality diminishing, and that the population is increasing at an unusual rate.—The City Commissioners of Sewers sat this week at Guildhall when Mr. Redman, C.E., laid before the court a model of an iron wheel-way, to be used where the street traffic was heavy. Mr. Redman entered at length into the various advantages that would accrue from the adoption of his plan. After he had answered a number of questions the matter was referred to the general purposes committee.—On Monday a commission of lunacy was opened to try the question of the sanity of the Rev. Stephen Lewis Woodcock, B.A. The proceedings took place before Mr. Barlow, the master in lunacy, and a jury, at the Horns Tavern, Kennington. A great number of witnesses were examined, every one of whom concurred in opinion that the unfortunate gentleman had long been of unsound mind, and his conduct during the proceedings confirmed their opinion. The inquiry was adjourned on Monday evening, and resumed on Tuesday, when Mr. Huddleston summed up on behalf of the petitioner, calling on the jury to find a verdict that Mr. Woodcock was in such a state of mind as to be unable to take care of himself or his property; after which Mr. Serjeant Shree (for Mr. Woodcock) denied in toto that he was of unsound mind, and ascribed his conduct on the previous day to his having drunk some wine. The jury returned a verdict, however, that he was of unsound mind, and unable to manage his affairs.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, the choice of assignees was determined in the case of Bishop and Farbridge, of Cornhill, East India merchants, whose liabilities are stated at about £16,000; their assets being at present unascertained.—It was announced that a dividend of 5s. in the pound would shortly be distributed among the creditors of the London and Birmingham Hardware Company, and that the official assignee has sufficient assets in hand to pay a further dividend of 2s. or 2s. 6d. in the pound.—The assignees of the estate of Samuel and Thomas Alcock, china and earthenware manufacturers, of Hatton Garden, Middlesex, and Burslem, in the county of Stafford, have determined to work up the stock into saleable assortments, and execute orders.—J. Batchelor, a chemist and manure merchant, of Mark Lane, City, passed his final examination upon accounts showing a total indebtedness of £19,728, and liabilities £15,840. It is expected, however, that the latter will not be proved against the estate. The assets are returned at about £9,700.—The adjourned sitting held for the last examination of Samuel Treacher, licensed victualler, of Fenchurch Street, was again adjourned, the assignees requiring further time for the investigation of the accounts.—An adjourned summons in a case connected with the builders' strike was gone into before Mr. Corrie, at Clerkenwell Police Court, on Monday and Tuesday. The defendant was William Pereham, and the prosecutor Charles Robjohn, in the service of Messrs. Piper and Sons, builders. From the evidence adduced it would seem that a number of workmen had been sent for and procured from the country on the part of the Messrs. Piper; and, according to the charge, the defendant Pereham had, by intimidation and other means, endeavoured to prevent the men from following their occupation. Mr. Roberts, of Manchester, called several witnesses for the defence, the drift of whose evidence was to show that the men from the country had been induced to accept of the offers of employment in London through misrepresentation. The case being completed for both sides, and it having been intimated to the magistrate that an appeal would be made against a conviction, Mr. Corrie ordered the defendant to enter into recognizances for his appearance at the ensuing quarter sessions.—Through recent disclosures connected with the administration of the land tax and income tax departments of Shoreditch and the adjacent district it has been considered necessary to suspend some of the officials, and to institute a strict investigation into the accounts. The irregularities, it is asserted, have extended over a number of years.—One of the most extraordinary cases of brutality we have ever heard of is, a drunken quarrel terminated by a man pouring boiling water into his victim's ears, and then scorching the poor fellow at the fire! The miscreant is in custody.

—A diabolical attempt at murder has been frustrated. The intended victim was Mr. Isaiah Greaves, master brickmaker, whose life was aimed at through an infernal machine planned by some scoundrel. Mr. Greaves's crime was this—"He had refused to discharge a nonsociety man, and employ a unionist at the request of a brickmakers' society!"—The Middlesex general sessions for November commenced on Tuesday morning at the Guildhall, Westminster, before the assistant and deputy assistant judges, and several magistrates. There were fifty-four prisoners for trial. The assistant judge having charged the grand jury, the cases were proceeded with. Simeon Drury, a milkman, was indicted for embezzling several sums of money from his master. The prisoner attempted to show that he had duly handed over the money to his master. The prosecutor said, although he knew that the prisoner had been previously convicted of several robberies, he took him into his service to give him a chance. He was found guilty, and the judge said he had repaid the kindness shown to him by theft, base ingratitude, and a false statement that he had paid over the money. The sentence of three years' penal servitude was passed upon him.—Alfred Swayne was convicted of systematically robbing his employer, George Bubb, bookseller, of money to the amount of £100, and was sentenced to twelve months' hard labour.—A respectable woman applied to the magistrate at Lambeth police court for his advice. Some time ago she had been accosted by a gentleman in the street—she knew he was a gentleman by his appearance—his English was broken and his voice musical, for he was an Italian and a musician. He wished to settle in England, and he wished to marry a wife; his income was good, and his prospects were better. Would she have him? Preliminaries arranged—the affair was soon consummated. Shortly after, the recent bridegroom disappears, and with him the confiding wife's gold watch and chain, several trunks of her clothes, and as much of her money as could be got hold of. Subsequent inquiry reveals that the successful suitor is not an Italian, but an Englishman—not a musician, but a journeyman tailor—and married.—The Bishop of London has nominated a commission, consisting of the venerable Archdeacon Hale, the Rev. Michael Gibbs, M.A., prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, and vicar of Christ Church, Newgate-street; the Rev. Frederick George Blomfield, M.A., rector of St. Andrew, Undershaft; Mr. R. Wigram Crawford, M.P.; and Alderman Cubitt, M.P., to investigate, under the "Union of Contiguous Benefices Act," 18th and 19th Vict., cap. 127, the propriety of uniting several benefices in the city of London, strong representations having been made by the authorities that four or five of these parishes might be formed into one, with one parish church, which would meet all their requirements. The parishes into whose condition the commissioners will proceed to inquire are those of St. Benet, Gracechurch-street, and St. Leonard, Eastcheap, of which the Rev. Charles Mackenzie, prebendary of St. Paul's, is rector; they are of the annual value of about £300, and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, and the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, alternately. The rectories of St. Margaret Pattens, and St. Gabriel, Fenchurch-street, of which the Rev. Henry James Newbury, M.A., is rector; they are of the annual value of about £250, and are in the gift of the Lord Chancellor and the corporation of London alternately. The rectory of St. Dionis, Backchurch, of which the Rev. W. H. Lyall, M.A., is rector; it is worth about £450 a year, and is in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. From returns made to the Bishop of London, it appears that the largest attendance at all these churches combined on any one Sunday was three hundred and sixty-eight, and that only one has a house fit for the residence of the minister. In some other parishes, relative to which a report will shortly be presented to the bishop, and upon which a bill will probably be founded for presentation to parliament early next session, the largest attendance on any Sunday during the last few years, has been fifty, forty-eight, forty, thirty, twenty-five, ten. In some of these parishes there is scarcely any resident population on Sundays.—A melancholy occurrence took place on Tuesday on the Mersey, which has resulted in the loss of six or seven lives. A flat, while delivering coals alongside the Hungarian (screw steamer) was capsized, and out of a crew of about twelve only six were rescued. There was a heavy sea running at the time, and the poor fellows were rapidly carried down the river. A boat went in pursuit, and fortunately picked up six of the men, who were taken immediately ashore, and on restoratives being applied they all recovered. The flat has been carried out to sea.—It appears from an official return issued by the Central Association of Master Builders, that the number of men who had resumed work up to Saturday, October 29th, under the declaration, was 12,638, and under the shop rule about 2709.—On Wednesday, a meeting was held in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, the Lord Mayor presiding, for the purpose of establishing an institution for the relief of persons afflicted with paralysis. The Lord Mayor, after mentioning the manner in which the proposition originated, entered into some details, and announced that large donations had been offered to carry out the design. Lord Raynham, M.P., moved a resolution to the effect that as there was no institution of such a nature in the metropolis, the subject called for public sympathy and support. The resolution was carried, and at the close of the proceedings the Lord Mayor said the subscriptions and donations received and promised amounted to £800.—The Newmarket Farmers' Club held their first anniversary meeting at Newmarket, on Tuesday evening, the Duke of Rutland in the chair, supported by many noblemen, members of parliament, and the local clergy. Several speeches were delivered in favour of agricultural societies, and the company separated after passing a very agreeable meeting.—The Board of Trade has issued the official report on the loss of the Express which took place on the coast of Jersey, in September last. Mr. Mabb who was in charge of the vessel, is acquitted of wilfully taking the passage which led to the disaster; the conduct of the crew and engineers is highly commended; but the circumstances attending the drowning of two of the passengers were purposely not taken into consideration. One of the magistrates dissented from the report; and, in consequence, the Board of Trade do not intend to take any steps in the matter. For the same reason the certificate of Mr. Mabb was returned to him.—Wednesday was the first day of Michaelmas term, and the judicial business of the country was resumed after the long vacation, in the various equity and common law courts. The Lord Chancellor entertained the judges and the principal members of the bar at breakfast, at Stratheden House. According to usual custom the Lord Mayor elect was presented to the Lord Chancellor for the approval of her Majesty, which was accorded in flattering terms.—At the Middlesex Sessions, William Raymond and John Jones were indicted for breaking into the shop of John Jones Vaughan, and stealing gold rings, valued at £464, and Jones was also charged with another robbery of jewellery. Three witnesses established the charges, and the prisoners were each sentenced to ten years' penal servitude, both having had former convictions proved against them. One of the witnesses, named Jessie Berard, wife of a surgeon, was recalled by the judge, who commented on the praiseworthy and courageous manner in which she had acted in the matter, and ordered her a sum of £5, understanding that she was in circumstances that would render it acceptable.—Louisa Ward was convicted of picking the pocket of a lady in an omnibus, on which the learned judge remarked that the way in which ladies carried their money in the front of their dresses was a temptation to persons dishonestly disposed. A curious circumstance was mentioned by the judge with regard to Ward; he had picked her up in Fleet street, when she had been knocked down by a horse fifteen years ago.—The funds were good at the opening of the market yesterday, and Consols for money and account temporarily reached 96½. On a rumour, which was not generally believed, that the Bank directors were about to raise the rate of discount, a reaction ensued, and final price was 96½ to ½. The demand for money was well supported out of doors, and transactions were generally concluded at the Bank minimum of 2½ per cent. There were no bullion operations, but the inquiry from the Continent continues of a nature to absorb any immediate arrivals from America and Australia. The steamer Aeon, from Brazil, has arrived at Lisbon, en route for Southampton, with £38,000.

INDIA, CHINA, AND COLONIES.—By the overland mail we have advices from Calcutta to the 22nd ult, the principal event recorded being the monster meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, which was held at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 12th ult. Ten years have elapsed since a similar gathering took place, and that was to resist the infamous Black Act; and as the opposition to that measure was crowned with success, so we venture to predict that the feeling now manifested will produce the desired effect in India and in England. To the requisition to the sheriff convening the meeting were attached one hundred and twenty signatures, comprising barristers, merchants, and traders—Europeans and natives; and had it been deemed necessary the number could have been quadrupled. The meeting was attended by thousands of all classes and creeds, and the business occupied nearly three hours. Three petitions were adopted, which are now in course of signature—two to the Houses of Parliament, and one to the Legislative Council. The prayer of the former is—That the general taxation of India may be "placed on broad and sound principles," and that, instead of the "system of exceptional taxation on the industrial classes, and on trades and professions, and of any general system for putting commerce and trades and professions under fiscal licence," there may be substituted "the establishment of an equitable income and property tax in conjunction with such other taxes as may from time to time be expedient." The petition to the Legislative Council prays for the income tax in lieu of one on trades and professions, and for annual statements of income and expenditure. We expect that when the Legislative Council meets in November the bill for licensing trades and professions will quietly be laid aside, and one for an income tax brought forward. If no time be lost in thus acceding to the wishes of the petitioners it may obviate the necessity of discussing the point in parliament, as before the houses meet the Income Tax Bill may pass through its stages. The fugitive rebels in the Nepal Terai and in Bundelkund are to be hunted down as soon as the cold weather commences, for which purpose flying columns will be organised. The Nana and Begum are still in the Nepal territories, and the Maharanee of Lahore, who fled from the Chunar Fort to Catmandoo many years ago—where she was allowed to remain, as she could do no harm, and her pension was saved—has joined the latter. According to a recent communication from Bundelkund, Feroze Shah, with a small party of his men, was at a place twenty-one miles south-west of Shahgurbh. These rebels are said to be making for a tract of jungly country to the west of Jubbulpore, in hopes of being able eventually to reach the Nepal Hills. The embarkation of the European "mutineers" is going on. Grievous complaints are made of the conduct of some of the men quartered at Chinsurah, the inhabitants of which place will hail with delight the departure of the last batch.—The news from China is not very important; its chief interest attaches to the visit of the American minister to Peking. Mr. Ward, the American minister, when at Peking did not see the emperor, yet the American treaty was ratified. The Russians are said to be established in the Chinese capital.—The steamer La Plata has arrived at Southampton with the West India mails. There is no political news. The health of the islands is reported as favourable.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews of the state of trade in the manufacturing districts show that, notwithstanding less activity has been apparent, the position of business generally seems to be satisfactory. At Birmingham the operations are stated to be on a very fair scale in the leading branches, and at Manchester the market has assumed a firmer tone, in consequence of the announcement of the frost in America, followed by the disturbances among the slave population. Purchases for Germany have slightly increased, and some orders have also been secured for India and the Mediterranean. In Nottingham transactions have diminished in the lace trade, and in the hosiery branches there is only partial activity; the principal transactions concluded have been on behalf of American firms. At Huddersfield and Halifax greater animation has prevailed, and arrangements have already been concluded for some descriptions of spring goods. In Leeds little or no alteration has taken place in the woollen trade; the quotations are decidedly firm, while with regard to flax the demand has partially improved, quotations being altogether supported with steadiness. The accounts from the Irish linen markets are not unsatisfactory, employment being active, and the general rates of transactions favourable.—Bro. Augustus Fabian has been appointed Manager of the Brighton Discount Company, which has been established to afford accommodation to a large class of tradesmen who are debarred from the usual advantages of discounting bills received in the course of trade, from the fact of their being unable to keep a large banking account. Deposits are also received by this company at equitable rates of interest.—The advices received at Lloyd's from the wreck of the Royal Charter state that the divers have not been at present successful in obtaining the gold, a considerable portion of which, it is now feared, will not be recovered. The rates of insurance have not been generally advanced, but it is asserted that an exceptional risk for a small amount was accepted at forty guineas per cent. The number of casualties on the books was large, but they were mostly in connection with foreign parts.—Increased activity prevailed in the port of London during the past week. The number of vessels announced inwards at the custom house amounted to 169; there were ten from Ireland, and 364 colliers. The entries outwards were 112, and those cleared 120, besides 14 in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been on an extensive scale, and comprise 14 vessels, viz.—4 to Port Philip, of 3,189 tons 4 to Sydney, of 3,258 tons; 1 to Adelaide, of 471 tons; 2 to Van Diemen's Land, of 919 tons; 2 to New Zealand, of 730 tons; 1 to Portland Bay, of 351 tons; making a total of 14 vessels, or 8,918 tons.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.—In our report of the proceedings at the Provincial Grand Conclave of Lancashire (No. 17, p. 338) the name of Sir Knt. William Redick, Prov. Grand Assistant Director of Ceremonies, was accidentally omitted from the list of Prov. Grand Officers.

SMYRNA.—An interesting account of the Masonic proceedings at the laying the first stone of the Smyrna and Aidin Railway is in type.

NORTH BERWICK.—Our brother is informed that press of business has delayed our sending a detailed answer to his communication.

T. H. T.—Write to the brother indicated. The law is distinct upon the subject

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1859.

CLASSICAL THEOLOGY.—V.

JUPITER AND JULY (CONTINUED).

To do away with the dogma of the human races, or distinct tribes, is to do away with the orthodoxy of the Scriptures. We mean that, could it be proved that there was no primordial spiritual and physical distinction between man and man, the truth of holy writ would be destroyed; but that can never be accomplished. Nevertheless, one grand object of the sacred law is to get rid of their stubborn demarcations. We know that in mind, in size, in colour, men have been and still are very different. The Lord "set a mark upon Cain;" here is a proof at once he was not like others—but what was that mark, and who were these others? We will answer question by question. Was the race of Cain black? What kind of creature was his wife? We do not know, neither is it important to know; except, however, that the words "Whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold" became the meaning and explanation of the mark to his own and other generations.

We are told it was not till after the birth of Enos that "men began to call upon the name of the Lord." Cain offered up of the earth no more unto God. Consequently we may believe that he and his family were not God serving, but rather at variance with the Almighty. In point of proof, our glance is on the passages where it is written, "Siu lieth at the door. And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him." "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." In process of time men built altars to the gods (of whom St. Jude, well versed in the lore of mysteries, felt compelled to record that they are "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day"), and from these false gods they are said to have learned the names of the stars, while Lucifer, we are told, was there to tell them how to worship them. "The daughters of men bare children unto them"—and these were the antediluvian demigods from whom the Assyrians and other nations derived many of their deities, and the classic ancients the heroes of long poems.

That star "which did weaken the nations," and said in his heart, "I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God," and "be like the Most High," was known before the world's deluge by the name of Jupiter, as well as the "Pleiades," "Orion," "Mazzaroth," and "Arcturus and his sons" were in like manner known by their names; for so they are called by the author of the book of Job. In the same way, it is to be observed, that former translations into heaven after death found their revivals afterwards in the apotheosis or canonizing of men to become gods or saints. By means of this deification and transnomination, before the period of the flood, Cain was the first mortal who was advanced among the stars, and worshipped as a star, and in consequence as an idol. Granting this, we shall find the causes of the idolatry in the restored world after the flood, which appears to have been a complete resumption of that of the destroyed one. Ham, like Cain, was cursed with the countenance of a fallen god; in his eyes was a "lurking devil." Not for his own sake had he been saved from an earth "corrupt before God, filled with violence," by which he as well as others was contaminated (for "all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth"), his heart was idolatrous, he forsook his father's God, and with his descendants lifted up and renewed the abominations of idols, as we see corroborated in the recognition of him as Jupiter Ammon, or the star god Ham.

This vain glory of men making gods was the first act of astrotheology consequent upon the rebellion against heaven and man's first and second disruption with the Godhead. As the various peoples became subjects and servile, the deification of those who reigned over them took place, and these in their turn assumed to themselves divine honours, their images were set upon altars, and incense was offered to them. An immoderate desire of immortal fame which some studied to attain by leaving behind them vast monuments and gigantic statues to perpetuate their memory and the place of their embalmed existence—the funeral brass in which they seemed to breathe again, and the lifelike marble which caused them, among the vulgar, to be thought more than mortals—and last not least, superstition, ignorance, and false teaching—were other causes of idolatry.

We are told that in the two thousandth year of the world, or the last year but one of Noah, a magnificent statue and temple were erected to Belus, the founder and monarch of the city of Babylon, and with a variety of sacrifices dedicated to Jupiter, or as some write, Saturn, because he (Belus) was the first king there. This god statue was made the lawful sanctuary to the offender and the miserable, but how this sacrilegious presumption could have arisen is the puzzle.

But who and what was Jupiter? In pagan religion generally there is a jumbling up and darkening of the holy scriptures by words, both by ignorance and by design. We have shown Jupiter to be a "wandering star," and how Æneas was resuscitated as Jupiter Indiges; also, how Cain was made a god both as the son of Adam and as the son of Æther. Yet still, like Cœlum, Osiris, Brahm, Taou, Thor, and all such gods of various countries, Jupiter constituted the sky, the firmament, the primum mobile, nay, as Jovis (à Jehovah) he has been made God himself!

It was said that Ζεύς was the proper appellation of Jupiter, because he gives life to animals; as he was also named Diespiter, because he is the source of light. There was hardly a nation which had not a Jupiter of its own; Varro reckoned up three hundred deities of this name.*

Jupiter almost universally has been styled the father and king of gods and men; so the learned writers of antiquity have thought, and were taught from their cradle. The learned likewise of the far distant past have told us of his actions, which we would not pollute our pages by describing.

Some of old, the most skilled in heathen theology, have with deep discernment pointed out the distinct being of three Jupiters;—the first whose father was Æther, the second the son of Cœlus, and a third the offspring of Saturn, which will clearly show that there was a Star Jupiter, a Cain Jupiter, and a Ham Jupiter the son of Noah or Saturn,† to whom many of the exploits of the other two are ascribed with a usurpation of his omnipotency—as, for example, in the victories and events of the Angelic and Titanic warfares, which must have happened before the flood. Although often alluded to both in sacred and profane history, these deities are left still vague, mythic and poetic, to the hasty reader; but it was not without due consideration of these apocryphal traditions that Dante founded the plot of the "Inferno," or Milton his erudite "Paradise Lost."

The classic emblems of Jupiter, displayed in his temples, are easily recognized, even upon coins; yet, as seen there they

* Jupiter, under various names, by different tongues and nations the whole world over, was worshipped, with the single exception of the orthodox Jews, many of whose kings reaped the just consequence of being smitten with the incense of Jupiter; whilst on the other hand many of them zealously and righteously helped to despoil him of his stolen plumes.

† Bochartus maintains, with very conclusive reasoning, that Saturn and Noah were the same; Cham, or Ham, is shown to be the eldest son of Noah, as Jupiter was of Saturn. The deluge swallowed up mankind; so Saturn was allegorically made to swallow up his children. Jupiter is feigned to be the king or "lord of the heavens" (Hymn ad Jovem). Ham was the chief or first patriarch of Africa, which, with the planets vertical, is considered to be nearer heaven than other countries. Noah foretold the coming of the flood; so did Saturn foretell "that there should be an overwhelming quantity of rain; and that an ark should be built, in which men and birds and creeping things should all sail together." Alex. Polyhistor ap. Cyril, contra Jul. i. 1. As quite untenable we have abandoned the hypothesis of Saturn being the same as Nimrod.

convey but a slender idea of the splendour with which his priests delighted to invest his worship. His statue was seated on a throne of ivory and gold, under a richly adorned canopy of Tyrian purple and azure, festooned, wreathed, and arched with drapery and flowers. Golden sandals adorned his feet, and from his shoulders hung an embroidered cloak ornamented with gems and various flowers and figures of animals.* His sceptre was made of cypress as an emblem of the eternity of his empire, because that tree is said to be free from decay. Because an eagle mainly assisted him when he was homeless, and also portended his reign, and brought him his thunderbolts in his wars with the giants (therefrom receiving the hypallage of "Jupiter's armour bearer"),† they placed at the top of his sceptre an eagle with outspread wings. In his right hand he brandished his fulgor or thunder against the conquered Titans at his feet. Of course, according to the diversity of his names, and of the people among whom he was worshipped, he assumed a figure of diverse import and appearance. Thus, with the Lacedæmonians, he was represented without ears: the Cretans, however—we presume having some other idea about acoustics, or for the better chance of their prayers being heard by auricles of stone—bestowed upon him an additional pair, or four ears. The Greeks called him Σωτήρ, the Saviour, for no more reason than because they thought he delivered them from the Medes. Upon many of the coins of Diocletianus, he stands, as in the manner we have just described, with his thunderbolt in the dexter hand, and a spear in the sinister (with the inscription Conservatori). In others, instead of his brandished thunder, he holds out a little image, in token of victory, with this inscription, Jovi Conservatori Orbis.

(To be continued.)

BASILICA ANGLICANA.

ONE of the first Christian churches erected in this island after the visit of St. Augustine, was built on the eminence above Ludgate, about the year 610, by Ethelbert King of Kent, the first of the Saxon princes who accepted Christianity. This edifice does not appear to have attracted any great attention at the time; however, we may inform our reader if he have not already anticipated the fact, that it was dedicated to St. Paul, and was the prototype of our present metropolitan cathedral. This church would seem to have lasted about seventy years, and was then rebuilt by St. Erkenwold, the bishop of the diocese, upon a somewhat more durable plan, for we read of its being accidentally burnt down in the year 961, nearly three hundred years afterwards. We have no information as to its dimensions, form or design, but some idea may be formed of these particulars from the circumstance that it was completely rebuilt within a year. Again we read of it being burnt down in 1087, but this time it was to be succeeded by a much more imposing and lasting edifice.

Before proceeding to trace the history of the cathedral church of St. Paul we may here pause to note one or two particulars of interest. It will be remembered that in one of our preceding papers we alluded to the common practice of all ancient nations of building their churches in the midst of burial places. We attempted to show that this disposition was in the very nature of things as arising in the mysterious

* Dionysius the Second, tyrant of Sicily, robbed the statue of the god of its magnificent cloak and replaced it with a woollen one, licentiously remarking, "that would be more conveniently useful to him in all seasons, since in winter it would be much warmer, and in summer much lighter." Most of our readers will recollect that this prince was banished, and in his exile turned schoolmaster. Witty as the tyrant was himself, we doubt if he ever excelled the wit of the old woman who prayed for his life within his hearing. "What mean you, ancient woman?" "O king!" replied the crone, "when I wished for the death of other tyrants, there still came a worse, and I felt a fear that it might be so again if you were gone."

† "Jovis Armiger," Virg. Æn. 6.

co-relation of the human and divine nature—sacrifice and commemoration being themselves correlative—so that when the church did not go to the graveyard, the graveyard unerringly grew around the church. The most important of these particulars then, is the circumstance that from the earliest times "the eminence above Ludgate" would appear to have been used as a burial ground. Amongst the earliest of the traditions of St. Paul's is that on its site was raised by the Romans a magnificent temple to Diana, to which was attached a convent of vestals, richly endowed. This assertion is, however, by no means well established. Upon the excavation of the foundations of the present building, however, a great number of Roman funereal vases, lachrymatories, and other sepulchral articles, were found at a considerable distance below the surface; and side by side, immediately above these, rows of skeletons—the pins of ivory and box wood with which the ancient Britons were accustomed to fasten the grave clothes of their dead, alone remaining, while above these again were rows of stone coffins, in which were encoined the bodies of our Saxon ancestors. Now, without accepting any fanciful inferences that may be formed from these facts, one thing would seem pretty well indicated—namely, that the elevated and central position of this site, pointed it out to successive generations, alike of natives and conquerors, as most appropriate for religious and public purposes.

We have seen how the Normans overspread the land with churches and castles. Mauritius, Bishop of London, the builder and founder of more than a score of religious edifices, contemplated, as we have already mentioned, a cathedral that should surpass anything then found in Christendom, to be raised entirely out of the revenues of his diocese. His successor determined that the pious work should not fall through for want of a superintendent and patron. This prelate, therefore, designed the structure that was subsequently raised, but upon a scale of extent and splendour that was ultimately found impracticable, for which he provided out of his own fortune. For twenty years the building advanced, when the prelate, dying, was succeeded by De Belmeis, who presided over the work also for twenty years, and also devoted to it the whole of the revenues of his see. Again, however, disaster fell upon the undertaking, and the nearly completed building, after forty years expenditure of labour and hoarded treasure, was all but burned to the ground. Nor was there, even now, any abatement of zeal. On a plan still more extensive the works were recommenced. Four successive bishops exhausted their revenues and their genius upon the undertaking. The result was a composition variable in point of style, and so far wanting the unity and simplicity which constitute intrinsic beauty in architecture as in every other art, but still an edifice which challenged the whole of the Christian world. Pilgrims came from all parts of the world to behold it. The whole length of the building was six hundred and ninety feet, and the breadth one hundred and thirty feet; a tower and spire shot up from the centre to the amazing height of five hundred and twenty feet; that is to say, it was one hundred and fifty feet longer, twenty feet wider, and one hundred and sixty feet higher than the present building. In 1315 it received some further additions under the direction of Edward II., having thus outstood the reigns of nine successive kings before it was finished.

But there was a spot in front of the building which became in a very short time invested with historical importance. This was St. Paul's Cross, an open air pulpit, which became necessary during the repairs of the church. The original use to which it was put was the delivery of sermons in the forenoon of Sunday. Clergymen used to come from all parts to preach before the lord mayor and court of aldermen, who in addition to other benefactions ordered, in 1607, "that every one that should preach there should, at his pleasure, be freely entertained for five days' space with sweet and convenient lodging." In the stirring times of the reformation, Paul's Cross became a centre around which the excitement of polemical controversy converged. Hither came the champions of the old and the new style, of Christ and Antichrist, according as the heat of argument and partizanship suggested either compliment. Here Latimer preached his three great sermons in 1547, and Ridley in 1553.

But what a scene was there in 1588. From Ratcliff to Westminster the river was thronged with barges darting across each other, "their oarsmen in their scarlet, purple, green, yellow, and blue waistcoats, looking like men who had fallen into a fortune, or were newly married." The grave citizens of the Goldsmiths, the Merchant Tailors, the Haberdashers, Fishmongers, and various other guilds, seemed as if relieved from a great weight, whilst their wives and daughters, in gorgeous bodices and quilted petticoats, indulged in laughter without restraint, and in that overflowing good humour for which these ladies were then remarkable. It was indeed high holiday, from Temple Bar to Cripplegate. Charing Cross was then a suburban village, Holborn was occupied by meadows, St. Martin's and St. Giles were literally in the fields. If that much quoted and ill-used personage, Lord Macaulay's New Zealander, could have been within sound of Bow bells that day, he would have thought that the good people of England has taken leave of their senses. But the truth was that the "Invincible Armada" had been scattered to the winds, and Queen Elizabeth was going to Paul's Cross to return thanks to God for the delivery of her realm. First came the mummers in their varicoloured suits, then remnants of the old archers, citizens with quarter staves, arquebuss men, the Queen's body guard, and those lusty yeomen of the guard, the forerunners of the modern Beefeaters, then the Queen on her palfrey, surrounded by her ministers of state. In the midst of this universal rejoicing there was not the trace of a smile visible in the serene but somewhat stern face of Elizabeth. There was no emotion recognizable in her blue eyes, bright and scrutinizing as was peculiar to the Tudors, as the queen passed under the bleaching skulls on the "Bar," whose sparse locks dangled in the wind. "The pulpit cross in St. Paul's churchyard was newly repaired, painted, and partly closed with a wall of brick. Dr. Fletcher, Bishop of London, preached there in praise of the Queen, and prayed for her Majesty before the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and citizens in their best liveries. Which sermon being ended, upon the church leads the trumpets sounded, the cornets winded, and the quiriasts sung an anthem. On the steeple many lights were burned, the Tower shot off her ordinance, the bells were rung and bonfires were made." The Queen returned to Westminster calm and impassable. Perhaps she recollected that it was in that pulpit cross at Paul's that the rights of Queen Catherine were first assailed; there that her own mother was denounced; there that her own and her half sister's claims found advocates and enemies; there that Anne of York mourned like Rachael for her offspring; there that Jane Shore did penance in a white sheet.

Within a very short period of this episode, Old St. Paul's met with its penultimate misfortune. An accident, however, had previously befallen the church, which we had nearly omitted to mention. A violent tempest of thunder and wind burst over the metropolis on the 1st of February, 1444. The lightning struck and set fire to the steeple, which was composed of wood, and the flames were not extinguished until one of the canons with laudable zeal had, in the attempt to subdue them, nearly sacrificed his own life. But in 1561, on the 4th of June, a thoughtless plumber left a pan of coals burning within the spire while he went to dinner. When he returned the whole building was in a blaze. Everything in and about the church that could be burned was reduced to ashes. Elizabeth, assisted by the nation, directed all her energy to its restoration and refitting, but it never recovered its ancient splendour. The spire was never rebuilt, but after an interval of five years the church was reopened for public worship. The fire had however permanently injured it, and we read of it fallen into complete decay in 1608, but the cost required for its repair being twenty thousand pounds, it could not be restored. In 1633, however, Charles I. gave the commission to Inigo Jones, upwards of £100,000 having been subscribed by the public for its restoration. This celebrated architect erected a portico of great beauty at the west end of the church. It consisted of fourteen columns, each rising to the height of forty-six feet, the whole supporting an entablature crowned with statues of apostles, confessors, and martyrs. The aspect of the artistic addition was said to be most effective and imposing, and to compensate for many if not all of the lost glories of the sacred building.

But a day of storms was coming. The strifes that had sprung up in the religious and political world were deepening and widening. The old cathedral was decorated with flags as the king passed on his way to the city and heard the shouts of the citizens, and in less than two months afterwards she put on deep mourning as his blood reddened the pavement of Whitehall. The funds which had been subscribed for its restoration had been seized by the parliament. The beautiful entablature which had just been erected was thrown down, and the figures of the saints mutilated. The scaffolding was given to Colonel Jephson's troopers for arrears of pay, and they dug pits in the very centre of the nave to saw the timber in. Another part of the building was turned into a barracks and stables for a troop of dragoons. But even a worse fate had befallen this centre of national worship in the apathy for religion that had preceded and succeeded the ascendancy of Puritanism, which, whatever may be said of it, operated as a hurricane does when in throwing destruction broadcast it warns the mariner to be sober and wary and have his compasses adjusted.

Towards the close of the sixteenth century the benches at the door of the choir were lounges for beggars and drunkards to sleep upon. There was actually a large dunghill within one of the doors. More than twenty private houses were built against its very walls, and the owners—shrewd business men, no doubt—had bored through to make room for lumber or stores, and even down into the vaults, which they converted into cellars. At one of the visitations the verger represented that "the shrouds and cloisters under the convocation house are made a common laystall for books, boards, trunks and chests, being let down to the trunkmakers, whereby, their daily knocking and noise, the church is greatly disturbed." One house, which was literally let into the church, was stated to have been used as a playhouse. An accomplished baker had even erected an oven in one of the buttresses, where he baked bread and pies and did a thriving business. At length came that great calamity the fire, which destroyed London from the Tower to the Temple, and in its progress overthrew church and mart. The venerable pile in which sixty generations had prayed, succumbed to the devouring element and rose in its ancient form no more.

We have mentioned Paul's Cross so particularly, because it supplied in many respects the purposes of the cathedral, that is to say, when repairs were being carried on, the one might be said to stand for the other. There is a very old engraving representing the court of James I. attending divine service here. The cross would appear to have stood in front of the western entrance, facing the north western angle. It was a round pulpit, with a canopy surmounted by a cross. The royal philosopher, with Prince Charles, is seated in a box forming the centre compartment of a temporary gallery, of which the other two are occupied by the nobility and ministers of state. In a gallery immediately underneath are seated the judges in their robes, and below them again the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council. The clergy, consisting of the dean and chapter, are seated on benches immediately in front of the pulpit, which is occupied by a divine, who is evidently, by the earnestness of his gesticulation, intent on the conversion of his auditory. There are strong signs of commotion among the congregation, who seem to be swayed by the force of the eloquence to which they are listening, whilst the outside is skirted by those listless loiterers who are in times of enthusiasm reported to be indifferent to grace. It was a privilege for criminals or political prisoners to stop here and hear the words of religion, not always acceptable, but still persistently held out. We can well imagine for instance that the victims of Queen Mary did not accept with respect the ministrations she had provided for them. The roses of York and Lancaster shed many a leaf on this spot. Clarence received here the last offices just before he was immersed in his butt of malmsey. Here the hunchback Gloucester swore, fretted, and bullied. It was entirely overthrown in the time of the commonwealth; but its site was retained by the Puritans, who fulminated the doctrine of Geneva against the idols that had been erected by the "Philistines." At the restoration it was not thought advisable to re-erect it, having been so often a rallying point for fanatical outrage; so old Paul's Cross went down with the old cathedral, but happily much of the strife, of which it was the centre, has gone down with it.

EARLY HISTORY OF MASONRY IN TEXAS.

WE copy the following very interesting article from the reprint of "Proceedings of Grand Lodge of Texas," published by the R.W. Grand Secretary, A. S. Ruthven.

As I took an active part in laying the first foundations of Freemasonry in this country, originated, and was personally present at, the first meeting ever held here, and cognizant of the earliest steps taken for the organization of a Lodge, I place upon record the following facts, which may be of interest perhaps to the fraternity hereafter, and would otherwise be lost, as I am now the only one living of the five brethren who originated Holland Lodge.

In the winter of 1834-5, five Master Masons, who had made themselves known to each other, consulted among themselves, and after various interviews and much deliberation, resolved to take measures to establish a Lodge of their Order in Texas. This resolution was not formed without a full appreciation of its consequences to the individuals concerned. Every movement in Texas was watched at that time with jealousy and distrust by the Mexican government, and already had its spies and emissaries denounced some of our best citizens as factionists and disaffected persons; already were the future intended victims of a despotic power being selected. It was well known that Freemasonry was particularly odious to the Catholic priesthood, whose influence in the country at that time was all powerful. The dangers therefore attendant upon an organization of Masons at this time, which was "trying men's souls," were neither few nor unimportant. But zeal for a beloved institution, a belief that it would be beneficial at a period when society seemed especially to need some fraternal bonds to unite them together, predominated; all fears of personal consequences were thrown aside, and the resolution to establish a Lodge, as abovementioned, was adopted. The five brethren were John H. Wharton, Asa Brigham, James A. E. Phelps, Alexander Russell and Anson Jones, and they appointed a time and place of meeting to concert measures to carry their resolution into effect. In the meantime another Master Mason came into their plans—Bro. J. P. Caldwell. The place of meeting was back of the town of Brazoria, near the place known as General John Austin's, in a little grove of wild peach or laurel, and which had been selected as a family burial ground by that distinguished soldier and citizen. The spot was secluded, and out of the way of "cowans and eavesdroppers," and they felt they were alone. Here, and under such circumstances, at ten o'clock in the morning of a day in March, 1835, was held the first formal Masonic meeting in Texas, as connected with the establishment and continuance of Masonry in this country. The six brethren I have mentioned were all present there; and it was concluded to apply to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana for a dispensation to form and open a Lodge, to be called Holland Lodge, in honour to the then M.W. Grand Master of that body, J. H. Holland. The funds were raised by a contribution to defray the expenses, to which each contributed as he felt willing and able.

A petition was in due time drawn up and signed by them, which was forwarded to New Orleans, having been previously signed by another Master Mason, Bro. W. C. D. Hall, and perhaps one or two more; but of this I do not recollect. The officers named in the petition were—for W.M., Anson Jones; S.W., Asa Brigham; J.W., J. P. Caldwell, who filled those offices respectively until the close of 1837. The dispensation was granted, after some delay, to these brethren, and Holland Lodge, No. 36, U.D., was instituted and opened at Brazoria, on the 27th of December, 1835. Bro. Phelps was chosen Treasurer, and M. C. Patton, Secretary; the other officers I do not recollect. The Lodge held its meetings at Brazoria, in the second story of the old court house, which room was afterwards occupied by St. John's Lodge, No. 5. About this time the difficulties with Mexico broke out into open hostilities, and our work was very much retarded by that circumstance, and by the members having to be absent in the service of the country. Still, there were a few others from time to time introduced into the Order, either by receiving the degrees or by affiliation. The Lodge struggled on until February, 1836, when I presided over its last meeting at Brazoria. I well recollect the night, and the fact that Bro. Fanin, who one month after became so celebrated for his misfortunes and those of his unfortunate party at Goliad, acted as Senior Deacon. It seemed, indeed, that the gloom which prevailed in the Lodge that night was a foreshadowing of its and their unhappy fate which was soon to overtake both.

In March, Brazoria was abandoned. Urea soon after took possession of the place at the head of a detachment of the Mexican army, and the records, books, jewels, and everything belonging to the Lodge, were utterly destroyed by them, and our members were scattered in every direction. Bros. Wharton, Phelps, and myself, joined the Texan troops on the Colorado, about the 18th of March. In the meantime, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana had issued a charter for Holland Lodge, No. 36, and it was brought over to Texas by Bro. John M. Allen. This, together with some letters from the Grand Secretary, was handed to me by Bro. Allen, on the prairie between Groce's and San Jacinto, while we were on the march, and carried by me in my saddlebags to the encampment of the army on Buffalo Bayou, at Lynchburg. Had we been beaten here, Santa Anna would have captured the charter of Holland Lodge at San Jacinto, as Urea had the dispensation for it at Brazoria. Such an event, however, was impossible. The charter and papers were taken safely to Brazoria; but, as the members had been lessened in numbers by death, or scattered in the army and elsewhere in the service of the country, no attempt was ever made to revive the work of the Lodge at that place.

In October, 1837, however, it was reopened by myself and others, at the city of Houston, having then been in existence about two years.

In the meantime two other Lodges, with charters from the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, were established in Texas, Milam, at Nacogdoches, and McFarlane, at San Augustine. Delegates from these, and from Holland Lodge, met in convention at Houston, in the winter of 1837-8, and the Grand Lodge of the republic was formed. By advice and direction of this body, the three subordinate Lodges transferred their allegiance from Louisiana to their own Grand Lodge, surrendered their charters to Louisiana, and received others from Texas; and Holland Lodge, No. 36, under the former, became Holland Lodge, No. 1, under the Grand Lodge of the Lone Star Republic. By this course, the causes of the many difficulties which have afflicted so many of the Grand Lodges of the United States were considered and obviated in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Texas.

Holland Lodge, No. 36, was the only one established in Texas prior to the revolution which separated her from Mexico.

Such is a brief but faithful sketch of the first establishment of Freemasonry in Texas. It was founded, like our political institutions, amid the stern concomitants of adversity and war, but its foundations were laid broad and deep: and upon them has been raised a superstructure of strength and beauty, symmetrical in its proportions and vast in its dimensions, which I trust will rise usque ad astra, and continue as a beacon to guide and cheer worthy Masons on their journey of life, and against which the wasting storms of time shall beat in vain, and the restless waves of persecution dash themselves to destruction in angry foam; while the presiding genius of the institution, from its lofty walls, shall ever continue to exclaim in emphatic tones to be heard by all—east, west, north, and south—

"Procul! O procul! este profani! Tu que invade viam." "Far hence, ye profane! Welcome, ye initiated, to these glorious courts! Tread ye them aright!"

ARCHÆOLOGY.

ANGLO-SAXON ANTIQUITIES.

AN extensive and very interesting discovery of Anglo-Saxon antiquities has been made by Mr. Akerman, secretary of the Society of Antiquaries, during the present autumn, at Long Wittenham, near Abingdon. It appears that about ten years ago the skeleton of a man, together with the umbo of a shield, a sword, spear, &c., was exhumed by labourers engaged in digging the foundations of some cottages near the entrance to the village. The circumstance becoming known to the incumbent, the Rev. J. C. Clutterbuck, that gentleman obtained possession of these relics, of which a description was communicated to the Archæological Institute.

On a visit to Long Wittenham, in March last, Mr. Clutterbuck, at the suggestion of Mr. Akerman, was induced to excavate near the spot, the result of which was the finding of more skeletons, showing that the locality had evidently been the burial ground of an Anglo-Saxon population. Accordingly in the autumn, Mr. Akerman, with the consent of the owner of the land, and by the direction of the council of the Society of Antiquaries, commenced a systematic exploration of the spot.

Guided by long experience in researches of this description, Mr. Akerman soon obtained abundant evidence of the nature and character of the interments, which are of two distinct kinds—the one by cremation, presumed to be the older rite of burial of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers; the other by inhumation, or the burial of the body entire, the males with their weapons, the females with their personal ornaments. Among the former are nearly a score of iron bosses of shields, a great number of spears and knives, and a sword three feet long, the blade straight, broad, and two edged. The spears are of various forms and sizes, and were found even in the graves of boys. In the graves of the women were found a great number of amber and glass beads, brooches of various forms, toilette implements, hair pins, the whirls of spindles, &c. These objects are very significant of a people among whom male and female relationships were distinguished by the “spear half” and the “spindle half.” The urns are very numerous, amounting to nearly fifty. They are of black pottery, and many of them are marked with an ornament which distinguishes them from the earthen vessels of the ancient British, Roman, and Romano-British periods.

The skeletons were of large and robust men, some of them being of gigantic size and in a remarkable state of preservation, every bone being preserved entire. They were deposited in rectangular graves, averaging three feet in depth, and had once probably been covered with tumuli, obliterated by the spade and the plough at a later period.

The chief interest attaching to these discoveries is the evidence they afford of an early settlement of an Anglo-Saxon population along these upper valleys of the Thames; no one looking at these remains can doubt that they are those of a people who lived and died in the same neighbourhood in which their skeletons have been discovered, and that it is not the relics of a battle field upon which Mr. Akerman has fallen.

We are bound to add, that the owner of the soil, in this instance, has with the greatest liberality acceded to all Mr. Akerman's requests, and that the excavator himself has met with every assistance and kind cooperation from the inhabitants of the little village of Long Wittenham, and especially from its excellent vicar, the Rev. J. C. Clutterbuck.

It is proposed to keep this collection together, and to place it, for future exhibition, in cases provided by the Society of Antiquaries, on whose account and in great measure by whose support these researches have been undertaken.

LA FONTAINE.—“He came the other day,” said Molière, “so abstracted as to ask me to call with him on the Chevalier de Loraine, at whose funeral we had both been present the day before. He did not know who wrote the Lord's prayer.”—“Now, I say that's too bad, M. Molière,” said La Fontaine, suddenly waking up. “You are telling of some of my follies, but I'm up to you. I do know who wrote the Lord's Prayer.”—“Who?” we all cried, knowing the kind, foolish, blundering vanity of the man.—“Who!—to think I don't know.”—“Who?”—“Why, Moses.” M. Racine had maliciously whispered him that fit answer to the question. We laughed till the tears ran down our cheeks; La Fontaine good-humouredly joining us. “I'll turn you all into beasts to-morrow,” he said, “you shall all figure in my next fable.”—“M. la Fontaine,” said the Abbé, “if you make us talk like the beasts in your fables, we could wish no greater flattery paid to our conversation.”—“His beasts talk like angels,” said a critic to me, under breath; “but he himself talks like a beast.”—G. W. Thornbury.

HOW TO DO GOOD.

[From Rob Morris's Voice of Masonry.]

BROTHER, the old moralist, Franklin, used to tell his grandchildren, after he had passed the age of seventy, that nothing had ever so much influenced his mind for good, or made so lasting an impression upon it, as a little book, read when a boy, entitled “How to do Good.” In fact, he attributes to the impressions made upon his mind by that publication much of the large, stated, and protracted benefactions of which it is known Franklin through all his life was the author.

Nothing can be truer than that plain and earnest advice upon a theme like this is likely to be productive of good results, and we the more readily set about the preparation of our little essay on the subject stimulated by the remembrance of Franklin's and kindred cases.

How to do good as Masons is in reality our text. To encourage an effort on the part of every reader, we append Preston's not too enthusiastic sketch of the effects of Masonry in the hands and hearts of the virtuous and the feeling. “Masonry” he avers “strengthens the mind against the storms of life, paves the way to peace, and promotes domestic happiness. It ameliorates the temper and improves the understanding. It is company in solitude, and gives vivacity, variety, and energy to social conversation. In youth it governs the passions and employs usefully our most active faculties; and in age, when sickness, imbecility, and disease have benumbed the corporeal frame, and rendered the union of soul and body almost intolerable, it yields a fund of comfort and satisfaction.”

We never read this extract without a glow of feeling and a desire ourselves to do good to a society that offers so much of good to us, and we have quoted it in the hope that the same impression may be made upon the minds of our readers, and they thus prepared for the following suggestions, How to do good.

1. Go always to your Lodge when circumstances permit, and let your accustomed seat be so rarely found vacant that, when from necessity it becomes so, the brethren naturally inquire, “Is Bro. A. sick?” Do you ask how the attendance on a Lodge is doing good? We answer, it is placing one's self in the way of good, and the opportunity will not fail to turn up.

2. Drop always a coin, large or small, into the charity box. Who knoweth whether this or that shall prosper? Your gift will be transformed into two blessings, one will wing its way to some needy soul, one will return to your own breast.

3. Carry some little fact to the Lodge, some scrap from the Voice, some new thought or incident, and at a proper moment read it aloud. It excites no comment, but look on the faces of the hearers. There is aroused intelligence. That fact is laid away to be handled again. That fact will be told in the family at home and among the neighbours. That fact may make four good men Masons. It may make six Masons better Masons. It may excite five men who never read anything on Masonic themes to seek for books and papers. Nay, it may lead the Lodge to ask for similar facts and information at every meeting. All these we have known to result from the fruitful influence of a single well directed thought cast at random into the Lodge.

4. Check the hasty word and oath on the brother's lips as soon as you can do it privately. To do it publicly would produce evil rather than good. Kindly asking the man of passion to give you his private ear, say to him in a few words, lovingly expressed, that “you have a charge to keep,” and cannot and dare not neglect it. Then give your message, asking no reply, and leave the results to God. Wonderful, wonderful are the ofttime effects of this covenanted method of doing good.

5. Point out the errors, but always one at a time, and in no dictatorial manner, which exist in your Lodge. What if your views are smartly opposed and laid aside? it only proves that you struck home, and at the next meeting perhaps your very opponents will be with you. Magna est veritas et prevalebit. The truth will always win in a Lodge, and for the simple reason that the whole system of Masonry is organized truth. We have been in a Lodge before now so rickety and near its dissolution that the brethren of which it was composed were flying about orbitless, and in dire confusion. We have thrown, as it were, headlong into that Lodge some central truth, somehow omitted heretofore in the building, and lo! the lost truths ranged themselves naturally and promptly around it, and by the intelligent appropriation of the Master, who had only needed a little Masonic light to make him everything that is useful and honourable, that Lodge became, what every Lodge was intended to be, a burning and a shining light. So much for pointing out an error. Do it at every meeting as for the sake of doing good.

6. Seize every opportunity to benefit the Lodge in its ordinary concerns as it may offer. Is a brother in arrears beyond his covenant and by-laws, remind him of the duty and urge a prompt settlement. Is anything belonging to the Lodge liable to be lost or damaged for want of attendance? give notice to the Master, that it may not happen. Is anything occurring or likely to occur in which the honour of the Lodge would be likely to be compromised? give due and timely notice to the proper officers, and yourself promptly step into the breach, and let not the scandal reach an unhallowed ear.

But where's the end of these suggestions? The catalogue might readily be made to cover this page nor then the subject be exhausted! There is something given that will suit every reader.

EXCELSIOR, A BETTER MOTTO.

THERE are those who, aware of the power of frequent association to awaken and cement friendships, avail themselves of all opportunities to render whatever society they are connected with subservient to their own ambitious purposes.

None of these can be true Masons, and their connection with the fraternity only serves to mark it as of human origin, and as composed of natural, not supernatural beings. As well might the science of architecture be inveighed against, because sometimes improper material is to be found in the walls of the building. "The incurvations of practice," says Blackstone, "are then the most notorious when compared with the rectitude of the rule; to elucidate the clearness of the spring conveys the strongest satire upon those who have polluted or disturbed it." Thus the very fact that the position of such characters in the Order is noticeably inconsistent, demonstrates most clearly the idea of the real nature and worth of the institution thus discredited.

Happily, the habitual imitation of a worthy character, and continuous subjection to benign influences, not infrequently begets a healthful choice of the same, and hence the various motives operating upon the minds of those seeking admission, have oftentimes been merged or lost sight of in the train of newer and higher ideas presented. Results are proportionate, in great measure, to the direction of the effort. If in somewhat we seem to strike too high, we shall in that only imitate good marksmen, who raise their pieces even higher than the level of the target, thereby approaching it more nearly in the shot. He who would become a good artist, ought to study the works of the most excellent masters, even though his excessive vanity may not give a hope to equal them.

There are some to whom the threadbare maxim, "Let well enough alone," is fraught with wisdom, and it is a wisdom, the wisdom of a serpent, which in its sluggish folds will crush the aspirations and paralyze the efforts. Excelsior is a better motto.

Let us go up higher! It is well to cultivate the cheerful feelings of satisfaction, but it is better to so attune the mind that it shall never be satisfied, unless conscious of unintermitting progress upward.

It is unnecessary in this age of the world to further point out the modes in which this moral and intellectual elevation is favoured by Masonry; for its ends, objects, and purposes are veiled in no mystery. Aiming at universal fraternity, it seeks no fancied equality by degrading the higher to the lower, or by dragging the sluggish at the heels of the active. It seeks the elevation of the race by culture of the individual man, inculcating the grand principle that he who would be an example must first imitate, just as the law-abiding peaceable citizen makes the best magistrate. Actual equality of the human race is a philosophical abstraction and a practical absurdity, but its importance as a mere political statement is very evident. The rights of men are the same, their capacities diverse as their numbers; thus equal in rights they are vastly unequal in the accomplishment of works. Attachment to common objects, employment in the same duties, and efforts in the same direction, establish a brotherhood of feeling not at all incompatible with esteem for the superior or guidance to the inferior mind. It is knowledge which makes men to differ, as it is the clear apprehension of the same truths which brings them upon a common level and creates the sentiment of fraternity."—J. Adams Allen, G.M. of Michigan.

THE ILLS OF IDLENESS.—A man cannot without industry guard his personal welfare from manifold inconveniences, molestations, and mischiefs; idleness itself will be very troublesome and irksome to him. His time will lie on his hands as a pestering incumbrance. His mind will be infested with various distractions and distempers; vain and sad thoughts fowl lusts, and unquiet passions will spring up therein as weeds in a neglected soil.—Burrow.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Seven Years' Travel in Central America, Northern Mexico, and the Far West of the United States. By JULIUS FROEBEL. With numerous illustrations. London: Bentley.

THE Germans have long had a predilection for weird and fantastic literature, and it would seem as if, of late years, they had cultivated the same taste with respect to their travels. The half settled countries of America appear to exert a strong power of attraction for the Teutonic race, who go thither to study, with equal curiosity, the phenomena of physical nature and the early processes by which states are being formed out of the most heterogeneous elements which ever came together in the formation of a people—consisting of Europeans from all the races of the old world, Anglo-Americans from the Northern and Southern States, Mexicans and other descendants of the Spanish colonists, Indians of every tribe and colour, red and brown, Christian and heathen, with a vast multitude of half castes, barbarized whites, and half civilized savages; and lastly, the huge and formidable mass of negro blood with all its mixtures and results. Of the ultimate predominance of one race there seems to be little or no doubt. Mr Froebel notices how the Spanish race involuntarily acknowledge the supremacy of the people of the United States and their tacit claim to the dominion of America, by designating them always under the title of Americanos. But the Anglo-Saxon race appears to be destined to absorb into it, and either assimilate with itself, or at least eliminate, a far greater variety of elements, and much more discordant and uncongenial ones, than went to form it in the first instance in the land of mingled Celts and Teutons, Danes and Normans, out of which it arose.

Mr. Froebel is an observant, fair, tolerant, and well informed traveller, who has produced a definite and forcible picture of the countries through which he has travelled. His account of a prolonged journey over the western prairies and through the passes into Mexico is excellent. He started with a friend, a German Jew, on a great mercantile speculation, with a vast caravan of mule waggons laden with merchandize (his friend choosing the occasion for being married, and taking his wife with him on the bridal trip) for Independence, a town of wheelwrights' shops, full of waggons painted blue, red, and green, lying on the river Missouri. And as he had gone over the same ground in 1852, when it was a wild, and as it since has become the well known territories of Kansas and Nebraska, he shall describe in his own language what Independence was at his first visit:—

"Then we were here in one of those towns which, situated on the limits of a desert, may be compared to a harbour; and perhaps, in spite of the new settlements of Kansas, Independence may have maintained this character. The camel has been called the ship of the desert; but, until the camels introduced of late into Texas by the government of the United States shall have increased sufficiently to play a similar part in the New World, the trader's waggon must be called the ship of the prairie; and, indeed, the waggon drawn by mules stands in the same relation to that drawn by oxen as the steamboat to the sailing vessel. Formerly oxen were here used in preference as draught cattle for the journeys across the prairies; but mules have gradually superseded them. Teams of mules are quicker than yokes of oxen, and the mule is also better able to endure heat and want of water. Mules, however, cost three times as much as oxen, and in the Indian territory they are a property far more in danger. Oxen are seldom stolen by the Indians, whereas the stealing of mules is regarded by them as a great and honourable exploit. The large demand for draught cattle of both kinds for the numerous caravans travelling west, has naturally given a considerable stimulus to cattle breeding in the State of Missouri. The mules reared here are noted for their beauty, size, and strength, and, although inferior to the small Mexican mules in briskness and endurance, they readily find purchasers even in Mexico, where they are sought for chiefly for carriage teams; the trading caravans, therefore, passing between the Missouri frontier and Northern Mexico generally bring back only part of their mules."

These caravans consist of a mixture of Americans and Mexicans; the Americans to drive the waggons, the Mexicans to be, as it were, the interpreters between the Americans and the mules. Take the following amusing remarks of Mr. Froebel on the mules themselves:—

"From drivers and muleteers we may pass to mules, which are in many respects far more interesting than the former, and whose natural disposition is an attractive subject to the observer of nature. One of the most striking characteristics of the mule is his aversion to the ass, and the pride he takes in his relationship to the horse; which instincts are met with obtrusiveness in the ass and by indifference in the horse. If an ass at any time—urged by the vanity peculiar to its race as related to the mule—happens to fall in with a drove of mules, he will, in all probability, be kicked and lamed by his proud relatives. A horse, on the contrary, takes a distinguished position in a drove of mules. The latter crowd round him, and follow his movements, exhibiting a violent jealousy, each striving to stand nearest to their high bred relative; this instinct is employed to keep together the droves of mules, on a journey or at pasture, by putting a mare to the drove, with a bell round her neck, and called the "bell mare"—by the Mexicans "la yegua madre" (mother mare). This animal is led day and night by a cord; and the whole drove is thus kept under control, and will not leave their queen. It is, therefore, very difficult to separate the drove. The man who leads the mare is instructed, in case of an attack from the Indians, to leap instantly upon the back of this animal and take refuge in the waggon encampment, whither the drove is sure to follow him. Even if the Indians succeed in separating any from the drove, they find it difficult to carry them off. The animals incessantly attempt to turn back, and the travellers are thus enabled to overtake the robbers and recover the stolen animals. The Indians, in consequence, use every means to get possession of the mare; and if they succeed in this, the whole drove is lost to their owners. If several horses are in a drove of mules, the danger is that the latter becomes dispersed; and this is the reason that, in these journeys, saddle horses are not allowed to go loose, but are led by a cord.

The following is only the beginning of the journey. By degrees the mules become more manageable, but the delay which the start occasions seems to be considerable to the last:—

"It is impossible to describe the scene of the first harnessing of some hundred mules, until then quite wild, and which have never had a bit in their mouths, nor a saddle on their backs. The waggons are drawn up so as to form three fourths of a circle, while the space left open is the entrance to the court yard of this encampment. In the intervals between them the waggons are connected by a cord tied from wheel to wheel. The mules are driven into the court, when the entrance is also closed by a cord drawn across it. Two men, armed with whips, are placed at this entrance, in order to drive back any of the mules which may attempt to leap over the cord or to creep under it. The Mexicans call this waggon-encampment, which serves both for catching the animals and as a place of protection from the Indians, a 'corral'—a word which signifies any yard or enclosed place where cattle are kept. The Anglo-Americans have changed the word into 'carrel.' The reader may picture to himself two or three hundred wild mules crowded together in this space, with ten or fifteen men among them, each endeavouring to fling the lasso over the heads of the animals, one after another, to force the bit into their mouths, and to lead each to its place before the waggon to which it has to be harnessed. In a caravan of twenty or thirty waggons, this first attempt occupies the greater part of a day, leaving no time to get the waggons in motion. The mules well know the lasso, and strive to escape it in every way possible; they crowd closely together, first on one side and then on another of the corral, their heads turned to the centre, and hidden as much as possible; others thrust their heads under the waggons, or between the wheels, to prevent the lasso reaching their necks; while again, others are even more cunning; they stand stock still, as if they were actually holding their necks patiently for the noose; but the expression of their eye, fixed watchedly at the same time on the man with the lasso, betrays their cunning. The man now whirls the cord, in serpentine coils, round and round over his head; the noose flies hissing, with the precision of an arrow, to its object; whilst the animal stands as if rooted to the spot, but making a small side motion of its head, and the lasso misses.

"All these stratagems, however, are useless. Whilst the drove rush from side to side of the corral, one mule after another feels the lasso twisted round its neck. Then it tears away madly into the midst of its companions, dragging the man who holds the cord from one side of the corral to the other. A second and a third now come to his aid. The hard breathing of the half strangled animal is heard amidst all the uproar and confusion of the scene. At length the men succeed in drawing the end of the cord between the spokes of a wheel, and the animal is gradually brought nearer and nearer to this point. As soon as it is close to the wheel, the cord is drawn round its body, and again pulled through the spokes, so that the whole body is brought into a noose. Thereupon the men endeavour to force the bit between its teeth, and just as they seem to have accomplished this, the animal in despair makes a last effort; it throws itself on the ground, frees its legs by rolling over, jumps up, and with the noose still tightly drawn round its neck, disappears in the thickest of the drove. The chase now begins anew, until the animal has a second noose around its neck: half strangled, it is now flung on the ground and mastered by forcible means, until the bit is in its mouth, and the cord, with a second noose, fixed round its nostril. Upon this it is let out of the corral; and now begins the attempt to put it to, and harness it to the waggon. The creature again makes the most violent struggles; and, considering that in this manner ten animals are put to every carriage, and that this operation goes on in different parts of the corral, and before twenty or thirty waggons, the reader may form an idea of the confusion of the whole scene. When trying to put them to, the animals entangle themselves in the harness, fling themselves on the ground, trample upon and kick one another, sometimes break loose and run off with part of the harness, the Mexicans in pursuit mounted on the swiftest horses in the caravan. The mule, with the draught chains clattering at its heels, gallops madly on till the noose is again round its neck, when it is brought in and harnessed anew.

"When at length all the waggons are in readiness, the corral is opened; the supernumerary animals are let out, with the bell mare, and the caravan is ready to start. The mules are now for the first time put to draught; for the first time they feel the bridle and lash of the driver, who takes his place on the saddled mule.

"Fresh confusion! Here it is impossible to get the team to move; there another team tries to run away with its waggon; here one pair of mules make a desperate effort to advance, whilst a second pair holds back; there the leaders turn sharp round, drag the next pair after it, and threaten to snap the axletree. Here an animal falls, there a chain breaks. Amidst the cracking of whips and shouting and swearing of the drivers, at last one team gets into a regular pace, when suddenly they strike off from the beaten road, dragging the waggon into a morass or wedging it fast between trees. The broken harness has to be mended, the waggon has to be dragged out of the morass, the tree standing in the way has to be felled; before all this is accomplished another waggon is in a similar plight! Thus the day passes in the utmost fatigue and excitement, both to man and beast, until, in the evening, a new corral is formed, with great trouble, perhaps, scarcely a thousand yards distant from the former. The animals are unyoked, and driven to grass and water, and the men after lighting their fires, set about satisfying their hunger and thirst.

"The next morning matters are somewhat improved: in many the obstinate nature of the animal is subdued, and the men have begun to learn their disposition. The yoking and harnessing is accomplished in three or four hours, and the caravan succeeds in proceeding a few miles. Under the most favourable circumstances, however, the yoking a caravan of twenty or thirty waggons takes at least an hour and a half."

Mr. Froebel furnishes us with an amusing sketch of a Nicaraguan doctor, Doctor Matagente, or men-killer as he was called by his compatriots—the said doctor having plunged in German metaphysics, and transferred them to the politics of Nicaragua:—

"But he was of a metaphysical turn of mind, feeling himself greatly attracted by the mysteries of German philosophy, into which he had been initiated by some French books that had found their way to Nicaragua. The 'Germans,' he observed, 'have a great philosopher named Ichlejel, who has written a book bearing the title of 'Philosophy of Life.' They have another great philosopher called Hegel, but this one is too difficult to be understood. 'Los Alemanes,' he continued in an enthusiastic strain, 'son la nacion la mas scientifica, la mas filosofica, la mas profunda!' a compliment I was not prepared to hear paid to the German nation in these quarters of the world; but which, considering that we had no man like Mr. Chatfield to make us respected in Central America, I thought a great consolation. The doctor's brother, the politician, is the author of several pamphlets printed in Nicaragua. In reading one of them, it struck me how schools and systems of philosophy, even without being understood, extend their influence over the world, and how even the most abstract metaphysician in Germany should never forget—and especially if he should have the misfortune of being translated into French—that he may cause some mischief in Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan writer I am speaking of, the brother of the admirer of Schlegel and Hegel, is the author of an essay on the Nicaraguan revolution, in which he quotes Tacitus and Puffendorf, Ancillon and Vattel, Guizot and Louis Blanc, Madame de Staël and Montesquieu, Droz and Matter, Necker and Mirabeau, and speaks of idealism and antagonism, aspirantism and dualism, proselytism, anachronism, and several other equally dangerous principles."

The account of Mexico given by our traveller is very curious. The perpetual war raging there as one dictator is supplanted by another recalls to the mind of the classical student the struggles between the Greeks of the lower empire and the Mongols and Turks. There is, however, one very important custom, which more enlightened nations might adopt with advantage, in the relation of insolvent debtor to the creditor, the latter claiming the services of the former, and the debtor, without compulsion, honorably renders them, as in the following scene:—

"A respectable man in Temósachic had from time to time bought goods of Don Guillermo in Chihuahua, who had never hesitated to give him credit for a few hundred dollars, and the debt was always paid at the expiration of the term. The man died, and his son came to Chihuahua with a letter, written apparently by his dying father, in which he requested the merchant to show his son the same kindness he had displayed to him. Don Guillermo willingly granted the request, the young man took goods for a few hundred dollars; three years elapsed, no payment was made, and nothing was heard of the young man, and now his creditor appears suddenly in Temósachic. 'Where does Natividad Andrada live?' asked Don Guillermo of the first person we met as we rode into the village. 'There is his mother's house,' was the answer. 'Is Natividad at home?' 'No, sir.' 'Is he in the neighbourhood?' 'He is in the village.' 'Let him be called; I must speak to him.' In two minutes he came. He was a young man of more than middle height, well formed, and with good regular features, on which an irregular life now began to show its traces. 'Natividad,' said Don Guillermo to him, 'as you have not come to me, I have been obliged to come to you. Why have I never seen you again in Chihuahua?' 'I was un-' pay your honour.' 'Can you pay me now?' 'No; I am poor; I have nothing.' 'Do you know how much you owe me?' 'Not exactly.' 'Three hundred dollars.' 'It is so, since your honour says so.' 'Cannot you pay me at least a portion of it?' 'I have nothing.' 'Then you must come with me, and work for me.' 'I am ready; I believe your honour's demand is just.' 'Then get ready; I cannot wait.' 'I am ready; I wear all I possess.' This consisted of an old straw hat, a coarse cotton shirt, wide unbleached cotton trousers, sandals, and a gay coloured ragged woollen blanket, with which the poorest man gracefully covers his rags.

"During this conversation, which deeply affected the fate of several persons, we had not got off our horses, and the old woman had not spoken a word. She now burst into tears, and turning to Don Guillermo said, 'Your honour claims your right; but how miserable am I in my old age. He is my only child. But I have long seen that he would not be the comfort of my latter years; he has not followed his father's example. But will not the gentlemen dismount and enter my poor house?' she added, with the politeness which the lowest of the Spanish race never forget. 'Yes,' said Don Guillermo, as we entered the small clay hovel, 'your husband was a worthy man. How has his son fallen into so miserable a position?' 'Ah, sir, he has gambled away everything.' 'I should have given him no credit but for the letter of his father; how could he recommend a son whose bad character he must have known?' 'Ah, sir, my husband never wrote that letter; my boy forged it at the instigation of his bad companions.' 'Then it is right that you should be punished,' said Don Guillermo to the young man; 'and you, Señora,' he continued to the mother, 'must comfort yourself. As the lad now is, he can never give your house any help. I will take charge of him. I will teach him to work and to live like a respectable man, and the time may come when he will return to you an estimable character. You will go with me to Texas,' he then added, addressing himself to the son. 'Wherever your honour pleases,' and, after a short stay, during which the old woman regaled us with 'tortillas' and 'frijoles,' and Natividad took leave of a young woman and kissed a child, we left the place, and set on our return.

"It deserves especial notice that this transaction, which did not occupy half an hour, was settled without the intervention of any public authority."

From the somewhat lengthy extracts we have given, it will be seen that we consider Mr. Froebel's Travels as a very interesting and instructive work, containing numerous sketches of a savage and half civilized people, besides much scientific and geographical information, more especially in that part which gives his remarks on the mountain ranges in the south west. To such of our readers who love a real book of adventurous travel, we cannot do better than cordially commend to their perusal the entire work before us.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE winter session of the University of Edinburgh was opened last week by an address from the Principal, Sir David Brewster. The chemistry class room, and the lobby and stairs leading to it, were crowded to excess long before the hour for the delivery of the address, and many were unable to gain admission, while a large number of those who effected an entrance could not hear the address in consequence of the noise and confusion caused by the overcrowding. Sir David Brewster was accompanied to the class room by nearly all the members of the Senatus, and by Baillies Grieve and Johnston. Lord Brougham has been elected, as we anticipated, to the Chancellorship of the University of Edinburgh; and, at a meeting of the Senatus Academicus, on Tuesday, the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by acclamation. The next excitement in store for the members of the university will be the election of a rector. We understand that Mr. Gladstone has been brought forward for this office, and that a committee is in course of formation for securing his election. The names of Lord Campbell, Lord Macaulay, Lord J. Russell, and Mr. Stuart Mill, have been brought up, as have those of the Lord Advocate, and the Lord Justice Clerk, but these latter are commissioners, and it is understood that the members of the Universities' Commission have expressed themselves to the effect that they decline being proposed as members of any of the University Courts during the existence of the commission.

We are requested to state that the "Sequel to Adam Bede," which is now advertised, is not by the author of "Adam Bede." This unauthorized use of a popular author's title for purely commercial purposes is scarcely fair dealing towards the public.

The honorary degree of D.C.L. has been conferred by the University of Cambridge upon the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Gladstone, and Sir George Grey.

M. Philoxène Boyer resumed on Wednesday, in Paris, his readings, in the rooms of the Scientific Club. A numerous audience of literary men and gentlemen were present. M. Boyer continued this year the work he commenced in 1858—the explanation and glorification of the great William Shakespeare. M. Boyer's introductory address was frequently applauded. He felt no hesitation in directing some strong and original attacks on the modern dramatists, who appear, he said, to address themselves solely to bankers and courtesans.

M. Louis Lurine, a well known Parisian critic, and the manager of the Theatre Vaudeville, has died suddenly of apoplexy. "M. Empis," says Galignani, "retires from the Theatre Français, being called, it is announced, to superior functions, having raised the theatre by his enlightened management to a height of prosperity greater than had been known for a long series of years. The gentleman appointed to succeed him, M. E. Thierry, has long been known to the public as one of the most eminent of our dramatic critics."

Mr. R. Griffith, B.A., scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, Ireland, University scholar, has been appointed one of the Assistant Masters of Wellington College.

Mr. Thackeray is to bring out his magazine on New Year's Day. His plans, says the Athenaeum, are already laid down. He is not going, he says, to set the Thames on fire, or regenerate society—only to do his best to please and amuse the town. He proposes to seek an audience of gentlemen and gentlewomen for his sermon, and to take care that all the matter to which he shall lend the sanction of his name and popularity shall be such as one gentleman might write and another may read. So far so good. Such a publication should have a humour and a place of its own. We wish Mr. Thackeray every success.

We are glad to hear that Mr. J. Hollingshead, whose last book, "Under Bow Bells," has been so favourably received by the public, has in the press a second volume, which contains his political essays; a third is to follow, which will be a republication of descriptive articles by him—visits to strange places, &c. Mr. Hollingshead has also joined the staff of Mr. Thackeray's new magazine for a long period, to contribute a series of articles.

The Art Journal says: "The next fresco to be placed in the corridors is a work by Mr. Cope, R.A., the subject of which is 'The parting of Lord and Lady Russell.' The artist is still engaged on the picture in one of the committee rooms of the House of Lords; and, as it is nearly complete, it will shortly be found in its place. It is to be hoped that the method of executing these frescoes on slate, and fixing them in their respective panels with a space behind for the circulation of air, will secure them against the fate that has befallen the works in the Poets' Hall. It is some months since we examined these frescoes; but on a more recent inspection it is evident that injury is advancing with increased rapidity. In Herbert's work the faces of Goneril and Regan are peeling off, and in others large portions of the surfaces are extensively blistered. The natural cause of this, as we have already stated, is the dampness of the walls. There never has been perhaps a fire in the Poets' Hall, and at times the walls are streaming with moisture. So insufficient is the light in the corridors, that every composition painted on the principle of breadth of low or middle tone will be lost. Compositions designed with their principal quantities in strong opposition, like Ward's 'Argyle,' are alone suited for such a light. The substitution of stained for white glass in the windows of St. Stephen's Hall has materially reduced the lights; but nevertheless pictures there, especially on the north wall, will be much more distinct than in any of the other corridors or passages of the houses."

According to the same authority, Mr. Joseph Durham, the sculptor, whose name is already honoured by the profession and the public, has been commissioned to execute a statue of "the first English printer," Caxton, to be placed in the great room of the Westminster Palace Hotel. The hotel is built on the site of Caxton's printing office, and it occurred to the directors of the company that the interesting fact should obtain a permanent record. While the foundations of the hotel were digging, there were hopes of finding some relic of the old building: the ancient walls were clearly traced, and a mutilated statue of the Virgin and Child—probably one of the ornaments of "the chapel"—was found; but the search, although minutely and carefully instituted, was vain to procure a morsel of the type which the first printer had used. Mr. Durham's statue, life size, will be in plaster. The directors, not feeling justified thus to expend the money of the shareholders, have subscribed privately to meet the necessary expense. It will be a work of very high merit. Caxton is represented seated on a fine oak chair of the period, examining a proof sheet, one foot resting on an iron chest.

A Scottish clergyman has hit on a method of making the service of his church attractive. The Ayrshire Express informs us that the Rev. Mr. Waddell, of Girvan, read from his own pulpit a poetical tragedy, of which he is the author, entitled "King Saul," illustrating the power of madness, superstition, and jealousy combined. It is a five-act tragedy, adhering throughout to the narrative as it appears in holy writ, and "containing on every page delineations of character, and fine dramatic taste, which would not disgrace the pen of the greatest dramatists."

The secretary to the Brighton Mechanics' Institute has received a letter from Mr. Edwin James, Q.C., Recorder to the borough, of which the following is a copy:—"So little interest was felt in the competition for the prizes last year, that I am not inclined to renew them. I certainly should not give any unless twenty competitors for each prize were guaranteed."

Mr. Macmillan's Magazine has made its appearance under the care of Professor Masson. It is a good opening number. A review of political affairs, from the philosophical rather than the partizan point of sight, three chapters of "Tom Brown at Oxford," "Pen, Ink, and Paper," by Professor George Wilson, and Mr. Lushington's "Italian Freedom," are magazine articles high above the average in thought and style.

The Librairie Nouvelle has just published a translation of Mr. Thackeray's "Yellowplush Papers." This work has been admirably rendered into French by an Englishman, Mr. William L. Hughes, who has contributed to several of the leading periodicals here, and even had one or more dramas produced on the French stage. His perfect acquaintance with the language has enabled him to render Mr. Thackeray's work in the manner best calculated to convey the author's meaning to French readers. Where close translation was applicable, he has adhered strictly to his original, but where the meaning could be better expressed by paraphrase he has adopted that method; and the result is a very successful rendering of a tale that offers unusual difficulties to a translator. Mr. Hughes has not attempted to imitate the extraordinary orthography of the famous Mr. Charles J. Yellowplush, and any such experiment would most probably have resulted in failure. The version first appeared in the Revue Européenne, and the fact of its now being brought out in a separate form proves that it has been well received by the publishers.

The Birmingham Journal says:—"It may be recollected that some years ago, on the occasion of a visit by Mr. Dickens to Birmingham to attend the Literary and Artistic dinner, a presentation was made to him, and an address expressive of the admiration felt by the donors for his genius and character. In Frith's portrait of Mr. Dickens, exhibited in the Royal Academy last season, and which, by the way, is about to be engraved, this address forms a portion of the 'still life,' as appears by the following letter addressed to Mr. J. E. Walker, artist, lately a resident in Birmingham:—"Tuesday, 20th July, 1859.—Dear sir,—In reply to your letter, I have great pleasure in assuring you that the framed address in Mr. Frith's portrait is the address presented to me by my Birmingham friends, and to which you refer. It has stood at my elbow in that one place ever since I received it; and please God it will remain at my side as long as I live and work.—Dear sir, faithfully yours, CHARLES DICKENS." The Cork Examiner publishes a correspondence between Mr. Charles Dickens and an ultramontane citizen of Cork. The latter gentleman, feeling himself, as a Roman Catholic, aggrieved by one or two articles exposing papal excesses in Italy, which appeared some time ago in "All the Year Round," wrote to Mr. Dickens on the subject. Mr. Dickens, in reply, denied that the complaint was reasonable, declared that he had never "pandered to any acrimonious or intolerant feeling" against the Roman Catholic Church, and added—"Let me, in all good humour, recommend you to observe whether its (the church) accredited organs are as considerate towards Protestants, and to give your judgment of me the benefit of the comparison."

The Standard says:—"Sir E. Bulwer Lytton has returned to England, and we are happy to state that the right hon. baronet is in the enjoyment of perfectly recovered health."

A collection of facts respecting the weather is in progress on a scale that includes the North Atlantic and its several coasts. Contributions will be thankfully used by the Meteorological Department of the Board of Trade and Admiralty.

At the meeting of the Council of the Society of Arts, on Wednesday, it was announced that Dr. Lindley had consented to accept the office of Examiner in Botany for the Society's examinations.

MEDITATION AND GRATITUDE.—He, in frequently reflecting on the particular ample favours of God to him, should imitate the holy Psalmist, that illustrious pattern of great and fortunate men; saying after him, with his spirit and disposition of soul, "Thou hast brought me to great honour, and comforted me on every side; therefore will I praise thee and thy faithfulness, O God."—Barrow.

ANCIENT SYMBOLISM ILLUSTRATED.—IV.

BY BRO. ROB. MARTIN, M.D., PAST DEPUTY PROV. GRAND MASTER OF SUFFOLK; AND P.E. COM. OF KNIGHTS TEMPLAR, ETC.

THE MYSTIC TRIANGLE.

NOAH, I have already shown, was deified, so also were his immediate descendants, and all inventors of the arts were noticed with divine honours. Tubal Cain, the first worker of metallic substances, was the Vulcan of the Greeks, nor did he lay slight claim to the honour awarded him, since his progress in science was unparalleled. Not only was he the first worker of metallic substances, and thus alike useful in the arts of war, and agriculture, but he must have understood the principles of chemistry, especially the power of caloric in fusing metals and producing compound substances, for we read that he was the instructor of every artificer in brass and iron. Now brass being a factitious metal, formerly a mixture of lapis calaminaris with copper in fusion, he must have advanced far in science ere he could have first formed the metal, and then converted it to the many purposes for which it was employed.

In like manner the god Hermes or Annubis of the Greeks, the Toth or Taut of the Egyptians called Trismegistus, that is "threefold great," is proved to have been an ancestor, who instructed the Egyptians in the elements of astronomy, music, and letters, and was venerated by the Greeks and Romans as the god of eloquence, wisdom, and commerce.

Two other sects have long divided between them the great body of the commonalty of China, that of the Tao-tse, and that of the priests of Fo, or Boodh—the first native, the second of foreign origin. In a work recently translated by the Rev. Dr. Morrison, Tao, the founder of the former sect, is stated to have been born on earth under Woo-ting, the twentieth emperor of the Chang dynasty; his mother, who conceived through the influence of a divinely transforming air, remained eighty-one years in a state of pregnancy, and her offspring after living nine hundred and ninety-six years on earth, ascended to the summit of the mountain Kwan-lun. His followers, in describing the primeval state, assert that all the fruits of the earth grew spontaneously, and men dwelt unhurt amidst ferocious animals. The universe was only one family, they lived in innocence, nothing could be fatal, or cause death. The immoderate desire of knowledge ruined the human race; the perverseness of woman was the source and root of all evil. *

This bears a strong resemblance to the Mosaic history. I will also mention a striking similarity between the Chinese and Mosaic accounts of the deluge. Yu, the Chinese Noah, is celebrated for his painful and successful labour in directing the waters to their proper channels. In the time of Yu wine was first made; but when Yu drank of it and relished its flavour, he banished its maker, and prohibited the luxury, remarking that it would be ruinous to man. Noah having descended from the ark after a general deluge, must have found drainage necessary before he could till the earth; he planted a vineyard, and was drunken, the consequence of which was his banishment to slavery of the descendants of Ham.

The following description given of the Tao sect by Professor Kidd, evinces a striking similarity between their theory of a trinity of gods and that professed by ourselves, and symbolized by the triangle. The sect of Tao, says this learned author, was founded by Laoou Keuntsze, who flourished about four hundred years prior to the Christian era, and was contemporary with Confucius. The origin is described as the great supreme, threefold source, consisting of three personages, of whom the most honourable dwells in heaven, and bestows happiness. The next in rank grants forgiveness of sins on earth, and the inferior rules the water, and delivers from impending calamities; yet these three sages are but one first cause, that is, the indivisible monad, to which we have already referred, called Tao-Keih.

This triune power presiding in heaven over assembled divinities and rulers, the sun, moon, stars, and constellations, despatches a special messenger to announce the pardon of sin—infinite happiness and complete deliverance from evil—to all who shall recite the precious name. These religionists chiefly attracted votaries by holding out to them the hope of prolonging, by the application of certain means, the span of their existence. To princes and great men the sectaries recommended themselves, by the wild and delusive hope of an earthly immortality; and to those who possessed every blessing of life its perpetual duration was of all boons the most desirable. Guabil, in treating of the mechanical forming energy, says that power created the two effigies, and these the emblems of all existences. Upon these principles, says Purchas Lao-tze, boldly advanced the dogma—"One made Two—Two made Three—and Three made all things."

The following is the lofty description given by the Tao sect of their deity:—

"How great is the supreme Tao!

Not made, yet existing,

The end of creatures, and annihilations and the beginning,
Before the earth and before the heavens

Light and glory unite around him,

Continuing for eternity creations and annihilations.

In the east he taught our father Confucius;

In the west he directed the immortal Kien-Sien (Solomon);

An hundred kings have kept his laws;

The holy perfect men have received his instructions.

The first of all religions,

Marvellous is it—passing marvellous!"

The Tao sect, despite its high pretensions, has been for many years gradually and rapidly declining, while the introduction of the worship of Fo, from different causes, has proved more generally attractive. It has indeed now obtained so complete an ascendancy, that it may rank as the popular belief throughout the empire—it is evidently the same with that of Boodh, or of the Lama, which has its central seat in Thibet. Its introduction into China is comparatively recent, being referred by the best authorities to about the sixty-fifth year of the Christian era. De Guignes states that Ming-ti, the fifteenth prince of the Han dynasty, proceeding on a speech made by Confucius, that the most holy was to be found in the west point, from Shan-Tung, the residence of the Chinese prophet, sent messengers westwards in search of a fitting object of adoration. Their search led them to the Grand Lama, or Lassa, when they saw the ceremonies of this religion performed with dazzling pomp; and this fully answering their expectations, that carried back with them some bonzes, or priests of this faith.

Dr. Lardner states that the Romish missionaries were particularly struck with the great similarity between the rituals of this and their own worship, so that some could scarcely perceive any distinction—such as the burning of joss-stick or incense; the worship of images, and particularly of a female with a child in her arms called the universal mother; the stringing and counting of beads; and even the robes worn by the chiefs of the monastic orders. All their objects of worship are men elevated into divinities; yet, these are raised to so lofty a height that they scarcely differ from the deities of other popular systems. The leading principle of the system which bears the name of Fo or Boodh, as also of the Brahminical faith in India, is the metempsychosis; that is, that the soul of man after death passes into and animates the body of other men and even animals. If a man conduct himself in this life strictly according to the precepts of his religion, or what is considered too frequently equivalent—fees his priests handsomely—he may rest assured that after death he will animate the body of a mandarin, or general, or even of a prince: if he pursue a different line of conduct he will rise again in the condition of a labourer, a beggar, a horse, a dog, or some other low grade of animal. The missionaries are said to have sometimes found this creed advantageous to their views. Application was one day made to them by a pensioner of the emperor, who was induced to change his religion for the following reasons. The priests had warned him that for the good things he enjoyed in this life, added to his want of liberality to them, he must prepare to spend the next as one of the post horses which convey despatches from province to province, but they cheered him with the prospect that if he ran well and consumed little provender his subsequent birth would be in a more elevated station. This prospect so haunted his mind, that even in sleep he heard the crack of the whip, and awoke often in a cold sweat, scarcely knowing if he were a horse or a man. Thus tormented by his apprehensions, although he felt no decided preference for the doctrine of the missionaries, he determined rather to be a Christian than a post horse.

Le Comte has related some ludicrous instances in which the bonzes turn this creed to their own profit. Two of them happening to spy a pair of fat ducks in a farm yard, were seized with an earnest desire to feast upon them; with this view they drew near and began to weep and lament most bitterly. The good woman to whom the ducks belonged, on inquiring the cause of their affliction, was informed that the ducks were their deceased parents, whose certain destiny of being sold, killed and eaten, they were now deploring. The kind hearted creature finding no other means to pacify them, at length presented to them the objects of their filial affections. After profuse expressions of thankfulness and making many prostrations before their feathered relatives, they carried them home, when their reverend ancestors were immediately plucked, put to the spit, and afforded a savoury meal to their ingenious offspring.

Numbers are held in equal esteem by the Chinese as with other nations, and are in many respects the same with the Egyptians and Chinese. The monad, or Egyptian unity (says Horapello, in his first book) is considered as the generating cause of every number, a sentiment similar to that of the Chinese, which ascribes the origin of all things to numbers.

The number three derives importance from the three great powers in the universe. The Chinese say numbers begin at one, are made perfect at three. There were originally three degrees of nobility among them, in imitation of the three glorious lights—the sun, the moon, and the stars. Three with the Egyptians stands for the plural; hence, when they would denote the multiplicity of an object, they repeat the word which stands for it three times. In China three suns denote effulgence; three tongues excessive talking; three forms of the symbol for grass constitute the generic for plants, herbs, and trees; three trees represent a forest. Among the incantations of the Chinese is the following remarkable one. Write the words "three stars," repeating in recitative tones "Three stars, which produced me, come! three stars which nourish me, come! three stars which protect me, come!"

Incantations and fearful spells, composed of three and its multiple, have and even still do hold in awe not only the Pagan minds of the Asiatics, but, as the following anecdote will testify, retain their influence even among ourselves:—Dr. James Johnson says, he knew a gentleman whose life was rendered wretched by the number three: whenever that unlucky number came across him, he was seized with a fit of horrors, and continued so for days, though his reason told him it was an illusion—till if by some means he could contrive to break the spell he was again as well as ever. He one day fancied a watch which he saw hanging in a pawnbroker's window, and purchased it; all was well, till some time after in winding it up he discovered its number was 333; to add to his misery the number of the pawnbroker's house was 33, while, to crown the distressing catalogue, he remembered he had paid three guineas for the watch. Ridiculous, says Dr. Johnson, as this train of coincidences may appear, it cost the poor gentleman more than three months of mental suffering during which, as spell bound, he pined away to a skeleton, and was at length obliged to travel several hundred miles to London, to find out the pawnbroker, to whom he returned the watch for two guineas; from that instant the spell was broken, and he was himself again.

Professor Kidd states, that during the Han dynasty in China, a peculiar cap was worn at court, and invented by the emperor—derived from their never failing sources of variety, the grand three; the celestial, the terrestrial, and animal worlds. The first specimen is termed the orbicular, cloudy cap of nine seams; this cap was exclusively appropriated to imperial majesty, with seven seams to a noble, five to a magistrate, and three to one of the literati; no minister was ever permitted to wear it. There is another specimen called the red lotus, or water lily cap, to which flower the shape of the cap is made conformable; this was possibly of Egyptian origin.

THE ORBICULAR CLOUDY CAP OF NINE SEAMS.

In Masonry we speak of "three or more," the latter being an indefinite number, but the same arithmetical progression would afford us the precise number devoutly venerated by the Hindoos, the Egyptians, and the Chinese; with the first emblemized by the sacred Zennar—with the second by the figure already shown in a former chapter, where Noah is represented on the lotus (the symbol of the ark) forming and supporting three triangles, each of which being a triform figure, represents three in one, and when multiplied by itself as three times three, gives nine—the square and perfection of three. The lotus cap of the Chinese, with nine seams, has the same signification, and alludes to the flood. In the Chinese language the same figure or character is used to represent a hill—a high place; and the term is also applied to Tien, Heaven or God, the one being often used by the Chinese for the other, as with us, "Heaven be praised" for "God be praised." The word is composed of three marks, each exactly resembling the Jod of the Hebrews, their symbol of God. These figures are united at the base to prove their unity, and when thus united they form the Hebrew letter Schin, which I showed in a former chapter was worn by the ancient Jews on their head phylacteries as a symbol of the Deity.

THE PERFECTION OF THREE.

Can anything more plainly indicate the spark of divine revelation, obscured but not lost in the darkness of traditional record. With the exception of some few high northern regions where, according to the best authorities, an early intermixture of the descendants of Shem and of Japhet took place, and where their religious observances corresponded with the more southern tribes, I have, in accordance with my understanding, traced throughout the three grand divisions of the globe a triad of divinity, as symbolized by the equilateral triangle, and have evidenced its existence as a symbol from the primæval days of man.

It yet, however, remains for me to show how it found its way into Britain, how it became employed in the science of Masonry; to explain its different properties and characters, and to trace its ascent up the Masonic ladder to the degree of Knight Templar, in which we find it intimately blended with the most sacred emblem of the Christian faith. This, however, comprises a field of inquiry so wide, so replete with matter, and so inseparably connected with a consideration of all our Masonic symbols, customs, and observances, that it must form the subject of another treatise.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

LANCASHIRE MASONIC SONG BOOK.

THE practice alluded to by Bro. H. J. Hinxman, M.D., in No. 15 of the Magazine, seems at present to be peculiar to Lodge No. 150, where it is never deviated from. The custom is not usual in Lodges Nos. 50, 226, and 333, though the brethren of all the three Lodges are in the habit of singing Masonic songs, intermingled with others. The work inquired about by Bro. M. Cooke, in No. 16 of the Magazine, is the same no doubt as that mentioned by Bro. Dr. Hinxman. An allusion to it will be found in the Freemasons' Magazine and Masonic Mirror (vol. iv. or v.), in the report of a meeting of Prince Edwin's Lodge, No. 150; my file of the Magazine commencing with January, 1859, I am unable at present to give more particular reference. As Bro. M. Cooke wishes for an exact transcript of the title page, I have great pleasure in now sending one, which is as follows:—

"The Free Masons' Melody, being a general Collection of Masonic Songs, Cantatas, Duets, Anthems, Odes, Eulogies, Catches, Glees, Sonnets, Oratorios, Prologues, and Epilogues (chiefly adapted to familiar Tunes), containing the largest number hitherto published, and many that never before have been printed, to which are added, the Royal Free Masons' Charities, a List of the Officers of the United Grand Lodge, with the Remarkable Occurrences in Masonry, and a List of Lodges down to the Present Time. By the Brethren of Prince Edwin's Lodge, No. 209, Bridge Inn, Bury, Lancashire. Bury: Printed and Sold for the Society, by R. Hellawell, Market Place. 1818."

The book consists of 432 printed pages, demy 12mo. The compilers of the above mentioned volume have been more zealous than wise; for along with the finest Masonic poems of every description which they could bring together, they have included many doggerel productions, and a great number of songs written by brethren who have been initiated into the Craft and yet failed to perceive the real meaning of our beautiful symbolic teaching. Thus their definition of Freemasonry is not merely conviviality, but downright drunkenness. Anxious, like our V.W. Bro. Kelly, to see "a good collection of English Masonic songs" published for the use of Lodges, so that brethren may have no excuse for ever introducing any that are unbecoming our meetings, I trust I may not be thought taking too much upon me when I suggest, that before a second edition of the Freemasons' Melody is ever issued, it will be for the good of Masonry in general that the work be carefully re-edited.—GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL.

ETYMOLOGY OF THE WORD "COWAN."

I, for one, thank Bro. Matthew Cooke for his paper on the etymology of the word "Cowan" in your No. 14 of October 8th; and would, in regard to his notes, only remark that, granting Jamieson's notice of "Cowan" to be correct and properly applicable to inferior workmen in Masonry, &c., &c.—as Bro. Cooke correctly quotes at length—I do not quite agree that our defence is against inferior workmen as such, but rather as Coyons, which I find in the Delphin French and Latin Dictionary of Monsieur L'Abbé Danet (Lyons edition, 1721), to be a mot populaire et bas, and to signify lasche, poltron, and to be translated by the Latin words ignavus, recors, faint hearted, cowardly, lazy; or in Swedo-Gothic, kughon a silly fellow, homo imbellis a poltroon. But still this etymology does not to my mind appear to carry the meaning of "cowan" far enough, nor without a certain elasticity of imagination convey the reason why cowans should be totally excluded from a Mason's Lodge of any degree, seeing that even the uninitiated, who are not Masons, are admitted under proper regulations; although want of courage, diligence, and skill, should operate as a bar to Masonic admission and advancement, yet not peculiarly so more than many other qualities not heard of in "good report." It therefore seems to me that we must still seek for the reason of the special, unconditional, and total exclusion of cowans as "cowans to Masonry," by reference to some peculiar meaning proper to that very term as used in Masonry. We are not helped in this inquiry by quotations of the word or its illustrated uses in Masonic documents, because, whatever "cowan" means, it may be taken fairly to mean now what it always meant among Masons, namely, something shocking and antagonistic to the spirit and nature of Freemasonry, its objects, and its obligations. It is certainly to be regretted that we should still have to seek the etymology of a word which has been in familiar use for so long with certain conventional meanings attached to it by Masons, and still more that orthographical similarity alone should have led us—in the Hebrew cohen, the Greek κωρυς, the Latin quietus whence coy, the Swedo-Gothic kughon, the French coyon and courage, or in old French culvert, i. e. culum vertere to turn tail, the Italian codardo with the same radical sense, the Icelandic kufwa to cow, i. e. to depress with fear, the Arabic gabana, corin, to defraud, &c., &c.—to seek for the meaning of a word specially used by Masons, and that, apparently, not with a close regard to its general vernacular meaning. What we want is, to have "cowan" put before us, definite and constant in its meaning as applied by us, and consistent with the sense of its root as popularly used (if we can find it), without any strained or straitened imagination to help us. This, I think, is the desideratum with Bro. Cooke as well as myself and many others I know, and in the same spirit of deferential but sincere inquiry which seems to actuate Bro. Cooke, I would offer him and your readers the following extract of Masonic notes I have from time to time made for my own satisfaction.

"Cowan" from what I have been able to make out, is not of Hebrew, Greek, Arabic, Roman, Teutonic, or French origin, nor have we, so far as I can ascertain, evidence of its use in Freemasonry before the era of Masonic excellence in Scotland, where the word is still vernacular, but not to my knowledge in any sense similar to ours, except in the West of Scotland as a slang term of reproach applied to black sheep, knob sticks, or other degenerate, political, and trade unionists; and I deem it not improbable that this use of it is rather the derivative than author of the Masonic sense of "cowan."

Sir Walter Scott, in "Rob Roy," puts the word into the mouth of a Gael, when he makes Allan Inverach say "She does not value a Cawmil (i. e. Campbell) mair as a cowan, and you may tell McCallum More (the Duke of Argyll) that Allan Inverach said sae;" and as explaining the sense of "cowan" he makes Major Galbraith reply "There ne'er was treason in Scotland but a Cawmil was at the bottom of it." Now Sir Walter Scott was a good Mason, and also (perhaps more to our present purpose) a sound and critical Scotch scholar, and I think may be taken as an authority here; and this sense of the word "cowan" I believe to be that accepted for the word in its use by the ancient Freemasons of Scotland, apart from that other vernacular "cowan" as defined by Jamieson to mean a lazy and inferior stonemason or dyker, which, by the bye, means "fencer," or fencemaker of turf or stone, or ditch—"dyke" being ditch in Scotland as well as England, testante, old Scotch proverb:—"February fill the dyke with either black or white," i. e. dust or snow.

I think that our "cowan" is of Scotch origin, but derived from the Erse or Gaelic stock, rather than the Saxon. Sir Walter Scott makes a Gael use it as a term of reproach against the then Duke of Argyll, well known to be no lazy bungler at any work he undertook; but a skilful, deep and politic personage, notorious for his Punica fides amongst the highland clans, and an ally of the Hanoverian government for the purpose of breaking up the Celtic feudal principles and clan combinations. Now the Gaelic or Erse language as spoken in the neighbourhood of Inverness, and perhaps elsewhere in the north of Scotland, has the word cowachan pronounced koo-a-chan (the ch gutturally), which means literally a faithless, base and contemptible fellow, void of moral worth, and is applied to a coward, also to a traitor; in both cases, because of the base nature of the character who wants courage, and cannot be trusted. The force of "cowachan" being increased by its being itself a diminutive—cowachan pronounced softly, and not gutturally, would be cowa'an, and here I believe we have the very word cowan of our Scotch Masonic formula, in the same sense—a base man in whom trust cannot be reposed—one, in short, void of all moral worth, and who cannot seek the tyled recess uninfluenced by mercenary or other unworthy motives; literally a cowachan, and therefore the interdicted and antithematized "cowan" of Masonry.

It is worthy of remark, that the Swedo-Gothic kughon, and the Gaelic cowachan, should both embrace the guttural diphthongs oh and ch, which we know are perfectly convertible; and it is possible that there may be between these two words more than a mere orthographical affinity. I trust that some brother having access to the means will improve the occasion by tracing their etymology more in detail, and favouring us with his results.—M. D. No. 68, Haddington St. John's, Kilwinning; P.M., No. 700; P. Prov. S.G.W., Stafford.

WHO WAS G. FIELD?

In that very useful work, Watts's Bibliotheca Mathematica, vol. iv., under the head of "Masonic City," a reference is made to a "Proposal for a new System of Circular Architecture, and Plan of a Masonic City." Phil. Mag., vol. 29;" and on a reference to the 29th vol. of the Philosophical Magazine, p. 97, there is this system advocated by G. Field, Esq. In the plates that accompany the description (fig. 5), is a ground plan of such a city, the main roads forming a double intersecting triangle, and presenting at first sight somewhat of a Masonic emblematical appearance. The question I propound is, was G. Field a Freemason, and if so, what is known about him?—QUINCUNX.

CHAPITRE DE CLERMONT.

As Masons our fraternal intercourse often brings us into intimate relations with continental brethren, and we hear much of various orders, and rites, that are to us wholly unintelligible, one of which, the Chapter of Clermont, we are frequently reminded of, and when asking for a history or definition of its antiquity, purposes or powers, we constantly receive such curious accounts that we are more mystified than ever. Can you help us out of the difficulty?—E. J. S. and T. T.

[Our brethren hardly need to be informed that the history of the hauts grades is a very complicated one, and into which we do not propose to enter, but confine ourselves to a reply to the query of E. J. S. and T. T. Somewhere about the middle of the last century, the degrees of the French Lodges had assumed such a state of antagonism and dissension, owing to the many inventions and interpolations of unscrupulous, or needy brethren, that the Prince de Clermont, Louis de Bourbon, who presided over the Masonic fraternities, together with many influential brethren, became so disgusted with what had been done, in devising new degrees, that they resolved to put a stop to the evil, which they set about in that most effectual way to produce uniformity, by instituting another system. At the head of this party was the Chevalier de Bonneville, and in compliment to the prince, their head, they called the Chapter after him. In its rite it included all the system of Scotch Masonry which was brought forward by the Chevalier Ramsay, numbering somewhere about one hundred grades of continental Masonry denominated "Ecosais," and which were spread over Germany and the north of Europe, by the officers of the French army, and more especially by the Baron de Hund, and the Marquis de Bernez.]

FIRST LODGE IN NORTH AMERICA.

When was Masonry first instituted in America?—J. HODGES.

[According to Preston, the first Freemasons' Lodge in North America was established in New Jersey in the year 1730, by a warrant of the Grand Lodge of England, under the hand of the Duke of Norfolk, Grand Master.]

MASONRY IN MEXICO IN 1828.

Will some one, who is better read than myself on the politics of Mexico, tell me where I can find an account of the two national parties of Mexico, distinguishing themselves by the names of Ecosais and York, taken from the different initials of Freemasonry? And may I also inquire further, if these rites have formed any other political rallying cry?—A YORK MASON.

MASONRY AND THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

"As Masons," the song says:—

"Christians, and Jews, and Turks, and Pagans stand,
One blended throng, one undistinguished band."

Are there amongst us any members of the Society of Friends? I am induced to ask this question as the well known repugnance of that sect to take an oath makes it seem improbable that any of them are ranged under our banners; and if so it is a curious circumstance that there is one sect, and one alone, who are not partakers of our mysteries.—A. B. C.

GERMAN OPERATIVE MASONRY.

A friend, not a Mason, but an architect of some notoriety, has informed me that the operative German Masons have, in common with other handicraft trades, a peculiar sign and token, whether similar to that of the Freemasons he does not offer an opinion, but states that they are divided into two classes, Wort Maurers, and Schrift Maurers, i. e. Word Masons and Writ Masons. The Word Masons have no proof to give of their having been regularly apprenticed but by words and signs, while the Writ Masons are those who have not only the words and signs, but regular legal indentures. As an eminent master builder has lately stated, in a letter to the Times, respecting the supply of workmen in consequence of the strike, that his firm intends importing skilled labourers from Germany, some of the masters of work, who are members of our society, should keep this in mind and, when occasion presents itself, ascertain if these Word Masons hold anything in common with the Craft, for if they do the information is of immense importance as a connecting link between the operative guildsman of the dark ages and the speculative Mason of the present day.—EMOOC.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS' FIRST MEETING IN AMERICA.

When did the first meeting of Knights Templar take place in America?—JACQUES.

[According to Cross's Masonic Templars' Chart, p. 94, it is stated to have been on the 13th of May, 1797, at Philadelphia].

IS MR. SICKLES A MASON?

Being in company with an American brother lately, among many names well known to us on this side the Atlantic, he mentioned Mr. Sickles, the hero of a late scandal in New York; can it be true that he is a Mason?—J. C.

[We cannot positively take upon ourselves to say, but refer "J. C." to p. 980 of the Freemasons' Magazine for December, 1857, where he will find "D. Sickles, Min. of State," attached to the minutes of the Supreme Grand Council, 38°, New York].

REFERENCE TO QUOTATION WANTED.

Where do the lines occur?—

"God hath made mankind one mighty brotherhood, Himself the Master, and the world their Lodge."

P.G.S.D.

THE THREE T'S, OR TRIPLE TAU.

Strolling the other day into the court of the Lords Justices, in Lincoln's-inn, I was struck by an escutcheon above the dais bearing three T's, disposed thus, T^T T. To what can it allude? Perhaps some legal brother, or companion, can solve the mystery.—AN R. A. COMP.

THE RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

Inquiry was made by one of the correspondents of Masonic Notes and Queries about this degree. It is essentially Christian, and the incidents on which it is founded are said to have occurred in the reign of Darius, king of Persia. The habit of the order is a white robe, or tunic, with a cross fleury on the left side made of red velvet, having a letter X with a P rising from it, embroidered on the centre, and the letters Q upon one arm of the cross, and A upon the other. The style of the Grand Commander is, "Illustrious Grand Master."—ROSY CROSS.

BRITISH LODGES OF ILLUMINATI.

In Bro. McConochie's Short Defence of British Freemasonry the following passage occurs:—"With respect to the Illuminati, Professor Weishaupt, the founder of the order, is still alive, to vindicate, if he can, his own character and cause; and should he continue silent, when both have been so forcibly attacked, it will certainly be no inconsiderable argument of the truth of Professor Robison's assertions. But, admitting the whole to be true, we can trace no kind of connection between British Freemasonry and the tenets of the Illuminati, unless, as the Professor seems to insinuate, we are in the plot, though we do not know it. I am, however, firmly convinced, that before Professor Robison's publication appeared in the world, more than three fourths of the Freemasons of Great Britain never heard of the existence of the order; and I cannot help thinking the Professor deals unfairly by his quondam brethren, and still more unfairly by his country, in not naming the places where the ten lodges of Illuminati in Britain are held, in order that we might be on our guard against 'those wolves in sheep's clothing,' whose sentiments and views are so dissimilar from our own."

The writer would like to know if the words he has underlined above,—"where the ten lodges of Illuminati in Britain are held,"—ever has received a satisfactory elucidation, as they must have become known in time—and of whom they were composed. This is one of those questions that old members of the Craft can the more readily answer, and it is important in an historical point of view, that these difficulties should be cleared up. There can be no fear of wounding the feelings of any living brethren by disclosing what is known of the association in question, and those who could enlighten us are but few in number, and ought not to let the secret die with them.—HENRY J. B.

Poetry.

SELECTIONS FROM POETRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

AN ANTIENT SONG.

Let Nell in smiles be ever seen,
And kind as when our loves began;
And be my pastures ever green,
And new crops spring when harvest's done,
My cattle thrive and still be fat,
And I my wish shall find in that.
Oh let my table furnished be
With good fat beef and bacon too,
And nappy ale be ever free
To strangers that do come and go.
My yards with poultry and with swine
Well stored, and eke my ponds with fish,
My barns well crammed with hay and grain,
And I shall have in this my wish.
Let me in peace and quiet live
Free from all discontent and strife;
And know from whom I all receive,
And lead a homely harmless life.
Be neat, in homespun clothing clad;
And still to add to all my bliss,
My children train in fear of God,
And all on earth I wish is this.

THE CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHER.

BY SIR WILLIAM DAVENANT.

THE good in graves, as heavenly seed, are sown,
And at the morn's first spring, the general doom,
Will rise—not by degrees, but fully blown—
When all their angels to their harvest come.
Cannot Almighty Heaven (since flowers which pass
Thawed through a still, and there commingle too,
Are raised distinct in a poor chymist's glass)
Do more in graves than their alembicks do!
God bred the arts, to make us more believe
(By seeking Nature's covert mysteries)
His darker works, that faith may thence conceive,
He can do more than what our reason sees.
Oh coward faith—religion's trembling guide!
Whom even the dim-eyed arts must lead, to see
What Nature only from our cloth does hide Causes remote, which Faith's dark dangers be.
Religion, ere imposed, should first be taught—
Not seem to dull obedience ready laid,
Then swallow'd straight for ease; but long be sought—
And be by reason counselled, though not swayed.
God has enough to humankind disclosed;
Our fleshly garments He a while receiv'd,
And walked as if the Godhead were deposed,
Yet was he then but by a few believed.

The faithless Jews will at this doom confess—
 Who did reject him for his low disguise,
 But if he could have made his virtue less,
 He had been more familiar to their eyes.

Frail life! in which thro' mists of human breath
 We grope for truth, and make our progress slow
 Because by passion blinded—'till by death
 Our passions ending we begin to know.

Oh reverend death! whose looks so soon advise
 E'en scornful youth—whilst priests their doctrine waste—
 Yet meeks us too; for he does make us wise,
 When by his coming our affairs are past.

Oh harmless death! whom still the valiant brave,
 The wise expect, the sorrowful invite,
 And all the good embrace, who know the grave
 A short dark passage to eternal light.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE CASE OF MISS CRANE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Referring to my last letter, which you were good enough to insert in your number of 15th Oct. last, relative to the case of Miss Crane, candidate at the election of the Governesses' Benevolent Institution, and formerly pupil of the Girls School—will you allow me, through your columns, to thank those brethren who have taken interest in the case, and to state that she was successful at the recent election. She polled 294 votes, making with her previous votes 2,890, and was second on the poll.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours truly and fraternally,
 JOHN SYMONDS.

3, Ingram-court, Fenchurch-street, E.C.,
 8th Nov., 1859.

A MASONIC APPEAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have just received the accompanying note from Bro. Wm. Evans, the son of the known and respected Masonic Jeweller of Great Queen-street.

I have for some time sought for a situation for this young man, but without success, and I therefore conclude, with your kind permission, to ask the brethren generally whether any of them can give or obtain for him employment, in however humble a capacity, whether in private establishment or a public office.

I shall be happy to hear from any brother who can do this service for Bro. Evans.

I would observe, that this is not an appeal for charity; I know that would be declined. The object is to be employed, anyhow, anywhere, whereby he can obtain an honourable livelihood.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, very truly yours,
 JOHN MOTT THEARLE.

198, Fleet-street, London, Nov. 4th, 1859.

"8rd November, 1859.

"DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Knowing you to have been an intimate friend of my late father, I am induced to solicit your advice as to what steps I should take to better my position. I am sorry to say that, through unavoidable losses and misfortunes, I have been obliged to discontinue my Masonic business and seek some other employment; I should be thankful for any occupation, and would cheerfully accept a small rate of remuneration to commence with, my earnest desire being to keep myself and family respectable. Knowing the influential connection you command, I thought perhaps you might be able to interest yourself some way in my behalf; and your doing so would be a truly Masonic act to yours fraternally and obediently,

"WILLIAM B. R. EVANS."

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

THE consecration of the St. James's Union Chapter, No. 211, and the installation of Principals, will take place on Tuesday, November 22nd, at the Freemasons' Tavern—the whole of the ceremonies will be conducted by Officers of the Supreme Grand Chapter, especially appointed by the M.E.G.Z. The business of the day will commence at one o'clock precisely.

THE anniversary festival of the Royal Athelstan Lodge of Instruction, No. 19, is postponed from Tuesday, the 22nd, till Tuesday, the 29th November, when Bro. Levinson, W.M. of the parent Lodge, will preside.

THE Albion Lodge of Instruction, meeting at the Western Masonic Hall, Old Bond-street, will work the ceremony of installation on the 20th instant—Bro. M. Levinson has consented to perform the duties of installing Master; and on the 27th the fifteen sections will be worked.

THE BOYS' SCHOOL.

THERE is no person so likely to damage the position of a man as an injudicious friend—and such a friend Bro. the Rev. C. Woodward, Head Master of the Freemasons' Boys School, possesses in an eminent degree in the person of Bro. Joseph Braithwaite, who has favoured us with a second letter, which we append. Before adverting to the statements in that letter, we will briefly record the proceedings at the general committee of the school on Saturday last, at which Bro. Braithwaite was present, though taking no part in those proceedings. On the minutes of the House Committee being read, Bro. Warren called attention to the minute, which showed that a special committee had been summoned to consider a complaint of Mr. Riley that too much duty was thrown upon him by the Head Master—and asked for some explanations relative to the alleged differences between the masters.

A letter from Mr. Riley to the Secretary having been read, stating that a paper signed by the Rev. C. Woodward and himself, professing to be an agreement between them as to their respective duties, had been so "plausibly" drawn as not to give a correct idea of the amount of his labours, Bro. Hopwood, P.G.D., as chairman of the House Committee on the occasion when the complaint of Mr. Riley was brought under consideration, stated that a committee was summoned, owing to the receipt of a letter from Mr. Riley, the second master, almost before he had been a week in office, asking the committee to define the duties of his position. At that committee he handed in a written paper, which Bro. Hopwood read, and which with great particularity entered very minutely into his employment, half hour by half hour, from six o'clock in the morning until eight o'clock in the evening, and by which it would certainly appear that he had the whole burden of the management thrown upon him. Bro. Hopwood, however, explained, that on being questioned Mr. Riley admitted that the labours of the school were shared with him by the head master, though owing to the alterations in the school house not being yet completed, he was being continually called out to give directions to the workmen, or from other causes; and the Rev. C. Woodward stated that it was true heavier duty might have devolved upon Mr. Riley for a short time than would ultimately be the case, owing to the incompleteness of the alterations in the school house, and the number of new pupils admitted; but at the same time an equal pressure bore upon himself. Looking at all the circumstances, the committee suggested that the two masters should agree between themselves on their respective duties, and submit the result to the House Committee at the next meeting. This they agreed to do, and at his (Bro. Hopwood's) suggestion, the Rev. C. Woodward and Mr. Riley shook hands, and the committee separated, believing they had restored peace between them. Since that time a statement of the duties of the two masters had been drawn up and signed by them, and he was now as much astonished as any brother could be, at hearing the letter of Mr. Riley, declaring that a statement, to which he had placed his signature, was so "plausibly" drawn up as to be calculated to deceive the committee, and he was at a loss to imagine what excuse Mr. Riley could offer for signing a document which he so described.

Bro. Warren thanked Bro. Hopwood for his explanation, from which he stated it was clear that differences still existed between the masters; and as a house divided against itself could not stand, neither could a school with differences between the masters be efficiently conducted. Having no acquaintance with either master, he moved that the letter be referred to the House Committee for consideration, with a request that they would report thereon at the next meeting of the General Committee. Bro. Warren at the same time, remarked upon the agreement for a division of labour between the masters, as laying down a system of education positively absurd in such a school, and impossible to be efficiently carried out. Bro. Hopwood seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

And here our notice would have ended, if penned at all, but for the letter of Bro. Braithwaite. He, however, compels us to take up the cudgels, and, though we are reluctant to interfere with the internal management of the schools, we are compelled, in the interests of the subscribers and of the pupils, whose future prosperity in life depends in a great measure upon the efficiency of their education, to do so. We shall pass over that portion of the letter in which Bro. Braithwaite attempts to draw a distinction between correspondents and ourselves, which—when we make statements, though founded upon information coming to us from others—we altogether repudiate. We also affirm that the facts of the case show that the two masters are not united in action, and that, therefore, differences exist between them; and it is a mere begging of the question to say that there had been no personal dispute. As regards the designing and superintending the alterations in the school, we always understood that that had been done by Bro. Roberts, the architect, and it is quite new to us that Bro. Woodward has had anything to do with them, beyond perhaps answering a few questions of the builders or workmen.

But there is a question of far greater importance than the disputes between two gentlemen, which may be easily settled by the committee asking for the resignation of one or both;—and that is the nature of the education to be afforded to the pupils—and here, without in any way wishing to disparage the talent of the Rev. C. Woodward, we must be allowed to say that he wholly misunderstands the institution over which he has been called upon to preside, as evidenced in the plan of education signed by him and Mr. Riley. Our boys are not designed for the university, but the majority of them will probably, on leaving the school, have to prepare for “roughing it” in the world and obtaining their living by the labour of their hands and the sweat of their brow; and to such Latin, Greek, and the last book of Euclid, will be perfectly useless, even if they had time to properly master them before the age of fourteen, at which they leave our care. Some few of the boys may probably obtain admission into the merchant’s counting house, and to them French will be almost indispensable, and German far more useful than either Greek or Latin. What is wanted in our school is, an education which shall fit the boys for the practical duties of life—that which is known as a sound commercial education, with bookkeeping, mensuration, French and German; leaving the classics for those, if such there be, whose guardians can, after they leave our school, give them a higher education to fit them for the learned professions. We by no means underrate the value of a classical education, but it is folly to expect boys of the age of fourteen to attain even a decent smattering of that which the young men of the higher classes devote their lives to the age of twenty-one or twenty-two to become versed in.

We have not forgotten the report of the examiner of the boys, Bro. the Rev. A. R. Ward, G. Chaplain, made only in March last, in which he says—“Some of the boys acquitted themselves very well indeed, especially Crichton and Guansiroli; some of the others, however, very indifferently. The subject in which there was the greatest deficiency was arithmetic; that was badly done by all, several of the boys not answering, or trying to answer, one single question. The spelling was generally bad.” In the face of such a report—and before efficiency has been attained in these most essential branches of education—to talk of Greek, Latin, and the last book of Euclid, is simply absurd—and proves to our mind that the Rev. Charles Woodward does not yet understand the object of the establishment over which he presides. We trust that our Rev. Bro. Lyall—than whom we should conceive no man to be more competent—or some other member of the House Committee, will undertake to revise the scheme of education, bearing in mind the position the boys are probably destined to hold in the social scale, and the period which is allotted to them for the completion of their education—resting assured that should there at any time be an Admirable Crichton, an Isaac Newton, or George Stephenson amongst them, his own force of character will soon demonstrate the studies in which he takes the greatest interest; and we will be the last of the governors to protest against the highest possible education being given to him.

Until then we may well rest content with such an education as the majority of tradesmen’s sons obtain at our private commercial schools, and at the public schools where boys are brought up to fill positions in the mechanical and commercial world.

We conclude by laying before our readers the letter of Bro. Braithwaite which is couched in the following terms:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS’ MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—In reply to your article upon my letter, wherein you say “you do not see any necessity for such strong language,” I beg to say I had two reasons for using it:—

First. Because the complaints were of so serious a nature, that they would undoubtedly cause an irreparable injury to the institution when spread abroad in the provinces.

Second. After Bro. Woodward has designed and superintended the alterations that have made the school what it now is, (and it only requires the brethren to see it to admire it)—after he has laboured hard during the vacation to get it as forward and complete as possible—the charges against him drew forth such language as they deserved, and such as I hope will convince our provincial brethren that there was no cause for such “strange communications.”

I am charged in the same article with accusing you of having told a “barefaced lie.” Unless you did not receive the strange communications you published, you need not take to yourself an accusation intended for the originator of the reports.

And now with regard to “official information.” I trust you are satisfied after the explanation given at the last General Committee by our worthy Bro. Hopwood, that although the assistant master, Mr. Riley, did lay a complaint before a special House Committee, there never was a dispute between the two masters; that the head master had not so much as an idea that a complaint had been made until he was called before the said House Committee; and that the head master has not been absent even for one day.

Finally, I trust before any of the brethren forward you a report respecting either of our charitable institutions, they will previously certify themselves as to the verity of such report.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours very fraternally,
Notting Hill, November 8th, 1859.

JOSEPH BRAITHWAITE.

METROPOLITAN.

ROBERT BURNS LODGE (No. 25).—This Lodge held its second meeting this season, on Monday last, at the Freemasons’ Tavern, Bro. D. Ross Farmer, W.M., presiding, the whole of his officers being present, likewise the following P.Ms.—Bennett, Apted, Newton, Clements, Le Gassick and Robinson. The business of the evening consisted of three raisings, three passings, and two initiations (Messrs. Charlton and Thoburn). Bro. W. Smith in a very handsome manner, offered to serve as steward at the festival of the Royal Benevolent Fund, which will take place on the 25th January, 1860, when it is expected that a larger number of the Craft will be present than heretofore. This institution, the youngest of our Masonic charities, is still the weakest, although not the least useful, and ought to be well supported by the craft. We understand that eighteen Lodges have sent stewards for the next festival.

STRONG MAN LODGE (No. 53).—The second meeting for the season of this Lodge was held on Thursday, November 4th, at Bro. Ireland’s, the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane, Bro. Lundy, W.M., presided, supported by his officers, Bros. Dickie, S.W.; Ditchman, J.W.; Hales, S.D.; White, J.D., and Chambers, I.G. The Worshipful Master, with his usual ability, initiated three gentlemen into the Order, after which he performed two passings and one raising. A letter was received from the Grand Lodge, warning the brethren against a spurious Lodge established at Stratford, in Essex, under the title of the “Reformed Lodge of Memphis,” and cautioning them against receiving any of the members thereof. The letter was ordered to be inserted on the minutes. The Lodge was then closed, and between thirty and forty brethren sat down to an excellent dinner. After which the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and the evening was spent in the true spirit of Masonry.

ROYAL JUBILEE LODGE (No. 85).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, November 7th, at Anderton’s Hotel, Fleet-street, Bro. Clemow, W.M.; Bro. Clout, S.W., and Bro. Lascelles, J.W., being present. No business was transacted, but the members dined together, in addition to Bro. Ward, P.M. No. 12; Bro. Ruston, S.W. No. 82, and Bro. Workman, No. 206. The usual toasts were given, and the evening was most harmoniously spent.

LODGE OF GOOD REPORT (No. 158).—At the regular meeting, held on Thursday, November 3rd, at Radley’s Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, Bro. Charles Smale, P.M., acted as W.M., in the absence of Bro. Aguilar, recently appointed to a command of one of H.M.’s gunboats. Bro. Hobbs was raised to the third degree. A ballot was taken for the admission of a gentleman to be initiated at the ensuing Lodge. Bros. How and Merton were visitors on this occasion. After the business of the Lodge was concluded, the brethren dined together.

ST. THOMAS’S LODGE (No. 166).—This Lodge met for the first time this season at the Freemasons’ Tavern, on Saturday, the 5th of Nov., Bro. Luce, W.M.; Cockcroft, S.W.; Batty, J. W. (pro tem.); Archer, P.M.; Wyatt, P.M. and Sec.; G. States, P.M. (G.S.B. for Berks and Bucks,) and many other brethren being present. The Lodge having been opened in the three degrees, the W.M. vacated the chair, and requested Bro. Archer, P.M., to undertake the ceremony of the third degree, which he very impressively performed by raising Bro. Gilbert to that sublime degree. The W.M. again resumed the chair, when five candidates were proposed for initiation at the next meeting, and two to join. After dinner, to the toast of "The Visitors," Bro. Collins, W.M., of the Readon Lodge, returned thanks. He said, to speak a word in praise of the excellence of the working was but to repeat that which they must be tired of hearing; he would, therefore, conclude by thanking the Lodge for the hospitality to "the visitors," at all times so liberally dispensed. A delightful evening was passed, much enlivened by the vocal abilities of Bro. Cockcraft, S.W., and Bro. G. States, P.M.

UNITED STRENGTH LODGE (No. 276).—The second regular meeting of this well known Lodge took place on Tuesday, the 8th inst., at St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell, when as usual there was a full attendance of members and visitors. The Masonic business of the evening gone through by the W.M., Bro. T. H. Bromley, was highly satisfactory to the assembled brethren. After which the brethren adjourned to a most sumptuous banquet, which reflected great credit on the worthy host of this well known hostelry.

BELGRAVE LODGE (No. 1051).—This Lodge held its first anniversary on Wednesday, at the Lodge room, Denbigh Place. The chief business was the installation of the W.M. elect, Bro. Froud; this imposing ceremony being performed by the retiring W.M., Bro. Woodstock, whose reputation as an able Mason and a ruler of the Craft is so well known and appreciated; and it is needless to say, that in his hands the ceremony lost nothing of its beauty and impressiveness. On being installed, Bro. Froud received the salutations of the brethren in the three degrees according to ancient custom, and invested his principal and other officers, appointing Bro. Runting, S.W., and Bro. Grogan, J.W. On the termination of Masonic business, the brethren, to the number of thirty, including a large number of visitors, sat down to dinner. A distinguished P.M. of the St. James's Union Lodge (No. 211) added greatly to the harmony of the evening by singing some pleasing ballads.

PRINCE WILLIAM FREDERICK LODGE (No. 1055).—An emergency meeting of this Lodge was held on Saturday, November 5, at the Knight of St. John Tavern, St. John's-wood, when Bro. F. Goodchild was raised to the dignity of Master Mason, and Bro. Count de Wasskowsky passed to the degree of F.C. These ceremonies completed, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren retired to dinner, which was followed by the usual toasts and speeches, the evening being spent in a social and agreeable manner. The W. M. in the course of the evening alluded to the visit of Prince William Frederick and his illustrious wife to this country—the Lodge was named after and under the especial patronage of his royal highness—and he (the W. M.) hoped the Lodge would be honoured by a visit before his royal highness returned home, a communication having been forwarded to ascertain his royal highness's pleasure, the result of which would be communicated to every brother of the Lodge.

PROVINCIAL.

BRISTOL.

BRISTOL.—Moirs Lodge (No. 408).—At the regular monthly meeting of this Lodge, held at Freemasons' Hall, Bristol, on Wednesday, the 2nd instant, there was a numerous attendance of visiting brethren, the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master having signified his intention of paying an official visit together with his officers. The business of the Lodge consisted in the election of Worshipful Master, Treasurer, and Tylers for the ensuing year. Bro. Thos. Bell, Prov. G. Supt. of Works and P.M. of the Colston Lodge, No. 886, was unanimously chosen as Master; Bro. Wm. Harris, P.M., Prov. S.G.W., re-elected Treas.; and the Tylers re-appointed. This important business having been disposed of, the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., Bro. Wm. Powell, (P.M. of this Lodge), was announced, ordered to be admitted, and received with customary honours. He was attended by Bros. Jno. Kirby, P. Prov. S.G.W.; Jno. Linter, Prov. G. Sec.; J. A. Page, Prov. G.D.; A. Dimoline, Prov. G.D.; Thos. Bell, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; C. R. M. Powell, Prov. G. Org.; W. H. Bowden, Prov. G. Purst.; F. A. Ware and N. B. Sherrard, Prov. G. Stewards. The R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master congratulated the brethren of the Moira Lodge upon their selection of W.M., although in his private capacity, as a member of the Lodge, he regretted that circumstances had compelled them to set aside two very old rules which had for many years been regularly adhered to in this Lodge, viz.—that the W.M. should invariably pass through the Junior and Senior Wardens' chairs in succession; and also, that no Past Master of another Lodge should be elected. He thanked the brethren for the liberal manner in which they had contributed to the Masonic fund he had been instrumental in raising towards the restoration of Saint Mary Redcliffe Church, a fund which, in a very short time, had reached nearly £500. He also alluded to a subject now under the consideration of many influential provincial brethren, viz.—the right of Provincial Lodges to a better representation in Grand Lodge, and trusted when the matter came before them it would receive their serious attention. The W.M., having suitably replied, the Prov. Grand Lodge retired, and the brethren were called from labour to refreshment. When the usual loyal and Masonic toasts having been given by the Worshipful Master (the health of the W.Ms. of the various Lodges being responded to by Bro. Dimoline, No. 81; C. R. M. Powell, No. 120; J. J. Peters, No. 221; W. A. Scott, No. 886; and J. MacPherson, No. 986), the Lodge again resumed labour, and was finally closed at ten o'clock P.M. The annals of this Lodge for the past few years afford a striking example of the utter absurdity of framing arbitrary rules, beyond those laid down by the valuable Constitutions of the Order. An attempt rigidly to adhere to the two alluded to by Bro. Powell has been the means of wellnigh breaking up this once flourishing Lodge. Only one W.M. has been elected for several anniversaries out of the pale of the P.Ma., and the attendances are frequently so scanty that the Lodge cannot be opened without the assistance of visitors. We trust, under the influence of the worthy and deservedly popular brother now elected to the chair, brighter days are in store. The installation will take place on the first Wednesday in December.

LANCASHIRE EAST.

MANCHESTER.—Lodge of Affability (No. 399).—The regular monthly meeting was held at the Masonic Lodge-rooms, Cross-street, on Thursday, November 3rd. There were present—Bros. Hine, W.M.; Thorley, Higginbottom, Wright, Daniell, Percy, Powell, Titmas, Allan, Percival, Visitors—Bros. Bradley, Jones, Booth, Yates, Failda, Behrend, Baldwin, Haring, Moss, Wright, Nathun, Jackson, Ledward, M. Jones, Heath. The minutes of the last regular Lodge were read and confirmed. After the ballot for his initiation had taken place, Mr. Sinclair was initiated into Freemasonry, and Bro. Wm. Powell was passed to the second degree by Bro. Hine, W.M., four propositions were made for initiation at the next meeting, and one for joining member. Bro. Hine, W.M., stated that since the last meeting, Bro. John James Lundy, P.M. of this Lodge, (residing at Leith), had been in Manchester on business, and as a resolution had been passed at their previous meeting to send Bro. Lundy the P.M.'s jewel, which the Lodge intended to present him with, in accordance with a resolution of the Lodge of August 4th, he thought it would be better for him and the Secretary, Bro. Percy, to wait on Bro. Lundy at his hotel, and in the name of the Lodge, present him with the jewel, which they did. Bro. Lundy expressed himself much pleased with this acknowledgment of his services to the Lodge, and requested that his thanks might be conveyed to the members. The resolution of August 4th, which was beautifully engrossed on vellum by Messrs. Hine and Marsh, Princess-street, Manchester, was presented to Bro. Lundy with the jewel. The remaining business having been concluded, the Lodge was closed, the brethren retired to the refreshment room, and separated at half-past ten o'clock.

ROYAL ARCH.

SUPREME GRAND CHAPTER.

THE quarterly convocation of the Supreme Grand Chapter was held in the Temple, on Wednesday, Nov. 2nd, there being present Comps. Hall, as Z.; Crohn, as H.; Havers, as J.; Roxburgh, Reg.; Clarke E.; Evans, N.; Hervey, as P. Soj.; Rev. A. R. Ward, and King, as Asst. Sojs.; Savage, S.B.; Slight, Stand. B.; Pocock, D.C.; Rev. C. Huyshe, G. Sup. of Devon; S. B. Wilson, P.S.B.; T. R. White, P.S.B.; Gole, P. Stand. B.; Symonds, P. Stand. B.; Bradford, P.D.C., &c., &c.

The minutes of the last convocation having been read and confirmed, The report of the General Committee was brought up. It stated that a complaint had been received from Comp. John Watkins, P.Z. of the St. John's Chapter, No. 196, against the Scribe E., and certain Past Principals of the Chapter, which, after due consideration, they had decided against Comp. Watkins. A petition had been received for a new Chapter, to be attached to the Grand Lodge, No. 1050, Bombay, but the petitioners not all being registered on the books of Grand Chapter, the committee could only recommend its being granted subject to the registration of such companions.

The report having been read, Comp. Watkins rose to move that that portion relative to the decision on the complaint made by him be not approved.

On the suggestion of Comp. J. Ll. Evans, the complaint and a counter statement were read. From these it appeared that the Scribe E. having sent a circular calling a convocation of the Chapter to Comp. Watkins, as M. E. Z., for approval, he, being a member of several learned and scientific societies, had added about a dozen letters after his name to show the position he held in society, but the Scribe had issued the circulars without such honorary additions to his name. Consequently upon the Companions assembling, Comp. Watkins attended and declared the convocation illegal, as having been called without his authority, and forbade the business being proceeded with. This mandate was not, however, obeyed—a P. Z. took the chair, and the business was regularly gone through and hence the complaint to the committee, which decided that no person has a right to place after his name on a Masonic summons any initials other than those of his Masonic honours, and that the Chapter having been regularly convened, the P. Za. and other companions were perfectly justified in proceeding to the business, notwithstanding the protest of the M. E. Z.

Against this decision Comp. Watkins now appealed, on the ground that as M.E.Z. his decisions were supreme, and could not be overruled by the members of the Chapter, and he therefore moved that that portion of the committee's report relating to the St. John's Lodge, be not approved.

Comp. Purday seconded the motion, and after a long and animated discussion, in which it was contended that no Master of a Lodge, or Principal of a Chapter can override the book of Constitutions and by-laws, but which we refrain from going into as involving too much of Masonic discipline.—

Comp. Savage moved that the report of the Committee be approved, which was seconded by the Rev. Comp. Huyshe, and carried.

The petition for the new charter was then read, and the warrant granted, subject to the recommendation of the Committee.

Comp. Hervey then brought forward the following resolution:—"That in colonies, where no Grand Superintendent of Royal Arch Masons has been appointed, private Chapters shall be authorised, in cases of real emergency (the reasons of which shall be stated in the returns to Grand Chapter), to exalt brethren at the expiration of four weeks from the time they have received the Master Mason's degree, provided always that in each case the three Principals of the Chapter agree to the emergency." He supported his motion on the ground that the privilege having been granted to colonies where there were Grand Superintendents, ought not in justice to be withheld from those where such officers had not been appointed.

Comp. Gole seconded the resolution.

Comp. Havers still held to his opinion, that it was not desirable to extend the privilege; but knowing that many of his friends agreed with Comp. Hervey that it was desirable, would not oppose further than by abstaining from voting.

Comp. Savage having expressed a similar determination, the question was put, and carried by 11 to 8.

The Grand Chapter was then closed in ample form.

AMERICA.

GENERAL GRAND LODGE OF THE UNITED STATES.

[THE committee appointed by the convention at Chicago, last September, for the organization of a General Grand Lodge have issued the following address. It will be observed that they address themselves to all the Grand Lodges of the continent of North America. This of course includes Canada; and herein is we fear an obstacle to their success. Whatever advantage might be derivable from an amalgamation of the various Grand bodies within the federal union of the United States—the projectors may be assured that there will not be wanting surmises of concealed political objects if they endeavour to include the British Provinces, and any suspicion of such tactics would, we need not say, immediately paralyse Masonic action.—ED.]

To the Most Worshipful Grand Masters and Grand Lodges of Antient Free and Accepted Masons on the Continent of North America:

FRATERNAL SALUTATIONS:—By the action of a convention of Grand Lodges, begun and holden in the city of Chicago, Illinois, the 13th day of September, 1859, in a response to a circular issued by the Grand Lodge of Maine, bearing date May, 1857; it is made the duty, as it is the pleasure of the undersigned to address you, and invite your early and earnest attention to the proceedings of the said convention; asking that you will, after due consideration, take such action thereon as, in your wisdom, the interests of your distinguished Grand body, and the interests of Craft Masonry seem to require.

The proceedings of the convention, which form a part of this circular, so fully define the objects of the organization, as to leave little for this committee to say by way of explanation. The Articles of the Association, in their most essential features, have been before the Grand Lodges of the country for nearly a year, in the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota, by her M.W. Grand Master, in response to the circular from Maine. A careful comparison of those Articles with these now submitted to your consideration will show the truth of our assertion, that they have been subjected to a patient and searching review by five of our number, as well as the careful scrutiny of a very large convention, representing nearly all the Grand Lodges of the United States, to which the largest liberty was allowed for criticism and amendment. We certify you that the articles agreed upon, and the course pursued in their adoption, give ample assurance of our desire to guard the rights, dignity, and authority of the several Grand Lodges, and to present the basis of an association "potent for good and impotent for evil," on which they may safely unite in promoting the progress and prosperity of our ancient and cherished fraternity.

Nor need we devote much time or space to show that Craft Masonry has need of such an organization. In the face of all assertions to the contrary, we array the simple facts unfolded in the history of efforts to secure this object, so fully presented in the proceedings of Minnesota, for 1858. We may also appeal to the able circular put forth by the convention which formed the basis of a national confederation in the city of Washington, in January, 1855.

If we go back to the formation of our national union, we find Pennsylvania nominating or distinguished brother, George Washington, as General Grand Master of Masons, and desiring the Lodges of the country to unite with her in placing him at the head of a General Grand Lodge. Georgia in 1790, South Carolina in 1799, and Pennsylvania in 1809, endeavoured to unite the Grand Lodges in a General Grand Lodge. In 1822, as the result of a convention held in the city of Washington, a resolution was adopted declaring it "expedient and for the general interests of the Order to constitute a General Grand Lodge of the United States."

The circular which was sent out to the Grand Lodges was signed by M.W. John Marshall, of Virginia; M.W. Henry Clay, of Kentucky; M.W. William Winder, of Maryland; Wm. S. Cardell, of New York;

M.W. Joel Abbot, of Georgia; John Holmes, of Maine; Henry Baldwin, of Pennsylvania; John H. Eaton, of Tennessee; M.W. Wm. H. Seaton, of Washington; M.W. H. C. Burton, of North Carolina; M.W. Christopher Rankin, of Mississippi; and M.W. Rev. Thaddeus Mason Harris, of Massachusetts.

As we turn to these early efforts and look back upon these venerable names, most of which are now transferred to "The Records of the Silent Lodge," we are reminded of the words of one of our own living poets (Albert Pike)—

"The dead govern—the living but obey."

The thoughts, the convictions and aspirations of the dead now animate the hopes, inspire the purposes, and direct the energies of the living. It would seem almost disrespectful to their memory to seriously reargue the question now, which they so well demonstrated in the maturity of their manhood.

It is true, their appeal was unsuccessful. Their cherished object was defeated by adverse action on the part of some Grand Lodges. Some of the arguments by which the Masonic writers of that day defeated this effort have been revived and republished in reply to the Maine circular, as the best possible arguments against it. We mean no disrespect to the living or the dead when we say that the circular signed by John Marshall, Henry Clay, and their illustrious compeers, remains to this day unanswered and unanswerable; a monument of Masonic fidelity and sagacity, worthy of their legal, civic, and literary fame, and their moral worth.

The committee deem it unnecessary to urge the consideration that the objects aimed at by the congress are worthy of the most earnest efforts of the ablest minds of the age. These objects are so fully stated in the Articles of Confederation as to need no enumeration. The whole field of Masonic labour and research, embracing all countries and all time, is before us, affording ample scope for our highest energies, leaving neither time nor motive for profitless controversy or arbitrary legislation.

The Masonic fraternity on this continent are in a course of resistless progress in numbers, in mental and moral force, with increasing desires for more light and a broader humanity. Our relations with the older nations, from which waves of population are flowing to us across the two great oceans of the world's commerce, are such as to render it increasingly desirable for us to know the condition and progress of our ancient Craft in those countries, where it had long been cultivated before its altars were consecrated on these western shores.

The practical question which all will weigh is—Will the experiment succeed? Will the objects aimed at be gained? If so, will the results justify the endeavour?

That will depend upon those who make the investment, which need not be very expensive surely, if all or a majority of the Grand Lodges shall cordially unite. The expenses of representation need not be a burden, as the meetings will occur but once in three years, and at the same time with the General Grand Masonic bodies. There is an array of talent and learning now in the Order which, if called forth, may furnish a rich intellectual banquet at every meeting, and may accumulate rich treasures of Masonic lore to benefit ourselves and those who come after us.

We believe that Freemasonry has yet a mission, an altar, and a priesthood, with a future more glorious than the past; and that the advancement of Christian civilization, so far from superseding or rendering it obsolete, will but enlarge and elevate the sphere of its labour, and make still higher demands for all the consecrated talent and Masonic skill we can train around our altars. Is it too much for us to ask a fair experiment for the organization here proposed?

May we not hopefully invite all the Grand Lodges on this continent to give their hand and heart to these Articles of Association, and meet us with a full representation of their highest wisdom and skill to the congress proposed for 1862? With this cherished hope, we ask that you will give an early response to this circular, so soon as your Grand Lodge shall be able to consider and decide upon the subject herein presented.

The committee also invite suggestions in relation to the subjects within the range of its inquiry, that may need the early attention of such a congress.

All communications, in reply to this circular, should be addressed to the chairman of this committee, care of Ira Berry, Esq., Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Maine, whose office is at Portland, Maine.

CYRIL PEARL, Maine; A. T. C. PIERSON, Minnesota; ALBERT G. MACKAY, South Carolina; JOHN L. LEWIS, jun., New York; PHILIP C. TUCKER, Vermont; GILES M. HILLYER, Mississippi; BENJAMIN B. FRENCH, District of Columbia; ELBERT H. ENGLISH, Arkansas; JOHN FRIZZELL, Tennessee.

Obituary.

BRO. EDWARD DANN.

THIS venerable brother, an annuitant of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons of £25 a year, expired at the asylum at Croydon on the 31st Oct., aged eighty-three, leaving a widow, who has been placed on the list to receive half her husband's annuity, according to the laws. Bro. Dann was initiated in the Royal Justice Lodge, No. 172, Deptford, in the year 1801, and having passed through the various offices, continued a subscribing member for thirty-two years, after which period he was elected an honorary member, and so continued until his death. He was elected to the benefits of the institution in 1853.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The Queen and her family may again be reported as in good health, the Prince Consort having recovered from the indisposition which prevented his going out last week. Prince Frederick William of Prussia and the Princess Royal arrived early on Tuesday morning at Dover, proceeded by special train on the Dover Railway to London, and thence by the Great Western Railway to Windsor, where they were welcomed by Her Majesty and the Prince Consort. Among the visitors to the Queen this week have been the Duchess of Kent, the Prince of Salerno, the Duke of Aumale. Wednesday was the eighteenth birthday of the Prince of Wales. The anniversary was observed with every mark of loyalty and respect; the various parish churches sent forth merry peals; the Royal Standard floated from the public buildings, and feux de joie were fired at the Royal arsenals, &c. In the evening there was a goodly display of illuminations. At Windsor Castle the troops paraded before the Queen and Prince Consort, and the members of the Royal Family, &c. In the evening her Majesty gave a dinner and also an evening party at Windsor Castle.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor of the French arrived in Paris from Compiègne on Tuesday, and proceeded to the Hotel du Louvre to pay a visit to the Grand Duchess Maria of Russia. The Moniteur publishes the following despatch of General Martimprey, dated Oct. 30:—"The Beni Snassen have submitted to the conditions of peace dictated to them. These tribes will give hostages, and will pay tribute as reparation for their unjust attacks. I stipulated that the chief of the mountain should come into my camp in order that I may receive guarantees for the fulfilment of the conditions of peace. He has just left my tent, where I received his visit. In four days I shall settle affairs with Ouchda, then those of the plain of the Angades and the Versants of Zekkara." The preparations for the Chinese expedition continue with great activity. Eight thousand men will probably take their departure during the first fortnight in December. No definite appointment of officers has yet been made to command the expeditionary corps. It would appear that some measures are in contemplation by the French Government to reduce the press to a still lower condition, in doing which they will find an experienced agent in M. Billault, as he has proved his expertness in warning, suspending, and suppressing. The correspondent shows up the "free" mode in which the election of public functionaries is carried on under the universal suffrage system.—Milan letters take a view of Italian affairs unfavourable to a satisfactory settlement. The whole country is said to be like a barrel of gunpowder, and ready to explode on the occurrence of the slightest accident. The Piedmontese Gazette publishes a decree transferring the Court of Cassation to Milan. The subscriptions to the loan continue; the applications are very numerous, and it is asserted that more than the amount required has already been subscribed. The four assemblies of Central Italy have been called together to receive from the government communications on the subject of the present situation of public affairs. Rumours were current at Genoa on Saturday, that an assembly will shortly be held, in which Modena, Tuscany, and the Romagna will take part; and it is asserted that the object of this meeting is to present Count Cavour as a candidate for the dictatorship of the provinces of Central Italy. Nevertheless we learn since that the National Assemblies of the Romagna, Parma, and Modena, have met, and have unanimously decided on the election of Prince Carignan as regent, while the Assembly of Tuscany has resolved to take into consideration the proposition to create Prince Carignan regent of Tuscany, in the name of the King of Sardinia, and will give its vote on this question immediately. The resolution was received with the cheering of the public. At Bologna, on Monday, the minister, Marquis de Pepoli, read before the Assembly a message, announcing that the government had always pursued a system of moderation, and further stated that the financial resources of the country had during the last quarter increased 1½ million, and concluded by saying that the establishment of a regency would place the credit of the country on a firm footing, and that Central Italy would appear before the Congress with more authority.—Advices from Naples to the 29th ult. state that the army of the Abbruzzi will go into cantonments during the winter. Sicily is more tranquil. Large public works are spoken of as about to be commenced throughout the kingdom. It is asserted that the principle of an amnesty had been decided on.—At Zurich on Sunday the French and Sardinian plenipotentiaries held a conference, lasting from twelve till two o'clock; after which a conference of all the plenipotentiaries was held, which lasted until three o'clock. The signature of the treaty has been delayed on account of Austria claiming payment of the forty millions of florins due by France on account of Piedmont in conventions münze, instead of the new Austrian currency. Baron de Bourqueney has referred the question to Paris for instructions, and it is thought that the difficulty will be overcome, and the treaty signed without further delay. It is stated on reliable authority that the Congress will meet in Paris, and not in Brussels.—On the 4th the war between Spain and Morocco commenced by capture of the Seylla, Morocco gun-boat, by the Spanish war steamer Alava, after an energetic resistance. The French have not performed their promise of carrying the Dons across the Straits.—A correspondence has taken place between Senor del Valle, chargé d'affaires of Spain at Tangiers, and the Minister of Morocco, Seid Mohamet el Khatib, in which the latter expresses his surprise that the former should have written as he had done (viz., making demands that the minister had no power to grant), when demand after demand had been acceded to, on three different occasions, solely to satisfy Spain; and stating, that if war should result, the Spaniards must be responsible for the consequences. A telegram from Madrid, dated Nov. 5, says that an official decree has been issued appointing General O'Donnell commander-in-chief of the expedition to Morocco. In the correspondence that has taken place between our Government and that of Spain relative to Spanish occupation at Tangiers, the English Government asks for a declaration, that if the Spanish troops should in the course of hostilities occupy Tangiers, such occupation should be temporary, and not extend beyond the ratification of a treaty of peace between the belligerents. This declaration the Spanish Government gave; and also, in reply to the objections of our Government to the occupation by Spain of the coast west of Ceuta, the Spanish Government gave an assurance that they have no intention of occupying any point on the said coast which would be dangerous to the navigation of the Straits. Tuesday's Gazette contains an official notification from the Spanish Government of the blockade of the ports of Tangier, Tetuan, and Larache, on the coast of Morocco, effected by the commander-in-chief of the Spanish naval forces on the coast of Africa, on the 28th of October.—It is stated on reliable authority, that at the recent interview which was held at Breslau, the Emperor of Russia and the Prince Regent of Prussia have determined not to consent to a revision of the treaties of 1815, or to take part in any Congress in which England would not be represented, the last resolution being proposed by Prussia.—In the secret sitting of the Second Chamber to-day, the proposal of M. Herrleins to present an address to the Elector in favour of the re-establishment of the constitution of 1831, has been definitely agreed to by 38 against 5 votes. The Elector has refused to receive the address of the Chamber of Deputies, and the Second Chamber is about to pass further resolutions, probably to forward an address to the Federal Diet.—The Africa has arrived at Liverpool with dates from New York to the 26th ult. The despatch of General Cass to Mr. Dallas in reply to that of Lord John Russell to Lord Lyons, on the San Juan affair, is said to have been forwarded to England, and is described as being firm and decided (in the American view). The affair, in its present shape is considered serious. The cricket match at Rochester had resulted in favour of the English. The trial of Brown and the Harbour Point conspirators was being proceeded with. The Court has prohibited detailed report of the proceedings from being published. General Mosquera has raised the standard of revolution in New Granada, and taken possession of Lartagona.—A telegram from Alexandria, of October 28th, states that the English authorities were making preparations for the transport of troops to China. The English General Malcolm has presented a rich present from her Majesty Queen Victoria to Said Pacha. The Moniteur of Wednesday publishes a despatch from General Martimprey, addressed to the Minister of War, and dated near Zekkara, Nov. 6. General Devaux, with two divisions, attacked the Zekkara, and forced the tribes to retire towards the south. General Durieux, by skilful manœuvring, obtained a victory over the tribes equally as brilliant as the victory of Malah. In addition to a great quantity of booty, the horses and arms of the Spahis who had been killed at Sidi-Zaer were retaken. The troops are in excellent health, and spread terror everywhere before them, and the people implore their mercy.—The Piedmontese Union gives the substance of Victor Emmanuel's letter in reply to that of the Emperor Napoleon, according to which the king unequivocally declines to accept the emperor's proposals. The Union was seized for inserting this reply. There are reasons for considering this reply of more than doubtful origin.—Advices have been received from China to Sept. 26. A Tourane letter, from a good source, states that a considerable force of Cochinchinese had attacked the French troops, but had been repulsed with severe loss.—M. Michel Chevalier, in an able letter in the Debats, treating of the state of England, comments on our wealth, our industry, our perseverance, and our resources, and admits that we do well to look to our defences, and that in our doing so there is nothing at which France could take umbrage. Remarkable on what he calls our programme—namely, that England should have a number of ships of war equal to that of all the great powers put together, he says if we are bent on this, the time at which we can effect it cannot be far distant, for it is easier for England to build 100 ships than for France and Russia to build 50, as we possess every facility for so doing. He concludes by expressing an opinion that England will only enter on a war if her own security be endangered.—On reliable information it is stated that the question of the Isthmus of Suez will be discussed at the approaching Congress.—A telegram from Zurich states that the order to sign the treaties of peace arrived there on Wednesday afternoon. The news that the same have been signed is expected in Paris every moment.

INDIA AND COLONIES.—By the overland mail we have received advices from Bombay to the 12th October. By this arrival we have the gratifying intelligence of the successful result of the operations of the force sent against the Wagheers in Okhomondee. The fort and island of Beyt were taken by our forces on the 7th ult., and the rebels dispersed, not, we regret to say, without the loss of twenty-four of our men (among whom two officers) and several wounded. The opposition to the Trader and Profession Bill is as strong in Bombay as Calcutta, and meetings of the Europeans and native gentlemen had been held on the subject. On the whole, the opposition to the bill has been so hearty throughout India, that it is possible its passing may be postponed until Mr. Wilson shall have the opportunity of giving his opinion on it. Rao Ram Buksh, talookdar of Doondeah Khera, has been found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged. He is one of the many who treacherously betrayed unfortunate fugitives during the rebellion. Those from Cawnpore, who sought shelter upon his estate, were barbarously murdered by this monster, whose name will not be forgotten for ages. We have not heard of his actual execution, but think it is hardly likely that even Lord Canning will pardon him. Rajah Jyellall Singh was also found guilty of abetting the murder of Miss Jackson, Mrs. Green, and others. He was convicted on the clearest and most conclusive evidence; hosts of witnesses deposed not only to his having been the primary mover in the massacre of our countrymen and countrywomen, but also to his having stood by and witnessed, if not actually superintended, the brutal proceedings. It is entirely owing to the persevering exertions of Col. Bruce that the miscreant has not only been brought to trial, but his trial brought to so successful an issue. He initiated the proceedings, and he alone was in a position, and perhaps he alone had the sagacity, to collect witnesses from all parts of the country, as in conducting the preliminary investigations their names transpired, and the nature of the evidence they were capable of giving became apparent. The execution was to take place at Lucknow on the 1st inst., at sunrise, on the spot where his victims were murdered. A small monument marks it. It will be a relief when we hear that the hangman has not been disappointed in disposing of these two friends. The case of Jyellall has excited as much interest in Oude as did that of the Nawab of Furruckabad. The Nana is still, it is said, on the north bank of the raptee, where its course from the hills flows westward. His followers, who have no money or supplies, plunder the inhabitants of the Deoghur Valley. A correspondent of the Lucknow Herald writes from the frontier more specifically:—"The Nana is now at Deoghur, and the Begum one march beyond it. It is reported the Ranees of Lahore is in camp. The Begum has 200 rebel sepoys, and the Nana 500, with one howitzer. He has also a small body of cavalry, numbering 150 sabres, 40 elephants, 40 camels, and 12 palkees, in which his and Bala Rao's families are conveyed. He has just made arrangements for the issue of three-quarters of a seer of coarse rice and one chittack of dhol. I am told that a brigade of Ghoorkas from Khatmandhoo have arrived at Dhang, with a view to drive the insurgents from the hills. The rebels frequently cross the border and plunder the inhabitants of Iurwah Koosaha, where there is a company of sepoys belonging to one of the talookdars." Jung Bahadoor has at last, it is positively affirmed, ordered the Nana, Mummoo Khan, Beni Madho, and the rest of the principal rebels, to quit the Nepaul territories, under pain of being forcibly ejected by his troops. This will be service equivalent to the value of the tract of country which it is in the contemplation of Government to make over to Nepaul.—The overland mail has also brought us correspondence and journals from Melbourne to Sept. 16, and Sydney to Sept. 13. Melbourne was in the midst of an election contest. The first batch of elections had gone against ministers. The law officers, Treasurer, and Commissioner of Crown Lands, had been defeated; but the Solicitor General was subsequently returned. The new Parliament of New South Wales met on the 30th of August, and was opened on the following day by a speech from the Governor General in person, and the address in return almost unanimously passed; but on the first day of real business, the Government nominee, as chairman of committees, was rejected, and the opposition candidate chosen. On a subsequent day a motion was made by a Mr. Parkes to repeal the duties on tea and sugar, and opposed by the Government as an undue interference with their financial arrangements. The motion was, however, carried by a majority of one, and the Cowper Ministry resigned. Mr. Murray was then sent for to form an administration, but failed in his commission, and Mr. Cowper resumed his duties; and, after an explanation to the Assembly of his position, moved the rescission of Mr. Parkes' motion, and the rescission was carried by a majority of 19. Trade was rather dull in both colonies, and the supply of gold, though good, was not so plentiful as the previous year.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The critical state of affairs abroad, and the impending congress, have made it necessary for several cabinet councils to be held this week, at which almost all the ministers have been in attendance.—Though the weather was milder last week, the severity of the previous cold told on the health of the metropolis, and the Registrar General's return for the week exhibits an increase of 272 deaths, the total number being 1,182. The number of births was 1,858.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, the adjourned examination meeting in the case of Messrs. Ayers and Melliss, who had traded as general merchants at Nottingham and New York, has been further adjourned for three months; and a petition, praying for an order directing that the Ruardean Colliery Company should be wound up, was dismissed, all parties consenting. Permission was granted to sell property at Enfield, belonging to J. E. Buller, the bankrupt solicitor, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, for the purpose of paying off the claim of an equitable mortgage thereon. The sittings held for the last examination of George Montague Evans, solicitor, late of Farnham, in Surrey, since of Boulogne; of Richard Nicholson, an agricultural merchant, at Much Hadham, in the county of Herts; and of Ernest Levy, jeweller, of 352, Strand, were adjourned. A strong opposition is anticipated in the latter case.—A deputation, headed by Sir C. Eardley, recently waited upon Lord John Russell, at the Foreign Office, with a view of making a representation regarding the Mortara case. Their wish was that the subject should be brought formally under the notice of the various governments of Europe. The Foreign Secretary promised to communicate with his colleagues in office, at the request of the deputation; at the same time his lordship gave them to understand, what every one knows, that redress was not to be looked for from Roman Catholic governments in such a case as this, where every natural tie must yield to the relentless claims of a fossilized religious monstrosity.—The Peel Institution at Accrington held a meeting on Saturday night, for the purpose of presenting the prizes to the candidates, which were awarded in the East Lancashire Union examinations. Lord Brougham presided, and the meeting was addressed by his lordship, Lord Stanley, and Canon Richson. Lord Brougham, in the course of his address, denied that he was a convert to the Maine Liquor law. The meeting was a very successful one.—Joseph Henry Jay, an income-tax collector, residing at Pearson-street, Kingsland-road, was placed before Mr. D'Eyncourt, at Worship-street Police-court, charged with fraud in the collection of that assessment. The magistrate remanded the case, and not considering the evidence offered of a very satisfactory kind, accepted bail in two sureties of £200 each.—A dreadful accident happened on Saturday afternoon at what is called the "Big Pit," in the neighbourhood of Far Green, near Hanley, by which we regret to state that ten persons lost their lives, and ten others were severely injured. It appears that a company of men employed at the pit were ascending in a cage, and from want of attention of the man at the wheel, the cage, instead of stopping when it reached the bank, was thrown over the wheel bottom upwards, by which ten persons were thrown out and killed on the spot, another dying soon afterwards. Another cage was descending with night hands, and into this the other cage fell, greatly injuring the persons therein, so that altogether ten other persons were severely hurt. A youth who was in the ascending cage escaped almost by a miracle.—In reference to the late fire at the Paraffin Light Company's premises, Bucklersbury, the solicitors of those interested have attended at the Mansion House to report to the Lord Mayor the result of the coroner's inquest, and to come to an understanding as to how the business should be conducted in future, so as to ensure the safety of contiguous property, and satisfy the neighbours as to their personal immunity from danger. Some discussion took place, and suggestions were entertained to secure the desired results, which are to be further considered when the arrangements have made some progress.—The jury have returned a verdict of accidental death at the inquest on the body of the unfortunate man Thomas Hine, who was killed by the explosion at the Surrey Consumers' Gas Works.—The Ven. Charles Mackenzie, M.A., of Caius College, Cambridge, is about to resign the archdeaconry of Natal, which he has held for the last few years, for the purpose of putting himself at the head of the new African mission. He will be consecrated a bishop as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, either in this country or by the three bishops of Southern Africa (Cape Town, Graham's Town, and Natal); and the mission will consist, in the first place, of the bishop, six clergymen, a physician, a surgeon, and a number of artificers capable of conducting the various works of building, husbandry, and especially of the cultivation of the cotton plant.—The new Lord Mayor (Carter) on Wednesday entered formally on his office. The procession left Guildhall about noon, and proceeded to Westminster Hall, where the ceremony of presentation and taking the oaths was gone through. In the evening a grand banquet was given in the Guildhall.—At a meeting, consisting of clergy and laymen, held at Cambridge on Monday last, it was resolved, "That the persons present form themselves into a 'Church Defence Association,' and also that the objects of the association should be—1. The circulation, by means of pamphlets and newspaper articles, of information respecting the position, rights, and claims of the Church. 2. The furnishing replies to all attacks made upon the Church, and especially those of the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Control. 3. The presentation of petitions to Parliament in all cases where such a course should seem desirable."—An inquiry, instituted by the Board of Trade, has been commenced at the Greenwich Police-court, before Mr. Traill, the sitting magistrate, and Captain Harris, nautical assessor, into the circumstances attending the wreck of the Royal Mail Steam Company's ship Paramatta, on the 30th June last, near the Virgin Islands. Captain Baynton, commander of the vessel, and several of the subordinate officers, were examined, after which the inquiry was adjourned, that the men on watch at the time of the wreck might be brought forward.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, third class certificates were granted to Messrs. Hardwick and Jones, merchants, of Gracechurch-street; but the Commissioner, in giving judgment, expressed his dissatisfaction at the course of trading pursued by the bankrupts, pronouncing it to have been of a reckless character.—A further adjournment of a month was ordered in the case of Messrs. Francis and Freer, ale and wine merchants, of Great St. Helen's, to enable the assignees to furnish specific objections to the accounts.—At the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, City, the aggregate number of patients relieved during the week ending Nov. 5, was, medical, 715; surgical, 389; total, 1,004; of which 298 were new cases.—Some curious circumstances have transpired with regard to the religious disturbances of St. George's-in-the-East. The Rev. Bryan King, the rector, has issued a notice respecting gentlemen who are willing to act as special constables in the parish church to communicate with him immediately, intimating that strangers will be pleased to forward a clerical reference. Concurrently with this extraordinary notice, which is not likely to pacify the parishioners, a notice has been issued that the third anniversary of the opening of the Mission Church, in Calvert Street, where the highest of High Church practices are carried out, will be celebrated on the 24th inst., when the sermon will be preached by the Dean of Westminster. The Bishop of London, who some time since inhibited the Rev. Frederick George Lee from preaching in his diocese, in consequence of his sermon at St. George's-in-the-East, has removed the inhibition, and Mr. Lee is again at liberty to officiate.—Three bricklayers, named Jenkins, Stanley, and Davies, were convicted before Mr. Elliott, at Lambeth Police-court, of threatening and intimidating John Roy, in order to force him to belong to a society. Jenkins and Stanley were sentenced to one month, and Davies to fourteen days' imprisonment; but an appeal to the quarter sessions having been entered, they were liberated for the present on bail.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts show a steady improvement in business, with encouraging prospects for the future. In the majority of branches the operatives and artisans are in good employment, and they seem to be satisfied with the wages secured. At Bradford, Huddersfield, and Leeds the symptoms are satisfactory, an extension of transactions being reported every week. The letters from Leicester intimate that the manufacturers were increasing their hands, and that the inquiry for wool was more active. The Manchester and Birmingham accounts speak of a decidedly better state of things, and stocks have decreased through the late augmentation of orders from abroad. At Wolverhampton the home trade has been steadily increasing, the departments associated with the United States and Russia presenting greater activity; but there is still much sluggishness in the Indian demand. The lace trade at Nottingham has been heavy, but in the hosiery branches more animation has existed. The accounts from the Irish markets are by no means discouraging.—In the market for bank shares, prices have been well supported. The principal inquiries were for Oriental, Union of Australia, London Chartered of Australia, and English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered. Van Diemen's Land shares have fallen. The six per cent. debenture stock of the Crystal Palace Company was marked 99 and 100; London Dock, 67; and the shares of the Trust and Loan Company of Upper Canada, 1 prem.—We extract from the Australian Mail the following particulars, showing the rapid progress of New South Wales:—The commercial and other statistics of New South Wales indicate a most remarkable rate of progress. We will recapitulate a few of them. In 1818, the quantity of wool imported into the United Kingdom from Australia was 86,525lb.; in 1828, 1,574,186lb.; in 1838, 7,837,423lb.; in 1848, 30,034,567lb.; and in 1858, 51,104,560lb. In 1845, the population of New South Wales and Port Philip was 181,556 souls. In 1856, New South Wales alone numbered 286,873 inhabitants; and on the 1st January, 1858, 305,487. In 1845, the value of the exports of New South Wales was £1,092,389; in 1856, £3,430,880; in 1857, £4,011,692; and in 1858, £4,246,277, having quadrupled in fourteen years. In 1845, the imports were valued at £985,561; in 1856, at £5,460,971; in 1857, at £6,729,408; and in 1858, at £8,029,366; having increased sixfold in fourteen years. In 1845 the British produce and manufactures imported into New South Wales were worth £612,912, and in 1856, £3,475,859. In 1845 the wool exported was worth £612,705, and in 1857, £1,275,067. The gold exported from New South Wales in 1851 was valued at £468,336; in 1852, at £2,660,946; in 1853, at £1,781,172; in 1854, at £773,209; and in 1857, at £187,249. A considerable proportion consisted of Victorian produce, hence the fluctuation. The coinage of the Sydney Mint is at present at the rate of nearly a million and a half sterling per annum. In 1849 the coal raised in New South Wales was valued at £14,647, and in 1857, at £148,158. Yet a colony whose progress presents results of this wonderful character is, apparently, regarded by her Majesty's government as not worthy of special consideration in the arrangement of the steam-packet service.—The prospectus has been issued of the Ocean Marine Insurance Company, with a capital of £1,000,000, in £25 shares, of which £5, or £200,000, is to be called up. The directors are men connected with the first houses in the City, and their names will carry weight with the public. It is shown that the existing marine insurance companies were all formed prior to 1825, since which the commerce of the country has nearly trebled; and proofs are given that there is ample room for another. We refer our readers to the prospectus, in the belief that it will be found worthy of their favourable attention.—The Australian advices announce that the Peninsular and Oriental Company have reduced their charge for the freight and insurance of specie by the overland route to 2 per cent.—The principal feature in the Mincing-lane markets has been an extensive business in saltpetre, at full prices, for all but the fine qualities of Bengal. In other articles transactions were of their usual moderate extent, and prices were not materially altered. The deliveries from warehouse continue very satisfactory, but stocks contrast heavily with those of the corresponding period last year.—An interesting return of the companies formed and registered under the Limited Liability Act has been published, stating the name and object of each undertaking, but the defect is the absence of classification, which would enable the public to trace the success of the expeperiment, either as regards the amount of capital employed, or the particular speculation embarked in. Of course parties specially interested will make an analysis for themselves, but it may be suggested that in future returns it would be desirable to do this, as it would then become a very valuable statistical document. In its present form it is a mass of information not easily to be digested, but it nevertheless shows clearly that the powers of the act have been extensively resorted to. In England the number of companies formed has been 1010, in Ireland 51, and in Scotland 40. With respect to the 'limited' principle, as applied to banking institutions, the return states that one institution only has directly sought for registration under the act, the name of the bank being the Bank of Tunis, projected for the purpose of carrying on business of a bank of issue and of deposit in the Tunisian kingdom, with a nominal capital of £100,000, but it appears it is not known whether the undertaking is still in operation or being wound up.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

CAMPBELL'S AMERICAN MINSTRELS.—A new troupe of sable minstrels have taken possession of the smaller concert room at the St. James's Hall, and bid fair successfully to fill up the void created by the departure of the long popular "Christy's." It consists of some thirteen performers of various kinds, vocal and instrumental, and the leadership is efficiently divided between Messrs. Fox and Warden, themselves men of high ability in special departments. Mr. Fox is a most successful imitator of negro peculiarities as we are to suppose them to be exhibited at the plantation, and Mr. Warden takes the rôle of the "coloured gentleman" of musical tendency, who gives ludicrous imitations of the Italian opera. Amongst the solo singers, Messrs. Farrenberg and Drummond are especially deserving of complimentary mention, the former as a highly finished tenor, and the latter as a most effective baritone singer. They are both nightly encored, and are fully deserving of the compliment. The dancing is extremely good, the "Old Virginny dance" of Mr. M. Sexton being a most extraordinary specimen of negro flexibility and power of contortion, and the "Louisiana Belle Dance" quite a novelty, being a sort of Kentucky version of the celebrated coquette dance of Perea Nena. The instrumental music is first-rate, including a brilliant violin and an effective violoncello player, so that, taken altogether, this new company may be accepted as a considerable advance on all previous minstrelsy from the other side of the Atlantic.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. T."—No person has the power of postponing the meeting of a Lodge beyond its regular stated time, without a vote of the members.

"A CONSTANT READER" cannot have seen our number of the 22nd ult.

"AN IRISH MASON."—Ireland does not possess a Masonic journal of its own; and if we do not publish more Irish information, it is because the brethren are very chary in affording it. We have before us a letter from an English brother, in which, speaking of the Irish Masons, he says, "If generally they are not good workmen, I am informed they are very good in assisting each other—which is better than professing so much, as many of us do, without practising what we preach, unless it is to make a public show."

"A YOUNG MASON" has no right to interfere in the working of a Lodge, unless the W.M. invites him to do so.

"A CRAFTSMAN."—Our advice is, join the Royal Arch—though your not doing so will not prevent your obtaining the highest dignities in the Craft.

"SCOTIA."—Lord Panmure was initiated into Masonry at Quebec, under the English Constitution.

THE MARK DEGREE.—We have not heard what steps have been taken by the committee appointed by the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

"S. S."—In Ireland the W.M. (and consequently his officers) is only elected for six months.

"J. W."—Of course the "equality" of Freemasonry is to a great degree more theoretical than real. In Lodge we are all on a level as brethren, but out of Lodge we must bend to the customs of society. It would be gross impertinence, because you dined and took wine with a noble lord at a Lodge festival, to claim his acquaintance if you met him in the street.

"J. D."—Mere jingling rhymes are not poetry.

"X."—£5 will make you a life subscriber to the Boys School; £10 a life governor.

ERRATUM.—At page 247 of our present volume, Benedict Biscop is said to have introduced workmen into England in 1764, instead of 764—rather an important difference.

SCOTLAND.—We have received a report of the meeting of Grand Lodge at Edinburgh, but too late for this week's impression.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1859.

MASONIC MISSIONS.

IN our number of August 20th, we briefly reviewed the proceedings of the various Provincial Grand Lodges, so far as they had taken place, and we now resume our review to allude to those subsequently held; as with the commencement of the London season that in the country, so far as their aggregate provincial meetings are concerned, may be said to end.

The last Provincial Grand Lodge to which we alluded was that of Dorsetshire, and the first upon our present list is Wiltshire, the annual gathering of which took place on the 23rd of August, under the presidency of our noble brother, the Right Honourable Lord Methuen, assisted by his able Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Bro. D. Gooch, and an excellent muster of officers. At this Provincial Grand Lodge a very good arrangement was agreed to, by which the various Masters and officers of private Lodges as well as those of the Provincial Grand Lodge are to pay fees of honour on their appointments, in order to raise a charity fund, by which the various Lodges are to be in their turn rendered life governors of the various charities. At this meeting a most important question was raised under the Book of Constitutions, relative to the appointment of Provincial Grand Officers, which we are sorry is not more generally attended to in Grand Lodge, viz., the appointment of non-resident officers in the Provincial Grand Lodges. On this point, the Book of Constitutions clearly states, that Provincial Grand Officers "must all be resident within the province and subscribing members to some Lodge therein, but the Most Worshipful Grand Master may grant a dispensation for non-residence. A fee of two guineas for Grand Wardens, and one guinea for any subordinate officer, shall be paid to the general fund of charity for such dispensation." To this the Deputy Provincial Grand Master replied by referring to another part of the Book of Constitutions, which states that the Provincial Grand Master is by his patent "invested with a rank and power in his particular district, similar to those possessed by the Grand Master," and therefore the Deputy Provincial Grand Master argued that in appointing the brethren the Provincial Grand Master might be supposed to have given them the necessary dispensation to hold their respective offices. If the Provincial Grand Master holds that power, well and good; and in this case it was understood that the brethren would be called on for their fees—we hope to the advantage of the General Charity Fund. But as we read the law—and upon this point we should like the opinion of Bro. Dobie, the Provincial Grand Master for Surrey, by whom we believe it was originally introduced—the power of dispensation is wholly confined to the Most Worshipful Grand Master—the fees to be levied not going to the Provincial but to the General Fund of Benevolence; and we are strengthened in this belief by the knowledge that when Bro. Charles Purton Cooper, the Provincial Grand Master for Kent, a most able equity lawyer, wished to appoint a non-resident Superintendent of Works, a dispensation was applied for to the Most Worshipful Grand Master, and refused on the ground that able brethren might be found within the province who ought not to be superseded by non-residents. Now this objection is plain and intelligible, but had the power rested with the Provincial Grand Master, and not with the Most Worshipful Grand Master of England, it is clear that the appointment would have been made; and if there is any ambiguity in the law, it ought to be cleared up at once and for ever. But there is another important question to be raised. From the objection, known or presumed to exist on the part of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, to the granting of these dispensations, the law is systematically evaded—the general charity fund to a considerable extent deprived of fees which it ought to receive—and brethren having no local standing beyond their connection with Provincial, we might almost say in the present state of railway communication, suburban Lodges, strut in purple and fine gold as Provincial Grand Officers, unchallenged and unrebuked, even within the Supreme Grand Lodge itself.

We are not amongst those who would deprive brethren of one province of the honours of another in which they do suit and service as members, and perhaps as the only working members of the Lodges, but we would have the dispensations granted freely and liberally, and insist upon the fees being duly paid. Is there no brother who will move for a return of such dispensations applied for during the last five years, and the number granted—following it up, if need be, by a motion that a return shall be annually made to the Most Worshipful Grand Master, or the Grand Lodge, of all appointments in the various provinces, with the residences of the respective brethren.

Relative to the Grand Lodge of Sussex which took place on the 2nd September, we have nothing to offer, excepting to congratulate the brethren on the increasing prosperity of their province, and upon their having established so efficient a system of aiding the charities that they were enabled to qualify two of the Lodges hailing within the province as Governors of the Royal Benevolent Institution for aged Masons and their widows, and the re-establishment of one of the oldest Lodges in the Craft. Long may it flourish!

The annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Leicestershire was distinguished by the consecration of a new Masonic Hall, designed and carried out under the direction of Brother Millican, Provincial Grand Superintendent of Works—thus proving that there are provinces the Provincial Grand Masters of which regard that office as something more than honorary, and that there are members of the Craft who, in taking it, confer honour and dignity upon the Order of which they are members; but upon this subject we shall speak more at length in an early number.

On the 6th of October another Provincial Grand Lodge was held at Ashby-de-la-Zouch when a new Lodge was consecrated under the direction of the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, Earl Howe, assisted by his most excellent deputy, Bro. Kelly, to whom Masonry in Leicestershire is deeply indebted. The new Lodge is entitled the Ferrers and Ivanhoe. The only damp upon the proceedings was the unfortunate demise of the Master first named in the warrant prior to the consecration of the Lodge (Earl Ferrers), who had given promise of becoming a most valuable member of the Order, in the prosperity of which he evidently took great interest.

The next Provincial Grand Lodge upon our list is that of Worcestershire, held upon the 20th of September; and we confess that we always approach anything like a notice of its proceedings with difficulty, from the fact that our brethren in the "West Country" appear peculiarly sensitive. We have more than once trodden upon their corns, and brought a storm upon our heads, which, luckily, we have been enabled to live through. But upon the present occasion we are not going to find fault even with the appointments, as there does not appear to be any idea of a new hall within the province, whilst we can congratulate them upon the honour they pay to their Provincial Grand Master—than whom, though we have not always agreed with him in opinion, we believe, there is no more worthy brother in the Craft—and in their support to the charities by creating him a vice-president for life of the boys' school. This is effected by the presentation of fifty guineas to the charity, and then insuring the life of the Provincial Grand Master; so that at his death—which we hope may be far distant—the principal sum returns to the Provincial Grand Lodge for the purpose of conferring the same distinction upon his successor.

On September 28th the brethren of Cheshire assembled under the superintendence of the venerable and R.W. Bro. Viscount Combermere, everything being conducted with that regularity and punctuality which have ever distinguished that gallant soldier.

The meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Derbyshire held on the same day was distinguished by the first appearance of the Marquis of Hartington as Provincial Grand Master, and the laying the foundation stone of the Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Hospital, in which ceremony the noble father of the Marquis took part. The Marquis is a young Mason of great promise, and a worthy successor of his distinguished uncle who, under the same title, and as Duke of Devonshire, worthily presided over the province for many years.

The 6th of October was the day ordered by the Most Worshipful Grand Master for holding the Provincial Grand Lodge over which he presides, that of North and East Yorkshire. There appears to have been but little to do, but from what we have heard that little was done well. There is but one point in their proceedings to which we would call attention, and that with all due deference to the noble lord. His lordship is reported to have said "that with a view to confer as many honours as lay in his power amongst the distinguished Masons within the province over which he had the pleasure and honour to preside, he had concluded in future to change the Senior and Junior Grand Wardens in each year, and he had no doubt that by so doing the interest of the Craft would be better served than if the honours were confined to any individual." We have heard complaints that in this province the Provincial Grand Officers have become too much of a monopoly, and we are glad that his lordship has arrived at his present decision; but we would suggest that he might go a little further, and—in a province containing sixteen or seventeen Lodges, many of them equal in working to any in the Order—advantageously change as many officers once a year as is the custom in the Supreme Grand Lodge; nothing tending so much to the advantage of Masonry, either in the metropolis or the provinces, as a little wholesome rivalry for its honours. We are sure we need only refer to the subject to ensure it a fair consideration whatever may be the decision at which his lordship may arrive. As we have not previously published the names of the officers in this province for the ensuing year we take this opportunity of doing so:—Bros. George Marwood, Deputy Provincial Grand Master; William Cowling, Prov. S.G.W.; George Smurthwaite, Prov. J.G.W.; Rev. John Drummond McGachen, M.A., Prov. G. Chap.; Richard Welch Hollon, Prov. G. Treas.; Joseph Coltman Smith, Prov. G. Reg.; Jeremiah Stark, Prov. G. Sec.; George Fox, Prov. S.G.D.; Richard Jones, Prov. J.G.D.; John Shields Peacock, Prov. G.D.C.; John Marsh, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Richard Glover, Prov. G.S.B.; William Weatherill, Prov. G. Stand. B.; Christopher E. Armstrong, Prov. G. Org.; John Booker, Prov. G. Purs.; William Cookson, Prov. G. Tyler.

The brethren of Yorkshire West held a Provincial Grand Lodge on the 5th October, when our noble brother, the Earl of Ripon, Past Grand Warden of England, laid the foundation stone of the Huddersfield Mechanics' Institution; of the Masonic proceedings we have heard but little, but we are informed that brethren were admitted into Grand Lodge in their Royal Arch clothing. What could the Grand Officers have been about?

On the 4th the Provincial Grand Lodge of Gloucestershire was held, when it was resolved to double their subscriptions to the Masonic charities. All honour to the Gloucestershire brethren.

On the 10th the Provincial Grand Lodge of Herefordshire took place at Ross, under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. Bowles, Provincial Grand Master, when some most eloquent discourses were delivered on the beauties of Freemasonry, by brethren, whom we regret to say, know so much of its principles and practice, as to be unable to open Lodge without reading their parts. The Deputy Provincial Grand Master, and the Provincial Grand Secretary, are both stated to live in London. How can a province flourish under such circumstances? It is moreover asserted, that the Provincial Senior Grand Warden, and Assistant Deputy Grand Master, is not an installed Master, and yet wears the installed Master's badge. Can this be true?

Bro. Roxburgh, Grand Registrar, presided most worthily over the Grand Lodge of Suffolk on the 11th; the proceedings of which need no comment. We are happy to hear however, that the province is likely ere long to be presided over by a resident Provincial Grand Master.

At the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Warwickshire on the same day, under the presidency of that excellent nobleman and Mason, Bro. Lord Leigh, a new Lodge, the "Warden," to be held at Sutton Coldfield, was duly consecrated, and one hundred and fifty guineas voted towards supporting our Masonic charities—and that too whilst the claims of local charities, and of a distressed brother, were liberally remembered.

We have now arrived at the end of our review, and if there are points upon which we have felt it our duty to comment in a spirit of friendly remonstrance, we can fairly conclude by expressing our opinion, that there never was a period when Masonry was more prosperous—nor a time when greater attention was paid to the carrying out its principles in their integrity—and when the brethren were more united in their determination to make the Craft honoured and respected throughout the breadth and length of the land, by the example which they set as good citizens, the promoters and supporters of unostentatious charity, and honourable men.

BASILICA ANGLICANA—II.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

THE Cathedral Church of Westminster is, if not the oldest, at least one of the most celebrated in Europe. Whether we consider the scenes of which it has been the centre, and the memories of men and things which it enshrines, we can hardly refrain from looking with veneration upon its pure Gothic walls, its towers, its windows, and its tombs. Only a few days ago it received into its cold, but sacred embrace, the remains of one of those master men who spring up from time to time to subdue the elements of nature, shaping them for man's use and benefit.

The site of Westminster Abbey was formerly the centre of an island, formed by a branch of the river Thames, and called Thorney Island. As in the case of St. Paul's cathedral, there is also a tradition that the Romans had erected here a temple or shrine sacred to Apollo; but the hypothesis rests upon somewhat questionable evidence. The branch of the river which embraced Thorney Island left the main channel at the end of Abingdon-street, running in a westerly direction along the line of the present College-street and the south side of Dean's-yard, where it turned to the north, pursuing its course by the west side of Dean's-yard, crossing Tothill-street, along to Princes-street, which at that time, and long afterwards, was called "Long Ditch." It rejoined the Thames at Cannon-row, having crossed Gardiners-lane, King-street, and Parliament-street, which were then, it is almost superfluous to say, soft, neglected marshy fields, whither holiday makers from the city used to come on the Sunday, and desperadoes from all parts used to skulk of evenings to waylay the servants of the king and the returning courtiers who might have indulged too freely at Westminster Hall, which was then the king's banqueting room. Some notion may be formed of these feasts, which were first held by the wayward, violent, and impetuous Rufus, from the circumstance that all the Norman barons and their retainers, the bishops, abbots, and their followers, were feasted, and the revel was upheld for several days. Henry III. feasted six thousand poor men, women, and children on New Year's Day, 1236; and seven years later, upon the marriage of the king's brother, Richard, Earl of Cornwall, the dishes which were set upon tables numbered upwards of thirty thousand. The Hall thus built by Rufus stood about three hundred years, when it was pulled down and rebuilt by Richard II., while the Abbey was permitted to fall into decay.

The first church, of which the present building is the successor, was built by Sibert, king of Essex, A.D. 605, in proof of the sincerity of his conversion to Christianity. This account rests for support principally upon the fact that the several restorers of the building exhibited no little anxiety lest his remains and those of his queen, Ethelgitha, should suffer from desecration, or that they should not be deposited in the most honourable place within it. Some writers, it should however be observed, contend that the church of Westminster could not have had existence for at least a century after Sibert's decease; whilst others claim him for the honour of founding the cathedral of St. Paul above Ludgate, as well as that of St. Peter in the "Isle of Thorney."

One of the most extraordinary legends in connexion with Westminster Abbey is that of its consecration by St. Peter himself. It would appear, that after the death of Sibert, the people having relapsed into paganism, the church fell into a ruinous state of decay. It was in the next century restored by Offa, king of Mercia, and again doomed to destruction. On the occasion of the invasion by the Danes, King Edgar, at the instance of St. Dunstan, repaired the edifice in 969; and it is probably to this date, when Dunstan's remarkable character is taken into account, that the following extraordinary story may be referred.

There were no bridges in those days across the Thames, and its banks between Chelsea and Rotherhithe were bleak comfortless moors tenanted solely by the vagrant will-o'-wisp and a few moor birds. A stout waterman used to ferry passengers between Millbank and Lambeth; for this privilege however he had to pay tolls and tithes, so that although he earned a very considerable sum he was by no means rich. He was sitting on a stormy night in his boat, moored off what now is Lambeth-stairs, in front of the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, when he was applied to by a venerable looking man who seemed to have come a long journey and to be in great haste to be ferried across the river. As the waterman proceeded it came on a hurricane and his little craft had well nigh been overwhelmed by the rising wind and tide. Nothing of importance passed between the passenger and the boatman until one fearful gust came which threw the boat on her beam ends, and disarranged the cloak which the aged traveller had wrapped about him. For the first time a feeling struck the ferryman that he was bearing a person of distinction, for he could see beneath the cloak a light like that which is emitted by the diamond. His efforts accordingly heightened with his respect. When the boat at length got to the opposite side, the waterman with the reverent disposition of the time saluted his passenger; but instead of paying his fare the traveller threw off his cloak and walked into the church like a pillar of light. Presently the windows of the abbey emitted a celestial lustre, and music soft and solemn, as from a choir of angels, was heard above the roar of the furious tempest without. The poor ferryman trembled in every limb until he at length tumbled into the river and must have been drowned but by a miraculous interposition, since he found himself the next morning fast asleep in his boat under Lambeth-stairs. It afterwards appeared that the traveller was no less distinguished a person than St. Peter himself, and that the business on which he journeyed was to consecrate the Abbey Church of Westminster. At all events, whatever respect may be paid to the above particulars, it is clear that the monks of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries pretended some belief in them; for it is on record, as Fleeta tells us, that the brethren of the West Monastery sued the minister of Rotherhithe for the title of the salmon that should be caught in his parish, and based their claim upon the fact that St. Peter had given them this right when he consecrated the abbey in person.*

But it was Edward the Confessor who a century later raised the cathedral church to the consequence which it has since maintained. We may here observe that by some authors the dignity bestowed on the cathedral by the chief of the apostles was in no small degree owing to the prayers of this saintly king. This monarch had previously fixed on the abbey as his burial place, and he resolved to make it a temple worthy of the Most High, and a right kingly monument of his own faith and piety. He devoted to the work, we are told, "a tenth part of his entire substance as well in gold, silver, and cattle, as in all his other possessions." It proved in strict truth his burial place and his monument. The sacred pile was completed on the 28th of December, 1065, but the king was seized with his mortal illness on the Christmas day previously, and died on the 5th of January following. On the 12th of the same month his body was laid with great pomp before the high altar. Here on next Christmas day took place the coronation of William the Conqueror; and in the same place have been crowned the sovereigns of England, with the exception of Edward V., during eight centuries.

The edifice thus completed by the Confessor was in the form of a cross, and remained without any repairs or additions until the reign of Henry III., who finding the structure much impaired by time, took it down and began to rebuild it on a scale of still greater magnificence. Edward I. continued the work, and gave to it a new feature of importance, by placing in it A.D. 1296, the celebrated stone from Scone, in Scotland, which he had captured, on which from time immemorial the kings of Scotland had been crowned, and the monarchs of this country are crowned to this day.

As with St. Paul's, so St. Peter's has had to pass through not a few vicissitudes. During the contest between the Roses of York and Lancaster, it was permitted to fall again into decay. The house of York mostly held its state at the Tower, so that Westminster came to be looked upon as a suburb. Westminster Abbey seems however to have been spared the gross and sacrilegious desecration which befell St. Paul's. This is not wonderful when we consider the great events of which it has been the scene, and the great men of whom it is the resting place. Here it was that the laws were promulgated—that the king swore fealty to his people in return for the allegiance he claimed. Here the churchman had invoked upon the multitude the blessing of the redeeming faith, and the martyr went boldly to the torture, having refreshed his fortitude by a prayer for divine aid. It would be impossible in our space to attempt an enumeration of the various objects of interest which are to be found in this abbey, or to name the great persons whose mortal frames moulder beneath its stony floor. The church proper, as we have said, is in the form of a cross, but its eastern end is surrounded by chapels, each of which embraces a distinct history, and a special interest, and each varies in architectural shape and proportions. Formerly there were fourteen of the accessory buildings, but there still remain twelve, of which that built by Henry VII. is the best known, and which for richness and beauty stands out conspicuously from the rest. In these mortuary mansions are placed the dust of royalty and nobility. All around us and under our feet are the insignia of departed renown. The poet's lyre tuneless reposes in its humble corner, its laurel wreath brown and damp, its wires snapped by the frost and neglect of many years. The sword of the warrior rusts, and the voice of the senator, though still heard in the busy market, and in the distant colony, is silent here. What a world of daring, of knowledge, of skill, of subtle wisdom, of prosperity deserved and undeserved, of misfortune rightfully or wrongfully having undergone the most severe proofs. The initiate is introduced into the assembly, two of the members hold naked swords crossed above his head; two or three drops of his blood, and of the presiding member's, are mingled in a draught prepared for the occasion, and when he has taken a vow rather to perish than to betray the secrets of the society or to be unfaithful to its interests, both drink the contents of the cup. This ceremony being finished, the mysteries of the society are explained, as well as those signs by which the brethren recognise each other. The association of Thiar-ti-we has many members in the western and southern provinces of China, and amongst the Chinese who reside in the island of Java.

* Phillips and Stuart's History and Architecture of Westminster Abbey.

FREEMASONRY IN AMERICA.

It having been recently stated, in one of the leading articles of the Manchester Guardian, that in some parts of the United States the obligations of Freemasonry are held as illegal, and as I have reason to believe that in no portion of the habitable globe are there so many Freemasons in proportion to the population, I will thank any brother to inform me in which of the American States so much ignorance of the benevolent objects of our ancient art prevails as to allow any law against the practice of holding Lodges and initiating candidates to disgrace its statute book.—GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL.

MASONIC BADGES.—"THE MOIRA APRON."

On the appointment of the then Earl of Moira, Acting Grand Master, to the Governor-generalship of India, the Grand Lodge of England resolved that a jewel of not less value than five hundred guineas should be presented to him, as a token of the respect in which he was held by the Craft. The result of the proposal is a matter of Masonic history. One member of the fraternity, however, thought that in order to do honour to his lordship there was "nothing like leather," as evinced by the following printed circular, which I find among a collection of Masonic papers now before me:—

"THE MOIRA APRON.—Right Worshipful Master, Officers, and Brethren,—As our truly amiable and excellent A. G. M., the Earl of Moira, from his appointment as Governor of India, must for awhile resign that office, which he for more than twenty years hath filled, with the highest degree of dignity to himself, and to the universal approbation of the fraternity at large, I humbly conceive, therefore, that in honour to the great obligations we all owe him as Masons, and to perpetuate his memory amongst the brethren, as well as to hand it down to those who may be admitted members of our Order, an apron, on a peculiar construction, will prove very acceptable to all the brethren.

"The design of this apron is truly unique; and as words cannot describe it faithfully, I shall state the outline in reference to the figures represented in the margin.

1	!!!	1
1	2	3
!!!	○	!!!
4	5	6
!!!	!	!!!
7	8	9

a peculiar manner. Fig. 1, Enoch, the first excellent G. M., in the attitude of adoration. Fig. 2, Moses holding the tables of the law and the measuring rod, with Aholiab and Bezaleel. Fig. 3, St. John with his banner and the lamb. Fig. 4, His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, G. M., the Earl of Moira, A. G. M., and the Duke of Sussex, D. G. M. Fig. 5, a perfect Masonic abraxas, surrounded by rays of the iris in Fig. 6, the G. M. of Scotland, the G. M. of Ireland, and the Earl of Moira in the centre, pleading for a union of all the Lodges. Fig. 7, Solomon, K. of Israel, H. King of Tyre, and H. Abiff. Fig. 8, St. John with the Holy Bible. Fig. 9, Z. H. and J. All the figures are most beautifully engraved in their respective and appropriate robes, and printed on leather for an apron; and on paper forming a most elegant picture for a frame. Price only five shillings each.

"Should you, W. M., with the officers and brethren of your Lodge, in honour of the noble Earl, think proper to clothe yourselves with this truly comprehensive badge, or to have any of the engravings to put in a frame, you will be pleased to send directions for them, with a remittance, and the number ordered shall be most carefully packed, and sent in such a manner as you may direct, by R. W. Master, Officers, and Brethren, your faithful Brother, Signed, "L. HAYES, No. 2, Lower College-street, Bristol, January 6, 1813."

Permit me to conclude with two queries—does any brother possess one of these "truly unique" aprons? and, when were the badges appropriated to the E. A., F. C., M. M., Provincial Grand Officer, and Grand Officer, first prescribed by the constitutions of the Order? In Northouck's Constitution, edited by Anderson, ed. 1784, plain white leather aprons only appear to be referred to, it being provided (p. 382, art. iii.) that the Grand Stewards are allowed "to line their white leather aprons with red silk." It is well known that in Scotland, and elsewhere, the coloured edges and lining of the aprons are not arbitrarily fixed by the Grand Lodge, but, improperly, as I conceive, vary according to the taste of the members of the various private lodges. A friend of mine visiting a lodge in Edinburgh some years ago, found aprons of various descriptions (some as fanciful in design as the Moira apron) worn by the members, some of whom had made their silk pocket handkerchiefs serve the purpose!—WILLIAM KELLY, D. Prov. G. M., Leicester.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

A Description of the Paintings in the Debating Room of the Oxford Union Society. Compiled from various sources. By the Rev. J. S. SIDEBOTHAM, M.A., Chaplain of New College, Oxford, and City Lecturer. Oxford: T. and G. Shrimpton.

THE above pamphlet presents us with a succinct account of the rise and progress of the Oxford Union Society. It mentions the names of some of the eminent men who were among its earliest members, and introduces us to the use and intent of the association. From its steady success it was found necessary, in 1856, to add to the premises a large room for the purposes of reading and debating, and a building committee was formed of some of the most distinguished sons of this alma mater, whose names are appended, as well as the dimensions of the building itself.

To decorate this room the eminent sculptor, Alexander Munro, furnished a carving in stone, representing the institution of the Order of the Round Table. The ceiling was painted by Mr. Morris, B.A., Exeter College, Rev. R. St. John Tyrwhitt, M.A., Christ Church, and Mr. Swan, of Trinity College, Dublin. On the sides of the room are ten paintings representing the deeds of King Arthur and his knights, and these are by Messrs. Riviere, Rosetti, Prinsep, Pollen, M.A., late Fellow of Merton, Morris B.A., of Exeter College, Jones, B.A., of Exeter College, Spenser Stanhope, M.A., Christ Church, and Hughes.

Our brother, the Rev. J. S. Sidebotham, has undertaken to describe by the pen those events which the foregoing artists have delineated with the pencil, and he tells us, truly, in the Introduction, that "the difficulty of making a connected story out of ten scenes in a life which occupies three octavo volumes, as well as of writing, in the ordinary language of modern works, an abridgment of a history related in old and quaint English, will be readily acknowledged by those to whom the Morte d'Arthur is known.

"The works chiefly consulted in the compilation of the following brief account, which from its nature can lay no claim to originality, are Sir Thomas Malory's Morte d'Arthur (the work above alluded to); La Vita di Merlino, Venice, 1539; The Life of Merlin, London, 1641; La Romanza di Merlino, Paris, 1797; Ellis's Early English Metrical Romances, and Lady Elizabeth* Guest's Mabinogion."

Bro. Sidebotham goes through the whole of the pictures in order, bringing to bear on each, although told briefly, a fund of no inconsiderable learning. The first is "The Institution by Arthur of the Order of the Round Table" (the sculpture by Munro). The scenes in the life and exploits of Arthur and his knights commence with "The Education of Arthur by Merlin" (painted by Riviere), and to show our readers the wholesome quality of the information as well as to give them a taste of Bro. Sidebotham's style, we extract this description entire, which will serve as an index to the rest. Bro. Sidebotham writes thus:—

"Among the heroes of romance, whether of ancient or modern times, none is more celebrated than the personage commonly known as Arthur, King of the Britons. His true origin is a mystery little likely to be solved, even in these days of successful research. He has been claimed as a countryman by the Cornish men, the Welsh, and the people of Brittany. According to the best authorities, he was the son of Uther Pendragon, King of England, and Igrayne, Duchess of Cornwall. His birth was foretold by Merlin, as being indeed his own especial desire. 'And when it is borne,' he added, 'let it be delivered to me for to nourish as I will have it, for it shall bee your worship and the childe's avails as much as the childe is worth.' 'I will well,' said the king, 'as thou wilt have it.' Merlin, being himself not only a magician, but the son of a fallen angel, or, as he described himself, 'the son of a devil of great power, though fortunately rescued by an expeditious baptism from the vicious disposition of his paternal relations,'† was well qualified for the charge he thus undertook, viz., that of instructing the young prince not only in such arts as were necessary for the education of a prince and a knight, but in such lore as was then especially in vogue with many of noble or royal birth. He declared that 'he could prove his preternatural descent by revealing all things, past, present, and future.' He is here represented as engaged in the instruction of Prince Arthur, who was—fair and well agre

And was a child of great noblay.

* It should have been Lady Charlotte Guest.

† Ellis's "Early English Metrical Romances."

He was curteys, faire, and gent,
And wight, and hardi, verament,
Curteyalich and fair he spac,
With him was none evil lack."

The prince is here seen reclining at Merlin's feet, in an attitude of eager and anxious attention, such as Spenser may have imagined when he put the following words into Arthur's mouth:—

"The great magician Merlin came
As was his use oftentimes to visit me,
For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors' nouriture to oversee."

"A skull and an hour glass, the emblems of the past and the present, together with books and scrolls, and other appurtenances of the magician's art, occupy the foreground of the picture. Merlin may be supposed to be now more especially revealing to Arthur his future destiny, and to have raised before the eye of his imagination a vision which appears dimly in the sky, under the pale light of the rising moon, foreshadowing his future greatness, as the founder and head of the celebrated Order of the Knights of the Round Table."

The rest of the paintings are described under the following heads—King Arthur's Wedding, with the Incident of the White Hart and Brachet (Riviere); Sir Launcelot's Vision of the Sangraal (Rosetti); Sir Pelleas and the Lady Ettarde (Prinsep); How King Arthur received his sword Excalibur from the Lady of the Lake (Pollen); King Arthur's First Victory with the sword Excalibur (Riviere); How Sir Palomydes loved La Belle Yseult with exceeding great love out of measure, and how she loved not him again, but rather Sir Tristram (Morris); The Death of Merlin (Jones); Sir Gawaine and the Three Damosels at the Fountain in the Forest of Arroy (Spencer Stanhope); The Death of Arthur (Hughes).

From our quotation above, it will be seen how well our Bro. Sidebotham has done his share of this labour of love, and it is with the strongest feelings of approval and commendation that we offer our advice to every Oxford man, and to every one who values quaint and early history, to possess himself of this description, which will serve the former as a memento of that resort of the majority of his associates, the Oxford Union, and the latter as an example of what may be briefly done with our old chronicles when judiciously compressed and made intelligible to the general reader, whilst preserving enough of the ancient tinge to interest the antiquary.

Form of the Ceremony of Consecration and Dedication of the Freemasons' Hall, Leicester, by Bro. the Earl Howe, Prov. Grand Master, &c., &c. Leicester: Bro. J. SPENCER and Co., Market Place.

We have great pleasure in welcoming, in the form of an elegantly printed pamphlet, a permanent record of the proceedings upon the very interesting occasion of the laying the foundation of the hall of the Leicester Masons. Prolific as the past year has been in Masonic ceremonials, we do not think that the good taste and excellent judgment displayed in the necessary arrangements on that occasion have been excelled elsewhere, or even equalled. Every point appears to have been studied at which the due imposing effect could be given, and the ceremony was consequently what it deserved to be—a great success. The Provincial Grand Master, in spite of age and its concomitant infirmities, displays a genuine love for the Craft of which he is one of the most honoured rulers; and he is ably aided in the grand work of which he is the director, by such efficient subalterns as Bros. Kelly, Windram, Underwood, Clephan, Brewin, Löhr, and those other numerous brethren whose aim and purpose appears to be to strive honourably to follow in the steps and equal the efficiency of their seniors in the province. The reports which the intelligence columns of this journal contain weekly of the proceedings of the brethren at home and abroad, seldom tell us of Lodges better conducted, or of a province more judiciously ruled; and without making invidious comparisons we may venture to say that it would be well for the Craft of English Freemasons, if in every province our noble art were as nobly cultivated as it is in Leicestershire.

Among the most able and conspicuous officers of the Provincial Lodge, must be classed the Rev. J. O. Picton, to whom has been entrusted the responsible office of Prov. Grand Chaplain. On the day of the ceremony which we are now speaking of, our reverend brother contributed to the edification of the assembled Masons of the province, an excellent discourse at church, as well as an eloquent oration appropriate to the occasion. In the former, Bro. Picton forcibly depicted the too common selfishness which is to be found in our every day experience, and illustrated the sin and its effects by the beautiful story of the traveller who fell among thieves, and being naked and wounded was coldly left to perish by the holy priest and the respectable Levite. He then, with a keen appreciation of the true touch of nature which makes the whole world kin—and which, thank heaven, even in our utilitarian age, is not yet either altogether exhausted nor reduced to a scientific formula—drew the following contrast:—

"So the wounded, writhing traveller lies; and, we can fancy, given up to despair. Could he look for human aid in any other quarter? His own countrymen had turned from him, and what hope remained? Still he was to be rescued. Relief came to him from a source from which it was least to be expected. In one, at all events, real pity was not extinguished. 'But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him he had compassion on him.' Now, just think for a moment who a Samaritan was. The Samaritans, as they were so called from their chief city Samaria, were originally a mixed people of Jews and heathen, who in their worship retained only the law of Moses, and at the same time added to it many idolatrous practices. They were consequently at variance with the Jews, to whom they had occasioned much trouble, and who regarded them as wicked apostates. The Jews and Samaritans hated each other with a bitter and intense hatred. As a proof of it, you will remember that when our Lord came to the well of Samaria, and asked the woman to give him to drink, she said unto him, 'How is it that Thou, being a Jew, asketh drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria?' and St. John explains the meaning of this, by adding, 'for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.' With this fact before us, we should conceive that the Samaritan would be less inclined to give assistance to this ill-treated Jew than either the priest or the Levite.

"We can picture to ourselves the gleam of satisfaction, which we should suppose would come over his face, as he stood and gazed—aye, I say, we can picture it—for, alas! we are so much the more conversant with the feelings and expressions of bitterness and wrath than with those of mercy and love. We might conjecture that he would exclaim, here is one of that accursed nation, which has been the most hostile to our race. I rejoice at the misfortunes into which he has fallen, and leave him to perish as a brute beast. We might believe that he would naturally act thus. But it was far different. 'When he saw him he had compassion on him.' Though he had been brought up in the grossest ignorance, and had been surrounded by numberless forms of evil example, though doubtless he was no stranger to the strife, the churlishness and the wrong-doing which prevailed among his own people, yet still he was a man, still the fire of charity was smouldering in his heart, and it required only the influence of the Holy Spirit, and suitable objects on which to feed, to quicken it into a bright and sparkling flame. He had compassion on him. He did not merely look and afterwards pass on. His whole heart was roused at the lamentable appearance, he deemed that the sufferer had a strong claim upon him, as being of the same flesh and blood with himself, as a partaker with him of that human nature which here is ever liable to sorrow and woe. Thus it was that he identified himself with him, saw in his case what might probably at some time befall himself, and accordingly he hastened to do the part of a right true and loving friend."

The excellent practical remarks upon our social and religious duties with which this sermon is studded, are worthy of notice as breathing a really religious spirit, while at the same time they are distinguished by an entire absence of cant—that shallow substitute of which divines of mean abilities too frequently avail themselves to cover the poverty of their ideas, or as a vehicle for the very uncharitableness which it is their especial province, as ministers of the gospel, to condemn. Indeed, the impression which will remain with the candid reader, on laying down the discourse before us, we do not doubt will be, that the author, ever mindful of his high vocation, has yet perceived how powerful an aid the royal art may become to real religious feeling, from the very principles upon which the Craft is founded. And it must also be allowed that the "knowledge of the world," and of men (in the best sense of the phrase), which is obtained in the sacred precincts of the Lodge, must tend to inspire a contempt for fanaticism and sectarian prejudices—to foster a warm feeling of philanthropy—and last, not least, to dispose the truehearted Craftsman, be he priest or layman, to take a charitable view of the weaknesses of his fellows, and to put the best instead of the worst construction upon the actions of his neighbour whose politics or religious ideas may not run in exactly the same groove as his own.

Bro. Picton has an honest horror of self delusion in the matter of duty, and well points out that, to be a member of the greatest Order the world has ever seen, avails little, unless the principles upon which that institution is founded sink deep into the heart of the recipient:—

"Brethren, I need not remind you that the sum and substance of what I have been urging has been repeatedly brought before you in the mystical teaching to which you are privileged to have access. If Masonry is, as we hold it to be, a system of pure morality, expressed in allegory and illustrated by symbols—if it delights to trace in nature and in human acts the manifold indications of God's providence, wisdom and love, common sense must tell us, that if no practical conclusions follow, if it be inoperative, its adherents can have but little faith in the principles they profess.

* Faerie Queene, Book i., Canto ix., Stanza 5.

"The true Mason is a builder; his task it is to build up his body, soul, and spirit, a holy temple, acceptable to God. Hence he cannot afford to be idle, his bounden duty it is to work. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, saith the Grand Master, do it with thy might, with all thy might, for if it was worth doing at all it is worth doing well. And the work must not be protracted; it must be done ere the workman be summoned into the silent land, ere the silver cord be loosed and the golden bowl be broken, and the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit go back to God who gave it. Consequently, if he would exhibit himself as a genuine master builder, if it is his aim to promote the glory of God and the happiness of his fellows, there must be an active display of the spirit of love, he and his brethren must bring forth fruit, some thirty, some sixty, some an hundredfold. If Masonry is to be acceptable to the community at large, if it is to manifest itself as the handmaid of religion, as emphatically setting forth those principles on which the strength and stability of all order, legislation, and freedom must permanently rest as the strong upholder of all the amenities of friendship and the purity and courtesies of social life; it is then imperatively required of those who are members of this ancient Craft, that they show by the love which they bear towards each other and those who are without, that they are mindful of the great commandment—Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself; that ever meditating the precepts of the divine law, they are at all times ready to acquiesce in the exhortation, 'go and do thou likewise.'"

The oration which forms the third division of the pamphlet was delivered by the same brother, and upon the same day, but within the Provincial Grand Lodge. The subject of it is symbolism and its nature, more especially in reference to its connection with Masonry; and this topic is handled, in some places, in a masterly style—the philosophical and the practical bearing of the subject being both duly taken into consideration. One part of this oration appears to us of so truly excellent a character that we think our readers will require no apology for a somewhat long extract.

"Symbolism is a law of humanity, and, provided it be kept within due limits, is well suited to man's needs. The monarch, the judge, the priest, and the soldier, wear the insignia of their several offices. There are the apposite emblems of peace and of war; and flowers, 'the stars that in earth's firmament do shine,' have in their picturesque variety been at all times associated with the deepest and tenderest affections. Like everything else, this principle is liable to abuse. The heart of man is prone to idolatry, ever ready to prefer the shadow to the substance, the outward vesture to the inner spirit. Hence it behoves us to watch that we be not enslaved by that which is but a medium of significance, that we labour to grasp the substantial and abiding truth. With this precaution symbolism becomes a wise and judicious teacher, and exercises an influence for good.

"Seeing, then, the law is of universal application, we should naturally expect to trace its presence in architecture and the plastic arts; and in them it has been most widely developed. We have only to contrast classical and mediæval art in order to witness how in either case the symbolism has been the reflex of the respective spirit of the age. Classical or pagan art, as has been justly observed, is characterized as being 'horizontal, definite, and reposing.' Its aim was to embody strength, grace, harmony, and proportion. In it the Doric column was regarded as the ideal of manly strength, while the Ionic column was viewed as the type of feminine beauty. It spoke of all that was outwardly noble, beautiful, and grand, as connected with earth; of gods coming down from heaven in the likeness of men, but of gods tormented by evil passions, and oftentimes yielding to degrading lusts; and of the heroic, but of the heroic as manifested only in acting, not in suffering. It spoke of the dulce and decorum, and the nescio quid venustum, of life crowned with flowers, inspired by the wine-cup, and embellished with wit; but it spoke of nothing more; in fact, in many respects, it seemed but a graceful enunciation of the comfortless adage, 'Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' Not so with mediæval art, which is contradistinguished as being 'vertical, indefinite, and aspiring.' It was based on the sublimities of faith, and became the sensuous exponent of the elevating sentiment—

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art; to dust returnest
Was not spoken of the soul."

It, too, spoke of strength and beauty, but of these in conjunction with the infinite and the eternal; of the beauties of earth, but in reference to the glories of heaven. 'A Gothic cathedral,' says Coleridge, 'is the petrification of our religion; its principle is infinity made imaginable.' And in another place he happily remarks—'An instinctive taste teaches men to build their churches in flat countries with spire-steeples, which, as they cannot be referred to any other object, point as with silent finger to the sky and stars; and sometimes, when they reflect the brazen light of a rich, though rainy sunset, appear like a pyramid of flame burning heavenward.' As an exemplification of what I am propounding, let us visit in imagination some ancient minster—one of those august fanes which are at once the ornament of our land, the glory of our Order, and the culmination of Masonic art. On approaching we discover that the ground-plan is arranged in the form of a cross, thus shadowing forth the great truth that the cross, or self-denial, is the only foundation of all that is really noble and good. Entering through the western portal, the first object which presents itself is the font, typical of regeneration or the new birth. The font is generally octagonal in shape, the number eight being significant of the new creation, as the number seven is of the old. Proceeding onwards, we discern the number three pervading every direction, as emblematic of the Triune Elohim, manifested in length by nave, transept, and chancel; in breadth by nave, north and south aisles; and in height by pier arches, triforia, and clerestory. The nave, which indicates the church militant on earth, is separated by a screen from the chancel, which points to the church triumphant in heaven. For this reason the doors of the chancel invariably open inwards—never outwards; and on the lower parts of the screen allegorical allusions to the grim king of terrors are not unfrequently to be met with, as implying that the entrance from the one church into the other must be through the grave and portal of death. Station yourself at the west end of either the north or south aisle, and let the eye wander in an oblique direction; and in the seemingly never-ending vista of pier and arch gradually dwindling away in the distance, and in nave, aisle, transept, and chancel harmoniously blending into one, you have no inapt symbol of the infinite. Climb up to the roof, or to any place whence you can survey those portions of the fabric which are removed from observation, and an investigation of them will prove that they have been as thoughtfully designed and as carefully executed as those which are more obvious to the eye. And hence the lesson that the acts which are transacted in private ought to be as strictly conformable to the standard of integrity as those which are done before the public gaze. Look upon the "Storied windows richly dight, Casting a dim religious light," and know that in performing the offices of devotion, thou oughtest to retire to the inner man, and turn away thy attention from the glare of earthly splendour and worldly attraction. And as thou art doomed to die, let the recumbent effigies, with their pallid countenances and hands gently clasped over their breasts in the attitude of prayer, admonish thee of the transitoriness of the things of this earth, that ere long thou must go to thy long home, that "Only the actions of the just Smell sweet and blossom in the dust."

Thus, wherever you turn, you will find the beautiful and true, and through earthly magnificence and the works of human skill you may catch, as through a glass darkly, faint glimpses of the glory which is above. Now, what is the moral of all this? It is obvious. I have said before, that the true Mason is a builder, whose task it is to build up his body, soul, and spirit a holy temple, acceptable to God. To accomplish this let him apply himself to the work with a stout heart and a willing spirit. Let him rightly use the means of grace. To build high you must dig deep."

Public meetings and public celebrations are but too often characterised by conventionalism and spurious excitement; and of such a preserved record inevitably becomes as spiritless as a long uncorked bottle of champagne, whose effervescence has disappeared, leaving nought but insipidity behind. Such will not be the verdict pronounced upon the proceedings chronicled in the pages we have been noticing. A praiseworthy and noble object, energetically worked out and happily concluded, terminating in a ceremony which was characterised by good taste and unanimity, and adorned with the flowers of eloquence and the charms of fraternal intercourse, will leave upon the memories of those brethren who were present an impression which they will not soon or willingly part with; and to them and to the Craft in general (as feeling an interest in all that is for the general good of the Order) this little book will be a welcome record often to be referred to, in order in future years to refresh the memory as to the events of a day that deserves to be marked with a white stone in the annals of English Freemasonry.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

LORD MACAULAY has two volumes more of his "History of England" nearly ready for the press; but we believe that they will not be published this season. The great care which the noble author bestows on the work before it finally leaves his hands necessitates some delay.

A correspondent of the Athenæum writes:—"The church authorities are restoring the York Minster without referring to an architect. A master-mason shortens the gargoyles, shuts their mouths, and lowers the parapets at his own good pleasure. What a compliment to the good old builder!" Surely the literary and antiquarian gentlemen of Yorkshire need no other proof than this of their want of an Archæological Society in that shire!

A statue has been decreed by the city of Mexico to the illustrious Alexander Von Humboldt. The statue is to be executed in marble by an Italian sculptor. It will be placed in the interior of the "School of Mines," and will bear the inscription, "A Alexandre de Humboldt, le Mexique reconnaissant."

Mr. James Augustus St. John is engaged on a "History of England," which, from "peculiar sources of information he has," will throw much new light over the era previous to the Conquest. The work will be in six or seven volumes, and published separately, the first of which may be expected in the spring.

A commission, appointed by the French Academy of Sciences to draw up a report on the results of the scientific expedition undertaken to observe the late total eclipse in Brazil, calls attention to the very important total eclipse which will occur in July next year, and will be visible in Spain and Algeria. The commission believe that at least forty astronomers, from France, England, Germany, Russia, and Italy, will assemble in Spain or Africa to witness this eclipse.

Humboldt, by a will in his own handwriting, bequeathed all his moveable property, including his library, to M. Seyffert, who for forty years served him as valet-de-chambre. M. Seyffert requested the seals to be removed, which were placed on the effects of Humboldt when he died, and demanded his legacy. The relations of the philosopher have protested against both these measures; but the urban tribunal of Berlin ordered the seals to be broken, and the legacy to be delivered in terms of the will. However, upon the appeal of the relatives, the Royal Court of Berlin has just granted a delay of three months to put in proofs in support of the protestation they have made. The contest has, naturally enough, created great sensation in the learned world, which is curious to know what will become of the immense library of Von Humboldt, which not only contains works of great importance in every branch of science, of literature, and the arts, but which contains also numerous volumes presented to Humboldt by the most celebrated men of the present day, and thus containing many autographs.

With regard to the rectorship of the University of Edinburgh, we understand that the election will be between Mr. Gladstone and Lord Neaves. The committee which had been formed for Lord Campbell and Lord John Russell have united with the Gladstone committee. It is reported at St. Andrew's that the principalship of the united college, vacant by Sir David Brewster's removal to Edinburgh, has been conferred on Dr. Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrew's, and the report has been so far credited that both the senatus and the provost and magistrates have memorialised government against the appointment.

The Illustrated News of the World says:—Mr. Wills has been successively the sub-editor of Chambers's Journal, the Daily News, Household Words, and All the Year Round; the former two owed something to him, but the latter two owe, perhaps, most of their success to him.

The critic of the Athenæum speaks thus of the popular entertainer:—"Mr. Albert Smith has re-entered China at a dash, carrying Canton, as the French revolutionary band carry Paris—with a song. His audience came, and laughed, and went away. What more is to be said of this amusing traveller and showman? You do not go to the Egyptian Hall to learn anything about China, and you succeed to a marvel. Among many good jokes and satirical bits is that in which Mr. Albert Smith assures you, with a roguish gravity of face, that about two hundred millions of the Chinese have no other conception of a future life than quattling in a lotus flower, gazing at butter!"

M. Amedée Renée, the well-known French journalist, is just dead. L. Renée was the author of several works. The last were, "The Pieces of Mazarin," and "Manners and Characters of the Eighteenth Century." He formerly contributed to the "Revue de Paris," and to the "Encyclopédie des gens du Monde." In the spring of 1857 he replaced M. de Césaire as redacteur-en-chef of the Constitutionnel and of the Pays, but was not acting in that capacity at the time of his death.

Mr. Charles Kingsley has nearly completed a new novel, which may be expected in the spring. The subject is different from most of Mr. Kingsley's fictions; consequently more than usual interest is felt among critics for its appearance.

A great deal of the attention both of the Tuscan Government and the population turns upon matters connected with the Ministry of Public Education. The Marquis Ridolfi is thought to have been anything but licentious in his new appointments. The vacations are drawing to an end, and the Universities of Pisa and Siena are soon to feel the benefit of their enlarged endowment and the newly-added professorships. The same activity in the same branch of administration is exhibited by all the Governments of Central Italy. Whole batches of new professors are seated on newly-erected chairs at Parma, Modena, and Bologna. In the latter place Count Carlo Pepoli, long a resident in England, and well known as a poet and scholar, was offered the dignity of Rector Magnifico, or President, of that eldest of all Alma Masters. He answered, he would only accept on one condition, and that was that he should be allowed to open the university in the morning, to close it again immediately in the evening of the same day, after distributing to all students applying for a certificate of matriculation billets of admission into the ranks of the various corps of the national army.

One Mr. Charles Butterworth, of Mainsworth, has in the press a "History of the County of Durham," of which "high expectations are entertained." It contains illustrations of most of the ancient specimens of architecture for which the county is celebrated.

The matriculation examination of the Bombay University commenced on the 3rd of October, simultaneously at the town-hall in Bombay, and at the assembly rooms in Poona. It is satisfactory to notice that eighty-eight candidates presented themselves for examination at Bombay, and forty at Poona, making a total of one hundred and twenty-eight candidates.

M. Philoxène Boyer has interrupted his course of Lectures on Shakespeare in order to pronounce an oration upon the genius of Schiller. The salon of the réunion of the learned societies was crammed to excess, there being a large number of Germans present to hear an eloquent Frenchman express his appreciation of their renowned countryman. M. Boyer's oration, delivered entirely without the aid of notes, occupied nearly two hours; and the admirable manner in which he exhibited the prominent points of the poet's character, the fervid eloquence with which he extolled the genius and the simplicity of the man, and the masterly way in which he gave to general principles of liberty an indirect, but telling application, constantly drew from the closely-packed audience the most enthusiastic applause.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE BOYS SCHOOL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I hope the world will not attribute to me, as you have done in your article of this day on the Boys School, the additions now in progress there. The Rev. Mr. Woodward has, I believe, had the sole direction.

I prepared designs for some additional buildings, which I understand were not immediately acted on for want of sufficient funds. I subsequently examined some plans, I know not by whom made, but submitted to me by the House Committee, which were not adopted, in consequence of my report.

Since then a few pounds were demanded, with my approval, for the temporary provision of a school room, to be made by clearing away some of the partitions of the existing building, under the direction of the schoolmaster.

This sum appears to have swelled to several hundreds of pounds, but in what way applied I do not yet know, except that there are some new buildings erected without professional advice or superintendence.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
EDWARD ROBERTS, Architect.

16, Holles-street, Cavendish-square,
12th Nov., 1859.

NEWSPAPER COMMUNICATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As I hear that certain misrepresentations have been spread respecting the letter written by me to the Era newspaper, in May last; and as I do not know whence they have arisen, I can only refute them through the medium of the Freemasons' Magazine. On the occasion in question, it may be remembered, that the Era had given an erroneous account of the proceedings at the meeting held at the Grand Registrar's chambers, and had also given my name as being present. The latter assertion being false, I lost no time in contradicting it; and I cannot see how such an act could be considered an offence, as it appears to me only an additional evidence of the untruth of the whole statement. I however soon discovered that my motives had been mistaken, and I then wrote to Bro. Roxburgh upon the subject, and his reply led me to consider him satisfied with my explanation. So far from being opposed to the system then introduced, I should wish to see it adopted on future occasions, as I consider it a vast improvement on the old custom. For eighteen years I have endeavoured to give a firm support to what I have deemed the true interests of Masonry; and it is scarcely just that the sincerity of my principles should now be doubted.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

R. WARNER WHEELER,

P.M., Nos. 27 and 324; P.Z., No. 2.

United University Club, Pall Mall,
Nov. 15th, 1859.

REVISION OF THE CALENDAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Devoted as I am to the science of which your pages are an admirable exponent, it is a source of great satisfaction to me, and doubtless to the Craft in general, to witness the increasing vigour in the articles you have published from week to week since the change in your form; there is more of useful and interesting information; more of inquiry into the origin and history of Freemasonry, as well as into the traces of it which may be found in false systems of religion; more opportunity for eliciting opinions and facts by means of your "Masonic Notes and Queries." While all can enjoy and apply the varied knowledge which you thus disseminate, the communications of correspondents to your pages will more or less partake of the characteristics of the individual writers. Some are charged with antiquarian lore; some with expositions of our rights and ceremonies; some with the statistics of our Order; on the latter of these departments I propose now to make a few remarks.

It appears that the highest number of a Lodge in the Calendar of the present year is 1063, whereas at the beginning of 1848 the highest was only 804; thus apparently Freemasonry has become much more flourishing and extended in the course of the last eleven years, inasmuch as the number of Lodges has increased by nearly a third. From this, however, a considerable deduction must be made, for, during this period, sixty-three Lodges which were in existence at the commencement of 1848, have been erased. From this statement several useful considerations naturally arise. First:—As about six Lodges have on an average been broken up in each year, it is worth while for the Masonic authorities to institute an inquiry as to the cause, and especially why in one year (1852) the number was so large as twenty-eight, whereas in 1848, 1849, and 1855, not a single case of this kind occurred.

Again it will be observed that in some cases warrants are granted for the establishment of Lodges, which continue for a short time and then sink, yet, after the lapse of a few years application is again made, and another warrant is granted. Take Stafford as an example. Lodge No. 427 was established in 1814 and broken up in 1850. Lodge No. 626 was founded in 1836 and erased in 1852. Then an interim occurred without a Lodge in that town, till 1857, when a new one, No. 1,028, was instituted. Such a case as this ought to form a subject of especial inquiry as to the cause of these variations, which are most undesirable and indicate a great want of unity and firmness of purpose.

Nor is this an isolated case, for Norwich affords another instance, though not quite so glaring. In that town two Lodges were abandoned in 1852 and 1853, but no other new ones have been opened since; one of those two was instituted only in 1831.

Another question should also be entertained, namely, whether in all the instances of Lodges being broken up, the warrants have been returned to the Grand Secretary, as I apprehend they ought to be when Lodges are erased from the calendar. If they have not, immediate search ought to be set on foot, and these important documents should be recovered and safely deposited among the archives of Grand Lodge. A little consideration will show that this is a serious matter, since, under such warrants, diverted from their original purpose and localities, and in the hands of designing persons, all sorts of improprieties may be perpetrated, and "pseudo masonry" be introduced, such as that respecting which you gave a caution to the brethren in your last number. On this point I do not speak at random and without authority. About a year and a half ago, happening to pay a visit to a small town in which there is no Lodge, I found several resident brethren who were affiliated in neighbouring towns, and who were anxious to commence arrangements for opening one in their own locality. Inquiries were set on foot, to which I cheerfully gave some little assistance, in the course of which I ascertained that many years ago a Lodge had existed there; and I discovered a brother who had belonged to it, and who, if I remember rightly, had still some of the furniture in his possession. In reply to a question as to the warrant, he informed me that it had been conveyed (I think) to Brazil, and that a Lodge is working under it there—very probably without the knowledge of the Grand Lodge of England. Under proper arrangements, strictly carried out as they ought to be by our officials, such a proceeding as this should be simply impossible. If an English charter had been in like manner carried off to Smyrna, and the Lodge there had commenced working under it, such an order as that which has recently issued from Grand Lodge relative to brethren initiated in it would be justifiable only on the ground that the transfer of the warrant had not been duly authorized.

I have been informed that in South America it is dangerous for a stranger from Europe to visit Masonic Lodges, on account of their political tendencies, and the consequent suspicion in which the members are held by government; this may well be the case, if instances of irresponsibility, such as I suspect to exist, are really to be met with, and of which the case I have quoted probably forms an instance.

From a table which I have prepared, it appears that forty of the Canadian Lodges have been struck out of the list in the calendar, but there are forty-one Canadian Lodges still on the register. Now that there is a distinct Grand Lodge for Canada, apart from the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England, the whole of these ought to disappear from our own published records. Of the 1063 numbers, there are 142 in addition to the above which have now no Lodges assigned to them; that is to say, in the course of time they have become defunct, and have been erased. The total of the above numbers is 223, which, being nearly one fifth of the whole 1063, is sufficiently large, one would suppose, to induce Grand Lodge to revise and change the numbers of all the existing Lodges under the Grand Lodge of England, for which the recent separation of the Canadian district affords a good opportunity. I would therefore respectfully recommend that the attention of the authorities should be called to the subject.

It would be well, if by means of the constant communication at head quarters with all the Lodges under English supervision, some means could be taken to recover the certificates of deceased brethren, and return them to the Grand Secretary. Latterly I have not been so situated as to have opportunity of witnessing the constant attempts which are made by persons who almost adopt it as a part of the trade or profession of a beggar, to obtain pecuniary aid without a shadow of claim to it by means of such documents. Several years ago I saw quite enough to convince me that this kind of fraud is systematically practised with impunity. There is no doubt that chemical agency is used to take out the original signatures, and that those of the bearers are substituted. It would be well if, on every certificate a direction were conspicuously printed, that on the death of the owner it should at once be sent to Grand Lodge whence it emanated.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours faithfully and fraternally, Jersey, Nov. 8th, 1859. H. H.

[Our correspondent appears to forget that it is necessary to prove the brother applying for relief. Imposture is no doubt frequently practised with success from the absence of this very obvious precaution.—Ed.]

SPURIOUS MASONIC LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Allow me to say a few words in favour and extenuation of the so called "spurious Lodges" mentioned with so much indignation in your valuable paper, and certainly formed in some instances under warrants from the Grand Lodge of France, and in all cases recognized as brother Masons by the various Parisian Lodges. I can aver from my own experience that nothing of a political tendency has any part in the duties of these Lodges, and that the formula is in all material respects the same as in all Masonic Lodges.

To deny these brothers admission into your society is simply an act unworthy of the great precepts of Masonry; and considering in how few instances the admission would be asked, for obvious reasons, perfectly unnecessary. Besides, these brothers, being really unable to pay the heavy fees necessary to admission into an English body of Masons, should, on the contrary, be rather encouraged to form Lodges of their own; and certainly no liberal man and true Mason would deny them the privilege of meeting for our common purpose. With many apologies for intruding on your no doubt valuable time,

Nov. 14th, 1859.

I am, yours fraternally,
A POOR MASON.

P.S.—I enclose my card for authenticity, but not for publication.

[Our brother is wrong; the Lodges denounced do not hold under warrants of the Grand Lodge of France; and, even if they did, that body could have no jurisdiction in England; and any brother holding communion with such Lodges must remember that he subjects himself to exclusion from the Order.—ED.]

GERMAN MASONIC PUBLICATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Perhaps you will give me leave to draw your attention, and, through your paper, the attention of our brethren in general, to a Masonic publication called "Die Bauhütte," edited at Leipzig, by Bro. F. G. Findel. The profits arising from this publication are solely for the benefit of benevolent institutions, and this alone would recommend its circulation. But not merely to this must I refer; the information conveyed in its pages spreads far, and is of such a nature that its recommendation becomes the duty of every true Mason. It is the organ of every thing philanthropic and Masonic, and will be a source of instruction to some of the German readers in England, who are unacquainted with German Masonry.

The Jews in particular have great cause to encourage the editor, for he has nobly fought their battle in Germany, and to the instrumentality of his papers they owe it that they are at present admitted as "permanent visitors" to most of the German Lodges.

Being convinced that mentioning the above will prompt you to give this letter a place in your publication, and begging of you to use your influence for the welfare of this benevolent object,

I have the honour to be, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
G. BENDA.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

THE Masonic season having now fairly commenced, we appeal to the Secretaries of the various Lodges and Chapters to assist us in keeping our information as full and complete as possible, by forwarding us early notices of the business transacted at their different meetings; as without their assistance it is impossible to render the Masonic Mirror so accurate a reflex of the proceedings of the brethren as we should wish it to be. We should also be glad to receive the circulars convening the various Lodges.

At the Prince Frederick William Lodge of Instruction, No. 1055, on Wednesday, 23rd, the ceremony of consecration will be rehearsed, Bro. Thos. A. Adams officiating as consecrating Master.

METROPOLITAN.

GRAND STEWARDS' LODGE.—This Lodge met on Wednesday, the 16th inst., under the able presidency of Bro. Hewlett, W. M., when arrangements were made for working the lectures of the 2nd and 3rd degrees on the last public night of the year, December 21. All Master Masons are eligible to be present.

ENOCH LODGE (No. 11).—The first meeting of the season took place last Wednesday, November 9, at the Freemasons' Tavern, when the W. M. Br. James Pain and his officers performed their respective duties most admirably. Mr. George F. Swan was initiated, and Bro. Heard raised. The respected and versatile Secretary, Bro. Peter Matthews, announced three or four resignations, as well as five new members for ballot next month. At six o'clock the brethren left Lodge to partake of a most sumptuous banquet, supplied on Bro. Elkington's usual liberal and excellent style. The evening was pleasantly passed, and the vocal abilities of Bros. Job Austin and Watson was fully appreciated. The visitors included Bros. Newton, Hughes, D. M. Aird, &c.

ST. LUKE'S LODGE (No. 168).—The usual monthly meeting was held on Monday, Nov. 7th, at the Commercial Hall, Chelsea. The work consisted in raising Bros. Holland and Cates, passing Bros. J. Cates and Augier, and initiating Lieut.-Colonel Evelyn, all of which ceremonies were performed in a very satisfactory manner by Bro. W. Birch, W. M., assisted by Bro. Platt, S. W., and Bro. Waite, J. W. (pro tem.) It was resolved to send a letter of condolence to Bro. G. Todd, P. M., under his present bereavement, being that of the loss of a son, his son's wife, and their two children by the wreck of the ill-fated vessel, the Royal Charter. Bro. Collard submitted the draft of a letter, which was adopted, it being couched in terms truly Masonic, and well suited to the occasion. Among the visitors were, Bro. Snow, P. M., No. 206; Bro. Clarke, No. 1044; Bro. Cooke, P. M., No. 745. Bro. Snow responded to the toast of "The Visitors," and observed with what satisfaction he had witnessed the proceedings of the evening, but it was no wonder when he observed at the left of the W. M., a P. M. (Bro. Collard) to whom the St. Luke's Lodge ought to be grateful; for the assistance of such a brother was a pillar of strength, he being justly ranked amongst the ornaments of the Order.

PHOENIX LODGE (No. 202).—The first meeting of this Lodge for the season took place at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Saturday, the 12th instant, the W. M. Bro. Williams presiding, when Mr. Fenwick, C. E., was duly initiated into the Order. Bro. G. States, P. M. 166, was appointed I. G. The circular relative to the spurious Lodges was ordered to be entered on the minutes. The brethren afterwards adjourned to banquet, and spent a very pleasant evening, the only visitor being a brother of the initiate.

DOMATIC LODGE (No. 206).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, Nov. 12th, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane. Bro. Robert Baker, W. M., presided, and was assisted by Bros. Haydon, S. W.; Moore, J. W.; Wilson, S. D.; Russon, J. D.; and Forge, I. G. The minutes of the Lodge having been read, the W. M. in a very able manner passed Bro. George Tickell to the second degree. Mr. Taylor was then introduced, and in very impressive manner initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. The next business was the election of Master for the ensuing year, and the votes being unanimous, Bro. Haydon, S. W., was elected to that important office. Bro. Smith was also re-elected Treasurer. The audit committee was appointed. On the motion of Bro. J. Smith, Treasurer, seconded by Bro. Brett, P. M., it was agreed that a jewel of the value of five guineas be presented to Bro. Baker, as a mark of respect the Lodge entertains towards him for his efficient conduct during the past year. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to a well furnished dinner. After which the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and the evening was spent in great harmony, during which the health of Bro. George Tickell, captain of the Agincourt, was proposed, wishing him safe and prosperous on the voyage he was about to commence to Australia. Bro. Tickell responded, and said that while he was on the seas he should ever remember with lively feelings the great pleasure he had experienced by being admitted to the light of Freemasonry in the Domatic Lodge; and in August next he hoped again to have the pleasure of seeing them in the Lodge.

ST. JAMES'S UNION LODGE (No. 211).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday, Nov. 8th, at the Freemasons' Tavern. There were present Bros. Stacey, W. M.; Cockcroft, S. W.; H. Francis, J. W.; Gorton, P. M., and Treas. The Lodge having been duly opened, Bro. Baynham was raised to the sublime degree of M. M. After which Mr. K. Moore was introduced, and duly initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry. There being no other business, the Lodge was closed, and about forty-five brethren partook of refreshment. The usual Masonic toasts were then given, Bro. Smith, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers. for Somerset, returning thanks for the toast of the Grand Officers. "The Visitor" was the next toast, for which Bro. Walkley returned thanks; and Bro. Moore for that of "The Initiate." The sum of five pounds was given to the widow of a deceased member; and fifteen pounds collected for the widow of the late Secretary, Bro. C. G. Lacon. The W. M. announced that the consecration of the new Chapter attached to this Lodge would take place on Tuesday, 22nd Nov., at one o'clock, and he earnestly solicited the assistance of every member of the Lodge, as he (the W. M.) considered it a great favour that the Grand Chapter should have granted to them a new warrant.

LODGE OF JOPPA (No. 223).—This Lodge was opened in due form at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate, on Monday, the 7th instant, when the following candidates were balloted for and elected—Mr. Ed. Foreman and Mr. M. Phillips—and were afterwards initiated in a most able manner by the W. M., Bro. H. Harris. The Lodge was then closed with solemn prayer, and the brethren adjourned to dinner. The evening was enlivened by some excellent musical performance, Bro. Jona Greebe delighting the brethren by his wonderful command of the violin in a fantasia, and a duet for violin and piano with Bro. Van Noorden the well known pianist. Other musical brethren who were present acquitted themselves with great ability. Among the visitors was Bro. H. Abraham of the Lodge of Israel.

PERCY LODGE (No. 234).—The usual monthly meeting was held at Bro. Painter's, the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street, on the 8th of November. The W. M., Bro. Tyerman, assisted by Bro. J. R. Warren, S. W., Bro. Davis, J. W., and the rest of the officers, opened the Lodge at three o'clock, and after passing a brother to the degree of Fellow Craft, very ably initiated Messrs. Ching, Hart, and Glynes into the Order; the Worshipful Master then resigned his chair to Bro. Burrell, the immediate P. M., who very impressively raised a brother to the degree of Master Mason, and after duly closing the Lodge the brethren retired to refreshment. After the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, the Worshipful Master proposed "The healths of the newly initiated brethren and visitors," who severally returned thanks, and the Worshipful Master having in a most energetic speech responded to the brethren for drinking his health, afterwards proposed "The Past Masters of the Percy Lodge," which was replied to by Bro. Burrell, P.M., who took occasion to observe that, during one portion of the ceremony, the S.W., Bro. Warren, although a most enthusiastic and expert Mason, had slightly deviated from the working hitherto practised in this Lodge, and expressed his hope that in future the officers would adhere strictly to the text laid down by Bro. Peter Gilkes. Bro. J. R. Warren said he felt highly honoured by the compliments paid to him, and expressed his surprise at the censure bestowed therewith, his study being strictly to adhere to correctness in working the ceremonies; at the same time he congratulated the brethren that the Percy Lodge of Instruction continues to hold its meetings at the Masonic hall, Fetter-lane, every Saturday from half-past seven to half-past nine o'clock, and invited Bro. Burrell and the brethren to attend on those occasions, and he (Bro. Warren) could assure them he would be the last man to feel otherwise than pleased to be corrected on the slightest point wherein he may at any time be found to err. The remainder of the evening was spent in a very delightful and harmonious manner, and the brethren separated at an early hour.

JORDAN LODGE (No. 237).—A very numerous gathering of brethren assembled at this Lodge on an emergency summons of the W.M., Bro. J. Robinson, on Wednesday evening, November 9th, at the usual hour and place of meeting. The ostensible cause of the emergency was as indicated on the summons, to pass Bros. G. W. Martin, H. Stroud, W. Winyard, and C. Finglass, for whose initiation a previous Lodge of emergency had been called, and which was duly reported; but the absolute cause was the early departure of one of the members of the Lodge to India, having, since the session of the Jordan closed, received an appointment at Bombay. Bro. Farnham, who is a Mason of only about a year's standing, had so fully earned the esteem and regard of the brethren of the Lodge that they presented a requisition to the W.M., signed by every brother, to hold an emergency ten days before opening the session. As well as a full Lodge, a large number of visitors were present on this interesting occasion. Bros. Martin and Winyard were duly passed to the second degree; the other two initiates having been prevented attending from the circumstance of the Lodge being held on Lord Mayor's day. The working was done with scarcely the usual ability displayed by the Jordan Lodge. The recess was evidently had its effect; all will, however, be in prime order by the first regular meeting. The officers were Bros. Laughton, S.W.; Goldsborough, J.W.; Dyers, S.D.; Swan, J.D.; Jeffery, I.G., vice Spalding, retired. Besides the full muster of Past Masters of the Jordan Lodge, there were several among the visitors who had become acquainted with Bro. Farnham at various Lodges of Instruction, and who on this occasion visited to bid him a Masonic farewell and to wish him Godspeed in his new and important undertaking. At the banquet, the customary loyal and Masonic toasts were proceeded with in the usual graceful manner which has characterized Bro. Robinson's year of office, till the time arrived to give "The Past Masters and Officers," when the W.M. rose and said, that on this occasion he should exercise a power with which he was invested, and depart from the customary course of proceedings on these festive occasions. He should do so with greater pleasure because every Past Master and every officer was present, a palpable indication that they were as desirous to render a marked tribute of respect to a comparatively young brother among them, as he himself was in postponing the ordinary compliment to the veteran Masons and excellent officers of the Lodge. All present were aware that there was a brother among them who for the last twelve or eighteen months had filled his place in the Lodge with honour to himself and credit to the ancient Order of which he appeared calculated to become an efficient and distinguished member. Within thirty-six hours their excellent Brother Farnham would leave them and his native land, to exercise that kindred art to Masonry—the enlightenment of the mind, the expansion of the mental powers, the inculcation of holy and sacred principles, and the eradication of all that was vile, grovelling, and opposed to the divine will of the G.A.O.T.U. The brethren had often witnessed true Masonic principles actuating a man before he became initiated. Brother Farnham was another example; in him Masonry had added weight to those principles and given them direction: but in his profession, in his perseverance, and in his success, he had ever, he (the W.M.) was assured, carried out those high and holy motives and aspirations which it was the province of Masonry to inculcate. He need not now and in this place refer to the eminently useful career of this brother, whether in his scholastic profession, his literary pursuits, his social position among his fellow schoolmasters, or in his capacity as a founder and supporter of benevolent institutions connected with that body; these points in his past history were patent to all; their object was rather to reiterate the regret that all the brethren as well as himself felt, that that Lodge was losing (though he trusted for a time only) a brother so eminently qualified to shine wherever he was destined to move. That his best wishes might be realized must be sincerely desired by his numerous friends, and that the G.A.O.T.U. might support him and his in the trying climate of India was the earnest hope of all. The W.M. concluded by saying—Bro. Farnham, we wish you abundant success, and confide you to the care of Him who will ever prove a ready help to the Mason who acts up to his profession. Many of the other brethren testified to the moral worth and Masonic consistency of Bro. Farnham's character, among them Bro. Tyrrell. Bro. Farnham made an appropriate and touching reply, referred modestly to his past career, and expressed his gratification at having been admitted to the brotherhood, both on account of the wholesome moral principles it inculcated, and the cordial and unalloyed fraternity of feeling and action which it inevitably induced to an extent that could not be looked for in any other community. He gave a sketch of his anticipated position at Byculla, and assured the brethren that he should look forward with much pleasure to the time when he hoped he might be permitted to meet them once again in Lodge here below; if not, there was still a nobler realization, a meeting in that Lodge above—of which this, with all its beauties and all its holy ties and inspirations, was but a faint emblem—ever to work in the visible presence of the Great Architect.

[The following sketch of the career of Bro. Farnham is taken from a speech made on the occasion of another farewell dinner given to him by his neighbours of Marylebone. The speaker, Mr. Joseph Randall, said:— "We wish to show our respect for him as a public teacher, and to express our esteem for him as a private friend. As a teacher he confessedly stands conspicuous in the very foremost rank. Every establishment over which he presided has, through his exertions, been successful in no ordinary degree. In the position he at present fills, his talents and his energy, his patience and his perseverance, have been crowned with what I imagine is almost unexampled success. Six years ago he entered upon his duties in Marylebone, with about one hundred and fifty scholars of the slenderest attainments. He has now actually more than double that number upon his muster roll; and as to attainments, we have the opinion expressed but three days ago, by one of the most competent judges in such matters, that the school is equal to any, and superior to the majority of metropolitan schools. And I know he leaves not only amid the tears of his pupils, but also amid the deep regrets of no inconsiderable portion of the adult population of that neighbourhood. But our friend has not solely confined his attention to the schoolroom. The Metropolitan Church Schoolmasters' Association; the Associated Body of Church Schoolmasters; the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society; and the Schoolmasters' Benevolent Institution, have all found in him one of their steadiest and ablest supporters. Gentlemen, it might well be imagined that a life of such incessant activity, in the schoolroom, in the committee-room, and on the platform, would leave little or no time for literary labours. But our friend has carefully gathered up the crumbs—his leisure moments—that nothing be lost. It must have been during such fragmentary periods that he wrote his admirable "Essay on the Training of Pupil Teachers," an essay which is a valuable contribution to our educational literature, and one from which the young and inexperienced teacher may derive a thoughtful and well digested plan for his guidance; and one also from which the ablest and best amongst us all may glean many useful hints and many valuable suggestions. Nor does our friend's literary labour end here. For five long years, in conjunction with our indefatigable and able friend Mr. Stevenson, he conducted an educational magazine. None of you can imagine, unless you have been practically engaged in the task, the hard work, the sheer drudgery and thankless nature of the duties of an editor. During the five years' editorship of our friend, I will not say that his periodical was blameless, but I do say that, upon the whole, it exhibited a truer reflex of the opinions and sentiments of teachers than any other similar periodical; whilst a few of its articles were written with a power, a force, and an eloquence that would have graced the pages of a magazine of far higher literary pretensions. For his long and laborious services, our friend obtained no reward—save that priceless one—the approval of a good conscience—nay, more, so far from reaping any pecuniary advantage, he was actually a loser to a considerable extent. I know how readily, cheerfully, and thankfully he admitted into his pages any articles or letters he thought would promote the holy cause of benevolence; his aim was high and holy, his motives pure and disinterested, and his sole desire an earnest, longing endeavour to soothe and to alleviate the trials and afflictions of his suffering brethren. The last literary effort of our friend is a 'School History of England.' Those who have seen this little unpretending volume acknowledge that it contains much valuable information of a kind not usually found in such books; that it is written in a style easy and clear, and that, upon the whole, it is well adapted for the purpose for which it was designed. We all, I am sure, wish the little book 'Godspeed,' and I trust that its success may be such as to repay the writer for the great labour and expense he has sustained in giving it to the public. On the second reason why we have invited our friend this evening, namely, to show our esteem for him as a private friend, I must be very brief. I dare not trust my own feelings to enlarge upon this point. But this I must say respecting the friend of my boyhood, and the companion of my riper years, that in him I have ever found a man of spotless integrity, scrupulous truthfulness, and unblemished honour; and a friend of an affectionate and sympathizing disposition and of a faithful, loving, and true heart. Some few whom I now gathered round this hospitable board, have seen, like myself, our friend's character submitted to the severest ordeal—wisdom's test—the extreme of fortune. We have seen him in the day of prosperity, when his sky was unclouded; when he viewed all things through that bright medium which health diffuses around, and we can testify that he 'bore his honours meekly,' and was never 'puffed up with a vain conceit.' And we have seen him in the hour of trial—in the season of great bodily sufferings—and we can also testify that he exhibited the patience, the fortitude, and the resignation becoming the man and the Christian."]

LODGE OF FRIENDSHIP (No. 248).—The regular meeting was held at

Thursday, November 10th, at the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street, under the presidency of Bro. D. N. Frampton, W.M. Bro. James Blackburn was passed to the second degree. The election of officers for the year ensuing then took place, and Bro. Edwin Stokes was elected W.M., Bro. William Rumsey re-elected Treasurer, and Bro. Henry Holt, Tyler. After the disposal of other business, the brethren gathered round the worthy Treasurer (who at the request of the W.M. presided,) at the dinner. Bro. Arehbell, P.M., proposed the health of Bro. W. Rumsey, to whose energy, he said, the Lodge of Friendship was indebted for its prosperous condition. The health of the W.M. elect was greeted with enthusiasm; and, in reply, Bro. Stokes said never was friendship more fully illustrated than in the fact of his election to the distinguished post of Master of the Lodge. He had been chosen the Third Principal of a Royal Arch Chapter, but for which, without the rank of Master, he was ineligible; and Bro. Carpenter, on learning this, withdrew his own claims to the chair. Bros. How and Wilson, the visitors acknowledged the hospitality of the Lodge.

ZETLAND LODGE (No. 752).—This Lodge assembled its members for the first meeting at their new quarters, The King's Arms Hotel, High-street, Kensington, on Wednesday, November 9th, Bro. Durrant, W.M., in the chair, performing his duties satisfactorily, by initiating Mr. Faytmayer into the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry. Having performed this ceremony, the W.M. requested Bro. Copus, P.M., to raise to the third degree Bros. Farrington, Macdonald, and Langachar, which duty he performed so as to elicit high encomiums from the brethren present, for his correct and impressive working. After some other routine business had been transacted, the brethren adjourned to a dinner, provided in excellent style by Bro. Macdonald. The brethren expressed in warm terms, their approbation of the accommodation afforded by the extensive suite of rooms exclusively set apart for their use on Lodge nights.

POLISH NATIONAL LODGE (No. 778).—An emergency meeting of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Thursday, November 10th, Bro. L. Panchaud, W.M., presiding, when Mr. John Drew was initiated into Freemasonry.

INSTRUCTION.

ROBERT BURNS LODGE (No. 25).—This very numerous and first class working Lodge of Instruction had its anniversary supper on Thursday, November 10th, at Bro. J. W. Adams's, Union Tavern, Air-street, Regent-street, presided over by Bro. D. R. Farmer, the W.M. of the other Lodge, assisted by Bro. Thos. Alexander Adams, P.M. No. 169, having been the custom for many years thus annually to gather together the numerous brethren who attend the Lodge either to give or receive instruction. There were present, P.Ms., Bros. Lee, Clements, pted, Le Cassick, Robinson, Queely, T. Allen (Treas.), Newton (Sec.), tates, Wyatt, and others, in all about sixty, who partook of a very comfortable supper, provided by Bro. Adams, and which was duly appreciated. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were ably given and spoken by the Worshipful Master, and responded to by various brethren. The amusement of the brethren was great at Bro. Platt's comic recitation "Punch," and there was some good singing by Bros. Nicholls, J. W. Adams, W. Adams, and other brethren.

PROVINCIAL.

BERKSHIRE.

NEWBURY.—Loyal Berkshire Lodge of Hope (No. 839).—At the meeting of this Lodge, on Friday, the 4th instant, a communication respecting certain spurious Lodges in London, and elsewhere, was read in open lodge, and the brethren duly cautioned. The P.M., Bro. H. E. Astley, ov. S.G.W., after an eloquent address from the W.M., Bro. Cave, was assented with an elegant P.M.'s jewel, as a mark of esteem and fraternal regard from the brethren of the Lodge. Bro. Astley made a very impressive response. After an elegant banquet the brethren separated in effect accord.

DURHAM.

STATESHEAD.—Borough Lodge (No. 614).—A Lodge of emergency was held at the Grey Horse Inn, High-street, on Tuesday evening, the 1st inst., for the purpose of initiating Mr. Bernhard Tancke, who was proposed by letter at seven days' notice; the Lodge was opened by the M., Bro. P. S. Gillies, assisted by Bros. Saniter, P.M., and Loades, and officers of the Lodge. Mr. B. Tancke, having been duly elected by lot, was regularly initiated into the mysteries of the Craft by the M. in a distinct manner. The newly initiated brother intimated his intention of becoming a subscribing member; Bro. Biesterfeldt presided the harmonium. Amongst the visitors present were Bro. Saniter, M., and Bro. Furst, No. 536; Bros. A. M. Loades, R. Hopper, and tter, No. 24, and Bro. Fell. The Lodge having been closed in due m, the brethren adjourned for a short time to refreshment.

HAMPSHIRE.

ALDERSHOTT.—Panmure Lodge (No. 1025).—An emergency of the ve Lodge was held at its usual place of meeting, Tilbury's Royal el, Aldershott, on Saturday last, the 12th inst., when there were went Bros. Wentworth Dawes, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera., Hants, W.M.; hard Wood, S.W. (the W.M. elect for the ensuing year); and Aldred

Oldfield, J.W.; Simpson, P.M.; and several other brethren belonging to the Lodge, as well as three visiting brethren stationed in the camp. The meeting was called for the purpose of initiating into the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry Mr. Charles Williams, Lieutenant in Her Majesty's 1st Battalion Military Train, under orders to proceed to China on the 17th instant. After the Lodge was opened, and the candidate had been duly balloted for, the W.M. proceeded with the impressive ceremony, the candidate being conducted by Bro. Howard, S.D., who kindly undertook the duty of J.D., in the absence of Bro. Sheldrake, and performed that office in his usual skilful manner. The labours of the evening being ended, the Lodge was closed with solemn prayer, and the brethren retired to refreshment. The usual formal toasts having been proposed and responded to, the W.M. called upon the brethren to drink the health of the gallant officer who had that night been admitted a brother Mason, for which pleasing purpose they were then met together, expressing a hope, nay, even a certainty, that he would find Masonry of service to him both at home and abroad, and possibly a safeguard to him in time of danger (at the same time trusting this might never be required), feeling certain that he would never regret the moment when he was initiated into Masonry, and concluding with wishing him and his gallant comrades in arms every success in the undertaking which it was their duty and delight to fulfil. The brethren cheerfully embraced this opportunity at once of welcoming an accession to their numbers, and of showing their esteem for those who so nobly offer themselves to fight their country's cause. Bro. Charles Williams rose and warmly acknowledged this expression of regard from the W.M. and brethren, and said he was proud of the honour of being enrolled in a society of such universal extent and use, and felt sure that he should appreciate the merits of Freemasonry more and more each day he belonged to the Order. He had long wished to become a Mason, but now his departure for active service had determined him to put off that privilege no longer. He was much impressed with the ceremony, and indeed felt quite a different man to what he was on entering the house. Bro. Oldfield, J.W., then proposed the health of the W.M. in very eulogistic terms, to which Bro. Dawes responded in few words, and said that whatever services he had rendered to the Lodge, he had only performed his duty, and that he had felt great pleasure in doing what he could for it, and had been delighted to return from a short leave of absence on purpose to be present on this occasion at the post, in which the Lodge had done him the honour to place him. The health of "The Visitors" was then drunk, and shortly afterwards the brethren separated, highly satisfied with the result of the evening.

HERTFORDSHIRE.

WATFORD.—Watford Lodge (No. 580).—At a meeting held on Friday November 11th, in the Freemasons' Hall, Watford, there was a good attendance. Bro. George Francis, (P.D. Prov. G.M., Surrey, and Prov., G. Reg.), W.M., presided, supported by Bros. Goodyear and Davey, his Wardens, and other officers. Mr. Francis Henry Wilson lles was initiated, and a new member proposed. Bros. J. Hammerton, No. 10; Tate, No. 774; and Lt. T. H. Martin, were visitors. The brethren afterwards dined together, and Bro. Francis, in proposing the health of the Grand Master, said that Lord Zetland's qualifications for his high office were undoubted, and he must be the right man in the right place, or the Masons of England would not so continuously have re-elected him. The health of their highly esteemed Prov. Grand Master was hailed with enthusiasm. The health of the D. Prov. Grand Master was proposed by Bro. Burchell Herne, who referred to the support Bro. Ward had given to the Lodge from its formation, to his regular attendance, and to his perseverance and energy, through which the Lodge was indebted for its prolonged success. Bro. Ward, in reply, said that this month completed the thirtieth year of the Watford Lodge, and he ventured to say that few Provincial Lodges could boast of so long a period of continuous prosperity. This unvarying prosperity was to be attributed to the good feeling that prevailed amongst all who entered the Lodge. Bro. Ward, in proposing "The health of the W.M.," said that without derogating from the merits of others, he thought all would agree that the chair had never been so well filled. The W.M. had shown his earnestness in aiding the good working of the Lodge by taking care that at each meeting the officers should be exercised in their respective duties. The lucid way in which Bro. Francis illustrated the ritual was deserving of the highest praise. The toast was drunk amidst loud applause, and other toasts having been given, the company separated.

LANCASHIRE EAST.

BURY.—Lodge of Relief (No. 50).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting, at the Hare and Hounds Inn, on Thursday evening, the 10th inst., when there were present Bros. E. Barlow, W.M.; John Parks, S.W.; and in the absence of Bro. Wormarid, Bro. Twecklell officiated as J.W. The Lodge, being duly opened, a ballot was taken for a joining member, and another for a candidate for initiation, both of which were unanimous in their favour. The circular of Grand Lodge, warning the brethren against spurious Masons, of the so-called "Reformed Order of Memphis," was then read, and ordered to be entered in the minutes. The Lodge was then opened to the third degree, when Bro. Grimshaw was raised to the sublime degree of M.M., the ceremony being performed by Bro. Binns, P.M.; after which the Lodge was closed, and the meeting adjourned to Thursday nearest the next full moon.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge (No. 238).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge took place at the Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 2nd instant. Among those present were Bros. Kelly, D. Prov. G.M., and P.M.; Holland, W.M.; Pettifor, P.M.; Crawford, P.M., and Treas.; Morris, P.M., and Sec.; Windram, P.M.; Gibson, P.M.; Gill, P.M.; Kinder, P.M.; Cummings, S.W.; Nedham, J.W.; Denton, I.G.; Bethel, Marris, &c. Visitors, Bros. Willey, W.M.; Clephan, P.M.; Baukart, P.M.; Brewin, S.W.; Sheppard, J.W.; Lloyd and Garnar, of the John of Gaunt Lodge, No. 766. The minutes of the last Lodge having been read and confirmed, the W.M. proposed, pro forma, that the Lodge be permanently removed from the Bell Hotel to the Freemasons' Hall, which was of course carried unanimously. This resolution it had been impossible to bring forward at either of the two preceding meetings, owing to the unavoidable absence of the W.M., who was suffering from severe indisposition, and who now retired, the chair being taken by Bro. Pettifor. The Lodge having been opened in the second degree, and Bro. W. Jackson having passed a satisfactory examination therein, a M.M. Lodge was opened, and he was raised to that sublime degree. The Lodge having been closed down to the first degree, the chair was taken by Bro. Windram, P.M., who proceeded to initiate Mr. Leonard Alfred Clarke, who had been balloted for and elected at the last meeting. A gentleman residing at Stamford was proposed for initiation. He was to have been balloted for and initiated as a case of emergency, but was unable to attend owing to the loss of his brother in the calamitous wreck of the Royal Charter. The D. Prov. G.M. directed the attention of the Lodge to a circular from the Board of General Purposes, respecting a spurious Lodge at Stratford, in Essex, which he had that day received through the Prov. Grand Master. The Lodge having been closed, the brethren adjourned to supper; after which, the principal loyal and Masonic toasts having been duly honoured, the brethren constituted themselves into a committee of the two Lodges, agreeably to notice, to consider the expediency of one or more Masonic balls taking place in the hall during the winter, when it was resolved unanimously that a ball should be given by the brethren before Christmas, and a committee was at once formed to carry it into effect.

MIDDLESEX.

UXBRIDGE.—Royal Union Lodge (No. 536).—This Lodge, holding its meetings at the White Horse Hotel, is placed on the list of country Lodges, but belongs to no province; hence it is but little known. The meetings, under the able conduct of the Secretary, Bro. Weedon, have been regularly held from its formation, and its members now have a prospect of increase. At a Lodge holden on Wednesday, November 9th, a new joining member was added, and others will be proposed at the next meeting. Bro. Austin, Past Grand Steward, is the present W.M.; Bro. Alfred Pratt, S.W.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

PETERBOROUGH.—St. Peter's Lodge (No. 646).—The Lodge was opened in due form, on Thursday evening, 3rd instant. The minutes were read and confirmed. Bro. Capt. Grenville G. Wells was balloted for as a joining member, and unanimously accepted. Bro. Wm. Wells, who was to have been raised, was prevented, by the death of a relative. It was proposed by Bro. John Ellis, and seconded by Bro. Ewart, D. Prov. G.M. of Northamptonshire, that Mr. Richard Elwell Jones become a candidate for Freemasonry. The W.M. laid before the Lodge a letter from the Hundred of Elloe Lodge, Spalding, respecting a memorial to the late Bro. J. C. Ridgway, the W.M. of that Lodge, the consideration of which was deferred until further communication upon the subject had taken place. The W.M. also called attention to the festival of the Widows' Fund, soliciting subscriptions for that charity from the brethren, to forward to Bro. Samuel Aldrich, of Hampstead, who had kindly consented to represent the Lodge as steward. There being no other business the Lodge was then closed.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT NEWCASTLE.

THE annual meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge was holden on the 20th ult., when it was opened by the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, Bro. the Rev. E. C. Ogle, assisted by his officers.

The roll of Lodges in the province having been called over, all were found to be represented, except All Saints' Lodge, No. 161, Wooler.

The minutes of the last annual meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge were read and confirmed. The representatives of the various Lodges of the province present, on being called upon for their customary report, made a highly satisfactory statement of the condition and proceedings of their Lodges.

The All Saints' Lodge, No. 161, Wooler, having neglected to attend the Provincial Grand Lodge meetings for several years, although regularly served with notices, nor having made any returns or payments during that period, the Prov. Grand Secretary was instructed to issue a peremptory summons requiring the attendance of the Master of the said Lodge before the R.W. Prov. Grand Master and his officers, on a day to be fixed upon, to be prepared to produce the warrant of the Lodge, and all books, papers, and accounts belonging thereto.

On the motion of the Prov. Grand Treasurer, Bro. J. Barker, seconded by the Prov. S.G.W., Bro. J. S. Challoner, a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the V.W. Bros. the Rev. J. E. Cox, and J. Savage, and Bro. R. Spencer, who had so kindly and successfully exerted themselves in promoting the election of the child of our late Bro. W. Johnson, P.M., for admission into the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys.

Bro. John Barker having been elected Prov. Grand Treasurer for the ensuing year, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master proceeded to install the following brethren as Prov. Grand Officers for the ensuing year.—Bros. George Weatherhead, Prov. S.G.W.; John Cook, Prov. J.G.W.; Rev. S. Y. B. Bradshaw, Prov. G. Chaplain; John Barker, Prov. G. Treas.; Henry G. Ludwig, Prov. G. Reg.; Benjamin J. Thompson, Prov. G. Sec.; Herman Saniter, Prov. S.G.D.; Thomas Crawford, Prov. J.G.D.; Septimus Bell, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; William Dalziel, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Thomas Alexander, Prov. G. Asst. Dir. of Cers.; Thomas Haswell, Prov. G. Org.; James Elliott, Prov. G. Sword Bearer; George Lambton, Prov. G. Standard Bearer; Andrew Gillespie, Prov. G. Purs.; Alexander Dickson, Prov. G. Tyler; Alfred Legge, Ralph Anderson, Edward Shotton, Joseph Shepherd, Robert Banning, and Charles Jobling, Prov. G. Stewards.

SUSSEX.

ARUNDEL.—Howard Lodge of Brotherly Love (No. 64).—At a meeting of this Lodge, held on Friday, the 28th ult., Bro. John Wilson, W.M., initiated Messrs. Cole and Baynes into the mysteries of the Order. Two gentlemen were proposed as candidates for initiation, and two brethren as joining members. On the proposition of Bro. G. E. Pocock, G.S.B., Sec. to No. 64, seconded by Bro. Verrall, Prov. G. Treas., it was resolved "That the brethren of this Lodge desire to express the gratification with which they meet their Worshipful Master, Bro. John Wilson, on this day to celebrate his Masonic jubilee, and they most cordially congratulate him on the satisfaction he must feel in having witnessed the successful resuscitation of this his mother Lodge, which, from unavoidable circumstances had been unable to meet for so many years." All business being ended, about thirty of the brethren adjourned to banquet; the W.M. presided, supported by Bros. Hart, S.W.; Hemery, J.W.; Pocock, Sec.; Farmer, S.D.; Fierman, J.D.; Fabian, I.G., and the following visitors:—Bros. Taylor, Prov. G. Chaplain; Scott, Prov. S.G.D.; Smithers, P. Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; F. Crew, P.M. No. 1, the Secretary of the Girls School; Lowdell, P.M. No. 338; Dixon, J.W. No. 338; Elliott, J.W. No. 45; Geere, No. 338; Curtis and Martin, No. 394. Every brother expressed the greatest pleasure at this Masonic reunion, and a most delightful evening was passed. This Lodge was founded in 1736, and was named the Howard Lodge of Brotherly Love, in honour of the eighth Duke of Norfolk, who was installed Most Worshipful Grand Master of England in 1830. Preston says:—"Amongst other proofs of his attachment to the fraternity, he sent from Italy £20 for the charities, a large book for the records of Grand Lodge, richly bound in Turkey, and gilt, with the arms of Norfolk and those of Grand Lodge elegantly emblazoned; and a sword of state, being the old trusty sword of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, which was next worn by Bernhard, Duke of Saxe Weimar, with both their names on the blade and the arms of Norfolk in silver on the scabbard." In 1789 this Lodge, which had been held in London, was moved to Arundel, and was then No. 51; in 1814, after the union of the two Grand Lodges, it was No. 72, and in 1833, when the vacancies in the list of Lodges were filled up, it was made No. 64; from unavoidable circumstances this Lodge did not meet from 1836 till July in the present year, when it was resuscitated, and the arrears of fees paid up to Grand Lodge and Prov. Grand Lodge. At the first meeting in July, three of the members were present, whose united ages amounted to two hundred and forty-three years, the Worshipful Master being one of them; he was initiated in this Lodge October 20th, 1809. It is a little singular and very gratifying to the Freemasons of Sussex that one of the brethren who assisted to resuscitate this Lodge should this year have had the honour of being the Grand Sword Bearer to the M.W. Grand Master, and that the Lodge should have been named after the Grand Master who presented the sword of state to the Grand Lodge. This Lodge has now eighteen subscribing members, and promises to be a happy and united band of brothers. May success attend it. The Duke of Norfolk is Earl of Arundel, a feudal honour by the possession of Arundel Castle only, without any creation, adjudged in parliament, July, 1433.

MARK MASONRY.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Northumberland and Berwick-on-Tweed Lodge (L.C.).—The Lodge was opened in form on November 12th, by the R.W.M., Bro. John Burther, G.D.C., assisted by the following officers:—Bros. W. Punshon, P.M., (Prov. G. Supt. of Works); Sept. Bell, S.W.; C. J. Bannister, as J.W.; Andrew Gillespie, S.D.; H. G. Ludwig, M.M.O.; Herman Saniter, J.O., and others. After balloting for three brethren for advancement, the following brethren were regularly advanced by the R.W.M.—Bros. Bousfield, Atkins, Loades, and Wagh, Bro. Punshon, P.M., than whom a more learned Mark Master does not exist in the north, ably assisting the R.W.M. The brethren then proceeded to elect the R.W.M. for the ensuing year, and on the balloting papers being handed to the R.W.M., he declared Bro. Septimus Bell as R.W.M. elect for the ensuing year, the R.W.M. stating that the election could not have fallen on a brother that would have given him greater pleasure to install as his successor, for no officer had given him such constant and regular assistance for the last twenty-four months as

Bro. Bell, and from his antecedents hoped that the Lodge would progress more and more under his rule. The R.W.M. elect, in returning thanks for his election, hoped that by constant attendance and a cheerful co-operation of the officers and brethren, this Mark Masters' Lodge would be brought to as high an efficiency as possible, and might be the most efficient, as it is the most antient Lodge in the north of England. The Lodge then balloted for Treasurer, when the unanimous vote fell on Bro. A. Gillespie, who has so ably filled the post during the last year. The installation of R.W.M. and officers is fixed to take place on Tuesday, the 29th instant. There being no further business, the Lodge was closed in love and harmony at nine o'clock.

ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

MOUNT SION CHAPTER (No. 169).—At a convocation of this Chapter held on Monday, November 14th, at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, there were present Comps. Johnstone, M.E.Z.; Sharpe, P.Z., as H., and How, P.Z., as J. Bro. J. Wallace, of No. 227, was exalted to his supreme degree. The annual election of officers for the year ensuing was then proceeded with, the result of the ballot being—Comps. Jeremiah W. Long, Z.; Edward Spooner, H.; Henry Parr, J.; W. H. Partridge, Treas.; T. Goodwin, Scribe E.; Robert Farran, N.; G. H. Taylor, P.S.; Speight, Janitor. Comps. Thompson, of No. 812, and Tate, of No. 774, were visitors.

MOUNT LEBANON CHAPTER (No. 630).—A special convocation for the installation of Comp. John Rumsey, H., elect, and other important business, was holden on Thursday, November 10th, at the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street. Three brethren were proposed for exaltation at the next Chapter. Comp. J. F. Johnson was unanimously elected Scribe E.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CHAPTER AT NEWCASTLE.

At half-past three o'clock, p.m., on the 8th inst., the Companions were already assembled, and the Grand Superintendent, the Rev. E. C. Ogle, opened the Provincial Grand Chapter, assisted by the 2nd Grand Principal, Comp. E. D. Davis; the 3rd Principal, Comp. William Punshon; and the following E. Companions:—Richard Medcalf, D. Prov. Grand Superintendent; William Berkley, Prov. Grand Scribe E.; John Barker, Prov. Grand Scribe N.; Benjamin J. Thompson, Prov. Grand Prin. Soj.; Septimus Bell and Henry Hotham, Prov. Grand Asst. Sojs.; Henry Hill, Prov. Grand Janitor, and many other Companions.

The minutes of the last Provincial Grand Chapter having been confirmed, and the fees of honour paid, the Prov. Grand Superintendent appointed the following officers for the ensuing year:—E. Comps. William Punshon, Prov. Grand H.; John Barker, Prov. Grand J.; B. J. Thompson, Prov. Grand Scribe E.; John J. Challoner, Prov. Grand Scribe N.; William Johnstone, Prov. Grand Prin. Soj.; Henry Bell and Henry Hotham, Prov. Grand Asst. Sojs.; Comp. John Barker was also elected Prov. Grand Treas. The following were also appointed:—Comps. Henry G. Ludwig, Prov. Grand Registrar; W. G. Tulloch, Prov. Grand Janitor; William Twizel, Prov. Grand Sword Bearer; Andrew Gillespie, Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies.

Upon the conclusion of business, the Companions adjourned from Freemasons' Hall, Blackett-street, to the Assembly Rooms, to dinner.

The usual and Masonic toasts were given from the chair, and properly responded to. The "M.E.G.Z. and the Grand Chapter of England" was then given and responded to; then the health of the "Prov. Grand Superintendent of Somersetshire, Col. Charles K. K. Tynte," was given. This toast was warmly responded to by the majority of the Companions who understood the reason why this toast was given, and M.E. Comp. Davis, as an old friend of the worthy and honourable Prov. Grand Superintendent of Somersetshire, responded to the toast.

The health of the "Prov. Grand Superintendent" was then proposed by the 3rd Grand Principal, Comp. John Barker, in appropriate terms, congratulating the Prov. Grand Chapter upon the presence of their beloved Prov. Grand Superintendent, who so worthily had presided over them that day, in two places, much to the satisfaction of the Companions present—he wished him long life and health to continue to preside over them in the different branches of Masonry in that province. The toast was received with great applause by the Companions present, and when the honours were given the Prov. Grand Superintendent returned thanks, assuring the brethren that such good will having repeatedly been shown to him, he withdrew all thoughts of retiring from his responsible position while it pleased his brethren to wish him to remain at his post. Several other toasts being given and responded to, the Provincial Grand Chapter was closed in love and harmony at nine o'clock.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CONCLAVE.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Tuesday, the 8th of November, 1859, was appointed for the installation of Sir Knt. Edward C. Ogle as Prov. Grand Commander for Northumberland and Berwick-upon-Tweed.

At one o'clock, p.m., the attendance of the Knights was strong; several came from Whitehaven and Liverpool. The Prov. Grand Conclave was opened by Sir Knt. John Barker, First Grand Captain of England, who, with the following other Grand Officers of England, were deputed to install the Prov. Grand Master:—Sir Knt. William Berkley, Past Grand Hospitalier; Sir Knt. George Hawkes, Past Grand Herald; Sir Knt. Wm. Punshon, Grand Expert.

The Provincial Grand Conclave being duly opened, Sir Knt. Edward Chaloner Ogle, Prov. Grand Commander, was duly escorted and admitted under the arch of steel, and formally installed and proclaimed, the Prov. Grand Captain making homage on behalf of the Knights present.

The Prov. Grand Commander then appointed the following Knights as Prov. Grand Officers:—Sir Knts. George Hawkes, Prov. Deputy Grand Commander; Wm. Punshon, Prov. Grand Prior; Wm. Dalzul, Prov. Grand Sub-Prior; Rev. S. Atkinson, Prov. Grand Prelate; Henry Bell, First Prov. Grand Captain; Henry Hotham, Second Prov. Grand Captain; Wm. Berkley, Prov. Grand Chancellor; Andrew Gillespie, Prov. Grand Vice Chancellor and Registrar; John Barker, Prov. Grand Treasurer; C. J. Bannister, Prov. Grand Chamberlain; George Weatherhead, Prov. Grand Hospitalier; H. G. Ludwig, Prov. Grand Expert; Henry Spencer (Whitehaven), Prov. Grand Almoner; James Dees (Whitehaven), Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies.

After the regular business was concluded, the Prov. Grand Conclave was closed in love and harmony.

Those Knights who were of the rank of Grand Cross of the Temple then met in Grand Council, presided over by Sir Knt. (Grand Cross) George Hawkes as Grand Master, assisted by the following Knights Grand Cross:—Punshon, Berkley, Barker, Bell and Hotham.

The petition of Sir Knt. Commander Ed. Chaloner Ogle having been received and approved, he was duly installed a Knight Grand Cross of the Holy Sepulchre, and received the accolade from the Knights present.

The Grand Master, according to antient form, then named his successor to that chair in the person of Sir Knt. Wm. Berkley, who was duly installed as Grand Master for the ensuing term. He confirmed the former officers, and added to the Grand Chancellorship Sir Knt. John Barker.

The Knights then adjourned to the Prov. Grand Royal Arch Chapter held at Freemasons' Hall, Blackett-street.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE.

PROVINCIAL CHAPTER.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Royal Kent Rose Croix Chapter (under warrant from the Supreme Grand Council of 33° for England).—On Wednesday, November 9th, there was a Chapter of emergency, for the purpose of affiliating the Ill. Bros., Capt. Wm. Spencer and James Dees, and of receiving Bro. Wm. Jackson, all three of Whitehaven, the two former being members of a Scotch Rose Croix Chapter. The Chapter was solemnly opened by the M.W. Sov. Bro. John Barker, assisted by the following officers—Richd. Medcalf, as Prelate; Henry Bell, 1st Gen.; Henry Hotham, 2nd Gen.; C. J. Bannister, Raphael; H. G. Ludwig, as Marshal; Andrew Gillespie, Recorder. The three candidates being present were duly received as members of this illustrious Order by the M.W. Sovereign, very ably assisted by the officers and acting officers, especially by Ill. Bro. C. J. Bannister. There being no further business but the proposal of a joining member, Ill. Bro. Joseph Fletcher, the Chapter was closed in form.

IRELAND.

CORK.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF ST. PATRICK'S BRIDGE BY THE LORD LIEUTENANT.

The ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the bridge intended to replace that which was destroyed by the flood of November, 1853, took place on Thursday, November 10, under every circumstance that could tend to add edat to the proceedings and sustain the long-enjoyed reputation of Munster's capital for the magnificence of its civic displays. The presence of the Lord Lieutenant, the prominent part taken by the brethren of the several Masonic Lodges in this locality, who appeared in full Masonic costume and with their jewels and insignia, the attendance of the Mayor in his robes and badges of office, and of many members of the Town Council, all combined to render the scene one of unsurpassable interest. The weather, too, that most important element in the success of all out-door festivities, though not so brilliant as that of the preceding day, was as favourable as could well be desired, and much more so than at this time of the year could have been expected.

To accommodate the numbers which were expected to be present the city engineer, Sir John Benson, had done all that lay in his power. Several large barges had been boarded over and formed into a commodious platform on the river close to the spot where the stone was to be laid, and on this the members of the Town Council, with some of the other public bodies and a few of the more leading citizens were to take their place. The members of the Masonic Lodges were allotted a place just over the abutment of which the stone was to be part. The timber foot-bridge running across from Merchant's Quay to the opposite side was devoted to a limited number of persons who were admitted on it by ticket. In order that this method should be effectual and that more should not get on it than it could safely afford one of the two entrances to it at each end was closed up, one only at each extremity being left open. The boarding which for some time past had been erected at the west side of the bridge for the purpose of preventing passers-by from stopping to look at the works going on below was taken away, so as to afford an uninterrupted view of the proceedings, and a bench was run along its western side to accommodate those on it.

The brethren of the different Lodges in the Province of Munster having assembled at the Lodge rooms of the First Lodge of Ireland, in Tuckey Street, at half-past nine o'clock were duly marshalled into Masonic order by the Provincial Grand Director of Ceremonies, each Lodge as follows:—

Tyler, with drawn sword; the Deacons, with wands; the members, two and two; the Wardens, bearing the columns; the Treasurer; the Secretary; the Worshipful Master.

The following Lodges were represented:—No. 386, Clonakilty; No. 190, Queenstown; No. 95, Cork; No. 71, Cork; No. 68, Youghal; No. 67, Cork; No. 15, Skibbereen; No. 3, Cork; No. 3, Cork; and No. 1, Cork.

The dispensation sanctioning the procession under the hand and seal of the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland was read by the Provincial Grand Secretary, Bro. William Penrose, and at half-past ten o'clock the Brethren left the Lodge rooms in the following order:—

Lodge No. 190, Bro. Richard T. Usher, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 95, Bro. Robert Butcher, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 71, Bro. J. Guy, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 67, Bro. J. Buckley, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 15; Bro. Paul Linrick, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 8, Bro. Joseph Verling Carpenter, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 3, Bro. Richard Brash, Worshipful Master; Lodge No. 1, Bro. Richard Meara, Worshipful Master; the Chapter of Prince Masons, Knights of the Eagle and Pelican; Henry Hardy, Esq., Most Wise Sovereign; the Provincial Grand Tyler; Provincial Grand Deacons; James E. White, P.M., No. 8; Bro. G. Brereton, 33°, representative from the Grand Lodge of England; Provincial Grand Wardens; Bro. Richard Meara, bearing the cornucopia with the wheat; Bro. Hon. Charles Moore Smyth, bearing the goblet of wine; Bro. John Cave, Past Grand Warden, bearing the oil; Bro. William Penrose, Provincial Grand Secretary, bearing the constitutions; the R.W. Bro. Geo. Chatterton, Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Munster.

The procession comprised four hundred brethren, and was headed by the splendid band of the Royal Lancashire Artillery playing the well known Masonic March.

On arriving at the site of the bridge the brethren deployed into the space allotted to them, being an extensive platform over the northern abutment. The Deputy Grand Master, Grand Wardens bearing the oblation, Grand Deacons, and Grand Secretary, proceeded to the lower platform adjoining the spot where the foundation stone was ready for laying. The Worshipful Masters and officers of the several Lodges advanced to the front of the upper platform under the banners of their respective Lodges, and in their gorgeous clothing and jewels had a most imposing effect.

The Deputy Provincial Grand Master, Bro. George Chatterton, presided in the unavoidable absence of the Provincial Grand Master, Major-General Sir James C. Chatterton, Bart., K.H. The Deputy Grand Master was habited in the splendid clothing belonging to his office, and wore also the jewels of the Philosophical College K.H., the Rose Croix degree, the Grand Cross of the Temple, and a beautiful ornament in blue enamel on which were displayed the various devices connected with the symbolic degrees of Masonry. This antique Masonic gem excited much interest among the brethren, from the fact that on the occasion of a similar ceremony which took place in the year 1789, when the stone of the former St. Patrick's bridge was laid, it was worn by the celebrated Masonic sister, the Hon. Mrs. Aldworth. On that occasion Mrs. Aldworth rode on horseback beside the Earl of Donoughmore the Provincial Grand Master of Munster, attired in full Masonic paraphernalia.

Having taken their places, the brethren awaited the arrival of his Excellency, which took place at twelve o'clock. The Lord Lieutenant was accompanied by Sir Edward McDonnell, Chairman of the Great Southern and Western Railway; Colonel Thomson, C.B., and G. A. Rowe, Esq., directors; Mr. Miller, engineer; Mr. Ilbery, traffic manager; Mr. Murland, Viscount Castlerosse, Sir Cusack P. Roney, Chairman of the Cork and Youghal Railway; Dr. Barter, Blarney; and Mr. Ebenezer Pike, Bessborough, managing director of the Cork Steam Ship Company. Sir Edward McDonnell immediately presented the Mayor, Lord Fermoy, Dr. Lyons, Mr. F. B. Beamish, Sir Thomas Deane, Colonel Roche, the Lord Bishop, the Archdeacon, the Dean, the Admiral, the General, and some others.

On Lord Carlisle's arrival at the bridge, the guard of honour presented arms; the band struck up the National Anthem, and a salute from artillery thundered forth its welcome. The shipping in the river in large numbers added to the demonstration, repeated volleys of small arms from them and from several houses near the place testifying their participation in the general joy. The entrance to the platform was down the steps at Patrick's quay, immediately opposite the police station. Outside of this a covered barge was moored, along which the parties were to walk under the foot bridge, and so on to the platform. At the north-west extremity of this there was constructed a smaller platform, access to which from the other was obtained by means of a gangway railed at the side and draped with blue calico, and immediately before this, to the south, was suspended the stone which was about to be laid. It was a massive block of Foynes limestone, five feet long and three and a half broad at its widest part, and weighed two tons. It was to be the corner stone of the north east abutment, forming part of the chamfered base.

His Excellency, on his arrival at the steps, was received by Sir John Benson, city engineer and Provincial Grand Architect of Munster (who was attired in full costume, and bore the plans of the new bridge), and was conducted to the small platform, followed by his suite, the Mayor, Lord Fermoy, Admiral Talbot, the Deputy Grand Master of the Masons, the Grand Wardens, and Grand Secretary, and Mr. Barnard, clerk of works. Arrived on this, his Excellency (with his aide de camp, the Mayor, his secretary, Sir John Benson, Mr. Barnard, Lord Fermoy, the Deputy Grand Master, and Grand Wardens) took his place before the stone.

The large platform was crowded, many persons having waited here. Amongst them were the Right Worshipful Michael Robert Ryan, mayor of Limerick, wearing his chair and other insignia; Francis Montgomery Jennings, Esq., harbour commissioner; Councillor Richard Longfield Jameson; Alderman Keller; Robert Walker, city superintendent; Alderman W. L. Perrier; Alderman Scott; Councillor R. V. Gregg, in his Masonic insignia; R. Hall, T. C.; John Bennett, solicitor to Committee of Merchants; Alderman W. J. Shaw; James Morrish; W. A. Tracy, county surveyor East Riding; Joshua Hargrave, contractor for the bridge; Rev. C. B. Gibson, Chaplain Spike Island Convict Depot; Alderman H. L. Young; J. Keane; D. Mullane; H. W. Wood, secretary Kinsale Railway; W. Traw, Cork and Youghal Railway, and a large number of others. The two timber bridges, and every available space around, were densely crowded. As far as the eye could reach, nothing was to be seen but a sea of human faces. On the south, the line of Merchant's quay was covered with people; and on the north, just over the viceregal party, were ranged the four hundred Masonic brothers, with their gorgeous paraphernalia, forming the most brilliant feature in the whole display.

When the demonstrations of welcome which greeted his Excellency had in some measure subsided, the Mayor read the following address:—

"To his Excellency George William Frederick, Earl of Carlisle, Lord Lieutenant-General and General Governor of Ireland.

"May it please your Excellency,—We, the mayor and citizens of Cork, respectfully beg leave to approach your Excellency with the expression of our cordial welcome on your Excellency's arrival amongst us, and to tender to your Excellency our most heartfelt thanks for consenting to assist at the inauguration of a public work of the greatest importance to our community—the re-erection of St. Patrick's bridge.

"We presume it is unnecessary to remind your Excellency, that it is proposed by the contemplated work to supply the place of a former bridge, which was swept away by a disastrous flood on the 3rd day of November, 1853, an event which has been attended with great trouble, loss, and inconvenience to the city.

"We rejoice that the Sovereign is represented on the present occasion by a nobleman so much identified with the progress and prosperity of our country; for we cannot forget that, from the earliest period of your Excellency's participating in the government of Ireland to the period of your being again nominated to take upon you the high position which you occupy, you have, during each successive period of office, manifested towards this country a steady and unvarying anxiety to promote its welfare and happiness, by fostering and encouraging all our efforts at self-advancement.

"In conclusion, we once more bid your Excellency a hearty and respectful welcome to Cork.

"Signed, JOHN ARNOTT, Mayor."

His Excellency replied:—"I beg to return to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the city of Cork my respectful and grateful thanks for their gracious welcome within the boundaries of the fair city. I rejoice that my visit at this period should enable me to afford a practical proof of the interest which I feel in the prosperity of Cork, by assisting at the inauguration of a work of such essential and unceasing importance to the commercial comfort of the entire community as the proposed restoration of St. Patrick's Bridge, of which I am about to replace the first stone. I cannot but look upon this as a most appropriate function at the present moment. If the city of Cork has any ambition to be considered on the highway of nations, it is at least incumbent that she should provide in a comely and substantial manner for the transit of her own citizens."

The mayor's secretary then read a scroll or memorial of the proceedings, of which the subjoined is a copy:—"The foundation stone of this St. Patrick's bridge was laid on the tenth day of November, 1859, in the twenty-third year of the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, by His Excellency George William Frederick Howard, Earl of Carlisle, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, this bridge, built at the expense of the citizens of Cork, will be the second erected on this site. The first bridge was opened for traffic in the year 1789, and was destroyed by the great flood of the third November, 1853, on which occasion fifteen persons lost their lives. John Arnott, member of parliament for Kinsale, mayor of Cork. Sir John Benson, engineer. Joshua Hargrave, contractor. William Barnard, clerk of works."

The Deputy Grand Master of the Freemasons read the following roll:—"The foundation stone of this bridge was laid on the tenth day of November, 1859, in the twenty-third year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and in the year of Masonry 5859. Major-General Sir J. C. Chatterton, Bart., Prov. Grand Master; George Chatterton, Esq., J.P., D. Prov. Grand Master; William Penrose, Esq., Prov. Grand Secretary."

Mr. George Humphreys, noting treasurer of the corporation, then produced a glass vase and one of each of the different descriptions of current coin of the realm, and these, together with the scrolls, having been put into the vase, the latter was covered with a glass top and deposited by Sir John Benson in a hole which had been cut in the stone for its reception. Mr. Barnard, clerk of the works, then filled up the space with cement, and placed a small flag over the hole in a bed sunk to take it, the whole being covered with cement. This having been done, Sir John Benson presented to his excellency a handsome trowel which had been purchased for the occasion at the establishment of Mr. Edward Hawkesworth, silversmith and jeweller, Grand Parade. The blade was of silver and the handle of ivory, the former containing this inscription:—"Presented to His Excellency George William Frederick Howard, Earl of Carlisle, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, on laying the foundation stone of St. Patrick's bridge, Cork. November 10th, 1859. John Arnott, J.P., Mayor; Sir John Benson, engineer; Joshua Hargrave, contractor; Mr. Barnard, clerk of works."

His Excellency having received the trowel, took upon it a portion of cement, which he spread over the stone. The D. Prov. Grand Master then applied the level, square, and plumb, and having informed the lord lieutenant that the stone was ready to be laid, the latter took a smallallet provided for the purpose, and with it gave three distinct knocks, and the stone was lowered to its berth, amidst tremendous cheering on the multitude around, a heavy discharge of artillery adding its underling approval to this part of the ceremony.

The D. Prov. Grand Master then receiving the cornucopia from the senior Grand Warden, containing a measure of fine wheat, poured it upon the stone; likewise the goblet of wine and the vase of oil were received by him from the Junior Grand Warden and Past Grand Warden, and poured by him over the corn. The oblation having been made the D. Prov. Grand Master offered this supplication:—

"May the Great Architect of the universe enable us successfully to carry on and finish this work of which we have now laid the foundation stone, and every other undertaking which may tend to the advantage and prosperity of the city of Cork and its harbour. May he protect the workmen from every accident, and long preserve this structure from decay, and may he grant to us all in needed supply the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of joy. Amen, so mote be."

He then called on the brethren to give the Masonic honours. The roll was promptly responded to, and from the whole four hundred pealed forth the grand "three times three." Upon the third coming down, off went the hats of the spectators, and the efforts of the brethren were acknowledged by the warmest demonstrations of applause.

His excellency, after the applause had subsided, said—I declare the stone, the foundation stone, of St. Patrick's bridge to be duly and truly laid. Now, give three cheers for St. Patrick's bridge. (Tremendous cheering followed by the roaring of artillery and the rattling of small arms.)

A Voice—One cheer more. (Renewed cheering.)

Sir John Benson—Three cheers for his excellency. (Enthusiastic cheering.)

A Voice—One cheer more. (Renewed cheering.)

Another Voice—Three cheers for the mayor. (Great cheering, in which his excellency heartily joined.)

A Voice from the brethren above. Three cheers for the Deputy Grand Master. (Great cheering and clapping of hands.)

Another Voice—Three cheers for Sir John. (Renewed cheering.)

There apparently being no other reasonable excuse for a prolongation of the hilarity silence became restored.

The mayor, by the earl's direction, then knelt down, and his excellency receiving a sword from his aide de camp, touched his worship on his shoulder, first on the left and then on the right, and said—"Rise John Arnott," and then burst forth a deafening volley of cheers, ceeded by the crash of artillery and crackle of small arms.

On his worship rising to his feet his excellency warmly shook him by hand and requested him to present his best respects to Lady Arnott.

Sir John Benson he said—"I should be happy to knight you, Sir John, but I can't do it a second time."

The ceremony was now over, but Sir John Benson requested his excellency to stand where he was for an instant in order that a view of the scene might be taken by a photographic artist. His excellency complied, and Mr. Stopford, the artist referred to, who had his instrument ready, at once took the view and gave permanence to the scene.

The party then moved from the platform, and the lord lieutenant, with his suite, entered his carriage, and, accompanied by the carriages of the mayor and high sheriff, and preceded by an escort of mounted tabularny, and followed by one of the Scots Greys, drove off to raise the first sod of the Queenstown branch railway, and open the Middleton line of the Cork and Youghal line.

The Masonic body having reversed the order of the procession returned to their Lodge room, headed as before by the band of the Lancashire Artillery. As they passed along Patrick-street they were loudly cheered, and from the roof of the establishment of Mr. Richardson, gunmaker, opposite Maylor-street, on which a flag was flying and a party of the workmen were drawn up, a grand salute from rifles was fired, which was the signal for vehement applause from those who thronged the street. Again and again this was repeated, and after each salute the cheering became absolutely deafening. This graceful compliment was duly acknowledged by the Grand Master and brethren. The windows on both sides of Patrick-street and the Parade were filled with ladies and gentlemen, who enthusiastically greeted the brethren by waving handkerchiefs and hats. In every window in the vast front of Messrs. Carmichael's establishment appeared groups of spectators. The procession halted here and opposite Sir John Arnott's house, and uncovering waved their hats and acknowledged the compliment paid them.

Sir John Arnott expressed to the Deputy Grand Master his very deep obligation to his brethren, the Freemasons, for the part they had taken in the ceremony in adding to it so much éclat and interest.

On arriving at the Lodge rooms the brethren were addressed by the Deputy Grand Master, who thanked them for their attendance, and stated that he felt much obliged for the kindness and courtesy with which the procession was received by the citizens of Cork, as, with the exception of a little jostling arising from the curiosity of the people, they had not received the slightest obstruction. He also stated that he returned his best thanks to Sir John Benson and Bro. Barnard for the admirable arrangements and the ample space allotted for their accommodation.

The handsome silver vessels used in bearing the oblation were kindly presented for the occasion by Mr. Hawkesworth, Grand Parade, and were objects of much and deserved admiration. They were massive rich silver goblets beautifully gilt inside.

With the return of the Masonic body terminated a display which, while it lasted, was productive of more excitement and interest than is often to be met with in the locality.

SKIBBEREEN.—On Thursday, November 3rd, being the usual monthly night, the brethren of Lodge No. 15, Skibbereen, met to elect officers, &c., for the ensuing six months. The following brethren were unanimously chosen:—David Hadden, M.D., W.M.; Frederick P. E. Potter, S.W.; Henry Hungerford J.W.; John Francis Lewis, Sec. and Treas. This, and other routine business being disposed of, Bro. John Lewis, in bringing under the notice of the Lodge a project which has for some time engrossed his attention, said, Brethren—on our last monthly night I introduced to your notice a plan of a Masonic hall: I now beg to propose that we consider the subject and adopt some means for carrying it out. While I appreciate Bro. Fuller's kindness in giving us this room, still I do not wish that we should be at the mercy or caprice of any one. If he should give us notice to quit, which I am sure is not his intention, there is not another in the town that we could get; therefore it is under these circumstances I advocate the necessity of a Masonic hall. Bro. Frederick Potter said, Brethren—it is with pleasure I second Bro. Lewis's proposition, for I believe that a Masonic hall would be an acquisition to our Lodge as well as a benefit to Masonry; for by letting it to lecturers, &c., it would lay at our disposal a fund by which we could contribute to that inestimable institution the Masonic Female Orphan Society, as well as relieve a worthy distressed brother who may be travelling this way. It would also prove to the uninitiated that there was something more substantial in Masonry than the mere meeting of a few friends in secret conclave. When I look around and perceive the energy displayed by other societies of minor importance, I think there has been a great amount of slothfulness on our parts; therefore I trust that anything that has, or may hereafter be said, will arouse the dormant spirit that has hitherto existed among us. I now propose that we institute a raffle, on the Art-Union principle, as a means of raising the necessary amount, and by fixing the price of each ticket at a low figure, say five shillings, you would place it in the power of the humblest brother to contribute his mite, while you would not prevent the more wealthy from contributing largely. In conclusion I would suggest as a prize, a Master's jewel, apron, collar, and sash, making them to the value of twenty pounds. Bro. Henderson seconded this proposition, and a committee was appointed at the suggestion of Bro. Fuller. Bro. J. W. Potter, in proposing that Lodge No. 15 should take in the Freemasons' Magazine, said it was the duty of every Lodge in the kingdom to give it their support, as it was devoted exclusively to Masonic information. After some further remarks the Secretary was requested to send for it for the benefit of the Lodge.

NORTH MUNSTER.

On Saturday, Nov. 5th, at high noon, the venerated Prov. Grand Master, Michael Furnell, 33°, D. L., presided at the Prov. Grand Lodge of this district, and subsequently attended the Prince Masons' Chapter, No. 4, and Lodges Nos. 13 and 333, when officers were duly elected for each, to be installed on the 27th December next.

SCOTLAND.

GRAND LODGE.

THE quarterly communication of the Grand Lodge of Scotland was held in Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, on Monday, November 7th; the M.W. Grand Master, the Duke of Athole, presided, supported by Bro. J. Whyte Melville, D.O.M.; Bro. Sir Geo. Beresford; Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, of Kentucky, and about two hundred other brethren.

Proxy commissions of various brethren having been read and received, presents were announced from the Grand Lodges of England, Prussia, Nebraska, U.S., Kentucky, U.S., Massachusetts, U.S. (consisting of their proceedings); Bro. C. Paton, Foxe's Book of Martyrs, &c., and Bro. A. A. Haye, "Poomata," which were received and ordered to be acknowledged with thanks.

The minutes of the Grand Lodge and the Committee having been confirmed, the officers for the ensuing year were nominated.

Charters were granted for opening two new Lodges, to be called, respectively, the "Royal Blues," at Kilbirnie, Ayrshire; and the "Duncarn," Burntisland, Fifeshire.

Permission was also given for the reopening of the Lodge St. Andrew, Glenbuck.

A petition from St. Andrew's Lodge, Quebec, respecting charters for the Montreal Kilwinning Lodges, was deferred.

Protests from the Lodges "Trafalgar," Leith; "St. John," Jedburgh; and "St. Thomas," Muirkirk, against being placed at the foot of the roll of Lodges, were received.

A protest from the Lodge, "St. John," Kilmarnock, against a decision of Grand Lodge in the case of Bro. Dick, and the report of the select committee thereon, was deferred for further examination.

It was then resolved to appoint a representative to the Grand Lodge of Canada.

The following resolutions were moved by Bro. F. D. McCowan, R.W.M. No. 1; seconded by Bro. Jas. Finlayson, R.W.M., and carried:—

"Seeing that a large number of the Proxy Masters and Wardens do not pay their annual contributions to the Fund of Masonic Benevolence, it is moved 'That the same rule shall be adopted as is already in force in reference to the test of membership.'

"In order to render the collection of the contributions more certain and easy, it is moved 'That these contributions be made payable at the same date as the annual contribution to Grand Lodge, viz., 1st February yearly.'

Other business having been deferred, Grand Lodge was closed in due form at one o'clock.

FORFARSHIRE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT DUNDEE.

A COMMUNICATION of this Provincial Grand Lodge was holden at Dundee on the 3rd instant. According to previous arrangement, the brethren met in the Thistle Hall, Union-street, at three o'clock, and at half-past three the Prov. Grand Lodge was opened in due form by the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Lord Panmure, K.T., G.C.B. Bro. James Jack, Master of Montrose Kilwinning, No. 15, acted as Prov. S.G.W.; and Bro. Thomas Cuthbert, of the Operative Lodge, No. 47, Dundee, acted as Prov. J.G.W. The following Lodges were represented:—Montrose Kilwinning; St. John's, Cupar, Fife; St. Thomas', Arbroath; Operative, Dundee; Ancient Dundee; St. David's, Dundee; Glamis; St. Vigeans, Arbroath; Operative, Cupar Angus; St. John's, Johnshaven; St. James, Brechin; Thistle Operative; St. Bruce, Kirkcaldy; Forfar and Kincardine; Caledonian, Dundee; Panmure, Arbroath; Lower, Forfar; Camperdown, Dundee; and other Lodges. There were also present the Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird, K.T., Prov. G.M. of Perthshire; and Bros. Sir John Ogilvy, of Inverquharty, Bart., M.P.; Sir Patrick Murray Threipland, Bart.; John Murray Drummond, Megginch Castle; the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P.; Capt. Thomas S. Fotheringham; Elisha D. Cooke, of Kentucky; Reginald Howard Alex. Ogilvy, jun., of Inverquharty.

About a hundred brethren of the Prov. Grand Lodge of Perth accompanied their Prov. Grand Master, who defrayed their expenses, and spared himself no trouble to see that all were comfortable.

The Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year were then appointed and invested as follows, by Bro. Lord Panmure as Prov. Grand Master:—Bros. Sir John Ogilvy, Bart., M.P., D. Prov. G.M.; Earl of Southesk, substitute Prov. G.M.; General Swinburne, Prov. S.G.W.; Thos. Cuthbert, Prov. J.G.W.; David Smail, Prov. G. Sec.; Rev. Andrew Taylor, Prov. G. Chaplain; J. Z. Kay, Prov. G. Treas.; David Dickson, Prov. S.G.D.; John Geekie, Prov. J.G.D.; James Winter, Prov. G. Clerk; A. W. Fairweather, Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; James Chalmers, Prov. G. Sword Bearer; Alexander Low, Inside Guard; James Fraser, Tyler.

The Provincial Grand Master then addressed the Lodge in the following terms:—"I congratulate you on this auspicious opening of our Prov. Grand Lodge, and I feel assured that it will give an impulse to Freemasonry in the province, and consequently conduce to harmony, love, and goodfellowship within its bounds. Right Worshipful Deputy Prov. Grand Master and Wardens, I have such perfect confidence in your several acquaintance with the laws which govern our mystical Craft, that I feel assured that you will discharge the duties of your respective offices so as to ensure the obedience and command the respect of all over whom you are appointed to rule. That you will, in your own persons, exhibit an example of what true Masons should be, and so encourage in others a proper emulation to follow your precepts. You will strictly observe all the laws of the Craft yourselves, and assist me in the discharge of the important duties of my station, and make your charity and love of the brethren conspicuous before all men. By such conduct you will justify the confidence I have reposed in you, and win the approbation of your brethren in the province. Brethren,—It is the nature of all well regulated constitutions that some must of necessity rule and teach, and others obey and submit. This is essentially the case in Freemasonry. But both in rulers and ruled, humility, brotherly love, and tenderness, must be the guides of our conduct. I am sure that you will exhibit a due and proper respect for myself and other Officers of this Provincial Grand Lodge, and I will undertake that our rules shall be gentle, yet firm, and that we shall administer the laws of the Craft without partiality, and with every desire to promote the best interests of all the Lodges subject to our rule. May we, both officers and brethren, seek each other's welfare, and bear each other's burdens, and study daily to draw closer the ties which unite us, and so promote the great object of Masonry. To this end let us ever cultivate the great moral and social virtues. Let charity and meekness mark our course, and let us ever be anxious that all who say 'there goes a Mason,' may be compelled also to add 'an honest and upright man.' May the Great Almighty Architect watch over all our proceedings and bless us wherever we go!"

The Prov. Grand Lodge was then closed in ancient form.

The various Lodges were marshalled according to their numbers—the junior ones being first, headed by the band of the Perth Rifles. The Provincial Grand Lodge was attended by fifteen Stewards, bearing white rods, and the Dundee band. The procession proceeded by Union-street, High-street, and Reform-street, to the Corn Exchange Hall, where the junior Lodges opening up, the Provincial Grand Lodges, followed by the other Lodges according to their seniority, entered the hall, the band playing the Masons' Anthem.

Behind the throne was the great G, composed of brilliant jets of gas, and on each side of it stood a graceful statuette supporting a light. In their proper positions elevated seats were placed for the Wardens. Above the Senior Warden's chair was placed the level, and above the Junior Warden's the plumb, both composed of gas jets. These lights had a very striking effect. Along the whole length of the hall ran six tables, three on each side, leaving a passage between, up which the members of the Prov. Grand Lodge marched, preceded by the Grand Sword Bearer, Bro. James Chalmers. The number of brethren present was six hundred, and presented a very fine appearance.

At the close of dinner the Prov. Grand Master, Lord Panmure, said,— "Worshipful Prov. Grand Wardens, and worthy brethren—I offer you my congratulations on opening this Prov. Grand Lodge, and I hope this will give an impulse to Masonry within the bounds of this province, and within the bounds of other provinces, and lead to the spread of Masonry in this and other provinces; and the cultivation of every virtue that Masonry inculcates, will, I am sure, follow in its steps. You have this day elected and approved of Officers of this Prov. Grand Lodge, and it is now your duty to obey the instructions of those Prov. Grand Officers, and carry out your duties in the province. Brethren, there are likewise duties which have been long dormant, of which you will, by and bye, get notice to perform. I now leave this subject, and propose to you, 'Our beloved Queen, and our beloved Craft.'

The Prov. Grand Master proposed "The Earl of Zetland and the Grand Lodge of England," which was heartily responded to.

The Prov. Grand Master then gave "The Duke of Athole and the Grand Lodge of Scotland," and paid a very high tribute of praise to the noble duke.

The Prov. Grand Master next rose and said, the toast he had to propose was one which had been suggested to him, viz., "The Sister Lodges of the United States of America!" (Cheers). He (the speaker) looked forward not only to the time when Old England, with her first born child, America, and her second born child, Australia, would be the promoters of the Protestant religion, but to the time when the Anglo-Saxon race would be able to meet a world of despots. (Applause). His lordship, in conclusion, said that they had present a brother connected with the Masonic Grand Lodge of the United States of America, and, "as a chiel's amang us takin' notes, and (as his lordship supposed) faith he'll prent it," he hoped the Lodge would do honour to the toast. (Applause).

Bro. Cooke, in a speech of considerable length, congratulated the Prov. Grand Lodge of Forfarshire on having at their head a nobleman of so much ability and experience in legislative business, and one who takes so much interest in the welfare of our noble Order; he had come among them for the purpose of ascertaining the true state of Masonry in this country, and he was proud to see that on this occasion peace and harmony prevailed among them, and he could assure them that he should carry with him a pleasant remembrance of this very happy meeting.

The Prov. Grand Master next proposed "The R.W. Bro. Lord Kinnaird and the Visiting Brethren of the Eastern Province of Perthshire."

Bro. Lord Kinnaird, in responding, paid a very high compliment to Lord Panmure, and congratulated his lordship and the meeting on his appointment.

The Prov. Grand Master then gave "Bro. James Whyte Melville and the Visiting Brethren of the Province of Fife," to which the R.W. Master of St. John's, Cupar, Fife, responded.

Bro. Lord Kinnaird, inasmuch as Bro. Melville was not present, proceeded to propose the next toast, which was, "The R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Lord Panmure," and passed a very high eulogium upon his lordship.

The Prov. Grand Master, in an admirable speech of considerable length and feeling, expressed to the meeting the pleasure and honour which he felt at being inaugurated as the Prov. Grand Master, and stated, that as the Prov. Grand Master of Forfarshire had many duties to perform, which could not at present be overtaken, he hoped he would soon have an opportunity of meeting the brethren again.

Bro. Sir P. M. Threipland, Bart., next gave "Bro. Sir John Ogilvy, the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., and the other office bearers of the Prov. Grand Lodge," and, in doing so, took occasion to say that Sir John was not the time but the life of Masonry, since he had taken upon himself the obligations of a Mason.

Bro. Sir John Ogilvy responded. He said he rose not only on his own account, but also on account of the office bearers who had been alluded to, to return thanks for the very kindly manner in which the meeting had received the toast just proposed. He was sure he expressed the sentiments of his brother Masons when he said that they highly esteemed the honour which had been done them by their brethren.

The Prov. Grand Master then proposed the various Lodges present, in their order of seniority.

These toasts were duly received and honoured by the company, and the respective Masters responded in suitable terms.

The Prov. Grand Master next proposed the health of Bro. the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, the member for Perth, which was received most cordially by the brethren.

Bro. Kinnaird replied in a very feeling manner, and said that he felt proud to occupy, as his lordship had said, undisturbed, the seat which was last occupied by his lordship before his elevation to the upper house, since that time up till now. He felt proud to think that he had held the seat undisturbed, seeing that Perth was a constituency, like this city, composed of great and independent electors, whom it was at all times a high honour to represent. He had not, like his lordship, got high honours from her majesty, and no man got them more deservedly than his lordship had done; but he felt greatly honoured by the confidence of his constituency, and he also felt highly honoured by the very flattering manner in which his health had been received by this very large and respectable meeting. He (Bro. Kinnaird) then said that his lordship had referred to the visit he had recently paid to another country, now struggling for its liberty; and with reference to that subject, he (Bro. Kinnaird) had been much gratified by that visit, as he found that the whole people, although thirsting for liberty, sought only to attain it in an orderly and constitutional manner. They had elected to lead them men of the most unblemished reputation for honour, integrity, and right principle, and they had followed their injunction so thoroughly as to prove that they were worthy of real freedom. He was sure that the feeling in this country was wholly with the Italians, and he felt confident that her majesty's government would carry out that feeling to the utmost of their power. He again thanked the meeting for the compliment they had paid to him. Bro. Kinnaird's speech was received with rapturous applause.

The Lodge was closed about half-past eight o'clock.

ASIA.

SMYRNA.

INTERESTING MASONIC CEREMONY.

On the 8th of October the city of Smyrna was the scene of a grand fête, on the occasion of the Pacha visiting the Ottoman, Smyrna and Aidin Railway. In the afternoon he proceeded up the line to the village of Seidiken, to lay the first stone of the Seidiken station. Bro. Hyde Clarke, who is engaged in the management of the works, took advantage of the occasion to invite the co-operation of brethren in affording Masonic assistance for the ceremony. Besides those brethren who were officially invited, his colleague and himself issued tickets to several of the Smyrna brethren. In the present state of Masonry in the province, Ill. Bro. Hyde Clarke was requested by the leading brethren to preside over the proceedings of the day, and in virtue of his authority, convened an occasional Lodge at Seidiken. On descending from the train, the brethren proceeded to a tent, which had been provided for them, and clothed themselves. Attended by a guard of honour and band of music, they joined the ceremonial in procession, Ill. Bro. Hyde Clarke, S.P.R.S., officiating as W.M.; Ill. Bro. Carver, S.P.R.C., as P.M.; Ill. Bro. Feust, K.H., as S.W.; Bro. George Meredith (chief engineer), as J.W.; and other members of the highest rank as officers—these wearing the decorations of their high degrees presented an imposing spectacle. The brethren then formed in the centre around H. E. Mohamer Pacha, whom they assisted with the working tools; and gathering on the stone they joined silently in a Masonic prayer for the success of the enterprise, and the restoration of Masonry in the province. H. E. on being informed by Bro. Hyde Clarke that the brethren had prayed to the Supreme Being, begged him in Turkish to express his thanks to them. At the dinner the brethren, at their own request, were assembled together, and saluted each other, and Bro. Hyde Clarke, to whom Bro. Carver, J.L.D., offered a special toast, in his speech took the opportunity of calling the attention of the company to the claims of Masonry. Bro. Hyde Clarke said that at the table were assembled men of many nations; but Masonry had brought him that day in friendly relations with very many among them.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia (Princess Royal) and Princess Alice, have been to Frogmore twice this week to visit the Duchess of Kent. The launch of the Victoria, screw line-of-battle-ship, which has been looked forward to with unusual interest, was effected at Portsmouth on Saturday, under circumstances of perfect success. Her Majesty, the Prince Consort, the Prince and Princess Frederick William, and other members of the Royal Family were on board, the ceremony of christening being performed by the Princess Frederick William. The Victoria is larger than any line-of-battle-ship afloat. Among the visitors this week we find the names of the Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary, the Duchess of Wellington, the Marquis of Ailesbury, Earl Spencer, the Portuguese ambassador, Lord John Russell, Lord Sydney, and Sir George Grey.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Moniteur publishes the report of Admiral Rigault de Genouilly on the fight of the 7th of September, with the Cochinchinese, in which the enemy suffered severe loss. The report says—"We have put the enemy to flight, and have destroyed their forts and artillery. Our loss amounts to ten killed and forty wounded. The French semi-official papers contest that the French despatch to Sardinia did not convey urgent representations, but merely intimated that the emperor would regret the acceptance by Prince Carignan of the offer made him. Whatever the message was it has thrown the Sardinian government into a state of perturbation. A portion of the ministry are for refusing to accede to the "representations" of the august ally; another portion is for trusting to his majesty's "sympathies for Italy and relying on the congress," and the difference is so serious that a ministerial crisis is expected at Turin. The Patrie says the congress is to assemble in Paris, on the 15th of December, but that the adhesion of England had not yet been received. A provincial paper, the Independant de l'Ouest, has received a warning for hinting that the government is severe against those who defend the rights of the Pope, and very lenient, against those who attack them. The Moniteur, referring to the election of Prince Carignan, says it is to be regretted because such a resolution tends to prejudice questions which must be settled in the congress. The Paris correspondent draws attention to recent facts connected with the treaty of Zurich and the affairs of Central Italy, and maintains the opinion that the Emperor of the French has not at heart the independence of Italy. The dangerous state of Central Italy is also commented on. The Patrie of Monday announces that a pamphlet by M. Emile de Girardin, entitled "Napoleon III. et l'Europe," was seized on Monday, when in type at the printing office, by a judge's order. Leonie Chereau, the girl who was charged with stealing the child of M. Hua, has been declared not guilty; the trial has excited great interest in Paris.—The semi-official Constitutionnel, often more official than the Moniteur itself, states, as a reason for the opposition to Prince Carignan, that it would have caused open intervention in Italy, and Sardinia then could not have prevented the entry of the Neapolitan troops into the Roman territory. The departure of the French expedition to China appears to be fixed for about the 15th of December. The vessels carrying out troops will touch at Goree, the Cape of Good Hope, and Singapore, and orders have been sent to the French consuls at those places to have in readiness such supplies as are likely to be required. The expedition will reach China, as already stated, at the time of the year most favourable for military operations. M. Lesseps has gone to Constantinople, and the Marseilles newspapers state that instructions from the French Government were received at Alexandria on the 27th October to prevent any act that would interfere with the privileges of the Suez Canal Company. The works of the canal continue.—The nomination of Prince Carignan was a measure that wounded no susceptibilities, and would be agreeable to the moderate party in Europe, being in itself the indication of a definite line of policy. A telegram from Turin denies certain reports of a ministerial crisis having taken place there on the question of the proposed regency of Prince Carignan. It is stated that a council of ministers had been held, at which several influential gentlemen of high standing were present.—The Monitore of Bologna publishes an official report from M. Brizzi, provincial administrator of the See of Rimini, stating that the pontifical troops, on the 9th of June last, profaned the church of San Gaudenzio. At that date the pontifical government had not yet been overthrown in Romagna, and the report was addressed to the papal legate, but not published until now by the present government.—The Military Gazette of Vienna speaks of considerable reforms which are in contemplation in the Austrian army, which is to be organized on a new system, both with respect to its armament and distribution in brigades and battalions. Rifled cannon is to be used, but on a different model from that of the French. A correspondent, writing from Pesth, on the 6th instant, says that the Viennese cabinet had decided on the selection of a number of Hungarians as "men of confidence" to assemble to discuss a plan of municipal organization for Hungary; but it appears that the government has not been able to collect a sufficient number of men in whom they could confide to carry out their scheme. An imperial autograph letter has been addressed to the Minister of Finance, Baron von Bruck, expressing the desire of the emperor to make good the deficit in the budget of the year 1860-61. In order to carry out the desire of the emperor a committee will be appointed, whose work is to be terminated at the end of March next, and the result submitted to the Council of the Empire. In accordance with the articles 13 and 16 of the decree, dated 13th April, 1857, the number of members of the Council of the Empire will temporarily be increased for the discussion of this subject.—A letter from Zurich says—"The signature of the treaty of peace was attended by a certain degree of pomp on the part of the Swiss Federal authorities. The signature, at their request, took place at the Hotel de Ville. The plenipotentiaries were escorted thither by Swiss delegates; the troops were under arms to pay military honours, and a large crowd assembled to witness the passage of the cortege."—The King of the Belgians' health is reported to be now in a satisfactory state.—In Saturday's sitting of the Federal Diet the affair of the constitution of Hessel Cassel was referred to a committee. Prussia, Thuringen, Oldenburg, and the Hanseatic Towns voted for the re-establishment of the constitution of 1831; the representatives of some other governments voted in favour of the constitution of 1852, and others abstained altogether from voting. The committee has unanimously adopted the proposal concerning the reorganisation of the Federal military constitution, and has sent its report to the military committee.—Advices have been received from Constantinople to the 5th inst. A reduction of the civil list, amounting to 6,000,000 only, and a diminution of the salaries of the employés has been decided upon. The Porte has addressed a memorandum to the powers which have signed the treaty of Paris. Bro. Kabuli Effendi, formerly of the Old Union Lodge, has returned from Crete. It is said the difficulties there have been settled. Said Pasha has been appointed governor-general of Widdien. All the redifs have been dismissed. The apostolic prefect has been murdered by the Khurdes. News from Smyrna of the 5th inst. state that Sir Henry Bulwer has arrived there, en route for Salonica and Volo, to meet Prince Alfred.—Letters from Athens to the 4th inst. announce that the protecting powers have claimed from the Greek government, on account of interest due, a yearly payment of 900,000 francs.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—As every week increases the gravity of the complexion of affairs in the Italian peninsula, the part which this country must eventually take in the settlement is matter of deep and serious consideration, and accordingly the premier and his colleagues are unremitting in their cabinet consultations, which have again been frequent during the week.—The mortality of the metropolis was less last week by 131 deaths than the previous week, the total being 1051, or 121 below the estimated average. Bronchitis continues to increase, numbering 102 among its victims last week. Scarlatina and diphtheria maintain a high mortality. The births were 1848.—The Earl De Grey, K.G., expired at his residence in St. James's-square on Monday morning. His lordship was lord lieutenant and custos rotularum of Bedfordshire, lieutenant-commandant of the Yorkshire Hussar Yeomanry, and aide de camp to Her Majesty. He succeeded in his title and large estates by our distinguished brother the Earl of Ripon, P.G.W.—At the Court of Aldermen, at which the new lord mayor took the chair for the first time, a vote of thanks to the late lord mayor, Alderman Wire, for the able and efficient manner in which he discharged all his duties was carried by acclamation. — On Saturday, Dr. Thomas Smethurst, who was convicted of poisoning Isabella Banks and sentenced to death, but which sentence it has been resolved not to carry into execution, was brought up under a habere corpus, and charged before Mr. Combe, at Southwark, with having been guilty of bigamy. The facts of the case are sufficiently well known. Evidence of the second and illegal marriage was formally adduced and Smethurst fully committed for trial at the Old Bailey. On Tuesday he received a free pardon on the charge of murder.—A frightful murder has been committed in the streets of Coventry, a militiaman named Kingston having attacked his wife, and with a clasp knife first stabbed her and then cut her throat. The murderer is in custody.—Lord Elcho presided over a meeting held at the Thatched House Tavern on Wednesday, for the purpose of forming a national association for the encouragement of volunteer rifle corps, and the promotion of rifle shooting throughout Great Britain. It is proposed to have a great national gathering yearly, when prizes to the best shots will be offered for competition. Mr. Sidney Herbert, Minister at War, is elected first president of the association; three trustees, twelve vice-presidents, and a council of fifteen, have also been chosen. A large number of members were enrolled there and then, this movement promising to be the topstone to that of the Volunteer Rifle Corps.—A large and influential meeting has been held in the Egyptian Hall at the Mansion House, for the purpose of considering the best measures to be taken to assist the bishop about to proceed to British Columbia in discharge of the arduous and important duties with which he has been charged. The meeting was convened by the Lord Mayor, in pursuance of numerous signed requisitions from merchants, bankers, traders, and others of the City of London. The Lord Mayor opened the proceedings, and stated that the foundation of the mission was due to Miss Burdett Coutts, who had endowed it with the munificent and surprising sum of 25,000*l.* The new bishop, Dr. Hills, addressed the meeting, intimating that his departure from England would take place to-day. The meeting was also addressed by the Bishops of London and Oxford, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, Sir G. Grey, and others. In the morning a valedictory service was celebrated in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, at which the Bishops of London and Oxford administered the Holy Communion, and the Bishop of Columbia preached the sermon.

INDIA, AND COLONIES.—The Calcutta mail of the 8th of October has arrived before it was strictly due. The news it brings would not, however, have suffered by delay. Owing to the celebration of the great Hindoo holidays, the Doorgah Poojah, business was at a standstill, while the native town was in a state of demoniac uproar with the beating of tom-toms and the frantic yells of enthusiastic devotees. The Governor-general, as we learn by the telegram to Ceylon, started on his visit to the Upper Provinces on the 10th, escorted by an armed force of three thousand men, horse and foot, and accompanied by a swarm of locusts, in the form of twenty thousand followers, who will assuredly eat up every green thing.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts indicate a quiet business, with an appearance of remunerative prospects in most departments, though the expansion has not been great during the past fortnight. The home demand, both in the neighbourhood of Birmingham and Huddersfield, is encouraging, but the continental branches having again relapsed into comparative tranquillity, an apprehension is entertained that dulness may eventually arise. The reports from Manchester and Leicester speak of a brisk seasonable business, but any further improvement in prices is not mentioned. At Nottingham and Leeds the transactions have been rather restricted, but the tone of the markets is not asserted to be unsatisfactory. In Sheffield and Wolverhampton trade is moderately active, with expectations of improvement. The accounts from the Irish towns allude to the existence of steady progress.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.—Bro. Bradley's first masquerade will take place at Bro. Caldwell's Assembly Rooms, on Monday next.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

EXALTATION BY DISPENSATION.—"P.Z," Leicester, writes:—"Does the Grand Superintendent of a province, or the First Grand Principal of the Order, possess the power of granting dispensations for the exaltation of serving brethren, as Janitors of Royal Arch Chapters, without the payment of fees? The letter of the Royal Arch Constitutions would appear to deny the existence of their power, it being expressly provided (p. 18, art. 21), that 'no person shall, under any pretence, be exalted for a less sum than three guineas,' and there is no dispensing clause, unless, as appears reasonable, the preamble can be taken in that sense. In this town several serving companions have been exalted at various times by dispensation—two of them by authority from the First Grand Principal, under the signature of Comp. White, the late G.S.E., who, it would be supposed, would not do anything contrary to Masonic law. The present Grand Scribe E., however, has recently objected to the validity of the exaltation of a serving companion, by authority of a dispensation from the Grand Superintendent of the province, basing his objection on the article above referred to. The Constitutions are certainly not clear on the point, and it is very desirable that the existence or non-existence of this dispensing power should be decided. What is your opinion, Bro. Editor? It does not seem reasonable that a serving companion should be required to pay the customary fees more than a serving brother."—[We believe the power does exist, so far as companions intended for waiters or Janitors are concerned—the laws of Grand Lodge ruling Grand Chapter, where no provision is made to the contrary.—ED.]

"Bro. N. N. BARRETT, GRAND MASTER OF CONNECTICUT, U.S."—We have received an excellent photograph of this worthy brother, and also of an old Masonic carpet, published in that State in 1812, and now hanging in the Lodge room of St. John's (No. 4) at Hartford, Connecticut, for which he will please accept our thanks. Bro. Barrett, writing on October 29th, says:—"I am in receipt of the portrait of the Earl of Zetland [issued with the Freemasons Magazine of the 15th]. Many thanks to you, Bro. Warren. This is indeed a valuable present, and just fills a gap in our portrait gallery of bright lights."

"L.S."—A Past Warden is not entitled to a seat in Grand Lodge. He is always eligible for the Master's chair if he can get elected.

"R.R."—We do not give up the names of our correspondents.

"A."—We do not consider that a Past Warden of a Scotch or Irish Lodge should be allowed to take the chair of an English Lodge until he has again served the office of Warden—but the letter of the law will not exclude him. Great care however must be taken to ascertain the real rank of such Masons, as they are apt to style themselves P.M. by virtue of the Past Master's degree, which is not acknowledged in England. Moreover, the officers of Irish Lodges are elected only for six months, whilst our law requires that a brother should be a Warden for the full period of twelve months before he is eligible to be elevated Master.

"P. Z."—We do not think it Masonic to give such information. Remember that excellent virtue—silence.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1859.

THE YOUTH OF SOLOMON.

BY J. FLAVIUS ADAMS, M.D.

THAT celebrated prayer in which our wise Grand Master is represented as addressing himself to God, on his accession to the throne of Israel, is not without instruction and solemn import. We give that portion of it which suggested to us our present article.

"And Solomon said: And now, O Lord my God, Thou hast made thy servant king, instead of David, my father; and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out and to come in.

"Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad, for who is able to judge this so great a people?"

"And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing."

The form of the book in which it is related permits it only to be considered as a fact in the history of his reign, and necessarily leaves the sentiments and disposition which lead to this beautiful address to the imagination of the reader to supply. But, in what is considered the apocryphal book of his wisdom, it is related at much greater length, and represents the feelings and character of the author with a simplicity which is singularly affecting, and with an eloquence which cannot be too much admired. It opens with a very beautiful description of the character and effects of wisdom, and of the early admiration which it had excited in his mind.

"Now, when I considered these things," says he, "by myself, and pondered it in mine heart, how that to be joined to wisdom is immortality, and great pleasure in her friendship and glory by communing with her, I went about seeking how I might take her unto me. Nevertheless, when I perceived that I could not enjoy her, except God gave her me, I went unto the Lord and besought him, and with my whole heart I said, O God of my fathers, and Lord of mercy, who hath made all things by thy word, and ordained man through thy wisdom, that he should have dominion over the creatures which thou hast made, and govern the world according to equity, and execute judgment with an upright heart, give me that wisdom which sitteth by thy throne, and put me not out from among thy children; and send her out of thy holy heavens, and from the throne of thy majesty, that she may dwell with me, and that I may know what is pleasing unto thee. So shall my works be acceptable—so shall I govern thy people righteously, and be meet for my father's throne."

There is not, perhaps, in the history of mankind, a more beautiful picture than that which is here represented; a young man in the bloom of life—when everything was gay and alluring around him, in the moment of ascending to a throne, when pleasure and ambition were before him, and eastern servility, with its wonted adulation, told him that all things were in his hand—betaking himself thus humbly to his God, and imploring of him that wisdom which might enable him to resist the temptations with which his situation surrounded him, and to fulfil the duties to which he was called. Had it been in the latter period of his reign, when satiated with pleasure, and disappointed in ambition—when fatigued with the cares and pageantry of a throne he looked abroad for better comforts—had it been at such a time that Solomon had directed his soul to heaven, much of the merit of his piety would have been lost. It would have then appeared only as the last refuge of a discontented mind, which interest, not disposition, had led to devotion, and which sought only for repose in piety when it had been disappointed in everything else. But at such a season, to be guided by such sentiments, in such an hour to address himself to God, bespeaks a mind so humble and yet so pure, a disposition so ardently and yet so rightly inclined, and a soul so well fitted for every kind of excellence, that no language of praise seems too great for its desert.

To the Entered Apprentice Mason this illustration offers a practical lesson of true wisdom. It reminds him of his first step into the temple of knowledge and science—how he knelt, and implored the assistance of the Supreme Being, assured that, if his faith be well founded in that Being, he may confidently pursue his course, without fear and without peril.

It is for wisdom that he also prays, and we give the appropriate invocation so familiar to Freemasons:

"Vouchsafe thine aid, Almighty Father of the universe, to this our present convention, and grant that this candidate for Masonry may dedicate and devote his life to thy service, and become a true and faithful brother among us. Endue him with a competency of thy divine wisdom, that by the influence of the pure principles of our Order he may the better be enabled to display the beauties of holiness to the honour of thy holy name. Amen."

Thus is the Entered Apprentice Mason taught, by the example of our great prototype, to implore his Creator's aid in all his laudable undertakings, and to esteem Him as the chief good.

It is not, however, from the peculiar situation of King Solomon that the beauty of this memorable instance arises. The charm of it chiefly consists in its suitableness to the season of youth; in its correspondence to the character and disposition which distinguish that important age; and which no length of acquaintance with the world prevents us from wishing to find in the young. In all situations, indeed, of human life, piety is the duty and the interest of mankind; but, in youth, it has something singularly graceful and becoming, something which ever impels us to think well of the mind in which it is found, and which, better than all the other attainments of life, appears to promise honour and happiness in future days.

It is suited to the opening of human life, to that interesting season when nature in all its beauty first opens on the view, and when the wisdom and goodness of the Almighty fall on the heart, unmingled and unimpaired. It is suited to the nature of youthful imagination, to that love of excellence and perfection which nothing mortal ever can realize, and which can find only in the truths of Masonry the objects of which it is in search. It is suited still more, perhaps, to the tenderness of young affection, to that sensibility which every instance of goodness can move, and to that warm and generous temper which meets everywhere with the objects of its gratitude and love. But, most of all, it is suited to the innocence of the youthful mind, to that sacred purity which can lift its unpolluted hands to heaven; which guilt has not yet torn from confidence and hope in God; and which can look beyond this transitory world.

The progress of life may bring other acquisitions; it may strengthen religion by experience, and add knowledge to faith. But the piety which springs only from the heart—the devotion which nature and not reasoning inspires—the pure homage which flows unbidden from the tongue, and which asks no other motive for its payment than the pleasure which it bestows; these are the possessions of youth, and youth alone.

The feelings of piety, however, are not only natural and becoming in youth; they are still more valuable, as tending to the formation of future character, as affording the best and noblest school in which the mind may be trained to whatever is great and good in human nature. As the "corner stone" is the foundation and support of every new building, so does the Entered Apprentice represent the "corner stone" of that moral edifice he hopes to erect, by the practise of every moral and social virtue.

As an emblem of his innocence, he is presented, at his initiation, with a lamb skin, or white apron. It is to remind him of that purity of life and conduct which is fitted to exalt the human mind to its greatest degree of virtuous perfection.

The moral sentiments which are formed in youth spring in the first and purest state of the human mind, when no habits of life have contracted its powers. It comes in that happy season when life is new, and hope unbroken; when nature seems everywhere to rejoice around, and when the love of God rises unbidden in the soul. At such a period the practise of virtue is not a service of necessity, but of joy. If there be a moment in human life in which the foundation of a virtuous character can be laid, it is at this period.

If there be a discipline which can call forth every noble faculty of the soul, it is such early exercises of morality. They establish a tone and character of thought which is allied to every virtuous purpose. They afford those prospects of the providence of God which can best give support and confidence to virtue. While yet the world is unknown, and the calm morning of life is undisturbed by passions, it awakens desires of a nobler kind than the usual pursuits of life can gratify, and forms in secret those habits of elevated thought which are, of all others, the most valuable acquisitions of youthful years, and which, whether in the pursuits of action or of speculation, fit it for future attainments in truth and virtue, beyond the reach of ordinary men: so the mind is brought from a state of darkness, gradually, to the light of truth.

The moral teachings of early life have an influence which are never forgotten. They represent man in colours which afford the most dignified aspect of his nature. They represent him as formed in the image of his Maker, and as crowned with glory and honour. They represent life, not as the short and fleeting space of temporary being, but as the preparation only for immortal existence. It represents all this, too, in the season of youth, when no lower passions have taken dominion of his heart, and when his powers are all susceptible of being moulded by the ends which are placed before him. In such views of man, all the best qualities of his nature arise involuntarily in the soul: the charity which burns to diffuse happiness; the fortitude which no obstacles can retard, and no dangers can appal, in the road of immortality; the constancy which, reposing in the promises of heaven, presses forward in the path of strenuous and persevering virtue. Such views also level all those vain distinctions among men which, in one class of society, are productive of oppression and pride, and in the other, of baseness.

The first degree of Masonry illustrates humility and deprivation, and instructs us how to practise the one and bear the other with patience and resignation. It teaches us that "we are descended from the same stock, partakers of the same nature, and share the same hope; and though distinctions among men are necessary to preserve subordination, yet no eminence of station should make us forget that we are brethren; for he who is placed on the lowest spoke of fortune's wheel may be entitled to our regard; because a time will come, and the wisest knows not how soon, when all distinctions but that of goodness shall cease, and death, the grand leveller of all reduce us to the same state."

It is the piety of youthful days which can afford the best preservative against all dark and unjust conceptions of life. Before the experience of life has made any impression on their minds, before they descend into the "wilderness" through which they are to travel, it shows them from afar the "promised land." It carries their view to the whole course of their being, and while no narrow objects have yet absorbed their desires, shows them its termination in another scene, in which the balance of good and evil will be adjusted by the unerring hand of God. Under such views of nature, the system of Divine Providence appears in all its majesty and beauty. Beginning here, in the feeble and imperfect state of man, it spreads itself out into forms of ascending being, in which the heart expands while it contemplates them, and closes at last in scenes which are obscured only from the excess of their splendour. With such conceptions or their nature, life meets the young in its real colours—not as the idle abode of effeminate pleasure, but as the school in which their souls are formed to great attainments; not as the soft shade in which every manly and honourable quality is to dissolve, but as the field in which glory, honour, and immortality are to be won. Whatever may be the aspect which it may assume, whatever the scenes in which they are called to act or to suffer, the promises of God still brighten on their view; and their souls, deriving strength from trial, and confidence from experience, settle at last in that humble but holy spirit of resignation which, when rightly understood, comprehends the sum of human happiness. Such are the natural effects of human instruction.

"Now the prayer of Solomon pleased the Lord that he had asked this thing, and God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life, neither hath asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment; behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and understanding heart: so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee. And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honour; so that there shall not be any among kings like unto thee all thy days."

In every part of scripture, in the same manner, it is remarkable with what singular tenderness the season of youth is always mentioned, and what hopes are afforded to the devotion of the young! It was at that age that God appeared unto Moses, when he fed his flock in the desert, and called him to the command of his own people. It was at that age he visited the infant Samuel while he ministered in the temple of the Lord. It was at that age that his Spirit fell upon David, while he was yet the youngest of his father's sons, and when among the mountains of Bethlehem he fed his father's sheep.

These are the effects and promises of youthful piety; and our young craftsmen should rejoice in those days which are never to return; when virtue comes to them in all its charms, and when the God of nature reveals himself to their souls like the mild radiance of the morning sun. If, like Solomon, devotion has taught them its secret pleasures; if, when nature meet them in all its magnificence or beauty, their hearts humble themselves in adoration before the hand which made them, and rejoicing in the contemplation of the wisdom by which they are maintained; if such are the meditations in which their useful hours are passed, let them not renounce, for all that life can offer in exchange, these solitary joys. In these days, "the Lord himself is the Shepherd, and thou dost not want." Amid "the green pastures and by the still waters of youth he now makes thy soul to repose." But the years draw nigh when life shall call the young craftsman to its trials; the evil days are on the wing, when "thou shalt say thou hast no pleasure in them;" and, as thy steps advance, the valley of the shadow of death opens, through which he must pass at last. It is then he shall know what it is to "remember his Creator in the days of his youth." In these days of trial or of awe "His Spirit shall be with you," and he shall fear no ill; and, amid every evil which surrounds them, He shall restore his soul; His goodness and mercy shall follow him all the days of his life," and, when at last, "the silver cord is loosed, his spirit shall return to the God who gave it, and he shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

SMYRNA AND AIDIN RAILWAY.—The Impartial, of Smyrna, states that the Turkish Government has appointed the Imperial Commission for adjudicating causes of expropriation, land damages, &c., in the province of Smyrna. Rechad Bey has been appointed President, and Bro. Hyde Clarke, Vice-President. The Impartial, says of the latter, "We cannot fail to applaud this choice of Bro. Clarke for a mission so delicate, persuaded as we are that by his rare qualifications the representative of the company will be able to conciliate the interests of the company with the duty of protecting the landowners against illegal acts."

BASILICA ANGLICANA—III.

ST. ALBANS.

MIDWAY between Watford and Berkhamstead, on the line of the North Western Railway, are situated the city and ancient abbey church of St. Albans, placed on a rising ground, and overlooking a wide landscape truly English in its character, being interspersed with small woods and copses, abundant shining streams and watercourses, which “—Slow winding through the level plain

Of spacious meads with cattle sprinkled o’er,
Conduct the eye along their sinuous course
Delighted; while there lies a spacious map
Of hill and valley interposed between.”

St. Albans is the centre of a locality rich in historical reminiscences. Within a few miles is King’s Langley, where Henry the Third had a palace in which he frequently resided, and to which he added a priory in which Piers Gaveston, the favourite of Henry the Second was buried, and wherein also are entombed the remains of the unfortunate Richard the Second. At Berkhamstead the Conqueror met the Abbot of St. Alban’s with a crowd of Saxon chiefs and prelates who had prepared to oppose his progress; William, however, falling upon his knees in the “holy presence,” swore “to rule according to the ancient laws and customs of the country.” He had scarcely drawn breath after so profound a perjury, when he bestowed the castle of Berkhamstead and the surrounding lands upon his half brother, Robert Moreton, whom he had previously created Earl of Cornwall.

At the edge of the landscape is the little town of Ivinghoe, where, in a large cruciform church, the work of his own hands, is the tomb of Henry de Blois, that great church building Bishop of Winchester, and brother of King Stephen, who having rebuilt the old cathedral of Winchester, founded the monastery and hospital of St. Cross, of which, according to cotemporary testimony, the revenues have become fabulous.

St. Albans was one of the principal towns of the ancient Britons, and in that character was one of the first which invited the thirst for conquest of the invading Romans, who besieged and took it, and twenty years afterwards raised it to the rank of “city,” under the title Verulam or Verulamium. They invested it with a wall of Roman tilework, a portion of which remains to this day, and is called Gorhambury Block. But according to Tacitus, they made but indifferent use of their conquest. Cratus, a lieutenant of Suetonius, excited the Briton population to an uncontrollable pitch of fury; their territory was taken away from their chiefs, and their households plundered. It was at St. Albans that Boadicea, the queen of the Iceni, writhing under unheard of wrongs, assembled round her the remains of her people, and falling upon the Roman legionaries quartered in the city of St. Albans, cut them to pieces, and put the execrable Cratus to flight, calling the proconsul from his successes in the north and west. Her triumph was but shortlived, and an exterminating massacre followed upon the return of the main body of the Roman army from the Isle of Anglesea. Again, however, she gathered round her the remnant of her people, and led them to the attack, reminding them of their and her own wrongs. Dion the historian, has described her draped in a many coloured robe, with a massive chain of gold around her neck, her yellow hair descending to her feet, her form majestic, and her countenance stern and imperious. She is represented as appealing from her two injured daughters to the populace, and exciting to a last energetic effort, in which however she was defeated, and ended her career by poison, A.D. 61. Her body is supposed by some (but the evidence is far from satisfactory) to rest in St. Albans. It was in reference to this campaign that Tacitus used the celebrated words—“They (the Britons) are easy to rule, but under injury their temper is quick, sudden, and impetuous. They may be made obedient, but they can never be reduced to slavery.”

The name St. Albans is one of purely Christian origin and tradition. In the Romish martyrology we are told that Alban was born a Briton, but became a soldier in the Roman legions, and was afterwards converted to Christianity, for which he suffered martyrdom under Diocletian, in A.D. 293, or according to others, 304. He was then the first native of these islands that suffered for his faith, and the inscription under the spot above which his shrine used to be placed, reads, “Albanus Verolamensis, Anglorum Protomartyrus, A.D. 293.”

Of the ancient abbey of St. Albans there remain only the abbey church and gateway which were purchased of Edward the Sixth by the corporation and inhabitants, and appropriated to parochial purposes. The old edifice, however, is one of great antiquity, dating from a time long before the conquest. Indeed it was cotemporary with the first St. Paul’s above Ludgate, and St. Peter’s in Thorney Island. It boasts of originating in nearly the same manner, namely, from kingly penitence. Offa, King of Mercia, the same of whom mention has been made in previous papers, resolved, stricken with remorse for the murder of Ethelbert King of the East Angles, to erect a shrine to St. Alban at Holmehurst, in the year 795. This establishment he largely endowed and enriched with costly presents. It flourished for nearly seven centuries, and grew so wealthy that the kings of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries were entertained by its abbots in a princely fashion which they themselves could not excel. The Roman tiles with which the city was originally built, were employed at various periods to repair and reconstruct this great monastery of the Benedictines. That portion of it which at present remains, is composed of various styles of architecture, indeed so remarkable is this that we find the circular and pointed arch in different sides, and the rudest specimens of Saxon architecture placed beside the more refined form and workmanship of the Norman era. Of the original dimensions some idea may be formed from the present proportions of the existing church. It is like other ancient English churches, cruciform, and measures six hundred feet at the intersection of the transepts; each transept measures one hundred and eighty feet. The height of the tower is one hundred and forty-four feet, and the nave is two hundred and seventeen feet wide. The revenues of the abbey of St. Albans were computed in the thirteenth century at £2,500 per annum, at that time an enormous sum. The number of illustrious personages interested in this ancient church is very great. In one of the side walls are niches of seventeen kings who were patrons of the abbey; most conspicuous is the monument of Humphry, Duke of Gloucester, who, to distinguish him from Richard, afterwards the third of that name, King of England, was called the “good” Duke of Gloucester.

But there is another church, St. Michael’s, which derives a melancholy interest from the circumstance of its being the last resting place of Francis Lord Bacon and Verulam.

“That wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind.”

In that church is the monument of the great philosopher and statesman. Here he was carried from his residence at Gorhambury, where he retired after his impeachment by the peers. There is a sad interest attaching to his last appeal to the king, in which he says, “I see my approaching ruin. There is no mercy in a multitude. Those who now strike at your chancellor will strike at your crown. I am the first, I hope I may not be the last sacrifice.” This was penned in 1626. Twenty-three years later, Charles I. was brought to the block. And later, the degraded chancellor exclaimed, in the despair of a broken heart, “It is my own act, my lords, be merciful to a broken reed.” How applicable are the beautiful lines of Byron:—

“And the soft quiet hamlet where he dwelt
Is one of that complexion which is made
For those who their mortality have felt;
A home and refuge from their hopes decayed.

In the deep refuge of the green hill's shade
Which shows the distant prospect far away,
And busy cities now in vain displayed,
For they can lure no further, and the ray
Of the bright sun can make sufficient holy day."

A MODEL LODGE.

[From Rob Morris's Code of Masonic Law.]

We have often been asked to describe a Model Lodge—exactly such a thing as a Lodge ought to be. Influenced by the hope that some of our readers will be stirred up to strive for this high standard, we will attempt the description, though we feel ourselves compelled to draw, in part at least, upon fancy for the pattern. We have witnessed every feature of our model, but never all of them in one Lodge.

The room should be in the highest story that embraces it, but not directly under the roof, and including the room for the Tyler and the preparation room, should comprehend the whole story; so that there may be no other apartments contiguous to it. It should be situated rather in the suburbs of the village or town, in which the Lodge is located, and so high that no other building near will overtop it. For summer use it should admit of the most thorough ventilation, for nothing is more destructive to health than night meetings in hot and confined rooms, such as we too often have suffered in. Stoves should be so situated as to warm the remotest corner of the apartment in a cheerless winter night, that the order and decorum of the Lodge may not be disturbed by members leaving their seats, and an ample supply of water should be conveniently at hand. The Tyler's room should have a stove to itself.

The floor should be covered with thick matting, or carpeting laid upon straw, so as to damp the heaviest sound. The stations of three principal officers should be raised on steps according to their official grade. No pulpit or wall should be erected to conceal them from the view of the craftsmen present, but they should sit as exposed as a king upon his throne; or, at the most, a narrow pedestal rising from a single stalk, should be placed before each of them. On this pedestal may lie the pillar, gavel, &c., necessary for each. Comfortable seats should be provided for members and visitors; not hard, torturing benches, without backs, but easy and pleasant chairs or sofas. Desks are necessary for the Secretary and Treasurer, and chairs for the Deacons. The gavels used by the principal officers should be small, neatly turned, of ivory, lignum vitæ, or some other hard and ornamental wood; and a hard substance laid upon the pedestal to receive the force of the blows. Upon the wall should hang one of Sherer's large and magnificent Master's carpets, the best arrangement in the world for purposes of lecturing; likewise engravings of the temple, of eminent Craftsmen, of splendid Masonic edifices, maps of the countries mentioned in our lectures, chronological charts, and any thing else that is both instructive and ornamental. Thus the room is a place of beauty, gratifying to the eye, and satisfactory to the pride; while it is eminently calculated for the Mason's purpose as a school for the mind. During the hours devoted to discussions, that are sometimes uninteresting, save to the few, the brethren will be feasting their eyes with these speaking emblems, instead of closing away in sleep. In one corner, neatly arranged on shelves, properly catalogued and covered for preservation, should be the Lodge library, embracing as many books upon Masonry and cognate subjects as the means of the Lodge will procure. A small annual percentage upon the Lodge receipts would suffice to increase it from year to year, until, eventually, the collection would become one of the most valuable objects belonging to the Lodge.

The Lodge room should rather be small and well filled than large and empty. As no well working Lodge embraces in general over fifty members, so the dimensions of thirty feet by twenty feet, or thereabouts, make the most desirable apartment. Preserve us from the great halls as big as "all outdoors," that more resemble a barn than a Lodge room, and could not be filled with less than ten score Masons! Some Lodges build as if Lebanon's cedars were as abundant as black oak saplings.

In this Lodge shall meet stately (not oftener than once a month) all the members thereof, or as many as are favoured by Providence with health and strength to come. Precisely as the clock indicates the hour named in the by-laws, the Master's hammer should descend, and the work of the meeting be commenced. Vacant places already noted should be already filled by appointment, for the well informed Master will not wait the clothing of the Craft to select his assistants in the labour before him. Upon the Master's pedestal the faithful Secretary has already laid a brief programme of the business suggested by the minutes of the last meeting, so the instant the opening ceremonies are completed labour can commence. Upon each pedestal, and at convenient places here and there, around the room, are copies of the by-laws and rules of order of the Lodge, placed there through the thoughtful care of the Tyler or Steward, who has long ago been instructed to this end by the Master. This provides every person present with the means of correcting others and ruling himself.

If strangers are present, they are treated with marked courtesy and attention. After proper avouchal (which consists in a declaration from some brother present that he has sat with them in a Lodge—nothing less than that is a legal avouchal) they are made to feel themselves at home, and as free from embarrassment as though they had lived there all their days. Their names are entered upon the Secretary's book, the Lodge to which they are attached (or were last attached, if demitted) is noted, and henceforth the Lodge will know them in the true Masonic sense. If they cannot be avouched for, according to the basis named, they are politely invited to wait in the adjoining apartment until the Lodge shall be opened, when they can be examined in due and ample form. Should they fail in any particular to satisfy the examining committee as to their claims to Masonic regard, they are as politely notified of the fact, and thus no offence can possibly be given or taken by either party.

The work in the Model Lodge should go on expeditiously and systematically. While ample time is allowed for a free expression of opinion, always controlled, however, by the rules of order, and for the lectures to the degrees conferred, no allowance is made for desultory discussions, want of facility on the part of subordinate officers, or previous neglect in arrangements. Negligence is always a fit subject for Masonic discipline. The Master should need no book for the monitorial portion of his lectures, but a well practised tongue and a disciplined memory from the unerring volume from which he draws. The same may be said of the subordinate officers, each should be able to repeat his part as easily as he repeats the Lord's prayer or his own name.

In this hasty sketch we have not pretended to enumerate all the articles necessary to equip a Mason's Lodge. We have said nothing of the symbol of Deity, the Deacon's rods, candlesticks, jewels, &c. The knowledge of every reader will supply the rest.

And best of all, in this Model Lodge you will find mutual respect, mutual confidence, and mutual love. None will be fraternized who are not in the confidence of every member of the Lodge. None will be demitted save those who are about to remove, or who have departed to another state of existence. No slight misunderstanding will be allowed to grow up into a great and incurable quarrel; but all breaches will be healed while yet they are tender and small. The Master and Wardens will be elected "for real worth and personal merit only," and not often changed. The humblest member of the Lodge will feel himself, Masonically, equal to the highest; the highest will not spurn the companionship of the humblest; and here, if anywhere, will be seen the influence of "that noble and generous emulation of who can best work and best agree."

ARCHÆOLOGY.

INTERESTING DISCOVERIES NEAR AMIENS.

[The following very important paper appears in a contemporary's columns, and is contributed by T. W. FLOWER, Esq., of Croydon.]

HAVING observed the great and increasing interest which has been excited by the discovery in the drift gravel of the valley of the Somme of numerous flint weapons or implements, which evidently were wrought by human labour, I am induced to lay before your readers some particulars which hitherto seem not to have been sufficiently noticed.

Several years have now elapsed since M. Boucher de Perthes, of Abbeville, a gentleman well known for his devotion to literary and antiquarian pursuits, first observed and described the occurrence of these implements in the gravel pits near that town.

Some years afterwards Dr. Rigollet, of Amiens, by means of researches carried on in other localities, fully confirmed the accuracy of M. de Perthes' observations. Nevertheless this discovery, if not altogether discredited, was but little noticed or appreciated either in France or in England, and might have passed into entire oblivion, but for the researches of an English geologist. The merit of having recalled this interesting subject to the attention of the geologists and archæologists of both countries, and of clearing up the doubts which had prevailed as to the contemporaneity of those works of human hands with extinct species of elephants and other mammals, is entirely due to Mr. Prestwich.

Having twice carefully examined the several sections in which these implements had been found by M. de Perthes and by Dr. Rigollet, Mr. Prestwich embodied the result of his investigations in a paper which was read before the Royal Society in June last, and which has been since published in the society's proceedings. As this report may not be accessible to many of your readers, and as it is also carefully limited to a detailed and scientific account of the author's investigations, some further and more general particulars may perhaps be found interesting to those who take any interest in such subjects.

Shortly after Mr. Prestwich's paper had been read before the Royal Society I proceeded under his able guidance, and in company with some other members of the Geological Society to Amiens and Abbeville, in order to re-examine the sections in which those implements had been found. Upon our arrival at the pit near Amiens we were met by some little barefooted boys, one of whom accosted me with the politeness peculiar to his nation,—"Monsieur, voulez vous des langues des chats?" Although I could form no notion of the use to which these delicacies were to be applied, I answered, I hope with equal politeness, that I did wish for some of them; whereupon the lad skipped back to his hut, and soon returned with ten or twelve of the flint celts, which he gladly exchanged for a few sous. Encouraged by this proof that the objects of our search were not far distant, we set to work with great zeal, although at first with but little success; however, after labouring for some hours, I succeeded in discovering and disinterring a very fine and well shaped celt of black flint, eight inches long by four inches wide at the widest part, and tapering to a rounded point about three quarters of an inch in width, so as to bear some rude resemblance to a tongue. This was embedded at the depth of about twenty feet from the surface, in the middle of a compact mass of gravel, composed entirely of chalk flints, much water worn and rolled, and chalk pebbles. Before discovering it I was obliged to dig into the face or outer surface of the quarry to the depth of about eighteen inches, and to displace several barrow loads of the gravel.

The bed of gravel in which it was found is of an average depth of about twenty feet, and forms the capping or summit of a slight elevation, resting immediately upon the chalk. Above this bed occurs a thin bed of coarse white silicious sand, interspersed with small rounded chalk pebbles, and varying from six inches to three or four feet in thickness. This sand bed contains numerous well-preserved land and freshwater shells of recent species. Resting immediately upon the sand is found a bed of strong reddish loam, six or eight feet in thickness, which has been extensively worked as a brick field; and on the surface of this bed, at 200 or 300 yards distance from the general pit, and somewhat nearer to the convent of St. Acheul, are the remains of an ancient cemetery. Here a large stone cist is to be seen, standing on the surface, the brick earth having been cleared away both from above and around it. This cemetery is undoubtedly Roman. We procured from it a coin of Claudius in good preservation, and some other Roman coins, together with a bronze finger ring, and part of a fibula.

The result of our examination perfectly satisfied us of the accuracy of Mr. Prestwich's conclusions with regard to a fact so interesting alike to the archaeologist and to the geologist. We ourselves found not only two good specimens of the flint celts, or hatchets, but we brought away upwards of thirty others, taken from the same pit, some of them found at about the same depth as the first, and some three or four feet lower. These were procured without difficulty from the labourers and their children. Mr. Prestwich, also, on the occasion of his first visit alone, and afterwards when in company with Mr. Evans, brought away twelve specimens. Numerous others are to be seen in the fine museum of M. Boucher de Perthes, and some are preserved in the museum of Amiens.

No one who examines these instruments can doubt that they are the products of human labour and skill. Uncouth as they may appear to those who are accustomed to more finished works, their rudeness is evidently not so much due to any deficiency of intelligence in the manufacturers as to the want of iron or some other metal wherewith to work. It may be questioned if any English workman, who was destitute of all tools but such as he could find strewn on the earth's surface, would be able to produce from a flint pebble more useful or more elegant forms than these. Those who are familiar with the figures which are presented in those flints which are casually fractured, will agree, that while it is almost impossible that a single flint should be broken by accident, so as to assume the shape in which these are found, it is altogether incredible that a great number of them should be found collected in a space which is not larger than that occupied by a modern dwelling house. They are all formed upon a certain uniform pattern, as much so as a set of modern knives and forks; all are worked to a blunt point with a rude cutting edge on each side, and a sort of boss on the other extremity, forming a handhold. The under side is very slightly convex, indeed often almost flat; and on the upper side a slight ridge is left, running down the centre; and the edges are formed by striking away the flint in splinters from each side, in a direction at right angles with or a little oblique to the axis. There are usually five or six of these chips on each side of the upper surface, as distinct and regular as the marks of the chisel upon a statue. Almost every specimen is found to retain a greater or less portion of the original outer surface, but this is invariably left at the thick and not at the pointed extremity. It is, indeed, only retained where it does not interfere with the shape of the instrument; in all other cases it is carefully chipped or struck off, thus indicating not only labour but that intelligence which avoids the expenditure of useless labour.

There is one peculiarity in these implements which seems to deserve more notice than it has received. It is evident that they existed in the shape of gravel, or much worn pebbles, before they were fashioned to their present shape. This, indeed, is just what might have been expected, since none but a people destitute of metal would have been content to use such rude instruments as these; and a people so unprovided would also have been unable to quarry the chalk for the sake of the flint embedded in it, and would thus have been forced to content themselves with those fragments or blocks which lay scattered upon the surface. If we examine them closely we shall find that while the manufactured or worked surface of the celts is nearly as sharp and clear as if made yesterday, that portion of the original, or, if we may so call it, the natural surface, which has not been struck off in the course of manufacture, is much worn and exhibits the appearance of having been long "tossed with restless violence round about the pendent globe." We may also judge of them, as we do of other things, by their companions. The pebbles which are found immediately associated with them, but which have not been worked, are very much water worn and rolled; some, indeed, are nearly round; and all, without exception, have acquired that peculiar worn aspect which long travel gives as well to rocks as to men.

Nor, indeed, is this change confined to the mere surface; the interior substance of many of these stones, to the extent of about a quarter of an inch from the outer surface, presents that discoloured appearance which, to a practical eye, denotes the changes which have been produced by mechanical and chymical forces, probably in operation for long periods of time.

If this attrition of the outer surface, and the discolouration of the interior, had been due to the same forces (whatever they may have been) which brought the implements themselves into their present position, it is obvious that they also would have been subjected to the common fate, and that thus the sharp edges which they still retain would have been much abraded if not entirely obliterated, and the interior would have been partially discoloured.

It would thus seem that the forces, by means of which these things were carried into their present position, were in operation but for a short period; that the actual condition of the gravel in which they are found, and from which they are fashioned, was due to some former change or changes, by means of which these masses of flint were torn from their chalk matrix; and that on this occasion the gravel was merely shifted from some other spot, just as the loose ballast in the hold of a vessel in stormy weather is rolled from one side to the other.

It has been noticed that the quarry is on the summit of a gentle elevation, about 100 feet above the level of the Somme, and, whatever may have been the case before the deposit of the gravel, there is now no high land in the neighbourhood from which so large a mass could have slipped. It seems also that this particular bed is but a patch or outlier of the mass of drift of which it originally formed a portion. It crops out a few hundred yards' distance to the east, and is not met with again until we arrive at the foot of the hill of St. Roch. It is of course impossible to indicate with any certainty the nature of those forces which brought this gravel bed to its present position; but if we assume that this change was brought about by the action of water, I would venture to suggest that the wave which was sufficiently powerful to carry into its present position this vast mass of gravel and earth would have overwhelmed and destroyed every creature living upon the surface, and the forces of which we find traces in the subsequent denudation of the sides of the hill could hardly have been less destructive. It would seem that we have thus evidence of four, if not more, distinct deluges—namely, that which washed from the chalk, and strewed over the surface, the flint stones from which these implements were fashioned; next, that which carried them into their present position; afterwards, those several changes by which large portions of the first deposit of gravel were removed, and the beds of sand, with the remains of land and freshwater shells were deposited; and lastly, the formation of a thick bed of solid brick earth. Above all are seen the tombs, and coins, and weapons of those who, although they lived two thousand years since, seem, when compared with these relics of a far more ancient period, to be but of yesterday.

This view of the subject appears to be in accordance with many of the phenomena which are presented in our own and other countries. The chalk seems to have been a vast quarry, from which, by means of various dynamical changes, occurring at distant epochs, vast quantities of material have been extracted. The lime has been used up, and merged in various combinations, but the more enduring flint has remained in various distinct conditions, each of which seems to indicate some partial breaking up of the great chalk quarry—the trophies won by a successful invasion—the wrecks left after some great storm. Thus we have the green coated flints lying at the base of the Reading sands, which evidently have hardly been stirred since they were first torn from their chalk matrix. Above these we find large masses of highly rounded flint pebbles, which form the base of the London clay, and above the London clay numerous extensive accumulations of coarse chalk flint gravel and silicious sands.

It remains only to notice the occurrence of mammalian remains in these beds. In the pit from which these implements were taken we procured a few small and indistinct fragments of bone, and Mr. Prestwich, in his former visit, obtained part of an elephant's tooth, and some teeth of the horse, probably of an extinct species. At St. Roch (distant from St. Acheul about a mile) we obtained two very fine and perfect hippopotamus's tusks. These were discovered a few days before our visit, at a depth of twenty feet from the surface, in a thick bed of gravel, exactly resembling in every respect that of St. Acheul, save only that at St. Roch we did not meet with any flint weapons, and the bed of coarse white sand, with land and fresh water shells, was wanting. Like the flint celts, these tusks appear to have undergone hardly any injury from the contact of the coarse heavy gravel in which they are imbedded, from which circumstance we may conclude that they did not travel together for any lengthened period.

The discovery of these relics of a race which seems to have been of far greater antiquity than any that has been hitherto supposed to have inhabited our planet, involves many interesting and difficult questions. We feel as much at a loss to imagine who those were who were thus contemporary in France with the mammoth and the hippopotamus, as Robinson Crusoe was perplexed by seeing the footprints of his mysterious visitor in the sands of his desert island. Nor is this the only perplexity in which we are involved. How are we to account for the circumstance that no trace of human bones, or of any other work of art has been found associated with these implements; and how has it happened that several hundreds of them have been accumulated in a single gravel pit? These questions, which still remain unsolved, may well deserve the attention of philosophers and naturalists.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

NUMBERING OF THE LODGES.

It would be a very desirable piece of information if some one would communicate the exact times at which the alterations of the numbers of the Lodges have taken place by authority; so that it would be known when such changes took place in the whole body of the Lodges on the registers of the Grand Lodges, both of Antient and Modern Masons; for without a clue of this kind it is almost impossible to trace the antecedents of a Lodge having no records, and yet acknowledged to be of some antiquity, which is the case with the Lodge of—CHRONOLOGUS.

DRS. HEMMING AND OLIVER.

Taking up, by chance, Dr. Oliver's Star in the East, it opened in my hand at page 120, where I read in a note—"It will have been observed by our well instructed brethren, that I have cited the Lectures as they existed before their revision by Dr. Hemming, under the authority, I believe, of the Grand Lodge. Such a revision would depend in a great measure on the personal taste of the brother commissioned to effect the alteration; and it must be confessed that many passages have been retained which are relatively worthless, and others omitted which were highly illustrative and useful. The worthy Doctor indeed had a task imposed on him of no common interest. His path was beset with difficulties; and it is to be feared that a slight feeling of prejudice was one of them, arising out of a circumstance then existing, which was extremely unfavourable to his labours." Was this so? And if so, what was the prejudice, and the circumstances out of which it arose?—VERAX.

SOCIETY OF JOHN.

An old friend of our family lately put into my hand the accompanying curious paper, adding,—"As you are a Freemason this may interest you, take a copy and return it to me again." I did so; and enclose the same for insertion among the Masonic Notes and Queries of the Freemasons' Magazine. The document is as follows:

"S.M.G.D.O.—We, the Elect Masters of the Venerable Society sacred to John, or of the Social Order of Freemasons, Rulers of the Lodges or Tabernacles, constituted at London, Edinburgh, Vienna, Amsterdam, Paris, Lyons, Frankfort, Hamburg, Antwerp, Rotterdam, Madrid, Venice, Ghent, Regiomonte, Brussels, Dantzic, Middleburgh, and in Chapter assembled in the said city of Cologne, in the year, month, and days aforementioned: our Preses being the Master of the Lodge established in this city—a venerable brother, and most learned, prudent, and judicious man, called to preside over these deliberations, by our unanimous vote—Do, by these letters, addressed to all the above-mentioned Lodges—to our brethren present and future, declare, that forasmuch as we have been considering the designs, which in these calamitous times embroiled, by civil dissensions and discord, have been imputed to our forefathers society, and to all the brethren belonging to this Order of Freemasons, or of John, opinions, machinations, secret, as well as openly detected; all which are utterly foreign to us, and to the spirit, design, and precepts of the association. It moreover appears that we, the members of this Order (chiefly because we are bound by those inscrutable secrets of our connection and covenant which are most sacredly kept by us all), in order that we may be more effectually vilified among the uninitiated and profane, and that we may be devoted to public execration, are accused of the crime of reviving the Order of the Templars, and commonly designated by that appellation, as if we had combined and conspired for the purpose of recovering (as members of that Order) its property and possessions, and avenging the death of the last Grand Master who presided over that order on the posterity of the kings and princes who were guilty of the crime, and who were the authors of the extinction of the said Order; as if, with that view, we were exciting schisms in the churches, and disturbances and sedition in the temporal government and dominions; as if we were influenced by hatred and enmity against the Pope, the Chief Pontiff, the Emperor, and all kings; as if obeying no external power, but only the superiors and elected of our own association, which is spread throughout the whole world, we executed their secret mandates and clandestine designs, by the private intercourse of correspondence and emissaries; as if, in fine, we admitted none into our mysteries but those who, after being scrutinized and tried by bodily tortures, became bound and devoted to our conclaves: THEREFORE, having all these considerations in view, it hath seemed to us expedient, and even absolutely necessary, to expound the true state and origin of our Order, and to what it tends, as an institute of charity itself, according as these principles are recognized and approved by those who are most versant in the highest Craft, and by masters enlightened in the genuine sciences of the institution, and to give forth to the Lodges or conclaves of our society the principles thus expounded, digested, and organized, as an exemplar authenticated by our signatures, whereby a perpetual record may remain of this our renewed covenant, and the unshaken integrity of our purpose; and also in case, through the daily increasing propensity of the people to animosities, enmity, intolerance, and wars, this our society should hereafter be more and more oppressed, inasmuch as to be unable to maintain its standing and consolidation, and thus be dispersed to some distant regions of the earth; and in case, through lapse of time, the society itself should become less observant of its integrity, purity, and incorruptibility. Nevertheless, in better times and more convenient circumstances, there may remain, if not the whole, yet perhaps one or other of the duplicates of these presents, by which standard the Order, if subverted, may be restored, and if corrupted or estranged from its purpose and designs, may be reformed. For these causes, by these our universal letters, compiled according to the context of the most ancient monuments which are extant, concerning the objects of the institution—the rites and customs of our most ancient order—We, Elect Masters, influenced by the love of the true light, do, by the most solemn sanctions, adjure all fellow-labourers, to whom these presents now or in time hereafter may come, that they withdraw not themselves from the truth contained in this document. Moreover, to the enlightened, as well as to the darker world, whose common safety concerns and strongly interests us, we announce and proclaim.

(A) That the Society of Free Masons, or Order of Brethren attached to the solemnities of St. John, derive not their origin from the Knights Templars, nor from any other order of knights, ecclesiastical or secular, detached or connected with one or more, neither have any or the least communication with them, directly, or through any manner of intermediate tie; that they are more ancient than any order of knights of this description, and existed in Palestine and Greece, as well as in every part of the Roman Empire, long before the Holy Wars, and the times of the expeditions of the above mentioned knights in Palestine.

"That from various monuments of approved authenticity, the fact is to us quite notorious, that this our association took its origin from the time when first, on account of the various sects of the Christian world, a few adepts, distinguished by their life, their moral doctrine, and their sacred interpretation of the Arcanic truths, withdrew themselves from the multitude; for the learned and enlightened men who lived in those times, (the true Christians who were least infected with the errors of Paganism), when they considered that through a corrupt religion, schisms, and not peace, and neither toleration nor charity, but atrocious wars were promulgated, bound themselves by a most solemn oath, in order more effectually to preserve uncontaminated the moral principles of this religion, which are implanted in the mind of man, that to these they would devote themselves; that the true light, arising gradually out of darkness, might proceed to the subduing of superstitions, by the cultivation of every human virtue, and to the establishment of peace and comfort among men. That under these benign auspices the masters of this community are called brethren dedicated to John, following the example and invitation of John the Baptist, precursor of the rising light—first among the martyr stars of the morning.

"That these doctors and scribes, who were also according to the custom of those times called Masters, did, from the most experienced and best of the disciples, collect and choose fellow labourers, whence arose the name of Socius. When others were elected, but not chosen, they were designated, after the manner of the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman philosophers, by the appellation of disciple.

"(B.) That our association now, as formerly, consists of the three degrees of Disciple, Fellow, and Master. The last, or Masters, admitting of Elect Masters and Superior Elect Masters. But that all associations or fraternities so called, who admit of more or other denominations or subdivisions, and who ascribe to themselves another origin, and intermeddling with political and ecclesiastical affairs, make promises and protestations—under whatever titles they may assume, of Freemasons and brethren attached to the solemnities of John, or others which belong not to our Order—are to be expelled from it as schismatics.

"(C.) That among the doctors, Masters of this Order, cultivating the sciences of mathematics, astronomy, and other studies, a mutual interchange of doctrine and light was maintained, which led to the practice of electing, out of those which were already Elect Masters, one in particular who, as excelling the rest, should be venerated as supreme Elect Master or Patriarch. Being known only to the Elect Masters, he was regarded both as the visible and invisible head and chief of our whole association; so that, according to this ordinance, the Supreme Master and Patriarch, though known to very few, yet still exists. The premises being compiled from the mass of parchments and charter of the order itself, committed, by authority of our patrons, with the sacred documents, in future to the charge of our Preses and his successors; and being herewith diligently compared by W. E. Santona, by authority of the same illustrious patriarch, ordain and command as follows:—

"(A.) The government of our society, the mode and rule according to which the flaming light may be imparted and diffused among the illuminated brethren, as well as the profane world, rest entirely with the highest Elect Masters. To them belongs the charge of watching and taking care, lest the members, of whatever rank or order, should attempt any thing contrary to the true principles of our society. Upon the same chiefs of the society are incumbent the defence of the order, the preservation and safeguard of its welfare, which, should occasion require, they are to protect at the expense of their fortunes and the risk of their lives against all who attack our institution, whatsoever and wheresoever this may be done.

"(E.) To us it is by no means clear, that this association of brethren, prior to the year one thousand four hundred and forty, were known by any other denomination than that of Joannite brethren; but at that time we are informed that the fraternity, especially in Valence in Flanders, began to be called by the name of Freemasons, from which period, in some parts of Hanover, hospitals began to be built by the aid and pecuniary assistance of the brethren, for those who laboured under the sacred fire, called 'St. Anthony's evil.'

"(Z.) Although in works of benevolence we pay no regard to religion or country, we however consider it safe and necessary hitherto to receive none into our Order but those who, in the society of the profane and unenlightened, are professedly Christians. In conducting this inquisition and trial of those who apply for the initiation of the first degree, which is that of disciple, no bodily tortures are employed, but only those trials which tend to develop the nature, inclinations, and dispositions of the candidates.

"(H.) To those duties which are commanded and undertaken by a solemn oath, are added those of fidelity and obedience to the secular rulers, lawfully placed over us.

"(O.) The principle on which we act, and all these our efforts, to whatever purpose and direction they may tend, are expressed in these two precepts—'Love and regard all men as brethren and relations,' and, 'Render to God what is God's, and to Caesar what is Caesar's.'

"(I.) The secrets and mysteries which veil our undertakings conduce to this end—that without ostentation we may do good, and without disunion of action, prosecute our designs to the uttermost.

"(K.) We celebrate annually the memory of St. John, the forerunner of Christ, and patron of our community.

"(A.) These, and the rest of the corresponding ceremonies of the institution, though conducted in the meetings of the brethren by signs or speech, or otherwise, do nevertheless differ totally from the rites of the churches.

"(M.) The above is considered a brother of the Joannite society, or a Freemason, who, in a lawful manner, by the help, and under the direction of some Elect Master, with the assistance of at least seven brethren, is initiated into our mysteries, and who is ready to prove his adoption by the signs and tokens which are used by other brethren; but in which signs and words are included those which are in use in the Edinburgh Lodge or tabernacle, and its affiliated Lodges; as also in Hamburg, Rotterdam, and Middleburgh tabernacles, and in that which is found erected at Venice, whose ministrations and labours, though they be ordained after the manner of the Scots, differ not from those which are used by us, in so far as they respect the origin, design, and institution.

"(N.) This, our society, being superintended by one general prince, while the different governments of which it consists are ruled by various superior masters, adapted to various regions and kingdoms, as need requires, nothing is more necessary than a certain conformity among all those who are dispersed throughout the world, as members of one aggregate body; and likewise an intercourse of missionaries and correspondence harmonising with them, and with their doctrines in all places. Wherefore these present letters, testifying the nature and spirit of our society, shall be sent to all and sundry colleges of our order as yet existing. For these reasons above mentioned, nineteen uniform duplicates of letters composed in this form, exactly of the same tenor, confirmed and corroborated by our subscriptions and signatures, are given at Cologne on the Rhine, in the year one thousand five hundred and thirty-five, on the twenty-fourth day of the month of June, according to the era designated Christian.

"Hermanus + Cariton; Jo. Bruce; Fr. V. Upna; Cornelius Banning; De Colligny; Virieux; Johani Schröder; Kofman, 1535; Jacobus Praepositus; A. Nobel; Ignatius de la Terre; Dona Jacob Uittenhove; Falk Nacolus; Va Noot; Phillippus Melancthon; Hugaesen; Wormer Abel.

"Certified in form to the printed exemplar, deposited into the Archives of the Gr. and Sublime Chap. of the Temples Interior, sitting in the East of Namur.

"The Gr. Chancellor of that chief Chap.—DE MARCHOT."

What I should like to know is the amount of reliance that may be attached to the above, and how it comes into a modern English dress, if written at Cologne in 1535?—AMBROSE.—[We have no doubt it was unknown to "Ambrose," as well as to a majority of our readers, that the above document has already appeared in print in Burnes's Sketch of the History of the Knights Templars, 8vo. Edin. 1840, and the copy our correspondent has taken the trouble to furnish is, we believe, a transcript from the one inserted in the appendix of the above work. For the trouble taken by Ambrose we can do no less than offer him our thanks, and in reply to his question we will quote Bro. Burnes, at page 67 of his work, which we hope will carry stronger weight than our own opinion. Speaking of other matters, Bro. Burnes adds:—

"The chevaliers also of the Rosy Cross of Kilwinning in France, own no alliance with Masonic Templary, which they consider a comparatively modern invention; nor do there exist, so far as we know, any authentic records anterior to the Reformation, to prove a connection between the Knights Templars and Freemasons in any part of the world, though we must not omit to mention that a formal document in the Latin language is said to be deposited in a Lodge at Namur on the Meuse, purporting to be a proclamation by the Freemasons of Europe 'of the venerable society sacred to John,' assembled by representatives from London, Edinburgh, Vienna, Amsterdam, Paris, Madrid, Venice, Brussels, and almost every other capital city, at Cologne on the Rhine, in 1535; and signed, amongst others, by the famous Melancthon, in which, after declaring that 'to be more effectually vilified [&c. as above], they solemnly affirm that the Freemasons of St. John derive not their origin from the Templars' [&c. as above], all of which would imply, that some sort of connection was understood in those days to exist between certain of the Masonic fraternities and the Knights Templars. A copy of this document was sent to Edinburgh in 1826, by M. de Marchot, an advocate at Nivelles, and a translation of it has been inserted under the attestation of a notary public in the records of the Ancient Lodge of Edinburgh (Mary's Chapel); but we have little faith in German documents on Free Masonry, unless supported by other testimony; and as no historian of the Craft makes the slightest allusion to the Great Convocation of the brethren at Cologne in the sixteenth century, rather than ask the reader to believe it ever took place, we shall presume that M. de Marchot may have been deceived."

[A note here informs the reader that a copy of the translation referred to is inserted in the Appendix, as before alluded to by us, and which is the exact counterpart of the document sent us by "Ambrose."]

BRO. RICHARD DALE.

In one of the panels projecting in the front of the Old Town, Nantwich, is the following inscription—"Richard Dale, Freemason, was the master carpenter in making this buyldinge, Anno Domino 1611." And under the apex of the gable in front is the double triangle. Who was Richard Dale, to what Lodge and Chapter did he belong, and are any of his descendants supporting and enjoying his privileges?

OLD MASONIC FURNITURE.

Allow me to inquire, through the "Notes and Queries" of the Freemasons' Magazine, if any one can tell me where I can meet with old Masonic furniture? By this I do not allude to strictly ancient furniture, but to that which a Lodge may have cast aside, owing to the munificence of its members in providing new, and which could be repaired at a small cost. My object in making this inquiry is to present some such chairs, pedestals, &c., &c., to a new undertaking. Perhaps any brother, or Lodge, knowing of such articles, or having them to dispose of, will kindly address a note to me at your office.—M. D.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

The Shot Gun and Sporting Rifle, and the Dogs, Ponies, Ferrets, &c., used with them in the various kinds of Shooting and Trapping. By STONEHENGE; Author of "British Rural Sports." Numerous engravings. London: Routledge and Co.

WHEN a thorough sportsman like Stonehenge sits down to write a work on a subject of which he is an acknowledged master, we always are apt to expect a very high performance; but in the work before us we have much more than our most sanguine expectations could have led us to imagine. For years we have been extensively acquainted with sporting literature, and in most works which treat of guns and gunnery we have been considerably bored (no pun is intended, gentle reader) by a jumble of half-technical and mechanical instructions of how to take a gun to pieces, clean it, put it together again, with sundry pages of disquisition on the weight, the length and the gauge of the barrel—no doubt all very useful in their way; but to those who love sport and get but a few chances to indulge, we counsel give to seek a respectable gunsmith, have their shooting iron put into working order, and go on their way rejoicing. Now Stonehenge gives us all this information, told in a simple easy way so as to beguile our fancy while imparting knowledge. So also with the horses and dogs. In this part of The Shot-gun and Sporting Rifle we are told a good deal about breeding, stabling, and kenneling; it is done in a way that renders it easy to retain, and not in learned jargon, but helped out by anecdotes of the experience and vicissitudes of the most celebrated amateurs, pointing out their success or failure by means of some quaint saw or happy allusion. Stonehenge is also no mean naturalist, and you have descriptions of plumage, eggs, and species so cleverly introduced that, instead of being tired by such descriptions, they grow upon the reader and make him desirous of an intimacy with so observant and pleasant a companion as our author is. All kinds of game come in for a share of attention, and there is an association, anecdote, or quotation that bears upon each in its turn. Reading of the dotterel, the tale of the voracious feeder who appropriated an entire dish of those dainties which had been provided for a large party, comes strongly to the recollection, and you can picture him resisting the suggestion of his longing vis à vis that he should try a bit of something else with his "No, no, thank you, sir, I'll stick to the little 'uns." In the hints for beginners who are learning to shoot at sparrows from a trap, we are told—"should they (the sparrows) be too quick, put their heads through a hole in a small piece of paper, which will retard their flight;" or, "a very good plan for beginners is, to get a friend to throw a potato or turnip into the air, varying its direction at each throw." There is one very startling assertion made by Stonehenge, viz., "that there are few offices which require more highly developed bodily and mental qualities than that of the man appointed to the task of gamekeeper." This we confess we cannot see in the same light as our author, nor do we think the model coming gamekeeper has yet appeared, but we may be mistaken, and for the honour of that class we hope we are so. Than the chapters on the training of dogs by a well laid system of rewards and punishments, nothing can be more admirable, and we could gather many hints from it which would be extremely applicable to many bipeds. With one general word of commendation we would advise every sportsman to possess himself of this handsome and entertaining volume, assuring our readers that a more genial and comprehensive work than The Shot Gun and Rifle can be found among the literature of the sporting world.

The Thunderstorm. By CHARLES TOMLINSON.

WE hardly know how to class this work, for it is not technical enough to be scientific, nor is it so destitute of magnetic observations to be merely a collection of anecdotes of lightning and thunder. There is no doubt a vast amount of information, of which we are in want, scattered up and down in magazines, newspapers, and the current literature of the times which, if brought into a focus, would do the state some service. Of this latter class we take the Thunderstorm to be an exponent of a large amount of facts and anecdotes relating to lightning. Speculation has long been rife as to the effects on crops in the neighbourhood of telegraphic wires when acted on by electricity, and, without offering any opinion of our own on the point, we shall present our readers with an extract from Mr. Tomlinson's work to show how the wires themselves are affected by an approaching or passing storm. Our author tells us—

"Some curious effects of atmospheric electricity in the United States of America have been communicated by Professor Loomis to the Annalen der Physik und Chemie, which he thinks to be due in great measure to the more abundant display of electrical phenomena in that country than in Europe. The telegraphic wires, he remarks, are very sensitive to an approaching thunderstorm, and they often become highly charged, even when the storm is so distant that neither is the thunder heard nor the lightning seen. Under such circumstances, if one stand in the room of a telegraphic station, and place one hand upon a telegraphic wire, and rest the other on the wire which communicates with the earth, a sharp shock is felt in the arms, and sometimes across the breast. This shock is very painful; although when the two wires are brought within striking distance of each other, only a faint spark is to be seen. But when the thunder-cloud is near, such experiments are dangerous. In such case, a thunder cloud passing over the wires may charge them to such an extent that the electricity may fuse the thin wire of the electro-magnet, and render the magnet itself unserviceable. On some occasions an explosion takes place in the telegraph-room sufficient to fuse thick wires, and to expose the clerks to considerable danger. A weak charge of atmospheric electricity has the same effect on the wires as the current of a voltaic battery; it makes a point in the telegraphic register. If, however, a storm pass over the wires, these points become numerous; and as they show themselves between the points of a telegraphic message, they make the writing indistinct, and often illegible, so that on such occasions the clerks usually suspend their labours."

All of us, more or less, know that many animals are highly charged electrical machines. Even our children know that by stroking puss's fur the wrong way in a dark room, electric sparks are generated, and some few of us have had some severe shocks from the gymnotus electricus, or electric eel, but it was something new to us, and we hope will prove interesting to our readers, to come to the following—

"But some of the most remarkable electrical phenomena are observable in the houses of New York, where the rooms are covered with a thick carpet, and strongly heated by means of a hot-air apparatus. If one move upon such a carpet with a sliding or scraping motion, and then present the knuckle to a metallic conductor, such as the handle of the door, an electric spark, accompanied by a cracking noise, will be perceived. If one goes in this way once or twice quickly along the carpet, the spark may be three quarters of an inch long, very brilliant, and accompanied by a tolerably loud noise. This phenomenon is common to almost every house in New York, where the rooms are covered with a woollen carpet, and are well warmed and dry. Professor Loomis visited a lady in New York, where the phenomenon was exhibited in a marked degree. She made one or two short strides upon the carpet, and then sprang up so as nearly to touch the metalwork of a gas chandelier. As soon as her finger approached within striking distance of the metal, a dazzling spark was seen, accompanied by a noise which might have been heard in the next room through the closed door. When this lady moved across the carpet towards the speaking-tube (which in America takes the place of bells), in order to give a direction to a servant, she received an unpleasant shock in the mouth unless she first touched the tube with her hand, in order to get rid of the electricity with which she was charged. When she went out of the parlour into the next room, and happened accidentally to step on the brass plate upon which the door swung, she received an unpleasant shock. When a visitor called and advanced to shake hands with her, he also received a similar shock; and if a lady advanced to salute her, she received an electric spark on her lips. When her youngest child went across the room to open the door, the shock sometimes made it cry; but the elder children would glide about upon the carpet and then approach each other to exchange sparks by way of sport. These phenomena are so common in New York that they scarcely excite remark. The electricity produced in this way exhibits the usual phenomena of attraction and repulsion, and will ignite inflammable substances, such as ether. If one jump a few times with a sliding sort of motion, and then approach the knuckle to a warm gas-burner (as when the gas has been burning and is extinguished and then turned on again), it is easy to kindle the gas. In all these cases the electricity is excited by the friction of the shoes upon the woollen carpet."

The foregoing is so curious that we would recommend the unusual phenomena to the attention of our more scientific readers, and so we take leave of Mr. Tomlinson and his book on The Thunderstorm.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

SIR DAVID BRISTOL, the Principal of Edinburgh University, has received the following letter from Lord Brougham, in reference to his appointment by the General Council as Chancellor of Edinburgh University:—"I have had the honour of receiving your letter announcing to me the great kindness of the Council of the University, and it is altogether unnecessary for me to express my respectful thanks for the high honour which they have been pleased to bestow on me, or the pride which I have in the enjoyment of it. I only wish it were in my power to show myself worthy of it. All I can hope to do is, by the faithful discharge of the duties imposed, to testify my gratitude for the honour conferred."

The opening meeting of the Geographical Society Session was held on Monday, November 14th, at Burlington House, Sir R. I. Murchison in the chair. Prof. Otto Struve, of St. Petersburg, was elected a corresponding member; Sir E. Brougham, Bart.; the Rev. C. Oakley; Lord H. Scott; H. Duckworth; G. Gammie; C. Marrett, and F. Tagart, Esq., as fellows. The paper read was "Discoveries by the late Expedition in search of Sir John Franklin and Party," by Capt. M'Clintock, R.N.

Professor Tischendorf, the Leipzig scholar, has, on the philological exploration of Asia Minor, originated by the Russian Government, lighted upon a codex, which by him and other competent judges has been acknowledged to be the oldest of the New Testament in existence. The treasure trove was discovered in one of the Sinaitic monasteries. Those who have been fortunate enough to inspect the precious parchment are quite overwhelmed with its importance for the correction of the most mutilated text of holy writ.

At the meeting of the Syro-Egyptian Society on the 8th instant, Archdeacon Raymond in the chair, a paper was read by Dr. Jolowicz, being "An Inquiry into Manetho's Egyptian History; whether it was founded upon Tradition, Written Documents, or the Sculptural Monuments." The author first pointed out the disagreements between Herodotus and Diodorus, and showed from these, as also from their own statements, that these historians built upon simple tradition. The priests did not quote to them any historical documents, or refer them to any writings for further knowledge. Again, when Clemens describes the sacred books of the Egyptians, he does not describe any as historical. Hence Dr. Jolowicz concludes that there were no historical writings in existence; and he further shows, on turning to Manetho's History, that that was drawn directly from the inscriptions on the temple walls. This should make us place great reliance on Manetho's list of kings' names. But the case is otherwise with respect to the history of the invasion of Egypt by the Hyksos, or Shepherd Kings. This Dr. Jolowicz considers was drawn from tradition, like the histories of Herodotus and Diodorus, and entitled to less weight. Mr. Sharpe thought that Dr. Jolowicz had made probable several important points:—1st, that Herodotus and Diodorus were wholly guided by tradition; 2ndly, that Manetho, in his list of kings, was guided by the sculptures on the walls; but in his account of the Shepherd Kings, he relied solely on tradition, as there were no historical books to guide him. Archdeacon Raymond agreed with the view of the subject that Manetho's History was drawn directly from the temple walls. W. H. Black, Esq., believed that as the history had only come to us in fragments, data might yet come to light by which the discrepancies in Egyptian chronology might yet be reconciled.

Professor Dove, of Berlin, has published a pamphlet on the use that may be made of the stereoscope in detecting commercial or literary forgeries. If, says the professor, an original document and a copy of it, be placed together in the instrument, the slightest variations will become instantly apparent. The test is applicable to MSS., lithographs, engravings, printed books, bank notes, and all similar productions. The reflecting stereoscope of Wheatstone is that which Professor Dove recommends for the purpose.

At the meeting of the Chemical Society, on the 8th instant, Dr. E. Smith read a paper "On the Immediate Source of the Carbon excreted by the Lungs." Prof. Bloxam read a paper "On the Crystalline Hydrates of Baryta and Strontia." He showed, in opposition to the statements of most authors, that hydrate of strontia, unlike hydrate of baryta, is decomposed at a red heat.

The Institution of Civil Engineers met on November 15th, G. P. Bidder, Esq., V.P., in the chair; the paper read was "On the Origin, Progress, and Present State of the Government Water Works, Trafalgar-square; with a few facts relating to other wells which have been sunk or bored into the chalk formation," by Mr. C. E. Amos.

In the literary world there is more news than usual, Mr. Skeet announces two works by authors who propose for the first time to make their appearance in the literary arena. Miss Crichton, who came out, we are reminded, on the London stage a few years back, in opera, has since that time been residing in Italy, where a dangerous illness so impaired her vocal powers as to compel her to relinquish her profession. Her work, "Before the Dawn," is intended to illustrate the condition of the people of Italy previously to the recent struggle. Mr. Winwood Reade, a nephew of the celebrated Charles Reade, has written a novel of college life, entitled "Liberty Hall, Oxon."

Mr. H. H. Tilbury, the well-known comedian, writes to the Times that a report is in circulation that he is dead, and that it is untrue. Long live the Bishop of the Haymarket, and may his shadow never grow less!

Mr. Thackeray's circular to the contributors to his forthcoming shilling monthly magazine, though, we believe, intended for the present to be as it is marked, a "private" paper, has found its way into the columns of one of our contemporaries. The new periodical is to be called "The Cornhill Magazine." From the circular we learn that there is "hardly any subject" which will not be treated of in its pages. The magazine will start with the new year. Its staff of contributors already engaged includes Mr. Sala, Mr. Hannay, Mr. Thornbury, Mr. Hollingshead, Mr. Moy Thomas, and other names familiar in the magazines. Its proposed scale of payment to contributors is said to be liberal, in return for a complete renunciation of copyright.

The New York correspondent of the Publishers' Circular says:—"Do you ever see our American Illustrated News, Harper's Weekly? Mr. Charles Dickens's new story, 'A Tale of Two Cities,' is reprinted in it, with illustrations by an American artist, John M'Lenan. The illustrations are exceedingly good, and, in my opinion, interpret the text in a peculiarly characteristic manner. A serious charge is made against an English paper called the Welcome Guest. It seems that the proprietors of that paper, under its recent management, made a bargain to publish George William Curtis's new story, 'Trump,' from advance sheets. The paper published several chapters of the story, and on changing publishers, a few weeks since, at the commencement of the present new series, with more ingenuity than honesty, abruptly brought the story to a conclusion in words written by another person. The real story 'Trump,' by Mr. Curtis, of Nile Notes celebrity, is now in course of publication in this city, and the action of the Welcome Guest has been strongly commented on here."

Mr. Gladstone has been elected by the matriculated students to the important office of Rector of the University of Edinburgh. He had a majority of 116 over his opponent, Lord Neaves, one of the judges of the Court of Session, the numbers for the respective candidates being 643 and 527. The election of Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow took place on Tuesday, when Lord Elgin was chosen by a majority of all the nations, the total numbers being, Elgin, 558; Disraeli, 411.

The total number of residents in Cambridge University during the present term is 1,652, 1,097 of whom reside within college walls) 550 in lodgings, and five in Dr. Humphry's Hostel. The number of matriculations this term was 398, the matriculations in 1858 having been 364.

At the beginning of the year M. Maquet, the author, brought an action before the Civil Tribunal against M. Alexandre Dumas, to have himself declared the co-author of eighteen of the principal works bearing the name of the latter gentleman, and as such entitled to half the sums which they have realized or may realize. But the Tribunal, after hearing what both parties had to say, came to the conclusion that though Maquet had undoubtedly "collaborated" very largely in the works of Dumas, yet that he had voluntarily entered into an engagement not to require his name to be published as one of the authors, and that he had entered into pecuniary arrangements with Dumas which prevented the latter part of his application from being granted.

James Ward, the Paul Potter of the English school, and the oldest of the Royal Academicians, died on Wednesday evening, at the patriarchal age of ninety-one. James Ward (says the Athenaeum), was not only an artist himself, but the centre and representative of a family of artists. He was the brother-in-law of Morland, the father-in-law of Jackson, the father of George Raphael Ward, the engraver, uncle of William Ward, the engraver, and grandfather of Mrs. Edward M. Ward, whose works are among the delights of female artists' genius in our own day. He began life as an engraver, in which profession he obtained a first ra-reputation, and his engravings are still highly valued by connoisseurs. One of his most celebrated prints is after Rembrandt, "Cornelius the Centurion." It was comparatively late in life when he became an academician, as he had taken up the profession of painting when he was verging on middle age. He adopted the profession, in which he established so great a reputation, against the advice of his friends. The success, however, which he gained as an animal painter was signal; he was what we should now call the Landseer of his day; and, in the zenith of his reputation, earned his £50, and sometimes £70 a day by his portraits of horses and bulls. Not content with mere animal painting, and being ambitious to distinguish himself in high historic art, he competed for a large picture of the "Triumph of the Duke of Wellington," painting a vast allegorical work; and carried the day over the heads of Haydon and Hilton. This work is now in Chelsea Hospital, for which institution it was painted. Many of his early works resemble Morland's in their general style; but there was a humour and a touch in them peculiarly his own, the evidence of original and independent genius. Mr. Ward was at all times a most indefatigable student. Up to eighty years of age he always rose at four o'clock in the morning, and was in his study at that time. George the Third was one of his most constant patrons; for this sovereign he painted several works; he was also employed by George the Fourth. For many years past Mr. Ward had lived at Cheshunt, Herts, and up to a few years of his death he came to London regularly once a year at the time of the May exhibitions. The work of his which the public of fifty years ago most admired, and the one which procured for him the general designation of the English Paul Potter, is the marvellous picture of "The Bull," which picture is now the chief attraction of the Crystal Palace picture gallery. A fine specimen of his landscape faculty is the work called "A Scene in Lord de Tabley's Park," now in the Vernon collection. Outside of his artistic works, Mr. Ward was a man of gentle manners, of conspicuous personal accomplishments, and of profound piety. His death was peculiarly simple and tranquil. He died full of honour and fame, and has left behind him the memory of a good artist and a true gentleman.

The death of Collins, the French socialist writer, has created a vacancy in the ranks of the champions of the weak against the strong. Collins was a retired officer of cavalry, who had left the service at an early age, disgusted with the falsehood of the military career, to devote himself exclusively to the search after truth in the great question of the rights and privileges of the working classes. The energy and industry he displayed have left as their record more than forty volumes of manuscript. These are not to be published for some years to come, the times not being ripe for the disclosures he has made therein. An Englishman has borne the expenses of the previous publications issued by Collins, and is left sole legatee of his unpublished works. It is generally thought that he will cause them to appear in English.

The following announcements appear in the Critic:—"At the time of his death, Leigh Hunt was collecting a complete and final edition of his poetical works. The greater portion of them received a finishing touch only a month previously to his death, and it is much to be regretted that he did not live to see the proof-sheets. The literary world, however, will not be disappointed, as his son, Mr. Thornton Hunt, the well-known journalist, has finished the work begun by his father. Mr. Thornton Hunt has also contributed two new chapters to the new edition of his father's autobiography, published this week by Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co.—Mr. J. C. Robinson, the author of 'Whitefriars,' has just completed a new novel, the subject of which is historical. It will not be published before the spring.—Mr. J. Payne Collier, the Shaksperian scholar, has in the press a new and complete edition of the works of Edmund Spenser. The work will be published in the spring, by Messrs. Bell and Daldy, in their 'Aldine Poets.'—Mr. Buckle has nearly ready for publication the second volume of his valuable 'History of Civilisation.' In this volume the mode of arrangement is much superior to that adopted in the previous volume."

FINE ARTS.

THE ART UNION OF GLASGOW.

THE annual selection of paintings, for which the discrimination of the committee of this society is responsible, is now exhibited in London, at the Victoria Cross Gallery of the Egyptian Hall, and will well repay a visit from the connoisseur. The number of the pictures is small—only sixty—but the high character which distinguishes the whole collection is such as to make a morning spent in their examination a truly pleasant task, and justifies completely the peculiar system of the society which prevents the absurd exhibitions of want of taste and ignorance of art which have ere now too frequently characterized the choice of the supporters of similar institutions who have been left to their own unaided judgment.

The success of this Art Union is, to a great extent, due to the principle which it initiated and which has been adopted by the Crystal Palace Art Union and by other associations of the kind all over the country. We may for a moment remind our readers in what this principle consists, and how it differs from the original London society. When, then, the subscriber to the London Art Union is fortunate enough to hold a prize, he is bound to choose the value of that prize (except in the case of statuettes, &c., published by the society) from one of the exhibitions of the current year. Not so in the Glasgow Art Union. The society itself makes a collection of pictures, and the subscriber, instead of gaining a money ticket, as in the London Art Union, to be expended in the galleries already opened, wins a right of choice from the collection previously formed, the value of the prizes depending on the degree of priority which they confer. The consequences of this are that the pictures chosen by the Scotch committee of taste with the advantage of connoisseurship, and with a view to their collective effect, have been generally above the average in quality at the prices, and the exhibition as a whole has become more attractive than its metropolitan precursor. The quality of the works exhibited this year in Piccadilly is decidedly excellent, yet there are few dear pictures. Let therefore those who have little confidence in their own knowledge of the value of pictures, and who would make a safe investment, entrust the thrifty Scot to bargain with their guineas. But the connoisseur would of course prefer to have the power of choosing revert unrestrictedly to himself, and it is needless to add that there will be always a large number of persons who would as soon commission a second person to choose a wife as a picture.

The first in nominal value of the works of art exhibited is undoubtedly the picture of the most artistic excellence, and moreover the subject of it is Scottish, which description will apply to but few of the others. This is The Tod Hunter of Mr. R. Ansdell, to which has been allotted the high prize of £350. The scene is a Highland moor, in the delineation of which the peculiarities of the national scenery have been happily transferred to canvas, and we would especially commend the perspective and atmospheric effect. For the figures we need only say that they well sustain the character of the painter as a depicter of animal life, whose efforts in that walk of art have been excelled perhaps by none but his great countryman, Landseer. The principal figure represents a stalwart Highlander, who stands with a remarkably fine specimen of the genus Reynard slung across his shoulder, which in accordance with the custom of the sister kingdom, has fallen a victim to the rifle of the sportsman, instead of terminating his career in the English orthodox style, with a field of mounted red coats to assist at his funeral obsequies. This hunter is surrounded with gillies and ponies, hounds and terriers, in the drawing and colour of which the truthfulness to nature is equal to the spirit which characterises them. Mr. John Faed, R.S.A., has two works which rank next in importance—these are the Bedouin Arab Exchanging a Slave for Armour (No. 4), and Job (No. 2). The former of these, though not the highest classed, is in our opinion, possessed of the greater merit; the subject (which certainly is not a pleasing one) is admirably handled, and the painting, especially of the arms and drapery—masterly—the whole of the accessories indeed show evidence of great skill and study. The anxiety of the Nubian slave girl is touchingly expressed, and Oriental indifference of the barterers as to her sentiments on the occasion is felicitously shown. The other work, which represents the patriarch brought to the earth in the greatness of his despair, and surrounded by his consolers—though marked by very great ability, is not so truthful in its expression, nor so happy in the general effect produced. The figure of the most patient of men is well conceived, and his attitude is grand in its misery—but the friends who surround him are merely the same fine eastern half-robed figures whom we have seen so often before—without any particular variety of expression in the present instance. The sky too, which is represented as overcast in accordance with the poetical view of the subject, partakes more of the leaden coldness of a Scottish than the lurid heaviness of an Arabian storm. The Picnic (No. 6), by Mr. D. Pasmore, represents a delightful forest scene, with a village church in the distance, and a merry group of revellers in the foreground. This is a capital picture, though not one of high pretension; both the landscape and figures are beautifully executed, and the humorous points presented by the subject, are duly taken advantage of. The Tinkers (R. M. Innes) is characteristic and true to nature; a gipsy family are encamped under a hedge—paterfamilias pretending to do something or other connected with the mystery which has been the specialty of his tribe ever since the days of Tubal Cain—his better but not fairer half is smoking a cutty pipe and generally superintending the gambols of some swarthy offspring who are laudably endeavouring to combine play and mischief in the largest possible degree; while in strong contrast are the figures of a fair skinned innocent servant girl, with her master's little child, who have brought a domestic kitchen utensil for the exercise of the cunning man's skill in repair, and have evidently paid beforehand from the sly and amused expression of the tinker's face; this is a cabinet picture which would do honour to any collection. Another clever work is Jenny's First Love Letter (No. 21), by Mr. J. Craig; the unfortunate document in question has accidentally fallen into the hands of Jenny's father, instead of arriving at its proper destination. Great is the indignation of the worthy man, and tearful Jenny is trying in vain to pacify him—her meek old mother meanwhile, with gentle touch upon his arm, reminds him of her own first letter from himself, and puts a better construction on the motives of the writer, than her husband does; the incident is well told, and the drawing powerful. Undine, by Mr. F. Wyburd, is a pretty painting of a lovely girl and a handsome cavalier; but hardly deserving of the high rank which has been assigned to it by the committee as fifth in order of merit—it is theatrical and wanting in imagination. The Low Tide of Mr. G. E. Hicks is a neat genre picture, representing the landing of a comely mother with her brood of babies—after a pleasant sail at Dover or Broadstairs—in the arms of the stalwart boatmen, while in the distance the nursemaid, who is left last on board, seems not at all inclined to hurry over the transit in the arms of a sailor whose face expresses his admiration and delight at the task. The pleasant English summer day, with the white cliffs and the sparkling sea, are prettily enough rendered, and the figures show vigour and good taste. Of Mr. E. A. Goodall's Venetian views, we must speak in terms of high praise; they possess great brilliancy of colour and breadth of handling—in one a flood of sunshine is thrown upon the scene in a style which will remind the spectator not a little of Turner in his happiest mood, of which great master, as well as of the equally great Claude, Mr. Goodall has been by no means an idle or unobservant student. Mr. J. B. Pyne contributes a Venetian scene of still higher merit—in which the beauty of the perspective is remarkable, and the colouring, though more subdued in tone than Mr. Goodall's (close to which it hangs), is beautifully harmonious. Mr. G. Earl, whose bits of Irish character are so generally admired, has treated the national subject of Blarney (No. 31) in his merriest vein, but withal gives to it a dash of sentiment which prevents its being liable to the charge of vulgarity. Among the minor works we may notice two excellent landscapes by Mr. G. Hering, a View in Arran, and a composition, Evening in Greece; Mr. R. H. Rae's picture of a royal sea eagle, called The Marauding Chief, has great power; while Messrs. J. C. Ward, A. Gilbert, A. Hayes, A.R.H.A., Niemann, and Miss M. Nasmyth, have all contributed pictures of great merit, though perhaps of less importance. On the whole the subscribers and committee must be congratulated upon the success of their plan, which has resulted in an exhibition quite equal to the preceding ones, and which does great credit to their judgment and liberality; it will no doubt produce a large crop of new members, and yet more valuable works of art.

The engraving which the Art Union of Glasgow has this year presented to its members is a very elaborate and vigorous production. It is the well known "Punch" of Mr. Webster, R.A., which has been excellently copied in the work of Mr. Henry Lemon, a young engraver, but one who is undoubtedly possessed of great artistic power. In this picture—one of Webster's best—the artist has caught, with admirable truth, the stir and bustle which the visit of the universal favourite produces among the population of an English village which has been suddenly awakened by the arrival of the showman; and the painting divides its force between the rural calm of the landscape generally and the diversified excitement which the arrival has called forth. Mr. Webster has rarely been more successful than in the various groups he has here assembled, the individual being quite as striking as the governing expression. From the old man to the infant—from the schoolboy to the maid—from the lonely widow waiting for the waggon, to the pompous footman at the park gate who surveys the whole affair with a most benignant air of tolerance—every face is well discriminated, and every gesture well contrasted. But—admitting all his merits, it must be owned that Mr. Webster owes not a little to his transcriber. The engraving is a perfect copy of the original, and only requires the effect of colour to be as perfect a picture. The foreground of the engraving is extraordinary for the truthful effect produced by the "cross hatching," which renders the chiaro oscuro in a surprising manner. The work indeed is marked by the happiest balance of effects; every object takes its place as distinctly and firmly as in nature; the lights are bright, clear and sharp, and the shadows transparent. Altogether the Council must be congratulated upon the production of a very admirable work, which will add to the already established reputation of the engraver.

The drawing for prizes will take place in the course of the ensuing month.

Poetry.

THE APPRENTICE.

[From the American Masonic Journal.]

WHEN quite a young man I was left in the dark,
And wanted to alter my station;
I went to a friend, who proved in the end
A Free and an Accepted Mason.
At the door he knocked, which was quickly unlocked,
When he bid me to put a good face on,
And not be afraid, for I should be made
A Free and an Accepted Mason.
My wishes were crowned, and a Master I found
Who made a most solemn oration;
Then showed me the light, and gave me the right
Sign, token, and word of a Mason.
How great my amaze, when I first saw the blaze;
And how struck with the mystic occasion!
Astonished I found, that though free, I was bound
To a Free and an Accepted Mason.
When clothed in white, I took ever delight
In the work of this noble vocation;
And knowledge I gained, when the Lodge he explained,
Of a Free and an Accepted Mason.
I was bound it appears for seven long years,
Which to me is of trifling duration;
With freedom I serve, and strain every nerve,
To acquit myself like a Mason.
With hearty good will, let's show our best skill;
To our Master pay due veneration;
Who taught us the art that we ne'er will inpart,
Unless to an Accepted Mason.

THE BACHELOR.

BY THE REV. W. BARNES.

No! I don't begrudge him his life,
Nor his gold, nor his houses, nor lands;
Take all on't and give me my wife,
A wife's be the cheapest of hands.
Lie alone; sigh alone; die alone;
Then be forgot,
No! I be content wi' my lot.
Ah, where are the fingers so fair
To pat one so soft on the face!
To mend every stitch that do tear,
And keep every button in place.
Crack-a-tore! brack-a-tore! back-a-tore!
Buttons all fled,
For want of a wife with her thread.
Ah, where is the sweet pretty head
That do nod till he's gone out of sight!
And where the white arms are outspread
To show him he's welcome at night?
Dine alone, pine alone, whine alone,
Oh what a life!
I'll have a friend in a wife.
And when from a meeting of mirth
Each husband does lead home his wife,
Then he does slink home to his hearth
With his arm hanging down his cold side.
Slinken on, blinken on, thinken on,
Gloomy and glum;
Nothing but dullness to come.
And when he unlocks his own door
It rumbles as hollow 's a drum,
And the fairies that hide round the floor
Do grin to see him look so glum.
Keep alone, sleep alone, weep alone;
There let him bide,
I'll have a wife at my side.

But when he's laid on his bed
In a sickness, oh, what will he do!
For the hands that will lift up his head
And shake up his pillow anew.
Ills to come, pills to come, bills to come!
No soul to share
The trials the poor wretch must bear.

THE SLANTING LIGHT OF FALL.

BY THE REV. W. BARNES.

AH! Jane, my maid, I stood to you
When you were christened, small and light,
With tiny arms all red and blue
A hanging in your robe of white:
We brought you to the hallowed stone
For Christ to take you for his own,
When harvest work was all adone
And time brought round October's sun,
The slanting light of fall.

And I can mind the wind was rough,
And gathered clouds, but brought no storms;
And you were nestled warm enough
Within your smiling mother's arms.
The windlen grass did quiver light
Among the stubble, faded white,
And if at times the sunlight broke—
Upon the ground or on the folk—
'Twas slanting light of fall.

And when we brought you through the door
Of Knopton Church, a child of grace,
There clustered round almost a score
Of folks to see your tiny face:
And there we all did feel so proud
To see an opening in the cloud,
And then a stream of light break through
A shining brightly down on you,
The slanting light of fall.

But now your time is come to stand
In church, a blushing at my side,
The while a bridegroom from my hand
Hath took you for his faithful bride.
Your Christian name we gave you here,
When fall did cool the wasting year,
And now again we brought you through
The doorway with your surname new
In slanting light of fall.

And so far, Jane, your life is fair,
And God has been your steadfast friend,
And may you have more joy than care
For ever, till your journey's end.
And I have watched you on with pride,
But now I soon must leave your side,
For you have still life's springtide sun,
But my life, Jane, is now outrun
To slanting light of fall.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

MASONIC CHARITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In my last letter upon this subject, it appears that (though unwittingly) I claimed more credit for the provinces of Worcestershire and Warwickshire than I ought to have done. The voting fifty guineas to each of the Masonic charities, thereby making the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master a life governor and vice-president, did not, I find, originate with Worcestershire but with Staffordshire; and thus Worcestershire should stand No. 2 and Warwickshire No. 3 upon the list. This information has been conveyed to me in a note from my esteemed brother, John Burton, M.D., P.M. No. 706, and P. Prov. S.G.W. for Staffordshire, and as he wished me to inform you of this fact, I will allow him to do so in his own words. He says:—

"The vice-president life subscription scheme was proposed and agreed to at the Provincial Grand Lodge of Stafford, held at Burslem three years ago, and I myself proposed the plan of a life policy for the amount subscribed in order to set aside an objection taken on the ground of human-tality defeating the scheme, and losing the money; and I further proposed the doctrine (to satisfy the scruples of some brother who thought that we should have to buy a life presidency for every successive Prov. G.M.) that we had only to make up our minds to the annual payment of the premium in order to secure the return of the principal on each life as it lapsed, and so keep up a perpetual fund."

Bro. Burton must feel pleased to see this scheme of his adopted so warmly and unanimously by the two neighbouring provinces (in both of which he is so well known), and it affords me like pleasure to be able to give honour where honour is due.

Again I say I hope to see other Provincial Grand Lodges following in the footsteps of Staffordshire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire. I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

W. WIGGINTON,
Prov. G.A.D.C. for Worcestershire.

Dudley, Nov. 14th, 1859.

FREEMASONS' HALLS IN IRELAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—Permit me, through the medium of your very useful Magazine, to call the attention of the Craft generally to an enterprise which has recently started in a secluded town in Ireland, a notice of which I have seen in a late number of the Eagle newspaper. The enterprise to which I allude is the endeavour to raise funds for the purpose of erecting a Masonic hall by Lodge No. 15, of Skibbereen, county Cork. Now, sir, I am informed, perhaps wrongly, that there is not a Masonic hall in all Ireland; therefore, should the brethren of No. 15 succeed in its attempt, it may be looked upon as a Masonic phenomenon, and the credit due to this devoted few would be universally acknowledged, especially emanating from such a remote and humble locality; and really they deserve the support and good will of all Masons, whithersoever dispersed around the globe, for their endeavour to erect a temple worthy of our ancient Order. Probably it will afford you pleasure to learn that it is taken up by the first men of the district in the list of directors published in the Skibbereen Eagle, fully testifying, I am satisfied, that if this hall is erected it will be the signal for the erection of similar buildings throughout Ireland, thereby conferring an everlasting benefit to the Craft generally, but more particularly to your Irish brethren; therefore, I say, let us all as brothers stretch out a helping hand to this aspiring Lodge, and perhaps the time may not be distant when Lodge No. 15 would be in a position to return the aid now received tenfold to some other energetic brothers of the mystic tie. The very fact of this Lodge taking the initiative in this matter recommends it to the kind consideration of every true Mason; and I can assure you a more zealous and persevering set of brethren never sat in open Lodge than those of No. 15. In fact, they have Masonry at heart, and it is their zeal alone that impels them to the course they have taken. Trusting you will think the foregoing worthy a place in your excellent Magazine. I remain, yours fraternally,

A MASTER MASON, BUT NOT A MEMBER OF LODGE No. 15.
Skibbereen, County Cork, Nov. 21st, 1859.

MASONRY IN LIVERPOOL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—I wish to call the attention of the Liverpool brethren, through you, to the fact that last week a person, unknown to the writer, called upon a newly initiated brother and offered for a sovereign to give all the signs, tokens, and secrets of the second and third degrees. Although the offer was not accepted, he gave him the token of the second and third degrees, as well as some other information connected with those degrees. The name of this person ought to be obtained and exposed.

Yours fraternally,
J. B. R.

PULPIT QUAINTESS.—A story of a quiet pulpit rebuke is traditional in the "east nook of Fife," and told of a seceding minister, Mr. Shirra, a man well remembered by some of the older generation for many excellent, and some eccentric qualities. An officer of a volunteer corps on duty in the place, and very proud of his fresh uniform, had come to Mr. Shirra's church, and walked about as if looking for a seat, but in fact to show off his dress, which he saw was attracting attention from some of the less grave members of the congregation. He came to his place, however, rather quickly, on Mr. Shirra quietly remonstrating, "O man, will ye sit down, and we'll see your new breeks when the kirk's done." This same Mr. Shirra was well known from his quaint, and, as it were, parenthetical comments which he introduced in his reading of scripture, as, for example, on reading from the 116th Psalm, "I said in my heart all men are liars," he quietly observed, "Indeed, David, an' ye had been i' this parish, ye might hae said it at your leasure."—Dean Ramsay.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

THE Annual Festival of the Emulation Lodge of Instruction will take place on Friday evening, December 9th, when our esteemed Bro. John Savage, S.G.D., will preside; and the ceremony of consecration will be worked by Bro. S. B. Wilson, P.G.D. Lodge will be opened at seven o'clock.

WE have the pleasure to announce that our R.W. Bro. Lord Leigh, Prov. Grand Master for Warwickshire, has kindly consented to take the chair at the festival to be held for the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Masons and their Widows, in January next. Between thirty and forty brethren have already signified their intention of acting as stewards on the occasion, and from the popularity of the noble Lord a most successful result may be looked for.

THE Board of Benevolence, on Wednesday, granted £198 in relief to eighteen petitioners.

METROPOLITAN.

GRAND LODGE.

At the meeting of the Board of Masters, on Wednesday, the report of the Board of General Purposes was presented. After mentioning one or two cases of Masonic complaints which have been brought before the board, it alludes to the spurious Lodges, and directs attention to the circular lately issued from the Grand Secretary's office relative to them. Application having been made to the Board of General Purposes relative to loans from Grand Lodge to assist in erecting Masonic halls in the country, the board was of opinion that it would be a legitimate application of the Grand Lodge funds to advance them for the purposes of Masonic halls or rooms in the country upon proper security. The Board having had various memorials before them, praying that county brethren may be allowed to vote in Grand Lodge by proxy, are of opinion, that it is not desirable to sanction such voting; that it being not only inconvenient but inexpedient, for brethren to have their names put in nomination for boards without their authority, the board recommend that in future all nominations be made in writing, with the name of the person nominating, and the proper description of the brother nominated. Several errors being known to exist in the calendar through the Lodges not making proper returns as to alterations of the towns and places of meeting, the board have issued a circular to the various Lodges, asking for information on the subject.

The report of the Colonial Board states that the memorial from Victoria, relative to a further reduction of fees on registration, having been referred back to them by the Grand Lodge in March last, for further consideration, the Colonial Board caused a friendly communication to be made to the Prov. Grand Lodge of Victoria, pointing out that they had been reduced as low as they could consistently be made—and that a Prov. Grand Lodge of Victoria had been held, and a resolution carried, approving of the reply, and withdrawing the memorial, accompanied by a declaration, that the Masonic body of that colony are devotedly attached to the mother Grand Lodge of England—a statement which the board felt assured Grand Lodge will receive with great satisfaction.

Bro. George Barrett gave notice of a motion to vote £50 from the funds of Grand Lodge for the purpose of supplying the inmates of the Asylum at Croydon with coals.

LODGE OF PRUDENT BRETHREN (No. 169).—The last meeting of the brethren of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Tuesday last, November 22nd, Bro. Charles Hart, W.M., presiding, supported by a numerous muster of the brethren. Bro. Pegus was raised to the third degree by Bro. Blackburn, P.M. Bro. Boyd, S.W., was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing year, and other formal business having been gone through, the brethren adjourned to supper. In the course of the evening Bros. Hart, Graygoose, Morbey, and Exell delighted the company by their excellent singing, and Bro. MacNalley, No. 206, acknowledged the toast of the visitors.

CONFIDENCE LODGE (No. 228).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, November 14th, at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street. Bro. Robert Brewer, W.M., presided. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed. Bro. Robbins having answered the usual questions, the Lodge was opened in the second degree, when he passed in due form. The Lodge being resumed to the first degree, Messrs. Blake and Stocker were duly initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry by the W.M. with his usual ability. The Lodge then proceeded to the election of W.M. for the ensuing year, and the votes being unanimous, Bro. Johnston, S.W., was elected to that office. The next business was the election of a Treasurer to supply the place of their late much respected Bro. Dunning, and the ballot was unanimous in favour of Bro. Jackson, P.M., who returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him. The brethren then adjourned to dinner, which was served in Bro. Clemow's usual style. After the banquet, the customary loyal toasts having been disposed of, the W.M. proposed their newly initiated brethren, to which toast both brothers responded. Bro. Rogers, P.M., gave "The health of the W.M." for which the W.M. briefly returned thanks. Bro. Stock, of the Emulation Lodge, No. 21, responded to the toast of "The Visitors," and dwelt on the absolute necessity of great care being exercised by the brethren in the recommendation of candidates for admission into the noble and ancient Order of Freemasonry. Bros. Pryer and Hart (both from America) calling the attention of the initiates to the moral teaching of the Craft. The P.M.'s of the Lodge were then given, to which Bro. Rogers and Jackson replied in suitable terms. Some other toasts were given, and the evening was spent in the most complete harmony and good will.

INSTRUCTION.

PERCY LODGE (No. 234).—This flourishing Lodge, which is well known for its good working, met on Saturday evening, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane. Bro. Gilchrist (of the Albion Lodge, No. 9), presided, assisted by Bros. Boyle (of the Domestic Lodge, No. 206), S.W.; and Warren (of the Panmure Lodge, No. 1022), J.W. The Lodge having been opened in the first degree, the W.M. performed the ceremony of instruction, Bro. Swinnoch being the candidate. The W.M. then proceeded with the lectures, the first being worked by the W.M.; the second by Bro. J. R. Warren; the third by the W.M.; the fourth by Bro. Brewer; and the fifth by Bro. H. Thompson. Four brethren were then admitted as joining members of the Lodge. It was announced that the fifteen sections will be worked in this Lodge on the second Saturday in December, on which occasion Bro. J. R. Warren will preside.

PROVINCIAL.

DEVONSHIRE.

STONEHOUSE.—Lodge of Sincerity (No. 224).—At the last regular meeting of this Lodge, held at St. George's Hall, Bro. Rodd, W.M., in the chair, supported by Bros. Hunt, P.M.; Lord Graves, S.W.; Knowling, J.W.; Spence Bate, Sec.; Barton, pro tem., S.D.; Rae, J.D.; Walker, I.G.; Risk, Chaplain; Russell, P.M.; Cave, W.M., No. 122; Dowse, P.M.; Dix, Cater, Hawker, Batten, Kadri Bey; and the following visiting brethren—Marks, No. 247; Vowel, No. 728 (Ireland); Wallace, No. 2 (Scotland); Peters, No. 122; Samuels, No. 270; Kamey, No. 238; Barton, No. 288; Woolf, No. 271, the minutes having been confirmed, it was resolved that a book should be provided for members and visitors to write their names in previous to their entering the Lodge. Bros. Watson, formerly initiated in this Lodge; Tate, Apollo Lodge, Oxford; Owen, "Indefatigable," Swansea, were elected as joining members. Mr. Stephen Walter Raines, and Joseph Harcourt Bellew, having been duly elected and properly prepared, were admitted and initiated into the secrets and mysteries of Freemasonry. The working tools were explained by Bro. Lord Graves, S.W.; and the charge delivered by Bro. Knowling, J.W. The newly initiated brethren having withdrawn, and the Lodge passed to the second degree, Bro. Batten was admitted, properly prepared, and passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. The working tools having been explained by the J.W., and the charge delivered by the W.M., the Lodge then closed down to the first degree, when Bro. Heath was proposed by the Secretary, and seconded by the J.W., as a joining member. The W.M., seconded by the Secretary, gave notice of motion that "it is desirable that Masons being members of the Grand Lodge of England, residing more than eighty miles from London, shall be entitled to vote in Grand Lodge by proxy, on questions affecting the general interests of the Craft." Bro. Kadri Bey having been recalled by his government, asked for his clearing off certificate, as he was about to proceed to Constantinople. Bro. Kadri, who is a zealous Mason, during the time that he was in the Lodge, having gained the esteem of all who knew him, it was determined by the brethren present that the W.M. should invite him to a banquet previous to his departure.

The members of this Lodge accordingly met on Monday last at a dinner, at the Prince George Hotel, in honour of Bro. Kadri Bey. A number of the brethren of the Lodge were present, together with a few visitors. After the usual Masonic toasts, Bro. Rodd, W.M., proposed the health of Bro. Kadri. He said that Bro. Kadri was well known to the members of the Lodge of Sincerity, in which he was initiated into Masonry; and he considered it a matter of congratulation to himself personally that he had been the proposer of so worthy a Mason. It was now eighteen months since Bro. Kadri had become a Mason, and during that time he had been a constant attendant at the Lodge, and had in every way carried out in his private career the tenets inculcated in Masonry. Bro. Kadri had been sent by the Government of Turkey to England, to carry out certain arrangements, which he had completed with credit to himself and advantage to his country. 'He was therefore about to return to his family and friends, and would take with him a strong zeal for Masonry, which he was very desirous of encouraging in the Ottoman Empire, and the good wishes and fraternal regards of his brother Masons in this country. The Worshipful Master then called upon Bro. Hunt, P.M., to read a memorial, which had been written on vellum, for presentation to Bro. Kadri, and signed by the members of the Lodge.

"To Bro. Col. Kadri Bey, of the Imperial Service of Turkey, a Master Mason of the Lodge of Sincerity, No. 224 in the register of the Grand Lodge of England, Royal Arch Mason of the Chapter of Sincerity, and a Mark Master Mason of the Lodge of Sincerity, No. 35 in the register of the Grand Lodge of England and Wales, and the colonies and possessions of the British crown.

"Worthy and esteemed Bro. Kadri—We, officers and members of the Lodge of Sincerity, Chapter of Sincerity, and Mark Masters' Lodge of Sincerity, having heard of your expected departure for Constantinople, entertaining a high sense of the excellence of your Masonic and personal character during your sojourn amongst us, desire to express to you our fraternal regard for you as a Brother Freemason, and our esteem for you as a man. Our acquaintance with you as an earnest and zealous brother has induced us more warmly than ever to appreciate the universal character of our ancient Order, which most truly 'is the centre of union between good men and true, and the happy means of conciliating friendship amongst those who must otherwise have remained at a perpetual distance.' In saying farewell, Bro. Kadri, believe that most sincerely do we wish you well. That the Most High may continue to overshadow with his protection and blessing wherever you may be, and render your life a pleasure to yourself and of advantage to others, is the fraternal and hearty desire, worthy and esteemed brother, of your brethren in the bonds of Freemasonry."

A short and appropriate speech by Bro. Hunt, testifying to the worthiness of the brother who received, and of the sincerity of the feelings of those who presented, the testimonial, was received with loud applause. Bro. Cave, W.M., of the Lodge of Fortitude, No. 122, said he was quite certain that many of the members of the Lodge over which he had the honour to preside, if they had been aware of the intended proceedings, would have been present on that day to do honour to a brother who had very often attended their Lodge, and had won the esteem of the brethren. Bro. Kadri, in a few words, returned thanks for the unexpected honour which had been conferred upon him, but which, on that account, was not the less appreciated by him. He begged to thank them all for their present kindness, as well as for that which he had universally received since he had been in England. Bro. Spence Bate proposed "Success to Masonry in Turkey." He thought this toast one that was very appropriate to the present occasion, when they were met together to do honour to a brother who was not only a zealous Mason but was about to return to his native country where Masonry at this present time was at a very low ebb, and where it was Bro. Kadri's desire not only to inculcate the principles of Freemasonry, but also to increase the number of brethren. The speaker believed that he was correct when he said that there were only two Lodges in Turkey, one in Constantinople, the other in Smyrna; and it was not very long since that they had been cautioned against the one established in the latter city, as a spurious innovation. It was therefore very desirous under those circumstances, that brethren holding from regularly constituted Lodges, should use their influence to prevent any irregular Masonry from taking root, which must be detrimental to the universality of the Craft. In trying to encourage Masonry in Turkey, they were not only cementing the alliance between the two countries, but were giving them some return for the advantages which the Christian had received from the Mahomedan. The historical studies of their school days told them of the great wars and fights that occurred between the two religions; but often historians, while they told them of their prowess and conquests, unwisely kept them in the dark as to the merits of their enemies, and it was not so universally known as it ought to be than many of their common benefits came to them from the Mussulmans. The Mahomedans were a warlike race of men; they soon spread their conquests throughout the north of Africa; they then crossed over into Europe at the ancient Calpe, which had ever after retained the name of one of their generals, Gibel-Tarik (the Rock of Tarik), now known as Gibraltar. Here their victorious arms subjugated the whole of Spain, where they founded the dynasty of the Omiades, and had it not been for the bloody battles of Poitiers and Narbonne, gained by the renowned Charles Martel, it was not impossible but that they might in this country have been wearing the turban. At that time the Mahomedans were the acknowledged protectors of learning, and at their colleges many Christians sought instruction. It was from them that they obtained the knowledge of making paper and gunpowder, the science of agriculture, and the art of navigation and manufactures. Their carpets, their embroidery of gold and silver cloth, their silk, leather, and steel maintained for years a celebrity and perfection unknown amongst the other nations of Europe. It was from them they procured the knowledge of the use of the present musical characters. And in architecture, the excellence of the Alhambra was a standing wonder of their skill. Christian nations having been so much indebted to Mahomedans for so many benefits, it should be a matter of congratulation to them if they could repay it back by encouraging that union of the men of all nations inculcated in doctrines of Freemasonry. The speaker then proposed "Success to Masonry in Turkey;" which having been drunk, the Worshipful Master proposed the "The Health of the Visiting Brethren," which was briefly responded to by Brother Vowel, of the Dublin City Militia. The meeting broke up about ten o'clock.

DURHAM.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT GATESHEAD.

ON Monday, the 14th of November, the Provincial Grand Lodge was held in the rooms of the Lodge of Industry, No. 56, and Borough Lodge, No. 614, Gateshead, under the presidency of the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, Bro. John Fawcett.

The meeting was well attended by the brethren of the province, who assembled in the committee room at half-past twelve o'clock, under the presidency of the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Henry Fenwick, M.P., to receive the various petitions for relief.

At two o'clock the Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in due form with solemn prayer. The R.W. Prov. Grand Master was assisted by the Provincial Grand Officers, two only being absent, and they had written to the R.W. Prov. Grand Master explaining the cause.

A deputation from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Northumberland was then admitted and saluted, consisting of the representative of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Benjamin Thompson, Prov. G. Sec.; J. S. Challoner, P. Prov. S.G.W.; J. Weatherhead, Prov. S.G.W.; John Barker, Prov. G. Treas.; H. Hotham, Prov. J.G.W.; Septimus Bell, Prov. S.G.D.; J. B. Franklin, P. Prov. S.G.D.; J. P. Ludwig, Prov. G. Reg.; A. Gillespie, Prov. G.S.B.; R. J. Banning, Prov. G. Steward; J. Legge, Prov. G. Steward.

The minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge being read and confirmed, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master called the attention of the brethren to several communications he had received, which were duly discussed, and he expressed his views, which were kindly received and duly appreciated.

The roll of Lodges was then called, and the Worshipful Master of each Lodge gave a satisfactory account, which was very gratifying and proved that Masonry was increasing under the able rule of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master and his deputy.

The R.W. Prov. Grand Master, after stating that it was his intention to confer as many honours as lay in his power amongst the distinguished Masons within the province, believing that it would be to the advantage of the Craft proceeded to invest the following officers:—Bro. Henry Fenwick, M.P., D. Prov. G.M.; J. Williamson, Prov. S.G.W.; E. D. Davies, Prov. J.G.W.; Rev. — De Pledge, Prov. G. Chaplain; George Smith Anson, Prov. G. Reg.; Rev. — Cunliffe, Prov. G. Treas.; W. H. Crooks, Prov. G. Sec.; C. J. Banister, Prov. S.G.D.; Mark Douglas, Prov. J.G.D.; Middlemas, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; Gillies, Prov. G. Sword Bearer; Heslop, Prov. G. Purs.; Laws, Prov. G. Tyler; and six Grand Stewards.

The Prov. Grand Lodge was then closed in ancient form with solemn prayer.

At four o'clock nearly one hundred brethren dined at Bro. Love's, the Queen's Head Hotel. At the conclusion the R.W. Prov. Grand Master gave the health of "Her Majesty the Queen," which was drunk with enthusiasm. The rest of the loyal and Masonic toasts followed, when the R.W. Prov. Grand Master's health was proposed; the brethren received it as they always do, with the greatest enthusiasm; like honour was done to the Deputy, the Present and Past Grand Officers, and the different Lodges of the province, which were responded to with true Masonic spirit.

The last toast being given, brought the festival to a close, and the brethren separated at nine o'clock.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—St. Hilda's Lodge (No. 292).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, the 14th inst., Bro. Oliver, W.M., presiding, supported by Bros. Forster, Toshach, Ridley, Hewison, and Tulloch, P.M.s; Hinde, S.W.; Buckland, J.W.; and the other officers. After a ballot had been taken, and three gentlemen initiated by the W.M., the brethren proceeded to ballot for W.M. for the ensuing year, when the choice of the brethren unanimously elected Bro. J. Hinde, S.W. Bro. J. D. Leslie was re-elected Treasurer, and Bro. J. Denchar appointed Tyler. Three brethren were nominated to audit the accounts for the year. The Lodge afterwards adjourned to refreshment, when the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and duly responded to. After some other business the Lodge was closed in due form.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

DURSLEY.—St. John's Lodge (1,096).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Tuesday evening, the 15th inst., at the Old Bell Hotel. Bro. Rev. G. A. M. Little, W.M.; Bro. C. Partridge, S.W.; Bro. W. Heseltine, J.W. The Lodge was duly opened in the first degree, and the minutes read and confirmed. A circular of Grand Lodge, respecting certain spurious Lodges in London and elsewhere, of the so called "Reformed Order of Memphis," was also read, and ordered to be entered. The Lodge was then opened in the second degree, and Bros. W. P. Want and Rev. T. Boggis passed. Afterwards the Lodge was closed in harmony, and the brethren retired to refreshment, and spent a very pleasant evening.

ISLE OF MAN.

PEEL.—Lodge of St. Germans (I. C.)—A Lodge of Instruction was held on the 27th October, when the W.M. worked the first section, and the brethren were practised in opening and closing the Lodge. On the 2nd November a Lodge of emergency was held, when Bro. France being in attendance, and wishing to be passed to the second degree, was examined by the W.M., Bro. Willis, received a test of merit, and the Lodge being opened in the second degree, was then passed to the degree of Fellow Craft by the W.M., who explained the working tools, and gave the charge in that degree. The Lodge was then closed in the second, and opened in the first degree, when Bro. J. Bannister, P.M., W.M., No. 56, P.G. S.W., &c., gave the lecture on the tracing board in that degree. A vote of thanks to Bro. Bannister was then proposed by the W.M., and being carried unanimously, was ordered to be recorded in the minute book. The Lodge was then closed by the W.M. in peace, love, and harmony, at half-past nine o'clock, P.M.

LANCASHIRE (WEST).

LIVERPOOL.—Lodge of Ancient Union (No. 245).—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge took place on Thursday week, at the Masonic Temple, Hope-street. It has long been remarked, and not without some considerable amount of truth, that this Lodge is the best conducted and most perfect in its working of any Lodge in the province. In its finances it certainly possesses the merit of being the most opulent in West Lancashire, as well as having the regular attendance and active support of several of its Past Masters. The only business of the evening was the initiation of Mr. Robert J. Ellis, which was efficiently performed by Bro. C. Bromley, W.M., after which the brethren adjourned to refreshment, supplied by the keeper of the Temple. At the conclusion of the repast the Worshipful Master gave "The Queen," "Prince Albert, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family," which were warmly received. The Worshipful Master then said the next was the first Masonic toast of the evening, which he always felt great pleasure in introducing, it was "The health of the M.W. Grand Master the Earl of Zetland." He trusted he would long be spared to preside over them, to exercise those truly Masonic qualities which he so eminently possessed, and was always admired for. (Cheers). Bro. T. Clark, P.M., gave "The R.W. Deputy Grand Master, Lord Panmure," amid great applause. The Senior Warden, in proposing the health of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master Bro. Le Gendre N. Starkie, said he regretted the bodily infirmities of their worthy brother prevented him from taking the active part which he formerly did in the business of the province. The Junior Warden said he felt proud in being entrusted with the next toast, that of "The health of the D. Prov. Grand Master, Sir Thomas G. Hesketh, Bart.," who had always shown a large amount of interest in the affairs of the province, and had devoted a great deal of time to the business connected with the county. He was sure there was no province in the country where they could boast of a more devoted and attentive Grand Master than Sir Thomas Hesketh, Bart. (Cheers). Bro. R. Wearing, P.M., proposed "The health of the Worshipful Master," with Masonic honours. Bro. Bromley, W.M., said it was pleasing to him to witness the manner in which his health had been drunk. Although it was the last time he should occupy that chair, it would ever afford him pleasure in being connected with Lodge No. 245; and it would be long before he would cease to be connected with it. The Worshipful Master afterwards gave "The health of Bro. Clark, P.M., Bro. Wearing, P.M., and the Officers of the Lodge," which were severally responded to. Before separating Bro. Wearing, P.M., wished to call the attention of the brethren to the suggestion proposed by the members of Lodge No. 294, to have a full length portrait, to be placed in that hall, of their much valued and respected Bro. Walmsley, Prov. G. Treasurer, who was the originator and founder of the West Lancashire Masonic Institution for the education and advancement in life of children of distressed Masons. He was certain no brother acquainted with the claims of Bro. Walmsley would refuse to subscribe to the testimonial, and mark their sense of his services on their behalf, and their appreciation of a life devoted to their interests. The subscription list was limited to 5s. each. After a number of the brethren had added their names to the list of contributors the Lodge closed in harmony.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.—Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge (No. 1081).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge took place at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 14th instant. Among those present were—Bro. Bowley, P.M., No. 907, as W.M.; Rd. Warner, S.W.; T. H. Bobart, J.W.; H. T. Bobart, Sec.; J. Redfern, S.D.; S. Love, as I.G.; J. Goodman, F. Hamp, Bithrey, &c. The Lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the last Lodge read and confirmed. Bro. C. T. Hawkins, of the Alfred Lodge, No. 425, Oxford, was balloted for and approved as a joining member. Bro. Goodman was examined in the questions appertaining to the first degree. The Lodge having been opened in the second degree, Bro. Goodman was passed. The Lodge was then closed in the second degree. The W.M. directed the attention of the Lodge to a circular from the Board of General Purposes, respecting a spurious Lodge at Stratford, called "The Reformed Masonic Order of Memphis." The Lodge was then closed according to ancient custom, and adjourned.

WARWICKSHIRE.

WARWICK.—Shakespeare Lodge (No. 356).—The members of this old Lodge assembled for their customary meeting on Tuesday, the 8th instant, at the Warwick Arms Hotel. Lodge was opened at seven o'clock by the W.M., Bro. Manohie, assisted by his officers. A brother was then examined as to his proficiency in the first degree, and the answer being satisfactory he was duly passed, the ceremony being well and impressively performed by the Worshipful Master, who also gave the beautiful explanation of the second tracing board. The W.M. having been unanimously re-elected Master for the ensuing year, and the installation fixed for Thursday, December the 29th, the minutes of the former meeting were read by the Secretary, the Rev. Bro. Dickinson, Prov. G. Chaplain. Lodge was then closed in due form and with solemn prayer, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment. The visitors present were Bros. W. Russell, P.M. No. 556, and W. Wigginton, S.W. No. 819, and Prov. G. Asst. Dir. of Cers. for Worcestershire. The usual loyal and leading Masonic toasts having been drunk, the S.W. pro tem., Bro. G. T. Robinson proposed, by permission, "The R.W. Prov. Grand Master for Worcester, Bro. Henry Charles Vernon, and the Officers of his Prov. Grand Lodge," one of whom (the Prov. Asst. G. Dir. of Cers.), was present. He spoke in the highest terms of the reputation of Bro. Vernon as a skilful working Mason, and of the care and attention bestowed by him upon the several Lodges in his province. Bro. Wigginton, Prov. G. Asst. Dir. of Cers. for Worcestershire, replied to the toast, and stated that his own experience fully proved that the high eulogium passed upon Bro. Vernon was deserved. As a mark of respect to the head of a neighbouring province he highly valued the propositions, and he was sure that it would be very pleasing to the principal personage referred to. He then proposed the health of the Worshipful Master in eulogistic terms, alluding to the able manner in which the ceremonies were performed, and to the few examples met with where the Worshipful Master went through the lectures, &c., as well as that portion of the ceremony which naturally devolved upon the chair. He congratulated the Lodge upon having so excellent a Worshipful Master, and gave, with his health, "Prosperity to the Shakespeare Lodge." Bro. Manohie, in returning thanks, expressed his delight that "Prosperity to the Shakespeare Lodge" had been coupled with his name. The success of his Lodge was a matter very dear to him, and he should always use his utmost endeavours to promote its prosperity. To "The Visitors," Bro. Russell replied.

ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

CONSECRATION OF THE ST. JAMES'S UNION CHAPTER, NO. 211.

THIS important event took place on Tuesday last in the Temple of Freemasons Hall. For a considerable period it has been looked forward to with interest, from the deservedly high position Comp. Gorton—the individual on whom it chiefly rested—is held, both by his Companions in Arch Masonry and his brethren of the Craft.

Everything being in readiness, the following were the Companions present whose names we could obtain:—Comps. Spencer, No. 3; Farnfield, No. 5; S. B. Wilson, No. 7; J. W. Adams, H. Carpenter, Blackburn, Kirby, No. 25; Cant, W. H. Andrew, Cooper, No. 49; T. A. Adams, Joseph Smith, G. Parst, and Buss, No. 206, P.Z. Figg, No. 3; Kennedy, No. 11; Allen, No. 25; George Gorton, No. 11; Copus, No. 49; R. M. Smith, No. 778; J. Harrison, No. 25; H. Norman, No. 49; Suter, No. 206; Cosens, No. 778; Lambert, No. 7; Brett, No. 206; Emmens, Murray, Barnshaw, No. 25; V. Levinson, Queely, Collard, Platt, No. 49; Matthew Cooke, No. 206; Boucher, Quelch, No. 218; Snow, No. 338; and Garrod, No. 745, besides several others.

Some disappointment was felt at the absence of Comp. John Savage, who was to have consecrated the Chapter, but had been compelled to leave town hurriedly, in consequence of a death in his family. Comp. Blackburn was prevailed on to open the Chapter, and when he had done so of course he was in charge of the whole of the proceedings.

The Chapter was opened by Comps. Blackburn as Z., Allen as H., and T. A. Adams as J.; Comp. Matthew Cooke took his seat at the harmonium. Comp. Blackburn then addressed the Chapter, explaining the absence of Comp. Savage, and stating that the Principals had determined to do their best, though in want of the necessary preparation.

The imposing ceremonies of constitution and consecration were then proceeded with, Comp. Matthew Cooke performing the appropriate music. The installation of Comps. Gorton as M.E.Z., Stacey as H., and Woodstock as J., was performed by Comp. T. A. Adams with that precision for which he is so well known. None of the three Principals had been in the chairs previously.

After this ceremony, the Companions below this rank were again admitted to the Chapter, and Comps. Gorton, Stacey, and Woodstock commenced to exalt the following brethren—Bro. Cockcraft, S.W., No. 166; H. Robinson; D. Pinder, No. 211; Newall, No. 25; Hoskins, No. 168; T. Simpson; T. W. Sedgwick, I.G.; F. F. Smith; C. Jackson, Sec.; G. W. C. Dean; W. H. Roberts; H. Hart; G. Gill, J.W.; W. Luce, W.M.; C. Annoot, all of No. 211; Donald W. King, P.M., (the eminent tenor); O. Kloop, No. 211; the Principals performing their duties admirably. Comps. Platt (of No. 49), Carruthers, and another, were also elected joining members.

The M.E.Z. then appointed and invested the following Companions—Simpson, Treas.; Walkley, E.; Sedgwick, N.; Cockcraft, P. Soj.; Jackson and Smith, Assist. Sojs.; Gill, D. of Cers.; Newall, Asst. D. of Cers.; W. H. Roberts, Steward; and Matthew Cooke, Org.

The Chapter was then closed in due form, and the Companions adjourned to refreshment in the Hall. The very chaste and elegant appearance of the furniture and appointments, supplied by Comp. Platt, and reflect great credit on his taste and judgment.

After dinner the M.E.Z., Comp. Gurton, proposed "The Queen," and added, such love was paid her by every subject, and by none more heartily than by Royal Arch Companions, that where he might fail, the Companions would, from their stock of loyalty, make up his deficiency.

In proposing the health of the M.E.G.Z., Comp. Gurton alluded to the great favour that had been granted to the St. James's Union Chapter, in being allowed to open, which he hoped that every Companion would bear in mind; and that the Grand Chapter had so kindly acceded to their request. Returning to the toast in question, he had the honour to propose the health of "The Earl of Zetland." He believed his lordship would find that he had no more loyal companions than those of the St. James's Union Chapter. (Applause.)

The M. E. Z. then gave, "Lord Panmure, and the rest of the Grand Officers of the Supreme Grand Chapter;" and, after paying a handsome compliment to his lordship, said he was happy to see several members of Grand Chapter present—Comps. S. B. Wilson, T. A. Adams, Farnfield, and Joseph Smith.

Comp. S. B. Wilson briefly returned thanks.

Comp. Joseph Smith said,—It gave him great pleasure to be at the first meeting of the St. James's Union Chapter; because, as one that had signed and supported the petition, it afforded him an opportunity of expressing to the M. E. Z. his delight at seeing him the First Principal of a new Chapter, which he hoped might long flourish; for under such an able Principal as Comp. Gurton, he felt sure that the Companions could do no less than learn their duties—not only those duties which were confined to the ritual of the degree, but those higher duties which their M. E. Z. knew so well how to perform—those duties of charity, of which he was so able a representative. If he might advise the Companions, he would say that their First Principal had been steward to all charities, and he hoped they would each follow in the same path. All who knew Comp. Stacey pronounced him a Mason with a Mason's heart. Of Comp. Woodstock he did not know much, but if, as we are told, you are to judge of a man by the company he keeps, then their J. must be, no doubt, a zealous and worthy Companion. He begged to propose "Health, long life, and prosperity to the three Principals of the St. James's Union Chapter."

The M.E.Z. said that his bashfulness was well known—however much they might laugh. His name had been very kindly brought into prominent notice by Comp. Smith, who he thought had flattered him a little, yet he had always believed that Masonry was something more than a name—that it contained certain principles—and he had endeavoured to carry out his convictions. When he was elected Master of a Lodge he believed he had obtained all, but he had that day found something more pure, holy, and beneficent, and he hoped that he should always be enabled to support these new principles—not that they were new to him, but that they were brought out in more forcible colours. His connection with the charities had been alluded to, and he stood there delighted to say he was proud of those charities, and he always thought that when the brethren and companions were enjoying their festivities their hands were more open to assist and their hearts more ready to answer the appeal of those who needed their aid. He was one of the first to become a founder of the St. James's Union Chapter (hear, hear), and he should be one of the first to inculcate the duty of the Chapter to support the charities in equal proportions (hear, hear).

Comp. Stacey, H., said he was grateful for the good opinion that had been expressed by Comp. Smith. He thought it might be interesting to give a short history of the Chapter. The desirability of forming a new chapter there could be no doubt of, and opposed as it was at first, their M.E.Z. had no idea of relinquishing the project, nor could it be any way regarded but as a complete success, seeing that they had exalted no less than eighteen brethren upon the first day, an event he was inclined to think unparalleled in Arch Masonry. Such being the history of the Chapter he would now revert to the personal matter, and begged to assure all those who heard him, of his endeavours to merit the eulogium that had been passed upon him, and if he found it impossible to act up to the full measure of that character which had been ascribed to him, yet he would promise that he would not recede one inch from his present position, or in any way bring reproach on the office to which he had been appointed.

Comp. Woodstock, J., had but very little to say except to return thanks for the very kind way in which his name had been received; and as a very young Mason he could do no other than acknowledge the deep obligation he was under to their M.E.Z., and he would strive to do his duty so as not to disgrace the partiality shown him.

The next toast was that of "The Visitors," the M.E.Z. remarking that they were favoured with the presence of several whose company was in itself an honour. Foremost amongst these was Comp. Farnfield, a name widely known and most deservedly held in the deepest respect, as well for his upright and Masonic virtues as at all times for the readiness with which he has assisted every one seeking information. There were also Comps. Blackburn and T. A. Adams. Without the aid of the former their Chapter must have remained unconsecrated, and without the assistance of the latter he (the M.E.Z.) would have been unable to have taken his chair on this occasion. But not only was he indebted to Comp. Adams for installing him, but he owed him much for the valuable lesson he had received from him. There was also Comp. Smith, P.M., of the Crystal Palace Lodge; Comp. Cant, one of the oldest in the Order;

Comp. Buss; and Comp. Figg. Then there were Comps. Hewlett, Col-lard, and Levinson, to whom he was under much obligation.

Comp. Farnfield, in a brief address, stated his readiness at all times to render any assistance in his power to those who sought it; and he was only too happy to further the views of Royal Arch Masonry, for he was a great admirer of Royal Arch Masonry. In his own name, and in the names of the other visitors, he begged to return the Principals and Companions thanks for the honour they had done them.

Comp. T. A. Adams also replied, to the effect, that he had been called upon to consecrate, and should have been most happy to have done so, but he wanted some little preparation before undertaking it; yet he had installed to the best of his ability, and it was always a pleasure to him to assist in any way—his great aim being to do his duty.

The M.E.Z. proposed "The healths of Comps. T. A. Adams and Blackburn." They would have been placed in an unavoidable dilemma by Comp. John Savage being called away to the bed of death, (with whose affliction he felt sure every Companion would sympathize), had it not been for the very kind manner in which Comp. Blackburn came forward with such great credit to himself. He felt he should be wanting in courtesy if he did not tender them the most handsome expression of thanks he could convey, and call upon the Companions of the Chapter to drink their healths.

Comp. Blackburn said he certainly did not expect this toast, for an apology was due from him in attempting to extemporise a consecration, and he did feel bound to offer them as an apology, the fact that he had never seen a Chapter consecrated, and intended some day to have a consecration of his own. He was in the habit of going to church, but should not have been more surprised than he was, when asked to consecrate the Chapter, if he should be called upon to preach. He must confess that he gave Comp. Adams great credit for the adroit manner by which he got him to open the Chapter, and when he had fairly got him into the corner, he was obliged to go on and perform an extemporary voluntary—no, he could hardly call it a voluntary, for he was fairly caught in the trap. Still what he had done he should be happy to do again if called upon, and was proud to find that his efforts had met with their approval.

The next toast was that of "The officers of the St. James's Union Chapter," and the M.E.Z. could not let the opportunity pass without alluding to the fact that they had exalted that day all the officers of the St. James's Union Lodge. He adverted to Comps. Jackson, Sedgwick, Smith, and Simpson, and hoped that what they were in the Lodge they would be in the Chapter. To Comp. Walkley, their excellent Scribe E., much of the success of the Chapter was owing to his indefatigable zeal and concentrated purpose. In Comp. Cockcraft, S.W. of the St. Thomas's Lodge, and Comp. Newland, they had found two energetic companions, and he had, therefore, the pleasure of proposing the health of the Officers of the St. James's Union Chapter, feeling assured that they had only to be tried, and would not be found wanting.

Comp. Cockcraft, P. Soj, in a very neat and effective speech, returned thanks for the Officers, hoping that when they better understood the principles they had been made acquainted with that day, and were better up in their respective duties, that they would be found conscientiously to adhere to them, and as they gradually appreciated the beauties of Arch Masonry, so they might fill their offices to the advantage of the Chapter, and do credit to the choice of the M.E.Z.

The last toast being given, some Companion, whose name we could not catch, a member of the province of Dorset, returned thanks for the Royal Arch Masons of the whole world.

While the members were taking coffee, Comp. H. G. Warren entered the hall, and the M.E.Z. said he should call upon them to drink one more toast: the health of Comp. Warren, the editor of The Freemason's Magazine. Comp. Warren was an old P.Z., zealous to do good, and under his management the Magazine had been preserved pure and unsullied. While respecting the landmarks of the Order, he had pursued a course of freedom and independence which did him honour; and he should therefore propose "The health of Comp. Warren, and Success to the Freemason's Magazine."

Comp. Warren replied, stating that he could assure the M.E.Z. and Companions that the toast was most unexpected; but he was proud of it as a testimony that his efforts were appreciated. In consequence of the pressure of important business he was unable to join them sooner, or he should have availed himself of the M.E.Z.'s kind invitation. Although absent he knew that the interests of the Magazine had not suffered, for Comps. Matthew Cooke and Walkley were both there taking notes; and to Comp. Cooke he was much indebted as one of the principal and most versatile contributors to the Magazine. As to the fairness of the career marked out by himself, he hoped it would always be, as it always had been, his boast to give impartial and honest reports of all proceedings, and to advocate the best interests of the Craft irrespective of the quarter from which they emanated. As to party, he held that it could not long exist in Freemasonry, the spirit of the institution being opposed to it, and he hoped to see the day, not long distant, when all would re-unite in one desire to do the best for the common weal. Heartily thanking the M.E. and Comps. for the toast they had been pleased to honour him with he begged to return the compliment in drinking their individual healths, and "Prosperity to the St. James's Union Chapter."

Some excellent singing was contributed to the enjoyment of the evening by Comps. Donald King, J. W. Adams, and Matthew Cooke; to the kindness of Bro. Nimmo of the St. James's Union Lodge the Chapter was indebted for the use of a superb grand piano, by Erard, and one of Alexander's harmoniums. Comp. Cooke presided at the piano.

CANADA.

TORONTO.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE CITY JAIL.

THE City Council having determined that the foundation stone of the new City Jail should be laid on October 25th, with Masonic honours, and with all the éclat of a grand public demonstration, invitations were sent to the National Societies, and to all the great public bodies connected with the city, requesting them to take part in the procession.

The Freemasons, of course, were to take the chief part in the ceremonial. The firemen also, as connected with the corporation, were called upon to attend. In addition to these, the members of the bar, the grand jury of the county, the chancellor and senate of the university, the societies of St. George, St. Patrick, and St. Andrew, were also invited, and the citizens generally were requested to come forward upon an occasion in which they naturally felt some interest.

A very splendid programme was accordingly issued, based upon these arrangements, and every effort was made to have it fully carried out.

One o'clock was the hour named for the formation of the procession in front of the City Hall, but it was some time after that before the firemen, who were the first to arrive, made their appearance. They turned out, however, in great strength, and in full dress uniform, and headed by a band; and under the command of Mr. Ashfield, chief engineer of the brigade. The companies were all very fully represented, and in their gay uniforms and with their banners and music they looked the beau idéal of a volunteer fire brigade. Their number on the whole considerably exceeded two hundred. Some little time after they had taken their places the strains of another band announced the approach of the Masonic Lodges, who marched in the accustomed order.

They took their places next to the firemen, and after some little further delay the procession moved on under the direction of the deputy chief of police (Mr. Frederick Robinson), who was the marshal of the day. First came the band, then the fire brigade, by companies, led by the chief engineer; then another band, and then the Freemasons. The members of the corporation, with the mayor, preceded by their officers, took their places next to the Freemasons, and a body of police wound up the procession, which proceeded to the site of the new building, accompanied by numbers of citizens.

[Some of our English readers are perhaps not aware that the "fire companies" in American and Canadian towns are composed of volunteers from the gentlemen and most respectable tradesmen of each locality. They are a very dashing body of young men, conspicuous for their gallantry; and also for their smart uniforms and general demonstrativeness on every public occasion.]

The procession arrived on the ground shortly before three o'clock. A large gallery had been erected for the convenience of the ladies, a goodly number of whom had already arrived on the ground and had taken their seats.

A circle having been formed round the stone, the M.W. Grand Master (Col. Wilson, of Simcoe), the mayor, recorder, members and officers of the council, took their places.

The Mayor, addressing the M.W. Grand Master, said—"I have been requested by the City Council to request that you, sir, as the Grand Master of the Masonic Order, will lay the foundation stone of this noble edifice. I don't desire at the present time to make any further observations. Such observations as I may think necessary will be made after the laying of the stone."

The Grand Master then delivered the following address:—"In compliance with your request I appear here this day in the capacity of Grand Master Mason of Canada, accompanied by my brethren, to lay with appropriate ceremonies the corner stone of this addition to the public edifices of your city.

"From time immemorial it has been the practice to solicit the assistance of the antient and honourable fraternity of Freemasons upon occasions of this kind, and it is to me and my brethren generally at all times, a most pleasing duty promptly to respond to such requests. The building about to be erected upon this spot is necessary for your social security and the happiness of society; we may however reasonably indulge in the hope that the efforts which have been made, and are still earnestly persevered in, to diffuse the blessings of a liberal education among the young and rising generation of this province will eventually prove a practical remedy for checking the increase of crime; and experience has already taught us that it is a wiser and better policy to pay for the instruction of the youth, than for the punishment of the man.

"It also affords me pleasure to observe that while you are engaged in provision for the safe keeping and reformation of criminals, that the interests of humanity, by the providing of a place of refuge for the unfortunate and the destitute, has not been neglected.

"The attention, energy, and public spirit displayed by your predecessors in office in the improvement of this city, entitles them to the strong gratitude of their fellow citizens, and the zeal and ability evinced by you, gentlemen, in the discharge of the important duties entrusted to you by the inhabitants, affords satisfactory evidence of your earnest desire to advance the welfare and increase the fame of the city of Toronto; a city in the prosperity of which we, as Canadians, must ever feel a lively interest, being, as it is, the principal seat of law and learning in this section of the province. May its inhabitants ever be distinguished for their taste and liberality, for their love of order and virtue, and for their devoted loyalty to the sovereign of that great country which we so proudly and so fondly call our own.

"May the Great Architect of the universe bless your efforts and the efforts of all those who are engaged in advancing the great cause of civil and religious liberty throughout the world, and may you continue, through him, to be the honoured instruments of promoting the happiness and welfare of the community entrusted to your charge."

The Grand Chaplain then offered up the following prayer:—"Great Architect of the universe, maker and ruler of all worlds, deign from thy celestial temple, from realms of light and glory, to keep us in all the purposes of our present assembly. We humbly invite thee to give us at this and at all times wisdom in all our doings, strength of mind in all our difficulties, and the beauty of harmony in all our commemorations."

Response by the brethren—"So mote it be."

Grand Master—"As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end."

Brethren—"So mote it be."

The Mayor then (addressing the Grand Master) said—"To enable you, sir, to perform this ceremony, I have the honour now to present you with this very handsome trowel—an instrument used by operative Masons, but used also by speculative, or Free and Accepted Masons, and the meaning and application of which, in a moral and figurative sense, you, as Grand Master, well know."

The trowel, which is constructed of silver, with a maple wood handle, and decorated with Masonic emblems, was manufactured by Bro. Levey, Toronto.

The trowel bore the following inscription:—"Presented to Colonel William Mercer Wilson, M.W. Grand Master of Masons in and throughout Canada, by his worship the Mayor, Adam Wilson, Q.C., and the council of the city of Toronto, on the occasion of laying the corner stone of the City Prison, on the 25th of October, A.D., 1859—A.L., 5859."

The Grand Secretary, Bro. T. B. Harris, of Hamilton, then read the inscription to be deposited in the stone, which was as follows:—"This Corner Stone of a Prison, for the city of Toronto, Canada, was laid by Col. William Mercer Wilson, M.W. Grand Master of Freemasons of Canada, on the 25th of October, A.D., 1859—A.L., 5859, in the 23rd year of the reign of her most gracious majesty Queen Victoria, at the request of his worship the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the city of Toronto. Adam Wilson, Q.C., Mayor."

The mortar having been spread, the stone was lowered with three stops, the band playing the national anthem. Being properly placed, the R.W. Deputy District Grand Master, Bro. Richardson, proved that the stone was properly adjusted by the plumb rule, level, and square, which were successively delivered to him by the officers wearing those jewels.

The Grand Master then gave three knocks on the stone. He afterwards ascended to the top of it, and said—"May this undertaking be conducted and completed by the craftsmen according to the grand plan, in peace, love, and harmony."

The cornucopia and cups, with the corn, wine and oil, were then handed to the Grand Master, who scattered the corn and poured the wine and oil on the stone, with the accustomed ceremonies, the Grand Master saying—"May corn, wine and oil, and all the necessities of life, abound among men throughout the world. May the blessing of the Supreme Grand Architect of the universe be upon this undertaking, and all connected with it. And may the same Providence preside over and preserve it from ruin and decay to the latest posterity."

Some further ceremony having been gone through, the Grand Master called for three cheers for the Queen, which were given with loyal enthusiasm, the M.W. Grand Master himself leading. This closed the proceedings, and the procession being reformed, it returned to the city in the same order in which it had left it.

Refreshment was served in the St. Lawrence Hall at five o'clock. Alderman Matthew C. Cameron presided, and discharged his duties most ably.

The general company included a large proportion of the Masonic fraternity, who had assisted in the laying of the foundation stone; a large number of the aldermen and councilmen of the city; the several members of the Board of School Trustees; the president, vice-presidents, and officers of the St. George's Society; officers and members of the respective fire companies, &c., &c.

The toasts of "The Queen," and "Prince Albert and the rest of the Royal Family," were respectively given, and were drunk with enthusiasm.

In proposing "The Governor General," the chairman said, he believed most sincerely that his excellency had most earnestly endeavoured to discharge the duties cast upon him by his sovereign to the best of his ability. If, however, he had not discharged them to the satisfaction of all, he had only failed to do so for the very reason that every other man would have failed to do so, namely, that it was impossible to please all. He had on every occasion that presented itself advocated the best interests of the country. He had watched over the agricultural interest—he had been the friend of science and art—in short, he had done everything that lay in his power to further and promote the interests of the country, and so had entitled himself to our consider-and respect. Recently, he had suffered a lamentable family bereavement, and he (the chairman) felt sure there was not a man in the room who did not most deeply sympathize with him.

The toast was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm.

"The Army and Navy" was next given, and responded to by Col. Thomson, in a speech, and Col. Duggan by a song.

The chairman called for a bumper for the next toast, and in proposing it adverted to the occasion which had brought the company together, giving a history of the difficulties which had attended the efforts to obtain a suitable jail—difficulties which, however, had at last been overcome, mainly through the exertions—the untiring exertions—of Ald. Tully, the chairman of the Board of Jail Inspectors, whose modesty had prevented him from taking the chair in the absence of the mayor, and through whom we were indebted for the presence of the M.W. Grand Master of the distinguished Masonic fraternity. (Cheers). Col. Wilson had, no doubt, attended at great personal inconvenience, having travelled from Simcoe to be here, and he had attended, no doubt, much to the neglect of his private interests, in order to give éclat to a ceremonial interesting in the highest degree to all. The Grand Master of the Masonic Order was as worthy a man as ever breathed. (Applause). He was a man whose heart was in the right place, and the friend who grasped his hand always found this to be the fact. He had been elected three times successively to his present high position. He had served his country in the army, and he was an esteemed member of the profession of the law. He (the chairman) gave most heartily "The Most Worshipful the Grand Master; long life and happiness to him."

The Grand Master responded briefly, but eloquently, expressing his satisfaction at the manner in which the arrangements for the day's proceedings had been conducted, and his gratification at the cordial and respectful welcome which had been accorded to him. He concluded by giving "The City of Toronto, and the Mayor and Corporation. After some other toasts of local interest, the company broke up."

INDIA.

ROYAL ARCH.

A CONVOCATION of the District Grand Chapter of Bengal and its territories, was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Calcutta, on Monday, the 29th August, 1859; present:—M.E. Comps. J. J. L. Hoff, Dep. Prov. G. Supt. and Z.; F. Jennings, P.G. Prov. H.; J. B. Roberts, P.G. Prov. J.; W. H. Hoff, Prov. G. Scribe E.; T. Jones, P.G. Prov. Sec.; H. Fraser, Prov. G. 1st Asst. Soj.; W. Clark, Prov. G. Treas.; J. G. Llewellyn, P. Prov. G. Reg.; J. W. Brown, Prov. Dir. of Cera.; D. J. Daniel, Prov. G.J.; representatives of Chapters, Hope, No. 126; Holy Zion, No. 551, and others.

The District Grand Chapter was opened in due form and with solemn prayer.

Apologies were made for the absence of E. Comps. G. O. Wray, Prov. G. St. B.; J. E. Clinger, Prov. G. Org.; and J. K. Hamilton, P.J. of Chapter Holy Zion, No. 551.

The minutes of the convocation held on the 19th August, 1858, were read and confirmed.

The Deputy Prov. Grand Superintendent stated that he would not make any alteration in the offices of the District Grand Chapter, at present.

On a motion made by E. Comp. Fraser, seconded by M.E. Comp. Jennings, it was resolved that the thanks of the District Grand Chapter be tendered to E. Comp. Clark, for his services as Treasurer, since the demise of M.E. Comp. Chauncey, in 1855.

It was moved by M.E. Comp. Roberts, and seconded by E. Comp. Llewellyn, that E. Comp. Clark be re-elected to the office of Treasurer. Carried by acclamation.

On motions made and seconded, the following grants were made from the funds of the District Grand Chapter:—

That five hundred rupees be transferred to the District Grand Lodge, in aid of the expense incurred for refitting Freemasons' Hall.

That three hundred rupees be given to the Masonic Fund of Benevolence, as a donation to that fund.

With reference to paragraph thirteen of the report of the District Grand Chapter, held 19th August, 1858, the Deputy Prov. Grand Superintendent submitted the following correspondence with the Grand Scribe E., London, for general information:—

"To W. Gray Clarke, Esq., Grand Scribe E., Supreme Grand Chapter of England, London.

"DEAR SIR AND V.E. COMPANION,—I have the honour to transmit an extract (paragraph thirteen) from the proceedings of a convocation of the District Grand Chapter of Bengal, held on the 19th instant, and to state, for the information of the Supreme Grand Chapter, that, under the circumstances therein stated, I have deemed it absolutely necessary to authorize the exaltation of brethren to the Royal Arch four weeks after receiving the degree of Master Mason, instead of considering that to be the term of probation in cases of emergency only, as directed in the resolution of the Supreme Grand Chapter, communicated in your predecessor's letter to the Deputy Prov. Grand Superintendent, dated 11th May, 1857. As no restrictive rule exists in the Scottish Chapter working in Calcutta, brethren desirous of exaltation to the Royal Arch do not feel disposed to wait twelve months for it, and they naturally take the degree where they can obtain it with facility. Thus, the Chapters working under the Supreme Grand Chapter of England, are deserted, and will ultimately have to be closed, if a remedy be not applied speedily. Under these circumstances, I beg that the peculiar position of the Chapters in Calcutta, where there is no hindrance to Lodges and Chapters under other Constitutions being established, will be taken into the early consideration of the Supreme Grand Council; and that the measure which I have been induced to adopt, in conformity with the representation of the District Grand Chapter, will be confirmed and sanctioned. I have, &c., J. RAMSAY, Prov. Grand Superintendent."

"To Colonel James Ramsay, Provincial Grand Superintendent of Bengal, Calcutta.

"M. E. COMPANION AND DEAR SIR,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th August, inclosing an extract from the proceedings of the District Grand Chapter of Bengal. Your letter unfortunately did not arrive until after the meeting of the General Committee, and consequently could not be laid before the Supreme Grand Chapter at the convocation held on the 4th of this month. The difficulty with which Chapters under your jurisdiction have to contend in being, as it were, brought into competition with Chapters under other Constitutions, will, I feel confident, receive due and prompt attention from the Supreme Grand Chapter. From the printed report of the proceedings of that body, which was forwarded to you in the spring, you will perceive that the subject has already been under discussion, and that the General Committee recommended that the power now in the hands of Grand Superintendents should be extended to the Principals of Chapters, who, under certain circumstances, should be allowed to exalt brethren in four weeks from their taking the Master Mason's degree. The recommendation, it is true, was not adopted at the time the report was made, and is not therefore law; but it will, I believe, be again brought forward, and no doubt some remedy will be proposed. I have, &c., WM. GRAY CLARKE, Grand Scribe E.

Freemasons' Hall, London, 10th Nov., 1859.

The Deputy Provincial Grand Superintendent stated that, with the exception of two Chapters, the other Chapters in the north west provinces which had suffered by the disturbances of 1857, had revived, and were again working; and that a new Chapter had recently been established at Lahore, attached to Lodge No. 1084, and designated the Punjab Chapter.

The Chapters in this province now stand as follows:—No. 126, Hope, Calcutta; *No. 550, Valour with Perseverance, Allahabad; No. 551, Holy Zion, Calcutta; No. 596, Firm Hope, Meerut; *No. 641, Harmony and Fidelity, Cawnpore; No. 673, Dalhousie, Simla; *No. 761, Holy Jerusalem, Agra; No. 823, Umballa, Umballa; No. 852, Border, Peshawur; No. 922, St. John the Baptist, Mussoorie; No. 1084, Punjab, Lahore.

The District Grand Chapter was then closed with prayer, and in due form.

* These Chapters are in abeyance.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—On Monday, being the birthday of the Princess Frederick William of Prussia, the band of the 1st Life Guards serenaded the Princess, at Windsor Castle, early in the morning; and in the evening her Majesty gave a banquet in the Waterloo Chamber, which was followed by an evening party. The Prince of Wales arrived from Oxford on Saturday to do honour to the occasion, and returned to his studies on Tuesday. Among the visitors this week have been the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess and Princess Mary of Cambridge, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, with the Ladies Constance and Alice Villiers, Lord and Lady Raglan, the Lord Steward (Earl of St. Germans) Viscount Sydney, Viscount Valletort, and Lord and Lady Bloomfield. The Phipps is in waiting again. On the 5th proximo, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, and Princess Frederick William of Prussia, with the other members of the Royal family, will leave the Castle for Osborne, and will remain there until the 24th, when her Majesty will return to Windsor for the Christmas holidays. The Haymarket and Olympic Companies performed before the Queen at Windsor on Wednesday. The pieces performed were "The Evil Genius," by Mr. Bayle Bernari, in which the principal characters were represented by Mdlles. Reynolds and Swanborough, and Messrs. Buckstone and Compton; and the comedietta "To Oblige Benson," by Mrs. Stirling and Mr. Robson. About sixty or seventy invitations were issued by the Queen.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor Napoleon, with his glittering court and a host of visitors, is again at Compiègne, holding his state with a magnificence which seems unnecessarily ostentatious in the face of the reports of the badness of trade and discontent at the increase of taxation. War preparations in the French army and navy continue to be pushed forward with the greatest energy; and this, however the national pride may be gratified, must necessarily add to the pressure which is even now but moodily borne. In well-informed circles, the existence of the circular affirmed by the Times to have been issued by the Minister of the Interior to restrain the attacks of the semi-official papers against England is denied. The state of Italy is still the prominent topic in Paris. Garibaldi's resignation is not firmly believed in, while it is thought that, if it have taken place, it is the direct result of imperial interference—that the Emperor of the French requested Victor Emmanuel to dismiss the gallant general, who went to Turin, and placed his resignation in the hands of the king. For the last few days the attacks against England have ceased in the Paris newspapers, and the Constitutionnel confirms the report of the Patrie, with regard to the prosecution of the Ami, for publishing the pseudo letter from the King of Sardinia to the Emperor of the French; it also confirms the statement which appeared in the Patrie—namely, that the Ami de la Religion would be prosecuted for publishing the letter alleged to be from the King of Sardinia to the Emperor of the French, relative to the regency of Prince de Carignan. The Constitutionnel, in an article signed by its chief editor, M. Grandguillot, contains the important news that the declarations of the Cabinet of Turin on the subject of the regency of Buoncompagni are of a nature to make those arrangements possible which have generally been considered as very difficult of execution. It is understood that if M. Buoncompagni exercises the regency it is only for the maintenance of order in Central Italy. Italian interests are in harmony with European interests, in order to reserve for the congress the definitive regulation of the situation of the Italian Peninsula. General Martimprey is expected from Africa, on his way to Paris. His last proclamation, dated Ouchda, 10th inst., announces that the inhabitants of that place had been compelled to pay a ransom in order to avoid the chastisements they had brought upon themselves by their behaviour. The Cadi had been arrested and brought to Tangiers. The military chest of the contingent was respected as belonging to the Emperor of Morocco; with this state France continues to maintain peaceful relations. A corps of observation will remain on the frontiers. The proclamation concludes by stating that illness had reduced the effective of the French expeditionary corps by one fifth, but the soldiers, nevertheless, display moral force, and admirable and unaltered discipline.—That the great powers of Europe will be formally invited to take an active part in the settlement of Italian affairs is now settled; and, although no direct communication has been addressed to Her Majesty's government, Count Persigny has been instructed to arrange with Lord John Russell the basis on which the congress is to be summoned. It is said that the formal invitation will come from France and Austria simultaneously. The Moniteur announces that the plenipotentiaries of France, Austria, and Sardinia, have exchanged at Zurich the ratifications of the treaties of the 10th of November. The letters of invitation to the congress will be sent out from Paris. Prince de Metternich will, it is believed, send out those of Austria.—Victor Emmanuel has refused to yield to the French emperor in the matter of the regency of M. Buoncompagni; and in consequence the emperor has been obliged to give way. It is certain that Austria, through the medium of Prince Metternich, has protested against the nomination of a regent by Piedmont, as such a regency would be contrary to the conditions of the treaties of peace signed at Zurich. It is absurdly said in Paris that England has made representations to the Sardinian government against the regency of Prince de Carignan, and of M. Buoncompagni. Meanwhile General Garibaldi has tendered his resignation to the King of Sardinia, and he is not to return again to Central Italy. At Bologna a manifestation has been attempted on the announcement of Garibaldi's resignation; the number of persons assembled was small, and they were immediately dispersed. On the first symptoms of a manifestation the National Guard placed themselves spontaneously under arms. Since that occurrence the 2nd regiment of the Bolognese brigade has taken the oath to the King of Sardinia, and received its colours. The uniform of the brigade is the same as that of the Piedmontese army. A deputation from Tuscany, consisting of Signor Egalcotti, Signor Coppi, and Signor Febrizzi, sent by the Baron Ricasoli, President of the National Assembly, to protest against the regency of M. Buoncompagni, arrived in Turin last week; the deputation was not received by the King, but Prince de Carignan received them in private audience. Their scruples, whatever they were, have since been removed, and Buoncompagni has entered upon his important charge.—The official Dresden Journal publishes a summary of the votes given by the representative of Saxony in the sitting of the Federal Commission, in which the question of the constitution of Electoral Hesse was brought forward. The same journal announces that the governments of Bavaria, Saxony, Wurtemberg, Electoral Hesse, Hesse Darmstadt, Schwerin, Nassau, Saxe Meiningen, and Saxe Altenburg, will take part in the conferences at Wurzburg. The Minister Baron von Buest will pass through Frankfurt on his way to Wurzburg. This journal also confirms the intelligence that the conferences of the ministers about to take place at Wurzburg, are to take into consideration several questions of federal policy. Austria and Prussia have received official intimation of the above.—From Spain we learn that General Echagne continues to fortify Ceuta. The embarkation of the first Spanish corps d'armée has been completed, and that of the second has commenced, but the bad weather renders the shipment of war material difficult. The organization of the battalions in the Basque provinces is proceeding actively.—The Dagbladet announces that a council of Danish ministers was held this week, at which it was resolved that the president to the cabinet shall tender to the king the resignation of the whole ministry. M. Cettwitt has been summoned by the king.—The Persia arrived on Saturday at Liverpool with New York dates to the 9th inst. The Harper Ferry trials were still attracting considerable attention, and several fresh parties implicated had been arrested. It was stated by one of the counsel in court that a number of important facts connected with the conspiracy were as yet unknown to the public, which when brought forward would lead to several prominent northern abolitionists being brought to the bar of justice. It is ascertained that the Governor of Virginia has no power to pardon a man convicted of treason without the consent of the state legislature. Partial returns of elections in New York indicate the triumph of the Republicans. The same results have probably been attained in New Jersey, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Illinois. Louisiana has gone for the Democrats. San Juan was reported to be perfectly quiet when the San Francisco mail left. The battle at Brownsville, between Mexican bandits and Texan inhabitants, resulted in the defeat of the latter. A company of volunteers was about to leave New Orleans to assist the Texans.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—Cabinet councils have again been frequently held this week, and on Tuesday a deputation of members of the House of Commons and the various Chambers of Commerce, waited on Lord Palmerston, to call attention to the unsatisfactory state of the law of bankruptcy. Lord John Russell had originally prepared a bill, under the auspices of the Social Science Association, which, it was stated by the deputation, agreed generally with the views of commercial men. The premier assured the deputation that a satisfactory arrangement should certainly be made in the next session of parliament, and the Attorney General informed them that he was at present preparing a measure on the subject for the consideration of the cabinet.—Her majesty has conferred the Victoria cross on Lieutenant (now Brevet Major) Samuel Hill Lawrence, Corporal William Oxenham, 32d regiment, and Private William Dowling, 32d regiment, for acts of bravery performed at Lucknow during the late rebellion.—The election for a member for Whitby has taken place; Mr. Thompson obtained 229 votes, and Mr. Chapman 190.—Mr. Sidney Herbert has issued a circular, expressing the determination of the War Office authorities to supply the disembodied regiments of militia with Enfield rifles.—The infantry battalion of the Hon. Artillery Company were yesterday inspected in the Armoury-ground, City-road, by Colonel Lord F. W. Paulett, C.B., in the absence, through indisposition, of Major General Lord Rokeby. The corps were put through a variety of evolutions, all of which they appear to have performed with admirable precision. At the close of the inspection, Lord F. Paulett addressed a few observations to the regiment, in which he complimented them upon their soldierlike bearing, and the high state of discipline to which they had attained. The day being remarkably fine, the public attended in great numbers, and the whole went off with the utmost éclat.—The operative masons have now proposed terms which are likely to lead to a settlement. They offer to resume work on the same terms as before the lock out; the masters to dispense with the declaration; and other terms are offered, amongst which the most important is the submitting to a revision of their trade rules. It were to be wished that other branches of the trade would be similarly reasonable.—An accident of an alarming character, and attended with fatal consequences, occurred at an extensive iron rolling mill, near Wolverhampton, on Friday night. In the course of some alterations it appears that the driving wheel, of several tons weight, flew in pieces, killing one man, injuring many others, and reducing the place to ruins.—At an inquest held by Mr. Humphreys on the body of an old lady who met her death at the Bow station of the North London Railway in getting out of a carriage, the jury expressed an opinion that there was blame attributable to the company's servants.—A carpenter, named Billington, was charged before Mr. Jardine, at Bow-street police court, with mobbing a witness who had been giving evidence at the sessions in a case arising out of the strike. The fellow was remanded, and bail refused.—A "gentleman" was fined £4 at the Westminster police court, yesterday, for smashing windows with stones, at one o'clock in the morning, in Belgravia.—William Perham, a mason, has been heard against a conviction and sentence of two months' imprisonment for intimidation. The evidence formerly given before Mr. Corrie, at Clerkenwell, was recapitulated, and the case ably argued on both sides. In the end the conviction was unanimously confirmed by a full bench, and the applicant was accordingly committed to the House of Correction for two months. Mr. Edwin James afterwards applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a writ of habeas corpus, that the defendant might be brought up and discharged on the ground that the commitment was bad, but the court declined to give an opinion.—At the Court of Bankruptcy a call of thirty shillings per share has been ordered to be made upon the contributories to the Bog Mining Company (limited).—At the opening of the November sessions for Surrey, the chairman congratulated the grand jury on the great decrease of crime in the county.—A ratepayer of the parish of St. Stephens, Coleman-street, was summoned before the magistrate, at Guildhall, yesterday, for refusing to pay the church rate levied by the vestry. As the defendant objected that the rate was applied to other purposes than church repairs, the summons was dismissed.—Mr. Cornwallis, who described himself as a gentleman of fortune, and residing at Calais, was charged before Mr. Selfe, at the Thames police court, with creating a disturbance during divine service in St. George's-in-the-East, on Sunday last. The defendant was taken into custody at the time, but afterwards bailed out. Some discussion took place on points of law, and ultimately it was agreed that Mr. Cornwallis should apologise to the churchwardens, whom he had insulted.—The inquest on the body of William Eaton, said to have died from eating poisonous sausages, was resumed yesterday before Mr. Humphreys, at Kingsland. Dr. Letheby, in reporting on his analysis, said he found the intestines to be in a state of high inflammation, caused by some powerful irritant, and sufficient to account for death. Another adjournment till Monday was ordered.—Earl Cowley has arrived from Paris, and yesterday had an audience of Her Majesty at Windsor Castle. —The delegates appointed by the various metropolitan districts to consider the question of the gas supply of the metropolis, met yesterday in the Marylebone Court House, when the draft of a bill to obtain legislative power to regulate, economise, and improve the gas service of London was considered and approved of. A very able and interesting report, which will well repay attentive perusal, was read by Mr. Samuel Hughes, C.E. Mr. James Beale, the hon. secretary, and promoter of this important public meeting, submitted a petition to Parliament, which he stated was intended for signature and circulation among all the gas consumers of London, announcing at the same time that on the 30th instant an influential deputation on the subject would wait on the Right Hon. Milner Gibson at the Board of Trade.—The Court of Queen's Bench yesterday delivered judgment on the motion made the previous day by Mr. James, for a rule for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of William Perham, on the ground that his conviction under the Combination Act was insufficient. Mr. Justice Hill, having reviewed the evidence in connection with the act in question, said the court was of opinion that the conviction was right, and refused the rule. Perham will, therefore, remain in the House of Correction for the term of the sentence passed on him—viz., two months.—An action for breach of promise of marriage, Harris v. Thomas, was tried in the Court of Exchequer yesterday. The plaintiff was the widow of an innkeeper in Wales, and the defendant was the son of a large landed proprietor, and on his father's death came into £3,000 a year. Wealthy as he was he could neither read nor write. Soon after his father's death he married his cousin, and thus rendered impossible the fulfilment of the promise he had made to the prepossessing widow. The jury gave £1,000 damages. Thomas Brooks, who has been examined at the Mansion House on a charge of forging an order for a cheque book from the London Joint Stock Bank, by means of which he is said to have defrauded many tradesmen, was yesterday committed for trial. A number of the young thieves who infest Covent Garden market have committed a depredation which has brought with it a condign and alarming punishment. It appears that a hamper containing two jars of syrup of belladonna became an object of plunder, and, under the impression that the stuff was Spanish juice, they helped themselves freely to it, upwards of eighteen boys having shared in the booty. The consequence is that a number of them are seriously ill, and there will probably be several deaths.—A dreadful fire took place on Tuesday night in the extensive premises, No. 73, Newgate-street, occupied by several persons engaged in trade, and containing a great deal of valuable property. The fire continued to rage for some hours, and was not extinguished until an advanced hour on Wednesday. Unfortunately the principal sufferers were not insured. Not much activity was apparent in the market for the various securities yesterday; but the dealers were inclined to support prices, and they left off at a further slight fractional advance. Foreign stocks and shares also presented a steady appearance, the latter being maintained through the partial increase in the traffic of the principal lines. The inquiry for money has not experienced much change; but there was rather a better supply in the later hours of the afternoon, the average rate being still quoted about 2½ per cent. The arrival of the royal mail steamer Tasmania, from the West Indies, was announced in the course of business hours with £132,600.

INDIA; CHINA; AND COLONIES.—The Overland Mail has brought us dates from Bombay to the 26th ult., by which we have some more details of the further proceedings in opposition to the Licensing Bill, and an important financial despatch from the Calcutta government. We learn that the merest handful of the discharged European soldiers have consented to accept a bounty for going to China—so small a number, indeed, that the offer of the bounty may be pronounced a total failure. This bounty is £5 a man, but it cannot tempt soldiers who believe they have been badly used, and who want to return. Lord Canning has gone on his expensive north western tour. The expedition to the fortress of Beyt, intended to remove the rebellious Wagheer tribes, seems to have failed in the first assault, but the fortress was afterwards abandoned and possession obtained. Whereupon our men proceeded to plunder the temples, and the Bombay government has been compelled to issue a notification which may have the effect of calming down the excitement which has been necessarily produced among the native populations of India. The execution of Jeyoll Singh, at Lucknow, who was found guilty of murder and treason, has taken place. The Calcutta mail, with dates to the 22nd ult., arrived at Aden on the 9th inst. Only fifty out of one thousand of the discharged Europeans, had engaged for China.—We have telegraphic news from China, by which we learn that the treaty with America has been rudely broken. In Japan affairs remain in an unsettled state. The dollar question has not yet been decided.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts speak favourably of the steady condition of business. Prospects were viewed as generally favourable if peace could be preserved in Europe, the money market being in a satisfactory state, and the disposition to encourage trade having increased. The home departments at Birmingham, Huddersfield, and Manchester, were in a tolerably good situation, and there was some animation among the principal interests, but the export branches were not so thoroughly employed as was desired. At Bradford and Halifax business was not very extensive, though it had gradually improved with the approach of the winter season. In the neighbourhood of Wolverhampton some branches showed a greater amount of business, yet room existed for further development. The report from Nottingham announced a quiet trade in most departments, but especially among the lighter class of fabrics. The Irish accounts have not proved discouraging, the linen trade of Belfast being on the whole satisfactory.—Business in the port of London during the past week has been moderately active, the number of vessels announced inwards at the Custom House as having arrived from foreign ports representing 183. There were 4 from Ireland and 874 colliers. The entries outwards amounted to 98, and the clearances to 87, besides 18 in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been 7 vessels, viz.—2 to Port Phillip, of 2002 tons; 3 to Sydney, of 1858 tons; 1 to Adelaide, of 675 tons; and 1 to New Zealand, of 622 tons.—The report of the Trust and Loan Company of Upper Canada has been issued, preparatory to the meeting to be held on the 30th inst., the dividend proposed to be declared being at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, free of income tax. The net profits for the six months ending 30th September amount to £13,831, which, added to the sum brought forward from March, gives a balance at credit of revenue of £13,960. After the payment of the rate proposed and the appropriation of one-half of surplus profits over 6 per cent. and the usual charge for interest, amounting together to £3268 for the reserve fund, and carrying £250 to the redemption of preliminary expenses, the sum of £455 remains to the credit of the next half-year's account; the reserve fund now represents £23,289.—The report of the African Steam Ship Company for the six months ending the 31st October has been published, preparatory to the half-yearly meeting on the 1st of December. The accounts, after making the usual reserve of 7½ per cent. per annum for depreciation, amounting to £4,393, charging £2,500 to meet the cost of the inter-colonial service, and defraying the expenses of navigating the ships, including insurance and repairs, exhibit to the credit of revenue a balance of £6,914, out of which it is proposed to pay a dividend of 7s. per share, being at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the company's capital, free of income tax.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.—The committee of the Refuge for Shipwrecked Fishermen at Yarmouth are applying to the benevolent for support in the shape of subscriptions to increase its effectiveness. The cost of a building to contain all the required accommodation is estimated at £2,000, of which the sum of £800, besides the site, has been obtained; and we entertain the earnest hope that the appeal of the shipwrecked mariners may not be in vain.—At the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, City, the aggregate number of patients relieved during the week ending November 19th was, medical, 664; surgical, 368; total, 1,032, of which 311 were new cases.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE.—A series of Promenade Concerts is to commence here on Monday next, under the direction of Mr. Manns, of the Crystal Palace. Bro. F. Strange will superintend the refreshments.

LYCEUM.—That esteemed public favourite and excellent actress, Madame Celeste, will open this theatre to-night, with a new drame fantastique, of which report speaks in the highest terms. If taste and good management can command success, Mdme. Celeste will be sure to secure it.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"R. A. R."—1. A candidate may be withdrawn after he has been balloted for and approved. It remains with the Lodge whether the deposit shall be returned. The usual course would be not to do so as it would become a forfeit to the Lodge.

2. A brother can be passed and raised at a Lodge of emergency without his name having been inserted in the circular calling the Lodge.

3. We do not know the publishers in question. It is against the law to print or be possessed of Rituals, all of which are unauthorized.

"P. M."—We have replied by letter.

"FIDELITAS."—We have received an interesting communication under this signature which will appear in our next.

TRINIDAD.—The last West Indian mail has brought us a report of Masonic proceedings in this island, which shall be laid before our readers.

We are compelled, through want of space, to defer some interesting American news till our next publication.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1859.

CLASSICAL THEOLOGY.—VI.

JUPITER AND JULY (CONTINUED).

Nikēphoros is often mentioned in the pages of Livy. By the oracle of Jupiter Nicephorus, Hadrian was assured of his being promoted to the empire; the name signifying the "giver of victory." There is on the Neronianæ monetae, or coinage of Nero, an image of that emperor, sitting on his throne, bearing in his right hand thunder, and in his left hand a spear; the coin bears this superscription, "Jupiter Custos."

Domitian gained the epithet of Nero Calvus; the pair of Neros may be said to be in the safe keeping of a third person, Jupiter Stygius, who some call Pluto, but whose Latin name is "Dis," the king of Hell and Wealth, as Tully writes, because all the "natural powers and faculties of the earth are under his direction, as all things go to the earth and proceed thence;" in which philosophy be it observed we can have no thorough agreement, even though we quote Virgil.*

When victory was on Jupiter's side in his wars against the giants, the goddess of Victory obtained from him this important prerogative for her mother—that no oath should ever be violated with impunity which was sworn among the gods by her name. Any god breaking an asseveration made by Styx the daughter of Oceanus was at once banished from the nectar and table of the gods for a term of a year and nine days. We gather also from either Virgil, Lucian, Plato, Pausanias, or Hesiod in his Theogonia, that it was not unusual for Styx to refuse all office on transporting a soul to Pandemonium. At any rate, Charon takes not all promiscuously who come to him; the souls of the dead, whose bodies are unburied, he will by no persuasion convey over his ferry.

"Centum errant annos, volitant hæc littora circum:"

"A hundred years they wander on the shore,

At length, their penance done, he wafts them o'er."

But be it understood, not before they pay him first his fare, which is at least an obolus. How this antique ferryman, who—

"Looked in years, yet in his years were seen

A youthful vigour and autumnal green—" ever passed over Styx with Nero in his boat, we make a matter of no consideration. Shadows were not allowed to cross the lake unassisted, or by right of toll or freedom. Be this as it may, there is another passage over Phlegethon, whose waves are fire, into which hell's three judges saw Nero fall. It is thus we hear of the messengers of some of his murdered and mangled victims, a cloud of witnesses—the blood which cries from earth to heaven, and from heaven to earth—of his mother, of his wife, of his master, of St. Paul—and of Christians and Jews not a few, and many another to whose screams of dying agony he played his fiddle, while Rome was burning.

Some archæologists have described the tomb of Jupiter as being extant in the Isle of Crete. Jupiter was no doubt a Cretan king, whose mother was called Ops; or, in other words, he was born, or was of the earth; that is, he was made a god, the first god of the Cretans, and therefore called Jupiter and the son of Saturn. He was said to be educated on Mount Ida, in Crete, where he was brought forth; or was found by the Curetes and Corybantes; some say by the nymphs, and others again affirm by Amalthæa, the daughter

* By Jupiter Virgil understood the "soul of the world;" which is not only diffused through all human bodies, but, as it were, through all the parts of the universe:—

"—The heaven's and earth's compacted frame.
The flowing waters and the starry flame,
And both the radiant lights—one common soul
Inspires, and feeds and animates the whole;
This active mind, infused throughout all space, Unites and mingles with the mighty mass."

of Melissus, the sovereign of these places, who, with her sister Melissa, fed him on goat's milk and wild honey. Now here is an evident parallel to Moses being brought up by Pharaoh's daughter. The name of Amalthæa was quite enough too, to give rise to the "Cornus Amalthæa," the ægis and the capra as zodiacal signs, and in like manner the name of Melissa was in itself a sufficient basis on which to ground the fable of her having been the discoverer of honey or its use as a food, and also of herself being turned into a bee. They add, besides, that he gave afterwards the horn of the goat which suckled him to his nurses, with the mystical privilege, that whosoever possessed it should obtain immediately everything they requested or even desired; also that the goat dying of old age was by him restored to life again.

Pharaoh was the general title of the kings of Egypt, and so Jupiter was exclusively synonymous of the honour conferred upon the gods translated into heaven; indeed the name of Jupiter became so honoured, or rather coveted by posterity, that all kings and princes were styled "Joves," and their queens called "Junones," from the name of the deity's wife, which appellations we may interpret, in their primary sense, to mean a god and a goddess. With a still closer regard to historical research, our opinion is that Melissus was either himself the Jupiter of Crete in question, or that the latter married one of the king's daughters and reigned in his father-in-law's stead. At all events this king or Jupiter, according to Eusebius, was contemporary with the patriarch Abraham. It is recorded that the Lord came down to see the city of Babel and the tower "whose top was to reach unto heaven." When Jupiter had heard a report concerning the great wickedness and impiety of men, it is said that he descended from heaven. He entered the residence of Lycaon, king of Arcadia, and announced himself to be a god. We have all heard Sydney Smith's joke about the South Sea islanders who keep a "cold clergyman" on the sideboard. Lycaon, king of Arcadia, was possibly about as well informed as a South Sea savage, and had no more knowledge of a god when he saw one, than that much humbler personage Balaam's ass. But it would appear that the monarchs of those favoured times were not deprived of their anthropophagical prerogative; and to serve up a roasted domestic at a banquet was a little tit-bit of pleasantry quite agreeable to the august palate—in fact a dish fit to set before a stranger, or even a god. Jupiter, however, abhorring the disgusting barbarity of his host, turned on a stream of lightning, which fired his palace, winding up the tableau by transforming Lycaon into an animal of his own name, Lycaon, by which is meant a wolf.

Perhaps before we brought this Jupiter from the skies we ought to have shown how he got there. We have said that Rhea, Idæa, or Ops was his mother; but, more strictly speaking, he was born of a Cretan mother. Thus they say it was he whose father was Cælus, who begot Minerva: this then cannot be the same with the King of Crete. Now the historical meaning of the fable of Europa may be this. It was common among the early ancients, and indeed long after them, to build vessels whose prow or figure head was in the form of some animal or bird: thus we are here reminded of Bellerophon's ship Pegasus, or "Flying Horse," and of the "Ram" of Phryxus and Helle. Jupiter, the King of Crete, in a white vessel, bearing the emblem of a bull, made a descent upon Phœnicia, and carried away the beautiful daughter of King Agenor. This monarch immediately commanded his son, Cadmus, to search everywhere for the ravisher of his sister, the Princess Europa. Cadmus little thought that he should never find her, though by a most unjust sentence his father had banished him for ever, until he should be successful in his pursuit. Wherefore it is said he built the city of Thebes, in Boeotia, which was not far from the mountain Parnassus. It happened whilst his companions went in quest of water they were devoured by a monstrous serpent. To avenge their death he went alone to the encounter, slew the enormous reptile, and struck out its teeth, which, by the advice of Minerva, he planted in the ground. Suddenly, a harvest, so to speak, of armed soldiers sprang up, who, quarrelling among themselves as fast as they arose, cut each other down, until only five were left, by whom, afterwards, the country was populated. Wherever the earth was to be replenished it would almost appear that in ancient fable there always figured a serpent of some kind. Cadmus and his wife eventually took the form of serpents.*

Cadmus is said to have invented sixteen of the letters of the Greek alphabet, $\alpha, \beta, \gamma, \delta, \epsilon, \iota, \kappa, \lambda, \mu, \nu, \omicron, \pi, \rho, \sigma, \tau, \upsilon$, which about the period that the Judges ruled in Israel, he brought out of Phœnicia into Greece. Two hundred and fifty years afterwards, Palamedes added four more letters, ξ, θ, ϕ, χ , that is, during the period of the siege of Troy; although some assert that Epicharmus contrived the characters θ and χ . About six hundred and fifty-six years after the demolition of Troy, Simonides constructed the other four letters, namely, $\eta, \omega, \zeta, \psi$. Cadmus is also said to have been the inventor of brass; he taught the manner of composing in prose, and he was the first among the Greeks who consecrated statues to the honour of the gods. We have said that the invention of letters is likewise attributed to Apollo. We cannot but fairly conclude that the art of writing was known to the Jews before the letters of the Greek alphabet ever organized a syllable, and that hieroglyphical or representative types were in use among the Egyptian, and perhaps with the Chinese, before the time of Joshua the son of Nun. "The angel of the Lord came up from Gilgal;" "Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him." Elicius was one of Jupiter's names, because the "prayers of men may bring him down from heaven;" the learned Etrusci taught that he assisted and obliged all mankind; and upon examining other sacred chronicles we find that we must arrive at an evident and conclusive supposition of one known (omnipotentis Olympi), taught, and general written language, long preceding the deluge.

Eusebius speaks of Jupiter Lapis, who reigned in Crete; this may be in reference to the stone presented to Saturn by his wife Ops. But perhaps after all Cadmus was in truth King of Sidon—a Kadmonite—as his name intimates; which people were perhaps the same with the Hivites, and of the number of those mentioned by Moses, who possessed the mountain Hermon, thence also called Hermonæi. So it came to pass that the wife of Cadmus bore the name of Hermone or Hermiona. The word Heveus, in the Syriac, signifies a serpent: another word in the same language, of a double meaning, occasioned the fable that armed men sprouted forth from the teeth of the subtle beast, and that the servants of Cadmus were converted into serpents. As to the five soldiers who were said to have survived all the rest, the like Syriac word expresses the number "five," and "men ready for battle," according as it may be differently accented. In fact the same letters may stand for both "serpent's teeth," and "brazen spears," which latter will explain for what use Cadmus constructed brass, as it was with shining shields and weapons of this metal that he armed his followers in Greece.

Let us now again glance at the passage over the Jordan. Perhaps there never was a time when the love of the Lord towards his people was more immediately visible, and his anger more hot against Israel, in consequence of their transgressing his covenant in their wanderings, in their turning quickly out of the way which their fathers walked in, after Baalim and Ashtaroth, which otherwise read, mean Jupiter and the moving stars. We mean the planets in their courses, for although we know that all stars have a progressive motion, some of the ancients appear only to have suspected it. Nor could they have done more by their own observations, we may presume, when we take into account those which have been two, three, and five thousand years in performing one revolution round the earth, and others which have never yet made their circuit. But our space is limited, and we must leave this interesting subject, to return to its discussion at an early opportunity.

* This expressed mortal coil was symbolical of their wisdom and ordinary and superlunary immortality.

BASILICA ANGLICANA—IV.

YORK MINSTER.

THE reader needs hardly to be told that the word "minster" is a corruption of the mediæval Latin word monasterium, and that in ancient times, and among all ancient nations, the principal sacred edifices in the course of centuries came to stand for, and to be associated with, the names of the cities or communities which grew up in their vicinity; so we have our Westminster, Kidderminster, Axminster, Leominster, and others too numerous to mention.

The most glorious of all the noble buildings of the middle ages is unquestionably York Minster. It affords to the student a text book of Gothic art. No building, perhaps, combines so elegantly magnitude and elaboration—a rare merit it must be allowed, when we consider the many recent failures that have occurred owing to the excess of ornament. The utilitarian spirit of the age has tended in no small degree to obscure its external beauties, which are imperfectly seen in consequence of the crowd of houses that approach almost to the very walls. Let us, however, glance at its magnificent west front. The first object that strikes us is its window, placed between two lofty towers, and surmounted by a triangular canopy. Immediately underneath is a deeply recessed entrance, exhibiting a series of side columns, supporting arches which become smaller inward, the arch being of the most elegant form of the pointed style also receding in bands which diminish, and divided into two by a pillar supporting two wavy arches. On either side of this doorway are two smaller entrances, characterised by the same architectural features, and in the intermediate spaces are rows of rich niches filled with statues. Above the side doorways are two windows, the lower one exhibiting the triangular canopy, and the other surmounted by a battlemented band, which extends along the whole front, coincident with the commencement of the roof above which rise the two towers, crowned by beautiful pinnacles and edged with angular headed buttresses, between which is a triangular space topped by battlements, pierced with lancet arches, the effect of which is exceedingly imposing. The buttresses on the angles of the towers are richly adorned with canopies, niches, traceries, and crocketings. In the east front is the great window, with its two hundred compartments of stained glass, and bordered beneath with a row of scriptural heads. The south arm of the cross, corresponding with the transept, is distinguished by a number of acutely pointed arches, with slender pillars. The south side of the choir is perhaps unrivalled as a specimen of Gothic art. "The massy columns," says an accomplished writer and architect, "finely decorated with a variety of figures, and terminating in richly ornamented pinnacles—the windows large, and displaying beautiful tracing—the small transept of the choir, with its superb light—and the screen work before the three farthest windows of the upper tier—all concur to render this external part of the structure strikingly beautiful and magnificent."

On the north side, which is less encumbered with buildings than the south, there are three minor entrances, in which the architectural features already described prevail more or less; but the chief and most striking characteristics are five long lancet windows which illustrate very instructively the early pointed style, and to which the good people of York have given the name of the "Five Sisters." Over the centre rises the grand tower to the height of 213 feet, and supported on four pillars of extraordinary massiveness. It appears, however, that this was by no means the altitude of the architect's original design. We learn from Dugdale, who gives the measurements with much apparent exactness, that in the progress of the work fears began to be entertained for the stability of the foundation, so that after much consideration, and with great reluctance, the builder abandoned the contemplated height. The two towers on the west front are 196 feet in height; the whole length of the building east and west, is 524½ feet; that of the transept, north and south, 222 feet. The length of the choir is 157½ feet, and its breadth 46½ feet; in addition to which there is a chapel, formerly dedicated to the Virgin, making a length of 222 feet. The length of the nave is 261 feet; its breadth, including aisles, 109, and its height, 99 feet.

The ancient name of York was Eboracum, and it appears to have been a very early, and to have ultimately grown a very considerable, settlement of the Romans. It was here the Emperor Severus died at the end of the second, or early in the beginning of the third century, and here also died Constantius the father of Constantine the Great, a century later. In the Saxon heptarchy it was the principal town of the Saxon kingdom of Northumberland, which was itself formed by the union of the kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia. It is stated that as early as the second century there was a British king, Lucius, who had even at that early period embraced Christianity and invited over a number of prelates whom he greatly favoured and endowed. Under his auspices it is said the first stone of a building, dedicated to Saint Peter the Prince of the Apostles was laid, the king laying upon the stone a great portion of his wealth. Later inquiries have thrown however some doubt over the existence no less than the piety of this monarch; and much that we hear of him—as well as of the time in which he lived, and even later, down to the end of the fourth century—is alleged to be largely intermixed with fable and falsehood.

Upon the death of Augustine, the apostle of the English, in 605, just eight years after his landing, during which period Christianity had made rapid strides, Pope Gregory commanded that there should be an archbishopric of York. In furtherance of this object, which he had long cherished but to which there seemed insurmountable obstacles—the inhabitants of the north not at all favouring the new religion—the Pope resolved to bring about a political marriage, by which he hoped to facilitate the extended propagation of the Christian religion. One of the earliest converts of Augustine was Ebald, King of Kent, whose example was immediately followed by all his family, and under whom and by whose favour the archbishopric of Canterbury was founded and endowed. Ethelburga, the daughter of Ebald, was induced, after repeated exhortation and commands, to give her hand to Edwin, the powerful but idolatrous monarch of the Northumbrians, and sovereign of the heptarchy. The lady, however, stipulated—thus setting a fashion of which later history furnishes not a few examples, and some of which were followed by very important consequences—that she should be allowed the free exercise of her religion, and that she should be permitted to take with her such ecclesiastics as she chose to form part of her household. Ethelburga, after much difficulty, aided by Paulinus who had been previously consecrated Archbishop of York, persuaded her sovereign lord to allow himself to be baptised, which ceremony was performed with the pomp and circumstance that distinguished Roman ceremonials in those days. On Easter day, 12th of April, A.D. 627, a wooden memorial church was raised on the spot, the same site as that which the present structure occupies. Edwin was shortly afterwards slain in a great battle fought at Hatfield, against Penda, King of Mercia, and Cadwalla, King of Wales; and Ethelburga and Paulinus being obliged to fly, the latter was named shortly afterwards, Bishop of Rochester. Peace being restored, the church was recommenced by Oswald, the successor and cousin of Edwin (the material this time being stone), and was completed by Wilfred, one of those haughty and turbulent prelates who were wont in those days to seize upon the revenues of kings for the aggrandisement of the church, and to crush under fierce anathemas all who should oppose or thwart them in the accomplishment of their ends. The structure was burnt to the ground in 741. Siward, the Dane, who was Earl of Northumberland in the reign of the Confessor, built a church on the same spot, but this was again burnt down in 1070. York was, however, almost utterly destroyed by William the Conqueror, who loaded its inhabitants with reproaches and regarded their city as, to use the words of William of Malmesbury, “a vile nest of sedition.” Indeed scarcely a vestige of the ancient Eborac of the Saxons or Eboracum of the Romans was left. Its metropolitan church and principal buildings were trampled under the iron heel of the Norman. Amongst other treasures that were destroyed by the rapacious conqueror was a famous library, of which the celebrated Alcuin (the preceptor of Charlemagne) speaks both in his poems and letters, and which was known and visited by nearly all the learned of Europe.

But if William was anxious to erase every memorial of Saxon art, he was not less munificent to his followers. Thomas, a canon of Bayeux, in Normandy, was forthwith appointed Archbishop of York, and the new prelate set at once about the restoration of the cathedral church. He rebuilt it on a larger scale, furnished it with a regular chapter, and endowed it with prebends and other dignities. The huge fabric was, however, once more burnt down, in 1187, together with a great portion of the city. Roger Bishopsbridge, the successor of Thomas, recommenced the work, beginning with the choir, but no part of his works remain. It is by no means certain at what period and by what prelates or architects the various parts of the present structure were begun and completed. As near however as can be ascertained from a comparison of the mediæval writers, it would appear that the present south transept was built by Archbishop Walter Gray, between 1220 and 1240. The north transept was begun by the same prelate, but was not completed at his death, the work being carried on by John le Romaine, the treasurer of the cathedral, until 1260. The octagonal chapter house, which is unrivalled, consisting of one magnificent apartment sixty-three feet in diameter, and having a conical roof, was commenced about 1284. The present nave does not appear to have been begun until about the year 1291, by Archbishop John le Romaine, who left its completion to his successor, Archbishop Thoresby, in 1360. The choir was also commenced by this prelate, and was not finished until 1472. Thus, for a period extending over nine centuries, with varying fortunes, sometimes disastrous enough, this noble edifice was in course of construction. Seen towering above the habitations of men, it looks like a colossus. When the moon sails over the silent city at night, its gigantic proportions, its grey edged niches and angles, with the ghost-like statues which fill them, give out a solemn impression, until one is led almost involuntarily to uncover and exclaim, “Surely this place is the house of God.”

Nor less impressive is the view obtained in the full blaze of noon from the western end looking along the interior towards the great window in the eastern end. Before and beside you extend seven pier arches, lancet shaped, fifty feet in height, surmounted by triforium and clerestory windows, having below them an open screen, with trefoiled heads, crocketed pediments, and quatrefoiled cornice. The piers are solid quadrangular masses. The roof is of wood, the ribs carved in beautiful tracery, with knots and clusters at the intersections, on which are also carved scriptural representations. As you proceed nearer to the choir the solemnity of the place and the harmony of its proportions produce that state of feeling which one might be supposed to experience in the presence of some being the awe inspired by whose aspect is softened by the benignity that beams from every feature of an angelic countenance. From the four great piers which support the central tower spring four stupendous arches, more than one hundred feet in height. You pass the transepts—the north in which the windows called the Five Sisters are situated, and the south with its three tiers of windows, in which are represented a number of apostles and saints and at the top a splendid specimen of a marigold window—until you arrive at the organ screen, in which are represented the statues of the kings of England from William the Conqueror to Henry VI. inclusive. The statue of the last named king was once displaced, and a statue of James I. substituted, which certainly, one may well believe, had not the same odour of sanctity. All these statues are in regal costume. You pass under a beautifully carved canopied recess, when you see with full advantage the great east window, through whose stained compartments the light streams in subdued but many coloured lustre. This window is seventy-five feet in height, by thirty-two in breadth. It is formed of upwards of two hundred compartments of painted glass, each about a yard square, and each filled with figures of about two feet in height. The number of scripture incidents recorded in this manner is very great, and the execution is exquisitely beautiful and delicate—the Redeemer, angels, saints, apostles, confessors, martyrs, the creation, the temptation, the deluge, the story of Jacob, of Joseph, of Moses, the scene on Sinai, the history of Abraham, of David, of Sampson, the seals, the vials, and trumpets of the Apocalyptic visions, all are illustrated with wonderful delicacy; and the effect produced standing in “this dim religious light,” with the effigies of kings, prelates, nobles and knights on every side, is little, if at all, short of the sublime. This splendid work of art was begun in 1405, by one John Thornton, of Coventry, whose agreement was to complete it in three years, during which time he was to have a salary of four shillings a week, with one hundred shillings additional per annum, and ten pounds on finishing his work, should it be done to the satisfaction of his employers. This magnificent work had well nigh been destroyed in 1829, when a fanatic, named Jonathan Martin, set fire to the choir, and completely destroyed it. In less than two months however £50,000 were subscribed, and the building completely restored by the late Sir Robert Smirke, who laboured solely to reproduce its many beauties, without recommending or suggesting new ones.

But the great Peter, biggest of bells, sounds from the southwestern tower, and his voice echoes in the aisles, seeming thence to steal behind the necks of the effigies, to run along the clerestory, in and out the stalls, and then to descend to the crypt, where it dies away in a silvery murmur. We must withdraw. The white headed old verger with his wand approaches. Again the voice of the great Peter swells and dies away, having searched every crevice and corner. Before parting, however, we must say something about the bell. The monster is seven feet two inches in height, weighs twelve tons and a half, and is seven inches at the sounding curve. He consumed no less than seventeen tons of metal, and after this enormous meal took fourteen days to cool. He is richly adorned with gothic design and tracery, and around his collar is the inscription:—

“In Sanctæ et æternæ Trinitatis
Pecunia sponte collata Eboracensibus
Faciendum curaverunt in usum
Ecclesiæ Metrop. B. Petri, Ebor.”

The tongue of the great Peter weighs four hundredweight. It takes fifteen men to make his voice heard, and when he sings his note is F; he is deep, mellow, and rich. He cost his patrons altogether about two thousand pounds, and though he is a deserved favourite with his fellow citizens, he is modest and unassuming, and has never, like some of his inferiors who have less reason to be proud, taken leave of his senses.

THE SYMBOLISM OF LIGHT IN MASONRY.

BY ALBERT G. MACKAY, M.D.

THERE is an important period in the ceremony of Masonic initiation, when the candidate is about to receive a full communication of the mysteries through which he has passed, and to which the trials and labours which he has undergone can only entitle him. This ceremony is technically called “the rite of intrusting,” because it is then that the aspirant begins to be intrusted with that for the possession of which he was seeking.* It is equivalent to what, in the ancient mysteries, was called the “autopsy,”† or the seeing of what none but the initiated were permitted to behold.

The rite of intrusting is of course divided into several parts or periods; for the apporteta, or secret things of Masonry, are not to be given at once, but in gradual progression. It begins, however, with the communication of light, which, although but a preparation for the development of the mysteries which are to follow, must be considered as one of the most important symbols in the whole science of Masonic symbolism. So important indeed is it, and so much does it pervade with its influence and its relations the whole Masonic system, that Freemasonry itself anciently received among other appellations that of lux, or light, to signify that it is to be regarded as that sublime doctrine of divine truth by which the path of him who has attained it is to be illuminated in his pilgrimage of life.

The Hebrew cosmogonist commences his description of the creation by the declaration that “God said, Let there be light, and there was light”—a phrase which, in the more emphatic form that it has been received in the original language of “Be light, and light was,”‡ is said to have won the praise, for its sublimity, of the greatest of Grecian critics. “The singularly emphatic summons,” says a profound modern writer,§ “by which light is called into existence, is probably owing to the preeminent utility and glory of that element, together with its mysterious nature, which made it seem as and won for it the earliest adoration of mankind.”

‘The God of this new world,’

Light was, in accordance with this old religious sentiment, the great object of attainment in all the ancient religious mysteries. It was there, as it is now in Masonry, made the symbol of truth and knowledge. This was always its ancient symbolism, and we must never lose sight of this emblematic meaning, when we are considering the nature and significance of Masonic light. When the candidate makes a demand for light, it is not merely for that material light which is to remove a physical darkness; that is only the outward form, which conceals the inward symbolism. He craves an intellectual illumination which will dispel the darkness of mental and moral ignorance, and bring to his view, as an eye witness, the sublime truths of religion, philosophy, and science, which it is the great design of Freemasonry to teach.

In all the ancient systems this reverence for light, as the symbol of truth, was predominant. In the mysteries of every nation the candidate was made to pass, during his initiation, through scenes of utter darkness, and at length terminated his trials by an admission to the splendidly illuminated acellum or sanctuary, where he was said to have attained pure and perfect light, and where he received the necessary instructions which were to invest him with that knowledge of the divine truth which it had been the object of all his labours to gain, and the design of the institution into which he had been initiated to bestow.

Light, therefore, became synonymous with truth and knowledge, and darkness with falsehood and ignorance. We

* Dr. Oliver, referring to the “twelve grand points in Masonry,” which formed a part of the old English lectures, says:—“When the candidate was intrusted, he represented Asher, for he was then presented with the glorious fruit of Masonic knowledge, as Asher was represented by fatness and royal dainties.”—Hist. Londm., vol. i. lect. xi., p. 313.

† From the Greek αὐτοψία, signifying a seeing with one's own eyes. The candidate, who had previously been called a “mystes” or a blind man, from μύω, to shut the eyes, began at this point to change his title to that of an “epopt,” or eye witness.

‡ יְהִי אֵשׁ וְאֵשׁ יְהִי Yehi aur va yehi aur.

§ Robert William Mackay; Progress of the Intellect, vol. i. p. 96.

shall find this symbolism pervading not only the institutions but the very languages of antiquity.

Thus, among the Hebrews, the word aur, in the singular, signified "light," but in the plural, aurim, it denoted the revelation of the divine will; and the aurim and thummim, literally "the light and truth," constituted a part of the breast plate whence the high priest obtained oracular responses to the questions which he proposed.*

There is a peculiarity about the word "light," in the old Egyptian language, which is well worth consideration in this connection. Among the Egyptians the hare was the hieroglyphic of eyes that are open, and it was adopted, because that timid animal was supposed never to close his organs of vision, being always on the watch for his enemies. The hare was afterwards adopted by the priests as a symbol of the mental illumination, or mystic light, which was revealed to the neophytes, in the contemplation of divine truth, during the progress of their initiation; and hence, according to Champollion, the hare was also the symbol of Osiris, their chief god; thus showing the intimate connection which they believed to exist between the process of initiation into their sacred rites and the contemplation of the divine nature. But the Hebrew word for hare is arnabat. Now, this is compounded of the two words, aur, light, and nabat, to behold; and therefore the word which, in the Egyptian denoted "initiation," in the Hebrew signified "to behold the light." In two nations so intimately connected in history as the Hebrew and the Egyptian, such a coincidence could not have been accidental. It shows the prevalence of the sentiment at that period that the communication of light was the prominent design of the mysteries—so prominent, that the one was made the synonym of the other.†

The worship of light, either in its pure essence, or in the forms of sun worship and fire worship—because the sun and the fire were causes of light, was among the earliest and most universal superstitions of the world. Light was considered as the primordial source of all that was holy and intelligent; and darkness, as its opposite, was viewed as but another name for evil and ignorance. Dr. Beard, in an article on this subject, in Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature, attributes this view of the divine nature of light, which was entertained by the nations of the East, to the fact that, in that part of the world, light "has a clearness and brilliancy, is accompanied by an intensity of heat, and is followed in its influence by a largeness of good, of which the inhabitants of less genial climates have no conception. Light easily and naturally became, in consequence, with orientals, a representative of the highest human good. All the more joyous emotions of the mind, all the pleasing sensations of the frame, all the happy hours of domestic intercourse, were described under imagery derived from light. The transition was natural—from earthly to heavenly, from corporeal to spiritual things; and so light came to typify true religion and the felicity which it imparts. But as light not only came from God, but also makes man's way clear before him, so it was employed to signify moral truth, and preeminently that divine system of truth which is set forth in the Bible, from its earliest gleanings onward to the perfect day of the great Sun of Righteousness."

I am inclined to believe that in this passage the learned author has erred, not in the definition of the symbol, but in his deduction of its origin. Light became the object of religious veneration, not because of the brilliancy and clearness of a particular sky, nor the warmth and genial influence

* "And thou shalt put in the breast plate of judgment, the Urim and the Thummim."—Exod. xxviii. 30. The Egyptian judges also wore breast-plates, on which were represented the figure of Ra, the sun, and Thme, the goddess of Truth, representing, says Gliddon, "Ra, or the sun, in a double capacity—physical and intellectual light; and Thme, in a double capacity—justice and truth."—Ancient Egypt, p. 33.

† We owe this interesting discovery to F. Portal, who has given it in his elaborate work "On Egyptian Symbols as Compared with those of the Hebrews."

of a particular climate—for the worship was universal, in Scandinavia as in India—but because it was the natural and inevitable result of the worship of the sun, the chief deity of Sabæism, a faith which pervaded to an extraordinary extent the whole religious sentiment of antiquity.*

Light was venerated because it was an emanation from the sun, and, in the materialism of the ancient faith, light and darkness were both personified as positive existences, the one being the enemy of the other. Two principles were thus supposed to reign over the world, antagonistic to each other, and each alternately presiding over the destinies of mankind.†

The contests between the good and evil principle, symbolized by light and darkness, composed a very large part of the ancient mythology in all countries.

Among the Egyptians, Osiris was light, or the sun; and his arch enemy, Typhon, who ultimately destroyed him, was the representative of darkness.

Zoroaster, the father of the ancient Persian religion, taught the same doctrine, and called the principle of light, or good, Ormuzd; and the principle of darkness, or evil, Ahriman. The former, born of the purest light, and the latter, sprung from utter darkness, are, in this mythology, continually making war on each other.

Manes, or Manichæus, the founder of the sect of Manichees, in the third century, taught that there are two principles from which all things proceed; the one is a pure and subtle matter, called Light, the other a gross and corrupt substance, called Darkness. Each of these is subject to the dominion of a superintending being, whose existence is from all eternity. The being who presides over the light is called God; he that rules over the darkness is called Hyle or Demon. The ruler of the light is supremely happy, good, and benevolent; while the ruler over darkness is unhappy, evil, and malignant.

Pythagoras also maintained this doctrine of two antagonistic principles. He called the one, unity, light, the right hand, equality, stability, and a straight line; the other, he named binary, darkness, the left hand, inequality, instability, and a curved line. Of the colours, he attributed white to the good principle, and black to the evil one.

The Kabbalists gave a prominent place to light, in their system of cosmogony. They taught that, before the creation of the world, all space was filled with what they called the Aur en soph, or the eternal light, and that when the Divine Mind determined or willed the production of nature, the eternal light withdrew to a central point, leaving around it

* "The most early defection to idolatry," says Bryant, "consisted in the adoration of the sun and the worship of demons, styled Baalim."—Analysis of Anc. Mythol., vol. iii. p. 431.

† The remarks of Mr. Duncan, on this subject, are well worth perusal. "Light has always formed one of the primary objects of heathen adoration. The glorious spectacle of animated nature would lose all its interest, if man were deprived of vision, and light extinguished; for that which is unseen and unknown becomes, for all practical purposes, as valueless as if it were non-existent. Light is a source of positive happiness; without it, man could barely exist; and since all religious opinion is based on the ideas of pleasure and pain, and the corresponding sensations of hope and fear, it is not to be wondered if the heathen revered light. Darkness, on the contrary, by replunging nature, as it were, into a state of nothingness, and depriving man of the pleasurable emotions conveyed through the organ of sight, was ever held in abhorrence, as a source of misery and fear. The two opposite conditions in which man thus found himself placed, occasioned by the enjoyment or the banishment of light, induced him to imagine the existence of two antagonistic principles in nature, to whose dominion he was alternately subject. Light multiplied his enjoyments, and darkness diminished them. The former, accordingly, became his friend, and the latter his enemy. The words 'light,' and 'good,' and 'darkness,' and 'evil,' conveyed similar ideas, and became, in sacred language, synonymous terms. But as good and evil were not supposed to flow from one and the same source, no more than light and darkness were supposed to have a common origin, two distinct and independent principles were established, totally different in their nature, of opposite characters, pursuing a conflicting line of action, and creating antagonistic effects. Such was the origin of this famous dogma, recognized by all the heathens, and incorporated with all the sacred fables, cosmogonies, and mysteries of antiquity."—The Religions of Profane Antiquity, p. 186.

an empty space, in which the process of creation went on by means of emanations from the central mass of light. It is unnecessary to enter into the Kabbalistic account of creation; it is sufficient here to remark that all was done through the mediate influence of the Aur en soph, or eternal light, which produces coarse matter, but one degree above nonentity, only when it becomes so attenuated as to be lost in darkness.

The Brahminical doctrine was, that "light and darkness are esteemed the world's eternal ways; he who walketh in the former, returneth not; that is to say, he goeth to eternal bliss; whilst he who walketh in the latter cometh back again upon earth," and is thus destined to pass through further transmigrations, until his soul is perfectly purified by light.*

In all the ancient systems of initiation the candidate was shrouded in darkness, as a preparation for the reception of light. The duration varied in the different rites. In the Celtic mysteries of Druidism, the period in which the aspirant was immersed in darkness was nine days and nights; among the Greeks, at Eleusis, it was three times as long; and in the still severer rites of Mithras, in Persia, fifty days of darkness, solitude, and fasting were imposed upon the adventurous neophyte, who, by these excessive trials, was at length entitled to the full communication of the light of knowledge.

Thus it will be perceived that the religious sentiment of a good and an evil principle gave to darkness, in the ancient symbolism, a place equally as prominent as that of light.

The same religious sentiment of the ancients, modified, however, in its details by our better knowledge of divine things, has supplied Freemasonry with a double symbolism—that of light and darkness.

Darkness is the symbol of initiation. It is intended to remind the candidate of his ignorance, which Masonry is to enlighten; of his evil nature, which Masonry is to purify; of the world in whose obscurity he has been wandering, and from which Masonry is to rescue him.

Light, on the other hand, is the symbol of the autopsy—the sight of the mysteries—the intrusting—the full fruition of Masonic truth and knowledge.

Initiation precedes the communication of knowledge in Masonry, as darkness preceded light in the old cosmogonies. Thus, in Genesis, we see that in the beginning "the world was without form, and void, and darkness was on the face of the deep." The Chaldean cosmogony taught that in the beginning "all was darkness and water." The Phœnicians supposed that "the beginning of all things was a wind of black air, and a chaos dark as Erebus."†

But out of all this darkness sprang forth light at the divine command, and the sublime phrase, "let there be light," is repeated, in some substantially identical form, in all the ancient histories of creation.

So, too, out of the mysterious darkness of Masonry comes the full blaze of Masonic light. One must precede the other, as the evening preceded the morning. "So the evening and the morning were the first day."

This thought is preserved in the great motto of the Order: "Lux e tenebris"—light out of darkness. It is equivalent to this other sentence—truth out of initiation. Lux or light is truth; tenebræ or darkness is initiation.

It is a beautiful and instructive portion of our symbolism—this connection of darkness and light—and well deserves a further investigation.

"Genesis and the cosmogonies," says Portal, "mention

* See the Bhagrat Geeta, one of the religious books of Brahminism.

† The Institutes of Menu, which are the acknowledged code of the Brahmins, inform us that "the world was all darkness, undiscernible, undistinguishable altogether, as in a profound sleep, till the self-existent, invisible God, making it manifest with five elements and other glorious forms, perfectly dispelled the gloom."—Sir William Jones, On the Gods of Greece. Asiatic Researches, i. 244.

Among the Rosicrucians, who have by some been improperly confounded with the Freemasons, the word lux was used to signify a knowledge of the philosopher's stone, or the great desideratum of a universal elixir and a universal menstruum. This was their "truth."

the antagonism of light and darkness. The form of this fable varies, according to each nation; but the foundation is everywhere the same; under the symbol of the creation of the world, it presents the picture of regeneration and initiation.

Plutarch says, that to die is to be initiated into the greater mysteries. And the Greek word τελευτάν, which signifies to die, means also to be initiated. But black, which is the symbolic colour of darkness, is also the symbol of death. And hence again darkness, like death, is also the symbol of initiation. It was for this reason that all the ancient initiations were performed at night. The celebration of the mysteries was always nocturnal. The same custom prevails in Freemasonry, and the explanation is the same. Death and the resurrection were taught in all the ancient mysteries. The initiation was the lesson of death. The full fruition or autopsy, the reception of light, was the lesson of regeneration or resurrection.

Light is, therefore, a fundamental symbol in Freemasonry. It is, in fact, the first important symbol that is presented to the neophyte in his instructions, and contains within itself the very essence of speculative Masonry, which is nothing more than the contemplation of intellectual light or truth.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE OLD TOWN HALL, NANTWICH.

CAN any of your readers inform me whether the "Old Town Hall" at Nantwich was or was not built for the purposes of a Masonic Hall or Chapter House, or been used as such?—R. E. X.

JOHN CUNNINGHAM THE POET, AND MR. SLACK.

CAN any brother inform me when and where John Cunningham the pastoral poet was initiated into Freemasonry, and what progress he made in the science? The date of his initiation cannot be earlier than 1750, in which year he became "of the full age of twenty-one;" and it will be some years previous to 1773, as on the 18th of September in that year he died. I should also be glad to know that the Mr. Slack, in conjunction with whom the poet laboured to establish the Newcastle Chronicle in 1764, was a brother Mason. It was to the humanity and benevolence of Mr. Slack that poor Bro. Cunningham owed all his subsistence in his latter days; it was under Mr. Slack's hospitable roof tree that the bard was nursed in his last illness, and it was there that he died; and it was Mr. Slack who erected that now dilapidated monument over the poet's grave, in the unpoetical looking churchyard of St. John, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne—the future care and restoration of which tomb I beg most fraternally to recommend to our brethren of the province of Northumberland.—GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL.

LORD RAMSAY AND HIS TUTOR.

An anecdote has been told me by a Scotch brother to the following effect:—Lord Ramsay, then a young man under age, was out one day in company with his tutor, when a very deplorable object, apparently a foreigner, solicited alms. The tutor, a clergyman, while inquiring the stranger's wants, suddenly, and greatly to the surprise of his lordship, extended his own and cordially grasped the beggar's hand. Lord Ramsay solicited to know the reason for such an unusual proceeding, when the divine informed him that the distressed foreigner was a Mason. He was clothed, fed, relieved, and afterwards forwarded to his home, and the circumstance so struck Lord Ramsay that when he became eligible, he sought admission to the fraternity, and ultimately rose to be a Grand Master. Such was the information as I had it. Now I should like to know of what family was Lord Ramsay? When did this occur, and what was the name of the tutor alluded to?—SCOTIA.

WHEN WAS THE FIRST LODGE OF INSTRUCTION ESTABLISHED?

After the meeting of a Lodge of Instruction some few evenings back, a discussion arose as to when and where the first Lodge of Instruction was held? To give you, even in a condensed form, the various opinions that were offered, would be to "make confusion worse confounded," and not throw a particle of light upon the subject; but seeing that you solve many of such knotty points by the aid and assistance of your readers and your own research, I thought it a proper subject on which to ask for information in "Masonic Notes and Queries," and hope to receive a satisfactory reply through that medium.—G.

* On Symbolic Colours, p. 23. Inman's translation. 355

WAS HIRAM ABIFF A SLAVE?

I was somewhat astounded when the above question was put to me by a newly raised Master Mason. It is so totally at variance with all our preconceived ideas, that I was desirous of knowing how such a thought could have originated, and questioning my questioner on the subject, he told me he had read it in one of Dr. Oliver's books. Although I do not admire Dr. Oliver's works in general, yet I told my young brother he must be mistaken, and he shortly afterwards produced The Golden Remains of the Early Masonic Writers, vol. i., "On the value of Masonic Secrets," by the Rev. Daniel Turner, and at p. 265, in one of the editor's elucidatory notes (1) is the following:—"The King of Tyre also furnished artificers of every description; not only expert Masons, but also men who excelled in the working of gold, silver, and precious stones; and also in dyeing scarlet, purple, and blue, in which the Tyrians greatly excelled. But the most valuable present he made to Solomon on the present occasion was a divinely endowed architect and artist, who was a Tyrian by birth, but the son of a widow of the tribe of Naphtali. This man was a treasure to Solomon, and he constituted him overseer of the work and Grand Master over all the Lodges of workmen wheresoever distributed," &c. I have given the passage entire, and at rather more length than was necessary, to show the context, and am not at all surprised at any one being led away to think Hiram Abiff was a slave by such slipslop writing. It is to be hoped Dr. Oliver will, in any future edition of the work in question is called for, correct this very serious and destructive note, for it aims at the freedom of the Craft; and to say that Hiram Abiff was a present to King Solomon is nowhere, that I know of, avouched in Scripture or the Talmudists.—O. O. S. P. R. +. 18°.

THE ENTERED APPRENTICE'S SONG.

In all the early prints and books containing "Come, let us prepare," the fifth line invariably reads—

"Our wine has a spring"— which has been altered to "Be he beggar or king" in the modern copies. Agreeing with the improved sentiment, that the change is for the better, yet I should like to know who altered it, or, if that cannot be ascertained, when the new reading was first adopted.—APOLLO.

THE "MUSTARD SEEDS."

A page of some book having come into my hands, as a wrapper, was about to throw it into the waste paper basket when my eye caught the word "Freemasons." I thereupon read it and found it to be some old fashioned squib, in which the brethren were called the Order of Masonic Mustard Seeds. Wanted a clue to its application, by—C. G. TERRY.—[This is no squib. The Ordre de la Graine de Sénéve was one of the earliest interpolations in Masonry. The members styling themselves "The Fraternity of foravian Brothers of the Order of Religious Freemasons," were instituted about 1740. The motto of the society was "No one of us lives for himself," which was engraven on rings to be worn by each of its members. The jewel was a gold cross, surmounted by a mustard plant, and surrounded by a legend to this effect—What was it before? Nothing! This was suspended from a green collar and ribbon, and the whole was founded on the parable of our Saviour, related in the 4th chapter of St. Mark. We believe there are no Mustard Seeds now.]

DATE OF THE EARLIEST ROYAL ARCH CHAPTER.

What is the date of the earliest Royal Arch Chapter at present existence?—DAN.—[The earliest, of which the records are in existence, a minute book, dated 1743, is the Royal Arch Chapter Stirling, N.B., and it contains proof that the higher degrees were worked under the form of a Royal Arch Chapter. In Scotland no other Chapter has been able to produce documentary evidence of its existence prior to 1765, although in that year several chapters were in existence and accounted as old.]

MASONRY AMONG THE NATIVES OF INDIA.

I have been told that among the Brahminical priesthood of India they have signs and tokens agreeing in some measure with ours. Any information on the subject will be acceptable.—VATES. [Our late Bro. Godfrey Higgins tells us (Anacalypsis, Vol. I., 767) the following:—

"I was also told by a gentleman who was in the strictest intimacy with the late — Ellis, Esq., of the Madras establishment, that Mr. Ellis told him that the password and forms used by the Master Masons of their Lodge would pass a person into the sanctum sanctorum of an liou temple; that he (Mr. Ellis) had by means of his knowledge as a Master Mason, actually passed himself into the sacred part or adytum of one of them. Soon after Mr. Ellis told this to my informant he was taken suddenly ill, and died, and my informant stated that he had no doubt, notwithstanding the mistake which his friends call it in giving some medicine, that he was poisoned by his servants for having done this very act, or for being known to possess this knowledge. Now, when this is coupled with the fact of the Masonic emblems found on the Cyclopean ruins of Agra and Mundore, I think, without fear of contradiction, I may venture to assume that the oriental origin of Freemasonry cannot be disputed."

ST. ALBAN AND THE FIRST GRAND LODGE.

In the calendar among the remarkable events we are told St. Alban formed the first Grand Lodge in Britain, in the year A.D. 287. Taking this for granted, when was Masonry introduced into this country?—W. A. . . . s.—[Our querist must not suppose that Masonry had not flourished here before the time of St. Alban, for all that we are informed respecting him is that he founded the first Grand Lodge. Now, in a very curious anonymous little book, entitled Multa Paucis for the Lovers of Secrets, 12mo, Lond., 1760-5, there is the following:—

"A.M. 2974, Ebrank, King of the Trojan race, is accounted the first British architect, and historians ascribe to him the building of the cities of York and Edinburgh. Bladud, who flourished A.M. 3100, was educated at Athens, and became a great mathematician and architect, and upon his return brought with him four great philosophers, whom he placed at Stamford, making that town a sort of university, and built the city of Bath. In A.D. 42, Claudius sent Aulus Plautius into Britain, and ordered Ostorius Scopula, with other Roman architects, to build many forts and castles. Afterwards Vespasian sent Julius Agricola, who conquered as far as the isthmus between the Firths of Clyde and Forth, and fortified the same against the Picts. Adrian fenced the Roman province in Britain with ramparts, extending from Tynemouth Haven to Solway Firth; A.D. 181, Lud, the first Christian King of Britain, built many churches and religious houses. In the following century, Gordian sent many architects over, who constituted themselves into Lodges, and instructed the craftsmen in the true principles of Masonry; and a few years later Carausius was made emperor of the British Isles, and, being a great lover of art and science, appointed Albanus Grand Master of Masons, who employed the fraternity in building the palace of Verulam or St. Albans."

Such is the legend. For further information consult Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, tit. St. Alban.]

KNIGHTS OF MALTA.

As a Master Mason, am I eligible to be made a Knight of Malta? and how often do they meet?—[A convocation of Knights of Malta and of the Mediterranean Pass is holden once in every year, on a day appointed by the E.C. of the Knights Templar Encampment. To the other question: Consult a Knight of Malta, the practice varies in different places.]

WAS THE LATE DR. SYMONDS A MASON?

Reading an account of the Peninsular War, and more particularly that portion of it referring to the retreat of Sir John Moore, and his death at Corunna, I found that Dr. Symonds was an army chaplain at that time, and present at the retreat. In opposition to the beautiful song, "Not a drum was heard," the narrative tells me that Dr. Symonds read the burial service over the commander-in-chief. Was he a Mason?—[Dr. Symonds was a Mason; he was made in Portugal, and on his return to this country was appointed chaplain to one of the royal dukes, and died very suddenly about three years since. At the time of his death he was vicar of All Saints parish, in the city of Hereford, and was a P. Prov. G. Chaplain of Herefordshire.]

JOHN ROBISON.

The following, extracted from the article "Robison, John," in the eighteenth volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica, eighth edition, recently published, may interest some of your readers.—RICHARD SPENCER.

"It is not altogether with so high approbation that his friends and his biographers have mentioned a work, of a nature rather political than philosophical, entitled Proofs of a Conspiracy against all the Religions and Governments of Europe (Edin., 1797, 8vo.), though it went through several editions. The principal part of the book consists of the history of the Illuminati and the German Union, whom he considers as having become the chief agents in a plot first formed by the Freemasons, at the suggestion of some ex-Jesuit, who proposed for their model the internal economy of the order which he had quitted; and whatever foundation this outline may have had in truth, there is no doubt that the manner in which Professor Robison has filled it up betrays a degree of credulity extremely remarkable in a person used to calm reasoning and philosophical demonstration: for example, in the admission of a story told by an anonymous German author, that the minister Turgot was the protector of a society that met at Baron d'Holbach's, for the purpose of examining the brains of living children, in order to discover the principle of vitality. He does not accuse the English Freemasons of having participated in the conspiracy; but he considers the Continental Lodges as having been universally implicated in it."

Professor Robison contributed several able scientific articles to the third edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. He was a native of Scotland, and died at Edinburgh in 1805, in his sixty-sixth year.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

Stories of Inventors and Discoverers in Science and the Useful Arts. A Book for Old and Young. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. London: Kent and Co., Fleet-street.

THE author of "Things not Generally Known," in the present volume has given the reading public his hitherto most successful work. Both in style and matter the book before us must be considered a great advance upon his previous writings, possessing in a much smaller degree the characteristics of a collection of extracts from the commonplace book of a miscellaneous though laborious student; and marked throughout by an earnest desire to describe the progress of those arts which have raised our civilization to its present high standard, and to chronicle the struggles and the fortunes of the great men whose inventions have exercised so great an influence upon the destinies of mankind. To write a history of the rise and development of those great discoveries in mechanics and chemistry which have made the learning of the nineteenth century almost as comprehensive as that attributed to our Grand Master Solomon himself, would require an encyclopædia in bulk to contain its details, and the lifetime of many historians to do justice to the subject. Mr. Timbs's little book is of the most unpretending character, but is sufficiently comprehensive to give ample food for meditation; and in the terse and neatly written narratives which he has placed before us, if he has not gone deeply into the mighty mysteries which formed the life study of the adepts whose career he briefly sketches, he has fairly earned the praise of compressing into a small compass, and in a most interesting guise, sufficient particulars of deceased philosophers to be eminently suggestive and useful to both "young and old;" as his title declares his intention to have been.

The work comprises some fifty or sixty sketches of great inventors and discoverers from the very earliest times of which authentic accounts remain, down to the latest wonders of our own time. The list begins with the sage Archimedes, whose recorded feats have been so long considered as the mere childish traditions of an ignorant and wonder loving age, but whose inventions have in many instances been reproduced and adopted with perfect success in modern times. The last upon the roll of celebrities noticed by our author are the Brunels and the Stephensons, and the intervening period between the great ancient master of the sciences and his modern prototypes, is well illustrated by examples taken from the philosophic luminaries of each succeeding age. In the consideration of this subject the author's countrymen will not fail to observe with pride what a vast preponderance of the practical philosophy which has benefited the human race, has been promulgated among civilised men through the wisdom and energy of natives of these islands; and the fallacy becomes transparent which would attribute to Englishmen a deficiency in the faculty of invention. In science as in arms, the mighty race which peoples these realms have ever been faciles principes—the lands which produced Alfred, Bruce, Wallace, Raleigh, Cromwell, Blake, Marlborough and Wellington, have also nurtured the immortal genius of Bacon, Newton, Watt, Davy and Stephenson.

It is an observation as old as Solomon, and therefore in truth somewhat trite at the present time, "that there is nothing new under the sun," and in the present volume our author has by no means lost sight of this truism; some singular illustrations of the assimilation of ancient magic and pseudo miracles to the every day occurrences of modern scientific practice are given; and justice is done to the memory of those ancients whose pretensions have too often until recent times been made the objects of ridicule and contempt. The magical practices of Friar Bacon or Albertus Magnus, are now seen to have been nothing more than the successful results of profound studies in chemistry and mechanics; but our author goes farther back by a long way than the period of these worthies, and gives good reason for attributing a knowledge of the process of printing to the Romans, and the use of gunpowder or a similar composition to those ancient inhabitants of India who were coeval with Moses.

After some very interesting chapters upon the air pump, th diving bell, balloons, chronometers, and other subjects, we find a sketch of the learned Napier, the inventor of logarithms, and of his celebrated "Secret Inventions."

"Of these, the first is stated to be 'a burning mirror for burning ships by the sun's beams,' of which Napier professes himself able to give to the world the 'invention, proof, and perfect demonstration, geometrical and algebraical, with an evident demonstration of their error who affirm this to be made a parabolic section.' The second is a mirror for producing the same effect by the beams of a material fire. The third is a piece of artillery, contrived so as to send forth its shot, not in a single straight line, but in all directions, in such a manner as to destroy every thing in its neighbourhood. Of this the writer asserts he can give 'the invention and visible demonstration.' The fourth and last of these formidable machines is described to be 'a round chariot in metal,' constructed so as both to secure the complete safety of those within it, and moving about in all directions, to break the enemy's army, 'by continual charges of shot of the arquebuse through small holes.' These inventions," the paper concludes, "besides devices of sailing under water, and divers other devices and stratagems for harassing the enemies, by the grace of God and work of expert craftsmen, I hope to perform. John Napier of Merchiston, anno dom. 1596, June 2."

"Another scheme of the inventor of logarithms is the manuring of land with salt, as inferred from the following notice in Birrell's Diary, Oct. 28, 1598: 'A proclamation of the Laird of Markistoun, that he took upon hand to make the land muir profitable nor it was before, by the sawing of salt upon it.' The patent, or gift of office, as it is called for this discovery, was granted upon condition that the patentee should publish his method in print, which he did, under the title of The New Order of Gooding and Manuring all sorts of Field Land with common Salt. This tract is now probably lost; but the above facts establish Napier's claim to an agricultural improvement which has been revived in our day, and considered of great value; while it proves that Napier directed his speculations occasionally to the improvement of the arts of common life, as well as to that of the abstract sciences."

Prince Rupert, Sir Samuel Morland, Lord Bacon, and the Marquis of Worcester, were the undoubted discoverers of many scientific processes which have lain dormant, for want of faith in them by mankind, almost to our own day. Of Lord Worcester it may without exaggeration be asserted that he was perhaps the greatest mechanical genius that this country has produced; perhaps it is not going too far to say that in the powers of mental conception he equalled the immortal Bacon himself though inferior as a reasoner and reflective philosopher.

"Worcester has been illiberally described as a 'fantastic projector,' and his Century as 'an amazing piece of folly.' But Mr. Partington, in his edition of the work published in 1825, has, throughout an able series of notes, fully demonstrated not only the practicability of applying the major part of the hundred inventions there described, but the absolute application of many of them, though under other names, to some of the most useful purposes of life. It is surely injustice and ingratitude to apply the name of a 'fantastic projector' to the man who first discovered a mode of applying steam as a mechanical agent, an invention alone sufficient to immortalise the age in which he lived. Many of Worcester's contrivances have since been brought into general use: among them may especially be mentioned stenography, telegraphs, floating baths, speaking statues, carriages from which horses can be disengaged if unruly, combination locks, secret escutcheons for locks, candle-moulds, &c.

"In the Transactions of the Society of Arts, vol. iii. p. 6, is recommended to the attention of every mechanic the Century, 'which, on account of the seeming improbability of discovering many things mentioned therein, has been too much neglected; but when it is considered that some of the contrivances, apparently not the least abstruse, have by close application been found to answer all that the Marquis says of them, and that the first hint of that most powerful machine, the steam engine, is given in that work, it is unnecessary to enlarge on the utility of it.'

The larger part of Mr. Timbs's volume is naturally devoted to the illustration of the progress of invention in later times; and the achievements of James Watt, John Lombe, Sir Humphry Davy, Smeaton, and Rennie, bring the reader to the period of the illustrious families of Brunel and Stephenson, who have but so lately passed from among us. There are many pleasant anecdotes interspersed throughout the solid information which the author contributes for the edification of his readers. Some of these we have certainly met with before, but they are generally well selected and will bear repetition. An instance of the kindness and discrimination of Sir Humphry Davy may be new to some of our readers:—

"One of the most pleasing episodes in the life of Davy is the account of his first reception of Michael Faraday, described in a note to Dr. Paris:—'When I was a bookseller's apprentice,' says Faraday, 'I was very fond of experiment, and very averse to trade. It happened that a gentleman, a member of the Royal Institution, took me to hear some of Sir H. Davy's last lectures in Albemarle-street. I took notes, and afterwards wrote them out more fairly in a quarto volume. My desire to escape from trade, which I thought vicious and selfish, and to enter into the service of science, which I imagined made its pursuers amiable and liberal, induced me at last to take the bold step of writing to Sir H. Davy, expressing my wishes, and a hope that, if an opportunity came in his way, he would favour my views; and at the same time I sent the notes I had taken of his lectures.' To this application Sir H. Davy replied as follows:— 'Sir,—I am far from displeased with the proof you have given me of your confidence, and which displays great zeal, power of memory, and attention. I am obliged to go out of town till the end of January: I will then see you at any time you wish. It would gratify me to be of any service to you. I wish it may be in my power. I am, sir, your obedient humble servant, H. DAVY.' Early in 1813, Davy requested to see Faraday, and told him of the situation of assistant in the laboratory of the Royal Institution, to which, through Sir Humphry's good efforts, Faraday was appointed. In the same year he went abroad with Davy, as his assistant in experiments and in writing. Faraday returned in 1815 to the Royal Institution, and has ever since remained there. There cannot be a better testimony than the above circumstance to Davy's goodness of heart."

Among the most useful inventions which we usually attribute to our own time is that of gas lighting. Mr. Timbs however shows us that, though not practically brought into use, the existence and inflammability of coal gas have been known in England for two centuries. As to the Chinese—that wonderful race who appear to have had in their possession from the remotest time, the germs of every useful art—we are not much surprised to read the following:—

" 'Whether, or to what extent,' says Mr. R. C. Taylor, on the coal fields of China, 'the Chinese artificially produce illuminating gas from bitumen coal, we are uncertain. But it is a fact that spontaneous jets of gas, derived from boring into coal beds, have for centuries been burning, and turned to that and other economical purposes. If the Chinese are not manufacturers they are nevertheless gas consumers and employers on a large scale; and have evidently been so ages before the knowledge of its application was acquired by Europeans. Beds of coal are frequently pierced by the borers of salt water; and the inflammable gas is forced up in jets twenty or thirty feet in height. From these fountains the vapour has been conveyed to the salt works in pipes, and there used for the boiling and evaporating of the salt; and other tubes convey the gas intended for lighting the streets and the larger apartments and kitchens."

Our space prevents our making any further comments upon this very capital book; and we therefore leave our readers to exercise their own judgment upon Mr. Timbs's labours. We will in conclusion, however, remark that the book is not one for mere cursory perusal; and that notwithstanding its modest appearance it is well worthy of preservation as a work of reference, while the agreeable style in which it is written makes its perusal as entertaining as it is instructive. The volume contains numerous illustrations of a high character.

Persecution des Juifs en Pologne (Persecutions of the Israelites in Poland). Translated from the Hebrew into French by DANIEL LEVY. Tlemcen.

One Javan Metsoula has written this book, which has become so popular in Poland, as to have passed through several editions, and now reappears in a French dress. It is on a subject that must not only be interesting but instructive to every Craftsman—the Jews—that people who are so intimately interwoven with the foundation of our Order, as well as every religion in the civilized world.

Though the work is but slender in form, it is truthful, but it omits much in detail, which, if given more fully, would be very valuable. The oft repeated tale of religious persecution is here told as occurring at various periods from the year 1585.

Sigismund of Sweden, proclaimed king of Poland in 1585, had a fatherly regard for the Jews, and was considerably above the prejudices of his times. His successor, Wladislaw, was equally favourable to them, and had, on their account, to support an insurrection of the Russians in Poland, belonging to the Greek rite. The Russians first attacked the Jews, and then the Romanists, to whom full religious freedom had been guaranteed by Sigismund. In the end the rebels were defeated. A certain Cossack, named Hamil, being both ambitious and cunning, denounced innocently by a Jew with respect to an account he had to render the king as chief of the city, favoured by another Jew whilst he was in prison, escaped, and allying himself with the Tartars, he gave battle to the Poles, who were defeated. It was then, when the king was dead, that the persecutions against the Poles and the Jews commenced. The writer attending to the fate of his coreligionists, more especially, tells us:—

"After having tortured the Jews in their flesh, and in their flesh of flesh; after having devised with infernal art to martyr their hearts, fibre by fibre, they wounded them in their religious prejudices; they profaned the objects consecrated to worship, and attempted to make thousands relinquish their belief. Such was the fate of all the towns and all the provinces invaded by the rebels; and it was not the Jews alone who had to submit to atrocities. The Christians, and even the priests, were made the butt of the persecutions of the barbarians."

We are led back to the era of our King John, in reading such a statement as the following as the following:—

"A young Jewish maiden, one of the best of the illustrious families of Nemrow, was captured by a Cossack and taken to his home. She, of angelic beauty, appeared resigned to her lot. But, before yielding to the wishes of her captor, she said to him, that she knew of a marvellous secret to render the body invulnerable. He inquired how she could convince him of this. "Nothing is easier," said the heroic girl; "load your musket and fire at me, and you shall have no doubt about the matter." The soldier, credulous and enchanted about being put into possession of such a secret, loaded his gun to the muzzle, and discharged it into the breast of the happy young girl, who fell, imploring the name of Jehovah thrice."

Barbarism and faith were, perhaps, never more tragically represented.

"Another young Jewess of the same town happened to fall into the hands of a Cossack, who, struck with her extraordinary beauty, offered to espouse her. She accepted his offer, provided the marriage should be celebrated in a certain church. The usual preparations were made with much pomp and ceremony. The bride, clad in precious robes, covered with jewels, bearing the nuptial crown on her forehead, descended with the Cossack into the boat which was to bear them to the church, where the pope was waiting for them before the altar. But, arrived at the middle of the stream, she suddenly arose, cast towards heaven the look of the angel who animated her soul, and plunged into the wave. All this was done with such rapidity that it was impossible to save her. The corpse, when it was found, was adorned as for her bridal."

The account, by Javan Metsoula, of the sufferings of the Jews in Poland, surpasses all we have ever read of their sufferings elsewhere. The history of that unfortunate race would appear to be, after the destruction of the Temple and holy city, one continuous tale of degradation and persecution. Scattered everywhere, nowhere had they a home; no rights, no privileges, no immunity. They had every man's hand against them, without having done injury to any man, and in no city of Europe could they call their hard earned toil their own. The author relates that—

"At Touchiri the Jews, betrayed by the Poles to the Cossacks, were thrust into a vast inclosure, situated out of the town. Three Rabbins, who were among them, exhorted them to bear their trials with courage, and to show themselves worthy children of their sires in preferring a glorious death to the infamy of recantation. They replied in one breath—'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one God.' Then there appeared a Russian officer, bearing in his hands a flag, which he planted in the inclosure. 'Let those,' he cried, 'who wish to live, advance and salute this banner.' A mournful and profound silence was the only reply; no one stirred. The officer repeated the proclamation a second and a third time, but without more success. He then opened the gates of the inclosure, and called upon the impatient soldiery to rush upon their prey, who, like a troop of ferocious beasts, darted into the arena, and threw themselves, with shouts of joy upon the unhappy Jews, unable to defend themselves. The three Rabbins, with fifteen hundred Jews, perished at the first shock. Ten other Rabbins were bound hand and foot and cast into a loathsome den."

Names of families and individuals are given which can possess little interest for the general reader, so we forbear to mention them. We have also an account, by the same author, of the Schobataiks in Russia. This title signifies "observers of the Sabbath." A priest belonging to the Greek rite had embraced Judaism, and for this he had to suffer martyrdom. He was conducted, with his companions in misfortune, to a public square, where a funeral pile was kindled. They made him advance the first as he was lately a prince of the church, now a humble and persecuted Jew, and here he was summoned to return to his first faith, when he would be pardoned, and threatened with death if he refused. Romanzoff, who, after his conversion, had adopted the name of Rabbi Abraham, and who, by his noble and venerable appearance, called to mind the patriarch whose name he bore—Romanzoff contented himself with replying to the summons of his persecutors in the usual language adopted by persecuted Jews: "Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is one God!" And he added, "I am old; I have one foot in the grave. If you permit me to live to-day I shall die to-morrow; and think you then by the bribe of vain promises to seduce me, or that you can terrify me with your threats? No! The God of Israel is my God, and I confess him in the presence of this pile before which I stand." The narrative is a horrible one, but it illustrates the nature of fanaticism and the extent of the power which will bear poor humanity under the belief that it is doing God service. They—

"then made bars of iron red-hot, and forced the old man to place himself upon them. 'You do well,' he contented himself with saying to his executioners; 'these feet have trodden a place impure and merit this punishment.' They then placed one of the heated bars into his two hands; and he continued with the same calmness: 'This also is just; these hands have given the waters of baptism, and ought to be burned with fire. I accept with joy these explanations of my past errors. May God have mercy upon me!' The torture was continued. They bound round his arms hemp steeped in tar, and set fire to it; but the constancy of the old man did not fail him. He intoned the sacred psalms of Zion; all the neophytes joined in chorus. The Pope, seeing that nothing could shake the firmness of the old man, ordered the executioners to cast him upon the pyre; at that instant the flames enveloped him as with a mantle of glory, one might have said that the soul of the martyr was wrapped in its heavenly robes to appear before the throne of Jehovah."

His fate did not frighten his coreligionists; they cried out with one accord, "Let us join the soul of Rabbi Abraham in eternity;" and without awaiting the executioners, men, women, and children, cast themselves into the flames, invoking the name of the God of Israel. Nearly one hundred persons perished thus, and it required armed force to prevent others following their example. Some were sent to Siberia, others to the fortress of Riga; the rest were compelled to embrace Christianity, but continued to exercise the Hebrew religion clandestinely. Of this the government was not ignorant, but prudently closed its eyes. The author relates that, when in 1814 the Emperor Alexander gave toleration to fifty-two sects, the Schobataits were among the number, and they immediately went forth to dispose of their bosniches (images of gold and silver), which until then they had ostensibly made use of.

Having drunk quite deep enough from this well of horrors, we take leave of Javan Metsoula's work, which is of great interest, and affords another chapter towards that huge mountain of records which perpetuate the sufferings of the conscientious and the fanatic in the cause of religion.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE Lincoln Times says:—"It is not improbable that Newstead Abbey, the seat of the late Colonel Wildman, and formerly the residence of Lord Byron, with its magnificent domain, will shortly pass into the hands of Mr. Charles Seely, of Heighington Hall, who, we are informed, is in treaty for this interesting property." The price paid for the property by the late owner is said to have been £100,000.

Dr. George Wilson, the biographer of Reid and Cavendish, is just dead. Dr. Wilson was the first Regius Professor of Technology in the University of Edinburgh, and Director of the Industrial Museum of that city. Dr. Wilson was in no small degree the originator of that museum; he gave to it his heart, his genius, and his hopes of success and fame. Six years ago he was appointed to both offices, and it was at that period that the long delayed project of establishing an industrial museum for Scotland in Edinburgh was first seriously contemplated by government. A long strife succeeded to the first idea of founding this institution, and it has only very recently been put on a ground for commencing real operations. Besides the lives of Reid and Cavendish, Dr. Wilson had written an "Elementary Treatise on Chemistry," "Researches in Colour Blindness," and "The Five Gateways of Knowledge." He was born in Edinburgh in 1818. The world has lost in him—at the early age of forty-one—a good man and a most worthy servant of science.

Dr. Doran is writing "Lives of the Princes of Wales," to be published by Mr. Bentley early next year. The sketch of each Prince of Wales will terminate with his accession to the throne, when such has been the case.

Several public bodies and societies connected with the highlands have memorialised the Scotch Universities' Commissioners to take the necessary steps for instituting and endowing Celtic professorships in some or all of the Scotch universities.

Mr. W. M. Thackeray will deliver a lecture to members of the Bury Athenæum, Suffolk, on "Humour and Charity," early in the ensuing year.

The Critic announces that Mr. Josiah Parkes, the father of Miss Parkes, whose strenuous advocacy of the rights and wants of her sex has attracted general attention, is about to publish a volume on the authorship of Junius. Mr. Parkes is the first of the Junius commentators who has managed to get something out of the Francis family, and that the new facts and documents which his book will contain will add much additional strength to the case in favour of Sir Philip. The same journal says that the Messrs. Longman are preparing for immediate publication, in shilling parts, the well known family Shakespeare, edited by Thomas Bowdler; the first part will appear next week. The work will be illustrated with thirty-six vignettes, engraved on wood, from original designs by G. Cooke, R.A., R. Cooke, H. Howard, R.A., H. Singlet on

R. Smirke, R.A., T. Stothard, R.A., H. Thomson, R.A., R. Westall, R.A., R. Wordforde, R.A.

Miss Muloch is about to give to the world a volume of poems, to be published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett.

Professor Blackie, of Edinburgh, has a volume of "Lyrical Poems" in the press, to be published by Messrs. Sutherland and Knox. Professor Blackie is the author of "Student Songs of Germany," contributed to Tait's Magazine many years ago, and a more recent poetical translation of Æschylus.

Literature in Paris is quite as much influenced by fashion as are ladies' dresses. Since the success of "Fanny" a variety of romances have been published, which go under the general title of "Une Etude de Femme." M. E. Gourdon has just presented a volume of this class, called "Louise." The grave historian of the "History of the Congress of Paris" has written a book, which is attracting much attention.

The new organisation of the Théâtre Français is said to be decided on. The author's portion of the gross receipts is to be fifteen per cent. If one piece occupy the whole evening, as is frequently the case, the dramatist has that per centage to himself; when more than one is played the authors divide the amount among them. Writers of two plays of equal length will get seven and a half per cent. each, and so on, according to the number of acts in each production. The lowest portion is three per cent. Thus, when three pieces are played—one of four or five, another of three, and a third of one act—the author of the first will take seven per cent., of the second five, and of the third three per cent.

A course of lectures is in progress of delivery at the science and art department of the South Kensington Museum. Three Lectures "On the Budrum Sculptures in the British Museum, and their relation to Architecture," by Mr. Newton; "On the Chemistry of Food," by Dr. Lankester; and another "On the Preparation of Food." On the 5th of December the Rev. W. H. Brookfield will lecture "On Lessening the Irksomeness of Instruction." On the 12th, Mr. Harry Chester will tell the public "How to set about the Building of a School." And on the 19th Dr. G. Kinkel will discourse "On the Progress of Seeing."

Prince Lucien Bonaparte, the well known philologist, has printed, for private circulation, two more specimens of English dialects as spoken in the present year. One specimen is in the Cornish dialect,—the other is in that of Dorset. The latter is the more droll and curious. For each specimen the Song of Solomon has been chosen.

The Photographic News says that, while M. Bertsch exhibits prints of animalcules enormously magnified, M. A. Wagner exerts his ability in an opposite direction: he exhibits microscopic pictures of objects which are really astonishing. One of these is a reduced photograph of the proclamation of the Emperor of the French to the French people at the outbreak of the last war. This proclamation contains 2649 letters, all of which can be distinctly read with the aid of a suitable magnifying power, although they are included within a space of two millimetres square. M. Testud de Beauregard is said to have obtained photographs in natural colours of flowers by simple exposure to the light; for example, roses, pale violet, and green, produced without the aid of the colourer.

The Council of the Royal Society has awarded the Copley medal for the year to Professor Wilhelm Edward Weber, of Göttingen, for researches in electricity, magnetism, acoustics, &c. One of the Royal medals has been bestowed upon Mr. George Bentham, for contributions to Systematic and Descriptive Botany; and the other Royal medal to Mr. Arthur Cayley, for his Mathematical Papers, published in the Philosophical Transactions.

The Royal Academicians are called together on the 5th of December to consider the question of an increase in the number of Associates. The discussion will come on at the instance of Mr. Cope. The Athenæum says, "A good feeling prevails in the Academy towards the opening; and the adoption of Mr. Cope's reform would go far to replace the Academy in public and parliamentary confidence. It would be the first step in its elevation to the rank of a National Academy. Some members, we hear, express opinions in favour of abolishing the Associateship altogether; though, probably, the adoption of a law of unlimited Associateships would meet this view. The true theory seems to be that of the Universities and the Inns of Court. Every artist should have the right to an association with the Academy on establishing his artistic claim."

The death of Mr. Frank Stone, A.R.A., leaves the very unusual number of four vacancies in the Academy—one Academician in place of James Ward—three places in the Associateship, vice Messrs. John Phillip, Sydney Smirke, and Frank Stone.

Mr. Frank Stone's death took place last week very suddenly, from heart disease. The Athenæum describes his peculiar talents very fairly:—"Though not a man of strong genius,—sentimental and safe rather than daring and great,—he had that touch of native inspiration which sets an artist apart from the crowd of mere imitators and mechanists. His pictures have a quality of their own, in subject, style, and colour: he saw nature in the boudoir; and was the poet of chess-table, flirtations, and pianoforte embarrassments. But in this line he was unrivalled, though he had numberless imitators, from the moment he had shown the way to a new success. He may almost be said to have founded a sect among the painters—believers in the unheaved sigh and the causeless tear!" Mr. Stone was born in Manchester, on the 23rd of August, 1800. At thirty-one he came to London, and began to exhibit at the Water Colour Society. At forty he sent his first oil picture to the Academy. At fifty-one he was elected an Associate. For many years his works have taken a good place among the attractions of the exhibition. Among these are, "The Last Appeal," "Cross Purposes," "Impending Fate" and "Mated," and "The Old, Old Story!" Five or six years ago the painter made a summer residence in Boulogne; and the effect of that slight change of scene has been visible in nearly all his subsequent works. The hale, rugged beauty of the fish wives of Boulogne seems to have fired his imagination and steadied his hand. A breadth, a texture, and a simplicity unknown to his earlier works, began to show that the artist, though past his fiftieth year, was still capable of advancing in his art. The sea side claimed him to the last; and at the time of his death he had just completed his arrangements for spending the winter at work in the Isle of Thanet.

Poetry.

SELECTIONS FROM POETRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

HUMAN LIFE.*

BY THOMAS YALDEN.

THEN will penurious Heav'n no more allow!
No more on its own darling man bestow!
Is it for this he lord of all appears,
And his great Maker's image bears!
To toil beneath a wretched state,
Oppress'd with miseries and fate:
Beneath his painful burthen groan,
And, in this beaten road of life, drudge on!
Amidst our labours we possess
No kind alloys of happiness:
No soft'ning joys can call our own,
To make this bitter drug go down;
Whilst death an easie conquest gains,
And the insatiate grave in endless triumph reigns,
With throes, and pangs, into the world we come,
The curse and burthen of the womb:
Nor wretched to ourselves alone,
Our mother's labours introduce our own.
In cries and tears our infancy we waste,
Those sad prophetick tears that flow,
By instinct of our future woe;
And ev'n our dawn of life with sorrows overcast.
Thus we toil out a restless age,
Each his laborious part must have,
Down from the monarch to the slave,
Act o'er this farce of life, then drop beneath the stage.

II.

From our first drawing vital breath,
From our first starting from the womb,
Until we reach the destin'd tomb,
We all are posting on, to the dark goal of death.
Life, like a cloud that fleets before the wind,
No mark, no kind impression, leaves behind,
'Tis scatter'd like the winds that blow,
Boist'rous as them, full as inconstant too,
That know not whence they come, nor where they go.
Here we're detain'd awhile, and then Become originals again:
Time shall a man to his first self restore,
And make him intire nothing, all he was before,
No part of us, no remnant shall survive!
And yet we impudently say, we live:
No! we but ebb into ourselves again,
And only come to be, as we had never been.

* Wisdom of Solomon, chap. ii.

III.

Say, learned sage, thou that art mighty wise!
Unriddle me these mysteries:
What is the soul, the vital heat
That our mean frame does animate?
What is our breath, the breath of man,
That buoys his nature up, and does even life sustain?
Is it not air, an empty fume,
A fire that does itself consume—
A warmth that in the heart is bred,
A lambent flame with heat and motion fed?
Extinguish that, the whole is gone,
This boasted scene of life is done:
Away the phantom takes its flight,
Damn'd to a loathsome grave, and an eternal night.
The soul, th' immortal part we boast,
In one consuming minute's lost;
To its first source it must repair,
Scatter with winds, and flow with common air.
Whilst the fall'n body, by a swift decay,
Resolves into its native clay:
For dust and ashes are its second birth,
And that incorporates too, with its great parent earth.

IV.

Nor shall our names or memories survive,
Alas, no part of man can live!
The empty blasts of fame shall die,
And even those nothings taste mortality.
In vain, to future ages, we transmit
Heroick acts, and monuments of wit:
In vain, we dear bought honours leave,
To make our ashes gay, and furnish out a grave,
Ah treacherous immortality!
For thee, our stock of youth we waste,
And urge on life, that ebbs too fast;
To purchase thee with blood, the valiant fly,
And to survive in fame, the great and glorious die.
Lavish of life, they squander this estate,
And for a poor reversion wait:
Bankrupts and misers to themselves they grow,
Unbitter wretched life, with toils and woe,
To hoard up endless fame, they know not where or how.

V.

Ah think, my friends, how swift the minutes haste!
The present day intirely is our own,
Then seize the blessing ere 'tis gone:
To-morrow—fatal sound! since this may be our last.
Why do we boast of years, and sum up days!
'Tis all imaginary space:
To-day—to-day is our inheritance—
'Tis all penurious fate will give,
Posterity 'll to-morrow live,
Our sons crowd on behind, our children drive us hence.
With garlands then your temple crown,
And lie on beds of roses down:
Beds of roses we'll prepare,
Roses that our emblems are.
Awhile they flourish on the bough,
And drink large draughts of heavenly dew:
Like us, they smile, are young, and gay,
And like us too, are tenants for a day,
Since with night's blasting breath they vanish swift away.

VI.

Bring cheerful wine, and costly sweets prepare:
'Tis more than frenzy now to spare:
Let cares and business wait awhile:
Old age affords a thinking interval;
Or if they must a longer hearing have,
Bid them attend below, adjourn into the grave.
Then gay and sprightly wine produce,
Wines that wit and mirth infuse:
That feed, like oil, th' expiring flame,
Revive our drooping souls, and prop this tott'ring frame.
That when the grave our bodies has engross'd,
When virtues shall forgotten lie,
With all their boasted piety,
Honours, and titles, like ourselves, be lost;
Then our recorded vice shall flourish on,
And our immortal riots be for ever known.
This, this is what we ought to do,
The great design, the grand affair below!
Since bounteous Nature's plac'd our steward here,
Then man his grandeur should maintain
And in excess of pleasure reign,
Keep up his character, and lord of all appear.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

MODEL LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In this enlightened age we daily and hourly witness some new idea developing itself and calculated more or less to profit all who feel interested in the advancement of useful knowledge.

Of late we have been witness to the enrolment of thousands of men as volunteers in the rifle and artillery corps in support of our beloved queen and country; and I would ask what has awakened the sons of old England thus to bestir themselves after forty years and upwards of quiet repose. The answer is this, that zealous and energetic men, aided by that powerful organ the press—having the success of all at heart who are looking to the future as well as the present—have agitated their fellow men to organize and make themselves proficient in every branch of the military service for the protection of the country at large and for the enjoyment of free and religious liberty in these realms. "Example is better than precept:" acting upon this principle I would earnestly suggest to the brethren the desirability of their bestirring themselves from their slumbers, seeing how easily a great, good, and glorious improvement may be made in reference to the selection of suitable buildings, wherein to carry on the great work of Freemasonry.

Hitherto the tavern has been generally selected, notwithstanding that the sacred fane and the tavern are irreconcilable. Why then continue to give preference to the tavern when a remedy apparently so easy of access presents itself—the introduction of model Lodges; and I would ask whether the great metropolis does not possess unusual advantages for starting such a scheme. Surely with its one hundred and forty Masonic Lodges or more, and its six thousand subscribing members, one might be started with success. There are numerous available sites suitable for such a purpose, embracing, in a circle of two or three miles, some ten or twelve Lodges, and as many Lodges of Instruction, an easy distance to all interested, offering no impediment to a large and regular attendance of members within this scope upon all occasions. The funds for carrying out the work, I believe, might be raised by private subscription; or should that not succeed I think there are many ardent lovers of the science enjoying in profusion this world's goods, who would readily employ their capital in this noble work, provided an opportunity offered of so doing.

The character of the building necessary for the purpose is ably described by our esteemed Bros. Dr. Oliver and Hyde Clarke, D.C.L. I have also seen a very graphic and interesting description of the whole in Morris's "Code of Masonic Laws," an extract from which appears in The Voice of Masonry and Tidings from the Craft, Louisville, Nov. 1st, 1859.

With such appliances what may not be accomplished? Look what has been done in mechanics and other institutes by the offering of a small premium for the best essay or lecture upon given subjects. What a field for improvement would be here thrown open to our literary brethren to exercise their hidden talents in competing for the prize. No longer would these brethren absent themselves from the Lodge from a feeling of diffidence arising from their distaste for the tavern. Nothing could bar the prosperity of such a scheme. A moderate subscription would amply meet all demands; and best of all (if I mistake not) leave a surplus in hand for charitable purposes. Nay, there are hundreds in and around the metropolis and the provinces who would readily join in the work, who, alas! have long since receded from the Craft by reason of the appropriation of their Lodge funds to other than truly Masonic purposes.

With the most earnest desire to see Freemasonry advance in proportion to its sterling worth, I remain, dear Mr. Editor, yours faithfully and fraternally,

FIDELITAS.

PUBLICATION OF CANDIDATES' NAMES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In your answers to correspondents in this week's number, you state that "a brother can be ad and raised at a Lodge of emergency without his name having been inserted in the circular calling the Lodge." This is equivocal, and very likely to mislead. The Book of Constitutions states (page 59, clause 9)—"The business to be transacted at such Lodge of emergency shall be expressed in the summons, recorded on the minutes, and no other business shall be entered upon." Would it not therefore be much better that the brother's name who is to be passed or raised should appear therein in order to prevent discussion or mistakes?

AN OLD P.M.

27th November, 1859.

[We admit with "An Old P.M." that it would be better to have the names placed in the summons; but we still think that a brother having been regularly initiated may be passed and raised at any meeting of the Lodge, provided the necessary time has fully elapsed.—Ed.]

SUNDAY LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In looking over your list of "Appointments" one cannot help wondering at the Sunday being appointed for Lodges of Instruction in the metropolis. Surely this is contrary to the letter of the moral law; and, our meetings being purely secular, contrary to the law of the land too. The sooner, in my opinion, this blot is taken from our escutcheon the better.

Fraternally yours,
Z.

[The Board of General Purposes have recently caused the Sunday Lodges of Instruction to be taken out of the Kalendar, as contrary to the ancient charges, in which it says that Masons are to work on all lawful days; but we cannot consider it against the law of the land for the brethren to meet and rehearse the ceremonies on a Sunday—though perhaps it is better avoided.—Ed.]

VOTING BY PROXY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—May I request the favour of your inserting in the next number of the Magazine, the enclosed letter from the Grand Secretary, being a reply from the Board of General Purposes to a memorial from the Lodge of Economy, reported in the Magazine of the 10th of September last, page 193.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

J. L. HASLEHAM, W.M., No. 90.

3, Hyde-terrace, Winchester,
Nov. 28th, 1859.

(Copy.)

"Freemasons Hall, London, W.C.

"20 October, 1859.

"W. Master,—I have the honour to inform you that the memorial from the Lodge of Economy No. 90, praying that the Board of General Purposes would take into their consideration the subject of voting by proxy in Grand Lodge, was taken into consideration on Tuesday last the 18th instant, when the following resolution was carried unanimously: 'That this Board having attentively considered the memorial requesting them to recommend to Grand Lodge that Provincial Brethren be permitted to vote by proxy, are of opinion, that such a change of the law would be not only disadvantageous to the Craft, but might lead to confusion and injustice.'

"By order of the Board,

"J. L. Hasleham, Esq., W. M., Lodge of Economy, No. 90, Winchester."

"WM. GRAY CLARKE, G.S."

INSPECTION OF LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In last week's Magazine, I had great pleasure in perusing a description of a "Model Lodge" from Rob Morris's Code of Masonic Laws. Although I am what may be termed a young Mason, I have, nevertheless, visited many Lodges, and have with one exception been uniformly disappointed in their appearance and manner of working. Often have I, after attending such Lodges, seen "in my mind's eye" the very picture drawn by Rob Morris of a "Model Lodge;" and never, I must candidly confess, did I in reality see anything approach his graphic description of one, until I visited Hiram Lodge, No. 105, Buffalo, New York. This Lodge is furnished with every requisite named by Bro. Morris but a library, and I am certain that want has only to be mentioned to have it supplied, as they have plenty of funds. The members of Hiram Lodge must number at least two hundred, and I can assure you a better worked Lodge it would be hard to find, with the lectures delivered as they should be, in a solemn and impressive manner by the W.M. Indeed all the American Lodges that I visited appeared to be in a high state of perfection. Would that I could pass such an encomium on our own—but I cannot, as far as my experience goes, and from what I learn from others; but ought not this to be remedied? I think so. It is only by comparison that we discover our shortcomings, therefore, censure cannot justly be attached to me for endeavouring to eradicate them. I understand that there are over 2,000 Lodges in the United Kingdom (a goodly number certainly, I only wish it was 4,000)—then what could be easier than to raise a fund for the purpose of employing inspectors? I am of opinion that if the Grand Lodges of the empire were to send, periodically, inspectors on a tour of inspection throughout the kingdom to see and closely examine the mode and manner of working the different Lodges, and insist on their strict adherence to rules, laws, regulations, and report the result of such inquiry to the proper quarter, it would be the means of preserving these ancient and venerable landmarks which have been handed down to us from time immemorial. To defray the expenses thus incurred, I propose that each Lodge be taxed annually to the amount of 2*l.* thus making a yearly income of 4000*l.* which, I think, would cover the whole of them; and to use the words of an eminent individual, and probably a brother, "would be a mere fleabite." The reasons for a plan of this description are so many and obvious, which will be at once apparent to the initiated, that it is needless for me to enumerate them here, and should something of the kind be adopted, we would have many "Model Lodges" in our midst in a short time. I remain, yours fraternally,

A FRIEND TO MODEL LODGES.

Skibbereen, County Cork,
November 29th, 1859.

MASONRY IN GERMANY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—Some time ago you published in your Magazine, of the 12th Nov., page 373, a notice about "German Operative Masonry." It is there said—"Ascertain if these Word Masons (Wort Maurer) hold anything in common with the Craft, for if they do the information is of immense importance as a connecting link between the operative guildsman of the dark ages and the speculative Mason of the present day."

You are quite right, dear brother—this information is of some importance. There is no doubt the operative Masons of the middle ages are connected with the speculative Masons of the present day, for they have had not only signs, tokens, and words like us, but also nearly the same ceremonies and other customs for the reception of their candidates. From this likeness some German Masonic authors are convinced, that the birthplace of the Craft is Germany, and especially the "Bauhütten" of the middle ages. See passim, the works of Heldmann, Die Ältesten Denkmale der Deutschen Bruderschaft; and Fallou, Die Mysterien der Freimaurerei und ihr Wahrer Grund und Ursprung; as well as Winzer, Die Bruderschaften des Mittelalters.

If the whole Craft be one great Masonic Lodge, bound together by the sacred ties of brotherly love, relief and truth, one Masonic body should surely take notice of another. I much regret that you, dear brother, so greatly neglect the German brotherhood, and that you never take any notice of them. If you ever read the Bauhütte, the German Masonic journal, you can ascertain for yourself, that each number contains something about England, and that your own name, as well as that of your journal, is frequently mentioned in its pages. All distinguished authors of England have more or less knowledge of German literature. Ought not this also to be the case with German Masonic literature? You never mention the works of the philosopher Bro. Krause, of Bro. Moesdorf, of Bro. Fessler, the late Deputy Grand Master of the Royal York, at Berlin; nor have you ever noticed the Bauhütte which has been in existence since July, 1858.

Bro. Laurie, at Edinburgh, who has lately published a second edition of his history of Freemasonry in Scotland, appears to be equally unacquainted with the works of the learned Br. Kloss, who has written a history of the Grand Lodges of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

In the course of the next year I intend to publish a complete and authentic history of Freemasonry of all times and nations. Perhaps some English brother may be inclined to translate this work.

Excuse the errors of a German, who does not understand how to write like an Englishman, and believe me, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

J. G. FINDEL,

Editor of the "Bauhütte;" member of the Minerva Lodge at Leipzig; honorary member of the Lodges "Johannes," at Ludwigsburg, and "Verschwisterung," at Glauchau.

Orient of Leipzig, 28th Nov., 1859.

[We shall be glad to receive a copy of Die Bauhütte, which we have not yet seen. Attention, however, was called to the work in our number of Nov. 19th.—Ed.]

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

WARRANTS have been recently granted by the M.W.G.M. for the following Lodges:—No. 1100, Zetland, Kyneton, Victoria; No. 1101, Creswick Havilah, Creswick, Victoria; No. 1102, Derwent, New Norfolk, Tasmania, S.; No. 1103, Pacific, Hobart Town, Tasmania, S.; No. 1104, Repose, King's Head Hotel, Derby.

In the new edition of the Kalendar just published, the Canadian Lodges are very properly omitted, as being no longer under British jurisdiction. We hope the time is not far distant for revising the numbers of the various Lodges.

THE St. James's Union Lodge (No. 211) of Instruction will hold their anniversary banquet on Thursday, the 8th inst. Bro. H. A. Stacey, of the mother Lodge, will preside.

METROPOLITAN.

THE BOYS SCHOOL.

We understand that at the last meeting of the House Committee it was resolved to dispense with the further services of the present second master. It was also resolved, that the teaching of Greek was unnecessary excepting in special cases. We trust the reforms in the management will not stop here.

GRAND LODGE.

THE following is the official agenda paper of the business to be transacted in Grand Lodge on Wednesday next; a summary of which has already appeared in our columns.

The Minutes of the Quarterly Communication of the 7th September, for confirmation.

Nomination of M.W. Grand Master for the year ensuing.

Election of twelve Past Masters to serve on the Board of Benevolence.

The report of the Board of Benevolence for the last quarter for adoption.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES.

The Board of General Purposes beg to report that they have received and adjudicated upon the following complaints:—

1. By the Master of a Lodge against his Wardens for alleged acts of insubordination arising out of rather unusual circumstances, and which induced the Master to forbid the Lodge to meet on the next regular day for assembling; against this act of the Master the members of the Lodge preferred a counter complaint.

As the differences arose out of circumstances of a personal nature wholly unconnected with Freemasonry, and have since been amicably adjusted, the board deem it inadvisable to enter upon further detail, than that they admonished the Wardens to pay due obedience to the Worshipful Master; and the Worshipful Master that it is his bounden duty to cause the Lodge to be regularly summoned for meeting on the several days fixed by the by-laws.

2. By the Board of Benevolence against the Lodge, No. 133, at Colne, for certifying to the petition of a brother, that he had been a regular contributing member for the space of twenty-seven years, whereas Grand Lodge dues had been paid for only twenty-two and a half years: the Board, taking into consideration the explanation offered, ordered the arrears to be paid forthwith, which has been done.

3. Against the Lodge No. 357, Shepton Mallet, for having advanced a brother to the second degree within fifteen days of his initiation; the board believing that the irregularity arose from thoughtlessness, and not from any disposition to contravene the laws, admonished the W. Master to be more cautious for the future, and imposed a fine upon the Lodge of one guinea, to be paid to the Fund of Benevolence.

The board also report, that it having come to their knowledge that there are at present existing in London, and elsewhere in this country, spurious Lodges claiming to be Freemasons, they have issued a circular letter to the Masters of Lodges, cautioning them upon the subject, and have furnished them with a facsimile copy of a certificate issued by a body established at Stratford, in Essex, and calling itself "the reformed Masonic Order of Memphis, or Rite of the Grand Lodge of the Philadelphes."

The board have received a memorial from the St. David's Lodge, No. 554, Berwick, suggesting that Grand Lodge should make advances of money to private Lodge, to assist them in building Lodge rooms, the property to be held as security for the payment of principal and interest. The board have carefully considered the question thus opened, and as the result of their deliberation they beg to recommend the following resolution for the adoption of Grand Lodge:—

"That it would be a legitimate and judicious application of the funds of General Purposes, to advance money on loan to provincial Lodges to assist them in erecting Masonic halls or Lodge rooms, provided that proper security be given for the repayment of the principal, with interest, within a reasonable period."

The board also report that they have received memorials from Lodges No. 90, at Winchester, No. 915, at Trowbridge, No. 555, at Southampton, and No. 839, at Newbury, requesting them to recommend to Grand Lodge that provincial brethren be permitted to vote by proxy therein: in two of these memorials the proposal to vote by proxy is limited to the elections of members of the different boards, in the third it includes the election of the M.W. Grand Master also, and in the fourth it is without limit. The board have most attentively considered the subject, and they are of opinion that they cannot with propriety recommend such a change in the law, believing that it is not called for, that it would not be to the advantage of the Craft, but would be likely to lead to confusion and abuse.

The attention of the board having been directed to the inconvenience which has occasionally arisen from the practice of brethren being put in nomination for election on the various boards without their knowledge or consent, the board submit to the consideration of Grand Lodge to order "that in future the brother presiding at the General Committee shall not receive, nor shall the Grand Secretary record, any nomination except it be in writing signed by a member of the Grand Lodge, in which the names of the candidates, together with the numbers of their respective Lodges and whether Masters or Past Masters, shall be specified."

Many errors being apparent in the calendar which appear to have arisen from the fact that Lodges have frequently changed their days of meeting without giving notice to the Grand Secretary as required by the Book of Constitutions, the Board have directed a circular to be sent to the Masters of all Lodges, requesting them to make a return forthwith of their days of meeting, and they desire to impress upon the brethren generally that much convenience will result from a strict compliance with this request. (Signed) JOHN HAVES, President.

Freemasons' Hall, November 23rd, 1859,

The board subjoin a statement of the receipts and disbursements on account of the Grand Lodge funds during the present quarter, as reported by the Finance Committee on the 11th Nov. inst., viz. :—

BENEVOLENCE.
Balance in the hands of the Grand Treasurer on the 1st October, 1859	£316	16	2
Subsequent receipts	228	11	0
	545	7	2
Disbursements	155	0	0
Balance on this account	390	7	2
GENERAL PURPOSES.
Balance in the hands of the Grand
Treasurer on the 1st October, 1859	468	0	3
Subsequent receipts	746	2	8
Balance on this account	1214	2	11
Amount of monies received, for the appropriation of which no directions have yet been given by the parties remitting	614	11	5
	£2219	1	6

Of which balance there is in the hands of the Grand Treasurer	2169	1	6
Grand Secretary for petty cash	50	0	0
	£2219	1	6

REPORT OF THE COLONIAL BOARD.

The Colonial Board beg to report, that in the case of the memorial presented to Grand Lodge by the District Grand Lodge of Victoria, praying for a reduction of fees on registration and certificate, which memorial was referred back by Grand Lodge to this board at the quarterly communication held on the 2nd day of March last, the board caused a friendly letter to be addressed to the memorialists, pointing out the objections that lay in the way of complying with their request after the very great reduction in fees so recently made by Grand Lodge in favour of provincial brethren. The board are now happy to be able to state to Grand Lodge that a communication has been received from the Provincial Grand Secretary for the province of Victoria, to the effect that such letter having been read at the quarterly communication of the Provincial Grand Lodge the 20th of June, last, a unanimous opinion was expressed that the said dues were as low as they possibly could be, and that therefore no further action was taken in the matter. And the Provincial Grand Secretary adds that the Masonic body in that colony, hailing under the English constitution, are devotedly attached to their Mother Grand Lodge, a statement which the board are sure Grand Lodge will receive with great satisfaction.

(Signed) J. LL. EVANS, President.
Freemasons' Hall, November 23rd, 1859.

Notice of motion by Bro. George Barrett, W.M. No. 212.—"To move a grant of £50 from the Fund of General Purposes to supply coals, &c., to the inmates of the Masonic Asylum, Croydon."

CASTLE LODGE OF HARMONY (No. 27).—A meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, November 28th, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street, when Bro. William Robert Wood, W.M., was unanimously re-elected to that distinguished office. Bro. Nelson was, of course, re-elected Treasurer; Bros. Wheeler and Hinxman, P.M.s; and several members were present. Bro. Wm. Smith, of No. 25, was a visitor on this occasion.

JORDAN LODGE (No. 237).—The first regular meeting for the season was held on Friday, 18th ult., when Bro. Finglass was duly passed to the second degree. A communication from the Grand Lodge, respecting a spurious Lodge at Stratford, was read and ordered to be entered on the minutes. The minutes of the last regular meeting, held in May, and of two Lodges of emergency, held during the vacation, were confirmed, and three gentlemen were proposed as candidates for initiation. The W.M., Bro. Robinson, performed the duties of his position in his usual impressive manner. An extract from the minutes was directed to be placed in the hands of the editor of the Freemasons' Magazine, that it might be printed with his account of the meeting of the Lodge. A full report of the proceedings appeared in our number of November 19th. The chief object (although the Lodge had been summoned for other business) the W.M., Bro. Robinson, had for calling the brethren together was explained by him at the banquet to be, to take leave of Bro. Farnham, before his departure for Bombay. On proposing his health, and wishing him success in the arduous and responsible duties he had been appointed to discharge in the education and moral training of the children belonging to the British soldiers in that part of India, the W.M. referred to the moral and intellectual qualifications which Bro. Farnham possessed for the work in which he was about to be engaged, and also to his acquirements in Masonry, which he said would entitle him to the respect of the Craft wherever he went. A heartfelt acquiescence was given by the brethren to the kind observations of the W.M. Bro. Farnham, in returning thanks, appeared much moved by the fraternal feelings manifested towards him. In addition to the usual business of the Lodge, and the election of the W.M. for the ensuing year, there will be three brothers raised, one passed, and probably three initiated at the next meeting.

INSTRUCTION.

ALBION LODGE (No. 9).—At the last meeting of this Lodge, Bro. Thos. Allen (P.M., No. 276), as W.M., opened the Lodge, Bro. Gladwin acting as S.W., and Bro. Walkley as J.W. The appointed work for the evening was the fifteen sections. The respondents were: first lecture—Bro. Stacey, Allen, jun., Haskins, Gladwin, Reilly, Walkley, Collard; second lecture—Bros. Sedgwick, Evenden, Stacey, Thoms, Stacey; third lecture—Bros. Gorton, Newall, Collard. Bros. H. Hart, of No. 211, and Hawkes, No. 349, Scotland, were elected joining members. A vote of thanks was recorded on the minutes of the Lodge to Bro. Allen, for the very excellent manner he had discharged his duties on the occasion. The Lodge was closed at half past nine o'clock.

CONFIDENCE LODGE (No. 228).—The usual meeting of this Lodge was held on Wednesday evening, at the Bengal Arms Tavern, Birchin-lane

Bro. Johnston, W.M. elect of the parent Lodge, presided; Bro. Phelps, S.W., and Bro. Gilling, J.W. The Lodge having been opened in the first and second degrees, Bro. Woodward was questioned, and offering proofs of his proficiency, he was in due form raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The Lodge was then resumed to the second degree, and the sections of the degree were worked by the brethren, the questions by Bros. Anslow, Brewer, Jackson, and Brett. The Lodge was then resumed to the first degree, and afterwards it was proposed and unanimously agreed to, that the sum of twenty guineas be voted to the Girls School, so that by this vote the Lodge are now life governors of all the Masonic charities. A vote of thanks was ordered to be recorded on the minutes to the Worshipful Master for presiding, and after Bro. Robins, of the parent Lodge, had been admitted as a joining member, the Lodge was closed in due form.

ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE PRINCE FREDERICK WILLIAM LODGE,
NO. 1055.

This reunion took place at the Knights of St. John, St. John's Wood, on Wednesday, the 23rd instant, when Bro. T. A. Adams worked the ceremony of Lodge consecration in his usual correct and impressive manner. Bro. Matthew Cooke directed the music, and was assisted by Bro. J. W. Adams. After this ceremony, Bro. Caulcher, P.M., and founder, of the parent Lodge, very ably performed a portion of the ceremony of installation, and the business of the evening concluded by Bro. T. A. Adams working the first section of the first lecture. There was a considerable number of brethren elected members, and the Lodge bids fair to be very numerous.

After a substantial supper the usual routine toasts were given by the chairman, Bro. T. A. Adams, and he then proposed "The Founders of the Prince Frederick William Lodge," for which Bro. Caulcher returned thanks. This was followed by "Long Life and Prosperity to the Prince Frederick William Lodge of Instruction," Bro. Adams dilating upon the great benefit of such a means of diffusing Masonic information, and reminding the members that in Lodges of Instruction, and in them only, could such knowledge be obtained.

The next toast was "The Visitors," Bro. Adams said it was pleasurable at all times to see them, and they would always receive a hearty welcome there. He would couple the toast with the name of a brother who was well known to many there and held in high estimation—Bro. Gillespie.

Bro. Gillespie said that as he was not an entire stranger there, having been present at the opening of the Lodge; he had then anticipated its success, more especially as it had been inaugurated under illustrious auspices. The main cause of its prosperity must certainly be attributed to Bro. Caulcher, than whom a more zealous and painstaking Mason it would be hard to find; and backed as he was by so many skilful Masons, it was not to be wondered at that the Lodge had reached such a height of prosperity, and he hoped it would continue to advance in the same ratio. In regard to the Lodge of Instruction, attached to the mother Lodge whose first anniversary they were that night celebrating, he believed, in common with all Lodges of Instruction, it was calculated to promote the development of true Masonic feeling, as well as to fit the members for the performance of their duties in the Lodge with accuracy and zeal. From the full attendance that evening he thought that the Prince Frederick William Lodge of Instruction was sure to prosper, and he hoped it would assume a position in which it would yield to none. On behalf of himself and the visitors he begged to return thanks, and hoped to be able to be present on many such anniversaries.

Bro. Caulcher then rose to perform a duty which was most agreeable to him, in proposing the health of Bro. T. A. Adams. (Cheers). The brethren had seen for themselves how excellently Bro. Adams had performed the ceremony of consecration that evening, and he felt sure it would be as pleasing a duty to them as it was to himself to meet the toast with their warmest approval, for no one was more ready and willing than Bro. T. A. Adams to attend anywhere and everywhere to impart instruction; and the instruction so given was of a high order, Bro. Adams being one of the most zealous and celebrated Masons living. He (Bro. Caulcher) was proud to acknowledge him as his own preceptor; what he knew of Masonry he had learned from Bro. Adams, to whose pains he was greatly indebted. To prove his gratitude he hoped to advance daily so as not to bring discredit on his tutor. With these observations he begged to propose "The health of the Worshipful Master of the evening, Bro. T. A. Adams. (Cheers).

Bro. Adams, in reply, said—he was always happy and proud to do his best in imparting such knowledge as he himself had gained. He was glad to be surrounded by so many Masons; they might reckon on his being always the same, and he hoped that he might see them always the same for many years to come.

The next toast was, "Health and long life to the Officers of the Mother Lodge," coupled with the name of the Junior Warden.

The Junior Warden replied, stating that it was their endeavour to work the Lodge with propriety, and returning thanks for the appreciation of their attempts.

The chairman then gave, "To all poor and distressed Masons."

A brother, whose name we could not learn, obtained permission to propose a toast. He said that it must be a self evident truism that instruction could not proceed without teachers and pupils, and as a learner he thought they should not separate without referring to one who was always ready to meet them on every occasion and afford them that assistance they stood so much in need of, and he believed that it was on occasions of that kind (anniversary festivals) that the opportunity presented itself to acknowledge their obligations to those to whom they were indebted. Their Bro. Le Gassick, P.M., was present every night; was always willing to lead them in the right path, and had been the guiding star of the young Masons of that Lodge, and he hoped that they would show their appreciation of his kindness by drinking his health.

Bro. Le Gassick owned that he was somewhat taken by surprise, but as he (by accident) resided in the immediate neighbourhood of the Lodge he promised to attend, and if his efforts had met with success he was very pleased at it, and should continue to try and deserve their approbation.

Bro. Stiles, the landlord of the house, was deservedly complimented by the brethren for his excellent arrangements for their comfort.

The toasts were relieved during the evening by the capital singing of Bros. Platt, Jas. W. Adams, and Baker.

PROVINCIAL.

BRISTOL.

BRISTOL.—Moirs Lodge (No. 408).—The annual festival of this Lodge was held on Friday, 25th November, when the W.M., Bro. C. McMillan, was supported by about forty brethren of the province, including the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., Bro. William Powell. In the apparent absence of all other topics of interest, the report of the proceedings at the last regular Lodge, contained in the Magazine of 12th November, came in for a very large share of criticism on the part of one or two P.M.s., whom "the cap" seemed to "fit," and to whom the statement of a little wholesome truth appeared far less palatable than the excellent repast provided by the worthy hostess of the "Montague" was to the rest of the company. The R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, in particular, stigmatized the Freemasons' Magazine "a one sided periodical" and expressed his surprise that the Editor should insert the proceedings of any Lodge without the authority of the Worshipful Master. But as no single word contained in the said report was questioned, our correspondent considered it quite as needless to defend its accuracy, as he does upon the present occasion; and only begs to assure those brethren—for whom he entertains a very high personal regard, but whose digestive organs he so innocently interfered with—that a passing allusion to the "absurdity" of attempting to supplement our constitutions by laws which are found to be impracticable in their operations and disastrous in their results, was dictated by no sentiments adverse to the best interests of the Lodge.

DEVONSHIRE.

TOTNES.—Pleiades Lodge (No. 1012).—A Lodge of emergency was holden on Friday last, at the Masonic rooms, when there was a full attendance of the brethren, and several provincial officers and visitors to witness the ceremonial of the initiation of John Dunn, Esq., M.P. for the borough of Dartmouth. Bro. T. H. Edmonds, W.M., occupied the chair for the first time since his installation; and performed the ceremonies of initiation and passing in a most accurate and masterly style, to the great gratification of all the brethren present.

DURHAM.

GATESHEAD.—Lodge of Industry (No. 1).—On the 28th ult., being the regular meeting, the Lodge was opened with solemn prayer by the W.M., Bro. C. J. Banister, Prov. S.G.D., and P.M., No. 267; assisted by Bro. H. Hotham, P.M., (P. Prov. J.G.W., Northumberland), as S.W.; Bro. Loads, as S.D.; and the rest of the Officers. Bro. Harrison, Pro. G. Org., directed the musical part of the ceremonies. Bros. Hy. and R. S. Bagnall, and Bro. Jno. J. Brumwell, were passed to the second degree, and Mr. Josh. Heaward and Mr. D. T. Stewart, were initiated into the mysteries of the Order by the W.M. Bro. Sept. Bell, P.M., explained the working tools in each degree, and the W.M. delivered the lecture of each tracing board in his usual earnest manner. The business of the Lodge being concluded, it was closed in due form and with solemn prayer. There were visitors from Whitby, Edinburgh, and the towns in the neighbourhood who, together with the brethren of Lodge, No. 56, spent a very happy evening, the loyal and Masonic toasts being given and responded to in a truly Masonic spirit.

ESSEX.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

The Provincial Grand Lodge of Essex was held at the Shire Hall, Chelmsford, on Monday, the 21st of November, Bro. Major Skinner, D. Prov. G.M., presiding (in the absence of Bro. Bagshaw, Prov. G.M.) supported by Bro. Burton, P. Prov. G. Reg., as D. Prov. G.M.; Rev. Bro. Arnold, Prov. G. Chaplain; W. P. Scott, P.G.D.; J. P. Parel, P. Prov. G.D.; Meggy, P. Prov. G.W.; Austen, Prov. G. Org.; Stone, P. Prov. G.D.; Tiplin, P. Prov. G. Dir. of Cers.; Wiseman, Field, C. Ind. Hockton, Crook, Webb, S. Webb, Goodchild, W. Davis, C. Davis, Adlard, &c., &c.

The patent reappointing Bro. Major Skinner, D. Prov. G.M., having been read, the R.W. brother proceeded to appoint Bros. Durant as Prov. S.G.W.; Motion, Prov. J.G.W.; T. Osborne, Prov. S.G.D.; Huish, Prov. J.G.D.; W. Pans, Prov. G. Purs.; the other officers remaining as last year, Bro. Pattison having been unanimously re-elected Treasurer.

At the conclusion of the business the brethren adjourned to dinner at the White Hart Tavern, the Rev. Bro. Arnold, Prov. G. Chap., presiding. Various loyal and Masonic toasts were drunk, and in the course of the evening Bro. Adlard, the acting Grand Dir. of Cers. of the day, made an able appeal on behalf of the charities, more especially the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Masons and their Widows, which was liberally responded to by the brethren present, many of whom at once handed their subscriptions to Bro. Adlard.

The company separated at an early hour, there being but a limited attendance, owing to a want of sufficient notice—a fault which also existed last year.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Glover Lodge (No. 152).—This Lodge held its usual fortnightly meeting at Freemasons' Hall, Bugle-street, Southampton, on Thursday, the 24th inst., at seven o'clock, Bro. Abraham, P.M., took the chair and explained to the brethren that the absence of the Worshipful Master was occasioned by his having invited (in his capacity as mayor) the officers of the Great Eastern steamship to dinner at his private house. The principal business of the evening consisted of the nomination of the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. Bro. Abraham nominated Bro. Payne, and said he had no doubt that he would be elected unanimously; he had rendered great services to the Lodge as a most useful and zealous officer, and during the past year especially he had acted with so much good feeling and courtesy in continually holding himself at the disposal of the Lodge and filling any office for the nonce in which he could be of use, that he felt sure the brethren would place him in the chair. Bro. Passenger, S.W., seconded the nomination; he could bear his testimony to the truth of Bro. Abraham's remarks, he was glad to find that the present would be a unanimous election. It would do credit and service to the Lodge, he believed Bro. Payne would make a zealous and efficient Master, and by his known urbanity of manner and goodness of heart he would be able to give more than ordinary impetus to the interests of the Lodge. The other officers having been nominated, Bro. Passenger moved and Bro. Philips seconded a resolution "that the Secretary write to inform the W.M. that a subscription had been organized, and the whole of the money raised in a few days, for the purpose of having his portrait taken in oil, framing the same, and hanging it with the collection of paintings now in that hall, as a tribute of esteem from the brethren of the Lodge. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren spent a very pleasant evening. Upwards of forty dined together.

KENT.

GRAVESEND.—Lodges of Freedom (No. 91) and Sympathy (No. 709).—The monthly meeting of these Lodges was held on Monday, the 21st inst., at half past seven o'clock, at the Town Hall, Bro. Pottinger, W.M. Bro. Farr was passed to the third degree. Mr. Hinwood, Mr. Russell, and Mr. Edwin Everett were initiated into Freemasonry, the latter as a serving brother to the Lodges. The worshipful the mayor of this ancient borough paid his first visit to the Lodge since his election to office, and was presented by Bro. Dobson, the brethren saluting him as Masons. Bro. James Gardner (the mayor), who stands exceedingly high in the estimation of the brethren, as well as all his fellow townsmen, acknowledged the mark of respect in a neat and really Masonic speech. He is a Mason highly esteemed by his brethren as an example of what a good Craftsman ought to be.

LANCASHIRE (WEST).

LIVERPOOL.—Lodge of Instruction (No. 294).—At a meeting of this Lodge of Instruction, held on the 29th of November, 1859, at the Masonic Temple, Hope-street, Bro. Kearne took the chair. The Lodge was opened in the first and second degrees, when Bro. Younghusband, W.M. of the mother Lodge, delivered the lecture on the second tracing board; the Lodge was then opened in the third degree, and the sections worked by Bro. Kearne.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

ASHEBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.—Favers and Icomhoe (Lodge No. 1081).—We have received a copy of the by-laws of this Lodge, which appear to have been drawn up with great care and every attention to the landmarks of the Order, so as to meet almost every possible case which can arise in the working of the Lodge. There is only one addition we should like made—an addition which we wish we could find in the by-laws of every Lodge—the setting aside of a certain percentage of all receipts to form a charitable fund irrespective of the contributions to Grand Lodge. However, the Lodge is but young yet, and we doubt not the addition will come in due time.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

HIGHBRIDGE.—Rural Philanthropic Lodge (No. 367).—A Lodge of emergency was holden at the Railway Hotel, Highbridge, on Friday, the 26th of November, 1859, for the purpose of initiating the son of Bro. C. Halliday, P.M., by dispensation, he not being of the full age of twenty-one years; also Mr. Joseph Doel, merchant; Bro. Henry Bridges, P.M. and Secretary, presiding. The ballot was taken for Mr. William Davidge Halliday and Mr. Joseph Doel, who, being approved, were initiated into the Order. Bro. J. D. Jarman was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and Bro. H. Lecker was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The Lodge was then closed to the first degree, when Bro. W. D. Halliday and J. Doel were admitted and received the charge from the W.M. Several letters were then read, including one from Grand Lodge respecting spurious Lodges existing in London and elsewhere; the Secretary was requested to fulfil the wishes of the Board of General Purposes by having the same entered in the minutes. The Lodge was then closed in due form and solemn prayer, when the brethren, numbering twenty-two, adjourned to refreshment; the evening was spent in a very agreeable manner, and the brethren separated at an early hour.

ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL.

LEICESTER.—Chapter of Fortitude (No. 348).—A convocation of the above Chapter was holden on Monday evening, the 21st instant, at the Masonic Hall. There were present Comps. E. Clephan, M.E.Z.; W. Kelly, P.Z.; Kinder, J.; Pettifor, P.S. pro. tem.; Windram, Treas.; Bankart, E.; Cummings, N.; Gill, &c., &c. Bro. J. B. Haxby, of No. 348, was exalted to the sublime degree of the Royal Arch. The ceremony was performed by the M.E.Z., assisted by Comp. Kelly, who kindly gave the symbolical lecture, in the absence of Comp. Underwood. Comp. Kinder, J., delivered the historical lecture with his usual ability. A ballot was taken for the officers for the ensuing year. The following Companions were elected:—Comps. Underwood, M.E.Z.; Kinder, H.; Bankart, J.; Brewin, P.S.; Cummings, E.; and Paul, N. The M.E.Z., after alluding to the valuable services of Comp. Windram upon all occasions, proposed him for continuance as Treasurer for the next year. A ballot was taken, and Comp. Windram was unanimously elected. Comp. Kelly proposed a vote of thanks to Comp. Clephan for having performed the duties of the chair for two years; and congratulated him on his successful working of the difficult and beautiful ceremonies of the degree. Comp. Clephan thanked the Chapter for the vote they had passed. He expressed his gratification at the choice of officers they had made. With such good working young Masons as Comp. Brewin and others, the Lodges and Chapters need fear no decline. He thought the Chapter had done well to place their excellent Companion Underwood in the first chair. It was a graceful act of courtesy to an old and tried Mason; and he should be very happy to render Comp. Underwood any assistance in his power during his continuance in the chair. After the Chapter was closed the Companions adjourned to refreshment in the adjoining supper-room.

MAIDSTONE.—Belvidere Chapter (No. 741).—The usual quarterly convocation of this chapter took place on Wednesday evening, Comp. Cruttenden, M.E.Z., presided, assisted by Comps. Cooke, H., and Sergeant, J. The principal business of the evening was the election of officers for the ensuing year, as follows:—Comp. Cooke, M.E.Z.; Sergeant, H.; Cruttenden, jun., J.; Pearson, E.; F. Day, N.; R. Day, P.S.; and Briggs, Janitor. On the motion of Comp. Cooke it was unanimously determined to present to Comp. Cruttenden, sen., on his retirement from office, a handsome jewel as a mark of personal esteem, and as an acknowledgment of the able way in which he has discharged the duties of M.E.Z. during the present year. A resolution, proposed at the last meeting, was now confirmed, altering the days of meeting, which in future are to be the fourth Wednesdays in the months of February, May, August, and November respectively.

AMERICA.

WASHINGTON.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

THE corner stone of a new and very large Presbyterian Church, in the City of Washington, was laid with Masonic ceremonies on the 10th of October; a concourse of three or four thousand persons was present, and among them many persons of note.

The New York Courier says:—We particularly noticed General Cass, the venerable Secretary of State, with his family. The Grand Lodge of the district of Columbia, escorted by Washington Commandery E. T., under the command of our well known and highly esteemed Bro. Sir B. B. French, Grand Master of Knights Templar, arrived on the ground about five o'clock. The ceremonies were performed in a very impressive manner by the M.W.G.M. Bro. the Hon. G. C. Whiting, and the following oration was pronounced by Rev. W. D. Haley, the Grand Chaplain of the district of Columbia:

"It is an ancient Masonic custom to close our ceremonies at the laying of a corner stone with an oration illustrating the symbols we employ; it is my duty to perform that grateful task on this occasion, but I am warned by the approaching shades of evening that courtesy to those who are announced to address this assemblage, on behalf of the church, after the conclusion of our Masonic ceremonies, will require me to refrain from speaking of several matters that I had intended to notice, and that it would have been proper to have passed in review. We have not been engaged in any idle show or empty pageant, but have only done to-day what history has approved for centuries, and I am content to let history play the orator. I do not presume to stand here as the apologist or eulogist of the church, those offices, if indeed they are needed, may be more fitly filled by those who are to follow me. Nor am I here as the apologist or eulogist of the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons.

"Freemasonry has never needed an apologist—it has never appealed to public opinion, and so far from seeking popularity guards its mystic portals with severest vigilance, and allows none to enter who are not earnest seekers of the light it dispenses. Its eulogium is written in a long and ancient record—in the gratitude of the widow and orphan, in the thanks of the stranger and the sick, in its gifts to science, and its services to morality. Poets the most inspired, philosophers the most profound, divines the most devout, and statesmen the most patriotic, have been proud to lay their garlands upon its altar. One case in point will illustrate this. I know of no historic fact more memorable or instructive than one which occurred in this city several years ago; and I do not stop to prove that it did occur, although I am aware that, as one large volume has conclusively proved Napoleon Bonaparte was not a man but only a myth, so a feeble controversy was maintained upon the fact I am about to mention, until the learned and lucid argument of one who being present shall be nameless, and whose name if I spoke it must be uttered in French, became 'the end of controversy.' I mean the laying of the corner stone of the capitol of this great republic by him whom no title could honour, and whom we delight to call simply George Washington. Amongst all the great and honourable deeds of his life he never did a wiser; for when the founders of our antient Craft cast about for a symbol, they did not select the badge of royalty, the kingly crown or the imperial purple, but they adopted this apron—the symbol of labour—teaching us so that society rests upon its men while despotism and imaginary dignities are temporary, and have within themselves the seeds of decay. Freemasonry might well be cherished by Washington, for it was the oldest form of that conservative republicanism he loved so much and served so well.

"But I must let the theme pass, and restrict myself to offering the greeting of the Grand Lodge, whose servant I am, to the four classes into which this assemblage may be divided. 1st, the ladies; 2nd, the citizens; 3rd, the members of this church; and, 4th, the craftsmen.

"1st. To the ladies I can only say, that woman should be the staunchest friend of Freemasonry, for Freemasonry is the staunchest friend of woman. It does not indeed invite her into its mysteries, but it watches for her interests and honour with untiring devotion. Woman is always mentioned in the teachings of the Craft with profoundest respect and tenderest delicacy. If I had time I could cite many instances in which, when all else failed, Freemasonry has saved widows and orphan daughters from want, and all its horrid train of possibilities.

"2nd. To the citizens, it is only necessary to say that, while Freemasonry lives, patriotism and loyalty can never die. Eschewing politics in its Lodges, our ancient Craft has ever been found true to the government under which it resides for the time being. None but a recreant Mason can ever be a traitor.

"3rd. The Church and Freemasonry meet face to face in a way that symbolizes their relations. We are here in our working apparel to serve you; we come to assist you in preparing the material temple for the dwelling of the Almighty. Our Lodges are dedicated to St. John, and he was the forerunner of the Messiah, so would we go, out into the wilderness levelling the rugged hills and causing precipitous valleys to be filled for the passage of your truth and your glory. As there are attached to those grand old cathedrals of Europe certain cloisters without a church, so we would furnish a cloister where those may walk who, holding through your windows the brilliant lights, faintly hearing the moral hosanna that swells to your lofty dome, may, if they never enter our stately building, at least have shelter from the pitiless storm, and earn to reverence your altar. Do you ask me what has Freemasonry done for the church, I answer it has done what Solomon did—it has built the house for the Lord God of Israel. Whenever you see a specimen of that beautiful order of architecture—the Gothic or any of its modifications—know that that is the gift of Freemasonry to the church. Into foreign countries, travel on the continent of Europe, and when Strasburg, Cologne, Meissen, Munich, Milan, Prague, or Paris, you have seen the noblest church, that is the gift of Freemasonry to the church. Visit London; stand under the shadow of that stupendous edifice known as the Cathedral of St. Paul—mark its swelling dome and aud cleaving cross, walk in amazement through its glorious colonnade, enter the building and pass through transept, aisle and nave; then descend into its silent crypt, and while you are surrounded by the sleeping hosts of earth's mighty ones, you will see a modest slab bearing a Latin inscription, which may be rendered thus:—'Beneath lies the Builder of a church, who lived above ninety years, not for himself, but for the public good. Reader, wouldst thou behold his monument, look around.' at Builder was Sir Christopher Wren, Grand Master of Antient Freemasons in England.

"To the moral services of Freemasonry to the church, I can make only the slightest allusion, for the disappearance of the sun again warns me to be brief, and indeed if I had weeks instead of moments, the time would still be too short. I have mentioned the point, however, because in the broadest glare of the brightest day there will be narrow valleys; obscure ravines into which the illumination can never penetrate; I have recently read in the public journals that in a State, otherwise enlightened, a clergyman refused Christian burial to one of his flock, whose, by the request of the deceased, his Masonic brethren proposed to render him the last customary mark of respect. I was pained by this refusal not for Masonry, for you can neither add to nor take away from its glory—but pained for my profession, pained for my humanity; I here declare that I know of no more efficient and faithful friend of morality and christianity than Freemasonry.

"4th. Brethren, exhortation from me to you would be out of place; and on an occasion so public I can only express the hope that we have to-day performed this service may so apply the moral gavel to our own characters, that the rough corners of our passions and busts may all be knocked off from our lives, and when we are presented for the inspection of the Almighty Grand Architect, may his plumb, square and level enable Him to pronounce us 'well formed, true, and trusty,' and may He pour upon us the corn of plenty, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of His grace.

"Finally, nothing remains but for me to close these Masonic ceremonies by invoking the blessing of Almighty God upon this concourse, that every man and woman may be fitly hewn and prepared for the Master's use; upon the members of this church that each of its members may be a lively stone in the spiritual temple; upon the workmen engaged in erecting this edifice that life and limb may be preserved; and upon the Craft, that the blessing of heaven may rest upon us and all Free and Accepted Masons all over the world, and may the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God our Father, and the communion and fellowship of the Host Ghost be with you all now and for evermore. Amen."

ANNUAL MEETINGS OF GRAND LODGES.

OREGON.—The annual communication was held at Eugene city, June 13th, was numerously attended, and the statements of the subordinate Lodges gave evidence of a most healthful progress. The officers elect are Amory Holbrook, G.M.; J. R. Bailey, D.G.M.; A. A. Smith, S.G.W.; W. W. Fowler, J.G.W.; R. Wilcox, G.Treas.; and T. W. F. Batton, G.Sec. The installation was public.

ILLINOIS.—This M. W. Grand Lodge, at its annual communication, on the 6th inst., elected the following brethren:—Ira A. W. Buck, G.M.; F. M. Blair, D.G.M.; A. J. Kuykendall, S.G.W.; Silas G. Toler, J.G.W.; William McMurtry, G.Treas.; and Harmon G. Reynolds, G. Sec.

KENTUCKY.—This Grand Lodge commenced its session on the 16th, and the next day elected Harvey T. Wilson, of Sherburne, Grand Master, in place of Rob Morris; Lewis Landrum, of Lancaster, D.G.M.; B. J. Hinton, of Paducah, S.G.W.; Hiram Bassett, of Maysville, J.G.W.; A. G. Hodges, G.Treas.; J. M. S. McCorkle was, of course, re-elected G. Sec. The report on foreign correspondence was presented by the G. Sec., and abounds in passages of great beauty. The Webb work was adopted.

OHIO.—The Grand Lodge of this state convened at Columbus on the 18th, and next day elected Horace M. Stokes, of Lebanon, G.M.; H. L. Hosmer, of Toledo, D.G.M.; Geo. Webster, of Steubenville, S.G.W.; L. C. Jones, of Hartford, J.G.W.; F. J. Phillips, of Georgetown, G. Treas.; and John Caldwell, of Cincinnati, G. Sec.

GEORGIA.—The Grand Lodge of this State commenced its annual session on Wednesday last, 26th inst., at Macon, and we are promised further particulars.

KENTUCKY.—The Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters met at Louisville, on the 22nd, and elected P. Swigert, G.P.; Thos. Todd, D.G.P.; Frank Tryon, G.T.J.; J. M. S. McCorkle, G.P.C.W.; A. G. Hodges, G. Recorder; and Thos. Sadler, G. Treas.

TENNESSEE.—This Grand Lodge met in annual communication at Nashville, October 4th, and elected John Frissett, of Winchester, Grand Master; A. P. Hall, of Camden, D. Grand Master; John F. Slover, of Athens, S.G.W.; Ambrose S. Read, of Denmark, J.G.W.; W. W. Horne, of Nashville, G. Treas.; C. A. Fuller, of Nashville, G. Sec.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, ARKANSAS.—This college, established by the fraternity of Arkansas, was opened on the first of October. It is at Little Rock; the building is finished, the ground upon which it stands unencumbered, and the institution out of debt, but without funds. The ground originally cost 6,000 dollars, and is now valued at 50,000 dollars. John B. Thompson, a graduate of the University of Virginia, is president of the faculty, and a scholar of fine attainments. The Craft in Arkansas have now all the requisites for the liberal education of their sons.

STATISTICS.

The Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, R.W. Bro. Daniel, has collected from the printed transactions of thirty-eight Grand Lodges, Canada included, a vast amount of interesting statistical information. We find by it, that there are in the United States and Canada 4571 Lodges, of which 4068 return an aggregate of 194,918 members. Should the remaining 504 Lodges be computed, they would return about 6000 more, making in all some 200,000 Masons contributing. During the year there were 8279 dismissions, and 4802 affiliations, so that the former exceed the latter by 3477, a fact we were not prepared for. There were, however, no less than 25,691 initiations, and after deducting from the initiations and affiliations, the demitted, the dead, suspended and expelled, the Order has increased 17,150.

The most populous jurisdiction is New York, which has an aggregate of 36,194 Masons. Next is Georgia, with 12,120, followed closely by Ohio, 12,105. Pennsylvania has 11,428; Illinois, 10,571; and Kentucky, 10,319. New Hampshire and Rhode Island, both organized in the last century, the former in 1789, the latter in 1791, contain respectively, only 1881 and 1179; while Delaware, organized in 1806, has but 513 Masons in her jurisdiction. We shall again refer to these admirable tables, for which the compiler merits the thanks of the fraternity.—N. Y. Courier.

CANADA.

GRAND LODGE OF CANADA.

THE following is a list of the subordinate Lodges, and of the names of their Worshipful Masters, holding under the Grand Lodge of Antient Free and Accepted Masons of Canada:—

- Lodge of Antiquity, Montreal; Bro. E. Morris, W.M.
 No. 1. Prevost Lodge, Dunham; Bro. Thomas Wood, W.M.
 No. 2. Niagara Lodge, Niagara; Bro. Robert M. Wilson, W.M.
 No. 3. St. John's Lodge, Kingston; Bro. Edward Henry Parker, W.M.
 No. 4. Dorchester Lodge, St. John's, C. E.; Bro. G. T. Morehouse, W.M.
 No. 5. Sussex Lodge, Brockville; Bro. Thomas Camm, W.M.
 No. 6. Barton Lodge, Hamilton; Bro. Michael Ruttle, W.M.
 No. 7. Union Lodge, Grimsby; Bro. Wm. Fitch, W.M.
 No. 8. Nelson Lodge, Henryville; Bro. George W. Parker, W.M.
 No. 9. Union Lodge, Napanee; Bro. Norman W. Scott, W.M.
 No. 10. Norfolk Lodge, Simcoe; Bro. Henry Groff, W.M.
 No. 11. Moira Lodge, Belleville; Bro. William H. Ponton, W.M.
 No. 12. Golden Rule Lodge, Stanstead; Bro. Wm. B. Colby, W.M.
 No. 13. Western Light Lodge, Bolton; Bro. James Wilson, W.M.
 No. 14. True Briton's Lodge, Perth; Bro. Donald Fraser, W.M.
 No. 15. St. George's Lodge, St. Catharines; Bro. Samuel G. Dolson, W.M.
 No. 16. St. Andrew's Lodge, Toronto; Bro. William G. Storm, W.M.
 No. 17. St. John's Lodge, Cobourg; Bro. Abraham John Van Ingen, W.M.
 No. 18. Prince Edward Lodge, Picton; Bro. Charles Smith, W.M.
 No. 19. St. George's Lodge, Montreal; Bro. A. A. Stevenson, W.M.
 No. 20. St. John's Lodge, London; Bro. Edwin Heathfield, W.M.
 No. 21. Zetland Lodge, Montreal; Bro. William Reed, W.M.
 No. 22. King Solomon's Lodge, Toronto; Bro. Henry John Gear, W.M.
 No. 23. Richmond Lodge, Richmond Hill; Bro. John C. Burr, W.M.
 No. 24. St. Francis Lodge, Smith's Falls; Bro. Alex. Mathieson, W.M.
 No. 25. Ionic Lodge, Toronto; Bro. John B. Cherriman, W.M.
 No. 26. Ontario Lodge, Port Hope; Bro. J. B. Hall, W.M.
 No. 27. Strict Observance Lodge, Hamilton; Bro. S. G. Patton, W.M.
 No. 28. Mount Zion Lodge, Kemptville; Bro. Fredk. A. Moore, W.M.
 No. 29. United Lodge, Brighton; Bro. J. M. Wellington, W.M.
 No. 30. Composite Lodge, Whitby; Bro. Yeoman Gibson, W.M.
 No. 31. Jerusalem Lodge, Bowmanville; Bro. George H. Low, W.M.
 No. 32. Amity Lodge, Dunnville; Bro. A. Brownson, W.M.
 No. 33. Wellington Lodge, Guelph; Bro. William Hayward, W.M.
 No. 34. Thistle Lodge, Amerstburg; Bro. John W. Risdale, W.M.
 No. 35. St. John's Lodge, Cayuga; Bro. W. Mussen, W.M.
 No. 36. Welland Lodge, Fonthill; Bro. Adam K. Schofield, W.M.
 No. 37. King Hiram Lodge, Ingersoll; Bro. James Vine, W.M.
 No. 38. Trenton Lodge, Trenton; Bro. James H. Peck, W.M.
 No. 39. Mount Zion Lodge, Brooklyn; Bro. Calvin Campbell, W.M.
 No. 40. St. John's Lodge, Hamilton; Bro. Thomas B. Harris, W.M.
 No. 41. St. George's Lodge, Kingsville; Bro. William J. Malott, W.M.
 No. 42. St. George's Lodge, London; Bro. H. D. Morehouse, W.M.
 No. 43. King Solomon's Lodge, Woodstock; Bro. George Forbes, W.M.
 No. 44. St. Thomas Lodge, St. Thomas; Bro. Charles Roe, W.M.
 No. 45. Brant Lodge, Brantford; Bro. D. Curtis, W.M.
 No. 46. Wellington Lodge, Chatham; Bro. Walter McCrea, W.M.
 No. 47. Great Western Lodge, Windsor; Bro. William Cowen, W.M.
 No. 48. Madoc Lodge, Madoc; Bro. Benjamin H. Maybee, W.M.
 No. 49. Independent Lodge, Quebec; Bro. Archibald McCallum, W.M.
 No. 50. Consecration Lodge, Consecration; Bro. Gibbs Squier, W.M.
 No. 51. Corinthian Lodge, Stanley Mills; Bro. Joseph Figg, W.M.
 No. 52. Wellington Lodge, Dunville, C.W.; Bro. Walter S. Brown, W.M.
 No. 53. Sheffield Lodge, Waterloo; Bro. H. L. Robinson, W.M.
 No. 54. Vaughan Lodge, Maple; Bro. Robert Moore, W.M.
 No. 55. Mirickville Lodge, Mirickville; Bro. George Mirick, W.M.
 No. 56. Victoria Lodge, Port Sarnia; Bro. G. Masson, W.M.
 No. 57. Harmony Lodge, Binbrook; Bro. Robert Dagleish, W.M.
 No. 58. Dorick Lodge, Ottawa; Bro. Donald Mason Grant, W.M.
 No. 59. Corinthian Lodge, Ottawa; Bro. G. Heuback, W.M.
 No. 60. Hoyle Lodge, La Colle; Bro. R. Douglas, W.M.
 No. 61. Acacia Lodge, Hamilton; Bro. F. J. Rastick, W.M.
 No. 62. St. Andrew's Lodge, Caledonia; Bro. Joseph B. Choate, W.M.
 No. 63. Simcoe Lodge, Simcoe; Bro. Charles Khan, W.M.
 No. 64. Kilwinning Lodge, London; Bro. F. W. Thomas, W.M.
 No. 65. Rehoboam Lodge, Toronto; Bro. E. R. O'Brien, W.M.
 No. 66. Durham Lodge, Newcastle; Bro. John J. Robson, W.M.
 No. 67. St. Francis Lodge, Melbourne; Bro. G. H. Napier, W.M.
 No. 68. St. John's Lodge, Ingersoll; Bro. John Patterson, W.M.
 No. 69. Stirling Lodge, Stirling; Bro. George Henry Boulter, W.M.
 No. 70. King Lodge, King; Bro. Joseph Smelser, W.M.
 No. 71. Victoria Lodge, Sherbrooke; Bro. John Hallowell, W.M.
 No. 72. Alma Lodge, Galt; Bro. John Davidson, W.M.
 No. 73. St. James' Lodge, St. Mary's; Bro. W. T. O'Reilly, W.M.
 No. 74. St. James' Lodge, Maitland; Bro. G. C. Longley, W.M.
 No. 75. St. John's Lodge, Toronto; Bro. William Hay, W.M.
 No. 76. Oxford Lodge, Woodstock; Bro. George W. Whitehead, W.M.
 No. 77. Faithful Brethren Lodge, Manilla; Bro. Thomas Coulthard, W.M.
 No. 78. King Hiram Lodge, Tilsonburg; Bro. John M. Ault, W.M.

- No. 79. Simcoe Lodge, Bradford; Bro. Benjamin Barnard, W.M.
 No. 80. Albion Lodge, Newbury; Bro. Amos A. Wright, W.M.
 No. 81. St. John's Lodge, Delaware; Bro. Henry Grist, W.M.
 No. 82. St. John's Lodge, Paris; Bro. Jacob Chase, W.M.
 No. 83. Beaver Lodge, Strathroy; Bro. Joseph H. Blain, W.M.
 No. 84. Clinton Lodge, Clinton; Bro. Samuel Henry Rance, W.M.
 No. 85. Rising Sun Lodge, Palmersville; Bro. W. H. Giles, W.M.
 No. 86. Wilson Lodge, Toronto; Bro. Kivas Tully, W.M.
 No. 87. Markham Union Lodge, Markham; Bro. Lewis Langstaff, W.M.
 No. 88. St. George's Lodge, Owen Sound; Bro. Thomas Gordon, W.M.
 No. 89. King Hiram Lodge, Lindsay; Bro. William McDonnell, W.M.
 No. 90. Manito Lodge, Collingwood; Bro. Thomas Chevalier Prosser, W.M.
 No. 91. Colborne Lodge, Colborne; Bro. Joseph S. Scott, W.M.
 No. 92. Catarqui Lodge, Kingston; Bro. A. J. O'Loughlin, W.M.
 No. 93. Northern Light Lodge, Kincardine; Bro. William Gunn, W.M.
 No. 94. St. Mark's Lodge, Port Stanley; Bro. Thomas D. Warren, W.M.
 No. 95. Ridout Lodge, Otterville; Bro. S. Joy, W.M.
 No. 96. Corinthian Lodge, Barrie; Bro. Charles Bourne Chalmers, W.M.
 No. 97. Sharon Lodge, Sharon; Bro. James Bowman, W.M.
 No. 98. True Blue Lodge, Albion; Bro. William Graham, W.M.
 No. 99. Tuscan Lodge, Newmarket; Bro. Alfred Boulbee, W.M.
 No. 100. Valley Lodge, Dundas; Bro. William Taylor, W.M.
 No. 101. Iron Duke Lodge, Arthur; Bro. James A. Preston, W.M.
 No. 102. Mount Brydges Lodge, Mt. Brydges; Bro. John Dutton, W.M.
 No. 103. Maple Leaf Lodge, St. Catharines; Bro. William McGhie, W.M.
 No. 104. St. John's Lodge, Norwichville; Bro. Charles Lewis, W.M.
 No. 105. St. Mark's Lodge, Drummondville; Bro. Thomas Evans, W.M.
 No. 106. Burford Lodge, Burford; Bro. Edward Hipkins, W.M.
 No. 107. St. Paul's Lodge, Lambeth; Bro. Francis W. H. C. Jarvis, W.M.
 No. 108. Blenheim Lodge, Drumbo; Bro. James Burley Rounds, W.M.
 No. 109. Albion Lodge, Sydenham; Bro. S. Drummond, W.M.
 No. 110. Central Lodge, Prescott; Bro. M. Northrup, W.M.
 No. 111. Morpeth Lodge, Morpeth; Bro. J. M. Duck, W.M.
 No. 112. Maitland Lodge, Goderich; Bro. W. Story, W.M.
 No. 113. Wilson Lodge, Waterford; Bro. J. Boyd, W.M.
 No. 114. Hope Lodge, Port Hope; Bro. T. Ridout, W.M.
 No. 115. Ivy Lodge, Smithville; Bro. G. Brant, W.M.

UNDER DISPENSATION.

Cassia Lodge, Sylvan; Bro. J. C. Mills, W.M.
 Stanbridge Lodge, Stanbridge; Bro. C. S. Vincent, W.M.
 Union Lodge, Lloydstown; Bro. T. Swinerton, W.M.
 Maple Leaf Lodge, Bath; Bro. B. C. Davy, W.M.
 Warren Lodge, Fingal; Bro. R. Blackwood, W.M.
 Doric Lodge, Brantford; Bro. M. W. Pruyn, W.M.

AFFILIATED.

Corinthian Lodge, Peterboro'; Bro. R. Blackett, W.M.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia, and the Princess Alice, visited the camp at Aldershot on Saturday. The royal party returned to Windsor Castle in the afternoon, after an inspection of the troops. The royal family all continue in excellent health. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess Frederick William visited the Prince of Wales at Oxford, returning in the evening; the Prince Frederick William has also been on a visit of inspection to the wonders of Woolwich arsenal. Among the visitors this week have been the Duchess of Kent, the Duc de Nemours, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Delawarr, Sir Charles Wood, the Duke of Argyll, and the Earl of Elgin. It is intended that the Princess Royal and her husband shall return at the end of this week—probably this day. The second of the dramatic performances this season took place on Wednesday, at Windsor Castle, before her Majesty and the Prince Consort, the Royal visitors, and a large number of the nobility. The theatre was erected in St. George's Hall. The play selected for the occasion was Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," the actors being Messrs. Phelps and Robinson, Miss Heath, Mrs. Marston and the other members of the excellent company from Sadlers' Wells.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The French imperial court still remains at Compiègne from which place couriers and ambassadors are departing daily with fresh despatches to all parts of Europe, the emperor's leisure indeed appears to produce as much turmoil in the diplomatic world as the season which he nominally devotes more especially to business. The ladies who are compelled to depend upon French taste to learn how they ought to be dressed, will be glad to learn that the long-remembered fact that the Empress Eugenie has determined to abolish crinoline was announced on Monday in a quasi-official manner by the lady who signs the "Courrier de la Mode" of the Paris Patrie, the Viscountess de Renneville. It is said that there is no truth in the statement of the French government having sent a proposal to London with reference to a general disarmament. Two iron-cased frigates were last week launched, named respectively the Gloire and the Normandie. The semi-official papers are endeavouring to make it appear that a perfect understanding had been re-established between the governments of England and France. The Gazette de Lyon, a clerical organ, mentions a report from Marshal Vaillant, commanding the French troops in Central Italy, to the emperor, stating the startling fact that the troops under his command had fraternised with the Italians to such a degree that they were not to be relied on, and the marshal recommends a change of troops, by sending from France men "uncontaminated with the revolutionary spirit." General de Montauban, commander of the French army to be sent to China, has published an order of the day, in which he tells his troops that for the second time their flag will unite with that of England and that union will be a pledge of victory—as that of the two nations is a pledge of peace to the whole world. According to rumour the difficulties between France and Austria, raised by the delegation of the regency of Central Italy to M. Buoncompagni, are not yet removed. The Count de Paris and the Duke de Chartres have embarked on board the Austrian Lloyd's steamer for Alexandria and Egypt.—The letters of invitation to the congress were despatched to-day to the different powers. The congress will assemble in the early part of January next. The Moniteur of this morning publishes the text of the treaties signed at Zurich, the stipulations of which are in conformity with those which have already been made known to the public. The Piedmontese government has received no communication intimating the opposition of Austria to the congress, on account of the nomination of M. de Buoncompagni to the regency of Central Italy. The difficulties made by Tuscany to the delegation of the regency to M. de Buoncompagni have not yet been settled.—Letters received here from Rome confirm the rumour that Cardinal Antonelli will represent the Pope at the congress. The official journal of Rome of the 24th inst. says:—"Certain journals exaggerate the reforms which are to come into operation." The Propaganda has received reports from Cochinchina that persecutions and ill-treatment of the missionaries have again taken place.—The Piedmontese Gazette publishes the text of the treaty between France and Sardinia, and also of the general treaty between Austria, France, and Sardinia; but they contain nothing more than is already known from the circulars lately published. General Garibaldi has issued a proclamation to his comrades in Central Italy, in which he tells them he is certain to be soon among them, and urges them not to lay down their arms, but to gather round their chiefs, and preserve the strictest discipline. The proclamation is dated Genoa, November 23. A Milan correspondent, speaking of the new organic laws now publishing in Lombardy, says that the articles on the press have excited great alarm; and in answer to the insinuation that the law would not be enforced, the Milan Gazette says:—"We want laws and not toleration—laws that shall not be alternately a cipher and a sword of Damocles." The Corriere Mercantile of Genoa gives an enumeration of the troops composing the army of Central Italy, according to which there must be fifty thousand men under arms.—According to a letter from a correspondent at Pesth, the Greek Bishop of Munkacs had been spirited away, and as he was well known to be a devoted Hungarian patriot, and as such obnoxious to the Austrian government, it was thought he had been carried off to be immured in an Austrian dungeon. The Hungarians are stated to be much dissatisfied with the government.—The Frederickshafen reports that by a letter of the king, dated the 24th inst., the councillor Rotwitt has been intrusted with the formation of a new ministry. The Berlingische Zeitung says M. Von Scheele has refused the office of chamberlain, which had been offered to him, stating that he does not intend to take any part in the present political movement. The Danish government has made to the federal diet, through the medium of its representative at Frankfort, the following proposal for settling the difficulties of the Holstein question:—"A committee, one half of the members of which is to be appointed by the general council of state of Denmark, and the other half by the diet of the duchy of Holstein, is to be assembled at Copenhagen. This committee is to propose the modifications which are to be made in the constitution of Holstein. The proposed modifications are to be submitted to the direct examination of the diet of Holstein before the Danish government is to decide definitively on the subject of the proposals of the committee. The diet of Holstein would, in that case, have a consultative vote on the project of the proposed reforms of its constitution. It is said that Prussia is not quite satisfied with this proposal of Denmark, and claims the full acceptance of all the reclamations of Holstein, and also that the diet of Holstein is not to have a consultative but a deliberative and definitive vote. As it is likely that the court of Copenhagen will not agree to this demand of Prussia, it is said that the whole question of the German duchies will be submitted to the approaching congress.—Prussian agents have left for England in order to inspect those places on the south coast which might be suitable for his majesty the king to reside at during the winter months, and to make such preparations as are requisite therefore. Besides the Isle of Wight, Dorsetshire is also to be inspected. It is stated that the minister of war, General Bonin, has tendered his resignation, and that the same has been accepted. It is also asserted that he is to be reinstated by General Herrmann.—The Moors in considerable force have attacked Serallo, occupied by the troops of General Echaguo. They were repulsed with great loss. They also attacked the outworks of Ceuta, and were again repulsed. The Spaniards had seven killed and about a hundred wounded, among whom are three officers. On Sunday, a body of 4000 Moors made an attack for the fourth time on the redoubt before Serallo. They were repulsed and completely routed. The Spanish officers and soldiers conducted themselves with great bravery. Troops are crossing the Straits, and some fresh troops have landed at Ceuta. The Madrid Gazette publishes the ordinary budget for 1860. The receipts amount to 1892 millions of reals, and the expenses to 1887 millions of reals.—Constantinople advices of the 16th are to the effect that all reports current for some time of a change of ministry in Turkey were at least premature.—A telegram from Paris states that the first sitting of the congress will take place on the 5th January, but it is not supposed that the congress can meet before the middle of that month.—The first result of the conclusion of the treaty of peace is the resumption of diplomatic relations between Austria and Piedmont. The representatives at each court are to hold the rank of ministers plenipotentiary.—The Mémorial des Deux Seines has received a warning for an article the language of which was "calculated to wound the national sentiment." This is the ninth warning inflicted on the French press since the "amnesty" of August 15th.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—On Tuesday a Privy Council was holden at Windsor, when parliament was ordered to be further prorogued to the 24th January, on which day it will meet for the despatch of business.—A royal proclamation in the Gazette extends the time limited for the payment of the bounties of £6 to able seamen and of £3 to ordinary seamen on entering Her Majesty's navy to the 31st of January next.—There was again an increase of deaths in the metropolis last week, which is chiefly attributable to affections of the respiratory organs; 198 persons died from bronchitis alone. The total number of deaths was 1,307, and of births 1,785. The mortality returns of the City also exhibit an increase in the rate of mortality.—An influential meeting of the friend and admirers of the late distinguished engineer, Mr. Brunel, was held on Saturday, the Earl of Shelburne presiding, when resolutions were passed, and a committee constituted to take steps for the erection of a public monument to commemorate the high sense universally entertained of his genius and professional attainments, as exemplified in his great national works and the worth of his private character.—Mr. Charles William Hick, the City Swordbearer, died on Sunday morning, at the advanced age of ninety-four, of pleurisy, at his house at West Brixton. He had been an active and influential member of the corporation for a number of years before his appointment to the office of swordbearer, and had held that office for half a century. He was highly respected by his fellow citizens. The Lord Mayor, upon receiving intelligence of his death, immediately appointed Mr. H. W. Sewell, who has performed the duties of the office for several years, pro tem.—In the Divorce Court, on Saturday, the case of "Lloyd v. Lloyd and Chichester," partly heard the previous day, was concluded. It was a suit for dissolution of marriage on the part of the husband, and the evidence was of a very extraordinary kind. His lordship, giving judgment, said the evidence of collusion was so gross and palpable that the court felt bound to dismiss the petition.—The suit of "Rogers v. Rogers and Paul," which came before the Divorce Court, presented some extraordinary features. The petitioner, a clergyman, prayed for the dissolution of his marriage by reason of his wife's adultery with the correspondent, who put in a counter charge of adultery on the part of the husband. The petitioner was educated at Trinity College, and took honours, but his father leaving him in straitened circumstances he enlisted in the 4th Dragoons, and became regimental clerk, and with his wife went with the regiment to India. On his return to this country, having obtained his discharge, he was ordained, and obtained the situation of chaplain of Winchester gaol, and in that capacity became acquainted with Paul, who was sentenced to six months imprisonment for obtaining money under false pretences. He interested himself to enable Paul to proceed to Australia, and on his discharge invited him to his house. Paul repaid the petitioner's kindness by eloping with his wife, and they were afterwards married at St. Pancras, Mrs. Rogers being married in the name of Rogers as a spinster, thus adding bigamy to her other offence. These facts were fully proved, and the counter charge against the petitioner disproved, and the court decreed a dissolution of the marriage.—A horrible murder was perpetrated on Monday morning in a house in Queen's-head-court, Finsbury-market. From what has transpired, it seems that the landlord going into the room of a lodger named Moore, found the body of a woman (Moore's wife) laid on the floor in a state of nudity, and without the head, the head itself being placed upright in a washhand basin. Calmly surveying this frightful spectacle was a child seated on a chair close by. Moore is in custody on suspicion. It is believed he is insane, having been lately under restraint as a lunatic.—The adjourned investigation into the alleged poisoning by sausages, in reference to the death of William Eaton, was resumed at Kingsland, yesterday, by Mr. Humphreys. Some additional evidence was given by the manufacturer of the sausages, as to the source of the meat from which they were made. It appears that the skins of sausages are sometimes prepared and preserved for a considerable time before being used, and the coroner stated that he understood arsenic was employed for this purpose, as it was found to be the cheapest mode of doing it. In consequence, Dr. Lethaby has received instructions to analyse some of the skins, and another adjournment till Thursday next was ordered.—At the Central Criminal Court, Jacob Levi, 53, Lewis Levi, 28, and Rosa Levi, 24, were charged with robbing W. H. Wells, of Oxford, of jewellery, valued at £100. Their conduct in Mr. Wells's shop awakened his suspicions, and after they had left the shop he discovered that the jewellery mentioned had been taken away. The prisoners were apprehended in London, and part of the property found upon them. It was objected for the woman that she was the wife of Lewis Levi, and not his sister as alleged. The two male prisoners were found guilty, and the female was acquitted. Jacob Levi and Rosa Levi was then tried on another indictment, when Jacob was convicted, and Rosa was acquitted. The judge said they were systematic plunderers, and condemned Jacob Levi to two years' hard labour on the first indictment, and one year on the second; and Lewis was sentenced to two years' hard labour.—The grand jury returned a true bill against Thomas Smethurst for bigamy.—Henry Leach surrendered to take his trial on a charge of stealing a cheque for £30, the property of his master. The circumstances of the case were somewhat peculiar, and a great deal of evidence was laid before the jury. The learned recorder summed up on the whole case, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, but recommended the prisoner to mercy on account of his youth. As another indictment was to be taken against him, the recorder postponed passing sentence upon him for the present. Thomas Brooks was charged with forging an order for the delivery of a cheque book, and was also charged with uttering a forged cheque for £5 8s. He was found guilty on both charges. It was stated that twenty-three cheques had been taken from the cheque book, and made use of. The prisoner had been convicted before of obtaining a cheque book by forgery. The Recorder said it was necessary to pass a severe sentence, and condemned the prisoner to ten years' penal servitude.—On Monday afternoon a woman named Ellen Luney, living at St. Helen's, was committed for trial on a coroner's warrant, charged with the wilful murder of John Canary, a labourer. The murderess it seems had struck her unfortunate victim on the head with a spade.—On Monday night the steamer Eagle, from Glasgow to Londonderry, with eighty passengers on board, came in collision with a sailing vessel off the island of Arran. The steamer went down about ten minutes after, and forty of the unfortunate passengers are believed to be drowned; 200 sheep that were on board were also lost.—On Tuesday evening a frightful accident occurred at the Beddington Gate crossing of the London and South Western Railway, about two miles from Lewes. Through an error of one kind or another a four-wheeled waggon with two men was allowed to go upon the line just as the express train was approaching; the consequence was that both the unfortunate men were killed, as well as the horse, the waggon being shivered to splinters.—At the Central Criminal Court on Wednesday, an application was made for the postponement of the trial of Hughes, the absconding solicitor, until next session, which was granted.—The trial of Sarah Jane Wiggins, charged with the wilful murder of James White, was then proceeded with. The crime was committed under circumstances of peculiar atrocity, the prisoner having tied the child (aged three and a half years) to a bedstead at night, with his hands bound behind his back, and his head downwards, and there left him, so that he died the next morning. Several witnesses were examined, and the jury found the prisoner guilty. She was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude.—Thomas Smethurst was then charged with bigamy; he had been previously put to the bar and pleaded not guilty. The evidence proved the fact of both marriages having taken place, and the prisoner was found guilty. The learned judge, after careful consideration, sentenced him to the very severe sentence of one year's imprisonment.—At the Court of Bankruptcy, assignees have been chosen to the estate of Thomas Pratt, a farrier, in Dean-street, Soho, and George-street Portman-square. This bankrupt was also lessee of the Soho Theatre, and in this capacity he was known as H. S. Mowbray. An interesting discussion took place respecting the debt of the petitioning creditor, who was the bankrupt's foreman, and the question of proof was adjourned for further investigation. The transactions in the funds yesterday were again at advanced prices, the closing quotation for Consols, for money being 96½ to ½, and for the account 96½ to ½. Foreign stocks and railway shares also presented an additional improvement, Mexican, Turkish, and Russian participating in the movement. English and French shares improved, and transactions forward took place to a considerable extent.

INDIA; AND COLONIES.—By the overland mail we have advices and papers from Calcutta to the 22nd October, and from Hong Kong to the 12th October. The news is of very little importance. The Governor General is proceeding through the country with an armed force of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of immense size, larger they say than Sir H. Rose had at Jhansi. At such a time, when the finances of the country are in so frightful a state, it is really too bad to waste so great a mass of money upon a progress of this sort, a progress that sounds very grand, but one which cannot possibly be worth one tithe of the money which must be expended upon it. The expense will be £10,000 sterling a month. Various rumours are afloat relative to the rebels in Nepal. One report is that the Nana is dead, another that he has joined his Zenana, but since then we have been told that there was a consultation in the Nana's camp on the 11th instant, and the several leaders agreed to unite their forces and place them under the Nana's orders. The whole rebel force is estimated at 14,500 men.—The Red Jacket has arrived from Melbourne with 40,000 ounces of gold. She left Melbourne on the 10th of September. The Red Jacket called on the voyage home at Pernambuco, from which port she brings intelligence of the total loss of the government emigrant ship John and Lucy, bound from Liverpool with passengers to the Cape of Good Hope. The ill fated ship left Liverpool about the latter end of July, and was lost at Caracas previous to the 29th of October. The crew and emigrants were all saved, and conveyed to Pernambuco, from whence they will be forwarded to the Cape.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reports of the state of trade in the manufacturing districts speak of satisfactory progress, although the operations have not been very extensive. In some of the districts the export orders are not of an encouraging character, but it is still remarked that the home trade continues in a thriving condition. This is particularly the case at Birmingham, and at Bradford the same symptoms are apparent. The advices from Manchester seem, on the whole, satisfactory, though transactions are not so numerous as a month or six weeks back. At Norwich most of the manufacturing businesses remain in a good situation, and labour is not altogether abundant. In the Sheffield trade the transactions have been moderately active, but it is now expected that there will be some decline in consequence of the advanced season. The iron trade has been flat at Wolverhampton, but a fair amount of business has been concluded in hardware articles for home use. The accounts from the Irish towns present no serious change.—The traffic returns of the railways in the United Kingdom for the week ending the 19th November, amounted to £474,630, and for the corresponding week of last year to £427,420, showing an increase of £47,210. The gross receipts of the eight railways having their termini in the metropolis, amounted to £208,383, and for the corresponding week of last year to £187,517, showing an increase of £20,866. The gross receipts on the other lines in the United Kingdom amounted to £266,297, and for the corresponding week of last year to £239,903, showing an increase of £26,394, which, added to the increase on the metropolitan lines, makes a total increase £47,210, as compared with the corresponding week of 1858.—The question of the fusion of the South Eastern and the London, Chatham, and Dover Companies, continues to excite great interest. A meeting took place on Wednesday last between committees of directors of the London, Chatham, and Dover, and the South Eastern Companies, specially appointed for the purpose by the respective boards to consider the propriety of a fusion between the two undertakings. The question was then thoroughly discussed in all its bearings, and the necessity of some arrangement being arrived at was admitted on both sides. It is very desirable that these negotiations should be followed up, and that, for the interests of all parties, they should have a successful result. The line of the London, Chatham, and Dover Company is at this present moment very nearly completed, and the period has arrived when large sums will have to be expended on stations, rolling stock sidings, workshops, and other costly works, which would not be required should an amicable arrangement be effected.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

DEURY LANE THEATRE.—The short season of promenade concerts has been begun with spirit under the generalship of Mr. Manna of the Crystal Palace. The house has been well attended; the selection of music showed excellent taste and has been highly appreciated. We must not omit to notice Bro. Strange's successful management of the refreshment department, and there our crowded columns compel us to stop for this week.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—The opening night of the season on Monday last was honoured by an overflowing house, and the taste and spirit of the fair lessee were enthusiastically appreciated and applauded by an audience of old friends, who rejoiced to see Madame Celeste once more restored to the London boards. The new piece "Paris and Pleasure," continues to attract as well as on the first evening, but we must defer particular till our next.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"E. I. O."—The law against the possession of rituals is to be found in the words of the entered apprentices' obligation.

"BETA" declined with thanks.

"R. A."—We will speak to you next year.

"P. Z."—We never made such a nonsensical assertion.

"MASOXY IN LIVERPOOL."—If Bro. J. B. R. will kindly furnish particulars to P.M. Bro. C. J. B., Masonic Temple, Liverpool, his information will be appreciated and attended to.

"C. S."—The promised communication will be thankfully received.

"W.H."—We never give up the names of our correspondents.

"ABEL" will oblige us by informing us upon what authority he speaks before we reply to the question.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1859.

GRAND LODGE.

THE quarterly communication of Wednesday last passed off with a smoothness and good temper which must have been most gratifying to every Mason, however he might agree or disagree with the propositions brought under consideration. The chair was occupied by the Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master; and however pleased we may be to see his lordship presiding over Masonic meetings, which he always conducts with the greatest tact and ability—we cannot but express our regret that he should have been called upon to do so in consequence of the indisposition of the Most Worshipful Grand Master.

The business before Grand Lodge was certainly not very important, if we except one question arising out of the report of the Board of General Purposes—the propriety of assisting country Lodges by the advance of money from the general funds of Grand Lodge, to provide themselves with Masonic halls or rooms apart from tavern influences. Our opinions have been so often expressed on the desirability of providing such buildings, that we need not repeat them, and we therefore need only express our cordial concurrence in the decision come to—that such assistance should be given if it can be done on proper security. The President of the Board of General Purposes in bringing forward the motion, urged that in assenting to it Grand Lodge only pledged itself to this principle, and that a detailed scheme must hereafter be brought before it for consideration, if the principle were affirmed. The only objections taken to the proposition came from Bro. Whitmore, who doubted if such advances could be made legally and safely, and Bro. Stebbing, who, quoting many instances of Masonic halls being diverted from their original purpose, warned Grand Lodge not to enter into speculations by which considerable loss might be entailed upon our funds, and the Craft kept constantly in litigation to protect its property. The arguments of Bro. Stebbing were certainly placed before Grand Lodge with great temper, talent, and discretion, and points were raised which cannot fail to have their due weight with the Board of General Purposes and Grand Lodge, when the full scheme comes before it; but on the general question of affirming the principle, the objecting brethren were so well and ably answered by Bro. McEntire, as to carry conviction to Grand Lodge that there could be no objection to affirming the general principle, and leaving the details to be carried out hereafter.

On the only other question arising out of the report there could be no second opinion, and we are somewhat astonished at its being brought before Grand Lodge at all. According to the Book of Constitutions no motion can be brought before Grand Lodge unless regular notice has been given at the Board of Masters, with the name and rank of the proposed mover. Now any one would naturally suppose that that law also applied to proposing candidates for the various governing boards of the Craft; but no—it appears that any one who has thought fit has been allowed to send in lists of candidates, unvouched by the name of any proposer—sometimes more to the annoyance of those proposed, against their will, than of those whom they have been nominally put up to oppose—perhaps with the view of breaking lists, and thereby securing the defeat of one or two particular brethren. That such a system should be allowed long to prevail when attention was once drawn to it could not be expected, and as a natural consequence came the resolution of Wednesday—that in future all persons putting candidates in nomination for the respective boards must do so in writing, with the name and rank of the party nominating, as well as of the brother nominated.

A vote of £50 to provide fuel and light to the inmates of the asylum at Croydon brought the business of Grand Lodge to a harmonious termination.

There was one other question, casually, though rather irregularly, without a notice of motion, alluded to by Bro. Stebbing—the subject of voting by proxy by country brethren—which we deem of too great importance to be treated upon in a brief summary of the proceedings of Grand Lodge written as we leave it; but upon which the brethren may rest assured we shall not fail to express our opinion before it comes before Grand Lodge for discussion, as we trust it will do.

BASILICA ANGLICANA—V.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

THE traditions of this, the most ancient of our ecclesiastical establishments, would again lead us back to the time of St. Peter and St. Paul, each of whom are asserted to have visited Britain at different periods, and to have preached the gospel to numerous converts. A late eminent Bishop of St. David's asserts the greater probability of St. Paul's having been immediately instrumental in introducing Christianity into Britain from the circumstance that, in some very ancient records, called the "British Triad," it is said "that the father of Caractacus went to Rome as a hostage for his son and others of his family; that he staid there seven years, and that on his return he brought the knowledge of Christianity to his own countrymen from Rome." "It is then," says the worthy prelate, "a remarkable and interesting fact that the detention of British hostages should have been coincident with St. Paul's residence in Rome, as a prisoner. And it was not a less favourable coincidence that they should have been released from confinement in the same year that St. Paul was set at liberty."

Unlike York Minster, Winchester Cathedral is remarkable for plainness and solidity. There is a severity in the original design which is not usually seen in Norman buildings, and but for its proportions, which are remarkable for their magnitude and the massiveness of the masonry, the effect would be by no means imposing. Besides it stands on low ground, and still further, to detract from its general appearance, the ground has grown up, so to speak, several feet above the level of the floor of the interior. The church proper consists of a nave with two aisles; a north and south transept surmounted by a central tower; a choir and presbytery with side aisles; a space east of the altar consisting of three aisles equal in breadth and height; a Lady Chapel with two chantry chapels, north and south; three crypts under the east end of the church; and five other chantries, which contain the monuments of the prelates who were founders or benefactors of the building. The building is, as usual, cruciform. The length of the nave is five hundred and forty-five feet, and the breadth, including the aisles, eighty-seven feet. The length of the transepts, from north to south, is one hundred and eighty-six feet, and the roof, from the floor of the nave, is seventy-six feet in height.

Under the Britons the name given to Winchester was Caer Guent, or the "White City," which name was probably suggested by the chalky nature of the soil. The Belgæ invaded and seized upon this British settlement, under whom it came to be called Guent Bolgo. The Romans next took possession, giving it the more refined designation of Venta Belgarum. They encompassed it with a wall, adorned it with numerous imposing edifices, the principal of which, erected on or near the site of the present cathedral, was the Temple of Apollo and a college for the reception of priests of the Roman and polytheistic rite which were richly endowed by the emperor, and were placed under the immediate protection of his armies. Here were the first looms set up to weave embroidery for the imperial use; here the first Roman roads were made, of which some, though few, traces remain. Here Caractacus (dear to schoolboy patriotism) remonstrated because the Romans, great, wealthy, and powerful, envied him his humble cottage in Britain: here the same hero afterwards ruled as a Roman proconsul, under the title Tiberius Claudius Cogitubunus, when he had married one of the daughters of the emperor, the lady having, it is said, romantically fallen in love with him at first sight. Here Boadicea, flying from that terrible fight at St. Albans, again rallied her forces and made a final dash at the Roman legions; here she took the fatal cup that she might not fall into the hands of her conquerors, and hither was her body borne and buried. Winchester is more intimately than any other town or city of England associated with the early history of our country.

Winchester was the capital of the kingdom of Wessex, in the Saxon heptarchy. Egbert I., king of England, was buried in its cathedral. From St. Swithin within its walls King Alfred imbibed the wisdom which made his name illustrious and endeared to all posterity. Canute, after the celebrated incident of the tide refusing to go back at his command, came into the cathedral, and having endowed it with costly gifts, ordered his crown to be hung over the great cross, as acknowledging himself tributary to the King of kings. Emma, queen of Ethelred the Unready, and mother of Edward the Confessor, it is recorded, smarting under a charge of incontinence, challenged the fiery ordeal, and walked barefooted over a number of red hot iron plates uninjured.

It was the bell of Winchester cathedral that tolled the first curfew, and it tolls the curfew to this day; the effect is strange, solemn and suggestive to the traveller, who fatigued sits looking into his seacoal fire in his hotel, disposed to reverie, and absorbed with the pleasant and yet melancholy though sombre meditations which start from school memories, and recall us to the flight of time. Within the walls of this venerable pile lay for centuries the roll of Winchester, better known as the Domesday Book. It was to its precincts that the dead body of the violent and unloved Rufus was borne in a charcoal burner's cart, "the blood dripping all the way," from the arrow of Sir Walter Tyrrel. The city was burnt in 1102; but a little later we find it containing three "royal minsters, a great number of religious houses, and upwards of sixty churches."

In the contests between Stephen and Matilda, Winchester was almost annihilated. Matilda in person headed her own party, and Stephen's queen in person led her husband's bands of archers; and each contended hand to hand for several weeks, the conflict the while being fierce, bloody, and unpromising. The city again attained a very prosperous condition, for we learn that at the death of Henry II., which occurred shortly after he had granted it a charter, directing that it should be governed by a mayor and corporation—thus being the first municipality in the kingdom—the treasury contained £900,000, besides costly pearls and other precious stones of enormous value.

The first structure of any note is attributed to St. Ethelwold, a portion of which is said yet to remain, but antiquarians are by no means agreed upon this point. There is, however, one fact which appears to be pretty firmly established—that the general design of the edifice commenced with Bishop Walkelyn, a follower and relation of William the Conqueror, who had been elevated by the successful invader to the see of Winchester. Like Gundulph, of whom we have already spoken, Walkelyn had a passion for architecture, but unlike Gundulph in some particulars, his style is heavy, plain, massive, and gigantic. As an indication of the spirit in which this prelate went to work, the following anecdote is interesting. The bishop greatly complained that he was in want of timber to proceed with his building, and applied to the king to help him. William, animated as he always was with zeal for building churches, replied that his pious and holy cousin might have as much timber from the forests of Hanepinges or Hampege as he could cut down and carry away in three days. Walkelyn collected an army of hewers and carters, and in three days not a tree was left. "Are my eyes fascinated," exclaimed William, amazed, "or have I lost my senses? I certainly thought I had a beautiful wood here somewhere near Winchester." The king was wroth; he commanded the presence of the daring ecclesiastic. But Walkelyn succeeded in mollifying him. "Most assuredly, Walkelyn," at last said the king, "I was too liberal in my grant, and you were too exacting in the manner you made use of it." The Conqueror died the same year, but Walkelyn worked on for seven years, when in 1093 the building was so far completed that we learn "that almost all the bishops and abbots of England assembled in this city to be present at the solemn dedication, which took place July 15th, being the festival of St. Swithin the patron saint of the place."

Henry de Blois, the brother of King Stephen, contributed some additions when the war of the usurpation had terminated. The two aisles of the choir were rebuilt by Bishop Godfrey de Lucy, in the year 1200, their clustered pillars of Purbeck marble and long narrow windows without mullions being greatly characteristic of the early Gothic. But the great restorer of the cathedral was William of Wykeham, who held the see from 1366 to 1404. This munificent prelate was indefatigable in the promotion of religious architecture, and profuse in the endowment of religious learning. He began the erection of the great westfront in his seventieth year, and laboured incessantly for ten years. Cardinal Beaufort afterwards prosecuted the undertaking, and after him, William of Waynflete. These three prelates, besides the repairs and renovations contributed to the church itself, built each for himself a chantry, each with more or less pretensions to richness, beauty, or magnificence. That of Wykeham is placed between the fifth and sixth arches. The delicacy of this beautiful tomb is unsurpassed by any in the kingdom. It was erected at a time when Gothic architecture had attained its full development. The effigy of Wykeham, robed as a bishop, with mitre and crozier, sleeps its marble sleep upon his tomb, whilst three figures at his feet kneel in the attitude of prayer. The following inscription is engraved upon the tomb:—

"Here, overthrown by death, lies William surnamed Wykeham.

He was bishop of this church, which he repaired;

He was unbounded in his hospitality, as rich and poor can alike prove;

He was an able politician and councillor of state.

By the colleges which he founded his piety is made known.

The first of which is at Oxford, and the second at Winchester.

You who behold this tomb cease not to pray

That for such great merits he may enjoy everlasting life."

The tomb has been recently restored by the authorities of New College, Oxford, one of the colleges alluded to in the inscription. We need hardly say that the other establishment is the famous public school in Winchester.

But whose tomb is that in the south transept—what illustrious dust moulders under that mournful hic jacet? Wherefore should the loiterer pause in his inspection of these elaborate mausoleums provided by prelatic magnificence to record the priest and pontiff. The sleeper here has evidently left some sympathy behind him for there is a wayfarer contemplating that solitary slab, and reading that simple epitaph. He is not in mourning, it is true. The funeral black and white form no part of his costume. He is in white straw hat with gay green ribbon, party coloured shooting coat and serviceable shepherd's plaid trowsers encased in waterproof leggings. He carries in his hand some implement for use or pleasure, and a basket appended to a stout strap is fastened over his shoulder. What does this intruder contemplate with an air of reverence? Let us see. We learn that the poor remnant of mortality below was once inhabited by a worthy draper of London possessing a nature singularly gentle which retired before the noise of civil strife, and loved to wander along the banks of our English rivers jotting by the way in his sketch book those rural beauties and impressions of which he has transmitted the outlines and pleasures. Know then, gentle reader, that the tenant of that humble tomb is the charming, quaint, gossiping, fish catching Isaac Walton—Requiescat.

The choir is divided from the side aisles by two rich screens, which are supposed to have been erected by Bishop Fox, about 1525. On the top of these are arranged a number of chests richly carved and gilt, and surrounded with the representation of regal crowns. These, we learn, are the remains of Saxon kings, prelates, and other distinguished persons, benefactors of the cathedral. Let us read a few of the inscriptions on these mortuary cabinets :—

"King Edred died A.D. 955. In this tomb rests pious King Edred, who nobly governed the country of the Britons."

"King Edmond died A.D. . . . Edmond, whom this chest contains, and who swayed the royal sceptre while his father was living, do thou, O Christ, receive."

"In this and the other chest opposite are the remaining bones of Canute and Rufus, Kings; of Emma, Queen; and of Wyna and Alwyn, Bishops."

"In this chest, in the year of our Lord 1661, were promiscuously laid together the bones of princes and prelates, which had been scattered about with sacrilegious barbarity in the year of our Lord 1642."

"King Kenulp died A.D. 714."

"King Egbert died A.D. 837."

"Here King Egbert rests, with King Kenulph, both of them bestowed upon us munificent gifts."

"King Kenegils died A.D. 641."

"King Adulphus died A.D. 857."

"In this chest lie together the bones of Kenegils and Adulphus; the first was the founder, the second the benefactor of this church."

There is a full service, and the organ swells to the anthem of thanksgiving and praise. The voice of mortality is silent now, and the ministers in their white surplices and black stoles solemnly intone the litany, while the musical response uttered in full deep mellow chorus echoes from the ancient roof, as if the supplication were gathering force for its flight upwards. Let us, too, kneel and pray.

THE SPIRIT OF FREEMASONRY.

WHEN we take our solitary rambles along the seashore, we are often struck with the variety and the diversity, the minuteness and the vastness, the beauty and the deformity, the calm tranquillity and the rugged harshness, of the objects by which we are surrounded. Here the grains of sand are so small that they can hardly be distinguished one from another, and are easily impressible by the water, while yonder, the rocks, from which they are but the disintegrated crumbs, rise in huge misshapen masses, hard in outline, grand in form, frowning in majesty, and seeming to bid defiance to the angry waves as they toss them into foam. Here the graceful and transparent shrimp darts from side to side of a tranquil pool left by the retiring tide in a hollow of the rock, hiding himself in a bed of vegetation, adorned with shells so gracefully disposed that no art of man could successfully compete with its natural arrangement; or the beautiful sea-anemone expands with a variety of brilliant colouring, stretching out its tentacles in search of food. There the ugly porpoise rolls sporting on the surface of the water; or the corpse of the dogfish thrown up by the tide lies rotting on the beach. Here at one time the ocean sends its quiet ripple to our feet with the faintest murmuring as if afraid to wet them, or to disturb our meditations with its sound; while at another time the winds lash the waves into fury, and in dashing them against the rocks sends forth a roar which might well strike terror into the boldest, but for the recollection that "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea;" and that "He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still." Nevertheless all these diversities and incongruities blend together and form an harmonious whole, displaying the power, the wisdom, the goodness of the Almighty Creator.

If we direct our steps towards rural scenes, still every where is visible, among the vegetable world, among animal and insect life, in the extent and nature of the scenery, the same variety of features, in form, in size, in colour, in beauty, in limitation, in expansiveness, in height, in depth; yet all minister to the same ends—perfection as a whole, the gratification or the benefit of mankind, the evidence of the glory, omniscience and omnipotence of God. If in our closet we indulge in private thought, without external objects to attract our attention, our mind naturally reverts to scenes in which we have taken part, to events which have happened to us or to our friends, to the characters of those with whom we have had relations; and how various and extraordinarily conflicting they sometimes appear—as unlike to each other as are the countenances of the persons to whom they belonged. Yet all these blend in one compact and well arranged whole, and produce an amount of enjoyment, of happiness, of sociability, which might seem wonderful, considering the elements of which they are composed, without due consideration of the dealings of God with his creatures. The writer remembers an occasion when he unexpectedly found himself surrounded at his own table by about thirty persons, casually and without previous arrangement invited to join in an evening repast. On examination it was found that the party was composed of individuals belonging to not less than a dozen distinct sects of religionists, yet all united together in kindly intercourse, seeking rather points of agreement than of difference, ready to learn and to communicate. Let us apply this to Freemasonry, an essential characteristic of which is the avoidance of everything which may tend to cause division, jealousy, or bitterness when we assemble under our glorious banner. All of us may enjoy our own peculiar opinions on disputed points, but we must not intrude them when met together for our mutual celebrations.

Thus it is, that as a body we are so united, that even if discord does manage to get in the thin part of the wedge, means are generally at hand to prevent full access, and to restore the wonted equilibrium. And yet there is a great diversity among men as to what Freemasonry is. Some there are who estimate it so low as to say "Freemasonry is the banquet;" of these the number is but small, and is rapidly diminishing. Others regard it as a divine institution, coeval with the creation of man; some think that it took its rise at the time of the building of King Solomon's temple; others that it is a modern invention without any claim to veneration on account of its antiquity; some that it is only a social body, pretending to have certain secrets, merely for the purpose of maintaining a supposed self-importance; a few desire that those secrets should not be held as secret, but very properly see no means of divulging them without breach of an obligation; some believe Freemasonry to be a peculiar system of morality, while others say that connection with it saps the foundation of all morals. Many of these notions may be traced to neglect of study and inquiry, or perhaps to some unfortunate occurrence at the time of initiation, which has led the individual to decline to proceed farther. Such cases the writer has sometimes met with, and has succeeded in attempts to explain and clear away misconceptions which might easily have been prevented. Notwithstanding these apparent discrepancies and discordant elements, as already pointed out in the material world, and among men of different religious creeds or political opinions, a general harmony subsists, and all true brethren can unite and work together for one common object. And what is that object? I answer, the glory of God and the good of men. How is this to be accomplished? By regard to the following, which I quote from the well known exhortation :—

"As a Mason, I would first recommend to your most serious contemplation the volume of the sacred law; charging you to consider it as the unerring standard of truth and justice, and to regulate your actions by the divine precepts it contains. Therein you will be taught the important duties you owe to God, to your neighbour, and to yourself. To God, by never mentioning his name but with that awe and reverence which are due from the creature to the Creator; by imploring his aid in all your lawful undertakings, and by looking up to him in every emergency for comfort and support. To your neighbour, by acting with him upon the square; by rendering him every kind office which justice or mercy may require; by relieving his necessities and soothing his afflictions; and by doing unto him, as in similar cases you would wish he should do unto you. And to yourself, by such a prudent and regulated course of discipline as may best conduce to the preservation of your corporeal and mental faculties in their fullest energy; thereby enabling you to exert the talents wherewith God has blessed you, as well to his glory as the welfare of your fellow creatures."

And what is the bond which holds together Freemasons in a communion so intimate? Doubtless, to a great extent the knowledge and the privileges which belong to every one duly admitted to a participation in them. But this is not all; I quote again from the charge:—

"Let prudence direct you—temperance chasten you—fortitude support you—and justice be the guide of all your actions. Be especially careful to maintain in their fullest splendour those truly Masonic ornaments, which have already been amply illustrated—benevolence and charity."

Here then is the keystone, and to it Masons may refer with pride as one of their brightest adornments. But cannot charity exist without the necessity for displaying it through the medium of a society such as ours? Undoubtedly it can and does, and Masons are not slow either to join in or to acknowledge it, whenever and wherever it is manifested.

What has just been observed leads at once to the immediate object of all that has been already said, namely, a record in these pages of what has recently been done in a town which boasts of seven Masonic Lodges, besides three Chapters and other collateral institutions in connection with the Craft. While the Magazine is intended for the advocacy of Freemasonry per se, it is by no means desirable to exclude any thing which reflects upon it, however remotely, especially when in conformity with, or in illustration of, its leading principles. The following statements are therefore strictly apposite.

Birmingham is the town to which reference has just been made. Some weeks ago a most terrible calamity happened in a densely populated district, namely, the destruction, by a sudden explosion, of a percussion cap manufactory in which more than seventy persons were at work. Of these, in round numbers, about one fourth were killed, about one sixth were seriously injured and admitted as patients at the hospital, and many of the rest were either slightly injured or suffered losses by destruction of clothes, or otherwise. A subscription for the sufferers was forthwith commenced, which has resulted in the collection of between two and three thousand pounds, and the appointment of a committee to inquire into all cases and to administer relief in proportion to the need of each individual. A most elaborate report has just been presented by the committee, characterized by an unusual degree of care, delicacy, and judgment in the manner in which the stewardship has been exercised. This appears to be a model for such documents, and to be well worthy of imitation under all similar circumstances. Certainly the conduct of the inhabitants of the town, and especially of the committee, in this matter, is deserving of the highest commendation, not only from the effectiveness, but also for the promptness and kindness with which the whole of the remedial arrangements were carried out. This is the opinion formed at a distance of several hundred miles from the place, and without the receipt of any communication farther than that contained in the public journals.

But this is not all. Those who are acquainted with the district alluded to are aware that there is a magnificent institution entitled "The General Hospital," of the highest importance on account of the numerous accidents arising from the employment of machinery, and its proximity to the Staffordshire collieries which supply a large number of casualties. Some idea of the incalculable blessings which this department of the hospital confers on the poor may be formed from the single statement, that upwards of ten thousand persons suffering from accidents, or in urgent need of medical aid, have been relieved at the General Hospital during the year ending at Midsummer last, without any remuneration whatever, and the Queen's Hospital has given help of the same class. The services of the medical men are afforded gratuitously; indeed an appointment as surgeon or physician being deemed an honour and a privilege, is always a matter of vigorous competition. From the fact mentioned, it may be readily conceived that the expenses are enormous, for the number stated by no means includes all who were admitted as patients. These are met by subscriptions, by the proceeds of the Triennial Musical Festivals, and by the interest on funded or invested property obtained as donations or bequests. Large as the income is, it is inadequate; and a short time ago there appeared a possibility that it might be necessary to curtail the advantages of the institution. To avert this, the Rev. Dr. Miller, rector of Birmingham, suggested that a simultaneous collection should be made in all churches and chapels in the neighbourhood on a certain Sunday, which might be agreed upon. The clergy and dissenting ministers of all denominations gave a hearty support to the project, and November the 13th was fixed for carrying out the plan. The result has been a collection of upwards of four thousand one hundred pounds, so far as was known a week after; but it was believed that some few amounts had not been reported, and certainly the collection at one or two places of worship had from various causes been unavoidably postponed. High honour to Birmingham, which within a few weeks, could raise about seven thousand pounds for purposes of pure and unostentatious charity. Here indeed is the spirit of Freemasonry. In that town there ought to be a hundred Masonic Lodges instead of seven; and there would be if our Craft were better understood, and if all suspicions as to its purpose could be removed.

One might suppose the above to be but a sample of the general spirit, from the readiness to give a speedy response to such appeals; here is the proof. Not very many years ago the foundation of another establishment was laid with Masonic aid and ritual, which, after her most gracious majesty, was called "The Queen's Hospital." This was built, and has since been maintained, by subscriptions and donations. Within three years arrangements were made for public fetes at Aston, in the grounds which have now been purchased and devoted to the recreation of the inhabitants. By these the sum of nearly four thousand pounds was realized for the benefit of the two hospitals. While the physical wants of the poor have thus been supplied, their spiritual necessities have not been neglected, for within the last twenty years almost (if not quite) as many churches have been built, besides many dissenting places of worship, and in all these a large proportion of free sittings has been provided. It must be added that the funds for the whole of these, and also for excellent school houses in connection with most of them, have been raised by voluntary contributions, aided, of course, by grants from various societies. Here, then, without the form, is the spirit of Freemasonry, leavened, it may be hoped, by the Masonic Lodges which exist at Birmingham, resulting most truly in the glory of God and the good of man. The scripture definition of charity does not confine itself, however, to acts of benevolence and of almsgiving, but extends to deeds of kindness, of mercy, of love, of good feeling, of indulgence for the failings of others, and towards those who differ from us in opinion. In this respect, too, Birmingham has recently evinced itself signally pre-eminent, as the following will show.

An aged and faithful minister of the gospel died, after a distinguished course of more than half a century as the pastor of a large congregation. His usefulness was not confined to the town and neighbourhood. His sphere was the world, for the printed works of the Rev. J. A. James are scattered in all civilized portions of it, and thus his induonce will long be universally felt. Being a dissenter from the established church, there are many towns in which testimonies of respect and of love would have been limited to those of his own creed and sect; not so, however, with the large hearted men of Birmingham. On the day of the funeral, all business on the line of route was suspended; the procession, though four or five walked abreast, occupied nearly a mile in length; the mayor and other authorities were at the head, and attendance was given not only by the dissenting ministers but by nearly all the clergy of the district, of whom some officiated as pall bearers; no sound was heard but of people hurrying to and fro, and the tolling of the bell of the parish church. Then were reconciled all differences, political and religious, at least they were suspended for the time; Jew walked with Christian, Romanist with his most bitter opponent among Protestants, Unitarian with the most orthodox Trinitarian. On the next Sunday, funeral sermons were generally preached in the churches. This is the true catholic and, let me add, Masonic spirit. Few towns have been more marked than Birmingham by their political and religious differences, and violent party feelings; yet here, to carry out our analogy, all can be merged in a work of love or of charity. It has been the fashion among certain circles and classes to depreciate Birmingham, to speak of it as a coiner of shams, as the essence of vulgarity. It is not unfrequently the case, that an individual accomplishes a great object for the public good by his own munificence, but it is not often that one witnesses a whole population rising up and making sustained efforts, such as these here recounted, which would be an honour and a credit to any community. With such instances of generosity and brotherly love, Birmingham can afford to treat with contempt the sneers of those who may well take example from the good deeds of its people. Well would it be for the world, if in this way the glory of God and the good of man were more generally cultivated. The Masonic mission would then be fully performing its work, and proving its divine origin and purpose.

Jersey, Nov. 29th, 1859.

H. H.

CLASSICAL AND GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE

BY JOHN WILSON ROSS.

VITRUVIUS said, "Other men than the artist can discover the good and the bad. The difference between the artist and the man who is not an artist is, that one can foresee, and the other cannot." We all flatter ourselves we have an eye for beauty, and we all judge by a natural instinct. There are few of us who are not conscious of the lamentable failures in architecture, of which there are nowadays such frequent instances from the perseverance of our architects in adopting the Gothic style. How often a building is raised respecting which the architect finds, when too late, that if he had had a little more modesty, had taken good advice, and had more repeatedly studied in drawings and by models, he might have better attained the effect which he sought to impress upon the child of his hopes.

And what is the cause of all the bad architecture of the present day? One chief cause is a want of propriety and consistency between the outside and the inside of a building. The proper method of designing, as followed by the architects of the middle ages, is, first to get a good and convenient plan, on which to raise an exterior possessing the appropriate qualities of beauty or grandeur, and the utmost consistency with its purpose within. The present system of our architects is, we might say almost universally, the direct contrary to this: they either design the exterior first, and adapt the plan to that, or they arrange the plan or interior with reference to some imagined exterior: in either case they very often spoil both inside and outside. We put up with inconvenience in the plan for the sake of effect in the elevations. Lord Palmerston told a deputation of architects, in reference to the palace at Westminster, that the Speaker, on account of the formation of the windows, could not have blinds or shutters to his bed room, and was obliged to hang up a piece of green baize to exclude the daylight when he retired to rest, in the height of the session, at three o'clock in the morning. The chairs, again, which were high backed, and of Gothic make, in order that they might be in harmony with the rest of the building, were universally condemned as most uncomfortable to sit upon. Though architects, with a taste for mediæval models, compel the residents of their Gothic structures to put up with every kind of inconvenience, they yet so study and constrain their elevations that, whether in a symmetrical style or not, they seldom possess the expected beauty or charm—even if they possess any beauty at all. This is one of the evil consequences of copying the style of a distant age and disregarding present manners, out of which should arise all architecture.

Gothic architecture was very suitable during the earlier period of European civilization, or non-civilization—when the character of the people was of a fighting type. But when the revival of learning was accompanied by a comparative state of quiet, a new field was thrown open for the inventions of architects. Then Bramante, to quote one instance, first adopted a double order—perhaps suggested by previous works, but certainly not founded on the antique. Vignola employed cantilevers in an entablature, as afterwards practised by Sir Christopher Wren. Vignola might have gained some idea of this method from ancient paintings, but assuredly not from the temple at Baalbec, where a similar method is found—for Vignola had never heard of that place. One feature which underwent important modifications was the construction of the window. Previously it was small, and sheltered below, to prevent the entrance of the arrows and missiles of attacking enemies. But when commerce and industrial arts succeeded to hostile ravages and warfare—when, from new discoveries in projectiles and the invention of gunpowder, cannon balls could not be guarded against even by stone walls—the window was made large. In the palace at Florence it was first ornamented with a pediment, and other decorations. So great an innovation seemed, at first, as if it would occasion nothing but ridicule, but this method of treating the window has endured ever since, and been practised by all architects of good taste. This feature had never previously been seen in architecture—it was truly an invention; and it is only novelties of a similar description which can be successful. The instance is cited to show that, by attention to points arising out of structure in our buildings, our architects might best attain excellence; but they must, at the same time, impress the character of the nineteenth century upon their works, and must not, whilst recognising the value of precedent and authority, shut their eyes to every other important consideration.

The advocates of Gothic architecture say that our climate requires high pitched roofs to throw off the water, chimneys for the escape of smoke, numerous and spacious windows, variety in the parts and purposes of our buildings—all which are utterly at variance with the classical styles; and that, with our fogs, our chill winds and our constant rains, we have no occasion for columns, entablatures, open porticoes and colonnades, which are absolutely necessary to the classical styles. Granted that our requirements and wants are all internal, and that Grecian architecture is all external—does it thence follow that classical architecture is not fitted for this country, when we see the numberless beautiful examples that greet our eyes in all directions of that style admirably adapted to our soil and climate? Is it so very absurd to build a private mansion after the manner of a Roman palace—as Prince Napoleon has just done in Paris—or a Christian church in the likeness of a Greek temple? For the sake of relief, what might we not do with other styles imported from Italy, Switzerland, or Egypt—let us have even specimens after the Chinese fashion, if to the importation we give a character and meaning closely suited to our peculiar manners. A style so chosen, with its application in a truly national spirit, exhibits no ignorance of the rules of propriety. Is it not quite as absurd to take the many fine remains of castles and abbeys, which were built hundreds of years ago, which adorn our land and are no doubt worthy of admiration, and imitate them in our modern dwelling houses? Would there not be just as much propriety in a man going about in a monk's habit and cowl, or adopting the manners of the twelfth, thirteenth or fourteenth century, wearing armour, carrying a long bow, and having recourse to the old means of defence?

We believe that the supremacy of the art of the ancient Greeks—rightly called the classical—is as incontrovertible as is the superiority of modern Europeans in mental and moral philosophy: every discovery tends to the establishment of this fact. The Greeks ever will be our masters in art, and those who follow them, as the Romans and artists of the revival, have their proportionate measure of universal regard. But the most strenuous advocates of Gothic mediæval architecture do not direct their strictures to the use, but the abuse of classical architecture.

MASONRY A FULFILLER OF PROPHECY.

BY ROB MORRIS.

"The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fating together; and a little child shall lead them."

THE sacred writer penned this remarkable passage in view of a state of things altogether in the future. There was no analogy in the world's history since the departure from Eden to this peaceful condition of the world which he describes. Abroad, all was warfare, military terror, destruction and despair. At home, domestic disorders, treasons, intestine commotions, disunion, and that fearful state of things (may God ever preserve our beloved country from such!) which so naturally precedes a nation's destruction. In an age of gloom and ignorance, and Godforsaken nationality, the prophet had sufficient faith to look beyond this discouraging state of things, and he points to a time when the appetite for bloodshed shall be changed into a holy desire for peace, and all the warring creatures of destruction, bound as by the three-fold cord of love, into a fraternal band. This strong and unflinching faith is worthy of our imitation in those times, sometimes permitted by the Almighty, when our trust in God's future mercies, must take the place of present encouragements.

Nearly three thousand years have passed since this was written, and time has rung its thousand changes, and yet the prophecy of Isaiah is yet unfulfilled. Mede and Persian, Greek and Roman, alike, have had their term of triumph and their term of defeat, and for each of them the page of history has been opened and filled and closed, to be opened no more until the breaking of God's judgment seal. The Crusader and the Saracen have swept with the sword of wrath the peaceful garden of the prophet, and have each in turn been swept away by the mightier sword of death. Babylon has received the long line of mourning captives, whose harps were long time hung on the willows for heavy grief, and her proud gates have seen that nation again passing Zionward to regain the homes of their fathers, and Babylon and Jerusalem, and the long line of captives and their oppressive conquerors, have passed away as visions of the night; the prophet, himself, has crumbled into undistinguishable dust, yet the prediction of universal peace, which stands out upon the sacred page as a piece of gloriously gilded work, yet awaits its fulfilment in the future.

What, then; shall we consider that the promises of God are void—that the vision of the ancient seer was unsettled, or that his hopes, too much buoyed up on the wings of fancy, drew to his hand impossible things? No; but rather as some profoundly conceived problem, couched in algebraic symbols, connecting the simple known with the distant and wonderful and complicated unknown—as such a problem, at the first opening too hard for our understanding, leads us from truth to truth, yet blindly and ignorantly as to the results; as such a problem, drawing nearer and nearer to its conclusion, at length yields us a ray or two, feeble enough, yet hopeful, which promises us soon an ample reward for our labour, so the great problem of universal peace; at first mysterious and profoundly perplexing, yet carrying the inquirer onward from progress to progress, becoming more and more interesting, now yields a presage, faint it may be, yet in good faith, hopeful of near fulfilment; that great problem, starting in the death shades of Isaiah's age, has been steadily unfolding under the eye of God, until we may read that its solution is "not far from any one of us."

Wonderful are the means, various the instruments used in the hand of God, to bring about a promised result. Mystery is the simplicity of Jehovah, and the weakness of God is more than the wisdom of men.

Among the causes which, in God's providence, have conduced to plant in men's hearts a general desire for peace, we perceive none so promising in its origin, so successful in its results as the institution of Freemasonry.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS TO YOUNG MASONS.

[From the American Voice of Masonry.]

AN anonymous correspondent from New York thus forcibly presents some thoughts which we could wish every young Mason, and some elderly ones would peruse. They are directed against an evil which, we conceive, ought to be opposed by every thoughtful Mason.

Will you permit me through your columns to call the attention of the Craft to a subject, which, to me, appears one of vital importance, but which, from our familiarity with it, is generally but little considered. I allude to the light and frivolous manner in which some Masons speak of the ceremonies of the Lodge while conversing with the uninitiated.

Many Masons when questioned in regard to the ceremonies of the Lodge (questioned not from a prurient curiosity to pry into the secrets of the Order, but from a desire to be informed of what may be proper for the uninitiated to know), will only promulgate the grossest absurdities, thinking that from their very absurdity they will not be believed, and that they are very cunning in thus evading an answer to what the uninitiated may suppose to be a very proper question.

What is more natural than that a person who thinks of joining the society, should wish to find out all that may be proper for him to know, that he may be better enabled to judge whether it would suit him? What impropriety is there in his asking of one whom he believes to be a Mason, 'What can you tell me of the ceremony of initiation?' How would many Masons answer such a question? Some would talk mysteriously of a "goat," with very sharp horns, and very hard to ride, of a "gridiron," 'lightning,' or some foolishness of that kind. Others will not be so explicit, but vaguely hint that initiation is something startling, terrible, requiring nerve or strength, and that it is not every one who is able to go through with it. Ask them what it is that is so trying, difficult, and terrible, a mysterious wink or a knowing shrug is the only reply, leaving the inquirer to conjure up something, and ever after believe that he has guessed the truth. Press them closer, and the reply will be 'you can learn nothing more unless you join them.'

Even after a person has concluded to join the society, applied for admission, been elected, and presents himself for initiation, the same system is pursued. He presents himself at the Lodge: an officer, clothed in his regalia, comes out of the Lodge room, and asks him—"Do you wish to take the first degree to-night?" "Yes, sir, that is my wish." "Well, we'll put you through it if you can stand it," or some other remark of like character, and the probability is that, before he enters the Lodge, two or three other officers will amuse themselves by "poking fun" at him.

I have seen hanging in the ante-room of a Lodge a card of a manufacturer of Masonic jewels and regalia, on which was depicted various Masonic emblems, and conspicuous in the midst of them was a goat rampant, and a gridiron. This was, most likely, thought to be a good joke. It may have been to those who knew its absurdity (though I confess I cannot quite see the point of it); but to the uninitiated, and especially to a candidate about to enter a Masonic Lodge for the first time, it only serves as a strong confirmation of a previous suspicion, that the goat and gridiron are regular working tools of the Freemasons. "Where there is much smoke, there is some fire," is an adage generally true; and what wonder that these absurdities are so generally believed, when so many Masons are daily aiding in giving them currency?

The result of all this is, that the majority of persons are firm in their belief that the ceremonials of the Masonic Lodge are at best but silly mummeries, and that many persons who would be in every way desirable as members of a Lodge, and who would confer honour on the Order, are deterred from offering themselves by fear of the ceremonies of initiation. They are pleased with the principles of Masonry, admire its plans and practical effects, wish to be enrolled among Masons, but they fear they know not what. All they know is, that the mention of the subject generally provokes a smile, and they infer that a man, before he can be made a Mason, must at least be made to appear a fool; and so strong is this belief, that it requires in them a mighty exercise of faith to believe the contrary.

I would ask every Mason who reads this to try the experiment with some friend who is not a Mason, and see how often the result will be as I say. Then let him look back to what his own feelings were before he joined the Order, and I think he will realize the truth of my position, that many men who would shed lustre upon the institution, are kept out of it by a fear of silly ceremonials which never had an existence but in the brains of thoughtless men, and that Masonry has been more injured by its own members than by the most bigoted anti-Masons.

Now if this be an evil (and I think none will deny that it is), how shall it be remedied? The remedy is simple. Let no Mason misrepresent the ceremonies of the Lodge; let him tell the truth so far as it is proper, or say nothing at all, and hint at nothing that is not proper to be told in full.

A MASONIC INCIDENT.

BY BRO. A. F. CYKOSKI.

THE hero of this episode is one of those Polish patriots ever ready to shed their blood for their country and their liberty. The immortal Uminski was general of the Polish army, and head of those few Masons who originated under the Grand Mastership of S. Lukasinski, and which had but a short existence, at least as regularly working Masons. Gen. Uminski was born in 1785. Scarcely fourteen years old when he enrolled himself as volunteer in the corps of the famous Gen. Dombrowski, he made the campaign of 1794, the last and vain struggle of Poland before its definite dismemberment. Since that time he lived in Dresden, where he studied the military art, the only one by which his dearly beloved country could be regenerated, then retired to his chateau, awaiting with impatience and anxiety the opportunity to signalise his devotedness to the national cause. This occasion arrived in 1806, when the French armies entered Poland and gave the signal of its resurrection, the magic word of independence was given by Napoleon the Great. Uminski was one of the first who abandoned wealth and family and answered the appeal. He joined the corps of the French General Excellmans, who commanded the imperial vanguard. He led by his example a crowd of the patriotic and courageous youth with him. Under the orders of the French general he formed with the élite of the Polish youths a guard of honour for Napoleon. Shortly after he was made a colonel, fought in this quality under the walls of Dantzic, but was wounded at Dershan, taken a prisoner by the Prussians, mortal enemies of the Poles and of their liberties. They assumed the strange pretensions to treat the Polish prisoner on the footing of rebel subjects. A court martial sentenced the valorous colonel to death. He was led out immediately on the place d'armes, placed before a detachment of Prussian soldiers and was about to be hoodwinked; this called to his memory a far distant but happy occurrence. He made an appeal to that never failing source that ever and everywhere is ready to help virtue and misfortune. He gave a certain sign which was only known to the few chosen. O, happiness! the sign has been perceived by the commanding officer, who, ready to give the fatal signal of fire, was arrested—dumbstruck! To hesitate between his duty as a soldier and that of a Mason would have been a crime unknown. He arrested the whole proceedings under the pretext of informality, and with the assistance of some superiors, who also belonged to this holy band, another court martial was instituted. Uminski was found innocent of the charge and restored to liberty. He returned home after the defeat of the Grand army and cherished and practised Masonry to the last moment of his life, and when dying in Paris, about 1847 or 1848, he gave this sign again, and departed to the Grand Lodge above, where we hope he was received into the bosom of the Grand Architect of the universe.—Voice of Masonry.

A LADY UPON FREEMASONRY.

THE following singular proceedings on the other side of the Atlantic are worthy of notice. The Standish Lodge, No. 70, of Free and Accepted Masons, was publicly constituted and its officers installed by the Grand Lodge of Maine, United States, in the Unitarian church at Standish, October 6th, 1858. At the close of the installation service Miss Lucinda Payne, carrying a beautiful bible, approached the altar and made the following speech:—

"Worshipful Master: You will not regard the ladies of Standish as indifferent spectators on this festive occasion. How can they be indifferent as they witness the imposing ceremonies of consecrating, in their cherished village, a social order, of which they may not be members, but which may most deeply concern their dearest friends.

"While Masonry comes down from a remote antiquity, through fiery ordeals of persecution, inciting the severest scrutiny, the keen curiosity of woman's nature must still 'walk by faith, not by sight,' in relation to its mysteries and the secrets of its power.

"They cannot close their eyes to the fact that within the memory of the living Freemasonry, prostrated before the violence of popular sentiment, has silently risen again to vigorous life, spreading its Lodges from village to village, in every state and territory, enrolling many thousands of the active and enterprising men of the country. This movement must exert a wide spread influence, for good or for evil, to be felt in every home circle where fathers, husbands, sons or brothers are members of the Order. Why, then, shall not our sympathies be felt, our voices heard, as to what that influence shall be?

"You tell us that King Solomon was a Mason, and call him a Grand Master. It is our impression that he was not blind to the charms, deaf to the voice, or indifferent to the welfare of woman, although we are not sure that any of our sisters claimed to be hewers of wood in the mountains or of stone in the quarries, or were overseers of the work, either as Entered Apprentices, Fellow Crafts, or Master Masons, in building the temple.

"When 'a greater man than Solomon' appeared, he was not regardless of woman's prayer, or praise, or sympathy. He received with grateful words her ministrations and heartfelt offerings, whether at the home of Martha and Mary at Bethany, in his triumphant entrance to Jerusalem, or his sorrowful death march to Calvary. His sympathy rose with him from the tomb, and has elevated woman's destiny and inspired her immortal hopes, though none of our sex was numbered with the twelve apostles, or sent out with the seventy to cast out devils.

"In later days, when the holy city and its temple were in ruins, and valiant Knights would rescue the violated sepulchre from infidel hands, they willingly received helmet and shield, spear and banner, from fragile forms and fair hands, that did not covet the dangers of the crusade nor the fury of battle. Animated by such examples, some ladies of this village have directed me to express our sympathy on this occasion by a humble testimony of good will. Had we fears that our offering would be unwelcome, we should appeal to the magnanimous Knights now present to vindicate our honour and our sincerity. We have no such fears. The services of this occasion assure us that while Masonry welcomes to its altars and its fraternity honest men, who fear God and love their fellows of all countries and creeds, you do not hesitate to lay upon your altars the Holy Bible, and reserve it as a light from heaven. We ask you then, kind sir, as our courteous Knight, to accept this copy of the holy writings as a freewill offering from the ladies whose names are here recorded. Accept it, Sir Knight, from these sisters, and lay it on the altar of the Lodge over which you preside, to greet the eye, mould the affections, expand the charity, and elevate the life of all who bow before it as the great light in Masonry."

The following response was made by Rev. Cyril Pearl, W.M. of the new Lodge:—"Generous sisters—If ever knight of the olden time received inspiration from the lance or spear, helmet or shield, presented by the fragile form and fair hand, and went forth nerved for heroic deeds, surely the members of Standish Lodge would prove unworthy of their trust could they receive, without the deepest emotions, your generous offering. Most gratefully do we accept it, and most devoutly do we prize, not only its external richness and beauty, and its interior and intrinsic excellence, but we shall cherish in fond memory the words of wisdom, strength and beauty with which you have pleased to present it. They are thrilling words, awakening the tenderest memories of Masonry, and opening a field of thought too vast and varied to allow a fitting response at this late hour. Our Grand Master has impressively reminded us how difficult it is to impart instruction and fix lessons of wisdom in the minds of those famishing with hunger, and the finger of time silently points to the dinner hour as long since past. You remind us of 'fiery ordeals of persecution.' Well do we remember scenes of violence a little more than a quarter of a century ago, when madness ruled the hour, and it was boastfully proclaimed that Freemasonry was dead and buried past resurrection. Frenzied men in all ranks and professions joined a hand to roll the great stone, the rough ashlar of popular indignation, upon its sepulchre. How comes it to pass, then, that Freemasonry is to-day 'a power on earth,' instinct with life and giving occasion to the scenes and solemn services of this day? It is because

'Truth crushed to earth revives again,
The eternal years of God are hers.'

It is because the institution is based upon truth—the truth of God, as it stands in silent majesty upon the pure pages of this sacred volume. Its foundation is the rock of ages. This volume is the great light of Masonry. It is the light of the world. It is the pillar of cloud by day and fire by night, to guide the bannered hosts of Freemasonry and tribes of earth through seas of doubt and the wilderness of sin, to the promised land of a better life and a broader humanity. You speak of Solomon and the ancient temple. His love of woman was not a mere human passion or affection. He was the instrument of a higher intelligence. He built that glorious temple by divine command from a divine model, and was thus a link in the chain of Providence—an honoured link in that golden chain which is to bind earth with heaven; which is yet to hold in harmony and peace the nations of earth, and lift up fallen men to the dignity of sons of God. He was a favoured channel both for Masonry and religion, and the temple was the hallowed shrine of heaven's light till a greater than Solomon should come. Hands of violence and hearts of malice sought to quench that light. Vandal hands assailed the first and second temple till not one stone was left upon another, as they had nailed the lord of the temple to the cross and rolled the stone upon his sepulchre. Monuments of Masonry and temples of religion and truth may thus fall; nations that destroy them may perish, but truth survives. Freemasonry and religion still live and are fulfilling their mission of love and mercy. You recall us to the days of chivalry and the heroism and hospitality of the Knights. Their mission is not yet fully understood. They were links in that chain of events by which Christianity is raising woman from the subjection and debasement in which depraved power and passion in the stronger sex had doomed her for long ages, to that freedom and equality which heaven designed for her as the companion and helpmate for man. They sought in vain to recover the holy city and temple with lance, spear and human prowess. Their crusade was a failure, and the holy city is still in sackcloth and her sons in exile, but the heroism of the Knights still lives. Their memory is cherished, and will be till the last link of oppression's chain is severed—till freedom and fraternity encircle the earth, flashing their words of cheer and charity on the lightning's wing from land to land across the ocean waves. In this work Freemasonry has a noble part to bear. For this she has still her temples, her altars, and her priesthood. For this she lays the sacred oracles on her altars, around which Brothers, Companions, and Sir Knights bow in humble reverence. Valiant men, indeed, surround you, but you have no occasion for their protection or defence in approaching our altar with an offering like this. Accept for yourself and the sisters you represent the tribute of grateful hearts. Assure them that no gift could be more welcome—that with peculiar pleasure we shall lay it on the altar of the Standish Lodge, to remain there as our light and guide. We will guard it with sacred fidelity, remembering gratefully the sisters who thus generously greet the infancy of our enterprise. We ask leave to lay this fair record of their names within its golden enclosures, there to repose, guarded with the same fidelity with which we guard this great light and the altar on which it rests. That light we shall prize the more for the generous sympathy and words of cheer with which it is presented. So far as human frailty may dare to pledge, we will endeavour to fix its lessons in the memory, and engrave them on the hearts of those who kneel before it. And when this Lodge and all who gather around it shall have passed away—when all the temples of Masonry shall have accomplished their work, and the last sound of the gavel is heard—when Brothers, Companions, and Sir Knights who have faithfully served God and their generation shall have fought a good fight and 'finished their course,'

And their lances and banners furl,
Where the streets are gold and the gates are pearl, may you and the sisters you represent enjoy with them a blessed meeting in that Grand Lodge above—that upper temple, where farewell words are not spoken and parting tears are not shed."

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

I REPLY to the query of "A.B.C.," in your Magazine of the 12th ult., "Are there amongst us any members of the Society of Friends?"—No member of the Society of Friends can consistently become a Freemason in consequence of the required oath, although the writer knows that several instances have occurred, thereby rendering themselves liable to be disowned by the Society.—A P.M., AND FORMERLY A MEMBER OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA.

A Master Mason is not eligible to be installed in any Encampment of Masonic Knights Templar of Malta or Jerusalem until exalted to the Royal Arch degree, and holding a certificate from the Grand Lodge to that effect. Encampments meet quarterly, and Grand Conclave annually.—W. H. B., S.P.R.C., K.T., and Capt. C.C.

WAS HIRAM A SLAVE?

He was not. How could Hiram have been a slave? He was a son of a daughter of the tribe of Dan; his father was of Naphtali; they were consequently Israelites, not bondsmen or slaves. Solomon sent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre, to help in building the Temple, which was not commenced until four hundred and eighty years after the Israelites were brought out of Egypt, where they were bondsmen to Pharaoh, but not bought or sold as slaves. Moreover, slaves were not permitted to enter the Temple. A reference to 1 Kings vii. 13, 14, will show that Hiram was not presented to King Solomon, as stated by the Rev. David Turner. Admitting it to be as stated in 2 Chron. ii. 12, 13, 14, this does not prove that Hiram was a slave. The eastern expression of Abi, father, was given to Hiram out of respect, and from being an eminent person; it certainly does not mean that he belonged to the King of Tyre's father. Solomon also calls him "father," 2 Chron. iv. 16.—W. H. B., S.P.R.C.

COLONEL MAINWARING.

Who was the Colonel Mainwaring that Ashmole, in his diary, asserts was admitted with himself as a Mason at Warrington, in Cheshire, in 1646?—A CHESHIRE BROTHER.

INITIATION OF THE LATE DUKE OF YORK.

In what Lodge was His Royal Highness the late Duke of York initiated? I have heard it both asserted and denied that he was made in the Royal York, No. 7.—TEE BEE.

[In 1767 a Lodge at Berlin was formed under the English constitution, and when the Duke of York was travelling on the Continent, in 1787, he was initiated in that Lodge, which thereupon assumed the name of the Royal York, so that "Tee Bee" has heard from both sides correctly, the duke having been made in the Royal York (Berlin) and not in the Royal York Lodge of Perseverance, No. 7.]

DIONYSIAN MYSTERIES.

Where can a good account of the Dionysian mysteries be found? It is often asserted that they bear a strong resemblance to Freemasonry.—G. S.

[Consult Chandler's Travels in Asia Minor, 4to. Lond., 1775, and see also Chishull's Antiq. Asiat. and the Ionian Antiquities. If "G. S." will carefully read what was written on the ancient mysteries in the last volume of the Freemason's Magazine, he will find that all the mysteries of the ancients bear a strong resemblance to Freemasonry, but in the particular points in which both agree our correspondent must draw his own inference.]

SMYRNA.—The Impartial, of Smyrna, states that Bro. Hyde Clarke, who has been appointed by the government Vice-President of the Imperial Committees for Land Causes, on the 9th November, accompanied by his suite, paid an official visit at the palace to H. E. the Pasha and the Kiabya Bey.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE Government of Madras has taken legislative action in the matter of Romanising native words. It has directed all officials to adhere to the following rules:—"1st.—When native terms can be suitably represented in official correspondence by English equivalents the English word should be used. 2nd.—When native terms are introduced into official correspondence they should be expressed in English letters, according to the system originally recommended by Sir William Jones, and since adopted, with partial variations, by the Asiatic Society, the Madras Literary Society, and by Professor Wilson in his glossary of Indian official terms. 3rd.—No letters should be introduced into any native word which do not exist in the original, and those which do exist should be expressed strictly in accordance with the scheme. 4th.—The only exception from this rule should be in the case of the names of particular places which have become stereotyped by long usage in a conventional form, such as Negapatam, Musailipatam, Vizagapatam, &c." That officials may learn Sir William Jones's system, the government promise to publish lists of words and a vowel scale, but conclude the order with that remark.

Mr. Macready gave a reading from the English Poets, at the Town Hall, Weston-super-Mare, last week, for the benefit of the Working Men's Institute and other educational societies. The visit of this gentleman attracted one of the most crowded gatherings ever held in Weston, including members of almost every leading family in the town and neighbourhood. Mr. Macready read the story of Le Fevre, from Sterne's "Tristram Shandy." Campbell's "Exile of Erin" followed with amazing pathos, eliciting unbounded applause. He next read a passage from the Fifth Book of Milton's "Paradise Lost," including Eve's Dream and Adam's Morning Hymn. Campbell's "Lord Ullin's Daughter" was the next selection. The reading concluded with an act from Shakspeare's "Henry IV."

The Duke d'Aumale has purchased the whole of the magnificent library of the late M. Cigongne, amounting in number to four thousand volumes, and abounding in bibliographical treasures. The sum given for it, as we have heard it named, is £15,000, which, considering the number and rarity of the volumes, does not appear too high. Indeed, there is but little doubt that the collection, if sold at public auction, would have fetched more money. The late M. Cigongne, who died in May last, was a distinguished member of the Société des Bibliophiles Français, in which he had filled the office of treasurer since 1843. He was a book collector, according to M. Techener, during the whole of his life, having assisted at the sale of Morel Vindé, in 1812, of Duriez, in 1827, of the Marquis de Calabre, and of many other distinguished amateurs.

A few evening ago, B. Waterhouse Hawkins, Esq., delivered a lecture (the first of a series) to the members of the Athenæum, at Bury St. Edmunds, upon "The Age of Dragons in Great Britain; being an inquiry how far the fables, legends, romances, and traditions about dragons are founded on truth."

We have to announce this week, says the Athenæum, the death of a gentleman whose name has been long known among antiquaries, William Henry Rolfe, of Sandwich. Mr. Rolfe had something of the antiquary in him by inheritance, for he was the grandson of William Boys, the author of a well known work on the History of Sandwich and the Cinque Ports. Mr. Rolfe's name became first generally known by the excavations which he undertook at his own expense on the site of the Roman port town of Rutupia, at Richborough, near Sandwich; the results of which were published in "The Antiquities of Richborough, Reculver, and Lymne," a work dedicated to Mr. Rolfe. He had formed a large and extensive museum at Sandwich, consisting of Roman antiquities, chiefly from Richborough; of Anglo-Saxon antiquities, from his own excavations at Ozengall, near Ramsgate, and from other parts of East Kent; of coins, and of porcelain. He had parted with his Anglo-Saxon antiquities to Mr. Mayer, of Liverpool. Mr. Rolfe died, after a very short illness, on Sunday, the 27th of November, in his eighty-first year.

Mr. Alfred Tennyson is writing a new poem for "Macmillan's Magazine," to be entitled "Sea Dreams: an Idyll."

The Kreuz Zeitung states that the marriage at Munich of Ivan Golovin, the well known literary refugee, was telegraphed to the Emperor of Russia, and his majesty immediately replied, "My imperial, paternal blessing. All is forgiven, all forgotten."

Messrs. J. W. Parker and Son announce a volume of Essays and Reviews, by the Rev. B. Jowett, M.A., Regius Professor of Greek, Oxford; Rev. Rowland Williams, D.D., Vice-Principal, Lampeter College; Rev. Temple, D.D., Head Master of Rugby School; Rev. Baden Powell,

M.A., F.R.S., Savilian Professor of Geometry, Oxford; Rev. Mark Pattison, B.D.; C. W. Goodwin, M.A.; Rev. H. B. Wilson, B.D., Vicar of Great Staughton, Hants.

"George Eliot" complains thus in the Times:—"Mr. Newby, the publisher, in issuing a work under the title of "Adam Bede, Junior," has not only made use of my title, but has so worded his advertisement as to lead many persons into the belief that I am the author of his so-called "Sequel." The extent to which this belief has spread urges me to come forward with a public statement that I have nothing whatever to do with the work in question, or with Mr. Newby. I am not the first writer who has had to suffer from this publisher's method of trading. The readers of Currer Bell's life will remember a very unpleasant illustration of it.

At the last meeting of the Royal Society of Literature, Mr. Hogg read a paper "On the Karaite Jews," in which he gave an account of the leading facts relative to the history of this remarkable sect, with some notice of their present settlements, and especially of that at Tchufut-kaleh, near Baghchi-Serai, in the Crimea. The principal abodes of the Karaites in modern times would seem to have been in Poland, but there are still a few families resident in the Holy Land and at Constantinople. They bear the character of being an exceedingly honest, hardworking population, devoted much more to commercial than to literary pursuits. It is known, however, that they have long had in Poland a small literature peculiar to themselves, some notices of which may be found in J. C. Wolf's "Bibliotheca Hebræa." A paper was read, communicated by Col. Leake, "On Greek Archaeology and Topography," containing critical remarks upon some passages in the recent translation of Herodotus, by the Rev. G. Rawlinson, and on the Rev. Mr. Clark's "Travels in the Peloponnesus." Col. Leake pointed out that Mr. Rawlinson was in error when he states that "there were two cities named Telmessus in Asia Minor: one in Lycia, on the coast; the other, called also Termessus, in Pisidia"—and that, in fact, there were two Telmessi and two Termessi, the former deriving their names from τῆλμα, a marsh; the latter from τέρμα, a boundary. Col. Leake also showed that his own copy (made as long ago as 1800) of the celebrated Midas inscription in Phrygia was more accurate than the subsequent one of M. Texier, on which Mr. Rawlinson had apparently relied. Col. Leake further expressed his dissent from Mr. Rawlinson's views as to the origin of Greek coinage, and adhered to the opinions he had promulgated in his "Numismata Hellenica," viz., that it was much more likely that this refinement of civilization should have begun in Greece Proper than in the semi-barbarous states of Asia Minor. In conclusion, he called attention to the difficulties any traveller would have naturally experienced who, like himself, more than fifty years ago endeavoured to reconcile the often vague descriptions of ancient writers with the existing features of the country. No French map of the Peloponnesus, constructed carefully by very able engineers, then was in existence, and Col. Leake had to make his geography before he could understand Strabo or Pausanias.

The work of M. Coulvier-Gravier, on "Shooting Stars," has been received with the greatest honour in the world of science. The question of the formation, the purpose, and the final destination of the vast quantities of shooting stars, whose existence has hitherto presented the greatest difficulty of explanation to the astronomers of all ages, is here solved by M. Coulvier-Gravier, whose appointment to a most important post at the Observatoire has given universal satisfaction.

Four shares in the Globe evening newspaper were offered for sale last week. The proprietary shares are sixty-two in number, the dividends on which have been £84, but the average for the last three years has been £40 per annum. The auctioneer stated that the last shares sold in that place, about two or three years ago, produced £500 per share, and the proprietors' present pre-emption price is £400 per share. The highest bid was £127 10s. per share, and this offer being under the reserve price fixed by the Court of Chancery, no sale was effected. It was reported in the room, but not officially, that the reserve price was £250 per share.

The opening of the new schools in Paris for the study of the living Eastern languages is announced for Monday next. This foundation, due to the activity of the Convention, was first endowed on the 10th Germinal, in the third year of the Republic, with three professorships for the Arabic, Turkish, and Crimean Tartar languages. Nine chairs have been instituted since that time, and bestowed upon the most learned savants of our time. The ancient school founded by Louis Quatorze for the education of interpreters, destined for the divers missions in the Levant, is still in existence, and still furnishes the dragomans for the embassy at Constantinople.

The Critic says:—"We have to felicitate the country on the spread of enthusiasm among the gentlemen of the press, on the subject of the volunteer movement. Last week we had to congratulate the editor of the Morning Star upon having received a medal for skill in the use of the rifle; this week it is our pleasing duty to record the proposition of a correspondent of the Morning Advertiser, to the effect that a "Press Brigade" should be raised, to consist entirely of members of the public press: "At this critical period for our liberties, when every patriotic breast beats high at the thoughts of what might be the results of a descent upon our shores when the watchman is asleep, and when every class and creed are arming against the common enemy, it seems strange that the members of the Fourth Estate should alone be inactive. Distinguished as the majority of the gentlemen of the press are by rare ability and indefatigable industry, as evinced by their ubiquitousness and travels, I conceive there could be no fitter material for a large brigade than they would present. And if you are to take the initiative, or some other large establishment, like that of Bell's Life in London, whose racing editor is admirably formed, by his thorough knowledge of discipline and amiable disposition, to become a popular leader, the result would be that volunteers would readily be found, as willing to defend our firesides with their swords as they have hitherto done our rights and privileges with their pens. And although Douglas Jerrold has maintained the latter to be the most powerful weapon of the two, it is well to be prepared with each in case of necessity. I throw out this hint in the hope it may be adopted by influential parties.—Yours, &c. OBSERVER." The only objection we see to this proposition is, that should the Press Brigade be severely handled in battle there might be no one left to report the transaction. At any rate, it is to be hoped that the brigade will be one of infantry; seeing that if report speak truly, the commander proposed by 'Observer,' although the editor of a sporting print, is utterly unable to mount a horse. However, may virtue prosper! we need not despair of seeing even the columns of Bell's Life become not only popular but useful."

Poetry.

TREES ARE COMPANY.

BY THE REV. W. BARNES.

WHEN summer's burning heat is shed
Upon the drooping grasses' head,
A diving under shady leaves
The work folk in their snow white sleeves.
We then might yearn to climb the height,
Where thorns are white above the fern,
And air does turn the sunshine's might
To softer light, too weak to burn.
On woodless downs we might be free,
But lowland trees are company.

Though downs might show a wider view
Of green, far reaching into blue,
Their roads far winding in the glen,
And ringing with the sounds of men,
The thistle's crown of red and blue,
In Fall's cold dew does wither brown
And larks come down with the lew,
As storms do brew and skies do frown,
And though the down does let us free,
The lowland trees are company.

Where birds do sing, below the sun
In trees above the blue smoked town,—
And shades of stems do overstretch
The mossy path within the hatch;
If leaves be bright up over head,
When May does shed its glittering light
Or in the blight o' Fall, do spread
A yellow bed before our sight—
Whatever season it may be,
The trees are always company.

When dusky night does nearly hide
The path along the hedges' side,
And daylight's homely sounds be still,
But sounds of water at the mill;
Then if no face we longed to greet
Could come to meet or lonesome trace;
Or if no pace of weary feet,
However fleet, could reach its place—
The trees would still be company.

CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME.

"AND where is home?" asks destitute distress;
"This home that yields to injuries redress!
Is it reserved for close domestic ties,
Or free alike to all beneath the skies?
Is it for sufferers who at distance groan,
Or only those who nearer make their moan?
Oh tell me how this dwelling may be mine—
This home where charity begins to shine!"
Thus spake distress—and heaved a plaintive sigh—
When soft humanity made this reply:—
"Cease poor afflicted, by the world forgot,
Cease to lament thy miserable lot;
Dry up thy tears, and welcome to my cot—
That charity begins at home is true;
Yet this is rightly understood by few.
The miser quotes it to his base desire,
And robs the labourer of half his hire;
The glutton wallows on luxuriant haunch,
And stuffs with dainties his elastic paunch;
But should distress accost him on his way,
'My charity's at home,' you'd hear him say.
Thus all who this celestial virtue want,
Can gravely hypocritically cant.
But if this lesson carefully you learn,
The meaning of the phrase you'll soon discern.
Charity dwells within the mind possessed
Of wishes to relieve all poor distressed
At home, abroad, on cold or torrid shore—
She's ne'er from home where pity keeps the door."

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

PUBLICATION OF CANDIDATES' NAMES; AND INSPECTION OF LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It would, no doubt, be better to have the names of the brethren for passing or raising placed on the summons, but I think it is not essentially necessary; it all depends upon the construction put on the word "business" in the Book of Constitutions, page 61, clause 9. My opinion is, that it simply means the business of voting and balloting; for when a candidate has been initiated, no brother can have any objection to his being passed or raised, provided the necessary time has elapsed. Still, I agree with "An Old P.M." that it would be far preferable to give due notice, although its not being expressed on the summons is not in opposition to the Constitutions.

In the Freemasons' Magazine for last week, at p. 432, I observe a letter from "A Friend to Model Lodges," in which he suggests a plan for the inspection of Lodges. However excellent this plan might be in its working, it would, I think, if established, be a reflection on our Provincial Grand Lodges, whose duties I believe involve an inspection of any or all the Lodges in the province; and it seems your correspondent in his commendable zeal has overlooked this part of the machinery of the Craft. If this duty of our provincial rulers were strictly performed there would, I think, be no need of the plan suggested by "A Friend to Model Lodges."

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, fraternally yours, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, HENRY T. BOBART.
7th December, 1859.

FRENCH LODGES IN ENGLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am induced once more to trouble you, if you will permit me, in consequence of your note to my last communication, in which you allege that I am mistaken with regard to any Lodges in England holding warrants from the French Grand Lodge. I know that in one instance a Lodge is held under the authority of that Lodge, and by virtue of its warrant, and is in constant communication with it. Although made in England, I am a member of the two best French Lodges (at Paris), viz., the Lodge of the Rose of Perfect Silence, and the Lodge of the East, and all my brethren enjoy the same honours. Should we be admitted to an English Lodge as visitors? If after this we are refused acknowledgment by our English brethren what becomes of the universality of Masonry? Where is the brotherhood? I could well wish that some abler pen than mine would employ itself on this subject, which is, I think (and many Masons good and true agree with me) a vital one.

Do not imagine, my brother, that we wish to partake of the material benefits of English Masonry; it is only the recognition we ask for. Indeed, our earnest wish is to affiliate ourselves to the Grand Lodge, but the expense is an effectual barrier.

With many apologies for thus occupying your valuable time and space, and trusting that this most unhappy subject may be settled by English Masons in a manner consonant with our great laws, I am, yours sincerely and fraternally,

Dec. 6th, 1859.

A POOR MASON.

[We shall feel obliged by our correspondent giving us the name and address of the Lodge to which he alludes; even if it be so, it is contrary to all Masonic usage for one Grand Lodge to grant charters within the jurisdiction of another.

We may here notice the following communication which appeared in the columns of the Morning Advertiser on Monday, headed "Advertisement":—

"SIR,—In an article headed 'Grand Lodge of Freemasons,' and inserted in your impression of Thursday, Dec. 1, it is stated, 'The Board for General Purposes have issued a circular, cautioning the Craft against a spurious Order of Masons, whose head quarters are at Stratford, in Essex, calling themselves 'The Reformed Masonic Order of Memphis, or Rite of the Grand Lodge of Philadelphia.' I am not about to dispute either the wisdom or the Masonic feeling which has dictated this course of action, but I am anxious to save the time of the Board, and likewise the great amount of trouble usually incurred in seeking for that proverbial curiosity, a 'mare's nest.' There is, doubtless, a Masonic Lodge existing at Stratford (whether spurious or not time and the good conduct of its members can alone determine), but so far from its being 'head quarters,' it is a mere offshoot from a strong and efficient Lodge, holding the original warrant from the Masonic body in France, and devoted exclusively to the purpose of carrying out the true Masonic principles of brotherly love and benevolence, as many members of English Lodges can testify, who have been assisted from its funds; and, in this respect, perhaps the 'Board for General Purposes' might have been as well employed in cautioning the members of the Stratford Lodge, as in promulgating its ex cathedra denunciations against those who, like Luther, have committed the grave offence of attempting to make a great institution a real benefit to the masses, rather than an aristocratic plaything in the hands of those whom the contents of a well filled purse may have elevated to distinction.—I remain, yours very respectfully, "Stratford, Essex.

"C. ASHDOWN."

We certainly think it would have been better to have alluded more particularly to the so-called Grand Lodge from which the Lodge at Stratford holds, the principals of which have admitted in our columns that they do not hold from the Grand Lodge of France. The "offshoot" of an illegal and unconstitutional body must of necessity be as illegal and reprehensible as the source from whence it springs—ED.]

FREEMASONRY NOT PURELY SECULAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—One cannot help wondering how any one who has been initiated into Freemasonry, even though he should, like the late Professor Robison, have never advanced beyond the degree of an E.A., should so far misconceive the object of the Craft as to pronounce our meetings to be purely secular, as your correspondent "Z." does, in your last issue. It is true that Freemasonry enforces no creed in religion or code in politics; but whether we judge it by its beautiful ritual in opening and closing the Lodge in the first three degrees; or its solemn ceremonies in making, passing, and raising; the explanation of the tracing boards and the working tools; or its catechetical instruction in the various sections—whether we judge it by one or all of these, I cannot consider our meetings for the practise of the above, separately or conjointly, as being purely secular, and should as soon think of pronouncing the majority of our Sunday schools so. Our reverend and respected brother, Dr. Oliver, seems to err in his eloquent writings, by regarding Christianity and Freemasonry as quite synonymous terms; your correspondent "Z." runs into the opposite extreme. They have neither of them kept within compass, and thus missed the point within a circle. (Our meetings purely secular!—what a farce, then, not to say profanity, it would be to consecrate Lodges, open and close with prayer, beseech a blessing on candidates for the different degrees, and to use the volume of the sacred law, which is never closed in any Lodge, in the manner we do. I can assure our readers that

I do not write thus from any desire to be considered an authority on Masonry either here or elsewhere, though I am anxious really to become one, and to see every other brother do the same.

We often complain that we are misrepresented by the uninitiated; my own opinion is, that if we are misunderstood by the outer world, we have ourselves to blame for it. Of that, more anon; but for the present, I, for one, cannot allow any brother, especially in the only recognized organ of the Order in England, to pronounce our meetings "purely secular," without entering my humble protest against the assertion. I am not going to argue for or against the practice of holding Lodges of Instruction on the sabbath; agreeing as I do with you, brother Editor, that perhaps it is better avoided, as we ought to give no cause of offence to any brother unnecessarily.

I can assure "Z." that I have never attended any Masonic meeting on a Sunday; but I think he is too severe upon those brethren who do attend Sunday Lodges of Instruction when he writes—"Surely this is contrary to the letter of the moral law; and, our meetings being purely secular, contrary to the law of the land, too," and regards it as "a blot upon our escutcheon." Giving "Z." credit for being actuated only by the best of motives, but thinking that he does not hold Freemasonry in the high estimation to which it is entitled, I trust that he will receive these few remarks in the kindly spirit with which they are given.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

Bury, December 5th, 1859.

GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDDELL.

THE BOYS SCHOOL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As I hear there is likely to be a vacancy in the office of Secretary to this school by the resignation of Bro. Thiselton, let me advise the governors not to promise their votes until the names of all the candidates are before them.

Yours fraternally,

December 7th, 1859.

A LIFE GOVERNOR.

[There is an old adage about "looking for dead mens' shoes," and we have been furnished with the names of two candidates for the office, which we decline publishing, not believing that Bro. Thiselton has any intention of resigning, though the wish may be the father to the thought.—ED.]

THE CALENDAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The Calendar Committee of the Board of General Purposes, by the circular lately issued to the several Lodges in England, doubtless hath been roused to energy by the articles which have from time to time been in your excellent Magazine. Their attention should be especially directed to the form of columns suggested by Bro. E. S. Cossens, (p. 934, No. 46, 1858), which, if adopted, I venture to say would not take a day to complete the lists, if Bro. Farnfield, who knows all about it, could give his assistance to their completion.

Yours fraternally,

5th December, 1859.

R. E. X.

SHOPPING IN NEW YORK.—"The first thing she asked to see was for some 'bed spreads.' 'What did you ask for?' I said. 'Bed spreads.' Not liking to ask again what she meant, I quietly waited till they were produced, and they turned out to be counterpanes. A white 'sun shade,' was the next article—that was a parasol. My curiosity was again excited by her asking for 'paper cambric,' and twelve yards of 'cotton batting.' I began to despair of ever being able to make myself intelligibly understood in the shopping line. These latter articles were common glazed muslin, and wadding, which is sold by the yard instead of sheets, a great convenience. Our next visit was to Ball and Black, the great jewellers, to look at some brooches, bracelets, and rings, when, to my astonishment, she asked for 'breast pins,' 'wristlets,' and 'finger rings.' We now went into Thompson's to have luncheon. She asked me what I liked best; but, thinking that perhaps the eatables might be called by names I knew nothing about, I inquired of her what was best, to which she replied, 'Let me order what I think will suit you.' Her orders were as follows:—'Waiter, will you bring stews with crackers, soft-shell crabs, squab owl, with Irish potatoes and fixings—and waiter, don't forget some cold slaw, and squash pie.' It was with the greatest curiosity that I waited the appearance of viands with such outlandish names, and it was not long before the waiter appeared with our wonderful luncheon."—American Photographs.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

WE believe we may congratulate the Craft upon the fact that the differences with the brethren of Hobart Town have been all amicably settled; and not only the charter of Lodge No. 781 restored, but two others granted for the district of South Tasmania.

THE Stewards for the approaching festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Masons and their Widows, had their first meeting yesterday, Friday, when nearly fifty lodges were represented. There is yet room for a few more Stewards.

THE Domestic and United Pilgrims Chapter of Instruction has been removed from the Queen Elizabeth, Walworth, to Bro. Hills, West Square, Lambeth.

SUPREME GRAND LODGE.

QUARTERLY COMMUNICATION.

THE quarterly communication of Grand Lodge was held in the Great Hall, on Wednesday last, the 7th instant, the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., Lord Panmure, presiding as Grand Master, supported by Bros. Admiral Sir Lucius Curtis, D. Prov. G.M. for Hampshire, as D.G.M.; Hall, Prov. G.M. for Cambridgeshire; Ramsay, Prov. G.M., Bengal; Col. Burlington, P. Prov. G.M., Bengal; Lord de Tabley, S.G.W.; Col. Brownrigg, P.G.W., as J.G.W.; Savage, S.G.D.; Slight, J.G.D.; F. Roxburgh, G. Reg.; S. Tomkins, G. Treas.; W. G. Clarke, G. Sec.; Rev. A. Ward, G. Chaplain; Rev. — Moore, P.G. Chaplain; E. G. Pocock, G.S.B.; Jennings, G.D. of Cers.; A. W. Woods, P.G.D. of Cers.; Farnfield, Asst. G. Dir. of Cers.; Daukes, G. Supt. of Works; Horsley, G. Org.; Smith, G. Purs.; Adams, Asst. G. Purs.; Fred. Dundas, P.G.W.; Pattison, P.G.W.; Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes, P. Prov. G. Chaplain; W. P. Scott, P.G.D.; Hervey, P.G.D.; Havers, P.G.D. (President of the Board of General Purposes); Hopwood, P.G.D.; Faudell, P.G.D.; J. N. Tomkins, P.G.D.; Nelson, P.G.D.; S. B. Wilson, P.G.D.; Masson, P.G.S.B.; Spiers, P.G.S.B.; Udall, P.G.S.B.; Evans, P.G.S.B. (President of the Colonial Board); Patten, P.G.S.B.; &c., &c.

The Grand Lodge having been opened in ample form and the minutes of the last quarterly communication read—

Bro. Madden, on the motion that they be confirmed, rose and said that as the immediate Past Master of the Lodge of Concord, No. 49, he wished to explain how it was that the Lodge had ceased to meet and to expose itself to the sentence of erasure passed upon it at the last meeting of Grand Lodge. It so happened that the house in which the meetings of the Lodge used to be held in the time of Bro. Crucefix had been pulled down, and the house erected in its stead was devoted to other purposes. In the mean time Bro. Crucefix died and the brethren dispersed, but he (Bro. Madden) was at present busily engaged in finding out their addresses, and having the support of many influential brethren he was ready to pay the fees and do all that was necessary to resuscitate the Lodge and save its number. The warrant had, in the confusion of Bro. Crucefix's papers, unfortunately been mislaid, but no effort on his part would be spared to recover it; he therefore hoped that Grand Lodge would allow No. 49, to remain on the register.

The President of the Board of General Purposes, was sure Grand Lodge would be ready to give Bro. Madden every assistance under the peculiar circumstances he had mentioned. Bro. Madden's course however was not to ask Grand Lodge to rescind a resolution at which it had once arrived, but simply to move that the confirmation of so much of the minutes as referred to the erasure of No. 49 be deferred until such time as Grand Lodge had farther considered the question.

Bro. Madden having moved in the spirit of Bro. Havers's suggestion and the motion having been duly seconded, the original motion so modified was put and carried.

INVESTITURE OF ASSISTANT GRAND PURSUIVANT.

The Deputy Grand Master then called Bro. Thomas Alexander Adams to the dais, to which he was conducted by the Grand Director of Ceremonies, when addressing him, the noble lord said he felt great pleasure in investing him with the insignia of the important office of Assistant Grand Pursuivant. His selection for that office by the Grand Master was a proof of the high opinion he entertained of him, both as a man and as a Mason; and he (the Deputy Grand Master) was convinced that he would discharge the duties of the office entrusted to him in a manner satisfactory to the Grand Lodge, and so as to justify the Grand Master's selection of him.

Bro. Adams was then invested, and having briefly thanked the Deputy Grand Master, was conducted to his proper place, amid the hearty applause of the brethren assembled.

The Deputy Grand Master then stated that he had been requested by the Grand Master to apologize for his absence, which was occasioned partly by important duties he had to discharge in Yorkshire, and partly from ill health, from which however, as they would no doubt be glad to learn, his lordship was rapidly recovering.

NOMINATION OF GRAND MASTER.

Bro. Cotterell said that he rose with hesitation, to submit to Grand Lodge the nomination of the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland as Grand Master for the ensuing year. He said, with hesitation, because he thought that a proposition of such importance would come with a better grace from some brother of more influence than himself in the Craft. If at any time the acts of his lordship had been canvassed with a feeling of party spirit (no, no) he hoped that feeling was now eradicated, and he felt sure that every brother who took care that it should not again be brought into vogue would do a benefit to the Craft (hear, hear). If he were about to nominate for the first time to the high office of Grand Master any other member of the Craft he should feel it incumbent on him to go at length into a detail of his qualifications, but in the case of the Earl of Zetland, his doing so would weary the brethren and be a waste of the time of Grand Lodge. His lordship was a Mason of long standing, who had ever shown himself zealous to promote the interests of the Craft and to uphold the charities of the Order, not only by his purse but also by being ever ready to give his attendance at any meeting or at any festival held for the purpose of advancing them; indeed, he considered his lordship's qualifications without a parallel in the Order, for all who had been in the habit of attending Grand Lodge knew, from their own experience, that he had during the last fifteen years presided over its deliberations with courtesy and impartiality, and upheld by his conduct the dignity of his office. He would not, however, place his qualifications on so low a footing as that of his long service, but would rather base his claims to re-election on his many Masonic virtues (hear, hear).

The following twelve Past Masters who were nominated at the General Committee on the 23rd Nov., 1859, to serve on the Board of Benevolence for the ensuing twelve months, were unanimously elected:—Fred. Adlard, No. 7; Geo. Barrett, No. 188; Jas. Brett, No. 206; Hen. Garrod, No. 1022; Samuel Gale, No. 19; Charles Lee, No. 9; Richard Motion, No. 663; William Pass, No. 30; Henry Potter, No. 11; Edward Dresser Rogers, No. 15; James R. Sheen, No. 219; William Young, No. 72.

The report of the Board of Benevolence was then brought forward. It stated that on the 21st September seven petitioners were relieved with £35; on the 9th October, eleven petitioners were relieved with £130; and on the 23rd November eighteen petitioners were relieved with £198.

On the motion of Bro. Savage, S.G.D., the foregoing report was received and entered on the minutes.

BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES.

The report of the Board of General Purposes having been taken as read,

The President of the Board of General Purposes moved, and Bro. Locock Webb seconded the motion, that it be received and entered on the minutes.

Bro. Whitmore did not oppose the motion, but he thought, before the report was passed, the Board ought to give Grand Lodge some information with regard to the reasons which had induced them to come to the resolution with reference to the advance of money to provincial Lodges.

The President of the Board of General Purposes, rose to answer. There would be a distinct resolution submitted on that subject to Grand Lodge, when Bro. Whitmore would have a full opportunity of expressing his opinion on the matter.

Bro. Stebbing had a request to make before the motion was put from the chair. He would appeal to Bro. Havers, as president of the Board, to allow that portion of the report which related to voting by proxy, to stand over until the next meeting of Grand Lodge. He did not at present think that proxies should be allowed, (as in the Grand Lodge of New York) in the management of the ordinary business of Grand Lodge, although it was a system which might, he was persuaded, be of some advantage in the election of committees.

The Deputy Grand Master observed that the subject had been frequently brought under the consideration of the Board of General Purposes, and they were bound, in courtesy to those who had brought it before them, as well as in duty, to furnish Grand Lodge with their opinions in respect to it. They did not propose to take any further steps in reference to the matter, and their adoption of the report did not preclude Bro. Stebbing from giving notice of motion in reference to the action of Grand Lodge in regard to it.

Bro. Stebbing said that he should then, although most unwillingly, move as an amendment, that so much of the report as related to voting by proxies be allowed to stand over to next quarterly communication.

Bro. Shellard seconded the proposition.

The President of the Board of General Purposes, thought this was neither the time nor the opportunity for the discussion of the question raised by the amendment of Bro. Stebbing; and he would ask Grand Lodge if they had confidence in the Board, which was one of their own election, not to throw back upon them the consideration of a question of which they had already disposed. The amendment was then put from the chair, and lost by a large majority.

The President of the Board of General Purposes, then said that he had now to submit to Grand Lodge a resolution embodying a general principle which he was sure no brother present would contravene. He had to ask them to sanction this—

"That it would be a legitimate and judicious application of the funds of General Purposes, to advance money on loan to provincial Lodges to assist them in erecting Masonic Halls or Lodge rooms, provided that proper security be given for the repayment of the principal, with interest, within a reasonable period."

He apprehended that the principle embodied in that proposition was a just and good one, for it was a wish dear to the heart of every Mason to see their meetings held in temples exclusively devoted to the celebration of their mysteries, and Masonry rescued from the association with the publichouse. Their principal object was, no doubt, to see the head quarters of the Order properly lodged, but as they had at present a large amount of funded property on which they were receiving something about 3½ cent, he thought that if the brethren in the country were desirous of meeting in Masonic temples of their own erection, Grand Lodge would be doing good service if it would aid them in so doing rather than allow any private individual to do so. At present the Board contented itself by asking Grand Lodge to approve the general principle, leaving it to the Board to draw up a scheme, in conformity with which Grand Lodge would be willing not to erect, but to assist in the erection of Masonic halls in the provinces. It should be their duty to take care that their funds suffered no diminution, and that they received on all such advances as good interest as they could get elsewhere. With regard to this proposal, if acted upon, interfering with the changes contemplated in the building in which they were assembled, he did not think such would be the case; but even if it did it would be better to wait for them than stay the endeavours of their country brethren to sever their connection with the publichouses, which were the last places in which the mysteries of the Order ought to be celebrated. He was convinced that nothing could tend more to maintain the high character and reputation of the Craft than such a severance. He did not wish to say one word against those who as landlords of those houses pursued an honest calling, but amongst themselves the brethren well knew that they lost a large degree of credit by their assumed connection with such establishments. It should not, however, be understood that the Board thought it proper that money should be advanced to every party that applied for it—no such thing. They would have first to show that they had put their own shoulder to the wheel; besides which, every application would have to be brought before Grand Lodge to be decided on its merits, the Board taking care to see that the security for the repayment of the money was a good one. In taking that course they would be acting wisely, judiciously, and legitimately. The only objection he had as yet heard to the proposal was, that it did not go far enough for the brethren of the Southmorton Lodge, No. 610, who had stated to him that they had bought a freehold site, and built upon it a suitable temple, with proper accommodation for the Lodge and Chapter, and with apartments for the Tyler, and owed upon it a debt of £250, and they asked if they would be assisted in getting rid of that encumbrance. Now he had no hesitation in saying that Grand Lodge would be disposed to act with the greatest liberality, and advance the money on approved security, at all times taking care that the funds of the parent body suffered no diminution.

Bro. Locock Webb seconded the resolution, in the principle of which he fully concurred.

Bro. Whitmore opposed the motion, as he had high legal authority for stating that as all the members of the Craft were proprietors of the fund which it was proposed should be laid out, there would be a difficulty in reclaiming a loan made to any of them out of that fund. They could never do it. It would be just as easy to try and advance astronomical science by making a railway to the moon. The whole amount of the fund they had to lend out was only £10,000, and they knew nothing of the enthusiasm of the brethren in the country, when they thought that with that amount they would be able to meet the forty or fifty applications which would be made to them the moment it became known they were about to lend their money. He was sure the resolution if acted on could not fail to lead to litigation, and give rise to great heartburnings in the Craft. He had however to complain that those who brought it forward had not given Grand Lodge some details with respect to how and to what extent they were prepared to make these advances. He asked Grand Lodge to deal with the question not in any party spirit but as each individual brother present would do in his own particular case. But if they were to lend out their money, where, he would ask, were they to get funds to carry out the grand scheme of last year for the improvement of the building in which they were then assembled?

Bro. Stebbing inquired if Grand Lodge had at present the power of lending money on freehold property.

Bro. Havers replied in the affirmative.

Bro. Stebbing would not in a factious spirit press any amendment to the resolution, although he regarded it as very injurious to the best interests of Masonry; besides, it was unnecessary, if Grand Lodge had at present the power of investing its money in mortgage on freehold property, without sending over England to build Masonic halls, which were sure to get into disuse, and become bad security for any money advanced upon them. Speaking of his province, he knew that in the small towns Masonry was very ephemeral in its popularity. While that popularity lasted the brethren were enthusiastic in regard to the Craft, and were ready to build Masonic halls, but when that spirit died away the halls came to be unused, and fell in value as security for the money advanced upon them. The Masonic hall at Lynton had not been used for Masonic purposes for the last twenty-three years. In Christchurch too magnificence had been allowed to get into disuse while the Lodge which built it had removed to Bournemouth, and was in a state of decay. In the large towns, like Southampton, Portsmouth, or Portsea, the brethren were numerous enough to build the halls at their own expense and keep them clear of debt; or if there was a sign of their being allowed to fall in desuetude, there was always some wealthy brother at hand to step in and prevent it; but in small towns, where there were not men of that character, they would be sure to have continual clamour, and speaking prophetically, he would say that if they now encouraged the erection of a large number of these halls, in ten years time not one of them would be in use for Masonic purposes. Then when the parties borrowing defaulted, Grand Lodge would have to appear in the courts, and thus Masonry would be dragged before the country in a manner most offensive. Every one too knew that it was impossible to touch parchment without getting into a sea of troubles; and for himself he had to say, that although in all building speculations he acted with all possible care and caution, he had not been out of Chancery for the last twenty years. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) He had nothing more to say than to implore Grand Lodge not to stimulate small Lodges—in which their members knew less of Masonry than of building speculations—to rush into the erection of Masonic halls.

Bro. McEntire said that one would think from his observations that Bro. Whitmore had not taken the trouble to read the resolution which he opposed, for if he had he would have seen that it was not proposed to lend any money except on good and ample security. He would also remind him with respect to the difficulty in reclaiming the money to which he referred on the authority of some great unknown lawyer, that the money with which it was proposed to deal was not invested in the name of Grand Lodge, but in that of trustees who would be the parties to the loan, and who could enforce its repayment. That disposed of the legal part of the question. The opposition of Bro. Stebbing, however, rested on the ground of expediency, and he mentioned large towns where the brethren were numerous and wealthy enough to build halls at their own expense, and it was therefore clear that those towns would not get any of the money of Grand Lodge as they did not want it; but he considered it right that when provincial Lodges wished to advance Freemasonry and separate it from all connection with the publichouse, they ought to have the countenance and support of Grand Lodge, provided only the funds of the Board of General Purposes were not jeopardized. Who knew but if in those towns where, as stated by Bro. Stebbing, the halls had fallen in desuetude, Grand Lodge had originally helped the undertakings, that help might not have kept alive the Masonic enthusiasm of the brethren.

The Deputy Grand Master in putting the resolution for confirmation, stated that he fully concurred in the views of the Board of General Purposes in regard to the matter.

The resolution was then carried by a large majority.

The President of the Board of General Purposes then moved, "That in future the brother presiding at the General Committee shall not receive, nor shall the Grand Secretary record, any nomination, except it be in writing signed by a member of the Grand Lodge, in which the names of the candidates, together with the numbers of their respective Lodges, and whether Masters or Past Masters, shall be specified."

This was seconded by Bro. Symonds, and unanimously approved of.

The Deputy Grand Master, in putting the motion for the adoption of the report, called attention to the paragraph in reference to the spurious Lodge at Stratford, and gave it as his opinion, that under the provisions of the 30th George III., it was an illegal assembly. That act excepted the regular Masonic Lodges, but required that the members should be registered with the clerk of the peace, and he would advise them to fulfil the law in every respect.

COLONIAL BOARD.

The President of the Colonial Board, in moving the adoption of the report of that Board, congratulated Grand Lodge on the settlement of the Victorian question with regard to the fees, and at the expression of the warm attachment of the brethren of Victoria to the mother Grand Lodge. The report was then adopted without opposition.

A grant of £50 was then, on the motion of Bro. Barrett made to the inmates of the Masonic Asylum, at Croydon, for the purchase of coals, &c., during the winter, after which Grand Lodge was closed in ample form, and adjourned to the first Wednesday in March next.

THE BOYS SCHOOL.

At the General Committee of this institution, on Saturday last, Bro. Hopwood presiding—it was resolved to confirm the decision of the House Committee, and give notice to the second master to terminate his engagement—there appearing to be no likelihood of his dissatisfaction with his position being overcome. It was also resolved, on the motion of Bro. Symonds, that the House Committee should apply to some gentleman having experience in tuition and in the inspection of schools, to organize the school and lay down a proper scheme of education to be adopted—having regard to the position in life the boys were likely to fill on leaving the school. As we know many of our subscribers are engaged in the scholastic profession, with a view of obtaining as much information upon the subject as possible we publish the scheme of education as agreed to by the present masters of the school:—

The first master to superintend the first and second classes of alternate days, in Greek, Latin, History, Jurisprudence, Rhetoric, Correspondence, Reading, Dictation, Science [rather comprehensive this], Writing and Entering, General Knowledge, Religious Knowledge.

The second master to take, on alternate days, the first and second classes in Writing and Entering, English Grammar, Geography, Arithmetic, Mensuration, Euclid; and the third and fourth classes, daily, excepting Tuesday, in—Elementary Knowledge, Grammar, Geography, Reading, Spelling, Writing, Arithmetic.

We ask our scholastic brethren whether this is a proper scheme for boys who are to leave school at the age of fourteen to battle with life, and, in the majority of instances, to obtain a living by the labour of their hands and the sweat of their brow?

METROPOLITAN.

ROBERT BURNS LODGE (No. 25).—This Lodge met at the Freemasons' Tavern on Monday last, when Bros. Best, Ives, and George, were raised to the third degree; and Bros. Charlton and Thorburn passed to the second degree. This being the evening for the electing the new W.M., a ballot was taken, and found to be unanimous for Bro. Gladwin, S.W., therefore the Lodge will not lose any of its lustre in the ensuing year. Bro. W. H. L. Apter was unanimously re-elected Treasurer. The P.M.s present were, Bros. Watson, Apter (Treas.), Newton (Sec.), Robinson, Bennett, Clements, Dyke, and Le Gassick. Among the visitors were, Bros. J. Smith, G. Pust; Osborne, S.W., No. 1002; Hill, No. 276; and several others. Previous to calling off, several gentlemen were proposed for initiation, and two or three brethren to join the Lodge. The widow of one of the late members applied for some assistance from the Lodge Fund of Benevolence, and a suitable sum was immediately voted. It is to be regretted that all Lodges have not their own Fund of Benevolence, it being so easily secured, as it is in this Lodge, by setting aside 21s. from each initiation, 5s. from the joining fee, and 1s. per year from the annual subscription; and if need be, they could perhaps do with a banquet the less, as the Robert Burns have done. The meeting passed off most admirably, much assisted by the talent of Bros. Fielding, Shoorbridge, and Weekes, who sang the glees "Brother Masons;" "Winds gently whisper." Bro. Fielding also gave "Sally, Sally." Bro. Nicholls sang "The Rhine Wine" most excellently.

LODGE OF GOOD REPORT (No. 158).—At a meeting of this Lodge, holden on Thursday, December 1st, at Radley's Hotel, New Bridge-street, Bro. Charles Smale, P.M., presided. Mr. Tufnell, of Southgate, was initiated; and Bros. Cartwright and Beauchamp, of No. 861, were passed to the second degree. Bro. F. Southgate, P. Prov. S.G.W. of Kent, Bro. Wood, of St. Patrick's Lodge, Bro. A. GreatRex, of the Neptune Lodge, were present as visitors. The Lodge was closed in due form. The brethren adjourned to dinner, and in social love and harmony spent a pleasant evening.

LODGE OF JOPPA (No. 223).—This Lodge held a meeting at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate, on Monday, the 5th instant; Bro. H. Harris, W.M., presided, supported by Bro. D. Marks, S.W., and Bro. Ducker, J.W., and other members. The Lodge having been opened in due form, and the minutes read and confirmed, Bros. Phillips and Foreman were passed to the second degree in a most able manner by the W.M. This being the night for the electing the W.M. for the ensuing year, the ballot was unanimously in favour of Bro. D. Marks, the S.W., who, with feelings of emotion, thanked the brethren for the great honour they had conferred upon him, and stated he would do all in his power to discharge the duties to the best of his abilities. At the conclusion of the business the brethren adjourned to refreshment, and passed a most agreeable evening. Among the visitors were Bros. Henry Isaacs, Prov. G. Org., Herts; Joseph Isaacs, P.M., Lodge Israel, No. 247;—Davies, Lodge of Tranquillity, No. 218; and others.

INSTRUCTION.

ENOCH LODGE (No. 11).—The first meeting of the season was holden on Thursday, at Bro. Rowland's, the Newton Hotel, St. Martin's-street, Leicester-square, Bro. Boyd, W.M. elect of the Prudent Brethren, officiating as W.M.; Bro. C. Watson, S.W.; and Bro. Rowland, J.W. The ceremony of initiation was performed, and the usual business of the first degree worked. The Lodge then adjourned.

GREENWICH—St. George's Lodge (No. 164).—A meeting of this Lodge was held at the Globe Tavern, Royal Hill, Greenwich, on Thursday, 1st December, 1859. Bro. H. A. Collington as W.M. There were also present, Bro. H. J. Hinxman, P.M., who has been appointed preceptor to this Lodge, Bros. E. M. Hubbock, as S.W.; Orchard, as J.W.; Durrant, Scott, Cawthorne, Stevens, and numerous other brethren. The ceremonies of initiation and passing were performed by the W.M., and the first section of the first lecture ably worked by the brethren. The young members of this Lodge are making rapid progress, and from the zeal displayed must soon become, under the direction of their instructor, good workers. The Lodge closed at the usual hour, half-past 9, P.M.

DOMATIC LODGE (No. 206).—At the usual weekly meeting of this Lodge held on Tuesday, the 6th December, at the Queen Elizabeth, King's Row, Walworth, Bro. D. R. Farmer, W.M. of the Robert Burns Lodge, No. 25, went through the ceremony of consecration, assisted by Bro. W. Watson, No. 25, and accompanied by Bro. Matthew Cooke upon the harmonium. The W.M. performed his task correctly and impressively, and the musical and vocal accompaniment, under Bro. Cooke's able management, was duly appreciated. The odes and anthems, "Let there be light," "Hail, immortal Lord!" and "Behold how joyful!" being rendered with nice effect. The W.M. afterwards gave the ceremony of installation, and the officers having been duly invested, the beautiful addresses to the W.M., Wardens and brethren, were delivered by Bro. Farmer with his accustomed ability. The Lodge being closed, the brethren adjourned to supper, and after the usual loyal and Masonic toast, the remainder of the evening passed in the greatest harmony. Notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather there was a goodly number of brethren, amongst whom we noticed, Bros. Thomas, Anslow, W. Watson, Matthew Cooke, J. R. Warren, Charnock, Potter, Robertson, Church, Braham, Murr, Avery, Quelch, King, Hollings, &c., &c.

PROVINCIAL.

ESSEX.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE.

THE annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Essex was, as we stated in our last week's impression, held at the Town Hall, Chelmsford, on Monday, the 21st of November. The following report arrived too late for our last:—

The Prov. Grand Lodge was opened in form by the R.W. D. Prov. G.M., Bro. Major Skinner, who was reappointed on the occasion, assisted by W. Bro. Burton, P. Prov. S.G.W., as D. Prov. G.M. pro tem. The several Lodges in the province were represented except Burnham and Braintree. The minutes of the last Prov. Grand Lodge at Romford were read and approved. The report of the Audit Committee, which showed a balance in the hands of the Prov. Grand Treasurer, was adopted.

The following brethren were appointed officers for the ensuing year:—Bros. A. Durrant, Prov. S.G.W.; Motion, Prov. J.G.W.; Arnold and Carwithen, Prov. G. Chaplains; John Pattison, reelected Prov. G. Treas.; T. Osborne, Prov. S.G.D.; H. Huish, W.M. elect, No. 343, Prov. J.G.D.; John Mann, Prov. G. Sec.; S. Webb, Prov. G. Supt. of Works; P. Matthews, Prov. G. Dir. of Cera.; F. Paas, Prov. G. Purs.; C. Owen, Prov. G. Reg.; R. Hilliard, and three others, Prov. G. Stewards.

W. Bro. Pattison proposed, and W. Bro. Webb seconded, a vote of thanks to the county magistrates for the loan of the Shire Hall.

A vote of thanks was awarded to the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master for presiding.

This finished the business of the Prov. Grand Lodge, which was closed in antient and solemn form.

The brethren reassembled at dinner at the White Hart Hotel. On this occasion V.W. Bro. C. W. Arnold presided, in consequence of the delicate state of the health of the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, who took his seat on the right of the chairman.

We should here notice that at a meeting of the last Prov. Grand Lodge, held at Romford, in 1858, a resolution was passed to present a testimonial of fraternal regard to the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master on his retirement from office, which testimonial was placed in the Grand Lodge room, and presented to the Major privately, it being considered the best mode of presentation consistent with the feelings and health of the D. Prov. Grand Master.

It was as follows:—

"The Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Master of Essex having laid before the Provincial Grand Lodge assembled at Romford, 4th Nov. A.L. 5858, the resignation of the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Samuel James Skinner.

"The R.W. Prov. Grand Master and officers and brethren of the Essex Provincial Grand Lodge, moved with the deepest sorrow at the cause which has rendered this step necessary, and with the most heartfelt regret at the irreparable loss the province has sustained, desire unanimously to express their sympathy with Bro. Skinner, as well as their gratitude to him for the zealous and eminent services the Essex Craft have received at his hands during the lengthened period of seven years, during which he has discharged the onerous duties of his high and important office.

"We confess, R.W. Sir, the very great difficulty we experience in conveying to you the feelings of esteem and affection that pervade the whole province of Essex on your retirement from the active duties of Masonry.

"As a distinguished soldier, a magistrate, a man and a Mason, already has the tongue of good report been sounded unceasingly in your praise; and whilst we more especially have reason to mourn the bereavement which has fallen upon our fraternity, we humbly pray that it may please the Great Architect and Ruler of the universe to recover your strength and crown the latter days of your valuable life with the blessings of health and peace, and that whenever he shall call you hence he may pass you safely through the valley of the shadow of death that you may finally arise from the tomb of transgression and join the companions of your earthly toil in that all-perfect Lodge which is above, and with them shine as stars for ever and ever."

The Chairman was supported on his right by the D. Prov. Grand Master; Bros. R. Meggy, P. Prov. S.G.W., and Hilliard; and on his left, by Bro. Joseph Burton, P. Prov. S.G.W., acting D. Prov. G.M. for the day; Bro. Adlard, and Bro. W. Wiseman.

After dinner the V.W. brother proposed the first toast, "The Queen and the Craft," hoping soon to see the Prince of Wales a Master Mason. This was followed by the national anthem.

The Chairman gave "The health of the head of the Craft, the M.W.G.M., the Earl of Zetland," which was well received.

"The health of Lord Panmure, and the rest of the officers of Grand Lodge," was given from the chair, and received with acclamation.

Bro. Arnold then proposed, as he said, a toast more immediately connected with the province, and his only regret was that the gentleman whose name he would mention was not with them. He alluded to the R.W. Prov. G.M., Bro. Bagshaw. No one regretted the absence (or its cause) of that worthy brother more than he did, but he hoped when the year rolled round, to again see their Prov. Grand Master in his place as their president.

The usual honours were accorded to the toast.

The reverend brother in the chair said, in proposing the health of the R.W. D. Prov. Grand Master, that he knew it was impossible for him to do justice to it; but he knew, however far he might fall short in his duty in proposing the healths of the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, and the acting D. Prov. Grand Master, he was well aware that his deficiency would be amply compensated by the reception of the toast. He was sure the brethren would forgive him for coupling with Bro. Major Skinner's name that of Bro. Burton, the acting Deputy of the day, when he told them that it was considered by the medical advisers of the D. Prov. Grand Master, to be highly injurious to his health to speak at any length, and thereby become excited. He therefore gave the healths of the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., Bro. Major Skinner, and the acting D. Prov. G.M., Bro. Burton. And in offering this toast to them, he was quite sure of the sort of reception that would be given to it. (Hear, hear). He knew how delighted the brethren were to see again amongst them him whom they all thought only a short year ago was rapidly proceeding to "that bourne whence no traveller returns." It had pleased the G.A.O.T.U. to raise up their worthy brother by restoring him to better health. He would call upon them to join him in a sincere prayer that this state of improved health might be enjoyed for many years to come. (Applause). In speaking of their brother the acting Deputy Prov. Grand Master, it would be idle on his part to attempt to tell them anything about his Masonic qualities, he was so well known to all that he should only observe, if any of them needed instruction their W. Bro. Burton would readily lend them his assistance.

The toast was drunk with hearty cheers, the honours being given with much spirit.

Bro. Burton responded to the toast on behalf of the D. Prov. Grand Master and himself. He said—W. Bro. Arnold, you, as the chairman of this meeting, have just proposed a toast with which you have connected my name. I thank you deeply for the kind and eloquent manner in which you introduced the toast; and brother Wardens and brethren, allow me to thank you also most sincerely for your kind reception of our names. During my short Masonic career it has fallen to my share many times to return thanks for compliments of this kind. I have, on the occasions to which I have just alluded, ever found a difficulty to express, as I desired, my thanks sufficiently for the kind manner in which my name has been always received. And, brethren, if I felt any difficulty on those occasions, how much greater is my difficulty now that I have to stand before you and speak for your D. Prov. Grand Master? I have been called upon to respond in consequence of the advisability of allowing our excellent Bro. Major Skinner to remain silent, and I am sure, brethren, that although you may be some of you disappointed by not hearing a speech from him, you, in common with myself, will be perfectly content to see him sit where he is and enjoy himself, and I am sure there is not a brother present who would give utterance to one word that would cause the D. Prov. Grand Master to rise and speak when we know that such an attempt would probably be attended with considerable danger to his health. Brethren it so happens that I have for years past been closely treading upon the Masonic heels of our Bro. Major Skinner, in consequence of which I know his whole active career in Freemasonry. His hours, brethren, have not been spent in idleness; it was not his only care to obtain distinction, but I believe his greatest anxiety has been to preserve the ancient landmarks of our Order. In the Lodge of Good Fellowship, No. 343, to which he is attached, we who are members have watched with pride and satisfaction the determination of the D. Prov. Grand Master to perform the duties of every office of the Lodge through which he passed without assistance. You all know how he has performed the duties of his office as D. Prov. Grand Master. He has visited every Lodge in the province, and whenever he found words of encouragement could be spoken they were not withheld, and when he detected irregularities, he kindly but firmly admonished the monitors. As a gentleman and magistrate we all know he is held in high esteem among his fellows. Brethren, long may he live to enjoy the society of his brethren and friends, and when the great I Am shall call him hence, may he ascend to those immortal mansions whence all goodness emanates. (Much applause). One word for myself, brethren; I am sensible of the high honour conferred on me this day. My office I can compare to some of our most delicate flowers, it blooms in the morning and closes at evening, and so is it with my appointment. It was made this morning, and as soon as we retire, it will cease to exist in me. I again thank you on behalf of the D. Prov. Grand Master and myself for having so heartily drunk our good healths.

Bro. A. Meggy proposed "The health of the chairman, the V.W. Bro. Arnold, Prov. Grand Chaplain." He said—Brethren I am exceedingly glad to have this opportunity of bearing my testimony of regard and esteem for the chairman, our Rev. Bro. Arnold, and I ask you to join me in drinking his good health, and many thanks to him for having so ably presided on this occasion.

V.W. Bro. Arnold, in reply, said—I thank our W. Bro. Meggy, and all of you, for drinking my health as your chairman. I assure you sincerely that the remarks made by the proposer of my name I am not deserving of, but if in occupying this chair this evening I have contributed to your pleasure I am satisfied. Brethren, one point I wished to touch upon before I resume my seat; it is this, that I hope the next time we meet in Provincial Grand Lodge that I shall not only have an opportunity of addressing you from my place in Lodge, but I hope also to have an opportunity of addressing you in church. (Hear, hear). I do hope that in this respect an improvement will be made in the proceedings of the Provincial Grand Lodge.

The toast of the Senior and Junior Provincial Grand Wardens, and the rest of the Prov. Grand Officers was next given, and suitably responded to by them severally.

Bro. Webb gave "Prosperity to the Lodges in the province," and coupled with it the name of Bro. T. Osborne, W.M., of Lodge No. 59, who briefly responded.

Bro. Burton proposed "The continued welfare of the Masonic Charities," and asked the brethren to consider to what kind of institution they belonged in being Freemasons. How few of them comparatively put their hands into their pockets to support those institutions of which they so often boasted as being under their especial care. Indeed they ought to be ashamed to mention the name of these boasted institutions, unless they belonged to them in deed as well as in name. It was not a large amount that was asked from each—and each of them individually should reflect on the uncertainty of continued prosperity, and say, "As I am rich to-day I will assist my poorer brethren, and the widows of those brethren with whom I have associated in their more prosperous days, for who can tell—I too, to-morrow may be poor." He therefore asked them all to become more closely connected with the society of which he and they were but humble members, by giving what they could afford to those who needed assistance, and who deserved all that could be desired for them. In proposing the prosperity of the Masonic institutions, he would connect with it the name of Bro. Adlard.

Bro. Adlard responded in suitable and impressive terms, which brought forth fruit—many brethren handing in subscriptions for the Royal Benevolent Institution.

The Tyler's toast followed and closed the proceedings of the banquet. After which the brethren separated in love and harmony.

HAMPSHIRE.

BASINGSTOKE.—Oakley Lodge (No. 995).—A Lodge of emergency was held at this Lodge on Tuesday evening, meeting at the Black Boy Tavern, W. H. B. Beach, Esq., M.P. for North Hants, the late W.M. of the Lodge, occupied the chair, in the absence of the present Master, Bro. Davis. There were then two passings from the first to the second degree, being Bros. Wickham, and Robinson. Amongst the other brethren present were Bros. Challis, S.W.; Figgins, J.W.; Naish, P.M. of Winchester, and Powell. Two propositions were made, one of a candidate for admission into the Order, and another for receiving a joining member of the Lodge (Bro. Nickle). The assembled brethren then had the pleasure of listening to a lecture from Bro. Beach, which was worked in a manner much to the edification and pleasure of the brethren. The banquet followed, and social song and sentiment was the order of the evening. During the evening an opportunity was taken advantage of by Bro. Powell, to propose to the assembled Lodge the health of "The young heir of Oakley Hall," which had the effect of bringing Bro. Beach again upon his legs. In the course of his response, Bro. Beach expressed a hope that his heir would live to become a Mason, and a member of the Oakley Lodge. A wish that it need scarcely be said was re-echoed in every heart around.

WINCHESTER.—Lodge of Economy (No. 90).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge took place on the evening of November 30th, at the Masonic Hall adjoining the Black Swan Hotel. There were present, the W.M., Bro. J. L. Hasleham; Bros. F. La Croix, S.W.; J. Larkin, J.W.; G. P. Jacob, P.M.; Everitt, P.M.; Cowen, P.M.; Sherry, P.M.; Oakshott, P.M.; Durant, P.M.; Higgs, Newman, Hubbersty, Huggins, Best, Ruff, Smith, Waterman, & Co., and several visiting brethren. The Lodge having been opened with the proper formalities, the Secretary read the minutes of the last Lodge meeting, which included a record of the reading of a communication from Grand Lodge in answer to the memorial to the Board of General Purposes respecting the voting by proxy by provincial Masons who were members of Grand Lodge; also the nomination of the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, in the person of Bro. F. La Croix, S.W.; and the election of the Treasurer and Tyler. The minutes were confirmed. The Worshipful Master then read to the Lodge a communication he had received from the Grand Secretary in reference to the existence of certain spurious Lodges calling themselves Masons, composed apparently of French gentlemen, according to the information which had come to the knowledge of the Board of General Purposes. One of these pretended Lodges appeared to be at Stratford, in Essex. All the Lodges of the Craft were particularly cautioned to have no communication with them. A copy of a certificate issued by one of the spurious societies was exhibited—it was unlike the Masons' certificates—the text matter was in two columns, one in English and the other French, but the latter was not a true translation of the former. The Worshipful Master said he hoped the reporting brother would notice the reading of the communication in the Lodges, as serious results might ensue unless the impositions were exposed. The Worshipful Master said a report had also been received from the Grand Secretary respecting the business to be transacted at the meeting on the following Wednesday. Several complaints and applications had been adjudicated upon by the Board of General Purposes; they approved of the proposition which had been made for the advance of money on interest to assist provincial Lodges to erect halls for Masonic purposes. The Grand Secretary had also reported respecting memorials received from the country Lodges at Winchester, Trowbridge, and other places, applying for the privilege of voting by proxy at meetings of Grand Lodge. The Board stated that after careful consideration of the subject they did not think it expedient or in accordance with justice to grant the prayer of the memorialists. [The reply of the Board of General Purposes to the Winchester Lodge was inserted in the last number of the Freemasons' Magazine.] Bro. Sherry, P.M., said he had one or two observations to address to the Lodge upon the subject last mentioned by the W.M. It was very clear that the Board of General Purposes looked upon this matter in a very different light to that of the members of this Lodge. He, however, sincerely hoped that some brother from one or other of the Lodges in the provinces would take the matter up vigorously and bring the question of representation in Grand Lodge generally before the brethren. In the reply of the Grand Secretary to the memorial from the Lodge, he said that, by granting it, an injustice would be inflicted on the brethren generally. He thought, however, that the injustice was already much on the other side. He sincerely hoped, that as the subject was now mooted, and as there was a very strong feeling on the point throughout the provinces, some influential brother would give notice of a motion and get the thing openly discussed in Grand Lodge. That was the proper way in which to get the subject well ventilated. He had hoped that the Freemasons' Magazine would have lent its aid in correcting this wide spread abuse, but he was sorry to see that of late it had not been so energetic in promoting reforms in the business matters of the Order, and had discontinued the articles pointing out where improvements might be made. Some of the published reports in the Magazine, lately, were not so impartially given as formerly, and, consequently, provincial brethren cared less about reading the publication. Bro. Oakshott, P.M., said he altogether agreed with Bro. Sherry on this point; if any injustice was in existence in regard to this matter, it was on the part of Grand Lodge. Provincial brethren subscribed largely to the different charities, and ought to have a voice in Grand Lodge proportionate to their numbers. Members from various distant places could not at all times personally attend very conveniently, and it was only fair that they should be allowed to be represented there by proxy. He, for one, should never be satisfied until they were allowed to vote by proxy or personally, just as suited their convenience best. The Lodge then proceeded to elect the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. Bro. Le Croix, surgeon, of Winchester, the late S.W., who had been nominated at the last meeting, was balloted for, and elected unanimously. Bro. Everitt, P.M., who had been nominated as the new Treasurer, was then also balloted for, and found to be unanimously chosen to that office. Bro. H. Grant was unanimously chosen as Tyler. Two gentlemen were then proposed for initiation in the Order at the next meeting. The ex-Treasurer (Bro. Jacob) alluded to the fact that St. John's Day and the usual meeting night in the ensuing month (December) fell upon consecutive nights; the brethren, perhaps, had better consider about incorporating the business of both meetings in one day. Bro. Everitt suggested that they should meet for the installation at four or five in the afternoon, instead of first early in the day, and a second time at night for the banquet. He would propose the annual meeting for four, and the banquet at six, and thought such an alteration would be found a great convenience. This was seconded by Bro. Larkin, J.W., and being put to the meeting was agreed to unanimously. Bro. Everitt, addressing the Worshipful Master, then said, that as he (the Worshipful Master) was not likely to be able to attend at the next assembling of the Lodge, for which they would all be sorry, he would take the present opportunity of proposing a vote of thanks from the Lodge to that excellent officer, for the way in which he had ruled the Lodge during the past year. No Past Master had ever fulfilled the duties in a better or more able manner. He felt great pleasure in making the motion, and he hoped it would be recorded on the minutes of the Lodge. Bro. Durant, P.M., said he had great pleasure in seconding the proposition. He was quite sure that since he had enjoyed the honour of belonging to the Lodge (some twenty or thirty years) he had never seen the business conducted more ably than during the last twelve months. Bro. Hasleham had done honour to the chair which he had occupied. He therefore had much pleasure in seconding the vote of thanks. The motion was carried with acclamation. The Worshipful Master said he felt deeply the kindness which had been shown towards him by the brethren of the whole Lodge; and he must admit that for that reason he quitted the chair with some degree of regret. But he should not cease to be an active and interested member of the Lodge, and he should always continue, whilst he was blessed with health and strength, to do the best he could for the whole Craft. The interest he felt now for the Order must remain in his heart. He had a deep respect and veneration for everything connected with Freemasonry, and he need scarcely assert that for the Lodge of Economy in particular he wished most earnestly for their individual and collective health and prosperity. He deeply appreciated the universal kindness he had ever received from his brethren, and he offered them his sincere thanks for the handsome compliment just paid to him at the close of his official services. The Worshipful Master then announced to Bro. La Croix that in his absence he had been unanimously elected by the Lodge to fill the Master's chair during the ensuing year. While complimenting his brother on receiving the mark of confidence at the hands of his brethren assembled, he would take occasion to wish that he might meet with such good and able officers as had assisted him (the retiring Worshipful Master) during the past year. Bro. La Croix said he felt himself so placed that he ought to acknowledge a double compliment that he had received. First, his thanks were due to the Lodge collectively for the honourable manner in which they had made him the Worshipful Master elect; and secondly, he was deeply indebted to the Worshipful Master then in the chair for the approving mention of his services as one of the subordinate officers in the past year. It had not been his anticipation to become Master of the Lodge in so short a time after his initiation in Masonry, but he hoped the Lodge would not suffer in its interests while he occupied the position to which he had so unexpectedly been raised. It was his determination to do his best, and he only hoped he should at the end of the year retire with the same amount of good wishes from his brethren as the Worshipful Master did at the present time. Bro. Everitt thanked the brethren for their mark of respect and confidence expressed in electing him to the important and responsible office of Treasurer. He hoped to be found giving a substantial account of his stewardship, and rendering satisfaction to all the members of the Lodge. Some routine matters attended to, the Lodge was closed in due form. The brethren then repaired to the banquet room, and subsequently united in harmony, separating ultimately at the hour of high twelve.

[We shall feel obliged to Bro. Sherry by his pointing out any instance of want of impartiality in our reports—which we always endeavour to make as scrupulously correct as possible. If we have not advocated the voting by proxy it is not from any want of desire to do the fullest justice to the country brethren, but because, though approving of the theory of giving the country brethren a greater share in the election of the boards and the management of the Order, we have as yet failed to discover any means by which to secure the same Grand Lodge from being overwhelmed by proxies by the most industrious canvasser, without regard to the qualifications of the candidates for office or the importance of the question to be decided. Show us how to guard against this evil, and we will be found amongst the strongest advocates for the introduction of the proxy system; but it is not a little remarkable that, whilst the brethren are agitating for its introduction into Grand Lodge in England, in Scotland—where it to some extent exists—they are agitating for its abolition. Bro. Sherry must not suppose that we are opposed to reforms merely because we do not altogether agree with him on one or two questions.—Ed.]

LANCASHIRE (EAST).

RADCLIFFE BRIDGE.—Lodge of Faith (No. 430).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday evening, last, at the Bell-Head Inn, Bro. John Jones, W.M.; Bro. John Bentley, S.W.; and Bro. J. Lingard, J.W.; when Mr. Joseph Allen was initiated into Freemasonry, and Bro. Flowers was passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. A ballot was taken for the Worshipful Master for the ensuing twelve months, when the choice of the brethren fell on Bro. Samford Bolton. This Lodge at present numbers seventy-eight contributing members, and is continually making additions to its numbers.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.

MONMOUTH.—Iuca Lodge (No. 983).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday evening, the 1st instant. The Lodge being opened in due form, the minutes of the last Lodge were read and confirmed. The ballot was then taken for Messrs. W. Burton and F. Levick, jun., who were declared by W.M. duly elected; Mr. Levick was then admitted, and initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry by the W.M., Bro. W. Middleton, and received the charge from Bro. Gold. The W.M. then called on the Secretary to read the list of names of brethren who were eligible for the Master's chair; the brethren then proceeded to the election, and, the votes being unanimous, Bro. R. Leyburn, S.W., was elected to that office; Bro. Leyburn returned thanks for the high honour the brethren had conferred on him by electing him the W.M. for the year ensuing, and stated that he would endeavour to fulfil the duties devolving on him as the W.M. to the best of his abilities. Bro. Henry Bridges being present, the W.M. stated, that as he had consecrated the Lodge and installed the first and second W.M.s (and it being also the particular wish of the W.M. elect that Bro. Bridges should install him) he hoped that he would attend and install Bro. R. Leyburn, the third W.M. Bro. Henry Bridges said he should have much pleasure in attending the next Lodge to install not only an old and worthy friend but a most excellent Mason. The next business was the election of a Treasurer, the ballot having been taken, was unanimous in favour of Bro. R. Cave, who returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him. The Lodge was then closed in due form.

SUSSEX.

CHICHESTER.—Lodge of Union (No. 45).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was holden on Thursday, December 1st, the W.M. Bro. G. Molesworth presiding. It being the regular meeting for the election of the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, there was a full attendance of brethren. Two candidates for the second degree failed however to attend, the Worshipful Master therefore called on Bro. Jas. Powell, the Junior Past Master, to bring up the report of a sub-committee appointed to revise the by-laws of the Lodge. This being done, after some discussion the recommendations of the sub-committee were unanimously agreed to, and the Secretary directed to forward a copy of the amended by-laws to the D. Prov. Grand Master for his approval. Bro. Powell brought forward a scheme to establish a charity fund, by means of a small annual subscription from each member of the Lodge, and fees of honour from the officers on their appointment. The proposition, which evidently met with general approval, was ultimately deferred until the installation of the Worshipful Master elect, when the recommendation of the Provincial Grand Lodge to elect a "member for the Charities' Committee" will be acted on. The Treasurer's account for the past year was then read, from which it appeared that more than twenty pounds had been paid to indigent brethren connected with the Lodge; besides two guineas being presented to each of the four charities, leaving including arrears, about twenty pounds balance in hand, a statement highly satisfactory to the brethren present. The Worshipful Master next called on the Secretary to read the names of the brethren eligible for the office of Worshipful Master; and a ballot having been taken, the Worshipful Master announced that he had much pleasure in stating that the choice of the brethren had fallen on Bro. R. Elliott. Bro. George Smith, P.M., was then elected Treasurer, in place of Bro. Charles Sturges Jones, resigned, and Bro. Beauford was re-elected Tyler. Bro. James Powell, jun., said, he felt certain the brethren would join with him in a hearty and cordial vote of thanks to the Worshipful Master for the ability with which he had discharged the important duties of his office during the past year, an ability that had been recognized by the D. Prov. Grand Master in appointing Bro. Molesworth Prov. J.G.D. The vote was carried by acclamation. Bro. Molesworth, in reply, said it was extremely gratifying to him to find he had so filled the office as to meet the approbation of the members of the Lodge. Their thanks he did not deserve, as without the cordial co-operation of the brethren generally, and the active and ever ready assistance of his officers, all exertions on his part would have been vain. With reference to his appointment as Prov. Junior Grand Deacon, Bro. Molesworth assured the Lodge that he considered the compliment was not a personal one, but reflected through him on his mother Lodge. The Worshipful Master concluded by stating that in his comparative retirement his best exertions should at all times be used to promote the interests and maintain the efficiency of the Lodge of Union, No. 45. The Worshipful Master elect then proposed a vote of thanks to Bro. Jones, Treasurer, for the courteous and efficient manner in which he had filled that important office for the last three years. Bro. Jones acknowledged the compliment in a brief speech. The Lodge was then closed in harmony. The installation of the Worshipful Master elect will take place on Thursday, January 5th, 1860; and the members of No. 45 are not a little pleased that Bro. Gavin E. Pocock, G.S.B., and Prov. G. Sec., has kindly promised to perform that ceremony for their newly elected Master, who, although a comparatively young Mason, is an old and much respected resident in the city, holding, among other appointments, the honourable one of senior surgeon to the West Sussex Infirmary.

WEST YORKSHIRE.

OUR R.W. Bro. Dr. Fearnley, D. Prov. G. Master for West Yorkshire, to whose untiring and able exertions the Lodges of the province owe much of their present prosperity, has just addressed the following circular to the Worshipful Masters of the various Lodges under his jurisdiction. We rejoice in the prosperity of the province, and doubt not that such a response will be made to his appeal that, at the next festival of the Girls' School, we shall be enabled to congratulate our R.W. brother and the province on the circumstance of their list of subscriptions being far a head of any other. Here is a noble field of emulation between the various provinces.

"W. Sir and Brother,—As the Masonic year is fast drawing to a close, I think it my duty to make a few observations respecting the Masonic state and condition of this important province.

"Before doing so, however, I am desirous of thanking you and the other Worshipful Masters of Lodges, for the uniform kindness and fraternal support I have received, in enabling me to carry out the business of the province, and assure you of my readiness at all times, to give, in return, my best attention and consideration to any matters with which you may think it desirable I should be made acquainted, or upon which you may wish my opinion.

"In the first place, we have cause for congratulation in the continued good health of our highly esteemed Provincial Grand Master, whose ardent desire for the prosperity of the Craft, and happiness of the brethren over whom he rules, is in nowise abated by advancing years.

"Secondly: I have to congratulate you on the steady progress and continued prosperity of our province. During the past year, we have had the addition of one new Lodge to our muster roll—one or two Lodges which had been languishing, have received new vigour, with every prospect of success, both as to respectability and numbers,—and there is every reason to suppose that, ere long, a warrant will be applied for to establish a new Lodge in one of our ancient cities, where once existed a good Lodge, but which, from the meetings being held at a tavern, and other equally debilitating causes, dwindled away, and was erased by vote of Grand Lodge. We have held four Prov. Grand Lodges, the members attending which prove, beyond doubt, the great interest felt by the brethren in the affairs of Prov. Grand Lodge, and fully justify us in continuing the practice of inviting Master Masons to be present at our meetings, although they cannot vote.

"And lastly, let me also congratulate you on our position with regard to the various 'Masonic Charities'; and although I cannot conscientiously affirm that we render them that amount of efficient support which might fairly be expected from so important and wealthy a province, yet, upon the whole, there has been a very considerable increase of late. Some sixteen years ago, there was not a single subscriber throughout the Riding to either Girls' or Boys' Schools, and but very few to the Royal Masonic Benevolent Annuity Fund. The fact of the committee of the Girls' School admitting, under such circumstances, the daughter of a deceased brother belonging to my own Lodge, not only proved their disinterestedness, and desire to do good—thereby entitling them to our warmest thanks—but had the effect of bringing under the notice of the brethren the actual existence of such institutions. Since that period, I am happy to say, that in addition to many private subscriptions (which only wanted asking to be freely tendered), you have made your Provincial Grand and Deputy Provincial Grand Masters (for the time being) governors in perpetuity to the Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, and also of the Boys' School; it now remains for us to place ourselves in as good a position with regard to the Girls' Institution as we hold towards the other two charities. In furtherance of this laudable purpose, I have, at the urgent solicitation of many of my warmhearted and enthusiastic brethren, consented to act as steward at the Girls' Festival, in May next. I trust therefore, you will kindly make this known in your Lodge, and amongst the brethren generally, and use every exertion on your own part, to raise as large an amount of subscriptions in that behalf as possible.

"In making this appeal, I am convinced it will be your pride and gratification to see your humble Deputy the bearer of such a list of subscriptions on the festival day as will redound to the honour of this province, and prove useful to an institution having the strongest claims on our warmest sympathies and support. I cannot help expressing my conviction that, with a very little trouble, it is possible in every Lodge to make the W.M., if not the Wardens also, governors of the institution, during its existence as a Lodge."

ROYAL ARCH.

PROVINCIAL.

BAILDON.—Chapter of Moravia (No. 543).—At a regular Chapter holden on Nov. 23rd, present—Comps. Henry Smith, M.E.Z.; John Walker, H.; and G. M. Wand, J.; also Comps. W. W. Holmes, John Mann, Jno. Walker, P.Z., Joshua Bell, Jesse Denby; and as visitors, Comps. Thos. Hill, P.Z.; and James Lamb, of the Chapter of Charity, No. 379, Bro. R. L. Tetley was exalted. After the minutes of the last Chapter had been read and confirmed, a vote of thanks was moved and carried, to the Chapter of Charity, for their kind assistance on many occasions, but more particularly for their recent services on the occasion of the installation of the three Principals. The formal presentation of paraphernalia by several Companions was postponed in consequence of the absence of several of the donors. Notice was given that at the next Chapter a code of by-laws would be submitted for approval. It was also mentioned that the M.E. Comp. Dr. Fearnley, Prov. G. Supt. of West Yorkshire, had consented to act as steward at the next festival of the Girls' School, when it is confidently hoped that a great effort will be made in this province to forward a large contribution. The Chapter was closed in due form at nine o'clock, P.M.

CHATHAM.—Royal Kent Chapter (No. 20).—A convocation was holden on Wednesday, Nov. 30th, 1859, at the Sun Hotel. Present—Comps. Windeyer, M.E.Z.; Clarke, H.; H. W. Moore, J.; Ashley, Isaacs, and Saunders, P.Zs., Spofford, White, Everist; and as a visitor, Comp. F. Southgate, M.E.Z. of the Hermes Chapter, No. 91. The minutes of the preceding convocation of the Chapter, when the officers were elected, having been confirmed, Comp. Charles Isaacs, at the request of the M.E.Z., installed Comps. Clarke, as First Principal; H. W. Moore, Second Principal; and Cooley, Third Principal. The following officers were also inducted into office:—Comps. Ashley, Treas.; Spofford, E.; G. A. Everist, N.; W. Everist, P. Soj.; Skiller, Janitor. Bros. Sly and St. John, of Lodge No. 20, having been balloted for and accepted, at the request of the M.E.Z., Comp. Ashley exalted them in a most solemn and impressive manner. There being no other business, the Chapter was closed. The Companions adjourned to dinner, presided over by Comp. Clarke. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to. This finished the proceedings, when the Companions retired at an early hour.

IRELAND.

GRAND LODGE.

THE regular monthly meeting of the Grand Lodge of Ireland was holden on Thursday, the 1st instant.

The Grand Lodge was opened at eight o'clock, P.M., the R.W. Bro. John Fitzhenry Townsend, D.G.M., in the chair; there were also present, R.W. Bro. Thomas Mostyn, G. Treas., as S.G.W.; R.W. Bro. the Hon. George Hancock, G. Sec., as J.G.W.; W. Bro. Arthur Bushe, S.G.D.; W. Bro. William Acheson, P.M., No. 620, as J.G.D.; W. Bro. Lucius H. During, Asst. G. Sec.; Bro. Charles T. Walmisley, Asst. Sec.; Bro. James Adams, G. Purs.; Bro. William Glancy, G. Tyler.

There were about one hundred and fifty brethren present. The meeting was of unusual interest, in consequence of this being the night to elect the members of the Board of General Purposes, which stands as follows:—The M.W. Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master, the Grand Treasurer, the Grand Secretary, Prov. Grand Masters, Prov. Deputy Grand Masters, are all ex officio members; and the following were elected:—Bro. Henry C. Hoyte, Henry Richards, Henry B. Haffield, Edward D. Thorp, Arthur Bushe, John Fox Goodman, Wm. G. Murray, Robert Prior Page, John Prescott, Richard Fitton, Edmond D. Latouche, Joseph F. Erlington, Henry L. Allen, David Armstrong, John Cottle, William Allen, Hubert Smith, Rev. J. J. Macsorley, Sir Edward Burrough, Bart.

The reading of the report of the former board followed.

An investment of £200 in stock was resolved upon.

Grand Lodge also determined upon reviving the Lodge of Instruction, which will in future meet on the second Thursday in each month, from December to May inclusive.

The warrant of Lodge No. 676 (at Ballymena) was cancelled, which has for some time been under sentence of suspension, for continued contumacy to Grand Lodge.

Bro. Elisha D. Cooke, of Kentucky, and Bro. John H. Goddard, representative from the Prov. Grand Lodge of Lisbon, were introduced by the R.W. Deputy Grand Master to the Grand Lodge, in a very eloquent manner, stating that Bro. Cooke would explain his mission. The Deputy Grand Master said that Bro. Cooke was the bearer of credentials to the three Grand Masters of England, Scotland, and Ireland. He (Bro. Cooke) had been warmly received in the two former countries, and he trusted the latter would not be wanting in showing respect to so distinguished a visitor.

Bro. Cooke was received with the grand honours. He then thanked the Deputy Grand Master and the Grand Lodge for the compliment they had paid him, and presented to the Grand Lodge a copy of the History of Masonry in Kentucky, with the especial compliments of Bro. Rob Morris; also a package of documents from the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. Bro. Cooke stated that the package was one selected for the Grand Lodge of Ireland four years ago, when Bro. Morris himself was preparing to come to this country, but got no further than the city of New York, in consequence of the hotel where he was stopping taking fire, and he (Bro. Morris) barely escaping with his life, the package was saved by mere accident, and he now had the pleasure of presenting it to the Grand Lodge.

The R.W. Bro. the Hon. Geo. Hancock, G. Sec., moved a vote of thanks to Bro. Morris, for the valuable presents; and to Bro. Cooke, for the manner in which he had presented them, which was unanimously adopted.

Grand Lodge was closed in form at about eleven o'clock, P.M.

ROYAL ARCH.

SKIBBEREEN.—The Companions of the Chapter attached to Lodge No. 15, met on Monday last, the 5th instant, for the purpose of electing officers, when the following Companions were unanimously elected:—Paul Limerick, 1st Principal; John W. Potter, sen., 2nd Principal; William Wallace Henderson, 3rd Principal; E. J. Doherty, High Priest; Frederick P. E. Potter, 1st Scribe; Richard Beamish, 2nd Scribe; Dr. Hadden, 1st Sojourner; John Francis Lewis, 2nd Sojourner; E. Dudley, 3rd Sojourner. It having been resolved to open the Chapter on the first Monday in every month, and there being no other business than the election of officers, the Chapter was closed at an early hour.

COLONIAL.

TRINIDAD.

ON Monday, the 17th Oct., at two o'clock, P.M., the Prov. Grand Master, Bro. Daniel Hart, attended by his Prov. Grand Officers, and several members of the Royal Philanthropic Lodge, No. 585, left Trinidad in the steamer William Burnley, for San Fernando, on a visit to Trinity Lodge, No. 837, of that place. The steamer (which is commanded by Bro. Masters) was tastefully decorated with flags, having at the fore a large green flag, in the centre of which was the square and compasses. The steamer reached the jetty at a quarter to six o'clock, P.M., at which time a salute was fired from her. Bro. H. Crosbie, W.M., and Bro. Louis Romain, P.M., the mayor, went on board and welcomed the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, who, preceded by his Grand Officers, then landed, a salute being fired at the time from Mount Olive.

On the Prov. Grand Master's reaching the foot of the jetty, he was there met by the officers and members of Trinity Lodge, who immediately formed themselves into procession; the whole body then marched off. The houses of the streets through which the procession passed were all decorated with flags; it was an imposing scene, and being the first of the kind that had taken place there, a very large concourse of persons had assembled. On the procession arriving at the Lodge rooms, the Prov. Grand Master took the chair, and opened the Lodge in the three degrees, and closed it in the second and third. The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, the Prov. Grand Master then examined the whole of the members in the different subjects of the Order, and as connected with each degree. A beautiful explanation by the Prov. Grand Master himself of all the working tools, as also the jewels of the different officers, concluded the business of the evening. The Prov. Grand Master then addressed the Lodge as follows:—"My brethren, this being the second time that I have had the pleasure of visiting you, I embrace the opportunity to return you my most sincere thanks for the very honourable reception which you have been pleased to give me, and to assure you that I am determined, to the utmost of my power, to execute the great trust which has been reposed in me with fervency, freedom, and zeal. That I may be enabled so to do, let us unanimously concur in cultivating peace, harmony, and perfect friendship, striving who shall excel in brotherly love and benignity; then I doubt not, from your renewed assurances, and the assistance of my officers, I may be enabled to conduct the business of my province, and to discharge my duties to the general satisfaction of the Craft. To accomplish these desirable ends, let me, in the first place, intreat your strict attention to your by-laws, ever keeping in view the general regulations and constitutions and orders, of our ancient and honourable Order. Let due regard be paid to your officers in their respective stations, whose duty it is to regulate the proceedings of the Lodge, and to carry the laws into execution: and may the only contention amongst you be a laudable emulation in cultivating the royal art, and endeavouring to excel each other in whatever is good and great. The moral and social duties of life we should make a principal subject of contemplation, for thereby we shall be enabled to subdue our passions, and cultivate fraternal affection, the glory and cement of our Order, 'laying aside all malice and guile, and hypocrisies and envyings, and evil speaking,' manifesting our love one to another, for 'love is of God, and he that loveth God loveth his brother also, and he that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness until now.' Let us not, my brethren, sit down contented with the name of a Mason only, but walk worthy of that glorious profession in constant conformity to its duties. To become worthy of our ancient institution we must devote ourselves to the study and discharge of the following duties which are more or less within the reach of every capacity—a knowledge of the mysterious problems, hieroglyphics, and symbolical customs and ceremonies of the royal art, together with the origin, nature, and design of the institution, its signs and tokens, whereby Masons are universally known to each other. Finally, let us live in strict amity and fraternal love with all mankind, and more particularly so with all just and upright brethren. That we may say with the royal psalmist 'Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.'

The Junior Warden moved, and the Senior Warden seconded, that the speech of the Prov. Grand Master be copied on the minutes, which was unanimously carried. The Lodge was then closed in due form and the brethren retired to the banqueting room, where a supper of the most recherché kind was prepared. The Prov. Grand Master presided, and proposed "The health of her majesty the Queen, the daughter, grand daughter, and niece of a Mason."

The Prov. Grand Master then, in a most eloquent speech, proposed "The health of the Right Honourable the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master," which was drunk with the most enthusiastic applause.

The W.M., Bro. Corbie, then proposed "The health of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master," dilating on the extent to which the province had benefited by his exertions and zeal for the good of the Order, and the strong affections of the brethren towards him, who not only looked upon him with every attachment and respect as their R.W. Prov. Grand Master, but as the father of Freemasonry in Trinidad, and a brother who was so much respected for his very many good qualities. The toast was drunk with deafening applause. The Prov. Grand Master returned thanks in a short but impressive manner. After describing the beauties of the Order, and all that tended to benefit our time-honoured institution, he stated that he had initiated, passed, and raised no less than fifty-three Masons; and, with the exception of one, they were all alive and many of them present at table. He thanked the brethren for their renewed civilities, and would do all he could to benefit the Order. The health of the W.M., Bro. Corbie, was then drunk with all the honours. Several other toasts were drunk, and the brethren separated all much pleased with the several duties they had performed at eleven o'clock, P.M.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—On Saturday morning the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia, together with the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice, left the Castle and travelled by the Great Western Railway to Paddington, where the Prince and Princess Frederick William took leave, passed through the metropolis to the Bricklayers' Arms station, and thence were conveyed by a special train of the South-Eastern Railway to Dover, for Calais, which they reached about noon. Preparations were made for the departure of the Court from Windsor for Osborne on Monday morning, but several telegrams, conveying the intelligence of the boisterous state of the channel having been transmitted to the Castle, the royal journey was postponed to the middle of the day, and ultimately put off. The Queen took leave of the Duchess of Kent on Monday at Frogmore; and on Tuesday, the weather having moderated, the royal family journeyed in safety to Osborne. The Prince of Wales returned to Oxford on Saturday afternoon.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Emperor and Empress of the French returned to Paris on Sunday afternoon, and have taken up their residence at the Tuileries for the winter. Four foolish brokers at Liverpool have lately taken upon themselves to ask the Emperor Napoleon whether or no it is his Majesty's intention to make war on England. A question of this kind asked by one government of another necessitates a categorical reply, and means that the government which asks the question is prepared to support all the consequences of a hostile or doubtful answer. But who are Messrs. Shaw, Melloz, Irving, and Blackwell, that they, like the three tailors known to fame, should assume the right to represent the English people? M. Mocquard, secretary to the Emperor Napoleon, has replied to their letter to the effect that there are no grounds for alarm on the part of the English as to the Emperor's intentions towards England, and that he had not ceased for one moment to show himself her faithful and irreproachable ally. The newspapers throw great and deserved ridicule upon the four Liverpool brokers who fondly imagined that the Emperor Napoleon would confide to them what his intentions are with respect to England. The Paris Presse also puts the conduct of these gentlemen in its true light, observing that it is obvious that feelings of trust would not have suggested the question, or would have forestalled the reply. The French Minister of Marine has ordered the construction of four floating batteries, and the press has been ordered to say they are intended for the new Chinese expedition. The Pays states that England has consented to take part in the Congress. The Pays also believes itself in a position to state that the difficulties between Piedmont and Tuscany, on the subject of the regency of M. Buoncompagni, are not yet removed. It is certain that England has agreed to the proposal that the Congress shall be held in Paris. There is a rumour of a new imperial law on the press, specially aimed at the correspondents of the English papers; it is not difficult to predict its entire failure. In connection with the subject of restrictions on the press, it is stated that Austria has sent a despatch to Paris requesting the French government not to permit the discussion of Hungarian affairs in the journals—Hungary being an Austrian and not a European question.—The Spanish government, there is no doubt, has given garbled accounts of the action of the 30th, with the Moors, when the latter are said to have lost 500 killed and 1,500 wounded. So far from General Echague having been the victor on that occasion, he saw his men, although superior in numbers, beaten back with a loss of 100 killed and 540 wounded, the general himself being so severely wounded that he was obliged to return to Algeiras to have his wounds dressed. It seems it was a fair stand-up hand to hand fight. The Gibraltar Chronicle of the 29th ult., says—"Private letters from the Spanish camp in Africa represent the action as more serious and the loss of the Spanish army as much more considerable, than the published account admits. The loss fell chiefly, it is said, on the three battalions ordered by General Echague to sally from the entrenched position and charge the Moors. These battalions were fearfully cut up in the hand to hand fight with the Moors. It is also stated on good authority, that the Spanish army has lost upwards of 600 in killed and wounded, since the commencement of operations. The Nord of Brussels says that England, persisting in opposing the views of Spain in Morocco, has made a claim on Spain, "with a bitterness unworthy of a great nation," for payment of the warlike stores furnished to her during the civil war in the Peninsula.—From central Italy we learn that the affair of the delegation of the regency of Central Italy to M. Buoncompagni has been arranged to the satisfaction of all parties and that M. Buoncompagni will proceed immediately to Florence, with the rank of Governor General of the Provinces of Central Italy. The functions of the Governor General will extend to the command of the military forces of the line and to the relations of Central Italy with Piedmont and the foreign powers. The separate governments of the provinces of Parma, Modena, and the Romagna are to be suppressed from the 8th of December. These provinces will have one sole government, with a ministry sitting at Modena, and a legislative commission and commander in chief of the military forces of the line sitting at Bologna. Baron Ricasoli has arrived at Turin, and has had a long conference with the Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Austrians evacuated Rocca d'Anfo on the 29th ultimo. Ricasoli continues to oppose the appointment of Buoncompagni as Regent over Tuscany. The official sheet of Florence gives as a reason that such a state of affairs appears dangerous to the Tuscan government. The Governor of Lombardy, M. Vigliani, has taken leave of the people in a proclamation, in which he recommends them to manifest love, devotedness, and gratitude to "the august champion of their independence." The report that the Pope had already consented to be represented at the approaching Congress, and that his holiness had appointed Cardinal Antonelli first plenipotentiary, is without foundation.—From Trieste we learn that the Turkish troops lately stationed in Thessaly, on the Greek frontier, had been withdrawn.—A letter from Vienna, of the 4th, in the Siècle, represents the financial condition of Austria as most deplorable. We have received a letter from Pesth, from which it appears that the Hungarians are greatly exasperated at the treatment they receive from the Viennese government, and among other modes of expressing their feelings, at all public meetings they adopt the picturesque Hungarian costume. The Protestants persist in refusing to acknowledge the imperial patent for regulating their worship which Austria seeks to impose upon them, and protests against it have been sent from several parts of the kingdom. The fate of the Bishop of Munkacs was still a mystery. The Siècle also pours forth a lament over the fate of the oppressed Hungarians.—Advices from Berlin state that a congress of all the trade corporations and chambers of commerce is to be assembled in that city in February next.—By news from Copenhagen we learn that the new Danish ministry had been provisionally formed under the presidency of Councillor Rottwitt.—The Asia has arrived at Liverpool, bringing New York dates to the 23rd ultimo. She reports the total wreck of the steamer Indian, of Guisbro', Nova Scotia, on the 23rd. The excitement at Charleston relative to the Harper's Ferry affair had subsided. The Attorney General was about to foreclose and sell the New York and Erie Railroad, on the application of the holders of the first mortgage bonds. General Scott had reached Portland, and General Harney left soon after his arrival. The British naval forces had withdrawn from San Juan, with the exception of the Satellite. The New York stock and money markets are reported as active. The Japanese embassy will leave for Washington, by the Pouhattan, on the 22nd of February. Trade is increasing.—The Brazilian mail, with advices from Rio Janeiro to the 8th ultimo, reached Lisbon on Friday. General Urquiza had routed the Buenos Ayrean army, and was marching on Buenos Ayres.—Notwithstanding the assurances of a peaceful policy by France towards this country, warlike preparations continue to be carried on there with great vigour. The request of Austria to check the French press in speaking of Hungary has been attended to, as an "invitation" had been given to the Havas agency office on the subject.—We have received telegrams stating that great dread was entertained that the natives both of Java and Borneo were plotting to murder the Europeans in those islands.—According to a telegram from Naples it appears that Commander Maniscaleo, director general of the Sicilian police, was walking with his wife and children in Palermo, when he was stabbed by an assassin. Happily the wound was not mortal, and the public tranquillity was not disturbed.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The approaching Congress and the state of affairs in the Mediterranean have rendered it necessary to hold several cabinet councils this week.—The commission to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at the Gloucester elections resumed their labours at Fludyer-street, Westminster, this week. Several witnesses were examined, after which Mr. Julian Bernard was called. This witness was required to produce his pass and cash books, but failed to put in an appearance. The proceedings were therefore adjourned, to give Mr. Bernard another opportunity of answering the summons.—There was no increase in the mortality of the metropolis last week; the total number of deaths was 1304, which is a little under the estimated average. The births during the week numbered 1827. The number of deaths registered in the city was 70, being the exact average for the corresponding period for the last four years.—The volunteer companies all over the kingdom are daily increasing in numbers and efficiency, and a meeting has been held at the Freemasons' Tavern, at which the Marquis of Donegal presided, for the purpose of organizing a London Irish Volunteer Corps. Several resolutions in favour of the movement were carried unanimously, notwithstanding the interruption of some two or three Hibernians, who opposed the objects of the meeting. The speech of the noble chairman was one embracing many points of interest.—In the Consistory Court, on Saturday, Dr. Phillimore applied, on behalf of the Rev. Bryan King, rector of St. George's-in-the-East, to allow the office of judge to be promoted against certain persons for the offence of "brawling" in the church. The judge observing that a prima-facie case had been made out, granted the application against a defendant named Rosier. Another application, v. Barnard was refused. In regard to this squabble also a man named William Jones applied to the magistrate at Thames Police-court for a summons against the Rev. Mr. Lowder, curate of St. George's-in-the-East, for assaulting him on Sunday last in front of the parish church. Mr. Selfe granted the summons.—At the adjourned inquest on the body of Mary Ann Moore, who was so horribly murdered at Finsbury-market on Monday week, James Moore, the assumed murderer, was in attendance, by an order of the Secretary of State. Witnesses were called to identify the prisoner, all of whom he cross-questioned very strictly, declaring that he would conduct his own case. A verdict of wilful murder was returned against Moore, who was then removed for examination before Mr. D'Eyncourt, at Worship-street Police-court. Here after a great deal of evidence being heard, a remand was ordered to complete the depositions for a formal commitment.—The suit of "Bell v. Bell and Marquis of Anglesey," has been tried before the Divorce Court. It was a case for a dissolution of marriage by reason of adultery. The petitioner was the son of a merchant and stockbroker, and the lady the daughter of Mr. Berman, also a stockbroker of eminence in the city. The parties were married in 1851, previous to which certain settlements were made upon the wife to the extent of £5000, and it was in consequence of the doubtful state of the law upon that point that Mr. Bell felt it necessary to ask for damages to meet that contingency. The fact of the adultery was clearly proved; and the jury returned a verdict that the adultery had been committed, assessing the co-respondent in £10,000 damages. The Court decreed dissolution of the marriage.—The case of "Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy," which was a suit for a dissolution of marriage by reason of adultery of the wife with the co-respondent, and which had occupied the whole of Friday and Saturday, was resumed. Mr. Justice Hill summed up the evidence at great length to the jury, explaining the law as to connivance and condonation, and left six questions to the jury, who after a deliberation of twenty minutes replied to them as follows:—1. That the respondent had committed adultery with Robert D'Arcy, or some other person. 2. That the petitioner, Thomas Allen, had connived at such adultery. 3. The jury were of opinion the adultery was not condoned. 4. That Thomas Allen had committed adultery with Mrs. Claverton. 5. That the petitioner had not committed legal cruelty. 6. That the respondent had condoned the cruelty. Mr. Justice Cresswell said the Court had no difficulty in decreeing judgment, the jury having found that the petitioner had connived at the adultery of the wife, and, having stated the law as to connivance and collusion, dismissed the petition with costs.—At the Middlesex Sessions, Sarah Dyer pleaded guilty to having robbed Messrs. Shoolbred, of Tottenham-court-road, of a number of small articles. This was a very melancholy case, and excited the deepest feelings in all who heard it. The prisoner was a widow, with one child, a boy, apprenticed to a tailor. She had worked incessantly morning, noon, and night, for many years, to support herself and son, but from the extreme distress in which she was plunged, was induced to commit the offence with which she was charged. The statement of her counsel, Mr. Sleight, was fully made out, and Mr. Bodkin, the assistant judge, said that in this case he should pass no sentence, but order her to be discharged, which was done, on which she thanked the judge on her knees. A subscription of £2 was raised and given to her, and some measures are to be taken for her benefit.—James Hodgson, town traveller, was charged with robbing Mr. Bell of a watch and money. He ran away with prosecutor's wife, who took the property with her; but as it did not appear in evidence that the prisoner himself had taken the property, the assistant judge said he could not be legally convicted, and the jury acquitted him.—Robert Davis, clerk, was convicted of embezzling several sums of money from his employers and others. He had been ten years in his employers' service, and the reason that was given for the commission of the offence was the extravagance of a woman whom he had married, which, however, the wife denied, and attributed it to gaming, &c. Sentence, eighteen months hard labour.—Felix Newman pleaded guilty to stealing a cash-box, containing £232, from Thornton Moore. Mrs. Moore saw the prisoner take the box and tried to detain him, but he struggled with such violence to escape that he broke one of Mrs. Moore's ribs, and eventually he got away. The cash-box and its contents were recovered. The police asked for time to learn something more of the prisoner, and sentence was deferred.—An inquest was held at the City-road, to inquire into the death of a photographic artist named Edmund Shirley and a girl named Rosetta Greenwood, who were found dead in bed in a coffee house on Thursday last. The evidence showed that death resulted in each case from a dose of cyanide of potassium, and that it had been voluntarily taken by both the deceased. Family quarrels on the part of the man account for his commission of the act, and the girl, being his sweetheart, had of her own will shared his wretched fate. Verdict, "Death from prussic acid while in an unsound state of mind."—The coroner's jury have returned a verdict to the following effect at the close of the inquest on the body of William Eaton, alleged to have been poisoned by eating sausages at Kingsland. That deceased was seized with illness from eating sausages, and died shortly afterwards, the immediate cause being unknown, and the jury thought that there ought to be an addition to the number of meat inspectors.—It was stated in Westminster Hall yesterday morning that Sir Henry Keating, the present Solicitor General, has been appointed to succeed the late Mr. Justice Crowder as one of the judges of the omm on Pleas, and that either Mr. R. P. Collier, the member for PlymouCh, or Mr. Atherton, of the Northern circuit, will succeed to the Solicitor Generalship.

INDIA; CHINA; AND COLONIES.—The telegrams received at present in advance of the overland Indian mail expected this week, contain nothing of importance.—From Shanghai there is no political news. From Hong Kong, under date of October 29, we learn that a destructive fire took place there on the 20th, when property valued at 100,000 dollars was burnt. The Yates Hartley steamer was lost on the rocks eighty miles from Hong Kong, but the crew and treasure were saved. The ship Inkermann, of London, has also been lost. The exchange on London at six months has advanced to 4s. 10d.—Advices from Melbourne are to the 17th October. The parliament was opened on the 13th, and Mr. Murphy was elected speaker without opposition. The want of confidence debate was to commence on the 18th October, and a majority against the ministers was considered certain. Trade is dull; imports are in excess of consumption; and money is tight.—The news from Sydney is to the 15th October. The quarter's revenue has increased £90,000. The capital of the Bank of New South Wales has been increased 50 per cent. Government debentures are easy. A resolution against the separation of Moreton Bay has been carried in council. Three Englishmen have been shot in the French colony of New Caledonia, being in arms against the government.—By the overland mail — have advices and journals from Bombay to the 11th ult. The taxation agitation still continued at Bombay. The Wagheers had evacuated Dwarka. Lord Canning had arrived at Lucknow, and addressed the talookdars.—The overland mail also brings us correspondence and journals from Australia. The dates are—Melbourne, Oct. 17, and Sydney, Oct. 13. The Parliament was opened at Melbourne on the 13th October, and a want of confidence debate was to commence on the 18th.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The weekly reviews from the manufacturing districts speak favourably of the appearance and progress of trade. Although not much activity has been manifested, the course of prices appears encouraging, the tendency having proved altogether healthy. With the exception of the department associated with iron there has been a steady business, the orders from the country dealers having increased. The transactions in Halifax and Huddersfield have exhibited better symptoms notwithstanding the approach of the holiday period. The report of the Manchester market is not discouraging, and the demand for cloths of costly manufacture has improved. In the neighbourhood of Leeds and Leicester the operations are represented to have been more numerous through the orders to supply fabrics for the volunteer rifle corps. There has been no recovery at Newcastle; trade is still dull, freights being lower for the southern ports. The lace houses at Nottingham have been more fully occupied, and in the hosiery branches the transactions have been on an enlarged scale. The Sheffield and Wolverhampton reports seem to be of a less satisfactory character. In the Irish linen markets the demand has augmented, and the advices from Dublin refer to the existence of a more stable position of things.—At the meeting of the Bank of British North America, the report and accounts, with a dividend at the rate of six per cent. per annum, free of income tax, were submitted and unanimously adopted. It was stated that the result of operations compared favourably with those of last year at the same period, an abundant harvest in Canada having given a fresh impulse to trade and general transactions. The completion of the Grand Trunk line of railway will, it is thought, extend the facilities for the transport of produce, and the increase of mercantile relations, and, if a favourable harvest should occur in the course of the next twelve months, the consequence must prove extensively beneficial.—At the meeting of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company, the report and accounts, together with the dividend and distribution at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, making (with the 4 per cent. previously declared), a total of 11 per cent. per annum, were agreed to. A lengthened discussion took place on many minor points, but the explanations rendered on behalf of the board were generally satisfactory.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SHAKESPEARE LODGE (No. 356).—Bro. Machen, W.M., (not Machie, as erroneously printed in our number of the 26th November), writes to correct our report of the last meeting of the above Lodge, in which he states, that not only was he not re-elected, but—the election standing for the next Lodge night—no allusion was made to re-election whatever. We do our best to insure correctness in our reports but cannot always avoid being misled, unless the Lodges will forward us official reports of their proceedings. As regards proper names, printers cannot be always correct, it being very difficult to decipher even the signatures of many of our correspondents.

WINTER LECTURES.—Bro. Donald King, or Bro. Matthew Cooke, will no doubt be happy to enter into arrangements for musical lectures—they are both well practised in the art of lecturing.

"A SUBSCRIBER."—The brother you mention is not a blood relation of the Manager of the Freemasons' Magazine.

"P.M."—The feature is not abandoned. We shall come out in full force in the early part of the year.

"P.S."—You must not listen to every idle rumour. We have no intention of abandoning the Magazine.

"R. R."—The union took place in 1813.

"JABEZ."—Prince Albert is not a Mason.

"P.Z."—You have no such authority.

"B."—We dare not publish it, even if we were inclined—which we are not.

"A YOUNG MASON" must learn to obey those placed in authority over him, or he will be no Mason at all.

"J.J."—If you have any real ground of complaint you can appeal to the Board of General Purposes. Learn to bear and forbear.

"MODEL LODGES."—A communication from "Z" will appear in our next.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1859.

CLASSICAL THEOLOGY.—VII.

JUPITER AND JULY (CONTINUED).

PTOLEMY ascribed to Jupiter, and his father Saturn, and to Mars, a separate epicycle of their own in the circumference of which he maintained that their planets were fixed; and that the epicycle of Jupiter and his proper heaven, were longer, and nearer us, than those of Saturn; but that those of Mars were of greater magnitude, and of less distance from the earth than those of Jupiter. Ptolemy, who lived about two hundred years after Hipparchus, discovered that his great predecessor had been exact in determining the latitude of the fixed stars with their longitude, but that the latter had increased two degrees. Astronomers, since the time of Hipparchus and Ptolemy, acknowledge the stellary motion from west to east, by which the longitude of every fixed star has become above twenty-nine degrees more than it was in the time of the Saviour. But this progress having been found unequal in different countries, different periodical data or times have been assigned.

Through the movements of the fixed stars not being regular, it is considered impossible to prescribe a precise determination of their revolutions. Still some have computed that it would occupy thirty thousand, and others forty-nine thousand years to complete an entire revolution of them. Thus it is said that a star is lost, or newly discovered, when it has only absented itself or returned from the blue concave of another hemisphere, after an intermission of three to four thousand years. Perhaps, therefore, at some far future day, old maps and charts, now impracticable, may find their dates restored and correct. These declared motions of the heavenly bodies did not agree with the opinion of the followers of Aristotle, whose system determined that the heavens could not be subject to any alteration. They imagined a heaven to exist between the firmament and the primum mobile, which, by its own appropriate motion, librated sometimes from east to west, and sometimes from west to east; by which means it accelerated and retarded the observable movement of the prefixed, or stated fixed stars. This new heaven was called the Chrystalline. It is further recorded that the ecliptic, which was in Ptolemy's time twenty-three degrees, fifty minutes, from the Equator, was then twenty-three degrees and a half. Therefore, to account for this alteration, they conceived another crystal heaven, which they made to librate from the north to the south, and from the south to the north. The mysterious dealings of Providence may well be called an incomprehensible problem, which can only be solved by the spirit of Christian revelation. The Talmud does not more clearly explain the doctrine of Essenism than the Gospels. Nicodemus was reproved, being a "ruler of the Jews," for not knowing the meaning of the words, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus was a Pharisee, yet we see he was not altogether ignorant of this doctrine of regeneration; nor did he fail to perceive that Christ could not perform the miracles he did, "except God was with him."

An angel of the Lord interrogated Manoah as follows: "Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing that it is secret?" Therein may it not be seen that the Deity contemplated some omnipotent object in thus withholding this great name? We shall more plainly elucidate for the general reader, as we proceed, the actual revelation of the mystery of the angel being seen, and then, in disappearing, being only heard. The motives of the Almighty proceed from his own inscrutable wisdom, and his thoughts are not as those of men. He visited and raised up judges for his acknowledged worshippers, whilst he still left the nations around them to be "as thorns" in their sides, and their gods "a snare" unto them. Indubitably, as the deficiency of the the infinite, Manoah apprehended what he wanted to know, and was not enabled to name.

When Romulus was fighting with the Sabines, and his little army, thrown into disorder, was about to retreat, it is related by Livy that he prayed to Jupiter in the following words:—"O father of the gods (Divum Pater) and of all mankind, take away the fear and stop the dishonourable flight of the Romans; at least at this place drive back the enemy, and I vow to erect here a temple that shall stand for an everlasting memorial, that it was from thy immediate aid and protection that Rome itself received its preservation." After this prayer his soldiers with one accord rallied, returned again to the battle, and obtained a complete victory, whereupon Romulus built and consecrated a temple to Jupiter Stator. When the Gauls besieged the capital of Italy, an altar was raised to Jupiter Pistor because, it was said, he told the Romans to throw loaves into the encampment of their hungry foe, by which contrivance the siege was raised. Through divine favour, Gideon was enlightened and instructed to defeat the Midianites by employing trumpets and pitchers containing lamps. But it was not till after he had seen the fire come up out of the rock and consume his offering that he knew he had been speaking face to face with an angel of God. "Then, Gideon" (let this text be well considered, as Jacob and Moses, long before him, had done the same honour to Jehovah) "built an altar there unto the Lord, and called it Jehovah-shalom."

This, to the uninitiated, unless in the credence of perfect faith, must be, if not acataleptical, at least unaccountable. Yet, sacred as is this record, profane writers have converted it into fables and made it the source of many fictions, although through their own acquaintance with religious ordeals which taught them little reverence, it would seem they were well aware of its truth. Joash named his son Jerubbaal, saying, "Let Baal plead against him because he has thrown down his altar." He had cut down his grove also at the command of the Almighty.

Never was the grove of oak and mistletoe esteemed more vocal, inspiring, and sanctified by the administering Druids, than it was held oracular and sacred by the officiating Philosophi*—the Τομαραι Έλλοι, and its other diviners. There is no accounting for the uncertain etymology of the Dodona. Some have supposed it to be derived from the name of the son of Javan (Dodanin), who there, or in that direction of Epirus, settled a colony; others from the Dodonean river; and others from some less likely origins, excepting the nymph of the sea, or rather the prophetess, they named Dodona, who was brought from Phœnicia into Greece. This was none else, we should surmise, than the goddess Δοδωνή, the daughter of Jupiter and Europa. From a period immemorial, there existed near a city called Dodone, in Chaonia, a grove of oaks consecrated to Jupiter Dodonæus, which was famous for the most ancient oracles of the whole of Greece. To those who consulted it, two doves, from the highest tree in the forest, gave responses, or, as it has been fabled, the oaks themselves, as it were, uttered sentences; by which is meant, that the Hamadryads and Dryads spoke there, and chanted forth oracles and prophetic verses, inspired by Jove. Within or close to this enchanted wood was the far famed musical and proverbial Dodonean brass cauldron, and the sacred fountain, so remarkable for its torch extinguishing and relighting properties. The Trophonian oracle, not so old as that of Dodona, was scarcely less famous. It owed its fame to Saon, with regard to Pausanias, but had its name from Trophonius, the brother of Agamedes, a predictor of future events, who dwelt on an eminence overlooking the surrounding wood, in the neighbourhood of Lebadea, a city of Bœotia.

* These priests or Druidæ among the Gauls, and Philosophi among the Grecians, were the same as the Persian Magi, Indian Gymnosophists, Assyrian Chaldei, and the Roman Sacerdotes; they all sacrificed under oaks.

† Χαλκίον Δοδωναίον.

In this subterranean abode he expired, and was, after his death, deified as an oracular god, or Roman saint; and was most consulted and evoked.

Futurity was made known in this cavern through the medium of the senses of vision or hearing. The seeker of its altar, or mysteries, had to undergo peculiar purifications and ceremonies. He was to offer the appointed sacrifices; with sweet oil of cleansing he was to anoint his body, and then to bathe in the river, or lave himself with pure water. These preliminaries ended, he approached the mouth of the cave with slow steps, clothed in a white linen robe, bearing in his hands a cake of honey mingled with butter and flour, on a salver or platter; he then descended the narrow underground passage, and on his leaving the cave he came out walking backwards. His appearance was wild, he looked astounded, dejected, and very melancholy. Hence the Latinized Greek proverb, In antro Trophonii vaticinatus es. The priest of Jupiter, Trophonius, conducted the neophyte through the temple to an elevated chair, called the seat of Mnemosyne: seated in which he rendered an account of what he had seen and heard. Next, his companions brought him to the chapel of Bonus Genius, or Good Fortune, in which they were not long restoring him to his usual cheerfulness. The temple, or high place of the oracle, was on the summit of the grove planted acclivity mentioned; at least so it is brought to the mind's eye by such classic authors as Plutarch and Tacitus.

BASILICA ANGLICANA—VI.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL

THE city of Norwich has from the earliest period held a very prominent place in British history; the capital of one of the most populous and most influential agricultural counties, and the seat at various periods of some of the most important of English manufactures, it has ever been the centre of political and polemical discussion. Naturally its most prominent feature, its cathedral, reflected the passions of the hour, and within its sacred walls the fanatic and the charlatan, the presbyter and the politician, have found audiences for their harangues, and sometimes enthusiastic followers for designs by turns praiseworthy and impious.

The cathedral church of Norwich, though not boasting the antiquity of many others of our English ecclesiastical edifices, is yet one of the most interesting, whether its history or its antiquities be considered. Inferior to some in point of design, to others it is superior in richness of detail, and in a few particulars stands alone of all our religious buildings. Its vicissitudes have been frequent and extreme, and its history is hardly less entertaining than instructive.

In a previous paper we mentioned the names of most of the principal Norman ecclesiastics who by their munificent endowments of abbeys, colleges, and religious edifices, generally caused themselves to be affectionately remembered by the faithful who came after them. Among those not the least eminent was Herbert de Losenge, or as he is sometimes called, Herbert de Losinga. This distinguished prelate was Bishop of Thetford, and was deposed from his bishopric in consequence of certain malpractices, of which the evidence is at the present time either incomplete or lost. One thing is, however, sufficiently well attested, namely, that he was unenviably known as "Herbert the Liar." Upon his degradation he made a pilgrimage to Rome, where he pleaded his cause before the then pontiff, and with such success that he was restored to his see, but only on condition that he should build a church in imitation of the example which had been set him by his brethren, and also a priory capable of giving accommodation to sixty monks. William of Malmesbury tells us that he was not a rich bishop, but other writers persist in the opinion that his wealth was enormous. It is not, however, improbable that the command laid upon him to build a church worthy of his title and rank was one which had a view to his avarice; for the times were such, and the encouragement given by the Norman Conqueror to those who undertook religious works, was so well known for princely munificence, that De Losinga must have fallen in with the fashion which had been set by his brethren in the church and the temporal peers, who could have no interest other than could be derived by the absolution of their rapacity whenever occasion required.

Accordingly when De Losinga returned from Rome in 1094, he removed the see of Thetford to Norwich, and purchased a piece of marshy land from the citizens of Norwich, upon which he employed himself for about two years in preparing it for the structure which he had resolved to raise upon it. This ground was called the "Cow Holm," and appears to have been used as common land, for the title to it was subsequently a matter in dispute. The foundation stone was however laid in 1096. Under the superintendence of Herbert the church soon rose to command the attention and at length the admiration of the clergy and architects of that time. For twenty-one years, until his death in 1119, the prelate laboured at his penitential work; he lived to see its walls nearly covered in, and he was enabled to utter his last prayers beneath its roof. Herbert de Losinga was succeeded by Eborard, who was also deposed. It should be remembered that in those days the church militant had many other enemies than Satan. As an illustration we may mention how the fighting Bishop Spenser was as accustomed to coat of mail and casque as he was to the stole and crozier—how he was not less conspicuous in the lists than in the pulpit—in proof whereof his monument exhibits in exquisite carving both helmet and mitre, with the effigy of St. Michael the archangel, armed cap à pie, and with drawn sword, in menacing attitude, sculptured above them. The soldier and the priest were sometimes convertible terms, with this difference, however, that the sword of the former was double edged, and was wielded by delegation from a power which was then unquestioned. The work therefore begun by De Losinga was continued regardless of cost by his successors. Before its completion, like others of our ecclesiastical structures, it was nearly destroyed by fire, but was at length finished by John of Oxford, bishop of Norwich, in the year 1200, who restored what had been consumed, and perfected the original design.

Norwich Cathedral has however suffered more from the fury of party rancour than from the hand of time or the ravages of the elements. In 1272 occurred riots during the King's (Edward I.) absence in Scotland; and on this occasion the mob rushed in, dismantled the church, and had well nigh completed its destruction. Their rage was however quelled by the vigorous, wise, but yet stern resolution of the king, who ordered the damage to be repaired, and attended himself, with Eleanor his queen, and all his court, to witness its reconsecration in the year 1278. The cathedral, under the royal favour, became still more magnificent. In 1295, the tower over the central transept was blown down and the injury done to the building was thought for a time to be irreparable. That which at present stands was erected by Bishop Percy, in 1361. The great central window was built by Bishop Alnwick, about 1430: in 1463 Bishop Lyhart raised the magnificent stone roof by which it is covered in. Bishop Goldwell raised the upper part of the east end of the choir, with the clerestory windows and flying buttresses about 1480, but it was not until 1510 that it was at length completed as it is now beheld, thus occupying in its construction a period of four hundred and sixteen years. Surely the perseverance of our forefathers in prosecuting their designs is hardly less astonishing and admirable than the grand and gigantic scale upon which those designs were formed.

But this noble edifice has had to pass through two memorable crises. The first was when Henry VIII. sent out his commission for inquiry into the state of the religious houses, with a view to their ultimate suppression. Mr.

Froude, in his History of England, has drawn a vivid picture of the panic which spread through all classes. Men lined the road armed with such weapons as the country afforded, determined to protect what then appeared to them institutions sacred and inviolable in their character. Cromwell, one of the commissioners, bore testimony to the popular wrath, and at last paid with his head the penalty of his vacillation in the service of the Tudor tyrant. The populace besieged the commissioners in the very church, a conflict ensued, and much injury was done. Under Mary the cathedral was repaired, and under Elizabeth new privileges were given to the city and to the see. James I. affected much partiality for the city and people of Norwich, and Charles I. found within its walls a welcome as hearty as ever monarch received. During the Commonwealth, however, the Cathedral of Norwich was nearly destroyed. Its painted windows were broken by the Puritanic mallet, its monuments mutilated, dragoons were quartered in the nave and aisles, and one pious soldier actually made a horsecloth of its altar cloth. Let us hear a contemporary and eye witness. Joseph Hall was at that time Bishop of Norwich. Like others of his class he was loyal to the king, and this virtue in his view was the deadliest crime in the view of the Puritans. Alas! those were sad times for the splendour of religious worship, and the fierceness of fanaticism blinded the mental view of men, animated doubtless by religious aspiration; but as has since been sorrowfully found sadly mistaken as to the effect of their fanatical iconoclasm.

"Truly," says Bishop Hall, "it is no other than tragical to relate the carriage of that furious sacrilege whereof our eyes and ears were the sad witnesses, under the authority and presence of Alderman Lindsey Toftes, the sheriff, and Greenwood. Lord, what work was here! what clattering of glasses, what beating down of walls, what tearing up of monuments, what pulling down of seats, what wresting out of iron and brass from the windows and graves, what demolishing of curious stone work that had not any representation in the world but only of the cost of the founder, what tooting and piping upon the destroyed organ pipes; and what a hideous triumph on a market day before all the country, when in a kind of sacrilegious and profane procession all the organ pipes, vestments, copes and surplices, together with the leaden cross which had been newly sawed down from over the green yard pulpit, and all the service books and singing books that could be had were carried to the fire in the public market place—a lewd wretch walking before the train, his cope trailing in the dirt, with the service book in his hand, imitating in an impious scream the tune, and usurping the words of the litany used formerly in the cathedral! Near the public cross all these monuments of so called idolatry were thrown into the fire; not without much ostentation of a zealous joy in discharging ordinance to the cost of some who professed how much they had longed for that day. Neither was it any news upon the guild day to have the cathedral, now open on all sides, filled with musketeers, waiting for the mayor's return, drinking and tobaccoconing as freely as if it had been turned into an alehouse."

Such were the doings of our forefathers, such the horrible rancour which religious hate begets. May it be hoped that the passions of one age are the overflowing which fertilizes the next, and of which the fruits are wisdom, brotherhood, and charity.

The cathedral church of Norwich consists of nave, transepts, and aisles, which run in a circular direction round the east end (corresponding in this respect with the form of the building), and four chapels. On the south side is a cloister, a feature which need hardly be called peculiar in the style of architecture of which this famous church is the type, but which in some instances is found wanting. The length of the building is four hundred and eleven feet, of the transepts one hundred and seventy-eight feet. The breadth of the nave and aisles is seventy-two feet. From the floor to the summit of the tower measures one hundred and forty feet, and to the top of the spire which tapers to a point, and is elegantly crocketed at the angles, the height is three hundred and fifteen feet.

THE VARYING CHARACTER OF ENGLISH ARCHITECTURE

BY JOHN WILSON ROSS.

WE are not among those who believe that Englishmen have no sympathy with art or artists of any kind, but move only in the mild sphere of making steam engines and calico prints; that they are essentially a commercial, practical, peaceful people, who have an immense capital and fine large towns, which they do not possess the capacity to embellish with beautiful edifices. So far from being of opinion that there is want of skill in English architects, we think that, whenever a great event calls for their talents, they are equal to the occasion. Indeed, whenever there has been a universal invitation to submit designs, as at the Lille cathedral competition, and at that for new state offices in this country, they have carried off the first prizes, and no one has ever questioned the superiority of their designs. Doubtless there does exist a very foolish prejudice that foreign artists of every description surpass the English, although we have seen our own countrymen selected to do that which could not be done so well by the native architects. Thus, at Hamburg, an English architect was chosen to rebuild the cathedral and the town hall, both of which are the chief glories of that city. But though, when measured against the best men of foreign countries, our architects hold the foremost place, we must candidly admit that they influence very little for the better the style of our houses, particularly our secular public buildings. The causes, by which this is to be accounted for, are manifold; one of the chief is, that the question of style is treated by some as a matter of perfect indifference, and by others as a matter of paramount importance. Is there any clue by which an architect is to be guided? In what direction should he wend his way? It ought not to be, in our opinion, towards mediævalism; yet there is very little doubt, after recent experiences, that Gothic is chiefly aimed at. Gothic may be all very well in the erection of a church, or of such an ecclesiastico-secular structure as a nunnery, a monastery, a Jesuits' college, or even a college at a Protestant university. It would have been a very great pity if the Royal Exchange, or St. George's Hall in Liverpool, the Radcliffe Library at Oxford, or the Senate House at Cambridge, or any other important public building, had been erected in strong contradistinction from modernism; and bearing upon it the stamp of archaism, had been chargeable with anachronism, instead of being impressed, as it is, with all but the precise Anno Domini date of their erection. We are puzzled to know why architects should affect so much mediævalism for our contemporary secular architecture, when in all other secular matters, whether of business or amusement, we are every day removing further and further off from the characteristics of our earliest civilization.

The advocates of Gothicism assert, apparently without a shadow of truth, that the perpendicular is essentially the style of England, and that if it be not the best, it is, at any rate, the home style. True enough, it did not come to us from another land; certainly it never went away from us to another climate, for assuredly the men of other countries never had the bad taste to choose to imitate it from us. But, after all, it is only a variety of the Gothic which in its due season was transplanted into our country; and even as the Roman, the Saxon, the Norman, the pointed or early English, and the decorated styles passed away and yielded place one to the other, so the perpendicular, the successor to the decorated, wore itself out in turn in the days of the Tudors, by which time it had stiffened and straitened itself up till nearly every flowing line was lost. During the reigns of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth the last lingering traces of the Gothic disappeared. Circular and square forms began to take the place of the perpendicular, and the Italian style came into fashion, and—in a debased form it is true—continued in use for somewhat more than a century—that is, from the commencement of the sixteenth to the commencement of the seventeenth centuries. But about 1620 a more pure Italian style came into vogue, and was continued, with various degrees of success, until the middle of the reign of George III. Since then our principal buildings have been chiefly copies or adaptations of the Florentine, Roman and Venetian schools. Of the latter we have splendid copies and even original productions in great numbers in London—nowhere to such an extent and in so small a space as in the club houses in Pall Mall and St. James's Street.

If we give as the duration of the various architectural phases in England since the time of the Roman invasion, 400 years to the Roman style, 600 to the Saxon, 150 to the Norman, 350 to the varieties of the Gothic, 100 to the Elizabethan, and 200 to the Italian, we find that the architecture in England in its general form and detail has been more than 1,400 years of a different character from the Gothic, while the latter universally prevailed for only three centuries and a half. The Gothic then can in no sense be called a national style of building. It did not originate in England; it was the Byzantine architecture improved by the Christians; during the period when cathedrals, churches, and domestic buildings were erected in this country in that style, similar structures in France, Belgium and Germany were raised in the same style; the buildings of the four countries have all the same recognizable characteristics, so that if the national style of architecture in England be Gothic, the national style of architecture in Germany, France and Belgium is also Gothic. The fact is, we can claim for ourselves no particular style as national. At several periods we have adopted different styles, and the existing races have varied them with those little differences which they thought suited to their peculiarities.

We may be here allowed to glance aside to observe that the architectural remains in this country are very valuable as aids not only to the progressive development of the arts, but to the knowledge of our history and the changes in our domestic habits and social condition. It is easy enough to perceive from the distinctive character of the principal remains from the time of the Normans to the thirteenth, fourteenth and even fifteenth centuries, on account of all the houses being then strongly fortified, that we were a fighting people; that from no attempt at fortification being made in building the brick houses in the reigns of the Tudors and the Stuarts, that we were then abandoning warfare, and gradually betaking ourselves to the arts of civilization; and, from the comfortable domestic character of private dwelling-houses during the last two hundred years, that our time was devoted entirely to commerce and the industrial arts; that life was preserved to a large extent, and that on every hand social comforts were daily improving.

It is only indeed of very late years that difficulty as to choice of style has arisen, it having been safely taken for certainty, that no other than classic, or some modern modification of it ought to be thought of for secular public buildings. A few years ago the great advocacy was for the classic style; and buildings in styles not Gothic were raised with great beauty and rapidity in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin, at Oxford and Cambridge, and in such great provincial towns as Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham. Nowadays a railway station, or a savings bank, a training college, or barracks, are Gothic and castellated, not quite what a true lover of art likes to see in point of taste, nor a member of a society for improving dwellings in point of sanitary requisites. The windows are of course very small; perhaps there is a confined inner court if the building be large enough to admit of a court; the healthfulness of the building is consequently made to yield to the idea of some imitation of the mediæval castle, and that cannot be for good result in art, which either represses the utilitarian development, or which seeks to combine with a different use the decorative characteristic of something else. Architecture seems in these days to be never prepared for a new class of buildings, or a new invention or material. The art is more than at a standstill, it is going backward; for we cannot help thinking that to build in the classical style is to modernise and advance, and to build in the Gothic style is to archaize and retrograde.

THE CRAFTSMAN'S DUTIES.

[The following is an abridgment of an eloquent and valuable oration delivered before the Grand Lodge of Iowa, U.S., by the Rev. Geo. B. JOCELYN, Grand Orator.]

FOR a few moments we have been called from labour to refreshment, that we may gather around our Masonic trestle board, compare the work of the past year with the designs there traced, and see what yet remains to be accomplished by those of us who are still permitted to labour in the forests, or in the quarries, or in carrying up the walls of our increasingly beautiful temple. On our trestle board we shall find many designs traced by the hands of those who long since mouldered to dust—designs which, from their universal application, have been the guide of the Craft from time immemorial—and as we gather around it, now nearly six thousand years since the God whose we are and in whom we trust, said, "Let there be light, and light was," we shall discover that those designs, in their spiritual, moral, and practical application, have lost none of their beauty or adaptability to our race by the flight of years or by the ever changing phases of the mental and moral condition of mankind. Centuries since, Masonry lost its distinctive features, as a society of operatives, but retaining its ritual and ceremonies, still redolent of the perfume of the incense that filled the temple of God on Mount Moriah, more than three thousand years ago, when, at the base of that altar on which the ark so safely reposed, were placed level and plumb line, and trowel and gavel, and compass and square, it has gathered Masons who, collecting the scattered implements of the ancient operative profession, are building a moral temple whose foundations the vandal hand of war shall never overturn, and whose walls, and pillars, and halls, and domes shall never be tarnished by the touch of time.

To-day, as a part of the great Masonic Craft now scattered over the world, we have gathered around the ancient trestle board found in the old temple, to revive past associations, repledge our fealty to the practise of those virtues so nobly illustrated in the life, character, and death of him who first traced designs thereon; and, by a few moments' meditation, renew our love and zeal for our time honoured institution.

The antiquity and deeds of Masonry have given it a prominence before the world enjoyed by no other merely human institution. To this history I need scarcely allude to-day, for it is within the reach of all intelligent persons, whether they are Masons or not. It is a part of the history of the world; it is engraven on all the monuments of antiquity, in all lands; it is interwoven in all those vast designs by which the race has been elevated, and by which liberty and human rights have been secured. To the thoughtful Mason it would be a pleasant task to trace the influence of Masonry on the progress of the world in the liberal arts and sciences, and in the inculcation of those purely humanitarian principles which have modified the rigour of monarchical governments, and cultivated the sentiment of human brotherhood, and expanded the soul of man with correct notions of a liberty in which due deference shall be paid to rulers, and in which the subjects may exercise the appetites and passions within due and proper bounds. I need not refer to the simplicity, beauty, truthfulness, harmony, and merit of the rites and ceremonies of Masonry, for all these are demonstrated in the fact that they originated in the purest and most refined ages of antiquity—survived, like burning centres, of unfading light during the night of barbarism that for more than a thousand years settled down like a pall of almost impenetrable gloom upon our whole race, and now unchanged, command, in the noon of the nineteenth century, the admiration and wonder of many of the brightest intellects of the day. Of the purity of its teachings and the righteousness of its motives, it is sufficient evidence to point you to the many pure and noble men of all ages and of all lands who have surrounded its altars and cherished them at the risk of life, and fortune, and honour. These and other kindred facts form themes, the elucidation of which would cause a just pride to swell in the heart of every Mason here. But these themes, so full of food for the intellect and the heart, I propose to lay aside to-day, and from the trestle board take some of its many designs that have a practical bearing, and which shall come home to the heart and conscience and life of every brother. Theories may be beautiful—forms and ceremonies sublime—but unless they can be made practical, and can affect the ordinary duties of life, or can assist in the discovery or elucidation of new facts in art and science, or in the mental or moral elevation of the race, of what benefit are they? They may tower up before us as beautiful as the floating iceberg of the northern seas, sparkling in all the grandeur of variegated light as reflected by the sun's declining rays, and they may be as cold as beautiful; or, what is a still more appropriate illustration, they may be as beautiful as the vision of Jacob, when, reclining his weary head upon the cold stone of the desert, he saw, at midnight, heaven opened and a ladder let down from the skies above, on which the angels of God descended and ascended; but if the vision were all, it would only remain a sweet memory of the night, to cheer by its remembered beauty; but when of that ladder, whose three principal rounds are "faith, hope, and charity," we construct a highway to the skies, on which not angels but redeemed men may ascend, and hold communion with the God unseen by natural eye, the vision remains not only a remembered "thing of beauty," but a practical "joy for ever."

Masonry properly appreciated is an element of power. The design of all its forms and ceremonies is to improve and elevate, not only its votaries, but the world. It appeals to some of the strongest elements of our nature, and wherever Masonry fails to make men more thoughtful and better, the fault must lie in those who impart the mysteries or in those who receive them; generally in the former. I state two facts I wish you each to bear in mind: Whenever the lectures, oral and written, scientific and moral, traditional and historical, any or all of them, are omitted in the conferring of a degree, that degree is imperfect to the amount of the mission, and the candidate has not been properly dealt with. This is one fact. Whenever a brother Mason fails to square his life according to the lectures and obligations he has received, to the full amount of that failure he lacks in being a Mason. This is fact number two. Pardon the plainness of speech; and recollect that one duty of a Mason is to speak the truth in love. You know as well as I do that while our ceremonies are secret, our duties have been spread before the world from the pulpit, the forum, and the press, and that there are very few who are ignorant of the claims and requirements of our beloved Order. I shall not aim to present you anything new—for I shall feel safest in pointing you to those designs on our trestle board, traced, indelibly traced, by the pen of inspiration, and embalmed in the lives of the noblest patrons of the art that ever knelt at a Masonic altar. Masonry needs nothing new to add to her wisdom, strength, or beauty; and the more closely, in this day of change and professed reforms, we adhere to the ancient landmarks in ritual and in duties, the more successful shall we be in accomplishing the design of our Order. Masonry needs nothing new—for her ritual is simple, expressive, unique, and sublime, and her inculcations are truths, immortal truths, with an adaptability to our race that must exist until wrong is banished from the world and virtue reinstated on her ancient throne—"until suffering has no want to relieve and sorrow no tear to dry." Masonry needs nothing new, for that which has endured the mutations of time, the vandalism of war, the fires of persecution, the edicts of kings, the bulls of the popes, and the anathemas of the fanatical of all ages, certainly possesses those elements of perpetuity and success that must command the respect of its opponents and the love of its adherents; elements that it would be fatally unwise to cast aside for anything novel and untried, no matter how beautiful it may appear. Man, as he is by nature—the rough ashlar—is the material Masonry designs to work upon; man, as he should be—the perfect ashlar—is the result she designs to produce. To accomplish this, each individual man—like each particular stone from the quarry—must pass through the transition state ere the mass of society can stand the test of the square of the Grand Master Overseer.

The first, middle, and last duty, then, of each Mason, is to know of himself the nature and extent of the obligations assumed by him in becoming a Mason. This comprises the all of his knowledge as a Mason—the fulfilment of these obligations comprises the all of his duties as a Mason. These propositions are so self-evident that I should feel I was insulting your intelligence to attempt to prove them. These practical duties (for theoretical and ceremonial Masonry belong to the Lodge room) embrace man's obligations to himself, his fellows, his country, and his God.

In the name of the Order, I demand of each one the improvement of the talent given him, in the elucidation of the designs on our trestle board, that our Grand Master above may have pleasure in the whole Craft profit thereby. Our Order forbids all that tends to degrade the body or the soul, and enjoins whatever will enlighten, improve, and elevate them; the Masonic obligations demand to the fullest extent possible, with means and opportunity, the subjugation of the unholy passions and appetites of our nature, and the development, according to the same standard, of all those virtues and graces which can adorn the intellect and the life. This is part of the work to which, by solemn rites and ceremonies, you have been consecrated. See that you fail not to meet your high dedication.

But there are other duties of a still more practical nature, embraced in these obligations—they stop not with yourself. You are but one of a race to which you are bound by ties you cannot sever. Masonry could not, and does not, ignore these associations. That which is demanded of you individually, is only to qualify you for the relations of life in which you are placed. You cultivate virtues in the heart, only that you may exhibit them in the life. Of what use, as sentiments, are truth, brotherly love, relief, justice and charity, unless they find expression in words of cheer and deeds of love? The world is tired of metaphysical disquisitions. In fact, can you separate these virtues from some object on which to bestow them? The very qualities out of which they are formed require these objects. Does Masonry teach them as abstractions? Nay verily. She acknowledges the ties of brotherhood, and the weakness of the individual by her associations in the Lodge room. It was against the spirit of intense selfishness by which man is so liable to be governed. It teaches the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of the race, and in an especial manner does it inculcate this sentiment among those who are united by the same mystic tie. It makes his rights our rights; his interests our interests; his pleasures our pleasures. However much we may differ in matters of opinion, it says, "we are brethren," and this sentiment is to be exhibited in all our actions and tempers towards each other. We are to cherish the reputation, the property and the life of a brother as our own. It forbids all that will injure; it silences the tongue of slander; it stays the hand of injustice; it destroys strifes and heart-burnings, and bickerings of all kinds. Children of the same family, there must be no quarrels. He is my brother! This is the sentiment of Masonry, and only when we act up to the requirements of this sentiment are we Masons in deed and in truth. Apply this principle in all the minutiae of life—let it enter all the departments, social, civil, commercial, and we should have a state of society such as clearly pointed out in the teachings of our Order.

Take another sentiment—relief. Is it an abstraction? Does it not necessarily imply an object; and in the connection in which I now use it, is not that object a brother? Is a brother in difficulty, or distress, or danger? What is its voice? Stop and inquire how that difficulty, or distress, or danger was produced? No, this is now a secondary matter. Give the immediate relief, and then inquire the facts—and if those facts demand reproof, censure, suspension or expulsion, administer it, and administer it promptly. Relieve first, then correct.

Truth; what is it? "Conformity to reality or fact." Admit it. This conformity must be applied to some object. It must be real. Is not this one of the corner stones of our edifice? Can a man be a Mason and not be a true man in all his relations? His actions must accord with the facts; his words must be as good as bonds—something on which you may depend—something to which you may give your own personal pledge, as a voucher. In a world where much is outside appearance and sham, where falsehood and chicanery and fraud are frequently installed in high places—where trickery and keen trading, and sharp practise, and illicit financiering rule the many, this Masonic virtue is a jewel that will always command the admiration of the pure and the worthy. Shall we hide that jewel? Shall Masons' words ever be any thing else than bonds? Shall it ever be said that Masons are no better than other people? Shall it ever be said that this cord by which we are united is a rope of sand? The answer lies with us, my brethren! We and our compeers are the exponents of Masonry throughout this state. Our halls have been dedicated, our vows have been voluntarily assumed, our principles are known to the world. Can we profess and not practise? Dare we do it? Should we not stand condemned as unworthy the name we bear? This is a virtue we cannot confine in its operations to ourselves—it is an element of character that lies at the basis of our whole structure. A Mason! and false to himself, false to his brethren, false to his race, false to every true relation! Can such a thing be? A Mason and a liar, by word or deed, for emolument or fear or gain—for revenge or love! Were such an abhorrent doctrine or practice ever to obtain among the Craft, would not the spirits of the departed Hiram, and of those other patrons of our Order, who yielded life at the hand of violence or expired on the rack or amid the flames rather than be false to themselves or their fellows, haunt our guilty minds, and rise before us in every middle chamber, and before every altar, and strike more terror to our perjured souls, than did the ghost of Banquo to the guilty Macbeth? Guard well the passes to this virtue; tyle every avenue of temptation; demand the shibboleth from every thought and deed that would approach this foundation, for once undermined, the whole superstructure of your Masonic character is as baseless as the unsubstantial fabric of a dream.

Permit me to allude to one other tenet of practical Masonry. I refer to charity. And I now use it in a broader sense than brotherly love, or relief to a suffering Mason. To the duties under these points I have already referred. Charity is a practical thing, not only so far as the brethren and their families are concerned, but so far as all men are concerned. I am aware that we should have the first claim on each other—this is not only brotherly, but right; but shall charity stop there—can it stop there?

"Want is on every side; woes are on every hand."

Engrossed as the Mason may be in the business and cares of life, he must not forget that it is his duty to relieve and assist all who may be in distress as far as God has given him ability. This is the very spirit of Masonry—the life it would breathe over all the world—the profession it makes everywhere, and at all times. It recognizes but one nation—the earth; but one family—the race of man. This is one of its boasts—one pillar of its strength. Its universal adaptation to the wants of man in the demonstration that its principles are inspired—its doctrines divine. As practical Masons can we ignore these facts? Are we not bound to assist the unfortunate and the erring, even though they may be unworthy to kneel at our altar and assume our vows. Time will not wait on you; misery will not withhold its bitter cup; hunger will not cease its clamour for food; temptation to do evil will not fail to be present; sorrow will not check its tears that we may rest; death will not stay its dart, that we may dally on our way to the bedside of the dying. You must thrust yourself into the tide of misery and rescue those that are perishing. I know the field is a hard one and your means limited. But recollect a cup of cold water, a morsel of bread, a kind word, a helping hand, may save many a one. You need not go out of your own daily walks—nor out of your own neighbourhood to perform such deeds of love.

But there is another, broader charity than this you must exercise—the charity of thought—the toleration for opinion's sake. It costs but little to furnish money to the poor and destitute—it may be no self denial to assist even our enemy that is suffering. Kindness of feeling may prompt you to cast a bone to some starving cur; but can you tolerate difference of opinion, when it comes in conflict with your own? Can you rise above the prejudices of education, of party, of sect, and recognize all who are labouring for the right as your brethren beloved? Does not Masonry require this? Are you infallible in theory or in practise? May you not be wrong in one and err in the other? We cannot all see alike—it is not designed we should—but we can differ and be brethren. Men of all faiths and parties and creeds can assume our vows, and become Masons. As practical Masons we should cultivate and practise a spirit of liberality that will tolerate everything but wrong. Charity like this will put down strife and discord in the Lodge room and in the community—it will acknowledge the common tie of brotherhood that exists among all men; it will put out the fires and scatter the fagots of persecution; it will break the iron arm of war; it will throttle at its birth proscription for opinion's sake; it will send peace over all the world, into every community and neighbourhood, and reinstate the scenes of ancient Eden in the hearts and homes of all men. Can you practise this Godlike virtue? Can you look with favour and affection on him who may differ ever so widely from you in opinion? Can you give the warm right hand of fellowship to your antipodes in sentiment while their hearts are right, and they labour for the cause of virtue and humanity? Can you do all this without stopping to inquire nation or creed, religious or political, and say, "Is thy heart as my heart, if so give me thy hand?" This is practical charity, a charity of which too little is seen in our world of strife and bigotry—but it is a practical charity that must sooner or later dawn upon the whole world. If, as Masons, we perform our duty, God will own us as honoured instruments in hastening the good time coming.

I might refer to many other practical duties relating to ourselves and fellows, but on this point I must not impose longer on your patience.

WORK.—There is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness, in work. Were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works; in idleness alone is there perpetual despair.—Carlyle.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the recent meeting on the 23rd ult., the chair was taken by T. J. Pettigrew, Esq., one of the vicepresidents. Thirty-three associates added to the list since June last were announced, including the Bishop of Oxford, J. Walter, M.P., J. H. Markland, D.C.L., Drs. Palmer, T. Read, C. Rooke, Rev. Messrs. Jackson, Levy, Ridley, Messrs. Benyon, Jortin, Madden, Godwin, Hughes, Hodson, Kears, Alexander, &c. The mayor of Reading exhibited two pommels of swords found at Silchester, one globular, gilt, and ornamented with silver, similar to two in the Faussett Collection found in Saxon graves, but considered to belong to the Renaissance period; the other presenting a singular head dress, and filled with lead. Mr. Wright exhibited several casts from the impressions of the feet of dogs on Roman tiles, made before the tiles were hardened, obtained from Wroxeter; also a small Roman painter's palette, in alabaster, with the name either of the maker or of the painter to whom it belonged incised in small characters on the back; and a small iron box of Roman workmanship, with its cover on, and hermetically sealed by the progress of decomposition, but through an accidental fracture at one edge the interior appears to have been fitted with some kind of wood. Mr. Bateman forwarded an account, together with the drawings of several Anglo-Saxon antiquities, preserved by him from a spot near Caistor, in Lincolnshire. The remainder of the evening was occupied in the reading and discussion of the Rev. Mr. Jenkins's paper "On Cæsar's Passage of the Thames, and his Route afterwards."

DISCOVERY IN DERBYSHIRE.

A VERY remarkable painting, with an inscription over it, has been recently found in cleaning the walls of Melbourne Church, Derbyshire. The painting consisted of a figure of the devil, underneath whom were two human figures; other figures were represented in various parts of the painting. The inscription is written in singular characters, and has puzzled several eminent linguists. The most probable construction of it is that rendered by Professor Bosworth, author of the "Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," and the Rev. Samuel Fox, of Morley, Derbyshire, both eminent scholars, and likely to give an accurate opinion. They consider that the painting is a very rude illustration of our Lord's temptation; that the inscription is Latin, much abbreviated; and that when the necessary letters are supplied it reads thus: "Hic est relictus a diabolo;" "Here he is left by the devil," or perhaps more literally, "Here the devil leaveth him."

THE LATE MR. ROLFE.

THE local journals have reported some additional particulars of Mr. W. H. Rolfe, of Sandwich, who was a gentleman well known in antiquarian circles, and particularly in connection with Kentish archæology. No one, indeed, has contributed more liberally towards antiquarian researches in the Roman and Saxon departments in Kent than Mr. Rolfe. For years his residence at Sandwich was the rendezvous of a choice circle of scientific explorers, who were hospitably entertained and aided by the intelligent conversation of their amiable host, while a generous hand was ever ready to contribute to the expenses of practical researches.

Mr. Rolfe was the grandson of Boys, the historian of Sandwich. He early imbibed antiquarian tastes, and, in the course of time, succeeded in forming a valuable museum of local antiquities, some notion of the extent and importance of which can be formed from Mr. Roach Smith's "Antiquities of Richborough, Reculver, and Lymne," and the "Collectanea Antiqua." The former work (dedicated to Mr. Rolfe) is chiefly illustrated from his collections; and the Saxon antiquities from Osengal, together with many rare coins discovered in Kent, appear in the latter work. Referring to it, it is curious to notice that, upon a point of money for the illustration, the Society of Antiquaries declined the offer of the report for the discoveries at Osengal! We can only infer then that the liberality of Mr. Rolfe helped to do what this rich society would not consent to.

The valuable collections made by Mr. Rolfe were ceded to Mr. Mayer, of Liverpool, the purchaser of the Kentish Saxon antiquities excavated by Faussett, which had been twice refused by the trustees of the British Museum, several of whom belong to the said Society of Antiquaries. The antiquities of Richborough are now placed by the side of the rejected Saxon remains, and will be often referred to by future antiquaries for types and examples. The county may now lament the loss of such a collection; but Mr. Rolfe was resolved to keep it in its integrity, and where it should be accessible. It is luckily fully illustrated in the volume abovementioned.

Mr. Rolfe had reached his eighty-first year a few weeks since. His illness was of short duration, and he expired on Sunday without a sigh. His amiable qualities have endeared him to all who knew him, and his loss will be felt not only in the town of Sandwich, but wherever he was known. A respected correspondent adds:—"In Mr. Rolfe our Kentish archæological researches lose a true patron, for he was not one of those who figure only in the decorations and feastings of societies, but he was earnest and sincere for the sake of science, affable and hospitable, and under his friendly roof and auspices were often assembled some of our ablest archæologists, who by his encouragement have substantially forwarded the study of the early antiquities of our country. Some of his most valuable coins found at Richborough, we understand, are at the present moment being engraved by his friend Mr. Fairholt."

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

FINCH'S CYPHER.

In the year 1802 W. Finch, of Canterbury, well known to the Craft as a dealer in Masonry, published A Masonic Treatise with an Elucidation on the Religious and Moral Beauties of Freemasonry, Zydvrjxyjzypix, Zvjstn, Wxstjn, &c., R.A., A.M., R.C., K.T., M.P., M., &c., for the use of Lodges and Brothers in General. Dedicated by Permission to William Perfect, Esq., Provincial Grand Master for the County of Kent. By W. Finch, Canterbury (Second Edition, with many Valuable Additions). A List of Subscribers, with an Explanation to this and Two other Plates, is given in the Book of Elucidations on the Plates. Please to observe that every Book has here on the Title Page, ty Qzzf, and Oivjzq Qvwozypix. Wanted a key to the cypher in which a great portion of these two books are printed. NZGGVD YLLPV.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

What is the best work to consult for the history of the Knights Templar?—CHEVALIER. [If "Chevalier" is a Templar he can or ought to know the history of his Order. If not, and the question is merely to be taken in a literary point of view, see Nicholas Gurtler's Historia Templariorum, Observationibus Ecclesiasticis aucta; 8vo., Amsterdam, 1691; a second edition, with additions, 1702; Peter du Puy's Histoire de l'Ordre Militaire des Templiers, ou Chevaliers du Temple de Jerusalem, depuis son Etablissement jusqu'à sa Decadence et sa Suppression, 4to., Brussels, 1751; the Abbe Vertot's Histoire des Chevaliers Hospitaliers de Saint Jean de Jerusalem, which is full of interest to the student; and also An Accurate Historical Account of all the Orders of Knighthood at present existing in Europe, to which is prefixed a Critical Dissertation upon the Ancient and Present State of those Equestrian Institutions, &c., &c., by an Officer of the Chancery of the Equestrian Secular and Chapteral Order of Saint Joachim, 2 vols., London, no date].

GERMAN MASONIC SONG.

Wishing we had a translation of some of the foreign Masonic songs, I should be glad to be informed if a German song called "Laszt uns ihr Brüder" can be procured in an English dress? I heard a German brother sing it in his own language, and afterwards give an explanation of it, and it seemed worthy of adoption.—FRANCIS. [The song our brother inquires for was translated some years since, and both words and music are printed in the Rev. Dr. Render's Tour through Germany, 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1801. In the introduction the worthy doctor writes thus:—

"If an Englishman wish for almost instant acquaintance with the first ranks in Germany, his being a Freemason will render his introduction more easy and agreeable to the parties as well as to himself—Masonry being there held in the highest estimation. But it is somewhat different from that of England; I do not mean in point of science, but in the choice of members. It is on this account by no means easy to become a Mason, as the qualifications are extremely nice and numerous; the difficulty of choice, however, is not confined to foreigners, but extends even to natives, the mutual consent of every member in different Lodges being necessary to make a Mason, and it often happens that a German is excluded because one single member gives a negative. This accounts for the advantage of being a Mason, in order the more easily and speedily to acquire an acquaintance with persons of the greatest respectability. A man will then be introduced to the litterati as well as to the first ranks of nobility, and consequently will never repent having been initiated into this mystery in his own country; and as the English and German Lodges are so closely connected with each other, words are inadequate to describe the advantages and pleasures which an Englishman derives from such an union. What delight must a foreigner feel in passing some hours in a German Lodge where everything is conducted with decorum and the greatest solemnity! There he will meet the first princes of the German empire, nobility, and men of learning, and, to heighten the charms and conviviality of the scene, music—all powerful music—is called in to accompany the choicest songs. I shall here take the liberty of presenting my reader with a specimen of a German Masonic song which is adopted in all the Lodges in the empire. I am the more induced to publish it in this work as I have often sung it in several Lodges in this kingdom and been requested to publish it with the music and an English translation.

The original and translation are here appended:

- | | |
|--|--|
| "1. Laszt uns ihr Brüder,
Weisheit erhöhn;
Singet ihr Lieder
Feurig und schön. | "1. Come brothers sing with me,
Join brethren all;
Wisdom our goddess be,
List to her call. |
| "2. Lachet der Thoren,
Die Weisheit schmähn;
Wir sind erkohren,
Wahrheit zu höhrn. | "2. Laugh at the foolish throng,
Heedless and vain;
Wisdom inspire our song,
Blest be her reign. |
| "3. Maurer euch bindet,
Heilige Pflicht;
Suchet ihr findet
Wahrheit und licht. | "3. Masons we are all bound,
Heart, voice, and hand,
Her laws to spread around
O'er ev'ry land. |
| "4. Götter der Erden
Steigen vrom Thron;
Maurer zu werden,
Das ist ihr Lohn. | "4. Gods quit their thrones above,
And at our shrine
Seek holy peace and love,
Gifts most divine. |
| "5. Menschen beglückn,
Lehrt uns Natur;
Folgt mit Entzücken,
Brüder der Spur. | "5. Nature directs us still Mortals to aid;
This we with joy fulfil;
Well we're repaid. |
| "6. Strahlen zu borgen,
Brauchen wir nicht;
Uns leicht von Morgen
Göttliches licht. | "6. We need no borrowed beams,
Brethren behold!
From the bright east still gleams
Radiant gold: |
| "7. Es leicht uns nieder,
Bis in die Gruft;
Wo Gott uns wieder
Schöpferlich ruft." | "7. Which in our joyful way
Is to us given
Till an eternal day
Greets us in heaven." |

FREEMASONS' LODGE AT BATH.

In the year 1807 there was a Freemasons' Lodge held in Bath, registered in the Grand Lodge books as No. 243. Can any brother kindly state the Lodge now existing in Bath which formerly bore that number, also who were its W.Ms. from 1807 to 1826?—A.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

On the Causes of Irregularity of the Permanent Teeth; and their Mechanical Treatment Considered. By JAMES ROBINSON, D.D.S.; Senior Dentist to the Royal Free Hospital, &c., &c. London: Mr. ROBINSON, who has for many years been known as one of the most judicious advisers and expert operators among the dentists of London, has of late years contributed to various scientific periodicals some valuable papers upon subjects connected more immediately with the technicalities of the profession. The pamphlet before us is a reprint from the Dental Review, and is marked by the same careful study and acute observation as the author's former treatises. The subject is so purely one of professional interest—being intended only as a manual for students—that our readers will not be much disappointed by our leaving them in ignorance as to the details of the subject. To those, however, who may have youngsters whose ivories are not quite so even as their parents may desire, Mr. Robinson unfolds sundry mysterious processes for straightening the crooked, making even all irregularities; and in fact points out the best way to treat any vagaries which Dame Nature may indulge in with regard to incisors, bi-cuspid, canines, or dentes sapientie. The work is illustrated by explanatory engravings of irregularities and apparatuses, which are enough of themselves to give an innocent unprofessional reader the tooth ache; and while we close the book with a slight (but we hope pardonable) shudder, we are bound in justice to the author to say that the learning and ingenuity which he displays are sufficient to make us thankful that "in case of an accident" we know where a cunning leech is to be found who can repair disasters to our jaws, whether of an ordinary or extraordinary character.

Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character. By E. B. RAMSAY, M.A., F.R.S.E., Dean of Edinburgh. Third edition, much enlarged. Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas.

THIS new edition of a very amusing book has been so greatly enlarged that it "might, in fact, almost have been issued as a new work." Anecdotes, jokes, and witticisms have always been considered pleasant reading, and it is well known that every good story finds its way into almost every language in the known world, whilst, after a few years, the nationality of the joke is entirely lost, and it tells equally well in all tongues. The anecdotes in this volume cannot all be said to be new, as we recognize many that have been before us on more than one occasion, yet they are told so graphically that we do not become impatient at their reappearance. The book is very nicely got up, and is dedicated to Lord Dalhousie. The anecdotes are classified under five heads—Religious Feelings and Observances—Old Scottish Conviviality—The Old Scottish Domestic Servant—The Scottish Language and Dialect—and Scottish Stories of Wit and Humour. The first example we shall select is one on

PARENTHEMATICAL PREACHING.

"An officer of a volunteer corps on duty in a place, and very proud of his fresh uniform, had come to Mr. Shirra's church, and walked about as if looking for a seat, but in fact to show off his dress, which he saw was attracting attention from some of the less grave members of the congregation. He came to his place, however, rather quickly, on Mr. Shirra quietly remonstrating, 'O man, will ye sit down, and we'll see your new breeks when the kirk's done.' This same Mr. Shirra was well known from his quaint, and, as it were, parenthetical comments which he introduced in his readings of scripture, as for example, on reading from the 116th psalm, 'I said in my haste all men are liars,' he quietly observed, 'Indeed, David, an' ye had been i' this parish ye might hae said it at your leasure.'"

The conviviality of our ancestors has been the subject of many an essay, but of all the jovial souls who loved to drown dull care in the flowing bowl, the Scotchman of the last century stands pre-eminent; and as there are some very good anecdotes which show the manners and customs of the days gone by, we have marked three to extract for our reader's amusement. In the following we have a very fair insight into a Scotchman's

"DRINKING CAPACITY."

"Lord Cockburn was fond of describing a circuit scene at Stirling, in his early days at the bar, under the presidency of his uncle, Lord Hermand. After the circuit dinner, and when drinking had gone on for some time, young Cockburn observed places becoming vacant in the social circle, but no one going out at the door. He found that the individuals had dropped down under the table. He took the hint, and by this ruse retired from the scene. He lay quiet till the beams of the morning sun penetrated the apartment. The judge and some of his stanch friends coolly walked up stairs, washed their hands and faces, came down to breakfast, and went into court quite fresh and fit for work. The feeling of importance frequently attached to powers of drinking was formally attested by a well known western baronet of convivial habits and convivial memory. He was desirous of bearing testimony to the probity, honour, and other high moral qualities of a friend whom he desired to commend. Having fully stated these claims to consideration and respect, he deemed it proper to notice also his convivial attainments; he added accordingly, with cautious approval on so important a point, 'and he is a fair drinker.'"

To such an extreme did the drinking customs of the age go that we have the following melancholy picture presented to us:—

"Nothing can more powerfully illustrate the deep rooted character of intemperate habits in families than an anecdote which was related to me as coming from the late Mr. Mackenzie, author of The Man of Feeling. He had been involved in a regular drinking party. He was keeping as free from the usual excesses as he was able; and, as he marked companions around him falling victims to the power of drink, his attention was called to a small pair of hands working at his throat. On asking what it was, a voice replied, 'Sir, I'm the lad that's to loose the neck-cloths.' Here, then, was a family where, on drinking occasions, it was the appointed duty of one of the household to attend, and when the guests were becoming helpless, to untie their cravats in fear of apoplexy or suffocation."

Nor was the usage confined to the upper classes of society, for all persons were considered as "hail fellow, well met," when there were signs of drinking about. One of the most capital stories in the book turns on this point, and is so excellent that we cannot refrain from giving our readers a glimpse of

"THE CHAIRON OF THE DEE AT BANBURY."

"Boaty was a first-rate salmon fisher himself, and was much sought after by amateurs who came to Banbury for the sake of the sport afforded by the beautiful Dee. He was perhaps a little spoiled, and presumed upon the indulgence and familiarity shown to him in the way of his craft; as, for example, he was in attendance with his boat on a who was both skilful and successful, for he caught salmon after salmon. Between each fish catching he solaced himself with a good pull from a flask, which he returned to his pocket, however, without offering to let Boaty have any participation in the refreshment. Boaty, partly a little professionally jealous perhaps at the success, and partly indignant at receiving less than his usual attention on such occasions, and seeing no prospect of amendment, deliberately pulled the boat to shore, shouldered the oars, rods, landing-nets, and all the fishing apparatus which he had provided, and set off homewards. His companion, far from considering his day's work to be over, and keen for more sport, was amazed, and peremptorily ordered him to come back. But all the answer made by the offended Boaty was 'Na, na; them 'at drink by themselves may just fish by themselves.'"

The liberties taken by old and attached servants is a theme often dwelt upon, and in many instances they give rise to really humorous situations. The great bulk of this description of anecdotes we have read before, but there are some quite new to us, which may also amuse our readers; take the following as specimens:—

"The charge these old domestics used to take of the interests of the family, and the cool way in which they took upon them to protect those interests, sometimes led to very provoking, and sometimes to very ludicrous exhibitions of importance. A friend told me of a dinner scene illustrative of this sort of interference which had happened at Airth in the last generation. Mrs. Murray, of Abercainy, had been amongst the guests, and at dinner one of the family noticed that she was looking for the proper spoon to help herself with salt. The old servant Thomas was appealed to that the want might be supplied. He did not notice the appeal. It was repeated in a more peremptory manner, 'Thomas, Mrs. Murray has not a salt-spoon;' to which he replied most emphatically, 'Last time Mrs. Murray dined here we lost a salt-spoon.' An old servant who took a similar charge of everything that went on in the family, having observed that his master thought he had drunk wine with every lady at table, but had overlooked one, jogged his memory with the question, 'What ails ye? at her wi' the green gown.'"

"A characteristic anecdote of one of these old domestics I have from a friend who was acquainted with the parties concerned. The old man was standing at the sideboard and attending to the demands of a pretty large dinner party; the calls made for various wants from the company became so numerous and frequent that the attendant got quite bewildered, and lost his patience and temper. At length he gave vent to his indignation in the remonstrance, addressed to the whole company, 'Oy a' thegither; that's the way to be served.'"

"I have heard of an old Forfarshire lady who, knowing the habits of her old and spoilt servant, when she wished a note to be taken without loss of time, held it open and read it over to him, saying, 'There noo, Andrew, ye ken a' that's in't; noo dinna stop to open it, but just send it aff.' Of another servant, when sorely tried by an unaccustomed bustle and hurry, a very amusing anecdote has been recorded. His mistress, a woman of high rank, who had been living in much quiet and retirement for some time, was called upon to entertain a large party at dinner. She consulted with Nichol, her faithful servant, and all the arrangements were made for the great event. As the company were arriving, the lady saw Nichol running about in great agitation, and in his shirt sleeves. She remonstrated, and said that as the guests were coming in he must put on his coat. 'Indeed, my lady,' was his excited reply, 'indeed, there's see muckle rinnin' here and rinnin' there, that I'm just distractit. I hae cast'n my coat and waistcoat, and, faith, I dinna ken how lang I can thole (bear) my breeks.'"

We have purposely forbore adducing any of the Scotch humour, which is plentifully introduced into the above volume, because southerners do not always understand the dialect, and to seek for the pith of a story by the aid of a glossary, totally destroys the point of a good thing. But to those who can avail themselves of a knowledge of lowland Scotch, we would add, that the Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character is a storehouse for their amusement, and those who, like ourselves, have but a wee smattering with the Scottish idiom, will yet find in Dean Ramsay's book a mine of good tales easy to be retained, and very many well worthy of being retailed in the family circle.

Twenty Years in the Church. An Autobiography. By the Rev. JAMES PYCROFT, B.A., Trinity College, Oxford. London: Booth.

THE author of this volume is favourably known as a writer by his Recollections of College Days, and some part of that work may be said to be remodelled and incorporated in the present bulky volume, consisting of more than four hundred pages. Under the guise of an editor, the Rev. Henry Austin, the author tells the story of his life from his childhood, through his school days, college life, struggling, unbeneficed ministrations, his subsequent induction to a living, and his now comfortable and domestic home. It might be expected in a work like the above, and perhaps it would be pardonable, that Mr. Pycroft should have tinged it with his views on church matters; but he appears to belong, as far as we can gather from his pages, to the Broad Church party in the establishment, and while he looks upon what he chooses to call Tractarians, as some of them earnest, and others as ecclesiastical fops, he yet steers a via media, and sees as much harm in the un-evangelical Low Churchman. Mr. Pycroft belongs to neither of these schools, but contends that the church is wide enough for both, whilst he contents himself by remaining an active parish priest, ready at all times to minister in sacred things, and no less ready to advise, launch, and work in secular things. Mr. Pycroft has, as we confess to a similar leaning, a favourable opinion of corporal punishment; he feels no mawkish sentimentality in recording the "brushings" of such a severe disciplinarian as the late Dr. Keate, head master of Eton, and we hold with him in thinking the old saw, "spare the rod and spoil the child," to have lost none of its truism, although the feeling of the age has thought proper to vote all necessary punishment "degrading brutality."

These then are the points from which Mr. Pycroft takes his views of society, and keeping them in view, he carries his reader with him through some of the most amusing incidents that fall to the lot of one person to witness. The funeral baked meats of "Hamlet" have often met their companions in the memory of most of us, and Mr. Pycroft tells us:—

"I can tell you that, as to widows, I have learnt of late to hold my sympathies a little better in hand. There was our squire's wife at my first parish, who kept me in a painfully melting mood for a whole week, and, after all, it turned out to be only what they call 'a happy release.' Literally, at the end of ten months, old Davy, our clerk, came to me one morning and said, 'Please sir, you are wanted. Our lady is coming after a licence.'"

"A licence!" I replied, astonished: 'a certificate of her husband's death you mean.'

"No, sir, I do not," said Davy; 'tis a licence. And 'tis the captain who came so regularly for the shooting in the squire's life time; and they won't wait no longer to please any one, says my lady's maid."

In a rural parish the clergyman is generally looked up to as an arbitrator on all disputed points, but on one which more nearly concerned his sacred calling, we will let him tell his story in his own way, premising for our reader's information that the dispute was concerning the right to a grave, and was being argued by a farmer and the sick sexton who had risen from his bed to decide the following case of circumstantial evidence:—

"This he said standing by an open grave, and using no little eloquence to persuade Farmer Woollen that the grave opened for Betsy Small was the Small's, and nothing near the Woollen's grave. This Woollen denied, and stoutly maintained that his father's bones were those thus ruthlessly disturbed. He even handled a thigh bone with much filial indignation; and, though the said bone might have belonged to any other body, still, as they say 'seeing is believing,' it carried weight with the crowd."

"How was I to settle the dispute? To tell the truth, I knit my brows with concentrated essence of thought as I approached the grave, ambitious, by remarking sex of skeleton, or apparent age, or time of burial, to show the superior wisdom of the church. But all in vain. Nothing so odd I make out of it, still less stop the quarrel."

"Words waxed warmer. The farmer laid down the law with his supposed paternal thigh bone, and Simon found that numbers were taking part against him: for anything so demonstrative as this bone seemed he sought in vain on his side. At last Simon was well nigh condemned to fill up the Woollen grave, to replace the scattered bones, and hide his diminished head as a false pretender to all mortuary lore, when all of a sudden a bright thought flashed from beneath Simon's beetling brows."

"I'll soon tell ye," he cried out: 'I'll show ye—every mother's son of ye—a set of gaping, stupid, nasty, make believe chaps, to think to talk to sich as me!' he said, groping among the mould at every epithet. 'But, I say, I'll let ye see. There!' holding up a bit of the coffin, 'what d'ye ye call that? Oak—oak—Farmer Woollen! this be oak!' Still, I could not see the logic of the matter. 'Yes, oak! Now your father was buried by the parish,' he said, with a sarcastic thump in the ribs, 'and we all knows they don't give oak. This ain't no grave o' yours.'"

"This turned the tide of popular opinion in a moment. Farmer Woollen was crest fallen, and Simon was triumphant, and so happy in the victory that I had some trouble to make him go home and take care of himself."

Mr. Pycroft can also write forcibly, and the character of the good, kind, dear old aunt is so touchingly given that we refrain from quoting any portion, as we should like our readers to peruse it for themselves, assuring them if they do they will have had a perfect picture placed before them, well calculated to make them both wiser and better men.

It is an admitted fact that the clergy do not read well in general; that the effects of their sermons are often lost for want of a winning way to tell their story, and that the vulgar should be talked to in a way that would shock the more refined. Mr. Pycroft tells us—

"Another observation about Norlands was, that the poor are hard of hearing, and comparatively deaf, as also slow of hearing or of receiving strong impressions. The barrister knows this, and the dissenter knows it, and both adopt a style to suit their dull and sleepy nature. They are lucid and energetic—they limit themselves to a few and striking topics—they are not afraid of putting the same fact in an almost tedious variety of ways."

"Suppose, I say—this is the remark of an intelligent dissenter—'My brethren, 'the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked.' Honest John says to himself, 'What's that! I wasn't quite listening; let us hear that again.' Well, soon it comes a second time, and he thinks 'Very well; now I like that, as much as I can catch of it.' In a minute or two it comes a third time, and he can say both parts of the text over to himself. Then I divide it into two parts and pound away with, first: the heart is deceitful, with a remark or two, and an appeal to John's own experience. After that I tell the story of David, and how Nathan made David feel the deceitfulness of his heart; for David had overlooked in himself the very sin he so heartily condemned in another. John remembers that story, and tells it again at the stile or the almshouse as he goes home. I end with pounding away that the heart is also desperately wicked, and remind John of murders, and lying, and cheating, and swearing—all signs of a wicked heart; and then I wind up by saying, Who can alone make the heart less deceitful and less wicked, and who alone can blot out of God's book all the deceit and lying, and all sin and wickedness now written so black against us?"

"Now, sir," he continued, 'pardon me; but in one of your sermons you will say ten times as much, but not give John time to swallow and not a chance of digesting any one thing that you tell him. You think it is not like a scholar to use many words; but remember, the barrister does not think so: he uses more words or few, according as he addresses a common jury of farmers or a special jury of educated men. Nay more, if you hear the same barrister arguing before the judges, he seems almost independent of all rules of speech. Reference to well known cases and brief suggestions convey as much as a long argument.'"

Mr. Pycroft winds up with a piece of advice to the young clergyman, which is equally good for the laity, and brings to mind the copy slips of our school days, when we were compelled to write that "procrastination is the thief of time." He says:—

"The idea of being settled and free from distractions in the path of duty is a vain dream and expectation—that the quiet little retreat imagination pictures, wherever the distant spire rises above some lofty elms is not too quiet to have cares and anxieties peculiarly its own—and that we all must strive manfully against those little ties and greater hindrances from which, in some form or other, we never can be free. And, as to looking for a more convenient season, and waiting till we are 'settled,' to perform our several parts in this life, it is like waiting till the river shall have passed away; for a man never is 'settled' in this world till he is settled at the bottom of his grave."

In taking leave of Twenty Years in the Church, we cordially recommend its perusal to our readers, feeling assured that in its pages there is much to be learned suitable both for cleric and layman.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

LORD BROUGHAM is about to issue his Mathematical Works in one volume, dedicated to the University of Edinburgh. The announcement is thus made:—"In the press, and speedily will be published, in one vol., 8vo., dedicated to the University of Edinburgh. 'Tracts, Mathematical and Physical.' By Henry Lord Brougham, LL.D., F.R.S., Member of the National Institute of France, and Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh." The tracts or essays are in number eleven.

Mr. John Veitch, M.A., author of the "Memoir of Dugald Stewart," in the new edition of his works, and joint editor with Professor Mansel of "Sir William Hamilton's Lectures," is a candidate for the chair of Logic in the University of St. Andrew, vacant by the death of Professor Spalding.

Mr. W. H. Russell, the Times correspondent in the Crimea and India, is publishing, through the Messrs. Routledge, a diary of his residence in India, which will be a work quite independent of any edition of his Indian letters to the leading journal.

Messrs. Thacker and Co., of Newgate-street, announce "Rural Life in Bengal; illustrative of Anglo-Indian Suburban Life, more particularly in connection with Planters and Peasantry, the varied Produce of the Soil and Seasons; with a detailed account of the Culture and Manufacture of Indigo. By the Author of 'Anglo-Indian Domestic Life,' 'Rough Notes of a Rough Trip to Rangoon,' &c." This, we are told, is "the first work giving a popular and pictorial description of native life and character, the industry and productions of Bengal, and the position and influence of Europeans among the people." If the promise of the prospectus be kept, it cannot fail to be a successful publication.

During the Christmas holidays Professor Faraday will deliver, in the Theatre of the Royal Institution, six lectures on "Various Forces of Matter," in the style of Christmas, and to the capacities of a juvenile audience.

The Council of University College, London, at their session on Saturday last, appointed Syed Abdoolah, Professor of Hindustani in the college. The chair had been held, in conjunction with that of Tamil, by the Baron Von Streng, who, however, on learning that Syed Abdoolah was willing to undertake to instruct the class, and after bearing testimony to his high qualifications for the office, offered to make way for him for the reasons urged on another occasion by Sir Henry Rawlinson, that although the dead languages are best taught by European professors skilled in the science of grammar, and with some knowledge of comparative philology, a native should be preferred for all the living dialects of India.

The eminently useful individual who goes about "calling people's attention" has brought under the notice of Mr. T. C. Newby the statement of "George Eliot," and the remarks of the press upon that lady or gentleman's letter. Mr. Newby says, in a letter to a contemporary, "That I have advertised a book, entitled 'Adam Bede, junior, a sequel,' is true; that I have endeavoured to delude the public into a belief that the work was written by Miss Evans or George Eliot, is false."

Messrs. Hogg announce that their magazine, Titan, will not be published after the present number, with which number it concludes its twenty-ninth volume.

The second edition of "The Life of Sir Charles Bell," by Amédée Pichot, is just announced for publication—the first having been eagerly caught up by the great man's admirers on the continent. "At the present moment" (says a Paris letter) "a vast spirit of inquiry has arisen in France concerning the right assumed by science in England to claim an equal share of the world's gratitude with that of France, and the publication of this 'History of Sir Charles Bell' has done a great deal to dissipate the ignorant opposition with which such claim has sometimes been met. Society, the only rightful judge of medical skill, and whose judgment, being founded on self-interest, is seldom in fault, has chosen in France to adopt the renown of many a British physician with as much good will as that accorded to those belonging to the French school. Buchan and James in the last generation—Simpson and Clerk in our own—are as well known and frequently quoted as the most popular professors of the Académie de Médecine."

The Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres has just announced the subjects for the prizes to be given in 1860 and 1861. The Bordin gold medal, of the value of 3,000fr., is to be conferred, next year, on an essay on the knowledge of the ancients respecting that part of Africa situated within the tropics, and particularly Nigritia and the region of the Upper Nile, from the time of Herodotus to that of Pliny and Ptolemy. In 1861 it is to be given to the best history of the language and literature of the Ethiopians, with a list of the original works and translations, an account of the various epochs of the literature of Abyssinia, and of the characteristics that mark the dates of questionable writings. The Louis Fold prize, which consists of the interest on 20,000fr. for three years, will be given, next year, to the author of the best history of the arts of design, their origin, progress, and transmission; to be written in French or Latin, and open to the competition of all the world.

A collection of the principal poems, prologues and addresses that have appeared on the occasion of the Schiller Festival is being made at Munich. The first number has appeared already, and seven more numbers are expected to follow.

It is reported that M. Empis, the ex-manager of the Théâtre Français, has been appointed Inspector-General of Public Libraries. The post, which was originally created for M. Romieu, as a consolation for the loss of the direction of the Beaux Arts, has not hitherto been filled up since his death.

The death of John Fincham, author of several works in the literature of the dockyard, is announced in the papers. For many years Mr. Fincham was the superintendent of the School of Naval Architecture at Portsmouth. His principal works are, a "History of Naval Architecture;" "Outlines of Ship-building;" a "Treatise on Laying-off Ships;" and an Essay on "Masting Ships." All these books have a certain professional value.

A Paris correspondent says—"The arrival of the copy of the famous picture, 'The Aldobrandini Marriage,' in Paris, has set all artists, amateurs, savans, and dealers by the ears. Is it by Apelles? Is it not by Apelles? That is the question, and already has the war begun. The fresco was discovered at Rome, in the arch of Galba, on Mount ————, about a century ago, and it was not till the year 1808 that it was noted as being possibly the production of Apelles. The exhibition of this new copy to the susceptible Paris public will be a valuable opportunity of fresh discussion, hatred, malice, and vengeance amongst the savans, which, of course, in these days of business, will not be lost."

Sir John Herschel has deposited with the Astronomical Society three manuscript volumes of observations of the solar spots, made by the late M. Pastorff. These volumes were originally presented by the author to Sir John Herschel. They are now transferred to the Society, on the understanding that they shall be considered as belonging to Sir John Herschel during his lifetime; but after his decease shall become the property of the Society. In the mean time, Fellows of the Society interested in the subject of those observations will always have the opportunity of consulting them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

THE MASONIC CEREMONIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am very sorry to find that Brother Tweddell is offended at the use of the word "secular," as applied to the ritual of our Lodges, in a short note of mine to you a fortnight since about Sunday Lodges of Instruction; but he will see, at once, that his argument would apply in fullest force to the circumstance of "Mr. Speaker at prayers" in the House of Commons; or to the ordinary and praiseworthy custom of saying grace at our social banquets. More particularly does the force of his argument subside when viewed in reference to the Lodges of Instruction.

Truly and fraternally his and yours,
Z.

MORE ABOUT "MODEL LODGES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It is well that the present state of our Lodges, whether that term be applied to the material Lodge (the building) or the "spiritual" Lodge (ourselves), should be ventilated in your columns. Our brother of Skibbereen is not happy in his selection of the word "inspection," signifying, as it does, prying into, or at the least a supervision; it being contrary to the spirit of Masonry, the W.M. of each district Lodge being, and accounted to be, a perfect "Solomon" in and within his own proper person. He has, however, in his letter hit on an expedient which has weighed with me for some time in another form, viz., the appointment of some "discreet and learned" brethren, who shall hold themselves in readiness to make a tour of the provinces whenever invited, to explain the drift, purport, spirit, and essence of speculative Masonry, and who shall be well paid for their trouble by the Lodges so inviting them. There should be a course of lectures on two or three consecutive Lodge nights, and might include remarks on the working of Lodges also, a history of Masonry as of old, and an advocacy of the Masonic charities as they exist should also form a part of the course.

This method cannot be too soon adopted in the present state of the public mind, inquiring as they are everywhere about Masonry; and, moreover, it should have the countenance of the several provincial Lodges; and I believe it would lead to material improvement.

Knowing your willingness to insert well meant suggestions, and your general courtesy, I venture to send the above, and subscribe myself, yours fraternally,

Z.

THE SKIBBEREEN MASONIC HALL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

SIR AND BROTHER,—I perceive, by an advertisement in last week's Magazine, that the brethren of Lodge No. 15, of Skibbereen, County Cork, are endeavouring to raise funds for the purpose of erecting a Masonic Hall in that town. I know a little of Skibbereen, having visited it once, and I certainly must say that it is the last place in the Green Island where I should have supposed that such a spirited enterprise would emanate from. However, I wish the brethren every success, as I am confident such a movement is calculated to be of immense advantage, not to Masonry alone, but to the country generally, as it would probably be the means of inducing numbers to avail themselves of the truths and virtues inculcated by our valuable Order; which, I am persuaded, is destined, at no distant period, to exert a most beneficial effect on the world at large. The world is every day becoming more convinced of its salutary workings on society, and is also beginning to see through the claptrap denunciation of those who make political capital out of its existence.

Masonry, I say, has a great and glorious mission, and its silent footsteps may be traced in every portion of the habitable world; it is stealthily making its way into the minds and hearts of men of every clime and colour, leaving an impression not to be eradicated until the final scene, which transforms this temporal world into one huge blank. As fruitless would be an attempt to banish the Holy Scriptures from these realms, as an endeavour on the part of any to stay the onward march of Masonry, which is destined to revolutionize the world for its spiritual welfare. Therefore, sir, I rejoice at the rapid strides it is making in the sister isle, and as nothing, I maintain, will tend more to unite us into a "band of brothers," let us assist the shining light, and thus promulgate our noble institution.

As I am advanced in life I probably may never read of the consummation of the project to which I have alluded—nay, not even of the laying of the corner stone; however, I shall cast my mite into the treasury, in the hope that when the pulsations of my heart shall cease, and the hand which now guides my pen shall be stiff and motionless, there will be reared up in honour of our beloved Order, a miniature King Solomon's temple in a remote and secluded locality, which will redound to the credit of my worthy brothers of Lodge No. 15. I fear I have trespassed too much on your valuable space, but I remain, yours fraternally,
Finsbury, Dec. 8th, 1859. P. J. W.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

THE first meeting of the Committee for the approaching festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Friday, the 10th inst., when Col. Burlton, C.B., P. Prov. G.M. for Bengal, who serves from No. 10, was appointed as President; Bro. Josh. Smith, G. Purs., who serves from No. 1082; and Bro. Farnfield (the Secretary to the Institution), as Secretary. There are now forty-eight stewards.

BRO. DISTIN, Sen. (the eminent trumpeter), takes a farewell benefit at Exeter Hall on the 4th of January, under the highest Masonic patronage.

METROPOLITAN.

OLD CONCORD LODGE (No. 201).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday, December 6th, at the Freemasons' Tavern, Bro. Maney, W.M.; Bro. Swainston, S.W., and Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin, J.W. The Lodge was very numerously attended, and amongst the visitors were Bro. James Bennett, of the Lodge Jerusalem des Vallées Egyptiennes, Paris; Bro. Isidore Vallet, of the Lodge Jerusalem Ecosses, Paris; Bro. W. Newman, P.M. of the John D. Wellard Lodge, No. 250, New York, U.S.; Bro. Warr, S.D. of the St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 281, and several other metropolitan brethren. The Lodge having been duly opened, Bros. Tyrell, Jacks, and G. Maddick answered the necessary questions, and were in a very solemn and impressive manner raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. Bros. Chaplin, A. D. Maddick, Levisohn, and Taylor, were passed to the second degree. Afterwards the Worshipful Master proceeded to initiate Messrs. Henry Avery, William Leighton, George Walkins Tulmer, Richard W. Woodward, and Edwin Adolphus Masterman, into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. The next business was the election of a Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, and the votes being quite unanimous, Bro. Swainston was elected to that office, who returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him, hoping that during his year of office the brethren would not be too severe in their strictures upon him, and that the Past Masters would assist him in the performance of them. Bro. Kennedy was reelected Treasurer of the Lodge, and Bro. George Gorton, Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund. Bro. Emmens having alluded to the long services of Bro. Maney, W.M., and his anxiety at all times to promote the interests of Freemasonry (he had lately consented to serve as steward at the next festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution), moved that £5 be voted from the funds of the Lodge for the purpose of presenting him with a jewel on his retirement from the office of Worshipful Master, which was seconded by Bro. Jackson, P.M., and carried unanimously. Bro. Vallet said before the Worshipful Master closed the Lodge he wished, as a foreigner, to express the great gratification he had experienced at being present at the gathering that evening, and most cordially did he rejoice at the Masonic alliance which existed between England and France, even if there were no other. It was the desire of their brethren in France to become acquainted with their mode of working, and to know what difference there was between them, and he had been sent over as a deputation, to listen and learn, and when he went back to give his French brethren the benefit of what he had learned. He must say that he had learned a good deal that evening from the excellence of the working of that distinguished Lodge, and he begged most cordially to thank them for the honour the Lodge had conferred upon him in being present to witness it that evening. The Audit Committee having been appointed, Bro. Beckett was reelected to the office of Tyler for the ensuing year. The Lodge was then closed and the brethren retired for refreshment, when seventy-five sat down to a banquet served in the usual style of excellence. The regular loyal and Masonic toasts having been disposed of, the Worshipful Master gave "The Initiates," and congratulated them on being brought to the light of Freemasonry in that Lodge. Bro. Avery thanked the brethren for the kind manner in which they had drunk their health, and for the very kindly feeling with which they had been received, and trusted that they would never prove a discredit to the Lodge. The beautiful ceremony of his initiation, he could assure them, impressed him with feelings of respect and reverence, and he must confess that it had been so fixed on his mind that he should vividly remember it to the latest hour of his existence. He hoped they would receive their best and earnest thanks, and that they might prove a credit and honour to the Lodge. Bro. Vallet said he could not refrain from expressing his delight at the feeling of loyalty which the brethren showed towards the reigning power, whether it was that of royalist or republican, and when he saw such unity among them he could not help shedding a tear. He did not feel ashamed of it, for if he did he should think that he was unworthy of the feelings of a man. (Cheers). The Worshipful Master next gave "The Visitors," connecting therewith the names of Bro. Newman, from the United States; Bro. Vallet, from France; and Bro. the Rev. J. Shaboe, for England. Bros. Newman, Vallet, and Shaboe severally returned thanks. Bro. Jackson, P.M., proposed "The health of Bro. Maney, W.M.," who he said was not only a good working Mason, but was a friend of all their Masonic charities. He had now offered to become a steward at the festival for the Benevolent Institution, and he hoped the brethren would rally round him. Although they might be in good health at the present time, there was no telling how soon they might be reduced to the lowest ebb of poverty and distress, and therefore he hoped that they would support Bro. Maney on the present occasion. Bro. Maney said he required the eloquence of Cicero or Demosthenes adequately to return thanks for the kind manner in which they had received his health, as he had only endeavoured during his year of office to promote the interests of the Lodge for the benefit of the Craft; and the honour which they had done him for such trifling service was far greater than he deserved, and as long as the G.A.O.T.U. might spare him he would continue to do all in his power, although he had not done as much as he desired to do. He thanked them sincerely, and could assure them that as long as the Old Concord Lodge required it, Bro. Charles Maney would always be its supporter. The Worshipful Master next gave "The health of Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin, J.W." Bro. the Rev. J. Laughlin said it had been his pleasure many times during the last five years to hear proposed the health of the Worshipful Master, and said, when he heard that Bro. Jackson had been entrusted with the gavel to do so, he almost wished to be in his place to have the pleasure of proposing it. He had long known him as a kind and personal friend; he was introduced by him to be initiated into Freemasonry, and the friendships he had formed in that Lodge would last as long as he lived. He congratulated him that during his year of office he had initiated thirty-three gentlemen into Freemasonry, a greater number than had been admitted into any other Lodge during the same period, and he trusted that his successor would be equally fortunate, and follow in the steps of Bro. Maney, and if he did so he could not go wrong. He congratulated the Lodge that three nations which ought by nature to be united, were there represented that night. He had no idea whatever of trenching upon the dangerous ground of politics, but the best guarantee for maintaining concord with their cousins on the other side of the Atlantic was, to unite with each other in brotherly love, and thereby promote the reign of the Prince of Peace upon earth. He congratulated them on the number of initiates that evening and the sentiments which had been expressed by them. In Freemasonry they would find the great and inestimable principles of truth, and if they went on in the practise of it for thirty years they would discover that they had not exhausted the subject or become acquainted with the unfathomable depths of knowledge which it contained. Let him recommend them to be punctual and regular in their attendance at their Lodge, and also to visit Lodges of Instruction, since there is not a syllable expressed in the Lodge but what would be satisfactorily accounted for in their lectures. He should never have another opportunity of saying to their present Worshipful Master that they had spent a most delightful evening on the expiration of his year of office, the funds were in a most satisfactory state, and the Lodge had that evening paid to him a well deserved tribute of respect, and although they had been liberal in the year, the benevolent fund had not been saddled with a single sixpence, or had suffered thereby. The longest yarn must have an end and so must his, but he would say in conclusion—may brotherly love, relief, and truth abound both for their own honour and the promotion of the mission of their great Master on earth, and so fulfil his will and promote his glory. (Cheers). Several other toasts were given, and the evening was spent in a most harmonious manner, assisted by the vocal and instrumental abilities of Bros. Woollans, Davis, Amos and Maddick.

PHOENIX LODGE (No. 202).—The last meeting of the year of this Lodge was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Saturday last, Bro. Williams presiding. Owing to the absence of candidates for advancement, the business was purely formal, and the brethren adjourned at an early hour to refreshment, and after hours were much enlivened by the exertions of Bros. Genge, T. Distin, and Weekes, who gave some beautiful glees with good effect; nor were the amateurs, with Bro. P. M. Webber as their chief, wanting in their endeavours to please.

DOMATIC LODGE (No. 206).—The anniversary meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, Dec. 12th, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane; Bro. Robert Baker, W.M.; Bro. Hayden, S.W.; and Bro. Moore, J.W. The minutes having been read, Bros. Thorne and Knight were most impressively raised to the sublime degree of M.M., and afterwards Bro. Taylor was passed to the second degree. Mr. Clement Brown was then introduced, and in due form initiated into the privileges and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. The next business was the installation of Bro. Haydon as W.M. of this Lodge, in the presence of a numerous body of the brethren and members. Amongst the latter were Bros. Adlard, P. Aast. G. Dir. of Cers. for Essex, and P.M. of No. 7; Ernest, P.G. Dir. of Cers. for Kent; Collard, P.M., No. 168; Larbourg, P.M., No. 281; Stacey, W.M., No. 211; Wade, No. 318; Fraser, (Scone and Perth), No. 3; Avery, S.W., No. 902; Earle, Confidence, No. 228; Harrison, No. 52; Quelch, S.D., No. 902; St. George, W.M., No. 219; Dickie, S.W., No. 53; Jones, P.M., No. 183; Howell, No. 183; Alexander, No. 223; Poller, P.M., No. 11; J. R. Warren, P.M., No. 1022, &c. Bro. Brett, P.M., having taken the chair, Bro. Haydon, W.M. elect was, in a most impressive manner, installed into the chair of King Solomon, and the customary salutes having been given by the brethren, the W.M. proceeded to appoint his Officers, as follows:—Bro. Moore, S.W.; Bro. Russen, J.W.; Bro. Wilson, S.D.; Bro. Forge, J.D.; and Bro. H. Thompson, I.G. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren adjourned to banquet, to which eighty sat down. The W.M. gave the loyal and Masonic toasts, Bro. Smith, P.M. and Treasurer, returning thanks for the Grand Officers. The W.M., in proposing the health of the visitors, said it was always a toast most agreeable to give in the Domatic Lodge, and he felt highly honoured that night by the presence of some of the most distinguished members of the Craft. It would be unnecessary to go over their names in detail, but should give them the toast, coupling with it the name of Bro. Adlard. Bro. Adlard said he thought he might speak not only for himself but the rest of the visitors, and say how highly pleased they were with their reception there that evening, and from what he saw of it he was always able to speak of the Domatic Lodge in the highest terms. Bro. Collard, P.M., said he was delighted in visiting the Domatic Lodge, which had produced some of the greatest luminaries in Freemasonry. From what he knew of their W.M., and from what he had seen of him in Lodges of Instruction, in his performances of the ceremonies, and his knowledge of the Masonic ritual, he felt assured that he would prove a most excellent Master of that Lodge. He also wished to allude to the talent displayed by their P.M., Bro. Brett, in his installing their W.M. into the chair, which must have given great satisfaction to every one who witnessed it, and not the less reflected credit upon himself. Bro. Potter, P.M., also acknowledged the honour conferred upon them. Bro. Robt. Baker, immediate P.M., proposed "The health of their W.M.," wishing him long life, health, and prosperity. The W.M. said he was desirous of taking the earliest opportunity of saying how much he was obliged to them, and of relieving himself of a burden which almost pressed him down, for the very flattering encomiums passed upon him by Bro. Collard, which he really did not deserve. He had not entered upon the office of W.M. of that Lodge without being fully impressed with the responsibility of its duties; and felt bound to acknowledge the excellent rendering of that ceremony by Bro. Brett, believing that few could equal him, and not many excel him. He was not going to say that he would do this or that, or perhaps as much as might be expected of him as to a solemnity of manner, but he could assure them, in all the essential particulars of Freemasonry, they would not find him wanting. The W.M. next gave "The P.M.s. of the Domatic Lodge," for which Bro. Smith, P.M. and Treasurer, returned thanks, regretting the absence of Bro. Carpenter, who usually undertook that duty. The W.M. said he had now a special toast to propose, which required special attention at their hand, which was "The health of Bro. Baker," and he wished to state to the visitors who that night honoured them with their presence, that the brethren of the Domatic Lodge, to mark their sense of Bro. Baker's services, had voted him a jewel, which it was their pleasing duty to present to him for his painstaking attention during his year of office. It bore an inscription, which he could readily endorse, and it ran thus:—"Presented by the Domatic Lodge, No. 206, to Bro. Robert Baker, P.M., in testimony of their esteem, evincing the high sense they entertain of his distinguished and efficient services rendered to the Lodge during his year of mastership. 12th December, 1859." That was the testimony the brethren had stamped upon the jewel; but he hoped it would be stamped deeper still upon his heart. In placing the jewel upon his breast, he trusted he would ever remember the occasion with pride, and that he might be blessed with long life to wear it. Bro. R. Baker said he felt considerable embarrassment in his inability to find words which should adequately convey his feelings for the kindness the brethren of the Domatic Lodge had shown to him. For the jewel they had that night placed on his breast, he heartily thanked them, and trusted he should never wear it one moment longer than while he acted in a manner which should be no disgrace to Freemasonry. He thanked them most cordially for the honour which they had conferred upon him. The W.M. next gave "The Officers of the Lodge," for which Bro. Moore, S.W., responded; and afterwards "The Treasurer and Secretary of the Lodge, Bros. Smith and Elme," for which they severally returned thanks. Several other toasts were given, and the evening was most agreeably spent, being diversified by some excellent singing by Bros. Beckett, Weston, Hart, and others.

PERCY LODGE (No. 234).—At the usual monthly meeting held at the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street, the 13th Dec., the W.M. Bro. Tyman very ably raised a brother to the third degree, passed three brethren to the second degree, and initiated a gentleman into the Order; after which the election of Worshipful Master took place, when Bro. J. R. Warren, S.W., was elected for the ensuing year; Bro. Thorne, P.M., the highly esteemed father of the Lodge, reelected Treasurer, and the veteran Rice, Tyler. After a superb banquet and very pleasant evening the brethren separated at an early hour.

LODGE OF UNITED STRENGTH (No. 276).—At a meeting of the above Lodge, on the 13th instant, Bro. J. N. Frost, the J.W., was elected W.M. for the ensuing year.

ROYAL UNION LODGE (No. 536).—At the regular meeting, held on Wednesday, December 7th, at the White Horse Hotel, Uxbridge, Bro. Joseph Wright, W.M., in the chair, Bro. Alfred Pratt, S.W.; Bro. J. R. Newall as J.W., Mr. Richard Gurney was initiated into Masonry. A ballot was taken for Bro. Wm. Smith, of No. 38, which proving unanimous, he was elected as a joining member. Bro. Alfred Pratt was unanimously elected Worshipful Master for the year ensuing, and Bro. Fassanidge was reelected Treasurer of the Lodge. The business ended, the brethren adjourned to a slight repast, and separated at half-past nine.

WELLINGTON LODGE (No. 805).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was holden on Tuesday evening, December 13th, at the Lord Duncan, Broadway, Deptford, Bro. Bailey, P.M. (in consequence of the indisposition of Bro. Wadeson, W.M.), presided; Bro. Ouden, S.W.; and Bro. Bennett (pro tem.) J.W. The Lodge having been opened in due form. Bros. Pearce, Tee, and Smith (the latter a man of colour) were raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, after which Bros. Wilton and Leask were passed to the second degree. The next business was the election of Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, and the votes being unanimous, Bro. Ouden, S.W., was elected to that office; Bro. Hobbs was reelected Treasurer for the ensuing year. On the motion of Bro. Bailey, P.M., it was resolved that a jewel of the value of five guineas be presented to Bro. Wadeson, at the next Lodge, as a testimonial of the respect the brethren entertain towards him for his courteous conduct and his services as Worshipful Master during his year of office. It being intimated by Bro. Prowse, the Hon. Sec., that in consequence of his professional duties at Greenwich Hospital, he was compelled to resign his office as Secretary of the Lodge, on the motion of Bro. Simmons, P.M., it was agreed that a jewel of the value of three guineas should be presented to him on his retirement, with a suitable inscription expressing the feelings of respect entertained towards him by the Lodge. The Lodge was then closed, about forty of the brethren sat down to supper, and the evening was passed in complete harmony and good will.

INSTRUCTION.

ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF THE LODGE OF PROSPERITY. (No. 78).

THE annual festival of this, which may be called par excellence, the Hebrew Lodge of Instruction, held its annual meeting on Thursday, Dec. 8th, at the White Hart Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, Bro. Henry Isaacs, P.M. of No. 247, and Prov. G. Org. for Herts, presiding as W.M.; Bro. Jer. Isaacs, P.M., No. 247, as S.W.; and Bro. A. Sydney, as J.W.; there being also a large attendance of the brethren. The first four sections of the second degree were most ably worked, the questions being put by the W.M., and the replies given by Bros. Sydney, Abrahams, D. Marks, and S. Watts. Several joining members were elected, and the brethren adjourned shortly before eight o'clock from labour to refreshment—a most recherché dinner admirably put upon the table by Bro. Morris, who personally superintended the arrangements for the comfort of the brethren.

On the removal of the cloth,

The W.M. rose to propose the health of her Majesty, which was never more cordially received than amongst Masons. From the earliest period of time their assemblages had been patronised by the most distinguished of sovereigns, and if they had not now a royal head, he believed it was from the accident of sex; but if that accident had prevented her Majesty becoming a Mason, it had not prevented her becoming a liberal patroness of the Masonic charities. He gave then "The Queen and the Craft." (Applause).

The W.M. next proposed the Earl of Zetland, M.W.G.M. of Masons, than whom he felt assured no brother took a greater interest in the prosperity of the Craft, and under whose rule it had flourished beyond all precedent. (Cheers).

The health of Lord Panmure, R.W.D.M., and the rest of the Grand Officers having been drunk—

Bro. M. Hart, Secretary to the Lodge, rose and said that he had to propose a toast which he was sure would be most cordially received, as it was in some measure identified with themselves, "Prosperity to the Prosperity Lodge of Instruction," and if he wanted any apology for proposing it he should find it in the circumstance that he intended to couple with it the name of the brother who presided over them with such ability as to render the Lodge of Instruction a perfect school of Freemasonry, equal, if not superior, to any other. He looked upon Lodges of Instruction as most important, inasmuch as they superinduced a kindness of feeling and made them acquainted with the true principles of Freemasonry in a manner, which, for the nature of circumstances by which they were surrounded, it was impossible to obtain in their mother Lodges. The prosperity of the Lodge he felt to be mainly due to the talent and perseverance of their lecture master who then presided over them, and whose ability as a Mason and courtesy as a brother it would be impossible to surpass. He congratulated them that they were presided over by such a lecture master, by a brother so distinguished for his zeal and ability; and whether it was known by the name of the Prosperity or any other,* he felt assured that so long as Henry Isaacs presided over it it must be one of the most successful of the Order. (Cheers). This Lodge of Instruction had known adversity, but through the talent and zeal of Bro. Isaacs it now enjoyed a state of unrivalled prosperity. The young blood in Masonry could never attain a proper knowledge of the duties of the Craft excepting through Lodges of Instruction, and, feeling deeply as he did the importance of this Lodge, he begged to propose "Prosperity to the Prosperity Lodge of Instruction and Bro. Henry Isaacs their lecture master. (Loud cheers).

Bro. Isaacs said that they might easily imagine the difficulty he must experience in having his name coupled with a toast of so much importance—a toast which it would require the eloquence of a Cicero properly to acknowledge. That toast embraced a theme which the most eloquent poet, the most sage philosopher, or learned historian, might be excused for not venturing to approach, it having the impress of kingly and godlike wisdom—King Solomon having told them to "take fast hold of instruction; let her not go; keep her, for she is thy life." It might be urged that the instruction to which Solomon alluded was not such as that which they offered, but he maintained that it was very similar, as it taught them their duty to their God, made them good men, just neighbours, and useful citizens. (Cheers). No man could be a good Mason who was not a faithful servant of God; and that was what they taught in their Lodges. Lodges of Instruction were most necessary, as in the present day the men most eminent in science—the men most distinguished by their literary abilities—the deepest of historians, and the sagest of philosophers were all to be found in their ranks; and, like the Olympians, they were bound to exert themselves to compete honourably with them by whom they were surrounded. (Cheers). He felt bound to acknowledge most gratefully the support he had ever received from the brethren, and assured them that nothing gave him greater pleasure than in devoting one evening of the week to promote the best interests of the Lodge of Prosperity. (Cheers).

The W.M. next gave "The Visitors," to each of whom he paid some well timed compliments, and associated with it the name of Bro. Alex. Levy, P.M. of the Lodge of Tranquillity, his dear friend "Alex," whose name commanded the respect of all men, and who was either on the committee, or had been on the committee, of every philanthropic institution connected with the interests of the Hebrew people, and whose charity, regardless of sect, knew no bounds but those of prudence. (Cheers).

Bro. Alex. Levy returned thanks, and assured the brethren, that from his earliest entrance into Masonry he had been much struck with the principles inculcated, and endeavoured to carry them out in the utmost of their integrity. He could take no credit to himself for anything he had done to aid the cause of charity, as it having pleased the Great Architect of the universe to make him one of His stewards, all he had endeavoured to do was to perform his duty, and endeavour to assist in promoting the greatest possible happiness amongst his fellow men. (Cheers).

The W.M. next gave prosperity to the Masonic press, coupling it with the name of Bro. Warren, and especially thanking him for the great support he had given to the Masonic charities.

Bro. Henry G. Warren having briefly acknowledged the compliment, The W.M. rose to propose the health of their indefatigable Secretary, Bro. Morris Hart, who had been the head and right hand of the Lodge. (Cheers). In the time of its adversity—at a time when in consequence of the illness of his late revered father, he (Bro. Isaacs) was unable to attend the Lodge, Bro. Hart had steadily persevered to promote its interests, and had never objected to pay from his own pocket any necessary expenses to keep the Lodge together. Such a brother deserved their warmest gratitude, and he was sure they would enthusiastically respond to the toast which he now proposed. (Cheers).

Bro. Hart replied, thanking the brethren for the compliment and assuring them that he had always felt the utmost confidence in the ultimate prosperity of the Lodge. If it temporarily declined it was only in consequence of the unavoidable absence for a time of their lecture master, Bro. Isaacs, who no sooner returned that it regained its wonted lustre. (Cheers).

Bro. Joseph Jackson next proposed "The health of Bro. Saul Moss, the assistant lecture master," who, though but a young Mason, had conferred great benefits on the Lodge.

Bro. Moss, S.D. of the Lodge of Tranquillity, acknowledged the toast, and returned thanks, not only for the compliment thus paid him, but also to a young Mason the more pleasing one of having been deemed worthy to be elected an honorary member of so distinguished a Lodge of Instruction. He felt that Masonry did much to improve the mind of man, and, by bringing him into closer communion with his fellow man, to smooth down any ruggedness in his behaviour or demeanour, and thereby render him a better member of society. He should always have great pleasure in serving the Lodge to the utmost of his ability, and whatever the name by which it was known, he trusted it was destined to enjoy a long lease of prosperity. (Cheers).

One or two other toasts having been given, the brethren separated, the harmony of the evening having been much enhanced by the excellent singing of Bros. Isaacs, Levy, Davis, Johnson, and many others.

PERY LODGE (No. 234).—A meeting of this Lodge was held on Saturday evening, Dec. 10th, at the Masonic Hall, Fetter-lane, Bro. J. R. Warren, P.M., No. 1022, and S.W., No. 234, presided; Bro. H. Thompson, No. 206, S.W.; and Bro. Farmer, W.M., No. 165, J.W. The business of the evening was the working of the fifteen sections, which were worked by the following brethren:—First lecture—first section, Bro. Gilchrist; second, Bro. H. Thompson; third, Bro. Stewart; fourth, Bro. McNelly; fifth, Bro. Anslow; sixth, Bro. Thomas; and seventh, Bro. W. Warren. Second lecture—first section, Bro. Gilchrist; second, Bro. McNelly; third, Bro. Stewart; fourth, Anslow; fifth, Bro. Thomas. Third lecture—first section, Bro. H. Thompson; second, Bro. Thomas; and third, Bro. Anslow. Bro. Newman, P.M. of the John D. Wellard Lodge, No. 250, New York, United States, was admitted a member of this Lodge, and he afterwards gave the brethren an illustration of certain signs used in the United States, enforcing the necessity of a knowledge of their being obtained, and alluded to the fact that on his voyage, in consequence of it, relief was given to an almost sinking vessel, the master, mate, and twelve of the crew being saved, mainly from his Masonic knowledge, being the only one on board his vessel who understood those signals made from the foundering ship. A vote of thanks was ordered to be recorded to the W.M. for presiding, and the Lodge adjourned.

ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF THE EMULATION LODGE.

The anniversary festival of the Emulation Lodge of Improvement, holding under the Lodge of Unions, No. 318, was celebrated on Friday, December 9th. The Lodge was opened in the Masonic Temple, at seven o'clock, Bro. S. B. Wilson, P.G.D., presiding, supported by a large number of distinguished brethren, including Bros. Savage, S.G.D.; Slight, J.G.D.; Clarke, G. Sec.; Havers, P.G.D.; W. P. Scott, P.G.D.; T. R. White, P.G.D.; Hopwood, P.G.D.; Le Veau, P.G.S.B.; Farnfield, Asst. G. Sec.; C. Isaacs, Prov. G. Sec. for Kent; and nearly two hundred others. Bro. Wilson, as W.M., then proceeded to perform the ceremony of consecrating the Lodge, the petition and warrant being read by the Grand Secretary, and the customary oration most admirably delivered by Bro. Fenn, who acted as Grand Chaplain. Bro. Horsley, G. Org., presided at the harmonium, and was assisted by Bro. Donald King and other vocalists in the choral portion of the ceremony. At the conclusion of the consecration, Bro. Wilson proceeded to perform the ceremony of installation, and inducted Bro. Savage, S.G.D., into the chair, when he proceeded to appoint the various officers, and address them on their respective duties. The Lodge was then closed.

Shortly after nine o'clock, the brethren reassembled to the number of nearly one hundred and eighty in the Grand Hall, to partake of supper, which had been amply provided, Bro. Savage, S.G.D., presiding.

On the withdrawal of the cloth, "The pious memory of Bro. Peter Gildas," the founder of the Lodge, was drunk in solemn silence.

The Worshipful Master rose to propose the health of their much beloved sovereign, the Queen, who enjoyed the veneration and love not only of the Masonic body, but of all her subjects. (Cheers.) She had never given them any reason of regret in her conduct as a sovereign, whilst her admirable example in all the domestic relations of life had most justly endeared her to her people. He gave them "The Queen and the Craft." (Applause).

The Worshipful Master had now to ask them to drink to the health of a nobleman who had presided over the Craft for a period of fifteen years. It was not necessary for him to dilate at any length on the merits of the Grand Master, as they were well known to the majority of those whom he saw around him, especially to those who were in the habit of attending Grand Lodge. It would be most gratifying to the brethren to recognise his lordship's merits without stint, and in a true Masonic spirit. (Applause). He was convinced, from what he knew of the noble lord, that he had the best interests of the Craft at heart, and he always performed the duties of his high office in a truly Masonic spirit and love for the fraternity; and how well his merits and efforts were appreciated was shown by the circumstance of his having been so often re-elected from year to year. (Cheers). He recollected the time when they deemed the loss of their late lamented Grand Master as almost irreparable—and doubtless it was great; but he sometimes felt that if it pleased Providence to deprive them of their present Grand Master, they would sustain even a greater loss, and that it would indeed be most difficult efficiently to supply his place. The Craft had never been in a more prosperous condition than it had assumed under the rule of their noble Grand Master, and he trusted it would long continue to flourish under the mild and benignant government of the M.W. Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland. (Applause).

* We understand that owing to the Lodge of Instruction being almost entirely neglected by the parent Lodge, it is proposed to place it under the warrant of the Lodge of Tranquillity, the members of which are its chief supporters.

The Worshipful Master said that the next toast he had to propose was one which he was assured would meet with a warm and hearty reception, as it embraced the names of many illustrious individuals, who by the manner in which they had discharged the duties of their respective offices commanded the respect and admiration of the brethren. First and foremost he must allude to the R.W. Deputy Grand Master. (Applause). Those who were members of Grand Lodge he thought would agree with him that in Lord Panmure they now possessed the advantage of the services of one who was not only willing but able at all times efficiently to fill the place of the Grand Master, should he be absent. (Cheers). A few evenings since they had the pleasure of seeing him in the Grand Master's chair, and observing how well and with what courtesy he discharged his duties, and preserved the order of debate. He thought it most fortunate for the Craft that they had been enabled to find a nobleman like Lord Panmure, willing to devote his time and talents to their service. He was sure, that since he had been called to his present position, there was no one who had more sincerely the interests of Freemasonry at heart than Lord Panmure. (Cheers). He should connect with the toast he was about to propose with the name of his right hand supporter, Bro. Fredk. Slight, J.G.D.—(cheers)—whom they had only to know to respect, and who he was sure endeavoured most zealously, successfully, and efficiently, to perform the duties which devolved upon him. (Cheers). Of the other Grand Officers he felt it would ill become him to speak individually; but he could truly say that they had generally by their excellent example shown that industry and perseverance led to honour, and had given their valuable time and services most freely to promote the interests of the Order. (Cheers).

Bro. Slight, J.G.D., had great difficulty in returning thanks on behalf of the Deputy Grand Master and the past and present Grand Officers, many of whom he was happy to see present. Bro. Savage had most truly said that Lord Panmure was an excellent Mason, who had the best interests of the Craft at heart. He succeeded to his post under peculiar and difficult circumstances, as following a nobleman who was well and deeply beloved throughout the Craft. He trusted that that nobleman had not left the Craft entirely, though severe illness had deprived them of his services, as no brother was ever more deeply or sincerely beloved by the members of the Order than the Earl of Yarborough. (Applause). In following so beloved a Mason, Lord Panmure had a most difficult task to perform; but he had shown himself fully equal to the task, and had obtained the respect and admiration of every brother. With regard to the other past and present Grand Officers, he would only say that he was sure they endeavoured to perform their duties truly and conscientiously. He could not altogether however follow the example of Bro. Savage, and abstain from alluding to any one of them individually, as there was one of whom he must speak—the esteemed instructor of the Lodge, Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson. (Cheers). He regretted that owing to ill health that brother was not then present; but the brethren had that evening had an opportunity of seeing how excellently and admirably he performed all the duties of the Lodge; and he was sure they would agree with him that when Bro. Wilson was called upon to rank with the Grand Officers, he conferred as great an honour upon that body as was conferred upon him. (Cheers). He felt assured that the past Grand Officers had ever performed their duties honourably and consistently; and the present Grand Officers could not do better than seek to emulate those who had gone before them, and do all in their power to deserve and merit the good opinion of the Craft. (Applause). After a short pause—

Bro. Slight again rose, and said the Worshipful Master having entrusted him with the gavel, he had to ask them to join him in a toast, which he was sure would be generally acceptable—the health of the Worshipful Master (cheers); and with it he would couple success to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement. (Applause). With regard to the Worshipful Master it was difficult to speak of him in his presence as he might desire; but Bro. John Savage was so well known to them all as to render it unnecessary that he should say anything in recommendation of the toast. With regard to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement he held it in high esteem, as to its teachings he was indebted for what little knowledge he had of the ceremonies; and he wished all Masons desirous of advancing in the Craft could attend that Lodge, as he was sure they would derive benefit from the manner in which it was worked and conducted. No one could fully appreciate the beauties of the Craft without they had the opportunity of observing how their master minds worked the ceremonies, and having their lectures properly and efficiently delivered, and the principles of the Order thereby efficiently illustrated, which they would always find in this Lodge. Here he was reminded that in closing the Lodge that evening he had omitted to return their sincere thanks, as he was sure all would desire to do, to Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson, for the very able manner in which he had discharged the duties of the Lodge that evening; and he trusted that there were those present who would convey to that brother that the omission was purely accidental; and that it was acknowledged with regret after the close of the Lodge. (Applause). He trusted that the Lodge would long continue to flourish as one of the best, if not the best, Lodge of Instruction in the metropolis; and that they would join with him in cordially drinking to the health of Bro. Savage, S.G.D. of England, and prosperity to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement. (Cheers).

Bro. Savage, S.G.D., said—Most cordially do I thank you for the reception which you have given the toast of my name, on the proposition of my friend and brother officer, Bro. Slight, and assure you my attachment to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement is undiminished, and I look back with the most pleasing recollection to my past connection with it, for I am under a deep debt of gratitude to it. It was here I first learned the rudiments of Freemasonry, and was induced to undertake the duty of making myself proficient in the mysteries of the Order. I was so gratified, twenty-four years ago, when I saw our esteemed friend, Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson, as we saw him to-night, most ably superintending the work of the Lodge, and the other officers of the Lodge performing their duty (at that time each officer was called on to work his section)—and when I saw my old and esteemed friend, Bro. Pike, go through the ceremony of raising, I was so struck with the working of the Lodge that I said to myself, "Why cannot I, too, become a working Mason?" From that, and from the kind assistance of Bro. Wilson, I learned a little of the working of Freemasonry, and was able, after a few years, to give instruction to others in my turn. Therefore it is that I say I am under a deep debt to this Lodge, and I never think of it except with the kindest feelings, for it was there I found the most pleasant and most gratifying way of spending many a Friday evening. I am delighted to see that it is so well supported, and that there are so many here animated with a warm feeling in its prosperity. I am gratified for the support you render it, and also for the support you have afforded me in the chair this evening. I receive it as a compliment to myself, for I know, that in the warmth of your feeling you here welcome me, although for some time past an absentee, and ask me to preside over you. Most sincerely do I thank you, and hope I have done nothing to forfeit your confidence. All I can say is, that if Grand Lodge have changed the colour of my apron, I have not cooled in the warmth of my heart, or in my love for Freemasonry—(hear, hear)—and I am ready to join in every way to promote the prosperity of the Lodge. If I have been promoted to high office in the Craft, I neither feel myself unduly exalted, nor forget myself, but remain firm in feelings of attachment to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement and Freemasonry in general. Bro. Savage then observed, that the next toast he had to propose, might be considered the toast of the evening, as it embraced the name of that old and distinguished brother to whom allusion had been so often made in the course of the evening. When he (Bro. Savage) gave the toast of the Grand Officers, he had omitted to mention Bro. Wilson's name, as he knew that he would have a better opportunity of passing a just tribute to his merits, when he came to ask them to drink the health of the managing committee of the Lodge. They had already heard from Bro. Slight an expression of the feeling with which he regarded Bro. Wilson, and which he (Bro. Savage) would not repeat, because it had been so well and so ably put by Bro. Slight himself, and he felt that to do great an extent did Bro. Wilson enjoy their respect and esteem, nothing he could say could induce them to entertain a higher opinion of his character than that which they had formed on their own acquaintance with the man. Too much could not be said of him in his praise, for on him had descended the mantle of their late brother Peter Gilkes. He knew of Bro. Wilson's services for more than twenty years, during which, he had continued, as it was hoped for a longer number of years he would continue to be, the head of the Lodge, and they had that night in listening to him as he went through the ceremonies of installation and inauguration, an opportunity of obtaining a large amount of Masonic knowledge. He had to regret that the state of his health did not permit the worthy brother to remain with them throughout the evening, but still there were present three other members of the committee of management, namely, Bros. Barrett, Stephen Barton Wilson, jun., the worthy son of a worthy father, and Bro. Artus, the excellent Secretary of the Lodge. He would therefore ask them to be upstanding, and drink the toast of the Managing Committee.

Bro. Barrett, in replying to the toast, also regretted that Bro. Wilson's health had not permitted his remaining with them to the close of the evening, but the fact of his attending the Lodge at all or performing the ceremony which he did, entitled him, when all matters were considered, to a larger share of their gratitude. Speaking for the committee of management, he had to observe that their aim was to so conduct the business of the Lodge as to make it the means of bringing about a uniformity of working in the Craft.

Bro. Savage then said that he had now to ask them to drink a toast which he felt the greatest pleasure in proposing. They all knew that there was a sister Lodge of Improvement in the city, and with that Lodge it was at all times a pleasure to the members of the Lodge of Emulation to join in the interchange of courtesy or kindness. They all, in fact, felt interested in its prosperity, and that interest was not diminished now that there was more than a probability that differences of working between the two Lodges would be shortly adjusted. But be that as it might they would always continue bound to it in the purest Masonic regard, and he was happy to see present that night the representative of that Lodge in the person of his esteemed friend Bro. Muggeridge. What Bro. Stephen Barton Wilson was to the Emulation Lodge of Improvement, Bro. Muggeridge was to the Stability Lodge of Instruction. As the mantle of a Peter Gilkes had fallen on the one, so had the mantle of a Peter Thompson and of a Broadfoot fallen on the other, and well did he follow their example now that they had ascended to the Grand Lodge above, for although dead they spoke through him. He (Bro. Savage), when he attended the Lodge of Stability was always gratified and delighted to hear Bro. Muggeridge work, but regretted that there should exist any difference of expression between the ritual he taught and that which was inculcated in the Emulation Lodge. He would ask them then to drink "Prosperity to the Stability Lodge," and couple with the toast the name of their worthy friend Bro. Muggeridge.

Bro. Muggeridge, in returning thanks, stated that he was truly grateful for the many kind things which Bro. Savage had said of him, and he could assure him and the brethren present that he felt obliged to them for giving him an opportunity of witnessing the working of the Lodge; and he was also much gratified to find so numerous and so zealous a meeting of the brethren assembled together to support it. For his own part he could assure them that it was his firm wish and that of many members of the Lodge of Instruction over which he presided that the Emulation Lodge might continue to prosper for many years to come.

Bro. Barrett, in proposing the Masonic charities, regretted that neither Bro. Crew nor Bro. Thiselton were present, but they had among them Bro. Farnfield, who, as Secretary of the other charity of the Order, (the Annuity Fund and Old Man's Asylum), was its fitting representative there, and who did everything in his power to promote its prosperity; and he (Bro. Barrett) trusted that ere long it would receive that amount of support from the brethren that it would cease to be a disgrace to the Craft.

Bro. Farnfield briefly returned thanks, advocating increased support not only to the charity of which he is the Secretary, but also to the Girls School and to the Institution for Boys. They were about to have a festival on behalf of the Croydon Asylum, and he was happy to say that he had already obtained the names of forty-seven brethren who were willing to act as Stewards.

The Tyler's toast was then drunk, and the proceedings terminated.

PROVINCIAL.

BERKSHIRE.

MAIDENHEAD.—St. John's Lodge (No. 1097).—This Lodge was regularly held on Monday last, when Bros. Williams, Boyer, Hodges, Merritt, Skindle, and Greenhalf, were examined in the first degree, and having exhibited progress in the science, were promoted to the degree of Fellow Craft. Mr. Robert Arthur Ward, Mr. Henry Hodson Durrant, and Mr. Frederick Henry Cooper, of Maidenhead, were severally balloted for, and unanimously approved as candidates; the two former being present, were duly initiated into the mysteries of the Craft. The ceremonies were performed with the W.M.'s (Bro. Cossens) usual perfect and impressive manner. The correspondence with the Grand Secretary, relative to spurious Lodges at Stratford, in Essex, and other places, was read in open Lodge, and the brethren duly cautioned. Several joining members and initiates were proposed for the next meeting. The new pedestals, with the new jewels, lately furnished by Bro. Platt, and the platforms, prepared by Bro. Nichols, were uncovered, and met with the decided approbation of the brethren. An improvement in the W.M.'s pedestal, was the omission of the Past Dep. G.M.'s emblem, and the substitution of the W.M.'s emblem. Each pedestal forms a repository, and the W.M.'s is provided with slides in the capital, to rest the working tools on. The W.M. appointed and duly invested the following officers:—Bro. R. Nichols, S.D.; H. H. Hodges, J.D.; G. Boyer, I.G.; T. Greenhalf, Tyler. Bro. R. A. Ward was duly elected Treasurer, and invested with the insignia of his office. The brethren partook of refreshment, and separated in due season. We understand it is the W.M.'s intention to deliver lectures on the Craft, and to institute a Lodge of Instruction, to enable the junior brethren to progress in their studies.

NEWBURY.—Loyal Berkshire Lodge of Hope (No. 839).—At the regular meeting of this Lodge, on the 2nd inst., Bro. W. H. Cave was re-elected as the W.M. for the ensuing year. Bro. Marr, S.W., proposed that the thanks of this Lodge be offered to the Secretary, Bro. E. S. Cossens, for the zeal he had exercised on behalf of the widow of a deceased brother of the Lodge, for whom he had obtained a grant from the Fund of Benevolence although the time for making such application had been exceeded. The voting was unanimous, but the motion was ultimately withdrawn until there was a larger attendance of the brethren, in order to give them the opportunity of participating in the proposed expression of approbation. The annual meeting in January is expected to be numerously attended.

BRISTOL.

BRISTOL.—Moirs Lodge (No. 408).—At the meeting of the Lodge, holden on Wednesday, the 7th instant, Bro. Thomas Bell (engineer of the city waterworks), was installed as Worshipful Master. At the conclusion of the ceremony, the very objectionable practice was resorted to of introducing refreshments into the Lodge during the period devoted to labour; a practice which would certainly be more honoured in the breach than in the observance, and which has many strenuous opponents in Bristol. In the course of the proceedings some very strong remarks (amounting almost to abuse) were made with regard to the Freemasons' Magazine and its correspondent in that city; but as neither the integrity nor the veracity of this journal were impugned, it is not worth while further to notice the adverse criticism of some brethren, who perhaps spoke with greater warmth than they would have done under other circumstances.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

CAMBRIDGE.—Scientific Lodge (No. 105).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday last, and was attended by a very large muster of brethren. Bros. Evans and Bendyshe (Fellows of King's College) and Bro. Ransom were raised to the third, and Bro. the Rev. C. S. Drake, M.A. (Fellow of Jesus College), and Bro. Davenport (Trinity College), passed to the second degree. A ballot was taken for the following candidates, who, on being unanimously elected, were initiated into the mysteries of the Order, viz.—the Duke of St. Albans, Mr. C. Newton, Mr. J. W. Hawksworth, Mr. E. A. Hambro, Mr. W. Speer, Mr. W. Coope (all of Trinity College), and Mr. J. A. Willis of King's College. The various degrees were most ably performed by the W.M. Bro. Westmorland, M.A. (Fellow of Jesus College). The brethren then proceeded to the election of a Master for the ensuing year; and their unanimous choice falling on the present W.M., he was declared duly elected. Eight gentlemen, members of the University, were then proposed for next meeting. Business being concluded, the Lodge adjourned to refreshment, and the proceedings brought to a close. We should mention that a dispensation was read to the Lodge assembled, to enable them to initiate more than five brethren in one evening, from Bro. the Rev. A. R. Ward, M.A., Grand Chaplain of England, the D. Prov. G.M. of the province.

CAMBRIDGE.—Lodge of the Three Grand Principles (No. 645).—The members of the above Lodge assembled at their Lodge room, at the Lion Hotel, on Monday, the 5th instant. Bro. King (Trinity College) was passed to the second degree, and Messrs. Vail and Bell having been elected, were initiated into Masonry. The ceremonies were most correctly and efficiently performed by the W.M., Bro. J. Deighton, (Pro. S.G.W.). Bro. the Rev. A. R. Ward, Grand Chaplain, gave notice that at the next meeting he should propose that a member of the Lodge be appointed to serve as one of the "Provincial Committee for the Masonic Charities." The brethren then proceeded to elect one of their body to fill the chair of King Solomon for the year ensuing, and their choice fell on the present W.M. Bro. Deighton has done much towards raising this Lodge to its present state of efficiency, and the compliment paid him by the brethren is well deserved; the Master's chair could not be in better hands. After labour came refreshment, and the evening was spent in brotherly love and harmony. We cannot conclude our report of the meetings of the above Lodges without congratulating the brethren of the province on the most satisfactory state of Masonry among them, and on the evident signs that there are of those taking an interest in it who may, perhaps, hereafter be called on to fill the highest offices in church and state.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

STROUD.—Sherborne Lodge (No. 1,004).—The annual meeting of this Lodge was holden at the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday, the 6th inst. Bro. Henry R. Luckes, A.M., having opened the Lodge at three o'clock precisely, the minutes were read and confirmed, when the Worshipful Master initiated Bro. Wilberforce Heclas into the mysteries of the Order, in a most impressive and clear manner, eliciting the warm approbation of the numerous P.Ms. present; after which ceremony the gavel was entrusted to Bro. G. F. Newmarch, D. Prov. G.M., and P.M. of the Sherborne Lodge, who proceeded with the beautiful ceremony of installation. Those who have seen this exceedingly clever Mason work will not be surprised to hear that it was performed with the most exact accuracy and to the letter, affording a rich Masonic treat to the visitors from other provinces. After the business of the Lodge the brethren dined together, at six o'clock. The cloth having been removed, Bro. Jos. Gainer gave in a neat and terse manner the following toasts:—"The Queen and the Craft," "The Earl of Zetland, G.M.," "Lord Panmure, D.G.M.," "Hon. Jas. Dutton, Prov. G.M." Bro. Luckes then proposed the health of Bro. Newmarch, D. Prov. G.M. of the province, remarking that one of the most pleasing duties which it had ever been his privilege to perform had fallen to his lot that day; it presented the anomaly of being both difficult and easy. It was easy when he proposed the health of Bro. Newmarch (cheers) for them to appreciate the many reasons why it should be drunk with the utmost Masonic enthusiasm (cheers); but it was difficult for him to find words that should adequately convey to Bro. Newmarch the high esteem in which he and the members of the Sherborne Lodge held him. Freemasonry under the auspices of the Hon. James Dutton had thriven in the province most extraordinarily, but he was sure the Prov. G.M. would say, and had said, that he owed a great deal of this success to Bro. Newmarch, his very able Deputy. The time was when the light of Masonry was well nigh extinguished; but Bro. Newmarch had fanned the expiring embers into a flame which extended now a brilliant and steady light. Within three years two new Lodges had been opened—the Sherborne their own Lodge, and the St. John's, at Dursley—whilst the Berkeley Lodge, which had not met for years, now met constantly, and the good work of Masonry was making rapid progress, not only there but throughout the province. The far larger number of the members of the Sherborne Lodge had been initiated into Masonry by Bro. Newmarch; and they that day had met to commemorate the event by presenting Bro. Newmarch with a handsome loving cup; and although they had engraven his name thereon, Bro. Luckes assured the D. Prov. G.M. that his name was inscribed on all their hearts, and enshrined amidst a crowd of the happiest associations of the many Masonic gatherings at which they had derived so much pleasure and instruction from him. (Cheering). Bro. Newmarch on rising was much affected. He said he could not find words to express the extent of his feeling on that occasion. He had taken the chair as first Master of the Lodge because he felt it his duty, and that he deserved no praise for that. (No, no). He had also derived a large amount of pleasure during his tenure of office because he had met on all sides so much kindness and cordial support. He felt a high and great respect for every member of the Lodge; but they would excuse him, he was sure, if he alluded especially to Bros. Luckes, Gainer and Smith, who had founded the Lodge; and he was certain the last named two brothers would further excuse him if he referred more particularly to Bro. Luckes, who by his Masonic zeal and ability, combined with his cordiality of manner and disposition, had rendered such essential services to the Sherborne Lodge. Although they had kindly presented him with that handsome testimonial, which he should ever prize and value, yet he believed the Lodge were still more indebted to Bro. Luckes than to himself; and not only the Lodge but the province. The time and attention he had given to promoting the interests of the charities would, he had no doubt, lead to a great result next year; and he would therefore ask them to well charge, and drink his very good health as a Past Master of the Lodge. Bro. Luckes, in replying, said that the pleasure and gain was all on his side; he was not only happy to perform his Masonic duties, but he had so much regard for Masonry, and valued it so highly, that anything he could he would do. He much regretted that they did not meet at Gloucester; it only wanted this to make the Masonic circle complete. He saw a brother who could give them every information, and he would ask Bro. Page to do so; he was happy to lend any aid to the Lodge he could in carrying out its business. Before he sat down he must say a few words for the charities; he was, they were aware, their Honorary Treasurer, and he had also accepted a similar office for the province of Herefordshire, and he hoped it would result in the mutual advantage of both provinces. They were aware that at the last Provincial Grand Lodge meeting at Berkeley, the Grand Lodge had resolved to double their subscriptions. He had also other large promises of support, and had resolved, if he could, to send sixty pounds to the charities next year, and he then desired to give every brother notice that at the commencement of the year (D.V.) he should make application to them for support, and hoped they would not deny it, but contribute liberally. Bro. Newmarch proposed "The health of Bro. Gainer, the W.M." He was sure the Lodge had made the best possible selection; Bro. Gainer came forward most liberally both with his time and means at the formation of the Lodge, and he had always displayed a large amount of Masonic zeal and ability; he had no doubt during his year of office the Lodge would maintain the high position of being second to none in the province. Bro. Gainer, W.M., said that he felt the high honour they had done him in electing him to the important office of W.M., on whom depended the success and prosperity of the Lodge. He felt his was a position of peculiar difficulty; their first W.M., the much respected Bro. Newmarch, was so proverbially distinguished as a most clever Mason, that he could not hope to follow him but at a very humble distance, and Bro. Luckes, the immediate P.M., had taken up the cause with so much earnestness and zeal, and they had seen with what ability he had worked that day, that although he would use his utmost endeavour, he felt he should not overtake him; but he would do his best, so that if the Lodge did not prosper under his administration it should not be for the want of the most exacting attention and diligence on his part. (Cheers). Bro. Gainer then proposed "The Visitors," which was received with that enthusiasm which the brethren of the Sherborne always extend to those brethren who visit them from other provinces. This was replied to in behalf of the visitors by Bro. Slead, P.M. of different Lodges, and Prov. G.S.B., in a humorous and pleasing speech; and with that distinguishing frankness which makes Bro. Slead so much respected by the brethren who have the pleasure of his acquaintance and friendship. "The health of the Treasurer, Bro. W. Playne," was also proposed and replied to briefly and amusingly by him. Bro. Page then gave some interesting information as to the position of Masonic matters in Gloucester, and we may now expect that ere another year elapses that Lodge will also be resuscitated. The proceedings of the day terminated at nine o'clock, and too much praise cannot be given to Bro. Ellis for the excellent arrangement of the banquet, which was served with his usual liberality.

HAMPSHIRE.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Royal Gloster Lodge (No. 152).—A very numerous meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 8th inst., at Freemasons' Hall, Bagle-street. The W.M., Bro. F. Perkins, having invited the R.W. Prov. G.M., Sir Lucius Curtis, Bart., and the Provincial Grand Officers to a banquet, the R.W. brother, supported by the D. Prov. G.M., Bro. C. E. Deacon, and the whole of his officers, arrived at an early hour, and were received by the Lodge with full Masonic honours.

A candidate for initiation was balloted for and elected. Bro. T. P. Payne was then chosen unanimously to serve the office of Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. Bro. H. Abraham, P.M., was reelected to the office of Treas., and the serving brethren were also reelected. Bro. H. Abraham, in a very eloquent speech, moved a resolution expressive of the pleasure it gave the brethren to again receive a visit from the R.W. Prov. G.M., supported as he was on this occasion by so many of his provincial officers, congratulating him on his renewed health, and expressing a wish that the G.A.O.T.U. might grant him many years of health and strength to continue those exertions which so effectually promoted the interests of the Craft, and from which he, as Prov. G.M., always appeared to derive such high gratification. His motion was seconded by Bro. T. P. Payne, W.M. elect, and carried by the Lodge in a most enthusiastic manner. The R.W. Prov. G.M., in reply, said that as an old member of the Lodge he felt the greatest pleasure in being again among them. There was not a Lodge in the province which received him with more honour and genuine Masonic feeling. He often had the gratification of seeing Bro. Perkins, the W.M., discharge the duties of his office, and he could say that he was always so ready and correct, that he regretted he was not able to experience the pleasure of seeing him work his Lodge much more often than he did. The Worshipful Master must attribute that absence to the onerousness of his duties elsewhere; and after complimenting his R.W.D., and other members of the Lodge at considerable length, he resumed his seat amidst the acclamation of the brethren. The Lodge was then closed, and about sixty brethren sat down to the banquet, the Worshipful Master presiding, supported by the R.W. Prov. G.M.; Bros. C. E. Deacon, D. Prov. G.M.; Ford, Prov. J.G.W.; a long array of other Prov. Grand Officers, and Bros. Payne, Fletcher, G. W. Clarke, with a large attendance of visiting brethren. The cloth having been removed, and grace said by Bro. the Rev. G. Bradshaw, the usual Masonic toasts were proposed, and in giving the health of the Prov. G.M. and his officers, Bro. Perkins, W.M., alluded to the pleasure he felt in entertaining them once more before he left the chair, in which he had spent two most pleasant years of office. The venerable Prov. G.M. responded in equally pleasing terms, and concluded by proposing the health of the Worshipful Master, complimenting him very highly upon the manner in which he had discharged the duties of his office, the prosperity of the Lodge, and expressing his belief that nothing would disturb the harmony which prevailed so long as the brethren were true to the old landmarks of the Order, and were governed by those who took a proper interest in the progress of the Craft. Bro. Perkins, W.M., thanked the Prov. G.M. for the very kind manner he had alluded to him. He had many things to thank that R.W. brother for—his presence there that evening, supported as he was by his officers, the honour he had conferred upon him by making him S.G.W. of the province, the interest he always took in the career of the Royal Gloster Lodge—these were all matters which he was unable sufficiently to make any return for, except by showing his devotion to Masonry. Bro. C. E. Deacon, D. Prov. G.M., proposed the health of Bro. T. P. Payne, who had that evening been unanimously elected to the office of Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. He said that nothing could give him more pleasure than that event. Bro. Payne had shown by his conduct that the precepts and principles of Freemasonry were imprinted on his mind and his heart. He was a most deserving brother, and would discharge the duties of his office so as to maintain that brotherly love and harmony which now prevailed throughout the province, as well as in that Lodge. He called upon the P.M. to give him all the support they could; he promised to do so himself. By such means they would be rendering the coming year of office most pleasant to Bro. Payne, and most serviceable to the Lodge. The Worshipful Master elect returned his sincere and heartfelt thanks not only for the kind manner in which his health had been drunk but for the honour they had conferred on him that evening, there was nothing he esteemed so highly as the good opinion of his brother Masons. He could assure them that he should not enter upon the duties of office in a light or careless spirit, for he felt it was a high and honourable position to be placed in, and one of great responsibility. When he looked back at the past seven years in the history of that Lodge and called to mind the individuals who had filled the chair, the conviction was forced upon him that no Lodge in the Province of Hampshire, and he had almost said throughout the United Kingdom, had been favoured with more worthy and efficient Masters than the Royal Gloucester, first there was Bro. Douglas, who first introduced him to the light of Masonry, and as a P.M., was still rendering the most invaluable services to Masonry; and with many other happy allusions to the talent of P.M. Abraham and the present W.M., he said it was a happy day when the choice of the brethren fell upon Bro. F. Perkins, because he not only was an able occupant of the chair, but his Masonic and social virtues had come so prominently before them in that capacity that he had the hearts and affections of all the brethren; with his assistance, and with that of the other P.M.s, he would endeavour to discharge the duties of his year of office so that the brethren might say, when he left the chair that their interests had not suffered in his hands. Bro. Ford, P.M., of the Phoenix Lodge in replying to a toast, with which his name was coupled, alluded to the W.M. having been chosen mayor of Southampton, and could assure him that he would find, as he Bro. Ford had while filling the civic chair in Portsmouth, that his Masonic knowledge and position would be of material service to him even without the walk of a Mason's Lodge, and in a speech of considerable length and fluency, referred to the influence of Masonry being advantageous to men in every phase of life. The proceedings were protracted to a late hour in consequence of the number of toasts and the length of the speeches. Bro. Klitz, Prov. G. Organist, presided at the piano, and several of the members contributed to the music of the evening.

KENT.

ASHFORD.—Invicta Lodge (No. 1011).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was holden on Wednesday, the 7th instant, Bro. Thorpe, W.M., in the chair, supported by all his officers. Bro. F. R. Hartley, Robert Burns Lodge, No. 26, was present as a visitor. Mr. F. C. Hallows, of Tunbridge, was impressively initiated in the mysteries of Freemasonry by the W.M.; Bro. B. K. Thorpe, J.W., giving the charge, and Bro. J. S. Eates, S.W., a very ample illustration of the tracing board of the first degree. It was unanimously resolved that in future the Lodge should be held in the Assembly Rooms, a change very desirable, not only because the rooms are more commodious, but also removing the Invicta Lodge from the list of those meeting in taverns. It was also resolved that the Lodge should meet on the first Friday in the month, instead of the first Wednesday, to enable the brethren occasionally to attend Grand Lodge. Two gentlemen were proposed as candidates.

LANCASHIRE (EAST).

BURY.—Lodge of Relief (No. 50).—On Thursday evening, the 8th instant, the monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the Hare and Hounds Inn, Bro. E. Barlow, W.M., and (both the Wardens being confined to their beds by illness) Bro. Thomas Fishwick, P.M., officiated as S.W., and Bro. George M. Tweddell as J.W. The Lodge being opened to the second degree, Bro. Richard Grimshaw was passed to the degree of F.C., the ceremony being performed by Bro. Binns, P.M.; after which, the Lodge being closed to the third degree, Bro. John Parkes, M.R.C.S., was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing twelve months. On the motion of Bro. Binns, seconded by Bro. Tweddell, the sum of £5 5s. was unanimously voted to the Provincial Benevolent Fund, which, with the sum of £10 10s. given by the brethren two years ago, will entitle the Lodge to eight votes in connection with that charity during the existence of the Lodge. The brethren all seemed highly delighted that their worthy old Tyler, Bro. Cooper, had just been relieved with the sum of £15, granted him at the last quarterly meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge, held at Middleton, on the 2nd instant. The Lodge being duly closed, the meeting was declared adjourned until the 27th instant, when the officers for 1860 will be installed, and the Feast of St. John the Evangelist will be celebrated.

BURY.—St. John's Lodge (No. 226).—On Wednesday, the 7th inst., the monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the White Horse Inn, when Bro. Benson was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, the ceremony being performed by Bro. John Redfern, P.M. of No. 50.

HEYWOOD.—Lodge of Naphtali (No. 333).—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the Brunswick Hotel, on Wednesday evening, the 7th inst., when Mr. Thomas Wolstenholme was initiated into Freemasonry, the ceremony being performed by Bro. Binns, P.M. of No. 50, assisted, as Deacon, by Bro. Kenyon, P.M. of the same Lodge. It being the evening for choosing the Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, Bro. Taylor, W.M., was elected to that office.

LEICESTERSHIRE.

ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH.—Ferrers and Ivanhoe Lodge (No. 1081).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge took place at the Town Hall, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, on Monday, December 12th 1859; present Bro. Bowley, P.M., of No. 907 as W.M.; Richard Warner, S.W.; T. H. Bobart, J. W.; J. Denton, Chaplain; Henry T. Bobart, Sec.; J. Redfern, S. D.; W. Mason, J. D.; W. Bithrey as I. G.; W. Canner, Tyler; Bros. G. F. Brown, F. Hamp, W. Woodward, John Upton of No. 907. The Lodge was opened in the first degree. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Bro. Woodward was examined in the questions appertaining to the first degree, which he answered to the satisfaction of the brethren present. The Lodge was opened in the second degree. Bros. Brown and Hamp, were examined to the satisfaction of the brethren present. The Lodge was opened in the third degree. Bros. Brown and Hamp were raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason. The Lodge was resumed to the second degree, Bro. Woodward was passed to the second degree. The Lodge was closed in the second degree. Bro. Henry T. Bobart, read to the Brethren present the notice that appeared in the Freemasons Magazine of the 3rd inst. page 436, respecting the Lodge by-laws. The Lodge was then closed, and adjourned to the Monday after the next full moon.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

PETERBOROUGH.—St. Peter's Lodge (No. 646).—The brethren assembled at their Lodge room, on Thursday, the 1st inst. The Lodge was opened in the first degree, when the minutes of the previous Lodge were read and confirmed. Mr. Richard Elwin Jones, of London, was then balloted for, and unanimously accepted as a candidate. The Lodge was opened in the second and third degrees, and Bro. W. Wells was raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The Lodge was closed to the first degree, when Mr. R. E. Jones was initiated into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. It was then proposed by Bro. Jas. Ruddle, and seconded by Bro. Waite, that two pounds be subscribed to the Widows' Fund. Bro. Bays proposed, as the Master for the ensuing year, Bro. Henry Porter, M.D., S.W. of the Lodge, who was elected unanimously. Bro. W. Hart was also duly elected Treasurer. A strong desire having been expressed for another Masonic ball this winter, the Prov. Grand Master having given his sanction thereto, a committee was formed of the W.M., the Wardens, and Bro. Buckle, with power to add to their numbers, to make the necessary arrangements for holding the same. It was also ordered that new collars be provided for the officers. The Lodge was then closed, and adjourned until the 27th of Dec. (St. John's day), when the W.M. elect will be installed, and the brethren will celebrate the occasion according to ancient custom.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

CREWKERNE.—It will be remembered that we some time ago noticed an application for a warrant to hold a new Lodge at Crewkerne. This application was refused in consequence of no recommendation from the Prov. Grand Master accompanying the prayer of the petition. Circumstances have since occurred which remove the difficulties previously existing, and we may now safely announce that the brethren who have interested themselves in the matter are in a fair way to see their endeavours crowned with success. The report is that a brother from a neighbouring Lodge, who holds a high provincial appointment, and who is universally respected and beloved, has consented to take the Master's chair. This, in itself, will be a valuable start for the new Lodge, and a guarantee for its respectability. Crewkerne is a small town with plenty of public spirit, and being on the line of the Yeovil and Exeter railway, will shortly be within easy distance of the former place. It is to be hoped that the two Lodges, which may almost be called mother and daughter, will work together and derive that benefit from their intercourse which always accrues from a community of labours and interests.

YEovil.—Lodge of Brotherly Love (No. 412).—The regular monthly meeting was holden at the Three Choughs Hotel, on Wednesday, 7th instant, when several brethren were to have taken the second degree, but accident prevented their attendance. Bro. Cave, P.M., who occupied the chair, then addressed the brethren before proceeding to the election of W.M. for the ensuing year, reminding them of the great importance attaching to a judicious selection, and how much the honour and prosperity of the Lodge were dependent upon the conduct of its Master. The result of the ballot was the election of Bro. Bruttan, S.W., and Prov. G. Reg., and it cannot be doubted that a more worthy brother, or one more capable of filling with dignity the somewhat arduous position of W.M. in this Lodge, could not be found. The stewards were requested to arrange for the celebration of St. John's festival on the next regular Lodge night, (4th January), when the Officers will be appointed and invested, &c., and doubtless the new year will be inaugurated by a proper display of that good fellowship which characterizes the intercourse of the members; moreover it will commence under favourable auspices, the unavoidable absence of the present W.M., during the greater part of the year, having proved a serious difficulty.

SUSSEX.

BRIGHTON.—Royal York Lodge (No. 394).—The members of the Lodge of Instruction, in connection with this Lodge, supped together on Monday evening, November 28th, at Bro. Saunders's, (the Treasurer), the W.M., Bro. Moppett, occupying the chair, supported by his officers, numerous members of the Lodge of Instruction, and several visiting brethren. There is not a doubt that the instruction gained by frequent meetings has tended to ensure good working in Lodge No. 394. The usual toasts were given, and a few hours friendly passed. The funds have enabled the members from time to time to assist the charities and do a little local good. On Tuesday evening, November 29th, the Worshipful Master, officers, and brethren gave a Masonic bespeak to Bro. H. Nye Chart (No. 394), at the theatre, when, we are pleased to add, the fraternity mustered in good numbers, and an excellent house was the result, which Bro. Chart is deservedly entitled to, from the respect generally entertained for him. On Tuesday evening, December 6th, the monthly meeting of the Royal York Lodge was held at the Old Ship Hotel, Bro. Moppett presiding, supported by the whole of his officers, several P.M.s, and visitors. Bro. Willard was raised to the sublime degree of M.M.; Bros. Dyer, Robinson, Muller, and T. Ancock passed to the degree of F.C.; and Mr. Botting initiated into the mysteries of the Craft. The W.M. most ably performed his duties, which were necessarily very laborious. A tribute to the memory of Bro. Bell (many years Secretary of the Lodge), in the shape of a grave head stone, with inscription, and foot stone, was unanimously voted. Three gentlemen were proposed for initiation, and the labours of the evening concluded at a late hour.

MARK MASONRY.

SOUTH WALES.

CARDIFF.—The Mark Master's degree was introduced into South Wales on Monday, the 5th instant, by the opening of a Mark Master Masons Lodge named the Langley Lodge, No. 16 (S.C.), in connection with the Glamorgan Lodge, No. 43, Cardiff. The brethren having assembled at Freemasons' Hall, St. Mary-street, a new and most commodious building which still awaits consecration, the Lodge was opened at seven o'clock, P.M. Bro. R. M. Langley, P.M. and P.Z. No. 43, Prov. J.G.W., read the charter for holding this Lodge, granted by the Grand Chapter of Scotland, and appointing himself R.W.M.; Bro. Thos. Hodge, (P.M. and P.Z. No. 43), S.W., and Bro. I. G. South, (W.M. No. 43), J.W. The Right Worshipful Master expressed his conviction that this was the only legally constituted body which had the authority of granting warrants for holding Mark Master Lodges in this country, and sincerely thanked those brethren who, with himself, had been instrumental in obtaining this charter, for the high compliment they had paid him, personally, by associating his name with the first Lodge in this degree which had been holden in the principality. He also stated that he had called this Lodge simply to ballot for three brethren who, together with himself and Wardens, had been advanced in the Cannynge Lodge, No. 7, Bristol, and also to ballot for and (if accepted) advance three brethren of the St. David's Lodge, Aberdare; and that the ceremony of consecration would be deferred until the increase in their number would admit of the Lodge being more fully officered and numerous attended. Bros. W. J. Gaskell, J.W. No. 43; Alf. Cooper, S.W. No. 43, and E. J. Thomas, Sec. No. 43, were then accepted as joining members, and appointed by the R.W.M. to the offices of Conductor, S.D., and T.K., respectively. A ballot was also taken for Bros. Jas. Gawn, W.M. No. 979; W. Davies, J.W. No. 979, and Thomas, No. 979. The two former brethren being in attendance, were advanced to the degree of Mark Masters, the ceremony being performed in an admirable manner by the R.W.M. with all that fluency of language for which he is remarkable, and which adds so much to the effect of everything he undertakes, whilst, thanks to the highly commendable attention which the Conductor had devoted to the beautiful ritual (and which drew the warmest eulogiums from the R.W.M.), everything worked as smoothly as it was possible to conceive in a Lodge long accustomed to the working of the degree. The Right Worshipful Master appointed Bro. Gawn, Secretary. Bro. Thos. Hodge, S.W., proposed "that a record be placed on the minutes of the Lodge, stating that the same had been named the Langley Lodge in honour of their R.W.M. and as some slight recognition of the very able and efficient services which he had long rendered the cause of Masonry in this province generally, and to the Glamorgan Lodge, No. 43, in particular." The resolution was seconded by Bro. Thomas, and carried by acclamation. Two brethren having been proposed for advancement, the Lodge was closed at nine o'clock, P.M., and the brethren adjourned to the Queen's Hotel, where an excellent supper had been provided by the widow of a Mason. The usual Masonic toasts were then given, including "The health of the R.W.M., Officers, and Brethren of the Cannynge Lodge, No. 7, Bristol," which was very warmly received by the brethren, and in response to which Bro. F. A. Ware, Conductor, No. 7, stated that this was the second Lodge of Mark Master Masons, the opening of which he had the gratification of attending which had emanated from the Cannynge Lodge.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL ENCAMPMENT.

BRISTOL.—We rejoice to announce that the first decisive step towards the establishment of a legitimate Encampment of Knights Templar in this province has at length been taken. Bro. Samuel Bryant, P. Prov. S.G.W., &c., universally acknowledged by the brethren who know him to be one of the most able and intelligent Masons in the province, has held the appointment of Provincial Grand Commander for nearly two years, but, with that spirit of conciliation which characterizes every good Mason, he has hitherto, to the regret of many brethren in the province, refrained from taking any step which might appear hostile to the body holding meetings at Bristol, and designating themselves "The Camp of Baldwyn," which body is now in the last stage of decline. At a meeting of the governors of Freemasons' Hall, held on Monday, the 5th inst., Bro. Bryant proposed "That authority be granted for the holding of an Encampment of Knights Templar, under the authority of the Grand Conclave of England, in that hall." The proposition was seconded by Bro. Thos. Sainsbury, W.M., No. 81, but as we have not the authority of those brethren to report their very able speeches in support of the proposition, we refrain from so doing. The motion was lost, as might be supposed in a body composed with few exceptions of illegitimate Knights, but we trust the Prov. Grand Commander, whose fame is something more than provincial, will not be deterred from immediately taking the requisite measures towards the attainment of so desirable an object as that of putting the Order in this important province upon something like a respectable footing. His progress will be watched with intense interest by brethren not only here but in the adjoining provinces, particularly in South Wales, where very many are awaiting the opportunity of entering into this degree under a legitimate authority, and with some chance of being recognized in that capacity otherwise than by a small party fast falling into oblivion.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

TRIENNIAL MASONIC BALL AT BRADFORD.

This ball was held on the 25th ultimo, in the large rooms of the Exchange Buildings, under most distinguished patronage, and under the direction of a committee selected from the two Lodges No. 379 and No. 874. The public were admitted, to a limited extent, by written application. Some days before the ball took place the whole of the tickets were disposed of, and the committee were obliged somewhat to increase the number, the applications being so pressing, and this being justly regarded as the most brilliant assemblage of the season. The Freemasons mustered in strong force, in full Masonic costume, with a fair sprinkling of Knights Templars, while some of the brethren and visitors, members of the Volunteer Rifles, appeared in their uniform; this, added to the gay display of the costumes of the fair sex, gave a l'air de fête of the most dazzling character. The dancing commenced shortly after eight o'clock, and was kept up with unabated spirit till eleven, when about half the company sat down to a most sumptuous supper in the news room, which, together with the club rooms, had been kindly vacated for the occasion by their respective members. The remaining half of the visitors afterwards retired in their turn to the supper room, the band during the whole of the time having engaged those remaining with extra dances. It was past three o'clock before the National Anthem announced that dancing was concluded. Mr. Spencer's quadrille band from Leeds gave the highest satisfaction, while the supper under the management of Mrs. Bell, of the Talbot Hotel, was excellent. Bro. Dr. Taylor, W.M., of No. 379, and Bro. J. Ahrens, W.M., of No. 874, presided over the respective supper tables, at which the usual loyal and complimentary toasts were given, the toast of "The Ladies" being proposed by Bro. John Barraclough, P.M., and Bro. Sichel, and heartily responded to by Bros. Henry Smith, P.M., and Mossman, G. Reg. The decorations and fittings, under the superintendence of Bros. Pratt, P.M., Thomas Hill, and A. Matthews, were the most complete and perfect of their kind. The judicious arrangement of mirrors, together with the various Masonic emblems and banners on the walls of the ball room, added much to the splendour of the scene. The floor had been carefully polished for the occasion. Great credit is due to the committee and stewards for their efficient services; and we may safely say that a more satisfactory meeting, or one better calculated to cement good feeling, and raise public opinion to a due appreciation of the Craft, has never occurred in this district, while calls are long and loud for its annual repetition; the ladies having made a simultaneous appeal, there is little fear of disappointment. The most pleasing part of our duty in recording this happy reunion is the fact that the surplus proceeds are to be devoted to charity, one half to the local Ragged Schools, and the remaining half to the Masonic Girls Schools—the latter of which we are gratified to hear the Province of West Yorkshire intends supporting with its proverbial liberality at the next festival.

Obituary.

BRO. HENRY LEWIS CROHN, GRAND SECRETARY FOR GERMAN CORRESPONDENCE.

WE regret to have to announce the death of this brother, who has long filled the office of Grand Secretary for German Correspondence, which took place at his office in the Corn Exchange, on Monday, the 5th instant. Our late brother joined the Pilgrim Lodge, No. 289, on the 10th November, 1824, from a Lodge at Jamaica, and continued an active member to the close of his life. He joined the Lodge of Felicity, No. 66, on January 19th, 1846, and continued a member until March, 1855. In 1850 he was appointed Grand Secretary for German Correspondence, and as representative of the Grand Lodge of Hamburg to the Grand Lodge of England, in 1850. On the 2nd of January, 1844, Bro. Crohn was exalted in St. John's Chapter, No. 196, and continued a member until the time of his death, having attained the rank of P.Z., and having served the office of Principal Grand Sojourner in the year 1857-8. Bro. Crohn was also an old member of the Mount Carmel Encampment of Knights Templar.

BRO. EDWARD DIXON.

It is our melancholy task to record the lamented death of Bro. Edward Dixon, of Horseley House, Dudley, which took place at his residence, No. 37, Curzon-street, Mayfair, London, on Tuesday, the 29th November, in the fiftieth year of his age. Bro. Dixon was the last male descendant of a family long connected with the town of Dudley, with whose name probity and honour have been synonymous for many generations. His death has cast a gloom, not only on the Craft in Dudley, of which he was a member, but also on all who knew him; and it is felt by all that the last of a time-honoured name has passed away to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. Bro. Dixon was a member of the Royal Standard Lodge, No. 730, Dudley, (in which he was initiated), and also a Companion of the Royal Arch Chapter attached to that Lodge. He was also a subscribing member of the Noah's Ark Lodge, No. 435, Tipton. His remains were interred in the catacombs of Kensal Green Cemetery, on Tuesday, the 6th December instant.

BRO. THE REV. HENRY HUGHES STILL, M.A.; P. PROV. GRAND REGISTRAR FOR DORSET.

BRO. the Rev. Henry Hughes Still, rector of Cattistock, Dorset, died in London on the ninth of October last. He was initiated in the Apollo Lodge, Oxford; served as steward to the Girls School in 1853, and to the Boys School in 1854; and although only thirty years of age, had risen to some of the highest honours in the Craft. He was a true Mason, a sincere Christian, a sound churchman, an affectionate husband, father, and friend. Possessed of an ample fortune, he bestowed it with no niggard hand on both the church and the Craft. The beautiful parish church of St. Peter and St. Paul, Cattistock, was rebuilt by him wholly at his own expense, a few years since. It is a truly Masonic structure, full of the most interesting and instructive symbols.

Bro. Still's remains were interred at Cattistock on Friday, the 14th of October. The funeral service was read by the Hon. and Revd. W. H. Scott, rector of Maiden Newton. The following clergymen were habited in surplices, hoods, and stoles: Bro. the Rev. John Kingston, curate of the parish; the Rev. S. Lane, rector of Frome Vanchurch; Rev. J. W. Clarke, vicar of Frampton; Rev. Rooke, rector of Rimpliam, the Rev. S. C. Malan, rector of Broadwindsor, and the Rev. C. B. Mount, curate of Netherbury, the two last being brothers-in-law of the deceased. The chief mourners were his young widow; Bro. Captain Charles Still, 3rd Dragoon Guards, brother of the deceased, Colonel Dashwood and Keith Barnes, Esq., his uncles.

As the funeral procession entered the churchyard—which was crowded with the parishioners—not a dry eye was to be seen. Deeply beloved, our young brother has passed to the Grand Lodge above. Were all our brethren like the good man whose bones repose beneath the shadow of the noble church which he erected to the honour of the Great Architect of the Universe, Masonry would indeed flourish and abound.

Bro. Still's costly and gorgeous Masonic clothing, jewels, &c., have been presented by his widow, to Bro. the Rev. J. Kingston, curate of Cattistock, for whose appointment to the vacant living also, the parishioners have unanimously petitioned.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty and her family will remain at Osborne a few days longer, returning to Windsor in the course of next week, for the Christmas holidays. There is no incident whatever to chronicle in the doings of the royal family during the past week. The Queen and her husband are living in the most complete privacy, and the only visitors of the week have been the Prince and the Princess Leiningen.

FOREIGN NEWS.—A Paris telegram of Saturday says the council of state is preparing a project of law for reducing the customs duties. The same telegram states that Marshal Randon had tendered his resignation of the ministry of war. A Paris correspondent informs us that the governments of Rome and Naples have intimated their readiness to attend the Congress, and that it is believed in diplomatic quarters that Count Cavour will be the principal representative of Sardinia. Count Pourtales has been recalled from Paris to Berlin, but it is expected he will return in time for the diplomatic reception on New Year's day. A trial has been going on in France, in which a mother and daughter are charged with the murder of a child of the latter. The details are of a most painful character. A Paris letter says:—"The Lemoine trial is over. The speeches of the procureur imperial, and the counsel for Madame Lemoine, are so imperfectly reported, that I think it useless to trouble you with them. The jury found the mother guilty, and acquitted the daughter. The court sentenced Madame Lemoine to twenty years' hard labour. Public opinion in Paris, where this trial is, I may say, the only topic of conversation, pronounces this sentence arbitrary and unjust. From the evidence I do not think that an English jury would have found the prisoner guilty of concealment of birth, and, considering that there was no proof of the child not having been stillborn when it was destroyed, the sentence appears excessive in severity. The proud bearing of Mme. Lemoine, who refused to submit to the brow beating of the judge, and declined to answer the impure and perfectly unnecessary questions put to her by him, has given rise to a general opinion that the severity of the sentence is to be ascribed to a mean desire of retaliation rather than to any wish to make an example, and to show that the law is no respecter of persons. Anything more discreditable to the administration of justice in France than the manner in which this trial was conducted it would be impossible to conceive."—A telegram dated Elottro (Morocco), Dec. 9, announces that actions had taken place that morning between the Spaniards and Moors, in which the former had gained the advantage, the Moors losing 300 killed and 1000 wounded, and the Spaniards losing only 30 officers and 280 men wounded and 30 killed. The Madrid journals of the 6th contain a proclamation of General O'Donnell to the Moors, in which he promises the inhabitants of Morocco the aid and protection of his soldiers, who are only to be feared in the moment of combat. It appears that the priests are laying down their breviaries and shouldering their carbines, to show their troops the way to attack the Moors. The third corps d'armée had disembarked at Ceuta. Another action had taken place, in which the Moors suffered great loss, while the Spaniards lost only 40 killed and wounded. The Gibraltar Chronicle, of the 8th instant, states that it was rumoured at Mazagan and Safi that owing to the commencement of hostilities with Spain, a holy war had been proclaimed throughout the Empire, which would soon bring down to the sea-board towns thousands of Moors to defend their country and religion against the Spaniards.

Trade in the interior was in a paralysed state.—The Milan Gazette states that Garibaldi, who for some days past has been staying at Fino, five miles from Como, was in danger the other day of losing his life, his horse having suddenly bolted, and got into such dangerous ground that it required all the general's coolness, intrepidity, and good luck to get safely out again. He was in company with a lady at the time of the occurrence, and rumour adds that he has since married her. The announcement of the marriage of Garibaldi is confirmed by the Independence Belge. It took place at Como. The lady who has the honour of now bearing the hero's name is the daughter of M. Ramondi, one of the many thousands who had to fly their country in 1848, but who have now returned to their homes. A telegram from Paris states that the report of the general's marriage was without foundation.—A letter from Copenhagen of the 7th, says that the five new ministers had made their appearance on the previous day in the Second Chambers, when M. Rottwitt read the royal decree constituting the new ministry. The communication had not been made to the First Chamber, as the members were not in sufficient number. Prince Christian of Denmark has refused the governorship of Holstein, and the Danish government has consequently given up the project.—M. Janson, a clergyman, has submitted a bill to the Swedish Diet, which will have for its object to charge all the clergymen of the country with the control of publications sold by hawkers. All the members of the Assembly adhered to M. Janson's proposition.—The St. Petersburg Gazette announces that a speech had been made by the Emperor Alexander to the nobles of Pskoff on occasion of a general presentation. He said he had the fullest conviction that the question of the emancipation of the serfs would be terminated to the mutual advantage of both parties.—The Presse of Vienna says a council of distinguished officials had been held on the 5th to concert measures for the re-establishment of the Imperial authorities in the three districts on the right bank of the Po which still belong to Austria. A commission was appointed to install those authorities. The leading Protestants at Miskolc, Kossarmark, Grosswardein, Pesth, and other places, who had protested against the Imperial patent of September, had been arrested on the accusation of exciting to political disaffection. The Greek bishop of Munkacs had been released from gaol and sent home. He was ordered to be silent on the matter by the Austrian government.—Letters from Constantinople of Dec. 7, state that a note had been presented to the Porte by M. Thouvenal, the French ambassador, demanding a firman favourable to the Suez Canal project. The demand was said to have been backed by Austria, Prussia, Russia, and Sardinia. A stormy discussion had taken place on the subject in the council of ministers, when they came to an agreement to request the powers mentioned to come to an understanding with England regarding the matter. Sir H. Bulwer had been received by the Sultan, and had had numerous conferences with the ministers.—The Canada, from Boston on the 30th ult., and Halifax on the 3d instant, has arrived at Queenstown en route to Liverpool. By telegraph we have a summary of her news. The total loss of life by the wreck of the Indian is now ascertained to have been 24. The celebrated author Washington Irving, we regret to say, is dead. The advices from California state that the excitement on the San Juan affair was dying out, and it was believed that General Scott would succeed in effecting an amicable adjustment between the two governments. There had been more fighting in Mexico but it was reported that a compromise had been proposed between Juarez, Robles, and Miramon.

INDIAN NEWS.—By the arrival of the Panther at Marseilles we have received journals and correspondence from Calcutta to the 8th November, and Hong Kong to the 29th October. The most important piece of intelligence by this arrival is the confirmation of the death of the notorious miscreant Nana Sahib. The Nepal correspondent of the Calcutta Englishman, writing on the 27th October, says:—"The government officials do not now disbelieve the report of Nana Rao's death. The Nana died on the 24th September, of fever, at a place called Tara Ghurrie, near to Dhany and Dukhur. He had suffered previously from repeated attacks, and at one time was so ill that his attendants believed him to be dead, and the usual gifts were distributed amongst the Brahmins; he, however, recovered partially, and did not die till the 24th September. His dead body has been seen by credible witnesses, and his body was burnt in their presence, with the usual Hindoo rites. Thus this, the most villainous of all villains, has escaped from earthly punishment, which he so much deserved. Jola Persaud, the confidential attendant of the late Nana, has now charge of the family and whatever treasure may be left."

Another correspondent writes:—"A letter that has reached us states, 'that it is believed that the rebel force on the Nepal frontier consists of about 6,000 of all kinds, of which about 1,000 are sowars; this number includes also, camp followers, women and children, so perhaps, besides the sowars, only 3,000 sepoys remain. The greater number of these are encamped in the Dhang Dukur valley over the first range of hills, but still small bodies are dotted about at the edge of the Terai jungle all along the Nepal frontier. Bensee Madhub and Mummoo Khan are also in the Dhang Dukur valley, but the larger body of men are attached to Jola Persaud, the late Nana's confidential servant. This man has also the charge of the late Nana Rao's family and treasure. They have still remaining with them about two elephants' loads of government ammunition. A Goorkha force is said to be approaching the outer range of hills, and the rebels are informed by their sirdars that this force is coming to assist them against the British. The Begum has written to them not to be afraid, for help was coming to them soon. The Goorkha government has written to the rebels, telling them to clear out of their territory; but as the letters were addressed to the rebel sirdars, it is probable that the mass of the rebels know nothing about it. The Begum is at Nyah Kote still, but without any troops. She is in the charge of Puhulwan Sing, a Goorkha general. The Nepaul Government will not coerce her. If she likes to give herself up to the British, she may; or, if she prefers to remain, she may also. Some of the rebels had tried to advance northward to get into Thibet; but the Goorkhas disarmed them and sent them back into the Terai. The seapoys have had no regular pay from their chiefs since they left Lucknow; but, until Nana Rao's death, they were regularly fed. A few Christian drummers from the mutinous regiments are said to be with the rebels, but they have turned Mahomedans and live with the rebels. Some reports state that there is a European sergeant with them, who has also turned Mussulman; but this has not been corroborated. From further inquiries which have been made, there is no reason at present to believe that there is at present any European man or woman now alive in the rebels' hands, as some papers have stated.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—Mr. William Atherton, Q.C., M.P., has received the appointment of Solicitor General, rendered vacant by the appointment of Sir Henry Keating to the judicial bench. The learned gentleman is the son of the late Rev. William Atherton, a distinguished Wesleyan minister, and some time president of the Conference, his mother being a daughter of the late Rev. Walter Monson, a clergyman of the Established Church of Scotland. He was born in Glasgow in 1806, and was married in 1843 to Agnes Mary, the second daughter of Mr. Hall, the chief magistrate of Bow-street. In 1839 he was called to the bar by the Inner Temple, having during the previous seven years practised as a special pleader. He has represented the city of Durlam since 1852, and is what may be considered a very advanced Liberal, being in favour of the ballot, a large reform in law, the removal of all religious disabilities, and the extension of the suffrage.—There was a slight falling off in the mortality of the metropolis last week. The deaths from small-pox were 40; 82 from scarlatina, and 181 from bronchitis. The total number of deaths was 1289, which is little below the average. The births of last week amounted to 1888. In the city the mortality returns have fallen from an average of 70 per week to 58.—On Monday the December session of the Central Criminal Court was opened before the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, the alderman on the rota, the sheriffs, &c. The first edition of the calendar contained the names of thirty-nine prisoners only. The learned Recorder having charged the grand jury, the court proceeded with the trial of the prisoners, but nothing of a remarkable nature came before the court. The grand jury returned a true bill for murder against James Moore; they also threw out the bill preferred against James Powers, committed for a rape on Hannah Percival. On the application of Mr. Poland, the trial of Hughes, the solicitor, was again postponed till the January session.—James Moore has been tried for the murder of his wife Mary Ann Moore, on the 28th of November. The prisoner had been confined in a lunatic asylum at Hoxton, where he continued several months, and from which he was only discharged on the 23rd of that month. The circumstances of the case have been before the public since the melancholy event first transpired. It was evident to all in court that the prisoner was not in the possession of his right senses, and the evidence of Dr. Gibson, surgeon of Newgate, confirmed this opinion. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty; on the ground of insanity. The trial occupied a very long time.—In the New Court, Joseph Henry Jay was indicted for obtaining, by false pretences, various sums from different persons. It appeared from the evidence that the prisoner had been land tax, assessed tax, and income tax collector for the parish of Shoreditch, and in that capacity had committed the frauds charged against him. At the conclusion of the evidence for the prosecution, the counsel for the prisoner said there was no evidence of a false pretence having been made, although strong suspicion attached to the prisoner. An acquittal was then taken.—A letter-carrier in the eastern district was yesterday committed to prison for one month, in default of paying a fine of 5*l.*, at the Thames Police-court, for being drunk and incapable of taking care of the letters he had for delivery. It was stated by the Post office authorities prosecuting that the prisoner, besides, would lose his situation.—The inquiry into the late frauds on the City of London Union has been resumed before Mr. Farnell, the assistant poor-law commissioner, at the City of London Union Office, in St. Mary-axe, for the purpose of hearing the claims preferred against the union by tradesmen, treasurers of parishes, &c. Several legal gentlemen appeared on behalf of the different parties. Evidence was given respecting claims and accounts, after which the court was closed, and the inspector announced that he would forthwith make his report to the Poor-law Board.—At the Central Criminal Court, Robert Hastings, letter-carrier, pleaded guilty to two indictments charging him with stealing letters containing money. It appears that he had carried on this practice to a great extent, and he was sentenced to four years' penal servitude. Mr. Sleight applied to the court to remit the fine of a gentleman for non-attendance as a juror last session, on the ground of his being a dentist, and consequently a member of the medical profession, and on the further ground of his having been in the country at the time the summons was delivered, and knew nothing of it. The recorder remitted the fine, but directed the gentleman to be re-summoned for the January session. There was nothing more worthy of notice.—The funds, yesterday, suffered a decline through the rumour associated with the probable raising of £10,000,000 for the national defences, and the nature of the advices from Constantinople in relation to the Suez Canal. At one moment consols were quoted 95½, but towards the end of the afternoon they recovered and stood at 95½. There was little variation in foreign stocks and railway shares, but the tendency of the latter was to improvement, through the satisfactory progress of the settlement, and the moderate terms charged for continuation.

COMMERCIAL; AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.—During the past week there has been a moderate amount of activity exhibited in the general trade of the port of London. The number of vessels announced at the Custom House as having arrived from foreign ports amounted to 200: there were three from Ireland and 402 colliers. The entries outwards were 119, and those cleared 115, besides 28 in ballast. The departures for the Australian colonies have been 6 vessels, viz., 4 to Port Philip, of 4489 tons; 1 to Sydney of 1002 tons; and 1 to New Zealand, of 623 tons; making a total of 6114 tons.—A meeting of a section of the shareholders of the Great Ship Company, called by Mr. Guedalla, one of their body, was held at the London Tavern, on Tuesday, for the purpose of consulting as to what course should be adopted with regard to future proceedings. The discussion was of a very diffuse character, and the only fact which transpired was that in confirmation of the success of the directors in raising a loan of £40,000 upon the mortgage of the vessel at the low rate of interest, so it is asserted, of 5 per cent. It appeared to be thought that a new company will have to be constituted for the purpose of raising the £60,000 or £80,000 that will be necessary to complete the vessel, and the circumstances of the £7000 of call in arrear on 1*l.* shares was considered to require explanation. The conduct of the directors and the management was severely condemned; and although the views of Mr. Guedalla were not supported, a lengthened debate took place, after which it was agreed, without passing any substantive motion to adjourn until the early part of January.—The affairs of the Crystal Palace Company appear at length to have been brought into a sound condition, and the dividend proposed to be paid has, it is stated, not been determined without full and proper regard to the various interests involved. The auditors (Messrs. Quilter, Ball, and Co.) in their report specially and unequivocally allude to the situation of the accounts, endorsing them as follows:—"At the same time, we desire to state expressly in reference to that important part of our duty which consists in taking care that a due distinction is maintained in the accounts as between capital and revenue, and especially that no expenses that ought to be borne by the latter are charged to the former, that the result of our audit is entirely satisfactory."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W.D.P."—The Master named in the warrant cannot retire until after the Lodge is consecrated. It is not absolutely necessary that the Worshipful Master should serve twelve months if he has passed a chair before; and the brother who is to succeed him is a Past Master—or a Past Warden having filled the Warden's chair fully twelve months. If the Worshipful Master has not filled a chair before, he must hold it twelve months, or he will not be entitled to the privileges of a Past Master.

"AN OLD P.Z., MELBOURNE."—We cannot tell you why there is an undue delay in answering communications addressed to Grand Chapter, unless the Committee failed to make a quorum at one or two of its meetings—no uncommon thing for a body which has next to nothing to do. The communication in question should have been addressed to the M.E.G.Z., the Earl of Zetland, and not to the Grand Chapter.

"AUSTRALIA."—We received a large budget of Australian news just as we were going to press, which shall appear next week. We also received a list of nine subscribers, all in Melbourne, which we thank our Bro. Lowry for; he having taken the matter warmly up in Australia, in consequence of the alteration in our form, which we are happy to find is meeting the approbation of our Colonial brethren.

"T.H.B."—A gentleman was initiated, passed, and raised in a Lodge thirty years ago; the Lodge has never supplied the M.M. certificate—can it now be made to do so?—Yes, if the raising can be proved. Let the brother ascertain if he was ever registered in the Grand Lodge books.

"E.A." writes—Suppose a person is proposed as a serving brother black balled, and when the minutes are read at the next regular meeting, the part relating to the blackballing of the proposed serving member should not be confirmed, can the same party (say after a short time) be proposed again as a candidate?—If our brother will send us the by-laws of the Lodge we will answer the question.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1859.

OUR ARCHITECTURAL CHAPTER.

We have received several communications relative to the resolution agreed to at the last Grand Lodge for assisting the brethren in the country in the erection of Masonic halls by loans from the general funds of Grand Lodge, and asking us how the proposed scheme is likely to be carried out. We are not in the counsels of the Board of General Purposes, and therefore can give no definite information as to its intentions—if indeed the scheme has yet been sufficiently matured for a reply to be given, even by the members themselves. We should imagine, however, that the brethren desiring to erect such a hall must, in the first instance, collect amongst themselves a fair proportion of the expense of the proposed building—say at least one half or two thirds—the latter amount we conceive the best—and that Grand Lodge, on the completion of the building will, on its approval by a competent surveyor, take a mortgage of the property, and advance the remainder of the cost of building and furnishing. It will be apparent to all that great care must be taken not to advance too large a proportion of the cost; because, however valuable a building may be as a Masonic hall, it will probably be much depreciated should it unfortunately at any time have to be diverted from its original purpose and converted to some other use. The next part of the scheme to be considered is, how are the funds advanced to be returned to the Grand Lodge? as it is perfectly clear that the mortgage cannot be allowed to stand out for more than a given number of years; and we would suggest that it should be so arranged that the whole capital, with the interest, might be returned into the coffers of Grand Lodge by annual payments. Thus, supposing £200 were advanced, a payment of £25 per annum would in ten years redeem the mortgage, and give to Grand Lodge an average return of five per cent. for the use of the capital; the total amount returned being £250. Whereas, were the capital allowed to stand out the whole ten years, it would cost the brethren £30 per annum—£10 for the regular payment of interest, and £20 a year as a sinking fund to pay off the mortgage as it fell due—though it is true that amount might be made to earn a portion of the interest on the loan. This sum of £25 per annum could be easily raised by a slight addition to the various fees payable by the members of the Lodges or Lodge using the hall, to be carefully set aside for the purpose, and not to be entrenched upon under any circumstances whatever. Supposing our suggestion to be adopted, and £2,000 so lent to various Lodges, there would be a net annual return of £250, to be again lent to some other Lodge requiring it; each such loan forming the means of adding to the power of Grand Lodge to extend its influence in aiding the establishment of Masonic halls, each of which, if properly managed, would stand out to the world as a monument of the power, the unity, and the importance of the Masonic body. Each building should, in our opinion, be available not only for Masonic meetings, but for a library, reading room, and light refreshments for the members at moderate cost, and be open at all times, and thereby giving all the advantages of a literary club at the most moderate cost.

It is but a short time since that the Freemasons of South Shields opened a new Masonic hall; and as the funds were easily obtained, we have much pleasure in laying their scheme before our readers, hoping the example of the brethren may be extensively followed, especially as they can easily limit their liability under the Joint Stock Companies Act. The capital was obtained amongst the members of St. George's Lodge by shares of one pound each, paid for at the rate of two shillings per share each month, at the meetings of the Lodge, for ten consecutive months. St. George's Lodge and Ogle Royal Arch Chapter pay rent for the use of the hall; this, together with rent received for other parts of the building, is to be annually divided amongst the shareholders; whilst the surplus funds of the Lodge have been applied for the purchase of shares; and the balance in the hands of the Treasurer of St. George's Lodge at the end of each year, after paying all dues, is to be applied in buying up the shares, so that the building will ultimately become the unincumbered property of the Lodge. The scheme is so simple, that by adopting it almost every Lodge can obtain a private Lodge room, and thereby add to its prosperity. It will be observed that the shares are paid for at two shillings per month—we cannot believe that any brother would refuse to pay sixpence per week for a share in obtaining a Masonic hall—and we are sure that in every Lodge there are to be found at least one or two brethren who would be willing to take upon themselves the trouble of canvassing the members and inducing them to take shares—and we have no hesitation in saying that many would take a large number of shares—seeing that by the system adopted in Shields the money is merely lent to the cause of Masonry; and if, as in that town, a hall is built from which a revenue is obtained, a fair interest will be received by the shareholders on their investments. We commend this to the serious consideration of brethren, in the hope that we shall have to report the building of many temples dedicated to Masonry, and the more especially when it is understood that Grand Lodge will be willing to assist them to the extent of one third or one half the cost, and thus limit the amount they may be called upon to find in the first instance, leaving the brethren ample time and opportunity to provide the means for any advance received from Grand Lodge, to be returned by annual instalments.

We have, in the course of the present year, had to record with pleasure the opening of many Masonic halls, and endeavoured to do justice to the zeal and perseverance of those brethren through whose agency the business details have been carried out; and we have now great pleasure in calling attention to what has been done in a district of which we generally hear but little, and which we take some blame to ourselves for not having previously brought under the attention of the brethren. It appears that the Sun, Square and Compasses Lodge, No. 138, at Whitehaven, Cumberland, at present consisting of upwards of one hundred Masons, have for several years experienced great inconvenience from the want of a proper Lodge room. It was a very small Lodge, and for some years the warrant was preserved by the exertions of three or four zealous brethren, Bros. Quin, Cooke and others, who although in humble circumstances in life, managed to keep the Lodge from erasure. Their numbers increasing considerably, owing to the exertions of Bros. Capt. Spencer, Fletcher, Dees, Jackson, Cowie, Peile, and other equally zealous brethren, the inconvenience was still more felt; and after due consideration the brethren wisely came to the conclusion that to erect a building would be the only way to overcome the difficulty. Their next step was to purchase a house and premises in College-street, formerly the residence of Mr. J. Askew; the back premises were soon cleared away, and on the adjoining yard a splendid hall was erected, with refectory and store rooms attached. The dwelling in front of the street has been converted into offices and suitable apartments for the Tyler or housekeeper. The new building, which is two stories high, contains a couple of large rooms—the lower one for refreshment, and the upper, the hall, which is forty-three feet in length, twenty-two wide, and sixteen feet high. It has a coved ceiling with a cable tow for a moulding; in the centre is a sun light of seven stars, nine jets of gas to each, the whole surmounted by a letter G. It has three windows glazed with rough plate glass, and is supported by twenty Ionic columns, six on each side, and four at each end. Near each pedestal are placed three beautifully carved wooden columns, seven feet high, of the Doric, Ionic and Corinthian orders, designed by Bro. Fletcher, each one bearing a gaslight with globes, on which are engraven

Masonic designs, the No. of Lodge, &c. At the east end is a raised dais on which is placed the Master's chair (under a canopy representing in gilt carving the rising sun) and six other splendidly carved oak chairs covered with rich crimson velvet. The dais is approached by three steps, at the foot of which are a fine pair of eighteen inch globes, by Johnstone of Edinburgh, which are the gift of Bro. Dees, the present Worshipful Master. The Wardens' chairs are also on platforms. The hall is covered with a mosaic carpet, with tessellated border. The fireplaces are carved with Masonic emblems, and at the west end is a magnificent organ, presented by Bro. J. Fletcher, P.M. and Treas. and P. Prov. S.G.W., Cumberland. This is also decorated with some fine gilt carvings, representing the setting sun, moon, stars, &c. Adjoining the hall is the preparing room, with drawers for every member, lavatory, mirror, pegs, &c. There is also a committee room with a carpet, table and chairs, and capital book case containing a library of Masonic works, selected by Bro. Spencer of London, and presented to the Lodge by Bro. Dees. The building was designed and built by Bros. Cousins and Shepherd, members of the Lodge, to whom the highest credit is due. When the ceiling and walls are completely dry, they are to be beautifully painted, and a splendidly executed portrait of Bro. Fletcher, Past Master, nine feet by five, is to occupy a prominent position; Bro. Stewart Watson, F.S.A., of Edinburgh, the celebrated artist, is engaged in executing the picture, as a testimonial of the high estimation in which that distinguished brother is held by his brethren and friends. The members of the Lodge have formed a class for the practise of vocal music under the superintendence of Bro. Cooper, organist of St. Nicholas Church, an accomplished musician, and are making rapid progress in that art. The Masonic ceremonies of the Lodge are, we are informed, performed in a style that would do credit to any metropolitan Lodge; but our correspondent has not informed us how the funds were raised for carrying out the good work.

Glancing our eyes across the Channel, we find the brethren of a comparatively small Irish town, Skibbereen, in the county of Cork, bestirring themselves to raise a Masonic Hall—the first, we believe, in Ireland out of Dublin. We are glad to see that the scheme is patronized by some of the most distinguished Irish Masons, and we are sure it will not be allowed to go without a helping hand from the English brethren—every temple that is raised to Masonry being but another proof of the spread throughout the world of the grand Masonic principles of love and charity towards all mankind. The hall is not to be applied exclusively to Masonic purposes, but is to be let for balls, lectures, &c.; and though we prefer that Masonic halls should be specially confined to the objects for which they are built, it is probable that in a small town like Skibbereen, it would be difficult to properly support it if so limited. If, however, a profit is made by the occasional letting of the hall, it is to be applied to the noblest of purposes—the aid of the funds of the Masonic Female Orphan Asylum and other Masonic charities. A subscription list has been opened to assist the noble minded brethren of Skibbereen in their endeavour to raise such a hall as shall be alike an honour to the Craft, and an ornament to the town; and in order still further to aid the movement, it is proposed to give as a prize a Master Mason's jewel, apron, collar, &c., of the value of £20, on the principle of the Art Union, the price of each ticket being fixed at the moderate sum of 5s.—nothing when compared with the large amount of good it may assist in carrying out.

Extending our vision yet a little further, and by the aid of the press, every want of importance, however distant the scene of action, is brought home to our firesides. We find that only about three months since our brethren of Beechwood, in the colony of Victoria—may the colony ever prove as prosperous as the reign of the beloved sovereign after whom it is named—were engaged in the noble work of the foundation stone of a new Masonic hall, to be erected by subscription amongst the brethren, for the accommodation of the members of the St. John's Lodge, No. 1030, (English Constitution,) and deeply impressive we feel must the ceremony have been. The Beechwood Constitution in speaking of it, says—"The number of Masons, men of all ranks and classes, of all nations and of all creeds, who yesterday assisted in the ceremony, was a forcible declaration of one of the great principles of the Craft. The address delivered by the Worshipful Master, eloquent and impressive, laying down in clear and well chosen language the duties and privileges of Masonry, exhorting the brethren ever to persevere in their devotion to the cause of Masonry—the most ancient of all orders that have ever existed—was eminently calculated to impress the spectators and listeners with feelings of respect for Freemasonry." In recording so important an event, it gives us great pleasure to observe the spirit and zeal with which our colonial brethren are carrying out the principles of the Order, and we trust that by the time—or very shortly after—these lines reach Beechwood, the brethren, to whom we wish all success and prosperity, will be working the time honoured ceremonies of the Craft within their own hall.

BASILICA ANGLICANA—VII.

NORWICH CATHEDRAL (CONTINUED).

HAVING noted a few of the political vicissitudes through which the cathedral church of Norwich has had to pass, let us pass into the interior, and notice this magnificent edifice more in detail.

The vista, seen from the west entrance, is exceedingly solemn and grand. The imagination is not, as in York, attracted by endless variety, nor led captive by merely harmonious elaboration. Here grandeur and severity, magnitude, and simplicity prevail. No coloured light falls aslant the shadowy nave, for all the stained glass was broken in the days of the Puritans. Enormous piers, supporting heavy Norman arches, stretch out on either side, and extend to the intersection of the transepts. These piers and arches support a second tier of arches and piers, somewhat lighter and smaller, but in their proportions still massive and imposing. As in York Minster, however, the mind is subdued by the presence of some sacred influence. Before, behind, and on either side of you are the mutilated remains of statues, although it must be allowed, as compared with other cathedral churches, but few exist. You recognize in this glorious edifice the genius of its founders—lofty, gloomy, proud, and ambitious. You look up to its stone roof, which spans the whole superficies of the nave and aisles. Along its extent is a series of scripture representations, most of them elegant works of art, and some of them exquisitely beautiful. You see as it were the history of the world represented in chiaro oscuro, or painted with a boldness of design and elegance of finish that betoken the master hand and mind. These representations include almost every well known scripture incident—Adam and Eve, attended by lions, panthers, and other denizens of the forest, are seen in the innocent state from which they fell; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the other worthies of patriarchal times, are discovered in the performance of some act of piety or sacrifice; here Joseph is again sold by his brethren, and Moses exalts the brazen serpent in the wilderness. The most effective of these works is undoubtedly the representation of the Day of Judgment. The roofs of the transepts are decorated with similar designs but apparently of a later date and inferior execution.

But the choir has even a still more striking effect than the nave, to which the semicircular apex at the end largely contributes. In its general character it resembles the nave, but is more florid in detail, and is still more lofty, the roof being eighty-three feet from the floor of the building. The upper or clerestory is of great beauty, and lends a softened expression by the reflection of its airy gracefulness to the more solid parts beneath. The screen and stalls are elaborately carved, and the greatest attention and care seem to have been taken by the artificers that their work should not only command the admiration of their contemporaries, but should endure for the edification and delight of many generations of men to come after them.

The writer has a partiality for making acquaintances in a church, more particularly when the visitor is one who seeks, like himself, apart from the panting crowds of cities, an hour or two of contemplation and reverie. The solitude seems to be deepened when two minds share it, each communicating to the other its inmost thoughts; each searching its inmost depths, and bringing up pearls of priceless wisdom which are only enriched by being distributed, and are not sullied by being exposed. He remembers on one occasion entering the cathedral on a dreary winter's morning. The snow was on the ground, and as it was Christmas week the organist and choir were practising some music which was to be specially introduced. As he was listening, his attention was arrested by a feeble cough. Looking around, he saw a little old man hobbling along the nave by the aid of a staff which was somewhat taller than himself. His hair was long and very white, and fell in glossy silver bands over the high collar of his blue surtout. His eyes were of the lightest blue, and there was an expression of benignant susceptibility in their liquid brightness that won sympathy on the instant. As the old man passed, he politely saluted the stranger, by putting his hand slowly to his forehead, and then proceeded on his way. The old gentleman was seen no more that day, but some time afterwards a funeral procession passed along before the writer's window. The equipage was evidently such as would be provided for a person in humble life, but there might be observed two or three gentlemen's carriages. Whoever might be the poor wayfarer to Hades, it was evident that he did not depart upon his journey without the good wishes of his fellow citizens. Upon making inquiries, we discovered that the poor mortal coil which was going to its last resting place, was no other than that of our little acquaintance of the cathedral. "He seems" said we to our informer, "to receive more honour than is usually given to one in his station." "Yes," was the reply, "he was much esteemed, although his fame was achieved by a rather mad-cap exploit. In his youth he served with Nelson. He had the good fortune to be sent home as a servant with the officer appointed to carry the despatches from the commander-in-chief to the Admiralty. He was, therefore, one of the first to be acquainted with a most important victory, gained by the English admiral over the French fleet; and the moment he set foot in London, he took coach and arrived at Norwich at about twelve o'clock at noon. When the citizens were coming out of church, they were much surprised to see crowds of persons running in all directions, some staring as if their eyes were fascinated, or themselves turned maniacs. It was not long before the cause of all this commotion made itself apparent. The youth in his enthusiasm to proclaim the welcome tidings, had climbed up to the roof of the cathedral, and was now resolutely ascending the spire. The populace were in a delirium of excitement, and shouted at the youth to pause before he ascended any higher. But he heeded them not, and on he went to the very summit of the spire, where he waved his hat and gave three hearty cheers for Old England and King George. This feat is recorded as having taken place in July, 1798. The old man was eighty-four years of age when he died. He enjoyed a good service pension, and the evening of his life was serene and free from care, and it was his custom in unfavourable weather to saunter amongst the cloisters, sometimes chatting with a prebendary, or supported by his little granddaughter who read to him passages from works of adventure and travel, of which he retained his admiration to the last moment of his life.

These cloisters are of the most elaborate construction, and afford from their excellent state of preservation a very tolerable idea of what these monastic appendages were like in the palmy days of those institutions. They were mostly used by the monks for exercise or study, who repaired thither to read their breviary or to meditate. Although all these cloisters bear a strong resemblance to each other, any one who takes the trouble of minutely examining them will soon learn that they are the work of different periods, and differ considerably—affording on that account a valuable study to the architect, and a curious object of investigation to the antiquary. They were begun by Bishop Walpole in 1297, and although proceeded with by several bishops, were not completed till the prelacy of Bishop Alnwyck in 1430. The tracery of the arches is very beautiful, exhibiting all the variations of the "Decorated" style, and in the parts most recently erected, the early forms of the florid or perpendicular tracery. The stone vaulting of the roof is an object worthy of admiration. The groins are as it were fastened at the points of intersection by massive bosses, on which are carved several scriptural figures, ranging with those on the roofs of the naves and transepts of the cathedral. There is a door at the south-west corner, which deserves a more than passing attention. It was within this doorway or porch that in olden times couples were accustomed to take their stand who were about to be married; this use of it is indicated by a carved representation of the espousals of our first parents on the tympanum or space within the arch above the door.

There were intervals, however, when Norwich Cathedral was free from scenes of riot, and festivity usurped their place. The mayor of the city was wont to repair to the sacred building in company with his sheriff and court of common council to hear a sermon preached by one of the most eminent of the local clergy. The service and sermon ended, he feasted all the nobles and gentlemen of the county, the abbots, and the canons of the cathedral—in short, all the great ones of the county. As illustrating the manners and eloquence of those days, although but remotely connected with our subject, we insert the following very curious documents:—

"Anno Domini, 1561.

"William Mingay, Esq., mayor of the city of Norwich: his expenses for a dinner at which he feasted the Duke of Norfolk, &c., the lords, knights, and gentry of the country:—

"8 stone of beef, at 14 lb. to the stone . . .	£0	5	4
2 collars of brawn	0	1	4
4 geese	0	1	4
8 pints of butter	0	1	6
A fore quarter of veal	0	0	10
A hind quarter do.	0	1	0
A leg of mutton	0	0	3
A loyn of mutton and shoulder of veal	0	1	0
A breast and coast of mutton	0	0	7
6 plovers	0	1	0
4 brace of partridges	0	2	0
4 couple of rabbits	0	1	8
2 guinea pigs	0	1	0
4 couple of hens	0	2	0
2 couple of mallards	0	1	0
34 eggs	0	1	0
2 bushells of flour	0	1	6
16 loaves of white bread	0	0	4
18 wheaten bread	0	0	9
3 loaves mislin ditto	0	0	3
1 barrel double beer	0	2	6
1 barrel small ditto	0	1	0
1 quarter of wood	0	2	2
Nutmegs, mace, cinnamon, and greens	0	0	3
4 pound of barberys and sugar	0	1	6
Fruit and almonds	0	0	7
Sweet water and perfumes	0	0	4
16 oranges	0	0	2
2 gallons white wine and claret	0	2	0
1 quart of sack	0	0	9
1 quart of malmsey	0	0	5
1 quart of bustard	0	0	3
1 quart of muscadine	0	0	6

Total . . . £1 18 1

Fortunately we are able to know in what esteem this civic hospitality was held by the contemporaries and friends of the worthy mayor of Norwich. The bishop of the diocese lent his countenance on that interesting occasion. There was also a speech made by a Mr. Jonny Martyn, who is described as a "wealthy honest man," and runs thus:—

"Maister Mayor of Norwich, an' it please your worship, you have feasted us like a king. God bless the queen's grace, we have fed plentifully; and now, whilom I can speak plain English, I heartily thank you, master mayor, and so do we all. Answer, boys, answer! Your beer is pleasant and potent, and will soon catch us by the caput and stop our manners. And so, huzza for the queen's majesty's grace and all her bonny browed dames of honour. Huzza for master mayor and our good dame mayoress. His noble grace (Norfolk), there he is; God save him and all his jolly company. To all our friends round county who have a penny in their purse and an English heart in their body, to keep out Spanish dons and papists, with their faggots to burn our whiskers! Shove it about, twirl your cap cases, handle your jugs, and huzza for master mayor and his brethren their worships."

Not the least curious of the old architectural appendages of the cathedral are the gateways which lead to the precincts of the building. The most ancient, and certainly the finest, is dedicated to St. Ethelbert, who was in the olden time regarded as the patron saint of the city, and was constructed by the citizens by way of atonement for the part they took in the great riots of 1272, and of which mention has been already made, when, among other things, they destroyed the church of St. Ethelbert, which stood on the site which the gateway now occupies. Over the arch is a chapel, but no longer used as a place of worship. The lower part is the original building, and is of stone, but the upper part is recent, and is composed of black flint curiously inlaid with stonework. In the spandrels of the arch is a sculptured representation of St. George attacking the dragon; and above is a series of niches with crocketed canopies, the central niche being occupied by a defaced statue. Erpingham Gate is in better preservation, though inferior as a work of art. It was erected in 1428, as part of a penance enjoined on Sir Thomas Erpingham for having adopted the principles of Wickliffe. Sir Thomas Erpingham was a soldier of renown; he had served in the wars in France with Henry V.; he was lord warden of the Cinque Ports, and stood high in the royal favour. He had come over from Bretagne, in Normandy, with Bolingbroke, and was one of the commissioners to receive King Richard's abdication. He was present at the execution of Lord Cobham, who was suspended by a chain fastened round his waist over a fire. This torturing death, we are told, the noble heretic bore with constancy, and with his last breath conjured Sir Thomas Erpingham, that if he should see him (Lord Cobham) rise from his grave in three days, he (Sir Thomas Erpingham) should intercede with the king on behalf of the Lollards. It is not a little remarkable, as illustrating the effect of persecution on account of religious opinion, that Sir Thomas Erpingham should have become a Wickliffite.

There remain, as we have said, but few statues, those that formerly existed being reduced to fragments by time and violence. Yet does there repose here a goodly number of nobles and prelates. At the time the painted windows were destroyed, the church was stripped of nearly all its monuments also. Sir William Brown says that nearly one hundred brass inscriptions were stolen and taken away from the tombs. Sir William made out a tolerably complete list of the monuments that remained after the spoliation. He also gives a list of "other bishops who might be buried in the church," but of whom "no history or tradition remaining of the place of their interment, in vain we endeavour to point out the place." There is, however, one very interesting monument, namely, that of the late excellent Bishop Bathurst. This statue is in a sitting position, and is the last work of Chantrey, who died while superintending its erection. Sir William Browne also gives a very curious anecdote, as showing the puritanic abhorrence of all superstition. He says that when the Puritans were masters, to show their hatred of all such abominations, they placed the seats of the aldermen at the east end of the choir, and the mayor's seat in the middle of the high altar, and removed the pulpit, and altered the whole arrangement of the sittings of the congregation. Still, though shorn much of its ancient splendour, the cathedral of Norwich is a truly noble structure, a glorious monument of the past. He who is once present at a cathedral service within its walls will not soon forget it. The nature must be cold, and the imagination feeble, which is not stirred as the words of our liturgy,

"in service high and anthem clear," reverberate through the lofty vaults; and how silent when the voice of prayer rises no longer in pious aspiration:—

"Every stone is kissed
By sound or ghost of sound in mazy strife,
Heart thrilling strains that cast before the eye
Of the devout a veil of ecstasy."

TASTE IN ARCHITECTURE GOVERNED BY DOMESTIC MANNERS.

BY JOHN WILSON ROSS.

So intimate is the connection of architecture with the changes in the domestic habits and social condition of a people, that its buildings actually become the monuments of a nation's history and daguerreotypes of domestic life and manners. No period in our own history, with its manners and fashions, fails of being faithfully and invariably represented by its architecture.

The architectural details, for example, in the time of the Anglo-Saxons (of which, by the way, a great mass is preserved to us in the monks' illuminated manuscripts) bring to light the domestic manners of our forefathers more clearly than any other class of monuments now existing. The then predominant architectural character was to build houses with arcades on either side of the triangular arched doorways, which construction is perfectly accounted for by the circumstance that it was usual for persons of rank to place themselves in the centre of the doorway for the purpose of distributing justice and giving alms to the poor. The whole architecture of the period indicates the peaceful, benevolent character of the people. But the great peculiarities of construction among the Normans are at once explained by the requirements of their age. Who cannot perceive from the castle being the only type of building all over England that that was a period of oppression and bloodshed, of attack and defence; that a few powerful men possessed the country who held their position by the strong hand alone, and made no attempt to establish arts, commerce, or manufactures; who kept down by force the bulk of the population, having at their beck strong bodies of well armed retainers? All this is told in the aspect of the strongholds to which the lords of the castle retreated for self preservation, and wherein they stored their plunder; in the walls that were strong enough to resist all known engines of war, and high enough to be beyond the reach of scaling ladders; in the gates so placed that darts, stones, and molten lead could be poured easily on the heads of assailants; and in outwork after outwork, entrance after entrance, floor after floor, acting as separate means of defence to obstruct the assailant foot by foot, and to dispute the possession of one place after another. This was the distinctive character of architecture in all the counties of England during the iron rule of the Norman and Plantagenet monarchs.

In the fourteenth century, when the nobles became less warlike, houses were occasionally to be found built without fortifications, and with features denoting the gradual though slow development of civilization and of the useful arts; of the latter there are such instances as that smoke, which till then went from the fireplace directly through the wall, was then trained to escape up flues or chimneys. The general plan and character of the fifteenth century residences show that, though the house had still to be made capable of defence, yet that object was no longer paramount unless in the border counties, in Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and places where particular circumstances retarded change. In the settled districts the castellated type, where preserved, was retained in form merely for the sake of effect, and perhaps from associations; for when it was not requisite to maintain armed men within the residence, its arrangement necessarily became altered, losing the military and gaining the peaceful residence character. The parts and uses of the house give a true and intelligible idea of the further progress of civilization. The diminishing in size of the great hall designed for the entertainment of the retainers with the lord, and the increase of the private apartments, show us that the feudal sovereignty of the baron or lord of the manor, which had been preeminent, was at length beginning to diminish; that a rising middle class, composed of merchants, tradesmen and shopkeepers, and independent guilds of artisans, began to make their weight felt in the commonality—arising naturally out of the changes in the social condition which gave privileges to men who had been serfs, and caused commerce and the industrial arts to advance. The improved change in the domestic habits and social condition of the people towards the commencement of the next century tended also to further alteration of the plan in building houses. At this period, in towns and in the country, many of the houses were built chiefly of wood (at least as to the upper of the two storeys); there were brackets and heads to doorways, cornerposts, bargeboards, and gables, often richly ornamented; sanitary arrangements were attended to; there were street pavements, down pipes and sewers underground for street drainage, the latter at times so fine, large and well built, as to have been subsequently mistaken by antiquarians for subterranean passages. An improvement also now took place in the construction of bridges, almshouses, hospitals, inns, and taverns; and new furniture and utensils came into use, such as hangings, tapestry, and panelling. Simultaneously with this improvement in houses many new trades and callings arose, such as stationers, glaziers, plumbers, bed makers, clock makers, and others. In the time of Henry VIII., and more especially in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the state of the country and the condition and requirements of the people had so advanced that at that date a change, vastly for the better, is to be observed in the character of the English house, denoting the habitual use of luxuries not to be found in a previous age, and the encouragement of a more refined and cultivated taste among the nobility and gentry. The effect of this improved taste in the fine arts and literature is obvious in the decorative arrangements of domestic life, in ceilings coved and divided into panels by massive ornamental beams, in walls painted with classic scenes, and in wooden cases often elaborately carved for the reception of books gorgeously bound.

Here we may glance aside for a moment, to notice that in the houses of the fifteenth century, when civilization in the true direction first sprang up in this country—at least that style of civilization which has come down to us, though with perpetual and considerable improvements—there was not a chamber from which the rooms of the modern house may not be traced. The present dining room was represented by the “small” or “banqueting hall,” then first entirely detached (behind the dais) from the “large hall,” in consequence of the upper classes abandoning—except on grand occasions—the custom of eating with their retainers. Of the rooms built above the hall, the “larger” and the “smaller” “solars,” or the “lords’ chambers,” and the “lady’s chamber,” we have the representatives now in the drawing room, the study, or library, and the boudoir. The sleeping apartments were scarcely more numerous in respect to the occupants of a house. The bed was a rare piece of furniture, covered during the day with handsome tapestry, and saving at night the necessity of another apartment, just as it is not uncommon in these days when a bachelor in lodgings occupies the same room day and night, to have a sofa bed in an apartment that serves to sit in. We have called into use the butlery and the pantry, both in collegiate and in private establishments, though “butlery” is the name used at universities, and “pantry” that in the homes of individuals; in colleges and in private houses the office of the butler is retained, while that of the “pantler” is lost. The cellar was situated at that period pretty much as it is now, just under the “lords’ chamber;” but the space required for decanting or rather drawing wine was larger than now from glass bottles not having come into general use. The cupboards were also more extensive; indeed, they were complete separate chambers, just as in these days in some important mansions, rooms called garde robes, are set apart for the purpose of keeping wearing apparel. The kitchen was important. The lardarium exists on a smaller scale in the larder, but the salsarium is done away with on account of the butcher’s business, even as the bakehouse and the brewhouse (except in large establishments) have been dispensed with on account of the trades of the baker and the brewer. There were also stables and farm buildings, of which, though nearly every trace is swept away, enough has been ascertained to know that they were generally built of wood, and were at times very extensive.

To return to the progress of architecture and its alterations according to the variations in our customs and manners—we find that, after the time of the Tudors, during the reign of the Stuarts, a higher state of civilization and greater domestic requirements effected a complete revolution in the architecture of England. The requirements of palaces and mansions, homes for the reception of works of art, or emporiums for merchandize, demanded a style better suited to those wants. From Italy—the first country in Europe which awoke from a long dream of rude art, where, amid the revival of the arts and sciences, architecture was restored by Palladio, Scamozzi, and Labbacco—a style, founded on the Roman, though more immediately borrowed from the Venetians, made its way through France and Germany into England. Much admired as may be the façade of the castle of Heidelberg for the genius and taste it presents as a specimen of the then classical architecture, there is reason to believe, from the banqueting hall that was alone erected, that if Inigo Jones had completed the palace at Whitehall on the scale of magnificence originally intended, the structure would have been unrivalled in splendour of design and purity of taste. Unfortunately the civil war broke out, and the unhappy troubles in which his patron, Charles I., was involved, totally frustrated the intentions of the architect, and Italian architecture, which had begun to flourish under the auspices of Inigo Jones and his disciples, fell into a degraded state on account of the great discouragement given to it and the arts generally during the great political excitement that, to the exclusion of all other matters, prevailed in the country for the next two or three generations. At the commencement of the past century, during the auspicious reign of Queen Anne, some grand designs in Italian architecture were again executed; and her reign, in spite of constant war abroad and political intrigues at home, witnessed the completion of the greater part of St. Paul’s Cathedral. Since that time England has been advancing with giant strides in all the arts and sciences, and her taste in architecture has been keeping pace with the spirit and refinement of the age. No one but a pedant in art will deny that in all parts of the land we see, rising from year to year, buildings public and private, palaces, mansions, churches, theatres, markets, places of general resort, which are objects of undoubted beauty, from the ornaments with which they are embellished, from the magnificence with which they are executed, from their studied elegance, and from the appropriate sites which they adorn.

Finally, we cannot but agree with many of the most refined critics and art students of the time, that whatever pleasure we may enjoy from the contemplation of any particular style of architecture, however gorgeous and superb, the Grecian orders most powerfully command our admiration; these derive their origin from the highest civilization, and were the ornament of those countries most hallowed in our imaginations; and it is difficult for us to see them, even in our modern copies or adaptations, without feeling their influence to operate upon our minds—while we regard them as relics of the polished nation by whom they were first designed, and of that great people by whom they were afterwards borrowed and modified.

ON THE ORIGIN AND OBSERVANCE OF CHRISTMAS.

WHEN the Christian missionaries, advancing towards the north, came in contact with the religions of Thor and Woden, they found the heathen inhabitants of those regions so firmly fixed in their worship and belief in both the above and a crowd of other idols, and so deeply rooted in their ancestral creeds, that a compromise was deemed advisable to pave the way and by gentle means to wean them from their abominable superstitions; it was necessary to gild the salutary pill which was to turn them from the gods of their forefathers, to forsake their ancient temples, and to cut down the oaks dedicated to Donar the Thunderer. It was thus these pioneers of holy truths may be said to have “Allured to brighter worlds, and led the way.”

Even the highest authority of the church, the papal chair, not only tolerated but inculcated such seductive practices. Venerable Bede, in his Ecclesiastical History (lib. xxx.), has preserved a letter from Pope Gregory the Great to the Abbot Melitus, going into Britain with information to our earliest missionary, Augustine, in which appears the following passage:—

“When, therefore, Almighty God shall bring you to the most reverend Bishop Augustine our brother, tell him what I have upon mature deliberation on the affairs of the English determined upon, viz.:—that the temples of the idols of that nation ought not to be destroyed, but let the idols that are in them be destroyed; let holy water be made and sprinkled in the said temples; let altars be erected and relics placed. For if these temples are well built, it is requisite that they be converted from the worship of devils to the service of the true God: that the nation seeing that their temples are not destroyed, may remove error from their hearts, and knowing and adoring the true God, may the more familiarly resort to the places to which they have been accustomed. And because they have been used to the slaughter of many oxen to the sacrifice to devils, some solemnity must be exchanged for them on this account; so that on the day of the dedication, or the natiivities of the holy martyrs whose relics are there deposited, they may build themselves huts of the boughs of trees about those churches which have been turned to that use from temples, and celebrate the solemnity with religious feasting; and no more offer to the devil, but kill cattle to the praise of God in their eating, and return thanks to the Giver of all things for their sustenance; to the end, that whilst some gratifications are outwardly permitted them, they may the more easily consent to the inward consolations of the grace of God. For there is no doubt that it is impossible to efface every thing at once from their obdurate minds; because, he who ascends to the highest places rises by degrees and steps, and not by leaps.”

The Holy Father then dilates upon the toleration in this respect allowed to the Israelites. And then concludes this somewhat desultory epistle by—

“This it behoves your affection, to communicate to our aforesaid brother, that he being there present may consider how he is to order all things.”

Though this admonition be especially referable only to Britain, and principally relates to temples, the unity of papal policy in all ages would allow its extension to every country where the olden faith was too tough immediately to give way; and with the toleration of the temples we must receive as a corollary all the practices and festivals of which they were the scenes.

The above papal permission must have been a double boon to the missionaries who received it; it would materially lessen their labours and allow them to parade a greater number of converts; and it also gave them a decent pretext and plausible reason for converting the glebes and dotations of the olden Druids to the propagation of their own tenets and to their personal maintenance—without augmenting the bitterness of a dereliction of ancient faith to the new converts, or the additional grievance of new pecuniary burthens.

This inculcated change of worship, only not of locality but of practice, was carried through extensively, much more so than we can now conceive. The oldest and most famous of all the Christian edifices through Europe are historically or traditionally the sites of heathen temples. In our country very plausible reasons are adduced for supposing that St. Paul's Cathedral covers the site of a temple of Diana, and Westminster Abbey one dedicated to Apollo; and Professor Engling, in the Luxemburg Archæological publications for 1847, vol. iii. p. 188, gives us historical data for similar changes in that small duchy, enumerating thirteen localities, in which the conversion is certain; and Dr. William Bell, in his “Shakespeare's Puck,” and his “Folk Lore,” vol. i. p. 268, used this circumstance as the foundation of a proof that the Pedlar and his Dog, at Lambeth, and at Swaffham, in Norfolk, as well as something similar at Bowness, in Cumberland, were all received as a notification of change of masters, and with them the change of faith.

It is in carrying out this view that the rationale of our Christian festivals will be best made plain; and in giving an account of the highest amongst them, the Yule, we shall, in the first place, point out the existence of the heathen feasts by which they have been superseded at peculiar seasons, and then show how they have been appropriated in our present calendars; and, secondly, how utterly impossible it has been entirely to eradicate the ancient practices.

In all heathen nations, the glorious luminary, the sun, was a primary and special object of adoration; the beneficent and cheering effects of the solar rays upon each individual, their vivifying and prolific powers upon all nature, could not but strike the perceptions of the most obdurate, and awaken sentiments of gratitude and thankfulness in every breast. Hence every phase on the orbit of this luminary, according to the then prevalent belief that the sun moved round the earth, became an object of deep observation and solicitude. But more especially was this the case at the two great periods when, having arrived at a certain point, the great orb was supposed for a moment stationary, previous to turning his path in a contrary direction for the next half of his course; and then, again, when arrived at the opposite point, once more to turn in its everlasting rounds.

We gain thus two principal periods in the sun's supposed career, which we are still accustomed to designate as “solstices,” from the above popular view of the sun's motion, before the astronomers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries demonstrated the stationary nature of this luminary and the rotary motion of the earth. Upon this notion we borrow the Roman name of sol stare, the standing of the sun, though the Germans, from a more correct view of the old theory, call these periods Sonnen-wenden, or sun's changes. One of these solstices we call summer, and fix it on the 21st of June; the other we call the winter solstice, and celebrate it on the 21st of December. Both, we shall find, were heathen feasts of the highest solemnity and holiness; but as the pleasures and prospects of hope excel always those of possession, the winter change was held in higher estimation than that of summer.

The dreary three months just passed, when, as it were, all nature was torpid or extinct, were now to be succeeded by others when the inanimate earth was gradually to put forth all her beauty:—

“Wish'd spring returns; and from the lazy south,
While dim Aurora slowly moves before

The welcome sun, just verging up, at first
By small degrees extends the swelling curve,
Till seen at last for gay rejoicing months,
Still round and round his spiral course he winds ;
And as he nearly dips his flaming orb,
Wheels up again and reascends the sky."

The winter solstice was therefore the principal heathen festival, the summer one the next in rank. Upon the papal principles of Gregory, as noted above, the highest Christian mystery—the birth of Christ—which the best ecclesiastical chronologers have calculated must have happened towards the end of March, was appointed to supersede and supplant this principal heathen celebration ; whilst the secondary one, in summer, was appropriated to the then next holy personage in Christian estimation—St. John the Baptist. The few days difference from the 21st of each month to the 24th or 25th must be put down to the inaccuracy of the early astronomers.

However long and strenuous have been the exertions of the Catholic priesthood, and however imposing the ceremonies which they have introduced into all these substituted celebrations, they have never been able entirely to eradicate all traces of the more ancient heathen festivals. This we shall now proceed to show before exhibiting the many curious practices and ceremonies engrafted on the original ceremonies of Christmas, particularly among our continental brethren.

Among all the northern nations we find the denomination of this heathen festival still retained in an almost exact uniformity, but in differing forms of the word Yule. In Lapland (Mone's "Heidenthum," i. p. 29), Juel. In Sweden, Jule (Ihre de Had. p. 18), with Christmas Eve called Jolapton. In which he says, "Nox Joliana candelis tota nocte ardentibus in honorem Solis jam redeunitis celebratur, formaque candelarum erat instar tritici ex terra exumentis et in ramos tres se dividit."

For Denmark we quote Pontanus, from "Olaf Worm's Fasti Danici," (p. 22.) "Illud certum habeo ad jubilantem et letitiam temporis exprimendam id quicquid est vocis (Jul) formatum." In Anglo Saxon the usual form was Geola with many variants, as Geol, Geohel, Gehol, as the merry time ; and used also to denote the months of December and January, as æra and æftera Geol : before and after the Yule. Of our own indigenous term, commonly written Yule, Brand, in his "Popular Superstitions," remarks :—

"I have met with no word of which there are so many and such different etymologies as this of Yule, of which there seems nothing certain but that it means Christmas. Mrs. Elstob, in her 'Saxon Homilies on the Birthday of St. Gregory' (Appendix, p. 29), has the following observations on it:—'Geol, Zeol, Anglo Saxon: Jol vel gul, Dan. Sax., and to this day in the north Yule. Goule signifies the solemn festival of Christmas, and were words used to denote a time of festivity very anciently, and before the introduction of Christianity among the northern nations. Learned men have disputed much about this word, some deriving it from Julius Cæsar, others from zehlweol, a wheel, as Bede :—'Giuli a conversione solis in auctum diei nomen accepit.' (De Rat. Temp., cap. xiii.) He would therefore have it so called because of the return of the sun's annual course after the winter solstice. But he, writing De Ratione Temporum, speaks rather as an astronomer than an antiquary."

Differing as we do entirely from this learned lady in her last remark, we shall soon recur to the subject ; in the mean time, to give as far as possible every variation of the name, we adduce from Blount's "Original Observations in Yorkshire and other Northern Parts."—"After sermon or service on Christmas day, the people will even in the churches cry 'Ule ule', as a token of rejoicing, and the common sort run about rejoicing, singing—

"Ule, ule, ule, ule,
Three puddings in a pule,
Crack nuts, and cry Ule."

This puts one in mind of the proverb in Ray's collection—

"It is good to cry Ule at other men's cost."

There is a Scottish proverb which runs thus for this subject :—"A yule feast may be quit at Pasche, i.e., 'one good turn deserves another.'"

Captain Potter, born in the north of Yorkshire, says, "that in the country churches at Christmas, in the holy dayes after prayers, they will dance in the church, and as they doe dance, they cry or sing, 'Yole, yole, yole, &c.' In the West Riding of Yorkshire, on Christmas day, at night, they bring in a large yule clog, or Christmas block, and set it on fire, and sup their Christmas ale, and sing 'Yule, yule,' a pack of new cards, and a Christmas stool." (MS. Aubrey, apud Thoms, pp. 80, 81.)

As bearing upon the subject, a short digression on the yule clog, which has almost lost all observance in the south, but still has strong footing in the north, may be allowed us. This was a massy piece of fire wood, usually oak, placed in the centre of the great hall, on which each of the family sat down, sang a yule song, and drank the old English toast of "A merry Christmas, and a happy new year." The log was then placed on the hearth, and lighted with a brand of last year's block, and by heaping on additional fuel, made to produce a brilliant flame. These circumstances are alluded to by Herrick, in his "Hesperides," in a poem on the subject :—

"With the last year's brand
Light the new block, and
For good success in his spending,
On your psalteries play,
That sweet luck may Come while the log is a-tending."

The superstition still exists, that if the piece of the old log be carefully preserved, so long the house is in no danger of taking fire throughout the year ; a belief that attaches to many other things preserved till their next anniversary, as the crosses chalked on the rafters of a room on Hocktide (see "Hone's Table Book," s. 5.)

Its French usage is thus described at Commercy, in ancient Lorraine :—"On the 24th December, about six in the evening, it is the custom to put a very large piece of wood, the Christmas log, on the hearth, between four and five feet in length, and to set fire to one end of it, so that the little children sit at the other end for the purpose of warming themselves"—(but query, is not this part of a heathen sacrifice, like the English practice noted above, where all the family place themselves on the log, which the continuation of the notice seems further to point to). In many parts of France, on Christmas eve, the father of the family, with his wife and children, and a blazing fire before them, sing the Christmas carols ; the youngest child is ordered to go into a corner of the room and say his prayers, and in the meantime the father places behind the hearth or in a hole of the pile of wood, several parcels of sugar plums and lollypops ; the child comes to the fire with a stick in his hand and strikes the piece of wood till the sugar plums fly out, and hastily gathers them up from the log.

On Christmas Eve, before the midnight mass, it is the custom at Bonneval, in a great number of houses, particularly in convents, to place on the hearth of the apartment most in use the largest log they can find, and one that will burn for three days, hence the common name of trefeu, or three fires.

These localities are on the southern borders of ancient Germany, but it is curious that at its northern extremity in Pomerania, customs are found which closely resemble our English and the above French practices. In a recent notice of that province it is stated that a portion of the last year's log is also kept there till the following yule, when pieces are detached and holes drilled into them, into which bonbons and confectionary are inserted, and thus preciously loaded, are thrown or furtively introduced into the houses of their friends or acquaintance, whose office it then is to try to guess the various donors. The remainder of the clog is, as in England, put by to light the new brand. It should be observed that clandestine or anonymous gifts are great favourites throughout Fatherland.

To return from this digression, and to take up Bede's derivation of yule from "wheel," will require in the reader some practise in the use of a strong guttural intonation; for quickly pronounced and strongly gutturalized, both words are identical in sound, with a strong presumption therefore of identity of meaning. It is a case in point that the present learned head of, I believe, Trinity College, Cambridge, Dr. Whewell, has his name pronounced in a manner that may stand either for yule or wheel: in fact, in all three the only letter of distinct enunciation is the final liquid l. All the other vowels or semivowels are of such infinite niceties of sound as to be undistinguishable to the ear in their numerous intonations.

But we have other reasons to believe in the agreement of both "yule" and "wheel" besides their verbal assonances.

The orbit of the sun, taken as a circle, was fitly and best represented by a wheel or ring; and in this view we have the best derivation of the Latin annus, the year, the sun's rotation; when we refer to its diminutive annulus, the little ring; so that we may pretty safely conclude that the original word had primarily the same meaning. Virgil brings the adjective annuus pretty nearly to this sense. (Æn. v. 46.)

"Annuus exactis completur mensibus orbis."

To complete these conformities of the denominations of the sun's annual orbit with a wheel, our year, offers some points of contact. It is identical with the German Jahr, which Adelung well derives from the Swedish Ær, the harvest or recurrence of seedtime; by merely dropping the initial semivowel y we gain ear, which it is well known, when taken as a noun participle, "earring," means the harvest. Shakespeare uses it in this sense (Antony and Cleopatra i. 2.)

"O then we bring forth weeds

When our quick minds lie still; and our ills told us
Is as our earring."

But the same sense is more clearly expressed in Gen. xiv. 6, of the authorised version:—

"For these two years there hath been famine in the land; and there are yet five years in the which there shall be neither earring nor harvest."

To those for whom verbal agreements are not satisfactory, we can, however, adduce the strong evidence of wheels used as symbols of the Yule feast, both at home and in other countries.

In north Germany in particular, it is customary at Christmas to take a common cart wheel, and to bind it round the spokes and felloes, as well as the nave, with straw bands, so that no portion of the wood is visible; the straw is then set fire to, and the wheel from an eminence rolled down into the plain or river, as is done into the Moselle at Konz, a small place in the vicinity of Trier, whose Roman origin is evidenced by the remains of a Roman imperial palace of which a considerable extent was visible in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries (see "Panorama von Trier," p. 214), though the idea there expressed, that it was built by Constantine, who certainly resided some time in Trier, has no other foundation than the place's name, which seems more probably to have arisen from the confluence and junction of Sarre and Moselle, like the confluentia (Coblentz) of Moselle and Rhine, and another Coblentz at the flowing of the Swiss Aar into the Rhine, with many others. (Grimm's "Deutsche Mythologie," p. 587.)

Sometimes the celebration by this symbolic wheel is transferred to the secondary solstice at the feast of St. John Baptist, and is thus described by Naogeorgus in Barnaby Rook's translation:—

"Some others get a rotten wheel all worn and cast aside,
Which round about with straw and tow they closely hide;
And carried to some mountain top being all with fire a light,
They hurle it down with violence when dark appears the night,

Resembling much the sun that from the heavens down should fall,

A strange and monstrous sight it seemes and fearful to them all,
But they suppose their mischiefs are likewise thrown into hell,
And that from harmes and dangers now in safetie here they dwell."

However comfortable it might be in later times for the exhibitors of this burning wheel to look upon it as a scape-goat of their sins, that certainly was not the original intention. But the Romish priesthood would naturally look upon this heathen token with dislike, and in their Ruustocks, or early calendars, against those days that were reputed ominous or ill fated, they set the mark of a wheel, allegorically to express them. In the Beaufoy coins of the London municipality, No. 1009 is one with the legend "Tho. Aldridge at the Catern Wheel in West Smithfield," where is the usual symbol of St. Catharine's martyrdom, a wheel armed with scythe blades (see A. Durer's beautiful folio woodcut); but it is a question whether this Romish legend of St. Catharine, whose name in Greek signifies merely "pure, cleansed" (καθαρος) may not have arisen from the common wheel symbols of the British or Celtic coins. On this subject we have a learned treatise by Levezow, in the transactions of the Berlin Academy for 1833, p. 189. From it we find that small wheels of silver and bronze had been dug up in France, and one of terra cotta with four spokes had been found in the neighbourhood and preserved in the National Museum at Berlin, being evidently amulets suitable to the circumstances of different wearers.

The stories of fiction were less bound to circumstances, and therefore in the old lay of Wigolais, the hero makes himself a wheel of gold, which he afterwards wears as a crest, from which he got the name of the Knight of the Wheel, whom even Gildas, the monk of Bangor, denominates Miles Quadriga.

The use of the wheel at the summer solstice has also an early testimony in Durand (Rationale Div. Offi. vii. 14.) "In quibusdam locis in festo Johannis Baptistæ rotam volvant qua revolutione indicant quod sol in festo Johannis in Zodiaco ad summum gradum jam pervenerit et discedere per diem inciperetur," &c.

Among the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, (2345, art. 100), is an account in which the rites on St. John the Baptist's eve are enumerated, and in them the wheel is conspicuous. He gives three kinds: "In vigilia beati Johannis colligunt pueri in quibusdam regionibus ossa et quedam alia imunda (bonfires) et in simul cremant et exinde producitur fumus in aere. Cremant etiam brandas (seu fascas) et circulant arva cum brandis. Tertium, de Rota quam faciunt volvi."

As this MS. is believed to describe the customs round Winchcombe, in Gloucestershire, it brings these practices home to ourselves and a comparatively recent date, which even a very modern usage follows, as in the newest accounts of Gloucester Folk-lore we find that with something like a respect for the excellent produce of their dairies, a cheese is substituted for the wheel, and rolled down their hills on the Baptist's anniversary, still retaining the round form and the rotary motion.

ITALIAN PROVERBS.—Says Guicciardini, "Do all you can to see good, and the better shall it be for you." In another place, speaking of gratitude in return for favours received, he says, "Look for assist only to those who are so situated that they must needs serve you, and not to such as you have served," &c. How infinitely higher and nobler is "Gianni's" standard of moral worth when he says, "Goodness takes up no room;" and better still, "Whoso doeth good, hath goods;" or, with honest trust in his fellow creatures' gratitude, "Service kind love"—"He that gives discreetly sells dear"—"Almsgiving never made any man poor"—"Helpfulness never comes home without lavages."

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

MANCHESTER MASONIC RIFLE CORPS.

At a time when our native isle is again bristling with bayonets, and our Manchester brethren are contemplating the formation of a Masonic Rifle Corps, it may be of more than usual interest to inquire what was the conduct of the Lancashire Masons fifty-six years ago? Born some years after the unholy contest between the two mighty neighbouring nations of France and Britain had ceased, as every true Mason will hope, never again to be renewed on the field of battle—to me the excitement caused in this country in 1803, by the threatened invasion of the first Napoleon, is mere matter of history, rendered vivid by the descriptions of a volunteer grandsire, at whose knees I have often listened in childhood with anxious ears. Believing that the majority of the readers of the Freemasons' Magazine are similarly situated, and that those who are old enough to remember that period will have no objection to review the past, I make no ceremony in forwarding you the following scraps of Masonic history, in the hope that other brethren will be stimulated to furnish further particulars, so that we may, bit by bit, accumulate materials in your pages for the future historian of the Craft. In the year I have just mentioned (1803), I find a "Loyal Masonic Volunteer Rifle Corps" formed in Manchester and its vicinage, under the command of Bro. Joseph Hanson, Esq., of Strangeways Hall, Manchester; and, on the 21st of December, of the same year, Bro. Col. Hanson was presented at court, and commanded by his Majesty (George III.) to appear in the regiments of his corps, and to keep his hat on. Bro. Hanson appears to have been at that time highly popular; and, it is worthy of remark, that of the nine regiments or companies of volunteers then raised in Manchester and its suburbs, that of the Freemasons was the only rifle corps. On Thursday, April 12th, 1804, I find His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by his son, Bro. Prince William of Gloucester, reviewing the volunteers of Manchester and its neighbourhood, on Sale Moor, when Bro. Hanson is mentioned as "Lieutenant Colonel," and his regiment, which at that time numbered six hundred and seventy-six volunteers, is called the "Manchester, Salford, Bury, and Stockport Rifle and Pike Men." On the 30th of September they were again reviewed or inspected, with the other volunteers of the vicinage, on Ardwick Green, by the Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by his son, as before; the latter had been initiated into Masonry nine years previously. In the following year (1805) I find the officers of this corps presenting Bro. Col. Hanson with a splendid sword, a valuable brace of pistols, and a pike of elegant workmanship, as a token of the high estimation in which he was held. On the 10th of December, 1807, Bro. Hanson appears to have resigned the command of the Rifle Corps, in consequence of some slander which his sensitive nature could not brook. Bro. Hanson seems to have been, as every true Freemason is, a man of strong sympathies for the distressed, and if I can obtain any good materials for a notice of him, I will communicate them to the Magazine. In the mean time, perhaps, some brother will furnish further particulars relating to this or any similar corps.—GEORGE MARKHAM TWEDELL.

THE OLD FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE.

I have six volumes of the Freemasons' Magazine, which was commenced in 1793, and have just been informed that my set is incomplete. Is this so? and if so, where can I get the others to complete it?—C. BEALE. [The old magazine was published in eleven volumes, and the eighth volume, issued in 1797, bore a different title, its name being changed to The Scientific Magazine and Freemasons' Repository; it was discontinued at the close of the year 1798. In reply to where it may be obtained, we cannot answer our correspondent, as it has long been out of print; but there may be some of our readers who may have a set to dispose of, or know of such, and if they will communicate with us, "C. Beale" shall have the benefit of their reply].

CAPTAIN GEORGE SMITH.

On the title page of The Use and Abuse of Freemasonry, 8vo., London, 1785, its author, Captain George Smith, thus describes himself:—Inspector of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich; Prov. G.M. for the county of Kent; and R.A. He was also author of Engelsche en Nederduitse Spraakhonst, 8vo., Utrecht, 1758; Mey's Commercial Letters, Translated from the German, 8vo., Bremen, 1767; Universal Military Dictionary, or a Copious Explanation of the Technical Terms, &c., used in the Equipment, Machinery, Movements, and Military Operations of an Army, 4to., London, 1779; and Bibliotheca Militaris, or, a Catalogue of Ancient and Modern Military Books, in every Language in Europe, with Historical, Critical, and Explanatory Notes, 4to., London, 1783. Wanted further particulars as to his family, arms, services, and death, by —ANOTHER SMITH.

LIEUT. DRAKE ON MASONRY.

In the European Magazine, for February, 1792, p. 124, there is a very curious essay by Lieut. Drake, and as the Magazine has long been out of print, I send you a copy, which may be found interesting by our younger brethren.—LL.B.

"On Masonry.—To brother Masons. I have presumed in this small treatise to deliver my thoughts on the originality of the word Mason; and I have likewise given my reasons from whence that sacred appeal, or obligation, by which we are bound, is derived; for they being inseparably united, I have endeavoured to shew how far they were conjunctively allied in their primeval state; and have hazarded some few conjectures on their religious foundation. Though I may have dissented very materially from the derivation of the name of our sacred institution, which we are taught to believe sprang from the erection of Solomon's temple, yet I have proved the creed which is laid down as the established doctrine of our Masonic faith to be founded on moral and religious duty. I trust that whatever I may advance may not be deemed a renunciation of any part of that most honourable Order of which I am a member, but be received as a humble attempt, to elucidate that which the hand of time having nearly obliterated, conjecture must now supply.

"As the origin of the religious ceremony of this island began with the Druids, and their language being Celtic (which is supposed by the learned to have been the universal elementary language of Europe), I shall build my argument upon the ground work of their divine institutions, assisted by their tongue, which has been corrupted and thrown into the mutilated form it now bears. Numerous are the instances I can produce of words carrying a very different figure and signification to their first formation and intention, were I to take up your time by enumeration; but as a few of them may prove strong evidences towards validating my subject, I shall produce them to shew that I have not built my hypothesis upon a sandy foundation. The word "religion" being given to us as a Latin derivative, I shall beg leave to point out is corrupted from the Celtic rea and ligio; rea signifying a ray or circle, and ligio, to be bound, which alludes to a circle drawn round prisoners arraigned in the name of justice, with which in those days religion was incorporated, and out of which ray or circle it was the highest crime to escape. Nothing, in general, is more false or more forced than the derivations from the Gallic writers; they will tell you "curate" is derived from curati, the cure or care of souls; but it certainly comes more naturally from the Celtic word curaisk, which signifies a preacher. Again, the word physic is given to us from the Greek word φυσικ, nature; but the Celtic is wyss-ake, or skill in distempers, which offers a more natural etymology. So with respect to the word "bishop," which is from the Greek word ἐπισκοπος, i.e. overseer; whereas the Celtic appears to be more just from b-ey-sop, the president of religion. But to come to the word "Mason"—it appears to me to have taken its rise from the Celtic words Mays-on, a religious institution of the Druids called 'The Religion of the Groves.' I shall observe that, in the sense of the bough, or office of justice, the word May is primitive to the month of May and to Maia the goddess of justice. Considering too that the Maypole was eminently the great sign of Druidism, as the Cross was of Christianity, is there anything forced in this conjecture that the adherents to Druidism should have taken the name of The Men of May, or Mays-on? Hence the word Mays-on comes near to our present pronunciation; the word on stands for homme, as it does in the politest French to this day, as on dit for homme dit, &c. What still adds strength to my observation is, that the word Hiram, which is the corner stone of Masonry, signifies precisely the high pole or holy bough; it exists to this day in the provincial word ram-pike, the ram meaning a dead or withered bough; hence Hi-ram, or the high withered bough or maypole, round which their dancing constituted an essential part of their religious worship. Thus the words Mason and Hiram being so joined as to form the foundation of Masonry, and likewise the establishment of Druidical worship, I shall proceed to shew how far the obligation is connected with them both. The Druids, agreeably to their system of preferring the night to the day, and the shades to the broad daylight, chose for their places of abode to teach their disciples, the gloomiest groves and subterraneous cells, as Pomponius Mela says—'Docent Druidæ multa nobilissimos gentis, clam et diu, viginti annis, in specu aut in abditis saltibus.' The Druids teach the nobility long and secretly for twenty years together, in caves, cells, or the most hidden recesses of the woods.' No wonder then this double privacy of the nightly meetings and sacred abodes inspired the enemies of Druidism with sinister suspicions, and more particularly as they were not wholly exempt from the propitiation of the infernal powers by human victims, as say Strabo and Cato. But what still increased the number of their enemies was, they being included in the name of the Magi; and the magic wand and the circle being not only wholly abolished by disuse and supplanted by other forms of judicial procedure, but also proscribed by Roman paganism which had then crept in, and next by Christianity, could not but reduce the unhappy remnant of the Druidical votaries to ruin and despair. In France they never appeared after the destruction of the Albigenses, and in Britain after the Picts; but Druidism, which had been for thousands of years the established religion of the Gauls, and especially Britain, could not be supposed to lose, on a sudden, its hold on the minds of nations, therefore, such as held out against the new religion would naturally form assemblies for the safety of their members, and for which the utmost privacy was required. This produced the oath of inviolable secrecy in nearly the same form it is now administered to the initiates in Freemasonry. Since, then, I have attempted to make it appear that Druidism and Masonry bear so strong an analogy to each other, I should be glad to be informed why Masonry may not have originated from the one with as much certainty as from the other, and why it should not be, with as much propriety, the type of the religion of the Groves as of the building of Solomon's temple?—GEORGE DRAKE, Lieut. of Marines, Jan. 12, A.L. 5792."

THOMAS SANDBY.

When the first stone of Freemasons' Hall was laid by G.M. Lord Petre, the plate deposited, among other matter, bore this inscription—"Tho. Sandby, Arm. Architecturæ Prof. R.A.A. Architectus." Was our Bro. Sandby eminent in his profession? And can any one point out other edifices of which he was the designer?—A MASTER BUILDER.

ROYAL ARK DEGREE.

I have been informed, I know not how correctly, that at the commencement of the present century there was a degree called the Royal Ark degree, and that it was rather popular than otherwise. Will some experienced Mason tell me if it is practised now, and where?—NOACHIDA.

FIELDING GULD, JUN.

Will an Irish brother favour a subscriber by transmitting some particulars of Fielding Guld, jun., a brother who was Grand Sec. to the Irish Grand Lodge about the year 1770 (?)—JAS. GULD FIELDING.

ABERDEEN ROYAL ARCH CHAPTERS.

Is there any way of establishing the time at which the Aberdeen Chapters were founded?—J. G. . . . M.—[We have before us the Laus of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland, dated 1845 (we are not aware of a more recent edition), but in that is given a list of Chapters who have taken out charters from the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland, and have proved that in the years mentioned they practised R.A. Masonry. The Aberdeen Chapters number on the roll—No. 11, St. Luke's, 2nd Nov., 1782; No. 16, Old Aberdeen, 13th Feb., 1788; No. 20, St. James's, 4th Nov., 1789; No. 21, St. George's, Aug., 1795; No. 37, St. Machar's, 9th Jan., 1816; No. 41, Operative, 30th Nov., 1792.]

THE SOCIETY OF JOHN.

I beg to draw your attention to an article called "The Annalist," in No. 25, of March 31st, 1840, of the Freemasons' Quarterly Review, where you will find additional information for your correspondent "Ambrose."—J. W. BREITLING.

FINCH'S CIPHER.

A short time ago I saw a copy of Finch's "Masonic Treatise, &c.," and in a very few minutes discovered the cipher employed in each part of the work. I could not for some time decipher the words on the title page, but after trying many different methods, I at length succeeded, and will now state the result of my lucubrations. I must first, however, notice that there are one or two errata in the first three secret words as printed in the Magazine of the 17th instant. They should be Zydrjxyppix, Zqjysqtn, Wxstrjin, which stand for Architecture, Astronomy, Geometry. The words ty Qzxf, and Oviyng Qwvgjppix, are mc [Masonic] seal and written signature. In the first part of the book the cipher used is formed by reversing the alphabet, writing z for a, y for b, x for c, &c. This is somewhat different from the cipher used on the title page, as will be seen by the subjoined table:—

For the title page.

Cipher	a b c d e f g h i j k l m n o p q r s t u v w x y z
Key	b d f h j l n p r t v x z y w u s q o m k i g e c a

For the first part.

Cipher	a b c d e f g h i j k l m n o p q r s t u v w x y z
Key	z y x w v u t s r q p o n m l k j i h g f e d c b a

In the second part of the work a totally different system is employed. The words may be deciphered by taking the last letter, then the first, then the last but one, then the second, and so on; two or three words are also often run into one in this cipher: for example, ereetmhdrloh is "he ordered them." In addition to this, the nine digits stand for certain frequently occurring words; the same digit repeated denoting the plural number:—thus 1 stands for Lodge, 11 Lodges, 3 Fellow Craft, 33 Fellow Crafts, &c. Before quitting this subject, I may remark, that an account of Finch and his works will be found in Oliver's Revelations of a Square, pp. 293—305.—H. C. LEVANDER.

Literature.

REVIEWS.

The History of Freemasonry and the Grand Lodge of Scotland, with Chapters on the Knights Templar, Knights of St. John, Mark Masonry and R. A. Degree. By WILLIAM ALEXANDER LAURIE, Secretary to the Grand Lodge of Scotland, &c., &c. Edinburgh: Seton and Mackenzie.—London: R. Spencer.

THAT the history of our ancient Order still remains to be written, is a proposition which we think will be unhesitatingly agreed to by every brother of the Craft who is possessed of any literary taste or the smallest antiquarian research. It is true that treatises, sketches, and even volumes abound, in which the rise and progress from age to age of the royal art have been feebly and ineffectually traced; but in by far the larger proportion of these the few grains of reliable information have been invariably buried in bushels of conjecture and ridicule-provoking absurdities and anachronisms, as unsatisfactory to the earnest Masonic student as derogatory to the fair fame and honour of the Order in the sight of the profanum vulgus. It is difficult to imagine why this should be so; since, if we are to believe the most time honoured traditions which we possess (and if we reject these, where is the line to be drawn between truth and fiction)—the most distinguished men of every age in literature, in philosophy, and in wisdom, have either been themselves brethren of the Order, or have expressed their conviction of its inestimable value and its vast and wide extended influence. The mystery which almost invariably accompanied the possessor of any art or science in ancient times—when the uneducated and therefore imperfect reasoning powers of the mob attributed a supernatural or diabolical origin to every occurrence which excited its awe or wonder—may have been (and doubtless was) not unwillingly fostered by the adepts; and in this latter class the ancient brethren of our Order must be placed. The persecutions and obloquy too which at various periods fell to the lot of the Freemasons may have caused a reluctance to commit to writing any particulars which might implicate, if discovered, the chronicler or the personages of his history; and, again, over scrupulous Craftsmen may have thought it their duty to extend to the transactions of the Order the same caution which they were bound to observe as to its secrets. Be the causes however what they may, the fact remains disagreeably prominent that the historical events connected with Freemasonry which bear the date of more than two and a half or three centuries back are for the most part imperfectly related, and wanting in proofs of their genuine connection with the Craft. A few isolated facts here and there remain established; but the rubbish which has been preserved so long under the name of "history" in some of our handbooks is only deserving of the contempt and ridicule of the honest and educated Craftsman. It is a mortifying reflection that the dearth of works of value upon Masonic antiquities has actually caused these vamped up and worthless volumes to be in many instances gravely received and quoted as authorities, though totally deficient frequently, in veracity or even in credibility.

This great defect in the fabric of our institution has not gone unnoticed, and among the most praiseworthy efforts for its remedy may fairly be classed the volume before us, which though almost entirely new (in its present form at least) is modestly entitled a second edition of the "History" published by Bro. Laurie in the year 1804. If the present work does not fulfil our behests as a perfect record, we must candidly admit that it is not for want of active zeal or patient research on the part of the author; but the magnitude and importance of the subject require yet greater powers, and still more careful study of the antiquities of the early and the middle ages, than are displayed in its pages. Though upon several points we do not by any means agree with the inferences drawn, or the views expressed by Bro. Laurie, we are most happy to welcome the great amount of information which he has gathered together in this shape; and we have seldom met with a book which combined entertainment and instruction more happily. In many instances we confess we think that neither the instruction nor the amusement have any real Masonic bearing; but the reader will not regret the time which he spends in storing his mind with the memories of ancient times and customs which are here stored up for his gratification.

In an exordium, disfigured by an affected style and singularly ill chosen language, our author designates architecture as the first of the useful arts which the necessities of mankind have developed; and proceeds—somewhat more broadly than we are inclined to do—to assimilate the royal art to the science of architecture. He next dilates upon the principles of the Order, which are quaintly but not forcibly delineated, and glances at some various opinions upon the origin of Freemasonry. He then discourses, as follows, upon the earliest known architects:—

"As architecture could only be preceded by agriculture itself, it must have been in this science that the first efforts of human skill were tried, and in which man must have first experienced success in extending his dominion over the works of nature. The first architects, therefore, would be philosophers. They alone required the assistance of art, and they alone would endeavour to obtain it. The information which was acquired individually, would be imparted to others of the same profession; an association would be formed for the mutual communication of knowledge, and the mutual improvement of its members. In order to preserve among themselves that information which they alone collected; in order to incite amongst others a higher degree of respect for their profession, and prevent the intrusion of those who were ignorant of architecture, and consequently could not promote the object of the institution, appropriate words and signs would be communicated to its members; significant ceremonies would be performed at their initiation, that their engagement to secrecy might be impressed upon their minds, and greater regard excited for the information they were to receive. Nor is this mere speculation; there exist at this day, in the deserts of Egypt, such architectural monuments as must have been reared in those early ages which precede the records of authentic history; and the erection of those stupendous fabrics must have required an acquaintance with the mechanical arts which is not in the possession of modern architects. It is an undoubted fact also, that there existed in those days a particular association of men to whom scientific knowledge was confined, and who resembled the Society of Free Masons in every thing but the name."

This theory it must be confessed is highly ingenious, and perhaps not without foundation; but the speculative opinions of modern antiquaries and the various interpretations of ancient authors hardly warrant an historian in accepting as "undoubted facts" such assertions as the foregoing—at least, unless he has stronger proofs in reserve than are in the present instance given to the public.

Having traced the march of civilization from Egypt to Greece, Bro. Laurie revives the much discussed question of the identity of the Eleusinian mysteries with those of Freemasonry; and with considerable ability states the case of their being one and the same. He combats the objections which were entertained by many good men in those bygone ages to partake in the knowledge of the secrets of the Dyonisia and Eleusinia; yet, somewhat inconsistently, after claiming a high origin for these ceremonies and comparing their morality to the pure precepts of our Order, he adds that their suppression dates from the fifth century, when the "pagan theology" was overturned—surely this is not a very high standard by which to estimate our principles. Much more ably defined is the similarity between the fraternity of Dionysian artificers and our own brethren. Bro. Laurie says:—

"The Dionysian Artificers who were very numerous in Asia, and existed under the same appellation in Syria, Persia, and India. About three hundred years before the birth of Christ a great number of them were incorporated, by command of the kings of Pergamos, who assigned to them Teos as a settlement, being the city of their tutelary god. The members of this association, who were profoundly learned in the Dionysian mysteries, were distinguished from the uninitiated inhabitants of Teos by the science which they possessed, and by appropriate words and signs whereby they could recognize their brethren of the Order. Like Free Masons, they were divided into Lodges which were distinguished by different appellations. They occasionally held convivial meetings in houses erected and consecrated for this purpose; and each separate association was under the direction of a master, and presidents or wardens. They held a general meeting once a year, which was solemnized with great pomp and festivity, and at which the brethren partook of a splendid entertainment provided by the master, after they had finished the sacrifices to their gods, especially to their patron Bacchus. The more opulent artists were bound to provide for the exigencies of their poorer brethren; and in their ceremonial observances they used particular utensils, some of which were exactly similar to those that are employed by the Fraternity of Free Masons. The very monuments which were reared by these Masons to the memory of their masters and wardens remain to the present day in the Turkish burying grounds at Siverhissar and Eraki. The inscriptions upon them express in strong terms the gratitude of the Fraternity for their disinterested exertions in behalf of the Order; for their generosity and benevolence to its individual members; for their private virtues, as well as for their public conduct."

Some interesting speculations of Bro. Laurie's upon the ancient sects of the Essenes and the Kasideans in the Holy Land are worthy of attentive perusal; and did time and space permit, we should be tempted to dilate upon them. The connection between the tenets of the Pythagorean and other ancient philosophical bodies and those of Masonry are ably touched upon, and the fact of the unmerited persecution which both in common have received at various periods of the world's history, is certainly well established, though it hardly proves their identity. We shall return to this subject next week.

NOTES ON LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

Two of the brightest ornaments of the modern literature of our language have within the last few days gone to their final rest—Thomas De Quincey and Washington Irving. Of the former a contemporary well remarks:—"His conversation had an inexpressible charm—with all that beauty of language, subtlety of thought, variety of illustration, and quaintness of humour that distinguish his writings. His talk never either became pedantic, or degenerated into soliloquy or monologue; it was that of a highly accomplished scholar and gentleman. A nature so deep and tender drew towards itself affection as largely as admiration; and with profound esteem for the learning, the power, the genius of the writer, will always mingle much of love for the man. It will be long before the literature of England can boast a renewal of such a rare combination of scholarship, of analytic force, of acute reasoning, and courageous speculation, with such imaginative power and deep all-embracing sympathy as this generation has had the privilege of knowing in Thomas De Quincey." Mr. De Quincey was upwards of seventy years of age; he expired at his residence at Lasewade, near Edinburgh, surrounded by his family. Washington Irving died a few weeks ago at his beautiful residence, "Sunnyside," at the venerable age of seventy-six. He was born on the 3rd of April, 1783, in New York City. His early studies were in view of the law, but a love of literature was even then predominant, and seemed to be engrafted in his nature as its master passion; and before he was twenty-one he began his career as a writer. After having achieved a popularity as an author rarely equalled in England and in America, the brilliant author of the "Conquest of Granada," was in 1829 appointed Secretary to the American embassy in Spain, and resided in Europe till 1832. In 1842, Mr. Irving was honoured with the appointment of Minister to Spain, and at the end of his official term in 1846, he returned to this country. In 1848, he superintended a revised edition of his works; in 1849, published his delightful biography "Oliver Goldsmith;" and, in 1850, "Mahomet and his Successors"—and then "Wolfert's Roost." Irving's heart for several years had been fixed upon a "Life of Washington," and the completion of a graceful narrative, which will ever be a monument to his industry and patriotism, was the crowning work of a literary career equalled by few of his contemporaries.

It is said that the first order given to the printers by the publishers of the Cornhill Magazine was for 60,000 copies. Mr. Thackeray's New Year's appearance in the character of editor is heralded by whispers of the contents of No. 1. A new story by the editor, entitled "Lovell, the Widower," with illustrations by the writer, and the first of another series of papers by the same hand are mentioned. Also the commencement of a new story, by Mr. Anthony Trollope; a paper on China, by Sir John Bowring; another by Mr. G. H. Lewes, on Animal Life; a discourse on our Volunteer Force, by Sir John Burgoyne; and the "Private Journal of an Officer of the Fox"—all for the starting number. The Essex Gazette says:—"We understand that Mr. Anthony Trollope will succeed Mr. George Neal as post office surveyor for this district. Mr. Trollope is a son of Mrs. Trollope, the celebrated writer, and is himself a talented and popular author."

Mr. Josiah Allen, of Birmingham, has in the press a facsimile edition of the Duke of Devonshire's quarto copies of "Hamlet," of 1603 and 1604.

The second volume of Mr. Buckle's "History of Civilization," is stated to be in preparation by Messrs. J. W. Parker and Son. The same publishers announce the third volume of Mr. Massey's "History of England during the reign of George III.," and the fifth and sixth volumes of Mr. Froude's "History of England."

If common report be not indeed a common liar, there are some prizes still left in the lottery of the press. Mr. W. H. Russell, the Times correspondent, is said to have received from Routledge £1,500 for his Indian diary.

The Leader newspaper is about to change its entire form. On and after the 7th of January it will assume more of the tone and character of a magazine, and will be called The Leader and Saturday Analyst. It will consist entirely of original articles, analysing the current events in politics, literature, science, and the fine arts. In their address the managers say: "The new career thus designed for the Leader is, indeed, only carrying out to the extreme its original intention of treating intellectually all public and social matters."

We hear that Mr. Maxwell (the proprietor of The Welcome Guest), and Mr. Frederick Vizetelly are projecting a new illustrated paper, to be published in the beginning of the new year, similar to the Illustrated Times.

At the meeting of the Royal Society, on the 8th instant, the chair was taken by the learned President, Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart. The President announced that he had appointed the following Fellows vice-presidents:—T. Bell, Esq.; Sir R. Murchison, D.C.L.; General Sabine, R.A.; Rev. Dr. Whewell, Sir W. P. Wood, and the Lord Wrottesley. Notice was given that at the next meeting of the Society the Right Hon. Lord Stanley would be proposed for election. The following papers were read:—"On the Analytical Theory of Attraction of Solids," by Prof. Donkin. Supplement "On the Thermodynamic Theory of Steam Engines with Dry Saturated Steam, &c.," by Prof. Rankine. "On the Effects produced on Human Blood Corpuscles by Sherry Wine," by Dr. W. Addison. Supplement "On the Influence of White Light, &c., on the Growth and Nutrition of Animals," by Mr. H. Dobell. "Researches on the Phosphorus Bases, No. 7," by Dr. Hofmann.

Sir Roderick Murchison presided at a meeting of the Geographical Society on the 12th instant, when Capt. Bedford, R.N.; Rear-Admiral Sir H. B. Martin, K.C.B.; H. Ancell, E. Butler, E. Calvert, W. C. Hood, M.D., H. Raikes, E. Smith, W. C. Smith, R. Todd, and J. Watson, Esqs., were elected Fellows. The papers read were:—"On the Trigonometrical Survey and Physical Configuration of the Valley of Kashmir," by Mr. W. Purdon, Executive Engineer, Punjab. "British Columbia, Journeys in the Districts bordering on the Fraser, Thompson, and Harrison Rivers," by Lieuts. Mayne, R.N., and Palmer, R.E., and Chief Justice M. Bigbie.

Some Australian journals report that Mr. E. Macready, a son of our famed actor, has appeared on the stage at Ballarat, proving himself on the occasion thoroughly familiar with the duties of his profession.

Mr. Hogarth, of the Haymarket, has now on view two oil sketches believed to be the work of his illustrious namesake—that great satirist of the Georgian era. The Athenæum says—"We hazard no opinion on their authenticity; for though they have certainly much of Hogarth's round touch, and the full body of colour employed by the great little man of the south side of Leicester-fields, they were put up lately at an unfortunate amateur's sale as 'sketches by Paul Veronese,' who, it is quite certain, had no finger in them. They are supposed, by good authorities, to be the work of that period of the painter's life when honours crowded upon him just as his genius was declining. There is indeed a tradition that, after being made serjeant painter to the King, the foolish ambition seized him of rivalling his inane father in law, Sir James Thornhill, and spoiling some great building with sham sacred pictures, as Sir James had spoilt St. Paul's. If art had been given to the serjeant painter, religious feeling was denied. But, with all due deference to Mr. Hogarth's judgment, we think it is scarcely doing justice to his namesake to attribute these clever sketches, from the story of John the Baptist, to so late a period of the painter's life. They have, to our eyes, the elasticity of touch and the ingenious arrangement of a much earlier period; and we should be more inclined to class them among the works of that vacillating epoch of his struggling youth, when he attempted sacred subjects with failure, and portraits too often without profit. The sketches represent 'The Martyrdom of John the Baptist in the Prison,' and 'The Entry of Herodias's Daughter, as Maid of Honour, with the Dead Man's Head in a Charger,' to the surprise and almost horror of Herod and his courtiers. The sketches are careful and ambitious in treatment, and are reasonably well drawn, with the exception of one ponderous soldier in wailing—who must be about ten feet high—some coarsely drawn female attendants, a caricature street cur sniffing about Herod's dishes, and a nobleman with caricatured head. The background is perhaps from St. Martin's-lane church. Some of the attitudes rather savour of Titan and Veronese. The only bit of humour is an old Jew Rabbi putting on his spectacles to see what it is on the dish. The colour is peachy and pleasant, and excellently preserved, having been covered with glass probably ever since the painting. The porous paper seems to have absorbed and filtered the oil of the painter's medium, so that the body colour has been left pure and bright upon the surface."

A GOLDEN RULE.—Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them, when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to be called.—Bacon.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

MODEL LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Under this head several features of our Masonic temples have been discussed in your useful publication. Diversity of opinion seems to exist as to what constitutes the ne plus ultra—the acmé of perfection—the "Model Lodge." Your correspondent "Fidelitas" condemns the holding of Lodges at a tavern, under some fancy of contagious vice or other objectionable principle.

I have been in the habit of attending Lodges wherever I have been, for some years past, and I have never heard a word in open Lodge objecting to such places of meeting, except on one occasion, and then the motion met with a premature death. As well might one condemn our Most Worshipful Grand Master, or even our most gracious Queen, because they visit racecourses, for fear they should be implicated in the circumvolutions of the thimble and the pea. Those who wish for refreshment will go where it is to be had, if not within the walls where the Lodge is held; it is as needful oftentimes as rest and sleep to the weary and fatigued; and members of Lodges are frequently more indebted to the proprietors of taverns for the accommodation they receive than the proprietors are for their patronage. For my part, I shall support the Freemasons' Tavern.

Another correspondent, "Z," has touched upon a favourite theme of mine, and I would suggest an improvement in the scheme he has presented. It is an undoubted fact that not only is there great difference in the working of Lodges, but there is no visiting body to whom you can apply for an authorized opinion; and grave suspicion of illegal sources from whence such workings have been derived has been entertained by working Masons of greater experience than myself. To remedy this state of affairs, a Lodge should be authorized to be formed of one member from each province, well learned in Masonic jurisprudence, appointed by the several Prov. Grand Masters, for the purpose of deciding the one, and only one, proper mode of conducting the ceremonies within our respective Lodges, and the charges and explanations connected therewith; to meet as often in London as they may deem proper, and form as it were a Congress; and that such provincial representative should visit every Lodge within the province to which he may be attached, to witness the exercise in every portion of the Ritual; to require all such as work imperfectly to attend such visitor, within such Lodge as he may be desired, to receive such correction in his working as may by such officer be deemed necessary. Such officer should from time to time report all his proceedings at every Grand Lodge that may be held within the province, and if he found any brother elected as W.M. who was incapable of performing the duties accurately, he should have power to suspend such brother until he has shewn his fitness for the office, granting authority to whomsoever he may think the most proper person of the Lodge, to discharge the duties of the chair in the meantime; the incapable officer forfeiting past rank if he fail to prove his knowledge of the arts and sciences connected with the Craft, before his year of office terminates.

I am, yours fraternally.

17th Dec. 1859.

R. E. X.

REGULAR v. SPURIOUS LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I should not think myself justified in furnishing you with the name of the Lodge I mentioned, without knowing for what purpose you require it. I should certainly not choose to be the occasion of another body of respectable and really honest Masons being vilified in the columns of a very doubtful daily paper. I had hoped for a reply to the query in my last communication; and the only conclusion I can arrive at from your silence is, that English Masons are placed in a very peculiar and awkward position between their allegiance to Grand Lodge and their overwhelming obligations as members of a fraternity which makes no distinction between rich and poor, and has for its only legitimate head the G.A.O.T.U. Although sorry to trespass further on your kindness, I must repeat my question. Should we be admitted as visitors to an English Lodge after having duly proved ourselves to be Masons? May I beg a candid reply to this question, without quibble as to the nature of diploma.

for on it rests the whole principle of Freemasonry; and your answer will determine me as to whether I shall consider the whole system of English Freemasonry a gigantic humbug, or whether I shall still consider it as one of the sublimest and most useful institutions in our country. Apologising for thus intruding on you again, but hoping that your love for Masonry, which is so well known, will excuse me, I am, yours sincerely and fraternally, 17th Dec., 1859.
A POOR MASON.

[We only asked the name of the Lodge and other particulars for our own private information. To our correspondent's question we have no hesitation in stating, distinctly and unhesitatingly, that no person professing to be a Mason under the so called Grand Lodge of Philadelphia, can be admitted as a visitor to an English Lodge; but any brother holding a certificate of the Grand Orient of France would be admitted, although the Grand Lodges of England and France are not on those terms of close communication which we could desire. At the same time it is an admitted rule all over the world, that no Grand Lodge can issue charters for Lodges to be held in a foreign country where a supreme national Grand Lodge or head is established. Were the plea once allowed, that because brethren think our fees too high for a certain body of men, they are at liberty to establish new Grand Lodges with lower fees, the whole unity of our body would be broken, and universal confusion ensue.—Ed.]

THE BLACKHEATH MEETING OF AUGUST, 1858.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As you were present at the Masonic gathering for West Kent, on the 26th of August, 1858, which was ushered in by several grand announcements of the great good it was to do for Freemasonry, and the benefit the charities were to receive from it, I beg to ask what have been its results as far as the charities are concerned? Having carefully looked over all the subscribers to each of the institutions, I have failed to discover that any one of them has reaped one penny advantage by the same; and from the tone assumed at the time, I presume there must be a considerable surplus fund available in the hands of some of the most prominent leaders of the meeting. These were, according to your report, (page 415, of vol. v.) of the Freemasons' Magazine, Bros. Hinxman, M.D., Bailey, Green, Figwright, Crew, Thistleton, and H. G. Warren; and I hope that yourself, or some one of those referred to, will come forward and tell us what were the expenses incurred, the amount received, and the surplus in hand to be devoted to the Masonic charities.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
A MEMBER OF WEST KENT MASONRY.

[Our correspondent is wrong in supposing that Bro. Warren had anything to do with the management of the meeting. He only attended as the representative of the Freemasons' Magazine. Bros. Crew and Thistleton were, we believe, merely present in their official capacities as secretaries of the two schools. What were the results of the gathering we know not—but we fear it was a failure.—Ed.]

MASONIC HALLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It being so generally thought advisable that we should not only get our Lodges removed from the public houses, but that we should also endeavour to erect Masonic halls in all places where a sufficient number of members can be found to maintain them, I would suggest that you invite the architects belonging to the Craft to furnish plans of the most suitable class of building for the purpose, embracing beauty and purity of style, with necessary accommodation, at a reasonable outlay. I have no doubt this would be cheerfully responded to on your offering to publish them in weekly rotation, and would, I think, induce many Lodges to take the matter into consideration who otherwise might not think of it. I would further suggest that the point aimed at should be to give accommodation to one hundred members; and should embrace—a Lodge, refreshment, preparation, and committee, or instruction rooms, with closets and kitchens, at a cost for the building (exclusive of land) of not more than one thousand pounds, which could of course be increased or decreased according to requirements. Should these suggestions meet your views, by drawing attention to them you will oblige,

Dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
A PROV. J.G.W.

[We shall be happy as far as possible to meet the views of our correspondent, but we cannot undertake to publish designs of halls every week.—Ed.]

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

At the monthly meeting of the Board of Benevolence, on Wednesday last, twelve applicants were relieved with various sums, amounting together to £140; and the case of another applicant recommended to Grand Lodge for a grant of £50.

The United Pilgrims and Domestic United Chapter of Instruction will, in future, be held at Bro. Hill's, West-square, Southwark, at half-past seven, each Thursday evening. The meeting of Thursday next will be held at half-past six precisely.

ROYAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION FOR AGED FREE-MASONS AND THEIR WIDOWS.

We have been favoured with a copy of the following:—

"Grand Secretary's Office, Freemasons' Hall, London, W.C.
10th Dec. 1859.

"DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Herewith I have much pleasure in forwarding you an extract of the Minutes of the Committee of Management—unanimously adopted this day—which I trust will prove gratifying to you.

"Believe me to remain, dear Sir and Brother, your fraternally,
"To Bro. Joseph Smith. "W. FARNFIELD, Sec."

Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows.

At a meeting of the Committee of Management, held on Wednesday, the 7th day of December, 1859, at Freemasons' Hall, London. The W. Bro. John Udall, V.P. in the chair.

"The Secretary read a communication he had received from Bro. Wm. Gray Clarke, G.S.E., of the 24th of November last, whereupon it was "Resolved—That the best thanks of this Committee are due, and are hereby tendered to the W. Bro. J. Smith for his exertions in the Grand Chapter on behalf of this institution, which have been attended with such satisfactory results—by a grant of £200 three per cent consols, to the trustees of the stock for granting annuities to Aged Freemasons, and a like sum of £200, three per cent consols, to the trustees for granting annuities to the Widows of deceased Freemasons."

A true extract from the Minutes.

Freemasons' Hall, London,
10th Dec., 1859.

W. FARNFIELD, Sec.

METROPOLITAN.

GRAND STEWARDS' LODGE.—Time was when this Lodge was regarded to a great extent as the standard and criterion of excellent working, and its public nights in March and December were looked to by the brethren as periods of Masonic enjoyment, in which every one, more especially the younger Masons, were desirous of participating. At that period there were rarely less than one hundred or one hundred and fifty brethren present, but from some cause, we know not what, the interest appeared to die out, and the meetings of the Lodge became so unattractive, that it was no uncommon thing for the members to find themselves lecturing to empty benches—half a dozen visitors being looked upon as something extraordinary. Indeed, about two years since, it was actually proposed by the then S.W., that the public nights should be abandoned, when he was resolutely opposed by two or three brethren (including the present most excellent W.M.), who had sufficient confidence in themselves to believe that there was yet enough vitality in the Lodge to restore it to somewhat of its pristine splendour. The brother who had proposed the discontinuance of the public nights resigned the Lodge, and Bro. Johnston being reelected W.M., the work of reconstruction and reorganization commenced. On Wednesday last Bro. Hewlett, the W.M., and the brethren, fully enjoyed the triumph of their exertions, there being upwards of seventy brethren present, including a large number of the best Masons in the Order, to witness the working of the second and third lectures; and everything passed off with the utmost precision, notwithstanding that (owing to the absence of two of the brethren who were to have worked sections, and the immediate Past Master), an undue amount of work was thrown on the shoulders of Bro. Watson, the Secretary of the Lodge. Bro. Hewlett took the chair precisely at eight o'clock; and the Lodge having been opened in the second degree, the lecture was proceeded with, the sections being worked as follows:—first—Bro. Watson; second—Bro. Nutt; third—Bro. Hinxman; fourth—Bro. Mereweather; fifth—Bro. Watson. The Lodge was then opened in the third degree, and the lecture worked—first section by Bro. Hinxman; second—Bro. Warren, and third—Bro. Watson. At the conclusion of the working, in which every brother exerted himself to the utmost, as though stimulated by the knowledge that he was being listened to by numbers of brethren whose good working has become acknowledged throughout the Order, Bro. Savage, S.G.D., having obtained the permission of the Worshipful Master to address the Lodge, said it gave him sincere pleasure to be allowed the privilege of proposing a vote of thanks to the Worshipful Master and brethren of the Grand Stewards' Lodge for the rich Masonic treat afforded to the Craft that evening; and he was sure the attendance of so many of the brethren must be most gratifying, especially to the Worshipful Master, who he knew had exerted himself most strenuously to restore to the Lodge the high reputation it had formerly enjoyed; and in which it was evident he was well supported by the other members of the Lodge. He recollected his first visit to the Grand Stewards' Lodge on the third Wednesday in December, now something like twenty years since, when only a Fellow Craft, and how struck he then was with the excellence of the work—though being, as he had told them, but in the second degree, he could only participate in the early portion of the evening's work. From that time he had attended the public nights of the Grand Stewards' Lodge for many years, and with the recollection strong in his mind of the excellent working of Bros. Norton—his own namesake—Wilson, Acklom, Enly, and many others, who had now passed to the Grand Lodge above, he never derived greater pleasure from the working than he had that evening. Of late years he had not been enabled to attend the Grand Stewards' working as previously; and he regretted that his attendance at the Board of Benevolence that evening had deprived him of the pleasure of being present throughout the working; but he had heard the whole of the third lecture, and the manner in which it had been gone through had convinced him that with its present members the Grand Stewards' Lodge would lose none of its lustre, but that the mantle of their distinguished predecessors had worthily descended on their shoulders; and he trusted they might long live to enjoy it, and afford to the brethren many such Masonic treats as they had enjoyed that evening—in the appreciation of which he was sure he was joined by every brother present. It was true that there were slight differences in working, but in the essentials there were no differences; and the Grand Stewards' Lodge being the depository of the ancient working, it was most gratifying to find the W.M. and the brethren of the Lodge so capable, not only of appreciating its beauties, but of rendering it so as to afford gratification and pleasure to the other members of the Craft. Wishing the Grand Stewards' Lodge a long reign of prosperity, he begged to move a vote of thanks—feeling that it would be cordially seconded by every visitor present—to the W. Master and brethren, for the opportunity afforded them of listening to such excellent working. Bro. Smith, (G. P.M.) and Bro. Farmer, (W.M. No. 25) rising together, the latter gave way, and Bro. Smith said, it gave him great pleasure to be allowed the privilege of seconding the motion of a vote of thanks to the W.M. and brethren of the Lodge, for what Bro. Savage had truly designated as a Masonic treat; and the brethren might rest assured that so long as they maintained such excellent working, they would never want for a good muster of the Craft on their public nights. The resolution having been carried, Bro. Hewlett, W.M., returned thanks on behalf of himself and the members of the Lodge for the kind and handsome manner in which their exertions had been acknowledged by Bro. Savage and Smith, and responded to by the brethren. It had certainly been one of the dearest objects of his ambition to endeavour to restore the public nights of the Grand Stewards' Lodge to something like their ancient position, and they might therefore well understand how gratified he was by the attendance of so large and distinguished a number of the brethren as had honoured the working of the Grand Stewards' Lodge with their presence that evening. He regretted that owing to the unavoidable absence of two or three brethren who had undertaken sections, their working had not been more perfect, but those present had done their best, and he was sure that the recollection of the brilliant attendance that evening would stimulate them to greater exertions in the future. It was indeed matter of pride to himself that at a period when probably he was about to be called upon to resign the chair of a Lodge which had existed for one hundred and forty years as the repository of the true and ancient system of working, to find his exertions for the resuscitation of its ancient fame so well seconded by the brethren of the Lodge and so generously acknowledged by the largest assemblage which had for many years graced the public nights of the Grand Stewards' Lodge; and whether in or out of the chair, he could assure them he would continue to exercise his utmost exertions to promote the prosperity of the Lodge, being happy in finding there were now amongst its members many brethren looking up to fill the proud position he then occupied, whose Masonic abilities would reflect the highest honour upon it. The Lodge was then closed; and a number of the brethren shortly afterwards adjourned to a light refreshment. The next public night will take place in March, when we hope there will be even a more numerous attendance of the brethren than on Wednesday last—as nothing is more likely to secure good working by the brethren than the knowledge that it will be closely scanned by numerous Masons of ability, well qualified to form an opinion of the manner in which they perform their respective duties.

ENOCH LODGE (No. 15).—The second monthly meeting for the season of this Lodge took place on Wednesday, the 14th instant, at the Freemasons Tavern, when the W.M., Bro. James Pain, initiated into the mysteries of the Craft Messrs. M. C. W. Horne, A. Goldsmid, and

J. T. Menzies; and passed Bro. Swan. The election of W.M. for the ensuing year was the next business, and as the S.W., Bro. Geaman, resigned the honour through ill health, Bro. George Edward Sewell, the J.W., was unanimously elected. Bro. W. Williams was re-elected Treasurer, and Bro. John Crawley, Tyler. Several members having been proposed for ballot and election next month, the W.M. closed his Lodge. Nearly forty of the brethren then retired to banquet, presided over most ably and pleasantly by the W.M., Bro. Pain, who gave the usual toasts, Bros. George Tedder, Lewis, Austen, and Watson, by their vocal abilities, adding to the enjoyment of a most happy evening. The visitors were Bros. S. Larcomb (Crescent, No. 1,090), William Scott (St. George, No. 184), William Hughes (Royal Naval, No. 70), W. H. Jackson (Royal Naval, No. 70), Samuel Webb (Confidence, No. 228), Charles Evans (Fitzroy, No. 830).

KENT LODGE (No. 15).—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Wednesday, the 14th inst., at Bro. Harris's, the Three Tuns Tavern, Southwark, Bro. Mariner, W.M., presided, assisted by Bros. Anslow, P.M., as S.W. pro tem.; and Cossens, J.W. The business of the evening consisted of three raisings, one passing, and two initiations, which ceremonies were performed in a manner highly creditable to the Lodge. The sum of ten guineas was voted by the Lodge towards the Widows Fund, and a further sum of ten pounds to the widow of a deceased member of the Lodge, whose bereavement was great, owing to the loss of her husband while following his occupation as engineer. All business being concluded, and the Lodge closed in due form, the brethren retired to the banquet. The usual loyal toasts being given and responded to, Bro. C. C. Gibbs, P.M., proposed the health of the W.M. Bro. Mariner in reply assured the brethren he felt great pleasure in receiving their kindly expressions of fraternal regard, and trusted while he had the honour of presiding, his conduct would be such as to meet a continuance of their esteem. Bro. Whitehouse, P.M., proposed the better health of their much respected Treasurer, Bro. Richard Barnes, whose absence they much regretted, he being unable to attend the duties of his office from severe indisposition. Bro. R. E. Barnes, P.M., and Hon. Sec., in rising to thank the brethren, assured them he should indeed be wanting in filial as well as fraternal affection, were he insensible to the very great mark of respect they had unanimously evinced towards his father—they well knew his zeal and punctual attendance for a long series of years, also his ardent wish for the welfare of the Lodge. The W.M. then proposed the health of the newly initiated brethren, Bros. Woodrow and Sennett, which was duly received and responded to. The health of the visiting brethren was also given and replied to, and the evening was spent in a truly Masonic spirit.

TEMPLE LODGE (No. 118).—The members of this Lodge met on Tuesday, the 6th instant, at four, P.M. Bro. Hastilow, P.M., in the absence of the W.M., occupied the chair and was supported by Bros. A. Day, S.W., and E. Farthing, J.W. The Lodge was opened in due form with solemn prayer in the first, second and third degrees. Bros. Jarman and Lyn having shown their proficiency as F.C. were duly raised to the sublime degree of M.M. in Bro. Hastilow's usual impressive manner. This being the night for the election of W.M., a ballot was taken and declared unanimous in favour of Bro. A. Day, who returned thanks in a very feeling manner for the high honour conferred upon him. The installation will take place on the first Tuesday in February. Bro. Beard (the Hon. Sec.), also announced that the annual ball in connection with this Lodge will take place as usual at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, about the middle of February, due notice of which will be given. The brethren were then called off from labour to refreshment. The brethren mustered very numerous, including forty-nine visitors. A very pleasant evening was spent, which was much enlivened by the excellent singing of Bros. Perrin, Sen., Farthing, Lawrence and others. The Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren separated about ten o'clock. "Happy to meet, happy to part, happy to meet again."

INSTRUCTION.

CRYSTAL PALACE LODGE (No. 1044).—A very numerous meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, December 19th, at the City Arms, West-square, Southwark. Bro. Anslow (in the absence of Bro. Bertram) presided; Bro. Arnold, P.M. of No. 165, S.W., and Bro. Blackburn, P.M. of No. 11, J.W. The business of the evening was devoted to the working of the fifteen sections, and they were distributed as follows:—First lecture, first section, Bros. Robertson; second, Hood; third, White; fourth, Newman; fifth, Blackburn; sixth, H. T. Thompson; and seventh, Arnold. Second lecture, first section, Bros. Bradley; second, Brett; third, Stuart; fourth Hill; and fifth, Thomas. Third lecture, first section, Bros. Hollins; second, Farmer; and third, J. R. Warren. At the conclusion of the sections, on the motion of Bro. J. R. Warren, seconded by Bro. Arnold, a vote of thanks was ordered to be recorded on the minutes to Bro. Anslow, for the able manner in which he had presided on that occasion. Bro. Anslow acknowledged the compliment, and the Lodge adjourned until the 2nd of January.

PROVINCIAL.

BRISTOL.

BRISTOL.—Royal Clarence Lodge (No. 81).—At the usual fortnightly meeting of this flourishing Lodge, held on Monday, the 12th instant, two exceedingly interesting instances of the practical influence of that truly Masonic virtue, relief, came under the notice of the brethren. A letter (written on board the Great Britain) was read from a brother P.M. of a Lodge, now on his passage to Australia, thanking the brethren, in the warmest possible language, for their liberality towards him at a time of the deepest distress. This brother, from adverse circumstances, over which he had no control, was reduced to the lowest state of poverty, and whilst an inmate of St. Peter's Hospital (the City Workhouse), as a last resource, addressed a communication to the R.W.D. Prov. Grand Master, soliciting the assistance of his Masonic brethren. The case having been brought before the various Lodges, with a liberality truly commendable in a very short time a handsome sum was contributed, which enabled the brethren who had taken the matter in hand, to secure a passage in the abovenamed vessel, and comfortably to fit out their grateful brother on his voyage to Melbourne, there to join his family. The truly eloquent letter of this highly intelligent Past Master was ordered to be inserted in the minutes of the Lodge. The W.M., Bro. Thos. Sainsbury, also stated that he had a most gratifying circumstance to bring before the brethren at the request of Bro. Capt. Stroud a member of this Lodge. This brother, while in command of the ship Premier, was wrecked in the Bay of Biscay, picked up with one or two of his crew by a Hanoverian brig on her passage to Melbourne, and landed at Table Bay, Cape of Good Hope. On his arrival at Cape Town in a state of utter destitution, observing a British name (that of Williams) over a store, he entered with the hope of disposing of, or raising a sum of money upon, his nautical instruments, which, together with his Grand Lodge certificate, were the only articles of any description he had been able to save. Although he bore no emblem of the Order, or exhibited no Masonic sign, this brother casually inquired of him if he were a Freemason, and upon his replying in the affirmative and proving the same by means of his certificate, with a liberality which did him credit, Bro. Williams immediately handed him an ample sum for his present need, and requested him to attend the usual meeting of the British Lodge, which happened to be held that evening. On his arrival at the Lodge he was most cordially welcomed by the brethren (particularly by Bros. Russell, P.M., and Widdowes, P.M.), and in a very short time the munificent sum of £30 was raised for his relief, the brethren also giving a fraternal recommendation to the Lodge Goede Trouw, which met on the following evening, and in this Lodge, composed exclusively of Dutch brethren, a farther sum of £12 was handed him. Bro. Stroud also stated that during the whole of his stay, whilst awaiting the arrival of a homeward bound vessel, he was treated in the most hospitable and fraternal manner by these brethren. Being about immediately to sail from Liverpool in another ship, he was unable to attend his Lodge, but was extremely anxious to convey to the brethren of his mother Lodge this pleasing intelligence, and through the Worshipful Master to express, if possible, to the brethren of Cape Town, his warmest gratitude for their kindness towards him, as also for their munificent contributions, which he should ever regard in the light of a loan and take the earliest possible opportunity of refunding. This pleasing communication was received with much interest, and a proposition was at once made, and carried amidst the unanimous acclamations of the brethren: "That the Worshipful Master be requested to address a fraternal letter to the brethren of the British Lodge and the Lodge Goede Trouw, Cape of Good Hope, thanking them for their truly Masonic conduct towards a brother of this Lodge when placed in circumstances of great distress." The election of Worshipful Master, which will doubtless fall unanimously upon Bro. B. H. Rice, Prov. S.W., will take place on Monday, the 26th inst.; the installation on St. John's day, the 27th, at three o'clock p.m.; and the annual banquet immediately afterwards at the Montague Hotel.

[We give the names in the foregoing narrative by request (through our correspondent) of Bro. Stroud himself, who was particularly anxious that some notice of this matter might be taken by the Freemasons' Magazine, which "valuable paper" he found was read with lively interest by the brethren in Cape Town, and through the reports contained in which some of them were conversant with the name of the Worshipful Master and other matters connected with the Royal Clarence Lodge.—Ed.]

CHANNEL ISLANDS.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE AT JERSEY.

THE Provincial Grand Master, I. I. Hammond, Esq., having called an extraordinary meeting of the Freemasons of the province at six on the evening of Friday, December 16th, there were present at the time appointed about a dozen brethren; this number slowly increased up to seven o'clock; for which hour it was stated that the summons was really intended, though on the paper an hour earlier was mentioned. This regulation though sanctioned by custom, appears most absurd, and several who thought it so were on the point of leaving the room. It gives those who are dilatory an excuse, and it is a tax on those who are punctual. It should be stated, that the Prov. Grand Master was the first to arrive, thus as usual setting a good example. Precisely at seven o'clock the Prov. Grand Officers, or rather about half of them, the remainder being absent, formed in procession in a private room, and preceded their chief to the hall, in which about a dozen brethren were assembled; the whole number present did not much exceed twenty, and during the transaction of business not double that number attended.

The Prov. Grand Master [opened] the Lodge, with Bro. Miller, acting as D. Prov. G.M., and Bros. J. Johnson and Gremmond filling their respective chairs as Prov. Grand Wardens. The Prov. G. Treasurer, Bro. Du Jardin, and the Prov. G. Secretary, Bro. Adams, were also in their places, and about four other officers, including one of the six Prov. G. Stewards.

The Prov. Grand Secretary read the circular convening the meeting, but when requested to comply with the first entry upon it, by laying before Prov. Grand Lodge the returns of the several Lodges within the province, he stated his inability to do so, as he had transferred them to the Prov. Grand Registrar. The report of the local Board of Benevolence was the next item, which also the Secretary said he had not prepared, under an impression that it was not a portion of his duty, but of that of the Prov. Grand Treasurer.

Bro. Du Jardin, Prov. Grand Treasurer said he did not consider it as his business to prepare a formal report, but having his books at hand, he was able to state that only five pounds had been paid during the present year, it being a sum voted to Bro. John Battam, now deceased; the Prov. Grand Treasurer added that he had a balance in hand amounting to about £120.

The Prov. Grand Treasurer was called upon for the returns of the different Lodges which also were read from the books, as no balance sheet had been prepared.

The Prov. Grand Master expressed his earnest wish that in future a separate sheet might be presented, which might lie on the table for the inspection of the brethren, who could not be expected, each for himself, to examine the different books of accounts. It was desirable that every brother should be able to see at a glance the condition of the various funds, at least on occasion of the Prov. Grand Lodge.

The Prov. Grand Treasurer reported that he had no money in hand, but that on the contrary a few shillings were owing to him; there were considerable arrears, which has been accumulating for the last ten years on the part of Prov. Grand Officers, who had omitted to pay their fees on appointment, some of which were irrecoverable, as the brethren had left the island. He was always ready to receive these sums, but did not consider it as his duty to make application for them.

The Prov. Grand Secretary then read the report drawn up by the Local Board of General Purposes, in which announcement was made of various matters of detail which had been considered and disposed of, and also of the examination and payment of some accounts; it included the returns of the different Lodges in the province, showing a total of £30 10s. 0d. The report contained an especial notice of the arrears of Prov. Grand Officers, with a list of those who had neglected to pay the fees.

This excited a lengthy discussion, in which many brethren took part, some of them strongly expressing regret that their names had been thus unfavourably presented to the Lodge, inasmuch as no application for payment had been made to them, otherwise they would instantly have complied; while several were not even aware that there were fees to be paid on appointment to office; they considered that copies of the by-laws of Prov. Grand Lodge ought to have been presented to them, which would have put them in possession of the facts.

The Prov. Grand Master expressed his regret at the imputations thus made, for which he was quite aware there existed no foundation as regarded many brethren.

On the motion of Bro. Du Jardin, seconded by Bro. Miller, this matter was referred back to the Local Board of General Purposes.

Among the recommendations of this Board was one to the effect that, with the approval of the Prov. Grand Master, it is desirable to hold two regular meetings of Provincial Grand Lodge in each year instead of one.

In the absence from illness of Bro. Hocquard, President of the Board, Bro. Du Jardin proposed alterations in the by-laws with this object, which being duly seconded, were passed unanimously after some little discussion.

The Prov. Grand Lodge having been then closed, the brethren adjourned to the Exeter Inn, where a supper had been provided, and spent two hours together in pleasant social intercourse.

[Your correspondent is not a member of any Lodge in the island, though at present a resident there. He therefore feels at liberty to notice a point of difference between the practice here and elsewhere. In some districts the Prov. Grand Master summons the Prov. Grand Lodge to meet at the different Lodges in his province in rotation; whereas here it is held independent of all of them. There are advantages in each plan, but perhaps those of the former predominate—a little rivalry is excited between the private Lodges as to the style of reception given to Prov. Grand Lodges which acts as a beneficial incentive. But the main point is this, that the Masonic chief of the province has but one person to hold responsible for the good management and due preparation, namely, the W.M. of the Lodge in whose rooms the meeting is held, who ought to put himself in communication with the Secretary, Director of Ceremonies, Stewards, and others, and concert everything necessary for comfort and order. The absence of some such plan is much felt in Jersey, where there appears a divided responsibility, and too much is thus thrown upon the Prov. Grand Master, who ought to have nothing to do with the details, except to give the order to convene Prov. Grand Lodge, and the appointment of the place where it is to be held. If some such arrangement were adopted in Jersey, probably better preparations would have been made than were manifested at this meeting. These remarks are made in all courtesy and deference to the Prov. Grand Master, who certainly is most anxious to do all in his power to promote the happiness and welfare of the Lodges which are under his jurisdiction.—H. H.]

DEVONSHIRE.

STONEHOUSE.—Lodge of Sincerity (No. 24).—At the regular meeting, held pursuant to notice, Bro. R. R. Rodd, W.M., in the chair, present: Bros. Tripe, P.M.; Lord Graves, S.W.; Knowling, J.W.; Dix, acting Chaplain; Spence Bate, Sec.; Ridley, S.D.; Rae, J.D.; Walker, I.G.; Dowse, P.M.; Hunt, P.M.; Cave, W.M., No. 122; Russel, P.M.; Triscott, Owen; and visiting brethren, Ratcliff and Nowel—the Lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the last meeting were confirmed. Bro. Rains was then examined, and having been found to have made due progress, was solemnly passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. Bro. Batten was then examined as to the progress of his studies in the hidden mysteries of nature and science, and was afterwards raised to the sublime degree of M.M. The Lodge was then worked down to the first degree, when Bro. Heath was balloted for and elected as a joining member. The by-laws, as amended, were read and ordered to be put into type. Some bills were ordered to be paid, and the half-yearly banquet was decided to be held at Bro. Thomas's Hotel, Devonport, on the 22nd inst., at six P.M. The Lodge was closed in peace and harmony at ten o'clock.

DURHAM.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—St. Hilda's Lodge (No. 292).—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening, December 12th, at Bro. Carmon's, Golden Lion Hotel, the W.M. (Bro. Oliver) presiding, supported by Bros. Foster, Ridley, Toshach, Hewison, T. Fenwick (W.M. elect of St. George's, No. 624, North Shields), Twizell and Tulloch, P.M.s; and assisted by Bros. J. Hinde, S.W.; Buckland, J.W.; and other officers. After four gentlemen had been initiated, Bro. Hinde, S.W., the W.M. elect, was presented for installation by Bro. Forster, P.M., and after having been duly obligated, was placed in the chair by a board of P.M.s and duly saluted by the brethren. The ceremony of installation was ably and effectively conducted by Bro. Ridley, P.M., wearing his costume of a P. Prov. J.G.W. The W.M. appointed his officers as follows: Bros. J. J. Oliver, P.M.; Buckland, S.W.; Roddams, J.W.; Featherstone, Chap.; Hindmarch S.D.; J. D. Laister, Treas.; G. S. Shotton, Sec.; Barlow, J.D.; Watt, Org.; Buchanan, I.G.; and Dunbar, Tyler; Chambers and Windass, Stewards. Previous to the W.M. investing the Tyler, he presented to the Lodge a beautiful and elaborately mounted sword for the use of the Outer Guard. The brethren having adjourned to refreshment, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to with the accustomed Masonic honours. A sum of five pounds was voted towards the funds raised for the new Mechanics' Institute now in course of erection. The treasurer's account was presented by the auditors, showing a balance of £169 11s. 6d. in favour of the Lodge, and ordered to be printed; during the year a sum of £47 13s. 0d. has been voted towards the Masonic and other charities. After some other business the Lodge was closed in due form.

KENT.

ASHFORD.—Invicta Lodge (No. 1011).—The installation of Worshipful Master of this Lodge took place on Wednesday, the 14th instant, at the Assembly Rooms. Bro. Wm. Sheppard, the first Junior Warden of the Lodge, was duly installed in the chair, the ceremony being ably conducted by Bro. C. I. Cooke, P. Prov. S.G.W. Bro. Sheppard appointed the following officers: Bro. B. Thorpe, Prov. G. Reg., being the immediate P.M.; Bros. B. K. Thorpe, S.W.; M. Kingsford, J.W.; J. S. Easter, Sec.; W. H. K. Springen, S.D.; M. Freason, J.D.; H. Maund, I.G.; H. Collins, Org. The following brethren of the Lodge were present—Thos. Hallows, P.M.; P. Prov. S.G.W.; G. W. Greenhill, W. Lond. R. Mansell, W. G. Oliver, J. Warrington, and F. C. Hallows; and the visitors were Bros. H. Stock, P.M.; P. Prov. G. Supt. of Works; and T. Kelsey, of No. 816; T. A. Chubb, P.M., No. 1; Ed. Ashdown, P.M.; G. Key, P.M.; and E. Tomalin, S.W., of No. 147; S. M. Shrubsole, W.M.; and J. Greaves, of No. 155. Before Bro. Thorpe left the chair, in the name of the brethren, he presented to Bro. T. Hallows a handsome P.M. jewel, on which was engraved the following inscription:—"Presented to Thomas Hallows, Esq., by the brethren of the Invicta Lodge, Ashford, as a token of gratitude for his valuable assistance in the formation and working of the Lodge, and as a mark of esteem for him as a Mason." Bro. Hallows is so impressed with the advantages and beauties of Freemasonry that although residing twenty miles distant, he has not hesitated to give up much valuable time in the establishment of this Lodge, and has rarely been absent from its monthly meetings since its foundation in 1857. At the close of the Lodge the brethren dined together, and passed a pleasant evening, during which the usual Masonic toasts were given and responded to, the newly installed Worshipful Master presiding.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

LOUTH.—Lindsey Lodge (No. 1014).—The members of this Lodge met at their new rooms on Wednesday week, for the purpose of installing Bro. Christopher Ingoldby, who had been elected W.M. at the last Lodge night. The chair was taken by Bro. Waite, who very effectively discharged the duties of installing master. After having been duly conducted to the chair, and saluted by the brethren according to the ancient ceremonies of the Craft, the new Master appointed and invested the following Officers:—Bros. S. Trought, M.D., S.W.; James Fowler, J.W.; R. J. Nell, Treasurer; Geo. Edwards, Secretary; C. M. Nesbitt, J.D.; Anselm Osling, J.D.; F. P. Cupias and J. G. Williams, Stewards; J. S. Young, I.G.; R. P. Hadjam, Tyler. At the conclusion of the ceremony, the W.M., after thanking the brethren for the honour conferred upon him, moved in terms of well merited eulogy, that the thanks of the Lodge be presented to Bro. J. F. Waite, for the zealous manner in which he had occupied the chair during the past year. Bro. Dr. Trought, S.W. seconded the motion, which was carried with Masonic enthusiasm. The Lodge being closed, the brethren adjourned to refreshment, and passed a most agreeable and harmonious evening. The Lodge meetings are now held at seven in the evening instead of six as heretofore, and under its present able and efficient Master and officers will, we are sure, maintain and improve upon the high position it holds in the province. The festival of St. John will be celebrated at a Lodge of Emergency summoned for Tuesday next, when a brother will be raised to the third degree.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

NEWCASTLE.—Lodge de Loraine (No. 793).—This Lodge met at Freemasons' Hall, on Friday, the 16th inst. There was a large attendance of Past Masters and brethren. Bro. Wm. Johnson, P.M., of Lodge No. 24, installed Bro. Septimus Bell, W.M. elect, to the chair, according to the ancient usages and customs of the Craft. Bro. S. Bell, W.M., invested the following as officers:—Bros. T. Alexander, P.M.; E. D. Davis, P.M., Dir. of Cars; Rev. S. Y. B. Bradshaw, Chaplain; T. Anderson, S.W.T.; B. Winter, J. W.; R. Smaile, Sec.; J. Stokoe, Treas.; J. Bales, S.D.; G. Twigg, J.D.; J. G. Panman, Org.; T. E. D. Byrne, I.G.; W. Bales, S.S.; A. Mosley, J.S.; J. Bousfield, Purveyor; Alex. Dickson, Tyler. The annual festival will be held at Bro. J. Brodie's, Turk's Head Inn, in conjunction with the brethren of Lodge No. 24, on St. John's Day, Dec. 27th. During the last twelve months this Lodge has had twenty initiations, and twenty-three subscribing members added to their roll.

STAFFORDSHIRE.

HANLEY.—Menturia Lodge (No. 606).—The members of this Lodge held their annual festival of St. John's on Tuesday, December 13th, at the Mason's Arms Inn, Upper Hanley. After the ceremony of the installation of Bro. John C. Daniel as Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, the members and visitors (numbering between forty and fifty) adjourned to an excellent dinner, provided by Bro. T. Simpson. The after proceedings were of the usual diversified and interesting character.

WARWICKSHIRE.

BIRMINGHAM.—St. Paul's Lodge (No. 51).—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the Union Hotel, on the 28th November last. The Lodge was well attended by brethren under the presidency of the W.M., Bro. Wm. B. Briggs. The R.W. Prov. G.M., Lord Leigh, was present. The Lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes of the previous Lodge read and confirmed. Bros. Boddington, York, and Allen were duly examined, and the Lodge being opened in the second degree, the brethren were duly passed. It was proposed by the Hon. Sec., Bro. Alfred W. Suckling, and seconded by the W.M., "That there should be an especial performance at the Alhambra Circus for the benefit of Bro. Wallett, who had contributed by his performances so largely to the funds of the charities of the town, under the patronage of the Prov. Grand Master, and the various Lodges of the province," and carried unanimously. The Prov. G.M., Lord Leigh, intimated his intention of being present on the occasion of the performance. The W.M. proposed as a joining member Bro. the Rev. — Edwards. The Lodge was closed with perfect harmony and brotherly love, and the brethren proceeded to dinner. At the conclusion the W.M. gave the usual loyal toasts, which were cordially responded to. The W.M. gave the first Masonic toast, "The health of the Grand Master, the Earl of Zetland," which was most warmly received. The W.M. next gave "The Health of the R. W. Prov. Grand Master, Lord Leigh," stating that he had the greatest pleasure in doing so, inasmuch as the Prov. Grand Master had at all times shown a great interest in Masonry, and particularly in the prosperity of the Lodges in the province over which his lordship so well presided, and he hoped he might long continue to hold the office of Prov. Grand Master. This was received with great enthusiasm and Masonic honours. His lordship, in a truly Masonic speech, congratulated the Lodge at having such a W.M., who also was an officer in the Rifle Volunteers; and further stated that he would have the pleasing duty to preside at the Anniversary Festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and their Widows, and should feel great pleasure in so doing; he hoped many Warwickshire brethren would be there to support him. (Cheers). In conclusion he thanked the brethren for the honour they had done him, by the manner in which his health had been received, and alluded to the fact that he had spent many happy hours in the St. Paul's Lodge. The noble lord then said that he had to propose the next toast, which was a most pleasing duty. It was with great satisfaction he had witnessed the working of the W.M., and hoped he would long live to be an honour to the St. Paul's Lodge; he proposed "The health of the Worshipful Master." This was received with full Masonic honours. The W.M., in responding, stated he felt a great and Masonic interest in the prosperity of the Lodge, and although he should leave the chair in December, he should ever continue to do all in his power to promote the interest of the Lodge; and feel the warmest gratitude towards the officers and brethren who had so well supported him. The W.M. then proposed "The health of the Visiting Brethren," coupling with it the name of Bro. Blake, who responded in a feeling speech. Bro. Elkington, P.G.S.B., and Prov. G. Sec., proposed "The health of the Past Masters of St. Paul's Lodge," which was warmly responded to by Bro. Stillman, P.M. The W.M. proposed "The health of the Officers of the Lodge, coupling with it the name of the Junior Warden, who responded in an able speech. The W.M. then stated that he rose with pleasure to propose "The health of the Hon. Sec.," which he did in eulogistic terms, thanking him for the interest he had always displayed for the welfare of the Lodge, and the uniform courtesy which he invariably displayed towards its members. The Hon. Sec., Bro. Alfred W. Suckling, briefly responded, and the business of the evening was brought to a close in harmony shortly before ten o'clock.

WILTSHIRE.

TROWBRIDGE.—Lodge of Concord (No. 915).—This Lodge held its last meeting for the year on Tuesday, the 13th instant, at the Court Hall, Trowbridge:—present, Bros. H. C. Levander, W.M.; G. Plimmer, S.W.; J. Allen, J.W.; F. Webber, P.M.; and other brethren. After the minutes of the previous meeting had been read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for Mr. Solomon Saxty as a candidate for initiation. The result being in his favour, he was admitted and duly initiated into the mysteries of our ancient Order. The brethren then proceeded to ballot for a Worshipful Master for the ensuing year, when the present W.M. was reelected. Bro. J. E. Hayward was also reelected Treasurer, and Bro. W. Bailey, Tyler. Auditors of the accounts, and Stewards for the approaching annual festival, were also appointed. All Masonic business being ended, the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

ROYAL ARCH.

INSTRUCTION.

UNITED PILGRIMS AND DOMASTIC UNITED CHAPTERS.—This Chapter of Instruction, so celebrated for its correct working in Royal Arch Masonry, having removed from the Queen Elizabeth, Walworth, to Comp. Hill's, the City Arms, West-square, St. George's Road, near the Elephant and Castle, the opening took place at the latter house, on Thursday, the 8th December, on which occasion Comp. Ladd, M.D., presided as M.E.Z.; Comp. Garrod, H.; Comp. J. R. Warren, J.; Comp. Onslow, P.S. After the ceremony of exaltation the M.E.Z., Comp. Dr. Ladd, explained the Royal Arch jewel, and illustrated the same by diagrams, with the solids and sphere of the universe, in a very interesting and excellent manner. The business of the Chapter being concluded, the Companions adjourned to refreshment; and after the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, the M.E.Z. gave "Success to the United Chapters," and congratulated the Companions upon the improvement in their quarters. Comp. Blackburn, in proposing the health of the M.E.Z., said he considered Royal Arch Masons deeply indebted to Comp. Dr. Ladd for the zeal and intelligence he had displayed in Royal Arch Masonry, and without whose kindness in imparting the same this Chapter of Instruction never would have arrived at the high position it has now attained. The M.E.Z., in returning thanks, begged to state that if any obligation existed it was certainly due to Comp. Blackburn, from whom alone he himself had acquired the knowledge it would ever be his pleasure to teach. The healths of the Principals of the United Pilgrims and Domestic Chapters having been honoured and duly responded to, as also the worthy host, Comp. Hill, the brethren separated at an early hour, after a most delightful and intellectual evening.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE

ROSE CROIX CHAPTER.

A meeting of the members of the Invicta Rose Croix Chapter was held in the Masonic Hall, William-street, Woolwich, on Friday, Dec. 16th, for the installation of the M.W. Sov. elect, the Ill. Bro. Major Henry Clerk, 31°. The Ill. Bro. Dr. H. J. Hinxman, 31°, presided, and in the presence of the brethren assembled inducted his successor into the chair. The M.W. Sov. then appointed as his officers for the ensuing year:—Bros. William Henry Carter, 1st Gen.; John W. Figg, 2nd Gen.; E. J. Phillips, G. Marshall; William Smith, Raphael; Matthew Cooke, Org.; Robert Crowe, Capt. of Guard. This was the first meeting in the new Masonic Hall, which is a joint undertaking of this Chapter—the Kemys-Tynte Encampment and the Florence Nightingale Lodge. The hall of is of good proportions; indeed we may call it a noble room, and is sufficiently spacious for giving good effect to the beautiful rite that celebrated its opening; it was therefore to be regretted that the attendance was so small. The chamber, having a vaulted or semi-circular roof, is well adapted for giving good effect to music; and the Organist will doubtless avail himself of its capabilities when there is a numerous assemblage to deaden the echo which exists in a small meeting. The hall is approached from the street by a lobby, from which open a Tyler's room and preparation room—small certainly—but sufficient for any Masonic purposes. The hall is lighted from the roof, excepting two circular lights at the east and west ends, which are to have illuminated emblems; and when the intended decorations on the walls are completed, the Woolwich brethren may congratulate themselves on having a house of assembly superior to any in London. Bros. Hinxman and Clarke, by whose exertions this has been effected, cannot fail to be highly gratified with the successful result. All business being ended, the brethren adjourned to Bro. De Grey's Tavern for banquet. Bro. How was the only visitor.

IRELAND.

CORK.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF MUNSTER.

THE fourth quarterly meeting of this year was held on the 20th of November, 1859, in the large handsomely decorated Lodge room of the first Lodge of Ireland, Turkey-street.

In the absence of the Prov. Grand Master, the Grand Lodge was opened in due form by his Deputy, Bro. George Chatterton, who said that he felt gratified on seeing the Lodges, particularly those of the city, so well represented, and also that he felt pleased at being able to state that the usual harmony continues amongst the brethren.

The first business commenced with the election of officers for the ensuing twelve months. Bro. A. Perrier, P. Prov. S.G.W., after having spoken in very flattering terms of the general conduct and well known efficiency of the outgoing officers, proposed their reelection, which was duly seconded, and unanimously carried. The officers for the next year are as follows:—Bros. Gen. Sir James C. Chatterton, K.H., Prov. G.M. of Munster; George Chatterton, D. Prov. G.M.; Richard Meara, Prov. S.G.W.; the Hon. Charles Moore Smyth, Prov. J.G.W.; the Rev. J. D. Penrose, Prov. G. Chaplain; Godfrey Brereton, Prov. S.G.D.; James E. White, Prov. J.G.D.; Henry Bible, Prov. G. Pura; George Harvey, Prov. G. Treas.; William Penrose, Prov. G. Sec.

The following communication from the Prov. Grand Master of Munster was then read:—"The Prov. Grand Master has learned with extreme satisfaction the very respectable gathering of the Masonic body upon the late occasion at the ceremonial of laying the foundation stone of St. Patrick's Bridge, and he requests the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, the Prov. Grand Lodge, and the Worshipful Masters and brethren of the different Lodges in attendance, to accept his warmest thanks and paternal regards." The Prov. Grand Master had also the pleasure to receive a letter from the Earl of Carlisle, expressive of his excellency's satisfaction at the excellent and very efficient manner the Masonic operations were conducted, and whilst the Prov. Grand Master greatly regrets he was prevented from being present upon so interesting an occasion, he feels consoled by the certain conviction that his place was most ably filled by the Deputy Grand Master.

SCOTLAND.

CLACKMANNAN.—Allos Lodge.—A meeting of this Lodge took place at the Lodge room, Allos, on Tuesday, the 13th inst., the W.M., Bro. W. Downing Bruce, of Garlet and Kilbagie, presiding, when the following office bearers were elected for the ensuing year, viz.:—Bro. William MacQueen, W.M., in the place of Bro. Downing Bruce, appointed representative Master to the Grand Lodge; Bro. Thos. Hunter, Senior Warden; Bro. Capt. R. C. Dalrymple Bruce, 8th King's regiment, representative Senior Warden; Bro. Alex. Mackie, Junior Warden; the Right Hon. Bro. the Earl of Buchan, representative Junior Warden; Bro. R. O. Arnot, Treasurer, and Bro. J. B. Richardson, Secretary.

AUSTRALIA.

VICTORIA.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A MASONIC HALL AT BEECHWORTH.

THE foundation stone of a Masonic Hall for the Beechworth Lodge of St. John, No. 1030, was laid on the 6th September with due observance of all the forms and solemnities appertaining to the ceremony. The hall which, when erected, will be a plain unpretending erection of red brick, but of commodious size, and containing the necessary arrangements of anteroom, will grace Loch-street, almost immediately opposite to the Athenaeum, and will be very useful indeed to the members of the Lodge, who have hitherto been indebted to the kindness of Mr. John Smith for the use of the hall in the now untenanted Eldorado Tavern in High-street. The ceremony was the occasion of bringing together nearly every member of the Lodge in the district, besides a number of brethren who do not belong to it. It was one of those great occasions on which the brethren are permitted to walk in procession, wearing the badges and ornaments of the Order, and to publish to the uninitiated world at large indications of the great principles to which they are devoted. The spectacle of a large body of men passing in procession through some of the principal streets of the town, naturally excited much observation, and a very large concourse of ladies and gentlemen had collected on the site of the building to witness the ceremony of laying the stone. The chief actor in the ceremony was Bro. A. H. Lissak, jun., the Worshipful Master of the Lodge, who with its first public appearance closed his connection with the brethren residing in Beechworth. In consideration of Bro. Lissak's approaching departure, the brethren of the Lodge expedited the ceremony to pay him the highest compliment in their power.

The brethren met in Lodge early in the afternoon, and having then adjourned, formed a procession, as follows:—Tyler, with drawn sword; band of music; brethren of the lodge; the architect, with plans, Bro. Ambrose; cornucopia, with corn, by a Master of a Lodge, Bro. Barden; two ewers, with wine and oil, by Master Masons, Bros. Sinclair and Rochlitz; and, on either side, Stewards, with rods, Bros. Noble and Dunn; Superintendent of Works, with copy of scroll, Bro. Turner; Secretary (Bro. Burbank) with constitution on cushion; Treasurer (Bro. Monk) with bottle and coins; column of J.W., by a Master Mason, Bro. Banon; the J.W. (Bro. F. Brown) with plumb rule; Banner, borne by Master Masons, Bros. Gitchell and Telford; and having a Master Mason on either side; column of S.W., by a Master Mason, Bro. Shackell; S.W. (Bro. G. W. Henderson) with level; J.D. (Bro. R. H. Murton) with rod; a Master Mason (officiating as Chaplain) with Bible, Bro. Young, having a Master Mason on either side; a Master Mason with square, Bro. Wright; a Master Mason with the Trowell, Bro. Dempster, M.D.; P.M. with mallet, Bro. Gruber; I.G. (Bro. Keefer) with sword; the W.M., Bro. A. H. Lissak, jun.; the S.D. (Bro. S. Jerslow) with rod; Tyler, Bro. Finnigan; Marshal, Bro. Prater; Band Master, Bro. Moss.

In this order the procession moved through Church, Ford, and Camp streets, to the allotment in Loch-street, where the brethren formed a double line, through which the Master, the officers of the Lodge, and the brethren assisting at the ceremony, proceeded to the stone, round which they all then formed a circle. The stone having been raised, the band playing a solemn air, a prayer was recited by Bro. Young. Bro. Turner read a copy of the inscription, and Bro. Monk, the Treasurer, deposited in the cavity a bottle containing copies of the local journals, a series of coins, and a list of subscribers to the building. The usual cement was laid over the cavity, and to a similar strain of sacred music the stone was again lowered in its place. The Worshipful Master having proved its correctness with the plumb rule, level and square, which instruments were handed to him by the respective officers whose badges they are, exclaimed, "I pronounce this stone to be well formed, true and trusty." Corn, wine, and oil, were in succession presented to the Worshipful Master, and by him poured upon the stone, the band playing a lively air. The operation having been completed, the Worshipful Master pronounced the following prayer:—

"May the all bounteous Author of Nature bless the inhabitants of this place, with all the necessary conveniences and comforts of life, assist in the erection and completion of this building, protect the workmen against accident, and long preserve this structure from decay, and grant to us all in needed supply, the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of joy. So mote it be."

The band again played a few bars, and the Worshipful Master having given three knocks on the stone with the mallet, said, "Knock and ye shall enter, ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall be satisfied." The Architect, Bro. Ambrose, then received from the Worshipful Master the several tools which he had used, which were again returned to their proper bearers; and, finally, a plan and section of the building was opened and exhibited, and then returned to the Architect. This concluded the formal part of the proceedings. The Worshipful Master having mounted the platform, delivered the following oration:—

"Since the earliest ages of man, after Adam was driven forth from the Garden of Eden, buildings have been erected for various purposes; their first object was, no doubt, to protect the inhabitants of the earth from the inclemency of the seasons, the attacks and ravages of wild beasts, and the depredations of enemies. But as mankind increased in number, so also did the necessity for sufficient indoor accommodation increase, and about the time of Noah we find that large cities were scattered over the then known earth; we also find shortly afterwards the Tower of Babel erected by a certain class of men, who said 'Let us build us a name lest we be scattered abroad.' This is the first instance of a building having been erected by a certain class or society of men; but as the sciences and civilization spread themselves over the face of the earth, men banded themselves together for specific objects, and erected superb and stately edifices dedicated to the promotion and propagation of their different views and pursuits. Solomon, King of Israel, erected for the perpetuation of the worship of the Almighty, in contradistinction to the different forms of paganism professed by the inhabitants of the countries by which his dominions were surrounded, a temple, which in grandeur, magnificence, and beauty, excelled every other building of that and all preceding ages; and the excellent wisdom of its design, and the beauty of its execution, even to this day stand out in bold prominence. We thus find, one thousand years before the Christian era, our Grand Master, King Solomon, erecting an edifice for the propagation of the truths of our Order—erecting a temple on the principles of Masonry. From that time it has been customary for Masons to follow in the footsteps of their illustrious prototype, and to erect over the face of the earth superb edifices, as monuments of the successes of Masonry. We have then, this day, my brethren, been engaged in a truly great work, in laying the foundation stone of another edifice dedicated to the cause of Masonry; of another monument of the advancement of civilization; of another temple for the propagation of the truths of our Order. How wonderful it is to look back, with a searching eye, through the intricate windings of ancient and modern history, and trace the development of our noble science! How instructive to compare its steady advancement, side by side with the rise and fall of so many other orders of antiquity and the middle ages! How edifying to linger upon its beauties, and recall the evidences of its having existed from time immemorial. The question naturally arises, Why has Masonry outlived every other tradition of the ancient world, while cities have crumbled and great names have been forgotten? Why, in this enlightened age, is it enabled to rear in all its pristine beauty, its mighty head, covered with the hoary frost of ages, and in its proud strength, defy the attacks of time, so ruinous to everything emanating from mortal handiwork? Why, even now, do its solid foundations rest upon the whole of the known globe, and where man is to be found, there also a Mason finds a brother? It is, my brethren, because Masonry comprises within itself the truths of holy writ. It is because it teaches us to look above the vanities of this world, and prepare ourselves for the glories of the world hereafter. It is because it is the figurative representation of many grand principles, which are nobly upheld, and which render it worthy to receive within its folds the truly great of every age. It is because it is the embodiment of those great truths and moral precepts which form the bulwarks of society. It is because it casts its mantle of charity over the whole human race, and within its fond, its tender, its merciful embrace, the distressed find relief; the afflicted—consolation; the poor—benevolence; the widows and orphans—assistance. It is because it disseminates through its disciples the principles of moral truth and virtue, and the wish for extensive researches into the hidden mysteries of nature and science. How many competitors have started in the race, while Masonry was pursuing its steady and onward course for the improvement of mankind. How many illegitimate offshoots from the parent stem have sprung into maturity, and have as suddenly ceased to exist. Their name is legion, and the unsuccessful results of these conceptions prove that nothing can withstand the withering hand of time, unless supported by the best, the noblest, and the purest intentions. These orders were all founded from unworthy motives, and for objects of personal aggrandisement. They were not only secret but exclusive. They became, in the hands of designing and ambitious men, instruments for carrying into effect the most barbarous and revolting cruelties. They became instruments for crushing freedom, and independence of thought and action; and after they had filled the measure of their iniquities to overflowing, and when the mind of man suddenly burst the bonds of persecution and ignorance, and with a mighty bound rose above the trammels of superstition and darkness, it was then that those societies met with that execration they so justly deserved, and fell, covering with ignominy and disgrace, all those who were in any way connected with them. But during these dark and troublesome times our noble science, following its bright path, was like the star in the East, the beacon for the truly great and the free among nations. It was free then as it is free now—it taught then as it teaches now; it was peaceful then as it is peaceful now. Superstition, bigotry, intolerance, irreligion, and sophistry dared not profane its precincts then, as they dare not now. It held out the open hand of friendship to the persecuted of every sect and of every nation. It taught them that man to man was a brother. It inculcated the startling lesson of natural equality, and mutual dependence. And now, my brethren, in what were so lately the wilds of an unknown continent, it has placed its giant stride, and in erecting this Masonic hall, we are adding another trophy to its many victories. The harmonizing and invigorating effects of Masonry are not confined to ourselves or our Lodges. Their spirit infuses itself in all our transactions and connections with the outer world. The many symbols which so forcibly illustrate the truths and principles of our Order, must be, to the observant Mason, ever before him. The very implements which I have this day employed, are happy illustrations of this fact. The square, the level, the plumb rule. The square, in our art, teaches us morality. Morality, the firstborn of religion, the keystone of the greatness of nations. The level, equality, not Utopian equality, not Red Republican equality, but equality in the eyes of our Creator. The plumb rule, uprightness, not alone uprightness in our actions, but uprightness in our thoughts and intentions, so that not only must mankind believe us to be just, but the all seeing eye of the Almighty Architect in penetrating the innermost recesses of our soul, must find our thoughts and intentions in accordance with our words and our actions. And, my brethren, let your conduct throughout life ever be judged by the principles of which these tools are the figurative representatives. Let the electric chord of sympathy and feeling which unites us, cause us to open our ears to the cry of distress, and our hearts to the voice of affliction. Let us demonstrate to the uninitiated world that our art teaches us not to consider rank, not to consider creed, not to consider colour, but to look into the inward man, and find in him the image of our Creator. Let the bonds of amity and unity of which our science is allegorical, form between us and mankind generally an indissoluble, though invisible, tie of fellowship and good will.

The Orator concluded with the following prayer:—"Almighty and eternal God, by whose creative fiat all things first were; we, the frail creatures of thy Providence, humbly implore thee to extend thy right hand of graciousness over this goodly land, and to cause it to overflow as thou didst the land of the chosen people of old, with milk and honey. Plant the fear of thy will in the hearts of its inhabitants, that they may ever regard thee as the dispenser of all good and the guardian against all evil. Prove through them to the nations of the earth, that peace, good government, political freedom, and pure religion, free from intolerance or superstition, walk hand in hand; and we beseech thee to exalt our Order, and illuminate it with the rays of thy blessings, preserve it intact in all its loveliness from the attacks of time, and the innovations of men. Cause its disciples to disseminate by their example, through the length and breadth of the land, its three grand principles—brotherly love, relief, and truth. Permit them to raise their eyes to the glories which surround thee, that they may ever be prepared for thy summons, and ready to meet thee in the Grand Lodge above, where thou in thine infinite wisdom, thy glory, thy goodness, and thy mercy, reignest for ever and ever. So mote it be."

At the termination of the oration, the music again struck up, the members formed in procession, and with the order in which they had arrived inverted, returned to their Lodge-room in the El Dorado.

The ceremony was one which the people of Beechworth may probably never have another opportunity of again observing; should any one chance to do so, he may be certain that it will not be accomplished more beautifully, or more correctly.

MELBOURNE.—Richmond Lodge (No. 1098).—The installation of the W.M. of this Lodge took place on Tuesday, the 13th September, at Tattersall's Hotel, Lonsdale-street East, Melbourne. The accommodation necessary for this occasion, in consequence of the increase of the members, rendered it necessary for the W.M. to hold this meeting at the Lodge rooms at Tattersall's. At half past four o'clock, the D. Prov. G.M. and his Prov. G. officers, with several brethren of distinction, arrived at the hotel, when the W.M. of the Richmond Lodge and its members immediately proceeded to the ceremony for which they had assembled. The chair was taken by Bro. H. St. John Clarke, the W.M. The W.M. elect, Bro. George M. Nicholls, being introduced to the chairman by the Prov. S.G.W. and the Prov. G. Sec., was, according to ancient custom, regularly installed as W.M. of the Richmond Lodge for the ensuing twelve months, or until such time as his successor may be duly nominated. When this imposing ceremony was concluded, the brethren immediately adjourned to Menzies' Hotel, La Trobe-street, where a banquet was laid out with taste and elegance. The cloth being removed, several loyal and appropriate toasts were proposed by the newly installed W.M., and responded to with much feeling and eloquence by the members present. The health of the W.M. was proposed in a speech of great merit, by the D. Prov. G.M., and heartily responded to by the brethren present. Bro. Nicholls, in rising to respond to the toast, said he felt some embarrassment in replying to the high compliment paid him by the D. Prov. G.M., and also to the members, for the cordial, and (he had reason to believe), the sincere manner in which his name had been received. He sincerely hoped that no act on his part would ever mar the good fellowship that now existed between himself and the members of the Richmond Lodge; and, at the expiration of his term as their W.M., he trusted they would have no occasion to regret having selected him to preside over them. To his officers he looked for that support and good order which will ensure success, harmony, and esteem. There was one circumstance connected with this installation which he (Bro. Nicholls) viewed with peculiar pleasure and satisfaction. The Prov. G. Sec., Bro. Levick, P.M., who officiated as one of the installing Masters, initiated him into the mysteries and privileges of Freemasonry in England. He justly considered Bro. Levick his Masonic father, to whom he was indebted for much valuable information; and he sincerely hoped his acts and actions would always have a tendency to consider him a not undutiful son. In the course of the evening, a beautiful P.M.'s jewel was presented by the members of the Richmond Lodge to their immediate P.M., Bro. H. St. John Clarke. The presentation was entrusted to the Prov. S.G.W., Bro. H. W. Lowry, who, in his usual masterly style, did full justice to the interesting event. Bro. Clarke, P.M., feelingly and appropriately acknowledged the handsome mark of esteem which had been presented to him by the members of the Richmond Lodge; and when he looked upon the gift, it would remind him of his duty to this Lodge in particular and to the brethren generally. The proceedings shortly afterwards terminated.

PORTLAND.—Lodge of Victoria (No. 841).—A meeting of this Lodge was held at the Lodge room, Lamb Inn, on Monday, October 10th, 1859, at two o'clock, P.M., Bro. Charles George Thompson in the chair, supported by Bros. P. Scott, T. W. Watson, J. McConochy, and H. Chittle, P.M. The Lodge was opened in due form and with solemn prayer, and the minutes of last Lodge read and confirmed. The Lodge was then opened in the third degree, when Bro. Thos. Henty was duly raised. The Lodge was then reduced to the first degree, when Messrs. John Learmouth, Charleson Marshall Trangenar, Charles George Doughty, and William Sauderson Wyman, were initiated. The Lodge being opened in the second degree, Bro. T. W. Watson presented Bro. Edward Francis Hughes as the W.M. elect. The ceremony of installation was performed in an impressive manner by the W.M., that reflected great credit on his attainments in Freemasonry; and as a slight recompense for past services to this Lodge, and also as a mark of the esteem in which he is held by the brethren, a P.M.'s jewel of exquisite beauty and workmanship was presented him. Bro. Chas. Geo. Thompson, P.M., in returning thanks, said he not only thanked the brethren for the token of their esteem, but also for assistance received from the worthy P.Ms. and officers during his pleasing year of office, as also the brethren generally, for their punctual attendance and earnest desire of improving their Masonic knowledge. Although he had left the chair in abler hands, his duties were not yet finished. He would endeavour to further impart such Masonic knowledge as he possessed, to the many brethren he had had the honour of initiating, and at all times to assist the W.M. when called upon. He indeed might well say this to him was a day of joy and exultation, which would never pass away. The son of a Mason of high repute, in a province where Masons were known for their benevolence, he had endeavoured to carry out those precepts, inculcated not only by his parent, but by his parent Lodge (Alfred Lodge, No. 425) How well he had succeeded, the jewel he held in his hand testified, and told more than any words he could utter. With gratitude to the G.A.O.T.U. for permitting him to perform his duties aright, and thanks to the brethren, he concluded. The W.M. then proceeded to invest his officers as follows:—Bros. J. Roberts, S.W.; J. Fethers, J.W.; P. Scott, P.M., Treas. The W.M. said, in investing you, Bro. P.M. Scott, with the badge of this important office, I should be wanting in duty to the Lodge, did I not express the high estimation in which you are held by the brethren, and even that high estimation falling short of your deserts. One of the pioneers of Freemasonry of this western province, our first W.M., and reelected a second time to that high office, the jewel with which you are adorned proves the estimation in which you were held. Let me assure you, it has lost nothing of its lustre, and in reelecting you as Treasurer, the brethren congratulate themselves on having secured for the office one whom they know to be a Mason indeed. Bros. M. C. Dahl, Sec.; C. Croker, S.D.; F. C. Oswald, J.D.; J. Browning, I.G.; J. Gardiner, Tyler, were then invested, and the Lodge was afterwards closed with solemn prayer. The brethren, to the number of twenty-two, assembled in the evening to celebrate the installation by banquet, the excellence of which reflected the greatest credit on the stewards, Bros. H. Smith and J. Browning, as also on the caterer, Bro. Pilven. The routine toasts were ably given by the W.M., and the replies in keeping with the acknowledged abilities of the speakers. The evening was enlivened by songs from many talented brethren, amongst others Bros. Fethers, Roberts, Athill, and McConochy. The brethren separated at an early hour, after spending an evening of enjoyment, only appreciated by Masons.

ROYAL ARCH.

MELBOURNE.—Meridian Chapter (No. 1031).—This Chapter held its first annual meeting on the 14th October, for the purpose of installing the Principals for the ensuing year, and also to ballot for several brethren proposed at the last meeting. The installation ceremony was performed by Comp. H. W. Lowry, M.E.Z. of this Chapter, assisted by Comp. R. Levick, P.Z. of No. 697. Comp. W. P. Wilson was installed M.E.Z., and Comp. Frank Adames H. Comp. P. P. Labertouche has been elected to the chair of J., but as he has filled the office of Scribe E. only eleven months, his installation has been deferred until a future meeting. The newly installed First Principal, Comp. Wilson, in a very efficient manner exalted Bro. F. T. West Ford to this supreme degree. The Principals and several Past Principals of the Australian Chapter, No. 697, were present, and rendered valuable assistance. The business been concluded, the Companions adjourned to refreshment, and after a pleasant evening, enhanced by the presence of several visitors, retired to their respective homes, well satisfied with the proceedings of the evening.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

GAWLER TOWN.—Lodge of Fidelity (No. 854).—The brethren gave a full dress ball on the 14th October last, in the hall belonging to the Odd Fellows, in that town. Dancing commenced on the arrival of Bro. Rudall, W.M., and was kept up with great spirit until nearly six o'clock in the morning. The brethren all appeared in full regalia; and we understand it is intended have to a similar ball every year. In no part of the world is Masonry more appreciated than in South Australia, as is shown by the number of Lodges, and the respectability of the members of the Craft.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The Queen and her family have this week returned to Windsor for the Christmas holidays, and are all in good health. The Prince of Wales also has joined the family party, having left Oxford for the vacation; he has been presented by the reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg with the insignia of the order of the ducal houses of Saxony; at Osborne there were no other visitors except Prince and Princess Leiningen.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The severe illness of the old ex-King Jerome, which was considered to wear such a threatening appearance last week, has considerably amended, and he is now thought to be out of danger for the present. His great age however, and the inroads which a very free life have made into a naturally iron constitution, render it almost impossible that his life can be preserved much longer; all Paris is therefore in consternation lest an imperial mourning should interfere with the bals, soirées, dinners, and other fashionable necessities which the approach of the gay season in Paris is supposed to bring with it. The Moniteur announces that the Emperor will receive the Corps Diplomatique on the 1st of January. The report of the speeches delivered on this occasion will be eagerly looked for. The Congress is definitively constituted, The following is a complete (with the exception of Naples and Sweden) and accurate list of the Plenipotentiaries:—England—Lord Cowley and Lord Wodehouse; France—Count Walewski and Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne; Russia—Prince Gortschakoff and M. de Kisseleff; Prussia—Baron Schlieinitz and Count Pourtales; Austria—Count Rechberg and Prince Metternich; Piedmont—Count Cavour and M. Desambrois; Spain—MM. Martinez de la Rosa and Mon; Portugal—Viscount Paiva and Count Lavradio; Rome—Cardinal Antonelli and Monsignor Sacconi. The Congress will not assemble before the 20th of January at soonest. On the 18th the session of the Corps Législatif will commence. The prevailing opinion in Paris is stated to be that the Congress will meet, will sit for many months, and separate without arriving at any conclusion. The Patrie insists that Cardinal Antonelli will assist at the Congress. Rumours have been current in Paris that the course adopted by Lord Palmerston with regard to the Suez Canal question was likely to break up his cabinet. Prince Metternich has received at his hotel in Paris the principal members of the diplomatic corps, the grand dignitaries of state and of the crown, the officers of the household of the Emperor, of the Empress, and the Imperial Princess. Princess Metternich will hold her receptions next week, immediately after having been presented to the Empress. The Pays states that the opening of the congress will definitely take place on the 20th of January; and the same journal announces that Prince Gortschakoff will arrive in Paris between the 7th and 10th of January. It had been stated that Count Walewski would resign his post in a few days, but a well informed Paris correspondent denies the truth of this statement, and says that the count is firmer in his post than ever.—M. Buoncompagni has left Turin to-day for Florence. The designation of Count Cavour, as first plenipotentiary of Sardinia at the Congress, is definite, and will be notified to the different powers after the nominations of the other plenipotentiaries have been published. The Sardinian frigate Eurydice is about to sail for China to protect the interests of the Italian subjects residing there.—It is stated that on the 28th instant Cardinal Antonelli will embark on board a Pontifical corvette for France. Monsignore Bernardi will be entrusted, ad interim, with the ministerial functions of the cardinal. In order to cover the deficit, the minister of finance has sold 2,000,000 of francs of Roman consolidated funds, without having recourse to a loan.—A telegram from Madrid states that Marshall O'Donnell had declared Ceuta a free port, and that M. Mon had arrived in Madrid. Abundant rains have inundated the Spanish camp in Africa and the surrounding country. According to the Patrie the finances of Spain must be in a flourishing state, for in place of 50,000 men she will raise twice as many, if necessary; nay, the Patrie tells us Spain will once more conquer the Moors, and even pay England to the last farthing, should England demand payment of an old debt. That many of the debts due by Spain are old debts is but too true; but it requires faith equal with that of the Patrie to believe she will pay the debt alluded to.—The Protestants in Hungary have met in goodly numbers in several places to protest against the imperial patent of Sept. 1. Enraged at these demonstrations the Austrian government had arrested or ordered for prosecution, very nearly two hundred Protestants, and large bodies of troops are being sent into Hungary.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—At a late privy council, parliament was again prorogued to meet at the end of January "for the despatch of business."—The general feeling in favour of the observance of Monday as a holiday is rapidly increasing, and most of the large establishments have signified their intention of closing. The majority of the banks and discount establishments have agreed as far as possible to relieve their clerks from duty, and this example will, no doubt, be followed throughout the provinces. Already the diminution of business arising from the approach of the Christmas season is apparent, except in particular branches, and for the next week or ten days the temporary stagnation will become more than ever visible.—Judging by the rate of mortality, the health of the metropolis was not affected by the cold of last week, the deaths that occurred during that period being exactly the same as in the preceding week, viz., 1289. Of this number, 164 persons died from bronchitis and 134 from phthisis. Last Saturday was colder than any day since December 22nd, 1855, the mean temperature of which day was 21.5, whilst that of last Saturday was 22.8. The births last week amounted to 1831. Dr. Letheby reports the state of the public health within the City of London to be highly satisfactory.—On Monday, morning about two o'clock, considerable alarm was caused in the neighbourhood of Trafalgar-square, in consequence of a fire breaking out in the Union Club-house, but owing to the timely arrival of the firemen, the flames were soon extinguished.—Another fire took place in the residence of the Rev. J. F. M. Halvey, No. 14, Upper Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, caused by the overheat of a stove in the next house. Fortunately the fire was soon subdued.—The parish church of St. Matthew's, Bethnal-green, was totally destroyed by a fire which broke out in the venerable pile early on Monday morning. Some excitement prevailed in consequence of its being supposed that the whole of the marriage certificates and other church records had been destroyed in the fire which consumed the church. The firemen, upon cooling the ruins, found two immense iron safes, and upon opening them the whole of the registers, books, and documents, with the sacramental plate, although the safes were exposed to enormous heat for hours had not sustained the least injury.—The City Commissioners of Sewers met on Tuesday, when a deputation, consisting of the churchwardens of St. Michael's Cornhill, and a number of the inhabitants, presented a memorial in which they protested against the project of placing a public indicator in the Royal Exchange-buildings. Mr. Bailey, the churchwarden, addressed the court on the subject, and described the indicator as an intolerable nuisance. Permission having been formerly given to erect the indicator, Deputy Harrison now moved that that permission be revoked. Motion agreed to. After disposing of the remaining business the court adjourned.—Vice Chancellor Wood has given judgment in the suit Thompson v. Shakspear, instituted to obtain an opinion as to the payment of £2,500 and a rent charge of £30 a year, given by the late John Shakspear, of Langley Priory, for the preservation of Shakspeare's birthplace. The legality of the bequest was disputed by the trustees of the deceased. His honour now dismissed the bill simply.—In the Court of Queen's Bench, the case of Scully v. Ingram was by agreement allowed to go over till the sittings after next term, as it was considered it would occupy so much time that it could only be partly heard before the termination of the present sittings.—The remarkable bill case, "Oakley v. Musser-Ood-Dheen," tried in the Court of Common Pleas, involving a sum of £6,500, was brought to a close on Saturday. A verdict was returned for the defendant, with leave to the plaintiff to move the Court. The plaintiff had advanced £5,000 upon acceptances of the defendant—the representative of the deposed King of Oude; the jury decided that these had been fraudulently obtained.—The charge of perjury preferred by the Hon. Hugh Rowley against Theresa Caroline Bishop has been heard before Mr. Paynter. The defendant in the case is the divorced wife of the plaintiff; and the perjury was said to have been committed in giving evidence in a suit instituted by her for dissolution of marriage on the ground of cruelty. The late wife of the Hon. Hugh Rowley again appeared at the Westminster police-court on Tuesday before Mr. Paynter to answer a charge of perjury, alleged to have been committed in giving evidence in the divorce court. Mr. Rowley's evidence, which occupied the entire hearing, consisted altogether of a series of denials to specific charges of cruelty towards his wife, which had been brought against him. An adjournment was again ordered, that the solicitor for the defendant might be furnished with copies of numbers of letters required.—The Middlesex sessions for December have commenced at the Guildhall, Westminster, before the Assistant Judge and deputy judges, and a bench of magistrates. There were 45 names in the calendar. After the Assistant Judge had delivered his charge to the grand jury, the court proceeded with the trial of prisoners. Felix Newman, who was convicted at the last sessions of stealing a cash-box containing £232 in notes and money, from the shop of Mr. Moore, Lisson Grove, and assaulting Mrs. Moore, was brought up for sentence, when it was shown that the prisoner had been previously sentenced to seven years' transportation; he was now sentenced to ten years.—An officer of the Surrey Volunteer Rifles made complaint to Mr. Norton, at Lambeth Police-court, of a member of the corps, that he had pawned his rifle and somehow disposed of his uniform. A summons was issued against the delinquent for illegal pawning. Will there not be another required against the pawnbroker for receiving an article having the government stamp impressed upon it?—A scoundrel, named John Davis, was fined 40s. by Mr. Hammill, at Worship-street Police-court, yesterday, for raising a false alarm of fire in the Britannia Theatre. He "only did it for fun."—According to custom on St. Thomas's Day, the citizens were on Wednesday engaged in their several wardmotes in electing common councilmen for the ensuing year.—At the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, City, the aggregate number of patients relieved during the week ending December 17 was, Medical 599, Surgical 332; total 931, of which 236 were new cases.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SECRETARIES OF LODGES throughout the Country are requested to forward, as early as possible, the place, day, and hour on which the Lodge will be held in 1860.

ROB MORRIS'S American Masonic Almanac for 1860 has come to hand.

"J. W."—Not having served the full twelve months you are not legally qualified for the office of Master.

"S. S."—Attend a good Lodge of Instruction—the Robert Burns, at Bro. Adams's, Air-street, Piccadilly, or the Manchester, at Bro. Gorton's, Old Bond-street, are both in your neighbourhood.

"A YOUNG MASON" should consult some Past Master.

"R. E. X." writes "At what age under twenty one years may a person be initiated by dispensation from the Prov. G.M.—an emergency having been shewn by the intended initiate leaving England for foreign parts for some period?"—Not less than eighteen.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1859.

OUR ARCHITECTURAL CHAPTER.

THERE has been recently opened a new Masonic hall at Woolwich. With this fact our readers of last week must be acquainted, from our reporter's notice of the meeting of the Invicta Rose Croix Chapter within its walls; and as the occasion is a fitting one, we wish to show how it has been effected, and the good results which are likely to emanate from it.

It is a trite saying, "put your shoulder to the wheel" and your task is easy of accomplishment; so thought our brethren Major Clerk, Dr. Hinxman, Bros. Carter and Church, and they finding tavern accommodation limited, and an indescribable something not over pleasant attached to the idea of celebrating our mysteries in such company, wisely determined to try the effect of a hall which should be unconnected with a tavern.

Seeking over Woolwich, they at length hit upon a room every way adapted to their wants. Privacy was ensured by the approach to it being through a long passage, which opened on a small but convenient room, for hats and umbrellas, &c.; passing through this and two other rooms, one to serve for the Tyler, and the next for a preparation apartment, we approach the entrance at the lower end, and stepping within it, find ourselves in a brilliantly lighted hall, of about forty-eight feet in length, fourteen or fifteen in width, and sixteen in height; the roof forming the segment of a circle. At the end is a dais of three steps of polished pine, carpeted on the top, and above it a gas star in the east, corresponding with the sacred symbol similarly situated, in the west. The hall is plainly but effectively decorated, and is warmed by an admirable stove, which stands on the left from the dais, about the centre of that side, and diffuses a genial warmth over the whole building. The floor is partially carpeted, and the appearance of the hall when lighted is brilliant and pleasing. The colours are pale green and white, without meretricious ornament.

It may be asked, what is to support this hall in Woolwich? We reply, its prospects are exceedingly good. Woolwich has no room unconnected with tavern accommodation except the Town Hall (not easily available) for meetings, concerts, lectures, or the many requirements of modern society. The proprietors—for we can call our brethren nothing less, seeing that they have made themselves liable for rent, repairs, and decorations—have found tenants in a Unitarian congregation for Sundays, who pay a yearly rent. The Invicta Chapter of Rose Croix; the Kemeys Tynte Encampment; and the Florence Nightingale Lodge, all three hold their meetings there, and they, too, pay each a yearly rent. It is also contemplated by the Woolwich Musical Society, who have been driven about from pillar to post for the last year, to indulge themselves in a permanent home at a yearly rent, and thus, with the hall engaged, we have no doubt the proprietors will not be a shilling out of pocket eventually.

But we hear some brother ask, "Where are the kitchen and the wine cellar?" Not there, certainly. Doubtless the brethren composing the before mentioned Lodges, &c., relish the vulgar custom of eating and drinking as much as any others of the Craft, but they contend for a high and holy principle—that in a spot devoted to the sublimest mysteries, it is not fitting that the jest and song obtrude, though harmless and even commendable in themselves; so they adjourn to their refreshment to a tavern; or, by the kindness of one of the four brethren before alluded to, take their coffee in his private room in another part of the building.

There are many who we believe would be dissatisfied with such an arrangement, but if we give the principle one moment's consideration, it will be readily perceived that the more the Lodges are removed from tavern influences the more they will study Masonry, and the greater will be their resources to apply to that great object of a true Masonic life—charity.

With these views and in this spirit has this enterprise been commenced, and to all who are inclined to further the object, or imitate the practice, we cordially wish "God speed," feeling assured that in every little Masonic community a few such zealous Masons as Bros. Clerk, Hinxman, Carter, and Church, have only to bestir themselves to secure as pleasant a meeting place, and diminish the stigma that attaches to sacred things being entered upon in a tavern, or at a convivial board. Wishing the new Masonic Hall at Woolwich every success, we take leave of the subject by mentioning that to inaugurate the same as a place fit for public entertainments, and to show the inhabitants of Woolwich that at last they have a room equal to their wants, several lectures are already proposed to be given there, the first of which is to take place on the ninth of next month, being Mr. Bennett's lecture "On a Watch."

ARCHITECTURE THE ELABORATION OF BEAUTY FROM THE BUILDING ART.

BY JOHN WILSON ROSS.

IN all the countries of Europe, previous to the reformation in the sixteenth century, and in all other countries down to the present hour, the elaboration of beauty in architecture out of the useful art of building, was accomplished by a gradual, steady perseverance towards the well defined aim of building ornamentally. A consequence of following this system is, that all nations have been able, however inferior in other matters, to elaborate for themselves an appropriate and beautiful style of architecture perfectly suited to their wants and purposes. If we take for example a series of specimens of Hindoo architecture, and arrange them chronologically, we find how, out of a very rude original, a perfect style of art has been produced by an infinitely inferior people. We perceive how they have produced perfect models of their kind by gradually altering and improving the original through a series of successive erections, rejecting whatever was found in an earlier instance to be either useless or hurtful, and adopting anything that was either appropriate or beautiful, always bearing in mind the object of the building, and thus employing the most suitable style of architecture for the purpose intended. The identical process by which we invent or perfect any of the sciences or arts, is the same by which we invent and perfect architecture. Turning to a distinct class of architecture (but, certainly to a most parallel instance)—ship building in Europe, we find that the Europeans by following the same process of building vessels as the ancient Romans, have in the course of one thousand years brought naval architecture to perfection. The mediæval cathedral—in so perfect a form as it is seen in that of Cologne—was elaborated in the like manner, out of the Roman basilica. That perfection was effected by a gradual bit by bit improvement, even as a concealed arch of construction in a Roman portico grew, by a like process, into the universally arched architrave of Christian architecture. If we take a series of windows, we perceive how the plain round headed window of the Roman period was gradually elaborated into such a splendid work of art as the celebrated nine light window at the east end of Carlisle Cathedral.

From the massy proportions of Egyptian architecture, their temples without roofs, colossal in dimensions and solid in construction, radiated, at an early age, an extensive group of styles, among which stood foremost the Nubian, Indian, and Greek, all original in conception, but the latter particularly calculated to enchant and dazzle the eye on account of the lightness and elegance of the buildings. The Doric, Ionic and Corinthian orders, which were the inventions of the old Greeks, were types of the human form: the first exhibiting the boldness and simplicity of the male form; the second the softer beauty of a woman, attired and richly decorated; and the third the more delicate proportions of the maiden figure, with the limbs less robust, and the figure admitting of a greater display of ornament. The style of architecture of the ancient Greeks was admirably adapted to their tastes and habits, even, as it is to the tastes and habits of all nations who resemble them; that is, who are utilitarians, fond of comfort and addicted to a natural simplicity of manners. Accordingly the Grecian style of architecture has been adopted in their best periods of history, by such enlightened people as the Etruscans, the ancient Romans, the modern Italians (when after having declined they advanced again in the scale of civilization), and by other people in Europe, including the English. That adoption by us did not occur till toward the middle of the seventeenth century when Inigo Jones revived the best classic models, reconstituting a purity of architectural composition, founded on the masterpieces of the ancient Greeks. His example has been followed by most architects of celebrity, who, instead of imitating one model, have drawn from many styles, thus producing an effective variety.

It seems, however, that this pure taste, which must have ultimately sprung up amongst us in the natural course of advancing civilization, arose amongst us prematurely, by a mere accident, by the gable roof—of which the favourite triangular arch was the prototype—being prohibited by Act of Parliament in the reign of Charles the Second. It is true that Gothic architecture has again gained favour in this country; but we would willingly be spared the abortions in that style which daily greet our gaze. If we take the most ambitious building in our generation—the new Houses of Parliament, we cannot recognize in the structure anything in common with the edifices erected in the middle ages. Overladen with ornament and depressed in height, it resembles—to burlesque the imagery of Vitruvius in describing the classic orders—a dumpy woman tricked out in vulgar finery.

To the Gothic style of architecture we may well apply the words which Mr. Gwilt (a gentleman whose opinion carries much weight) in his "Encyclopædia of Architecture," has used in speaking of the Elizabethan as an amalgamation of Gothic and Roman architecture. He says, "The style we consider quite as unworthy of imitation as would be the adoption in the present day of the model of the ships of war with their unwieldy and topheavy poops, which encountered the Armada, in preference to the beautiful and compact form of a well moulded modern frigate."

To go back to the Gothic appears to argue a dearth of inventive faculty; yet the faculty of invention is not dead among the professors of the fine arts, to prove which it is only necessary to adduce one instance, that of the sister art of architecture—civil engineering. The examples of the London bridges show that within the last hundred years we have advanced from the very clumsy structure of Westminster Bridge to the perfect one of the new London Bridge—to say nothing of Waterloo Bridge. If our architects then will but cultivate their art with the same earnestness and in the same manner in which civil engineers have cultivated the art of bridge building, they may as easily surpass (though in an opposite direction) the mediæval cathedral as civil engineers have surpassed the mediæval cathedral's contemporary—old London Bridge.

THE VETERAN DISTIN'S CONCERT AT EXETER HALL.—It is with much pleasure we call the attention of the public to the advertisement of the above in our first column, and the high patronage he has obtained. It may not be generally known, that he is the veteran trumpeter of three coronations: of the old militia, the Grenadiers' band, and George the Fourth's private band—in all twenty-seven years. We can imagine persons saying, Where is the necessity for such a benefit concert—has he not a pension for his services? We emphatically answer—no! We trust his Masonic brethren will respond to this his first and last appeal.

ON THE ORIGIN AND OBSERVANCE OF CHRISTMAS.—II.

In continuation of these strictures on our Yule festival as a pagan rite, in our last number, we shall now adduce some further confirmatory practices in different countries. Our first will be taken from the town of Bonneval, in France, where the custom of marching in solemn procession, the lighted torches, the solemnities of the priesthood, and the feasting of the performers, may all have been exhibited in the palmy days of Druidism with a very slight variation of observance.

Every year on Christmas Eve the inhabitants of each quarter of the town met together, and went in procession to the town hall, each person carrying a flambeau or flaming brand upon his shoulder, which he was very careful to keep dry and ready for this ceremony. The little children had their torches, made of a dried plant, and soaked in oil. The clergy, in white albs, accompanied by the magistrates, in full costume, proceeded also to the town hall. At five o'clock in the evening, the different persons forming the procession being assembled, they set out with their flambeaux, crying Noel! Noelet! (Christmas, Christmasly). They went thrice round the market, and thence to St. Peter's Church, which they also circumambulated, bawling out lustily, Noel! Noelet! The shepherds and shepherdesses in the neighbourhood of the town also contributed to form a part of the procession. They were all clad in white, and decorated with ribands and cockades. They carried very elegantly formed sheep-racks, and had with them a number of young lambs, ornamented with ribands.

The procession round the church being finished, the clergy sang the Christmas hymns and chanted the Te Deum. The inhabitants, preserving their distinction of quarters, formed one general circle and constructed a pile of their flambeaux, leaving the part not lighted outwards. After the religious hymns were finished, every one took up the remains of his flambeau, threw it behind him, and again formed into a procession. During the whole ceremony a large bell was tolled, till lately, in the tower of the town hall. It weighs from six to eight thousand pounds, and appears to have been cast expressly for this custom, for the procession of the flambeaux is represented on the outside of it with the participants in very ancient costumes, and for the ringing of it on the occasion there was an annual endowment of ten crowns. The ceremony was held in so much veneration that those who formed part of it fasted till its completion, about eight o'clock in the evening; and though the exhibition of so much fire might have been considered under ordinary circumstances very dangerous, yet the vulgar belief was that it would burn no one, though the narrator, M. Cochin, says he had seen many a dress and many a cap ignited; yet that more serious accidents did not often occur, is certainly remarkable when we consider that the lofts over the houses in the market place are always filled with straw, and that from two to three thousand torches at the least are brandished about and thrown aloft in the neighbourhood of such combustible materials. The remains of the flambeaux are considered sacred and preserved with the most superstitious reverence as a protection against misfortune, as we have seen was the case with the remnant of the yule clog.

This torch procession was observed only at Dreux, because it is thought that at this place was once a sacred college of the Druids; and that those ancient hierophants performed sacrifices at a cromlech at Ferntineburt, then a portion of the town of Dreux.

That the ambarvalia of the Romans, a ceremony in which the priests surrounded their fields in April and July, singing hymns to Ceres and other rites, was not the parent, but only a sister to the northern solemnities, and derived from the Pelasge, a common ancestry, might be proven, did the space at our disposal permit.

Virgil's description, (Georg. i., 335-350,) is rather long, but the following lines may be culled:—

"In primis venerare Deum atque annua magnæ
Sacra refer Cereri, lætis operatus in herbis
Extremæ sub casum hyemis jam vere sereno—
Terque novas arcum felix eat hostia fruges:
Omnis quam chorus et socii comitantur ovantes
Et Cererem clamore vocent in tecta."

We have however conformities of the wheel, embracing a much wider field. The Chatra or Shatra of Indian worship was a wheel, as in a piece of sculpture in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries, where, on the principal front of a temple a six-spoked wheel is guarded by two lions, couchant on each side; and in the "Journal of Biblical Literature," July, 1856, Mr. Talbot, speaking of an Assyrian papyrus, says, among the offerings of the kings were ishibe or shatra, the symbols of royalty: the one a sceptre, the other a circular umbrella, like a wheel; and a similar one is borne before the Pope when he appears in state.*

But still more curious is it that we should find the wheel or rota introduced into Mexican archaeology, and their intricate astronomical calculations. Scaliger (De Emend. Temp. Edit. 1629, p. 226), says:—

"The Mexicans had a wheel (rota) of fifty two years, divided into four periods of thirteen each, and as their week, so to say, had each thirteen days, their year as above of twenty months of eighteen days, each so as to give it a duration of three hundred and sixty days, with five Epagomene, devoted to joy and festivity (exactly as the twelve days, the complement of the Saxon lunar with the solar year, from Christmas to Twelfth day)."

"Die ultima Rotæ hoc est anni LII. frangebant omnia fictilia et utensilia, exstinguebantur lumina et ignes putantes mundo exitum imminere in cuiusdam harum Rotarum. Ultimam noctem Rotæ vigilabant putantes tum extremum esse mundi. Quam autem viderent crepusculum tunc certe mundum adhuc non perituum surgentes in choreas et ludicra debebant sese, qui erat primus dies rotæ novæ."

And whilst mentioning Scaliger's learned work, we may state, that in his "Explanation of the Saxon Calendar," he puts роутковъ as the exponent of Giul, which, therefore, as Yule, identifies it with the wheel; ut ante.

We have previously remarked that the examples of these fiery wheels driven down hills are principally found in North Germany, and therefore we find there more frequent allusions to them, irrespective of any reference to Christmas or St. John. Thus in Pöhl's Harzsagen (Legends of the Harz Mountains), p. 105, the exorcism of the ghost of a female innkeeper at Anushtat is related at p. 104, and ultimately driven out of doors into the Red Sea; but the exorcist, a Roman Catholic pater (evidently a made up fiction) opens the door after her, bids two soldiers, witnesses of his proceedings, to look out after her, who see her, or pretend they see her, running down the street like a glowing wheel on fire (wie ein glühendes Feuer-rad).

Another instance which he gives occurs at the foundation of the famous monastery of Ilfeld (p. 225). Before it was founded the countess living in the Castle of Ilburg had perceived a bright light in the midst of the adjoining woods, and waking her husband he could see nothing though the lady had observed it a full hour previously. The second night the same brightness occurred to her vision though to her husband's it was still hidden. When the countess saw it the third night, without consulting anyone, she saddled her mule and rode in the direction of the light, having before laden her palfrey with as much money as it could carry. The light turned out to be a great fire, which, as she approached, rolled itself up into the form of a huge fiery watermill wheel

* The following are additional East Indian proofs of the veneration of the wheel in different forms:—Houghton's "Translation of Menu's Code of Laws" (ii. p. 426), "It is he (the Paruscha) who, pervaded all beings in five elemental forms, causes them by the gradations of birth, growth, and dissolution, to revolve in this world (until they deserve beatitude) like the wheels of a car." Translated by Wilhelm v. Humboldt, über "Baghavat Gita (26)."

(das rollte sich zusa men in ein grosses feuriges mühlrad) and rolled continually forward. The countess followed on her mule, this fiery wheel, and arrived at length at the place where it became extinguished. She then caused a church to be built on the same spot with the money with which she had laden her mule; and as a hole was dug at the place where the fire had disappeared, to lay the foundation of the edifice, there were found, in addition, two tonnen of gold (about £15,000) which were also used to construct the monasterial buildings.

In Southern Germany the wheel loses its fiery nature, and becomes a purely symbolical sign under the denomination of Wepelrot, meaning, as I suppose, from the analogy of Wellen and the manner of its construction, a wheel of withs. It is thus described in Baron Cotta's "Morgenblatt," 1853, Dec. p. 235.

Another custom, widely spread throughout Southern Germany, which has been transmitted us from the time of our heathendom, is, driving the wheel (Scheiben treiben) answering to the North German practice of rolling fiery wheels down declivities. Disc, like wheel, is the symbol of the sun, of which the Wepelrot im Sauerland is an example. It is a wheel plaited of withies, its nave covered with gold leaf, from which the spokes radiate like so many rays to the circumference, and project somewhat beyond it, which projections are stuck with apples. These wepelrots are thrown into the halls of your acquaintance, and the giver hurries away with all possible speed to avoid recognition. But still such a Wepelrot is carried about in solemn processions and finally considered as a fortunate symbol of the solar disc, religiously preserved by both males and females during the ensuing year.

A practice noticed by Grimm, in his excellent "Mythology," p. 51, from Otmar's Volksagen, bears some analogy to this practice, though farther north, and for another church festival. In the village Questenberg, on the Harz, the lads of the village on the Tuesday after Whitsunday, carry an oak to the burg or castle hill, which commands the entire neighbourhood, and as soon as they have fixed it upright they fix on it a large chaplet, twisted from raw twigs of trees and which resembles a cart wheel: all call out "Die Queste!" and dance round the tree. Tree and chaplet are annually renewed.

It would lead us too far in this disquisition to follow the deductions in Grater Idumea and Hermode on the connection of the solar wheel with the mystical cates called Bretzel which travellers on the Anhalt lines of railroad will find energetically offered to them at the windows of the carriages at the station called Gnadau as a place of pilgrimage; now no longer in their archaic shape of a wheel but flattened to the form of a Staffordshire knot, with which they have more relation than is at first apparent, but which would require more space than is now at our disposal to eliminate.

Equally loth are we, for the same reasons, to pass over in proof of the heathen origin of our Christmas festivities, those scenes which in a dramatic form represent the contest of Winter and Summer, and the eventual triumph of the genial season. We have numerous instances of such wordy battles fitting the sun's position and his returning power in numerous foreign countries and our own, for which latter the following verse from B. Herrick's "Hesperides" may suffice, p. 318, beginning—

"Farewell Frost and welcome Spring," fully exemplified in the Athenæum, principally after the practices at Eisenach, in Saxony: "Approach of Spring: Sommer's Gewin." One party carried Winter in the shape of a man covered with straw, out of town into exile: another decked Spring in the form of a youth covered with boughs. In process of time the parts before personified were now performed by real dramatis personæ, who exhibited a combat, in which Winter is beaten:—

"Heigh ho, heigh ho, Summer is at hand,
Winter has lost the game,
Summer maintained its fame;
Heigh ho, heigh ho, Summer is at hand."

But in modern times this festival has disappeared. Lately Winter was uncouthly shapen of wood, and being covered with straw, was nailed against a large wheel, and the straw being set on fire, the apparatus was rolled down a steep hill. Agreeably to the intention of its inventors, the blazing wheel was by degrees knocked to pieces and the Winter effigy split into a thousand fiery fragments.

It is however time, as this last instance brings us round again to the figure of the sun in the shape of a blazing wheel rolled down a steep hill, to notice the modern celebrations of the Christ-festival on the continent, to which, as they are entirely papal innovations, we have now no conformities in England. The "Waits," representing the Italian "Pifferari," and our "Wassail Cups" as they were called in Lincolnshire, waxen images of the child Jesus (menino Deus) in Portugal; were borne about by females, and opened to view for a small douceur. The Christmas carol was sung at this time, beginning—

"God bless the master of this house,
The mistress also,
And all the little children
That round the table go."

These are our only relics of the following Popish mummeries, principally taken from a paper in Morgenblatt, published at Tubingen in 1855.

It is to the south of Germany where the papal creed is almost universal, that the most curious ceremonies in the celebration of Christmas obtain. These are there principally round the cradle of the nascent Deity, which, from the following and other Christmas carols they designate by the Latin Prosepe :—

"In dulci Jubilo,
Singet nun and seid fro!
Alle unsere Wonne
Leit in Prosepio
Sie leuchtet vor die Sonne.
In matris gremio."

It was no doubt this ultramontane view that inspired Corregio with his inimitable "Notte," now in the Dresden collection, where the entire illumination proceeds from the menino Deus in the cradle. Nothing is spared to give the cradle the most picturesque and richest effect. Tinsel and foil of every colour glitter round the prosepe, and moss and artificial flowers are intended to pourtray the rural character of the event.

In the oldest periods of Christianity little notice was taken of the birth or the early years of Christ; the crucifixion and ascension were the two portions of the life of the Saviour principally celebrated. Good Friday and Easter were the special holidays of the church. The Nativity was first begun to be celebrated in Egypt by the anchorites of the desert, and it passed thence into Gaul, where, in the middle of the fourth century from that event, Christmas was transferred to the heathen Jule. The Greek church soon followed that example. The Advent, however, and the time thence to the Epiphany, the twelve epagomen of the lunar year, did not get into the church calendar till the sixth century; in Germany not perhaps till the beginning of the ninth, as the Synod of Mainz in 813 does not include it amongst its holy days. Soon after, the commencement of the ecclesiastical year was changed from March to January, and the holy birth with them; this induced the celebration of Advent also by the church, to meet these supplementary feasts so intimately connected with the heathen Beltine. The ordained meats and special dishes of the season kept hold of the palates and the memories of the people. According to the Romish view, the time of Advent was intended as a worthy preparation of the great feast of the church: an early long fast was necessary to purge the mind and induce a sober train of thought before the mighty mystery. No noisy pleasures were allowed, no marriages could be celebrated, and sermons suited to the occasion were preached nearly every day, whilst the homilies and lessons were chosen from those portions of holy writ containing the prophecies of the approaching solemnity. As the great day drew nearer, the ceremonies and preachings increased in fervour, and the glorious event seemed each day more strongly struggling into life, each moment nearer to become a fact. On the fourth Advent Sunday at vespers, whilst the altar was splendidly illuminated, the priest advanced, preceded by a train of incense bearers and acolyths, with uncovered heads to the choir, and began the evangelist text of the day "Missus est Angelus," upon which, in some dioceses, a beautiful maiden in a rich and splendid dress, met him, to represent with scenic display the Annunciation, using the words of the evangelists for the dialogue. It was afterwards taken as a perfect dramatic exposition outside the church, and then possibly made a greater impression on the minds of the ignorant laity than the mere reading the text from the New Testament.

On Christmas eve the dark and solemn vestments and ornaments of the church which had prevailed throughout Advent, were changed to splendid garments, rich with coloured embroideries and gold; the choir and altars received their most costly adornments, and when in the cock-crow mass, the birth of the Saviour was solemnly enunciated from the altar, the entire multitude in the thickly crowded temple fell upon their knees to adore the newborn Saviour.

On Christmas day itself, the priest gave from the altar the fixed proper lessons and relevant portions of scripture, as an explanation of the meaning and importance of the festival. The prophecy of Isaiah, "A virgin shall conceive, a virgin bear a son," was insisted on; but in some places—and this a matter of considerable curiosity—the verses of the Erythian Sybil, then believed genuine, were adduced of equal authority with those of the great prophet.

When miracle plays became more in vogue, the Nativity, eminently calculated for dramatic display, was a frequent theme, and greedily seized on at a time when rejoicing and festivity engaged both clergy and laity in festive observance.

At this feast, immediately after the Te Deum, the adoration of the shepherds was put on the stage (we only use this modern dramatic term to translate "missus est in scenam"), in the following manner at Rouen.

A cradle was placed behind the high altar, with a figure representing the Virgin Mary at the foot. A boy stood at the entrance of the choir, dressed as an angel, announcing the glad tidings to the shepherds, who advanced from the great west portal with scrips and hooks, and then proceeded to the cradle, whilst the anthem, "Gloria in excelsis Deo," and "Pax terris," was thundered from the organ. The Virgin Mother was greeted reverently, whilst the figure of the child in its crib received adoration on bended knees. A solemn mass was then performed, and when finished, the priest demanded of the shepherds in Latin, "What have ye seen (Quid vidistis?)" and they answered, "We have seen the new born Lord (Vidimus Deum novum natum)."

The event was similarly dramatised in other parts of France, and also in Germany. Thus in the capital of the Archbishopric of Salzburg, a real cradle was borrowed, with the Virgin near it. She asks Joseph, designating him merely as her nephew, to rock it, who, acknowledging her only as his cousin, complies. The recognition at the time of this pair, as husband and wife, was completely ignored. An anthem was then played and Christmas hymns sung, in which much occurs evidently derived from the yule songs of heathendom. So in one beginning, "Jam sol recedit igneus," we have doubtless the translation of an early invocation to the sun divinity; and in another, "O Heros invincibilis dux," Thor may certainly be apostrophized as a fit prototype to the archangel Michael, to whom it is now addressed; and the archangel himself, who, as "Michael Helios," has appropriated to himself all the battle feats of the Teuton deities, may not be without great conformities.

A principal feature in the southern Germanic celebration of the church Prosepe is, their cradle songs in Latin and German. One begins, in Latin—

"O Jesule, pupule, parvule," which the extreme paucity of diminutives in our English language would prevent our rendering with anything like the effect of the original. Some of our readers will, however, possibly be gratified by a German version of its first two verses, where the Teutonic richness in those littlenesses of endearment and tenderness have full scope.

"O! Jesulein, Püppchen du kleines
Willst, dass wir küssen dich?
Willst, Lämmchen du feines
Eni Zuckerbrödchen, sprich?
Willst Milch du würziglich
Kindlein, du kleines?
O! Engel all, Erzengel all
Lasst Himmel Himmel sein,
Kommt zu dem Krippelein;
Stinunt in dus Loblied ein Ein Knäblein geboren in Bethlehem
Des freuet sich Jerusalem.
O! liebster Knäblein
Mein wonnig kind,
O! Jesus, zarrl and klein,
Schlaf süß und lind.

"Christ-kind, du heller Kurfunkel!
Kelirc in mein Herz ein,
Mach hell sein Dunkel.
Lass es dein Gärtchen sein
Dein Bettchen weich und rein
Mein Jesulein!
Quell geister all', Elfen all'
Erscheint aus Wald und Quell
Kommt her zum Knaben schnell
Und singet laut und hell:
Im Kripp'lein liegt Herr Jesus Christ
Des Königreich ohn 'Ende ist.
O! du mein Augenstern
Mein holdes kind
Dich küsst ich gar zu gern
Schlaf süß und lind"

In this second verse the invocation to all the elfis, to the spirits of woods and springs, sounds oddly in a Christian hymn, and may be taken as an additional and convincing proof of their heathen origin. And it seems from this very cause that no Christian festival had in fact such a popular tone or rooted so strongly in the minds of the people as the Christian revels, both ecclesiastical and worldly. As child or as parent, every one had acted the scene at home and around their own hearths; the dread mysteries of the resurrection, the ascension, or of Pentecost, might astonish more from their inscrutable nature, but the Nativity was brought home to every breast, its supernatural action was ignored, and the mere humanly view was felt with home delight, as it could be entertained without doubt, no obtrusive cavil rising by which it could be rejected.

Where churches were frequent, each parish prepared a separate Prosepe, and each strove to excel in their beauty and adornment; crowds of votaries chanting choral songs of Hallelujahs rushed during the entire Christmas night from church to church, from cathedral to chapel, to visit the various decorated cradles and the babe, and returned home to compare and descant upon their several glories.

The different guilds of merchants and traders rivalled each other also in the adornment of their charm-trees, where the natal Prosepe of the nascent God was a great object of their care, and much expense was lavished on them. The grandees of the towns lighted up their best apartments, and threw open the windows, to enliven and illumine the streets, a necessary observance for the crowd, where so few streets had any lamps.

When the great day was passed, began the period when for twelve days profane and uproarious jollity had full scope. Tournaments were proclaimed, lists were staked, and all the nobility of the neighbourhood, with every one rejoicing in the right of coat armour, tested their prowess and agility in jousts of arms, which afforded no less pleasure to the spectators that the knightly combatants were often roused to a real combat, and the imaginary contest was converted into one à l'outrance.

Almost every day to the Epiphany was an ordained church service; with each of which the people most willingly combined their peculiar sport. The boy bishop chosen on St. Nicholas's day had not yet abdicated his short lived and boisterous prelacy. The Lord of Misrule, with all his indecency, frolic, and riot, had still an impunity for several days from the mystic birth, and the motley fool, a more than usual licence during the period. But all these and the grand and final day of "the three kings of Köln" (Twelfth Night) must be reserved for their own distinctive festivals.

We have already observed the distinction which a preponderance of Protestantism in the north of Europe introduces against the above mummeries of the south; in the south we have seen that the celebration is more objective in relation to the nascent deity; in the north, it has become entirely subjective and refers entirely to the children who celebrate the festival. Here the attraction is turned from the new born babe to the, as it were, ministering babes, and all parade and ceremony is centered in their pleasures and delight, circling round the Christmas trees (Christbaume, weihnachts bäume) which radiating from the Windsor nurseries have now thrown such a halo of hilarity and happiness round our Christmas clogs, as entirely to supersede "snap dragon," "blindman's buff," "hunt the slipper," &c., with a much more intellectual and rational festivity. These trees serve as a kind of domestic verdict on the conduct of the youthful scions during the year: for the dutiful and docile a fir sapling is hung with sweetmeats and decorated with foil and mirrors, reflecting the gifts and illumined with tapers; whilst, where the paternal decision is less approving, the gifts diminish in value, the lights are less splendid; and, in cases of great reprehension (though mostly softened by the mother's prayers) the tree, inscribed with the name of the juvenile delinquent, may be left totally blank and completely dark.

Berlin may be stated to be the chief seat of this northern mode of celebration. The week preceding Christmas the large space opposite the Schloss, otherwise a sandy plain, is entirely green with the young firs which the neighbouring woods so readily supply, intermingled with the toys and cakes, the lights and mirrors, which are necessary for the full display. The prices are suited to all pockets, for so universal is the custom, that the lowest labourer would be looked upon by his family as unfeeling and cruel who did not manage to provide some show at least of the customary fir. In extreme cases, benevolent individuals subscribe means to furnish the Christmas luxury where they know it will be otherwise wanting.

W. B. P. D.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.—Whilst referring to the proceedings of the various Volunteer Corps throughout the united kingdom, we are induced to call attention to the issue of a most exquisite medal, designed and executed in silver by Bro. J. M. Thearle, of 198, Fleet-street, for the "Bedford Mounted Volunteer Rifle Corps, established in 1857." The face of the medal consists of an exquisitely raised bust of her most gracious Majesty, which even Mr. Wyon, the Mint medalist, has never excelled. In comparing the likeness of the queen with that of the Mint coinage, everyone will be immediately struck with its superiority both in point of resemblance and also as to superiority of execution. Not a single medal that has been of late struck either for military or naval service, at the Mint, has been at all equal to this beautiful specimen of private enterprise and a good taste, which clearly proves that if this department were intrusted to private hands, greater success than is now obtained would be secured, independently of the inestimable boon of getting rid of routine and red tape. The reverse of the medal bears the words "Prize for best marksman," which are encircled by a raised chaplet of laurel leaves, the sharpness of which is in every respect equal to the superior finish of the obverse.

BRO. WILLIAM MERCER WILSON, M.W.G.M. OF CANADA.

[From the New York Courier.]

THIS highly esteemed brother was born in Scotland, on the 24th August, 1813, and emigrated to Canada West in 1832, locating himself in the town of Simcoe, in the county of Norfolk, his present residence. Bro. Wilson was initiated into Masonry June 11th, 1840, in St. John's Lodge (now Norfolk Lodge), and was passed and raised July 9th, in the same year. The following December he was chosen Junior Warden, and had the high honour, for so young a Mason, of delivering the address at the public installation of the officers on St. John's day, 27th same month. This address was so highly estimated, that it was subsequently published by the Lodge. At the annual election, in December, 1842, he was elected Master, and, with but few interruptions, held that honourable position for nearly ten years. In June, 1847, a splendid gold jewel was presented to him by his Lodge for his efficient services; and on the 22nd of the next month, he laid the corner-stone of the Norfolk County Jail, with Masonic honours. In Capitular Masonry, Bro. Wilson received all the degrees in King Hiram Royal Arch Chapter at Hamilton, C.W.; and in the Chivalric Branch, is Prov. Grand 2nd Captain of the Prov. Grand Conclave of Canada.

The Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master of England, having by his patent revived the Prov. Grand Lodge of Canada West, Sir Allan MacNab, the Prov. Grand Master, in June, 1848, appointed Bro. Wilson, Grand Pursuivant; and at the laying of the foundation stone of the Town Hall at St. Catharine's, on the 30th October following, he, by special appointment, acted as Grand Orator. His address was published, by order of the Prov. Grand Lodge, in pamphlet form, whilst the newspapers of the day also published it in full. In the Prov. Grand Lodge, Bro. Wilson was a constant attendant, and an active participator in its proceedings, frequently being called upon to fill important stations in the absence of the proper officers.

The Agricultural Society of Canada having appointed him a delegate to the Great Exhibition in London in 1851, he visited England, and whilst there and in France, he frequently visited the Lodges, and returned to Canada with a deeper veneration for the Order and a higher estimate of the value of Masonry. On his arrival home he was honoured by a public reception.

On the 11th October, 1855, a Convention of Lodges was held at Hamilton, C.W., to express their dissatisfaction with the mother Grand Lodge and adopt measures for the best interests of the Canadian Craft. The result of their deliberations was the formation of the Independent "Grand Lodge of Canada," of which Bro. Wilson was elected first Grand Master, and has since, by successive reelections, retained that dignified station. About an equal number of the Canadian Lodges, however, did not join at that time in the movement, and until September 9th, 1857, sustained their provincial organization, when they formed themselves into another independent body, and styled it the "Ancient Grand Lodge of Canada," under the Grand Mastership of Sir Allan MacNab. The differences between the two organizations were most happily adjusted in July, 1858, Bro. Wilson presiding over the united Craft; and we have no hesitation in saying that Canada never before had so efficient an officer.

Bro. Wilson as a speaker, is fluent, and his language so far above mediocrity as to entitle him to the rank of an orator. His gestures are graceful, and his voice at all times well modulated. Bro. Wilson brought into the county of Norfolk its first printing press, and for some time edited the Norfolk Observer. In acknowledgment of the services rendered by him in the outbreak of 1837, when he commanded a troop of cavalry, the Government appointed him clerk of the peace, and also clerk of the county court, which offices he still retains. He has been raised to the rank of lieutenant-colonel of the militia of the province, and is among those not Masons, widely known as Colonel Wilson, and highly esteemed.

HOW TO IMPROVE THE MEMORY.—Some men remember history, some poetry, some mechanics, some astrology, according as they have a turn to any of these pursuits. We may hence infer, and usefully, that memory is the daughter of attention, and the granddaughter of inclination, without which we could not recollect many things on account of the weak perception that matters which do not interest us make on the recollection. By attention we strengthen memory to a surprising degree, if we are possessed of a fair share of talent and a moderate portion of steadiness in our pursuits. Pope says, wittily and justly, on two sorts of people—"Wits have short memories and dunces none"—that is, of things worth knowing; for many blockheads are famous for their retention of unconsidered trifles.

MASONIC NOTES AND QUERIES.

UNIFORMITY OF RITUAL WITH AMERICA.

I AM about to leave England for the United States and have been told the Americans are very strict in admitting strangers to their Lodges, and that their working and ours, which I know pretty well, are totally different. Pray advise me how to proceed.—TRAVELLER.—[We are not anxious to discuss questions of the kind in any department of the Freemasons' Magazine, but as our brother seeks advice, and it may be of importance to him that it should be accorded promptly, we will give him the best we can offer. We believe the American ritual to be a modification of the York rite, or that system of working adopted by those brethren who called themselves the Ancient Masons, prior to the Union of 1813. In what respect that differs from ours of the present day is a matter not to be discussed in print; but if our brother will present himself to an American Lodge, and can prove himself correctly, he will experience no difficulty in gaining admission. He will find some curious interpolations, of which he will be totally ignorant, such as the Master's test, the trading degree, the heroines of Jericho, and many others. These we counsel him to avoid, as they are side degrees, chiefly invented to be lucrative to Grand Lodge lecturers, of which swarms wander up and down the country, making confusion worse confounded. We would also caution him about his Grand Lodge certificate; never to let it pass from his possession, for we have heard of photographing the same, so as to get a facsimile of the signatures attached thereto, by many of the spurious Lodges in America whose existence are legion. A little inquiry before he leaves this country, will set him right on the legality and spuriousness of the Lodges in the districts in which he intends to sojourn. "Traveller" is not the first who has broached the subject of uniformity of ritual between two nations speaking the same language; this was done in 1844, at a general meeting of the National Convention of the Grand Lodges of America, when it was proposed that a delegate should be appointed to visit London for the purpose of conferring with the Grand Lodge of England, so as to produce a uniform ritual, and which, it was asserted would, coming from the two great nations of the Anglo-Saxon family, considerably sway the opinions of all the other Masonic bodies in the world, and pave the way to a universal mode of working and ritual. This scheme, however, fell through for want of support, and in consequence the ritual and observances differ.]

DR. RAWLINSON'S MSS.

Some time since, in 1857-8, there appeared in the columns of the Freemasons' Magazine some papers on "Masonic Antiquities, from Bro. Dr. Rawlinson's Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, 1725." What I want to know is, where there is any evidence of the cool assumption that Dr. Rawlinson was, at any time, a Freemason?—D. D. OXON.

ARE THE DRUSES MASONS?

A recent traveller has said that among the Druses they have initiations, and, he supposes, Masonic rites. Is this the case?—A. BARNARD.—[Our correspondent should have quoted the recent traveller's words, and have told us where to find them, in order that we might have seen they were correct and examined the context. In Colonel Churchill's "Ten Years' Residence on Mount Lebanon," he tells us that among this singular people there is an order having many similar customs to the Freemasons. It requires a twelve month's probation previous to the admission of a member. (Both sexes are admissible.) "In the second year the novice assumes the distinguishing mark of the white turban; and, afterwards, by degrees, is allowed to participate in the whole of the mysteries. Simplicity of attire, self-denial, temperance, and irreproachable moral conduct, are essential to admission to the order." See also Adler's De Drusis Montis Lebani, 4to., Rome, 1786.]

THE BOOK OF CONSTITUTIONS.

How often has the Book of Constitutions been published?—A. G. C.—[They were first published in 1723 by Bro. Anderson, who also edited a second edition in 1738; then came Dr. Entick's edition in 1758; and a new edition ordered by Grand Lodge in 1767. In 1776 first appeared the Appendix to the Book of Constitutions, and in 1784 Noorthouck's edition came out. Since which time they have been frequently reprinted in the name of the Grand Secretary for the time being.]

MOLART'S REGISTER.

It has been proved that the celebrated John Locke's letter on finding a MS. in the Bodleian library, although repeated over and over again in Masonic books, is a clumsy, and impudent forgery, no such manuscript ever having been deposited in those walls; therefore I would ask some Canterbury Mason to verify us of the existence of the following document cited by Preston, p. 151 of the edition of 1821 where, in a foot note, he states,—“The Latin Register of William Molart, Prior of Canterbury, in manuscript, page 88, entitled, ‘Liberatio generalis Domini Gulielmi Prioris Ecclesie, erga, Festum Natalis Domini 1429, informs us that in the year 1429, during the minority of this prince (Henry VI.) a respectable Lodge was held at Canterbury, under the patronage of Henry Chicheley, the archbishop; at which were present Thomas Stapyton, the Master; John Morris, custos de la loqe lathomorum, or Warden of the Lodge of Masons; with fifteen Fellow-crafts, and three Entered Apprentices; all of whom are particularly named.”

Such is Preston's account; but it would be much more satisfactory if some Canterbury antiquary would seek this register and when found give us the original Latin, contractions and all, so that we might reasonably be able to say there is a record of the operative Craft which shews the Masons had certain peculiarities in common with our brotherhood.—D.D. OXON.

THE ANCIENT LANDMARKS.

If I differ in opinion from an older member of the Craft than myself, I am told I disturb the ancient landmarks of the Order. If in Grand Lodge one brother cannot reply to the argument of another, he accuses his opponent of a desire to overstep the landmarks of the Order. If the shining light, who protests he never reads the Magazine, writes a good sheet of foolscap to complain that his speech at the Pig and Whistle Lodge was omitted, he also tells us that, in his case, the ancient landmarks are in danger. There are four tribunals to which Masons are amenable, viz., the ancient charges and constitutions of the Order; the by-laws of their Lodges; the Board of General Purposes; and the ancient landmarks of the Order! The last are the most terrible of all, as no one knows what they are nor what they mean, whilst every man silences his neighbour by an appeal not to throw down the ancient landmarks of the Order. Do, Mr. Editor, tell us where these landmarks are planted, who they affect, what is their use (or abuse)? and any other information you please, for I, for one, am heartily tired of having that old bogey—the “ancient landmarks”—thrust down my gullet on every occasion. If it is a figure of speech, let some of your correspondents explain it; but, excuse me if I add, don't tell me that in asking these queries I have trodden down any of the ancient landmarks of the Order, for I take them to be, until I am better informed, perfect myths.—Y. E. X.

GERMAN MASONIC SONG.

I have often heard and admired Render's translation of “Laszt uns ihr Bruder.” It is printed in an old collection of Masonic songs published, I think, in 1810, without any editor's name. I have not a copy of this collection, and should be glad to know if any later edition has been published.—H. C. L.

FREEMASONS' LODGE AT BATH.

If your correspondent “A.” will look in the Calendar he will find that Lodge No. 243 was erased by order of the Grand Lodge.—HENRY T. BOBART, Ashby-de-la-Zouch.

CRIMES OF THE TEMPLARS.

What were the special crimes laid to the charge of the Templars at the time that order was suppressed?—A NOVICE.—[Nothing was too heinous to be imputed to them. They were accused of every possible and impossible crime, but the two principal ones alleged against them were atheism and unnatural practices. If “A Novice” wishes to peruse some of the fabled accusations, and will take a turn among some old cramped handwriting, we would refer him to fol. 113 of the Harl. MS. No. 252, in the British Museum, for an official account of the Answers of the Templars; as well as to fol. 144, of Harl. MS., No. 247, for what is stated to be a Confession of the Templaries.]

REV. RICHARD MONKHOUSE.

Information is requested as to the above; he was the author of A Discourse in Praise of Freemasonry. 8vo., Lond., 1805.—J. A. D.—[He also published An Exhortation to the Practise of those Specific Virtues which ought to prevail in the Masonic Character. With historical notes. 8vo., Lond., 1805; and also Occasional Discourses on Various Subjects. With Copious Annotations, embracing several Masonic Discourses. 3 vols., 8vo., Lond., 1805].

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE EDITOR does not hold himself responsible for any opinions entertained by Correspondents.]

MASONIC SUPERINTENDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am fearful “R. E. X.”'s correctional is rather severe. We both deprecate the same evil; but whilst I am desirous to reform abuses as much as he can be, I should be very jealous of interfering with the vested rights and privileges, which I hold each Lodge possesses (if it be only in theory); and I therefore preferred the milder form by suggesting that they should invite learned brethren to their assemblies, and the well disposed of the neighbourhood, who are brethren, should everywhere encourage the Lodge to receive them. It is a fact that Masonry is being canvassed very much at present, and there is no greater argument against it than the general ignorance amongst the members of even the leading features of the institution,—Truly yours,

Z.

UNIFORMITY OF WORKING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—It must be gratifying to you, as the approximate Master of the Grand Stewards' Lodge, to find that, mainly by the exertions of Bro. Hewlett, the Grand Stewards' Lodge seems likely to regain its prestige. I was pleased to see so large a number of the brethren assembled, and to witness such an excellent working as you all gave us; and I hope you will permit me to address to you, and your readers, a few observations which have occurred to me as to the manner in which the recovered lead of the Grand Stewards' Lodge may be retained.

First, I think it indispensable that for your public night, in March next, you should do as Bro. Hewlett has done, and issue cards of invitation to every Lodge within the Metropolitan district.

Secondly, you must not allow your working to deteriorate from the standard you have set up.

Thirdly, the Grand Stewards' Lodge must now boldly claim for themselves their inherent right to be the promulgators of the only correct and authorized mode of working.

This last point I would strongly urge, for the following reasons:

—The Craft has been too long disturbed by East-end and West-end systems, in neither of which is there anything, that I can see, of sufficient importance to render the chief movers in either plan of that immense authority which they arrogate to themselves—for were they or their supporters equal in mental capacity to Macaulay, Gladstone, or Thackeray, then there might be some excuse for the blind devoteism with which they are honoured. But when we know that the very contrary is the case, and that they are neither more nor less than followers of those who, in their turn, were Masonic innovators, the time has now arrived for sifting their pretensions, which must give way to the prescriptive right of the Grand Stewards' Lodge, because these crotchets are taught in Lodges of Instruction, viz.—the Emulation and the Stability,—I leave it for more able casuists than I am to show, if they can, why Lodges of Instruction should originate fresh workings, or why I, as a Master Mason, am to be told, if working my part in a Lodge, that I am wrong, “We don't do it so at the Emulation.” In the first place, a Lodge of Instruction meets only by the sufferance of a regular Lodge, which may at any time withdraw its sanction; consequently a Lodge of Instruction has no right to dictate what shall be done to bind the Craft to its peculiar interpretation, it has no locus standi, and is of no authority.

I have heard it boastfully asserted that the magnates of the two Lodges of Instruction referred to have held several meetings to agree on certain interpolations of their own, and that they propose to submit a scheme to the consideration of the M.W. Grand Master, which shall be the recognized system for the whole Craft. If my information be correct (and I gathered it from trustworthy sources), then I say it is time that the Grand Stewards' Lodge took the initiative in such a business; that if there are to be modifications in working, the Grand Stewards' Lodge should seek out the best, and submit their plan to the Grand Master, who, it cannot be doubted, would recognize the claim of the Grand Stewards' Lodge to carry out and promulgate the authorized system of a uniformity of working in English Lodges; basing their right to this privilege on the ancient prerogative of their Lodge, which is a regular warranted assemblage—has been for more than a century the depository of the working of the Craft—and is composed of a number of gentlemen of education, such as would not discredit many a greater assemblage, and to whom language is familiar, when written or spoken, from their liberal education, knowledge of grammatical construction, and the manner of address observed amongst them.

Hoping soon to see a uniformity of working in the Craft, and that it may be confided by the M.W. Grand Master to the only legal and recognized body in the Order—the Grand Stewards' Lodge,

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
A GRATIFIED VISITOR TO THE GRAND STEWARDS' LODGE.
London, Dec. 26th, 1859.

MODEL LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In treading the chequered path of life circumstances frequently present themselves before us which prompt us to hazard suggestions and opinions without any certain prospect of success.

Undaunted by such convictions, I addressed you three weeks since, upon the important subject of Model Lodges, and I trust that I may yet be spared to witness the sublime ceremonies of Freemasonry worked only under the hallowed roofs of model Lodges. Your correspondent, "R.E.X.," in your last week's impression, in alluding to my letter, refers to me as condemning the principle of holding Lodges at taverns; this charge I plead guilty to, not "from any fancy of contagious vice," but from stern reality—such feelings, I blush to say, engendered in a great degree through the levity of conduct which I have so frequently and so painfully witnessed immediately after the conclusion of the ceremonies, under the very roof, and almost before the sound of the gavel had ceased to ring. How can such a course harmonize with the feelings of the Mason who looks "through nature up to nature's God." Is it Masonry? If it is, may I never again witness the initiation of another candidate into its mysteries. My argument is, remove the cause, and the effect will cease. Separate Masonry from the tavern. For the just and upright Mason, however, I entertain the greatest respect, be he peasant or prince, publican or priest, I would not knowingly injure him myself or suffer others so to do if in my power to prevent it, and fully appreciate the manifold advantages which the tavern offers to the hungry and the weary, and I maintain that no class of persons are more entitled to support than the tavern keeper; nevertheless I am not unmindful of the claims Freemasonry imposes upon its members concerning its rites and ceremonies, nor will I ever revoke any or either of them in support of business or mercenary motives. The sacred volume, which ought to rule and govern our faith, distinctively points out to us that there are times and places for all things—a principle I endeavour to inculcate in others, and strive to act up to myself. In support of this argument, I refer to that great, wise, and mighty king, with whom all Masons are or ought to be intimately acquainted, who in the construction of his magnificent temple caused the very stones to be carved, marked, and numbered, prior to their removal from the quarry; the timber felled and prepared in the forest of Lebanon, and conveyed by floats from Tyre to Joppa,—the metals fused and cast on the plains of Zeredathah, &c.; and, I would ask, for what purpose? Why all this indomitable perseverance, this great painstaking! Was this a fancy, having no object in view? Certainly not. What then was the object? The answer every Mason ought to know, viz.; that the sanctity of that holy place might be preserved, &c. Surely, then, we, professing our admiration of this mighty king (our pattern and example), ought at least to follow his steps in preserving the sanctity of our Lodges by performing its ceremonies in buildings dedicated only to Masonic purposes.

I also readily admit that those who want refreshment will go where it is to be had; but this is no reason why Freemasonry should be made the channel for eating and drinking. It is the love of the good things of this life, not the love of Masonry, which induces so many to attend Lodge on particular occasions. What better proof can be adduced in favour of this argument than a perusal of the Lodge book containing the signatures of those who have attended? And what will you see? Names there inscribed which are not to be found except upon the occasion of a banquet. So much for such professors of Masonry—whose belly is their god—who luxuriate in the sumptuous repast at a trifling cost, caring not one jot for their poor and distressed brethren, who the voice of charity calls upon loudly to assist. I do not hesitate to say that I delight in the good things of this life as much as many people, but I at all times partake of them in accordance with the views which I so fearlessly and faithfully, though feebly express.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, yours respectfully and fraternally,
Kent, Dec. 28th, 1859. FIDELITAS.

"INSPECTION" OF LODGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I perceive by a letter in the Magazine of the 17th instant, that a writer therein, signing himself "Z." takes exception to the word "inspection," which occurred in my letter of the 3rd, under the signature of "A Friend to Model Lodges." I can assure you, Sir, that I have no particular predilection for the word "inspection." I care not under what cognomen the system is worked. I am not ignorant of the fact of Worshipful Masters "being, and accounted to be, perfect Solomons in and within their own proper persons," but I cannot divest myself of the suspicion that the wisest of men is sometimes very inefficiently represented. The plan I proposed was simply for the purpose of starting the subject, in the hope that it would be taken up by the Craft generally, and that by discussing the question in your excellent journal, an effective system would be procured; consequently, I am highly pleased to see that it is likely to become a general topic.

With all due deference to Bro. "Z." I fear his plan of appointing "discreet and learned brethren to make a tour of the provinces whenever invited," would not be successful, if only the Lodges issuing the invitation had to pay the expenses. The majority of country Lodges being small, and generally poor, would therefore be unwilling to incur the expense of a visit; furthermore, any Lodge worked in a slovenly or careless manner would rather forfeit a trifle than have the presence of a critic (I will not say "inspector"). "Z's." proposition might answer, and no doubt would be very good, provided Masonry in the United Kingdom and Ireland was even in a tolerable state of perfection; but under existing circumstances, I am of opinion that it would not meet the requirements of the Order, as it seems to me there is not that uniformity in the manner of working which should exist. If the plan suggested by "R. E. X." was carried out (which I deem admirable), it would be the means of establishing a perfect uniformity of system as well as prevent a vast deal of omissions in the initiation of candidates, which is a grievous wrong, and amounts even to injustice, not alone to the candidate, but also to our cherished institution. How different is it in the United States, where every candidate is closely catechised by the W.M. in open Lodge as to his proficiency in the first degree ere he is entitled to receive the second, and so on. I may state that this examination is not a matter of form, as the pupil must know his lesson. By this means, when a brother has received the "sublime degree," he is truly a Master Mason, as he is capable of imparting those sublime virtues which he was himself so recently instructed in to others, and thus hand down to posterity, unimpaired, the signs and tokens of ancient Freemasonry.

Delegates might also be sent to visit the Grand Lodges from the States, or at least attend the congress proposed by "R. E. X.," which would further tend to perfect that unity of action so much desired.

I may here remark that in your able "Architectural Chapter," in referring to Lodge No. 138, at Whitehaven, Cumberland, a sentence occurs which appears to me rather singular. You say you are informed that the Masonic ceremonies of the Lodge "are performed in a style that would do credit to any metropolitan Lodge." A stronger proof for the necessity of reform cannot be put forward. There ought to be but one style in the ceremonies of Masons.—I am, dear Sir and Brother, fraternally yours, Skibbereen, Co. Cork, Dec. 26th, 1859. J. W. P.

MASONIC HALLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREEMASONS' MAGAZINE AND MASONIC MIRROR.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I shall, as one of the Craft, be most happy to respond to the suggestion of "A Prov. J.G.W.," and give gratuitous designs for the purpose of forwarding the movement for Masonic Halls. But as the only illustrations suited to your pages are pictorial, I fear the illustrating them so would not answer any good purpose. It would be better for brother archifects in any neighbourhood to volunteer their services for this purpose, which I am sure many will be found to do on being secured money out of pocket.

Pray continue in the advocacy of separate and distinct buildings for our meetings; notwithstanding what "R. E. X." says, that "members of Lodges are frequently more indebted to the proprietors of taverns for the accommodation they receive than the proprietors are for their patronage;" I shall believe, on the other hand, that the attendances would be much more frequent if the members did not feel themselves called upon to "spend something with the landlord;" and that the Craft is injured thereby.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
AN ARCHITECT.

THE MASONIC MIRROR.

MASONIC MEMS.

A Prov. Grand Lodge for West Yorkshire is appointed to be held in the Town Hall, Doncaster, on the 4th of January next. The circular calling the meeting states that the R.W.D. Prov. G.M. Bro. Dr. Fearnley and Bro. R. H. Goldthorp, P. Prov. S.G.D., have accepted the office of Stewards at the next anniversary festival of the Girls School.

METROPOLITAN.

LODGE OF JUSTICE (No. 172).—The installation meeting of this Lodge was holden on Wednesday evening, December 14th, at the Royal Albert Tavern, New Cross. Bro. Bolton, W.M., presided, and after passing a brother to the second degree, ably initiated a gentleman into the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry. The next business was the installation of the W.M., that ceremony being most impressively performed by Bro. Ireland, P.M. of the Wellington Lodge, No. 805. The brethren having given the customary salutes, the new W.M., Bro. Durrant, invested his officers, viz.:—Bros. Wynn, S.W.; Dumerer, J.W.; Cauthorne, S.D.; Cavill, J.D.; Ware, I.G.; Garrett, Sec.; and Deal, Treas., (pro tem.) The Lodge was then closed and about forty brethren dined together.

INSTRUCTION.

LODGE OF INDUSTRY (No. 219).—This old established Lodge of Instruction, although attended by some of the first working Masons in the Order, is not in that flourishing condition we could desire; and it being the only Monday night Lodge of Instruction between the west end and Whitechapel, it ought to be better supported. The names of S. B. Wilson, M. Hayden, McNally, W. Warren, Thompson and Daly ought of themselves to be a sufficient guarantee that a correct knowledge of the working of the ceremonies and lectures can be obtained by those brethren desirous of making themselves proficient in the Masonic ritual.

PROVINCIAL.

DURHAM.

HARTLEPOOL.—St. Helen's Lodge (No. 774).—The W.M. presided at the celebration of the festival of St. John the Evangelist, in the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday last, the 27th Dec. The brethren then proceeded to install the W.M. elect, Bro. Simpson Armstrong, S.W.; Bro. H. A. Hammarbom, P.M., acting throughout as installing Master. The brethren having retired, a Lodge of installed Masters, consisting of Bros. Hodgson, Moore, and Hammarbom, P.Ms. of this Lodge, was formed, and Bro. Armstrong regularly installed as W.M. for the ensuing year. On the readmission of the brethren, the W.M. was proclaimed and saluted in ancient form, and the same ceremony took place in each degree as the Lodge was closed down. The W.M. then invested as his officers Bros. H. A. Hammarbom, P.M.; James Groves, S.W.; T. P. Tate, F.S.S., J.W.; Geo. Moore, P.M., Dir. of Cers.; William Todd, Treas.; David Cunningham, Sec.; John Gallon, S.D.; B. R. Huntley, J.D.; H. Orris, I.G.; Sivewright and Varlow, Stewards; and James Mowbray, Tyler. The brethren then adjourned to the King's Head Hotel, where a handsome dinner was provided, and after doing full justice to it, and giving and responding to the various loyal and Masonic toasts, the brethren separated, after spending an evening remarkable for the cordiality and harmony displayed on all hands, Bros. Sutcliffe, Ferrier, Clarke, and others, enlivening the evening with their vocal powers. The following visitors were present:—Bros. Roger Kenyon, No. 128, Darlington; William Doughty, Sec., No. 876, Middlesbro; Gill, Swansea; John Sutcliffe, J.W.; S. E. Clarke, J.D.; and Lowther, Rank, Hodgson, and Pearson, No. 1066, West Hartlepool.

LANCASHIRE, WEST.

LIVERPOOL.—Mariner's Lodge (No. 310).—The brethren of this Lodge met on the 1st instant, at the Masonic Temple, Hope-street, the W.M., Bro. Henry Lamb, presiding, when two gentlemen were admitted and initiated into the mysteries of our Order, three passed, and three brethren raised. The W.M. read a communication from the Prov. G. Sec., requesting his attendance at a meeting of the Worshipful Masters of the district, with a view of forming a committee to investigate all applications for relief, and thereby preventing any cowan or unworthy person receiving any portion of those funds which are the undoubted right of the widow and orphan, and worthy poor Masons. On the 8th an emergency was called by requisition to the W.M., when Mr. Joshua Freeman (captain of the ship "Christopher Hall," bound for China), was duly initiated by Bro. Lamb. On the 22nd instant, another emergency was requested by two of the brethren, and the W.M. called a meeting of the brethren who formed a Lodge, and Mr. Elijah Bacheder (captain of the "Tonquin,") was initiated in the first degree of Freemasonry, when the Lodge was closed in peace and harmony. The flourishing condition of this Lodge is a striking proof of the advantages of meeting in rooms solely adapted for the purposes of Masonry, over that of meeting in a public house, independent of all pecuniary advantages it possesses; it is now well proved that the work can be done much better, and more of it can be done; it is absurd to suppose that the sublime principles of morality and virtue can either be taught or practised in a place generally devoted to other than Masonic purposes. Let some of our brethren think of this.

OXFORDSHIRE.

OXFORD.—Alfred Lodge (No. 425).—The members of this Lodge assembled at the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday last, for the purpose of installing the W.M. elect, Bro. Bevers. The ceremony of installation was performed by Bro. Hyde Pullen, D. Prov. G.M. for the Isle of Wight, who attended for the purpose; and the admirable and impressive manner in which he fulfilled this arduous duty elicited repeated applause and won the encomiums of every one present. On the conclusion of the ceremony the Worshipful Master entered on his duties, and appointed his officers for the year, as follow:—Bros. W. Wilkinson, S.W.; A. G. Holmes, J.W.; Rev. T. Mortimer, Chaplain; H. Houghton, Treas.; J. G. Betteris, Sec.; W. Hood, S.D.; Cyril Vincent, J.D.; W. B. Cunningham, Dir. of Cers.; W. W. Ringrose, Org.; W. H. Hobbs, Asst. Sec.; S. Steane, I.G.; Frazer and W. Thurland, Stewards; B. Bull, Tyler. In the evening the brethren celebrated the anniversary festival of St. John the Evangelist, by a sumptuous banquet provided by the Stewards, and at which about forty were present. The Worshipful Master presided, and was supported by Bro. Captain Bowyer, Prov. G.M. of Oxfordshire; Bro. Hyde Pullen, D. Prov. G.M. of the Isle of Wight; Bro. Ald. Spiers, P.G.S.B., D. Prov. G.M. of Oxfordshire; Bro. Randall, P.M., Mayor of Oxford; and the following Past Masters of the Lodge:—Bros. Ald. Dudley, E. Owen, J. T. Hester, J. Martin, Jas. Wyatt, W. Thompson, W. Belcher, Walker, and Houghton; and Bros. Blakiston, St. John's College; Alderman Prior, Rev. T. Mortimer, J. Vincent, A. Holmes, Briscoe, Trendell, C. Vincent, Gray, &c. The Worshipful Master presided with great ability, and introduced the toasts in very appropriate terms. During the evening some excellent and eloquent addresses were delivered by Bro. Bowyer, Prov. G.M.; Bro. Pullen, D. Prov. G.M. of the Isle of Wight; Bro. Spiers, D. Prov. G.M. of Oxfordshire; and Bro. Randall, the Mayor of Oxford. In the course of the evening the brethren withdrew to the Lodge room, where tea and coffee were served, after which they returned to the banquet room, where the convivialities were resumed, and some excellent songs were sung by Bros. Capt. Bowyer, Randall, Houghton, Kester, Lowe, J. Martin, Walker, Jos. Plowman, and others.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

TAUNTON.—Lodge of 'Unanimity and Sincerity' (No. 827).—Bro. Charles Bluett, W.M. The brethren of this Lodge held their usual monthly meeting on Wednesday, December 21st, when about thirty of the brethren were present. The business of the evening consisted of the annual election of the W.M. for the ensuing year, Bro. Captain Alexander William Adair, P. Prov. G.D., being unanimously elected to fill that important position. Bro. Lake, who had served the office of Treasurer for a period of seventeen years, was again elected to that office. Bro. Haberfield, an old P.M. of the Lodge, having expressed his readiness to undertake the duties of Tyler, to supply the vacancy caused by the death of the late respected Tyler, Bro. Rogers, the brethren unanimously elected Bro. Haberfield to that office. Bro. Jubb was raised to the third degree, and Mr. Michael Day Gange, of Staple-tispaine, near Taunton, was duly initiated into the mysteries of the Craft.

WILTSHIRE.

SWINDON.—Royal Sussex Lodge of Emulation (No. 453).—This Lodge met at three o'clock on St. John's Day, in accordance with the by-laws, for the purpose of installing Bro. Thos. Chandler, the W.M. elect and after a successful ballot, placing under the banners of this ancient and honourable society, his son. The ceremony of installation was performed by the R.W.D. Prov. G.M., Bro. Daniel Gooch, in his usual perfect manner, assisted by the Board of P.Ms., and in the presence of Bros. Col. Thos. Goddard, P.M. No. 641, P.G.S.W., Wilts; W. Gooch, P.M.; W. I. Brown,

P.M.; T. E. Marsh, T. Potter, E. Lawrence, J. Benskin, J. Wentworth, J. Tooneer, E. W. Mantell, Rev. C. Cammel, Prov. G. Chaplain, Rev. — Esselez, and numerous other brethren. Full authority for the W.M. to preside over the Lodge was acknowledged in ancient form. The W.M. then appointed the following officers:—Bro. John Chandler, S.W.; R. Burford, J.W.; Edward W. Mantell, S.D.; J. Tooneer, J.D.; J. Wentworth, I.G.; the respected Bro. John Sheppan, P.M., Treasurer, and Bro. F. H. Morris, Secretary; Bro. Canridge being the Honorary Organist. The late W.M. was absent from illness. The Lodge was visited on this occasion by Bro. H. E. Astley, Prov. S.G.W., Berks and Bucks, P.M. No. 839, &c., &c.; Bro. E. S. Cossens, Prov. G.S., Berks and Bucks, P.S.W., No. 839, W.M., No. 1097, R.A. No. 25, &c., &c., and Bro. J. Welch, No. 839. The W.M. proceeded with the most gratifying portion of the day's proceedings—the initiation of his son—and it was an affecting scene to witness. The initiate entered on his duties with propriety, and the ceremony was performed by the father with due solemnity. We have seldom seen the W.M. conduct the business of the Lodge on the evening of his installation more perfectly, which proves to the brethren the fortunate choice they have made in selecting Bro. T. Chandler as their head, whose appointments of the several officers evince much ability, and are a happy omen for the future. After the usual Masonic toasts, the candidate made a most satisfactory address to the brethren, and the Rev. — Esselez addressed the Lodge on mundane affairs, and exhorted the brethren to practise brotherly love, relief and truth to all the world, instead of exciting the passions of men by the formation of rifle corps or other topics that contain politics, which are by this fraternal body particularly eschewed. The visiting brethren found a most cordial greeting, and the father of the Lodge and others enlivened the mystic circle by those musical strains that are only known to Free and Accepted Masons.

WORCESTERSHIRE.

KIDDERMINSTER.—Lodge of Hope and Charity (No. 523).—This Lodge held its usual monthly meeting, and celebrated the festival of St. John the Evangelist on Monday, Dec. 26th, when Bro. Thos. Porter was installed for the second year as W.M. Mr. Edward Perrin was duly initiated into the mysteries and privileges of our ancient Order. Two gentlemen were proposed for initiation next Lodge night; and we are happy to say that one guinea was voted to that excellent charity—the Royal Freemasons' Girls School.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

PROVINCIAL ENCAMPMENTS.

LIVERPOOL.—Encampment of Jacques de Molay.—This Encampment held a Chapter and Conclave, on Thursday, December 22nd, to install Comps. Crankshaw and Kearne. There were present the E.C. Sir Knt. J. Hayes; P.E.C. Sir Knt. J. Ellis; P.E.C. Sir Knt. H. S. Allpas; and Sir Knts. C. J. Banister, Clark, Pierpoint, Jackson, Smith, &c. Sir Knt. H. S. Allpas, P.E.C., installed the candidates in a most impressive manner. After the remaining business was concluded, the Knights dined together, and separated at ten o'clock. The next meeting was fixed for the 20th January, 1860.

PLYMOUTH.—Loyal Brunswick Encampment.—The regular quarterly convocation of this Encampment was held in the Freemasons' Chapter room, St. George's-hall, Stouchoose, on Tuesday, the 20th December, when Comp. W. E. Bewes, (Lieutenant Colonel 73rd Regiment), of Royal Arch Chapter, No. 1, Cork (Irish Register), was duly installed a Knight of the Order. The Knights then proceeded to the election of the Eminent Commander and Treasurer, when Sir Knights Dowse and Evens were reelected to their respective offices. The Eminent Commander afterwards invested the following Knights as his Officers for the ensuing year:—S. Triscott, First Captain; Lord Graves, Second Captain of Columns; J. Mackay, Prelate; R. R. Rodd, Expert; R. Ridley, Captain of Lines; J. Thomas, Chancellor; A. Narracott, Almoner; S. F. Brizzi and J. Merrifield, Standard Bearers; J. Rogers, Equerry. The reelection of Sir Knight Dowse, who has held the honourable position of Eminent Commander ever since the resuscitation of this Encampment, two years ago, is considered not only to be beneficial to the Loyal Brunswick, but to the Order of Knights Templar generally in this neighbourhood.

IRELAND.

NORTH DOWN.

OPENING OF THE DUNGANNON MASONIC HALL.

ON the 19th of December, the new Masonic Hall, erected by Lodge No. 9, at Dungannon, was inaugurated under the most auspicious circumstances.

A great number of brethren from Belfast and neighbouring districts attended to lend their aid. Bro. Tracey, Right Worshipful Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Belfast and North Down, presided; Bro. S. G. Getty, ex-Mayor of Belfast, and past Deputy Provincial Grand Master of that district, was also present.

The officers and brethren of the Lodge met their assistant brethren for the purpose of the inauguration. The usual procession was then formed, and entered the hall. The Right Worshipful Deputy Provincial Grand Master then undertook the programme of the inauguration.

After solemn music the dedication prayer was offered up.

The benediction followed, which was closed by the following prayer:—
"O Lord God, there is no God like unto Thee in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with Thy servants who walk before Thee with all their hearts."

"Let all the people of the earth know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else."

Response—"The Lord is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever."

The Chaplain then pronounced the following blessing:

"Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto His people. The Lord our God be with us, as He was with our fathers: let Him not leave us nor forsake us. That He may incline our hearts unto Him, to walk in all His ways, and to keep His commandments, and His statutes, and His judgments, which He has commanded."

Response—"Glory be to God on high, on earth peace, good will towards men."

Immediately after the dedication, the brethren proceeded to ordinary Lodge business, and at seven o'clock the banquet was prepared. About fifty gentlemen were present, among whom were Bro. the Hon. Major S. Knox, M.P., Worshipful Master; Basil G. Brook, Senior Warden; Charles Stanley, Junior Warden; Captain Wright, Courtney Newton, William Steel, George Herron, Hugh Simpson, Marcus Gage, J. G. Winder, J. Browne, Robert Atkinson, Prov. S.G.W.; J. G. McGee, Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 154; Dr. Pirrie, J. Charley, J. MacLurcan, J. Girdwood, J. Grattan, A. Johnston, William Johnston, M. Bell, Armagh; H. Murney, S. Black, Durham Dunlop, F. D. Ward, John Oulton, Edward Lee, James Dyna, J. McNeilly, and James Seawright.

After dinner, the health of the Queen was drunk with all honours, followed by the Prince Consort, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family, which were responded to with true Masonic zeal.

The W.M. said—I rise now, brethren, to propose a toast which will meet with a response from every English and Irish heart. I propose to you "The health of our Navy and of our Army." They have always done their duty. It would be out of place for me at this moment to recall to your recollection the glorious achievements of our united services. It was shown in the Crimea how cordially and nobly the two services fought and bled together. I will not detain you longer, brethren, but propose to you "The Army and Navy," and I have much pleasure in coupling with this toast the name of our esteemed brother, Captain Wright.

Bro. Wright confessed that his forte was not in making speeches, and that for his part he would prefer defending a position.

The W.M. gave "The Duke of Leinster, Grand Master of Ireland."

This was duly responded to; after which the healths of "The Earl of Zetland and the Duke of Athole, Grand Masters of England and Scotland," were duly honoured.

The next toast was "The Provincial Grand Lodge of Belfast and North Down," which was enthusiastically received.

The Right Worshipful Brother Tracey rose and said—Worshipful Sir, it gives me intense delight to be present at such a magnificent opening of your Lodge as I have seen to-day. From my official position I must take a delight in seeing the progress of Masonry through the province. I was highly delighted to-day to see the excellent working and true Masonic zeal of Lodge No. 9, and I congratulate you, my brethren, on the efficiency with which you open a new Lodge that promises to do credit and honour to the Craft. Brethren, there is one thing which I am anxious to impress upon you, and that is that we ought not to be brothers alone in a Lodge. I have always considered that true Masonry is evidenced outside the Lodge. In Lodge we are all brethren together, but in the world we have a large field, and the wider the field the greater the scope for our Masonic virtues. I am anxious to impress upon my young brethren of Lodge No. 9, the great advantage of cultivating brotherly love. At this late hour of the evening, I will not trespass further on your attention, but ask you to fill a high bumper in honour of your Worshipful Master, whose health I have now the honour to propose.

The W.M. said—It is with pride and pleasure that I rise to respond to the toast proposed. It gives me sincere satisfaction to find myself, after an eventful career, the Master of this Lodge. I tell you fairly, brethren, that mine has been a chequered course. I have served under a variety of officers. I may call myself a "Jack of all trades." I served in the army. I am now a member of Parliament, but there is an honour higher still, which I appreciate fully, and that is the position which I have the pleasure and privilege of occupying this evening.

The "Visiting Brethren," and "All Poor and Distressed Brethren," were then given, and the brethren separated.

SCOTLAND.

GRAND LODGE.

WEDNESDAY, November 30th, being St. Andrew's day, the Grand Lodge assembled for the election of office bearers, when His Grace the Duke of Athol was unanimously re-elected Grand Master, and thereafter duly invested the following as his Grand Officers:—Bros. John Whyte Melville, of Bennoch and Strankinners, Deputy G.M.; Lord Loughborough, Sub. G.M.; Major General Swinbourne, S.G.W.; J. T. Oswald, J.G.W.; Samuel Hay, G. Treas.; W. A. Laurie, G. Sec.; A. J. Stewart, Grand Clerk; Rev. David Arnot, D.D., Grand Chaplain; Rev. Alexander Bonar, D.D., Asst. Grand Chaplain; F. D. Macowan, S.G.D.; Thomas Drybrough, J.G.D.; David Bryce, Grand Architect; Charles Mackay, Grand Jeweller; John Deuchar, Bible Bearer; Captain P. Deuchar, R.N., and Hugh James Rollo, W.S., G. Dira. of Cera.; Sir George Beresford, Bart., Grand Sword Bearer; Charles W.M. Müller, G. Dir. of Music; John Coghill, Grand Marshal; James Waters, Deputy Grand Marshal; William M. Bryce, Grand Tyler, and the following Board of Grand Stewards:—John Cunningham, President; W. D. Macritchie, Vice President; W. Belfrage, W. Forrester, John Haig, John D. B. Hay, William Hunt, F. S. Melville, H. A. Macneil, James Nairne, John Steventon, Colonel Hunter, George Paterson, James Turner, Charles Stuart Law, A. M. Clarke, Owen Gough, William Mann, David Bryce, J. Elston, J. G. Houston, Charles Mackenzie, Lindsay Mackersay, Dunbar Kirkwood, Robert Millom, Alexander Hay, Herman Kauffman. After the installation and other business of Grand Lodge had been completed, the M.W. Grand Master and other office bearers and members of Grand Lodge adjourned to the large hall to celebrate the festival of St. Andrew, when upwards of two hundred brethren dined together. The Duke of Athole presided, supported by his Grand Officers on the dais, the Senior and Junior Grand Wardens acting as Croupiers.

After the toast of "The Queen and the Craft," the choristers sang a Masonic version of the National Anthem, accompanied by the band and the organ, the whole of the brethren joining in the chorus.

In reply to the toast of "The Army and the Navy," Major General Swinbourne in alluding to the present volunteer movement, stated that although forty years had expired since he first smelt powder on the field of Waterloo, it afforded him very great pleasure to join as a volunteer in the Masonic Company of the Edinburgh Rifles. He was not sure if he should not have given precedence in replying to this toast to Captain Laurie (the Grand Sec.) whom he had much pleasure in recognizing as his commanding officer. He felt certain that the company, in appointing that brother as their captain, had put the right man in the right place, and he felt convinced that so long as the volunteer regiments were officered by gentlemen like those appointed by his own company, and so long as the members of the several companies paid steady attention to the commands of their officers, that should a foreign power ever land an army on our shores, that indomitable courage which in our regulars had overcome the privations of the Crimean War and the burning sands of India, would inspire our volunteers to fight for their homes, their wives, and their children.

Among the deputations present, beside those from the Edin Lodges, we observed St. John's, Kirkintilloch; Ancient, Stirling; Zetland, Grangemouth; and numerous other country Lodges.

Obituary.

BRO. THE RIGHT HON. H. FITZROY, M.P., P.G.W.

WE regret to announce the death of the Right Hon. Henry Fitzroy. Our deceased brother had been suffering for some weeks at his residence, 3, Sussex-square, Kemp-town, Brighton, from a combination of fever and ague. Bro. Fitzroy was the second son of the late Lord Southampton, and would have inherited the peerage on the death of his brother, the present lord. At the age of twenty-four he was returned for Great Grimsby, Lincolnshire, and since that time has been constantly immersed in politics. In 1846 he became a Lord of the Admiralty, and in 1852 Under Secretary for the Home Department. He became Chairman of Committees in the March of the year 1855, and he held this office up to the time of his death. He died at the house above mentioned, at six o'clock on Saturday evening, at the age of fifty-two, having been born on the 2nd of May, 1807. Bro. Fitzroy was initiated in the Apollo Lodge (No. 460), Oxford, and joined the South Saxon Lodge (No. 390), Lewes, in September, 1835; and the Pomfret Lodge (No. 463), Northampton, on the 4th of January, 1838. He was appointed S.G.W. in 1841; and in the same year Assis. Soj. in the Grand Chapter. Bro. Fitzroy was a Governor of the Royal Benevolent Institution for Aged Masons, &c., and a supporter of the other charities. Though our right hon. brother had ceased for many years to take an active part in the business of the Order, he continued a subscribing member of the South Saxon Lodge to the time of his death.

THE WEEK.

THE COURT.—The Queen and her family are at Windsor, and are in good health. The Prince Consort has attended the meetings of the Horticultural Society and of the trustees of the South Kensington Museum; and with the Prince of Wales has been shooting several days this week. The Queen and her daughters ride and walk daily in the Home Park. Her Majesty's visitors have included the Duke of Malakoff, the Prince of Leiningen, Count de Lavradio, and Sir Charles Eastlake.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The important pamphlet, "Le Pape et le Congres," has produced an immense effect in Paris, affecting the various parties according as their interests are likely to be involved. It will call forth in Catholic Italy the greatest exultation, while the Parti Pretre will receive it with unbounded rage. Not the slightest doubt is entertained in political circles in Paris that M. Mocquard, the Emperor's secretary, is the writer. M. Louis Veuillot calls the pamphlet the "Kiss of Judas." It has produced no small consternation at Rome, for the departure of the first plenipotentiary of the Pope has been stopped in consequence, and the Papal Nuncio at Paris had intimated to Count Walewski that his master could not be represented in the Congress if its rumoured authorship did not receive an official denial. A new play, produced on Friday evening at the Porte St. Martin Theatre, has caused a great sensation at Paris. M. Mocquard is the author, and the subject is the abduction of a Jew's daughter—in short, a dramatic version of the Mortara case. The audience comprised the emperor and empress, officials, senators, and members of the Corps Legislatif, and the appearance of the house was that of a gala night at the opera. The piece is regarded as a political symptom of the most significant kind. Count Walewski has, however, informed the diplomatic corps in Paris, that as long as he is Foreign Minister "The Pope and the Congress" shall not be regarded as the programme of the French ministry. M. Veuillot, undeterred by avertissements, or the prospect of suspension or suppression, continues to attack "the pamphlet" with great energy. The number of French flag officers is to be increased from 33 to 45; post-captains from 110 to 160; commanders from 220 to 300; lieutenants from 650 to 725, and mates from 550 to 650. According to the Journal du Havre a bill is about to be laid before the French Council of State to regulate the publication of law reports, which has filled the reporters of the press with the most dismal forebodings. Commander Boncompagni has addressed a proclamation to the people of central Italy, in which he explains the object of his coming among them. In one part of his manifesto he says the powers of Europe are about to assemble in Congress to deliberate on the affairs of Italy, and repair the evils done by the treaties of 1815.—In accordance with the Treaty of Zurich, the Austrian authorities have re-entered the Transpadane district of Gonzaga, an act that had filled the inhabitants with dismay, for they imagined that Austrian occupation was at an end. They had found their mistake, however, by the entry of Austrian troops and officials, and a demand being made for their arms, and also for a sum of money for the destruction of the forts of Borgasforte.—A Hungarian memorial has just been published at Leipsic, which may be regarded as the programme of the national party. This document has been submitted to several official authorities, among them to the Count de Rechberg.—A letter from St. Petersburg states that the military tribunal, presided over by General Mouravieff I. appointed to try persons guilty of speculation in the supply of the troops in the south and in the Crimea during the late war, had finished its labours, and had condemned several persons of rank to degradation and other punishments for their offences in this respect. The Russian embassy at Peking, we hear, is enjoying perfect safety.—From Spain there is a rumour that the blockade of Tangier had been raised; he also says the Spanish people never anticipated such a desperate defence as the Moors have made to their invaders, and they have yet to learn the sacrifices and suffering which their unjust aggressions will bring upon them. The Queen of Spain has given birth to a princess. According to the last telegrams the Spaniards had obtained fresh advantages over the Moors, having again repulsed them in an attack, in which the latter lost forty men.—Letters from Constantinople of the 14th instant have reached Marseilles, which state that a resolution had been come to by the Divan calling on the powers of Europe to settle the Suez Canal question, and that M. Thouvenel and the four ambassadors had agreed to that arrangement. The Porte had granted the religious investiture to the Bey of Tunis, but exacts tribute from him.—The Europa has arrived at Queenstown, bringing intelligence from Boto to the 14th, and Halifax to the 16th inst. The American House of Representatives was still unorganized, and consequently the President's message delayed. There was no change in affairs at San Juan. General Blanco had been assassinated by his brother at Bogota, and civil and foreign war was imminent in Peru. The victories of Miramon in Mexico are confirmed. The British ships were taking measures to obtain reparation for the imprisonment of the English consul.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.—The Gazette announces that it is Her Majesty's intention to hold a presentation of the Victoria Cross, at Windsor Castle, on the 4th of January next.—The recent cold weather appears to have had a very prejudicial effect on the public health. The deaths in London, which were about 1300 in each of the four previous weeks, rose to 1548 during last week—a number exceeding by 278 the estimated average. The number of births was 1768.—The Queen has commuted the sentence of the sailors of the Princess Royal to one month's imprisonment, and they have accordingly been liberated.—On Saturday, the commission again assembled at Wakefield to inquire into the alleged corrupt practices during the recent election of a member for that borough. Sergeant Pigott presided; Mr. Gurney, the banker, was present on this occasion, and was examined at considerable length. A number of bribers and bribed also detailed the particulars of their receipts and disbursements. The inquiry is now closed at Wakefield but it will, however, be adjourned to London.—A correspondence has taken place between the Admiralty and Admiral Bowles relating to the insubordination on board the Princess Royal. It appears from this that a commission, consisting of Rear Admiral the Hon. George Grey, the Admiral Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard; Capt. R. S. Hewlett, C.B., of her Majesty's ship Excellent; and Capt. G. T. Gordon, of her Majesty's ship Asia, reported that after hearing evidence they were of opinion that leave having been granted to one watch of the ship's company, Capt. Baillie should at once have checked the unreasonable demand for "all or none," among those by whom it was evinced.—Mr. Traill, the Greenwich magistrate, who, with Captain Harris as nautical assessor, lately held an official inquiry into the loss of the steam ship Paramatta, has just made his official report to the Board of Trade. The Paramatta was one of the Royal Mail Company's ships, and was wrecked on her first voyage, on the Horse-shoe Reef, near St. Thomas's. It is considered by the commissioners, as stated in their report, that Captain Baynton, who commanded the vessel at the time of the wreck, did not exercise a proper degree of caution under the circumstances, and in consequence his certificate is suspended for twelve months.—A traveller, named Robert Pluckwell, who had been fourteen years in the service of Mr. Penzon, of Snow Hill, was charged at the Guildhall Police-court, with embezzlement, amounting to between £200 and £300. The prisoner was committed for trial.—The charge of perjury by the Hon. Hugh Rowley against his late wife, founded on her evidence in the Court for Divorce, has been resumed before Mr. Paynter at Westminster Police-court. The cross examination of the prosecutor occupied the entire sitting, the substance of it being of the same abominable character as on former occasions. Mr. Paynter, in again adjourning the inquiry for a week, intimated that he did so in the hope that means would be taken to bring about a withdrawal of the charge, as its further investigation could be beneficial to no one, and it would rather be to the public advantage that no more should be heard of the case.—The Blervie Castle, emigrant ship, which sailed from Gravesend for Adelaide, on the 15th of the present month has been lost. The first intimation of this calamity was by a considerable quantity of her cargo being picked up on the French coast. Her crew numbered thirty-four, and it is believed there were on board about forty passengers. The total loss is probably £50,000.—The aggregate number of patients relieved at the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, City, during the week ending December 24th, was medical, 481; surgical, 288; total, 769—of which 213 were new cases.—In the Divorce Court, Sir C. Cresswell has given judgment in the case Sopwith v. Sopwith. This was a petition on the part of the wife for divorce, on the ground of her husband's adultery. The evidence showed a very discreditable course pursued by the petitioner and her friends to get up evidence. His lordship gave it as his opinion that gross perjury had been committed, besides that there were glaring inconsistencies and discrepancies in the statements of the petitioner's witnesses; he believed there was no substantial proof in support of this charge; he therefore dismissed the petition, and decreed that the respondent should be indemnified in costs.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—On Monday last the performances commenced with the quaint and fanciful drama of "King Rene's Daughter," produced for the first time under Mr. Smith's management, and rendered by Mr. Emery, Mr. Verner, Mr. Peel (who played the Moorish physician, Elm Jahia), and Miss Page, a débutante from the provinces, and whose efforts it would be unjust to criticize in a boxing night spirit. The Christmas novelty presented to his patrons by Mr. E. T. Smith, is a new grand magical, comic pantomime, entitled "Jack and the Bean Stalk; or, Harlequin Leap Year, and the merry pranks of the good Little People." The author of the burlesque opening is Mr. E. L. Blanchard, who has adhered with commendable fidelity to the old nursery tale, but he has superadded to it a most ingenious meteorological induction, in which the weather, and the signs of the zodiac, and the twelve months of the year, and hail, sleet, snow, and rain, and the almanacks of Raphael, Zadkiel, Dietrichsen and Hannay, are all mixed up in a manner that would be confusing were it not very skilful and lucid. The scenery is very beautiful; a stalactite grotto in particular is most gorgeous, presenting a long vista of caves within caves, in which the "good little people" are disporting themselves in the blue sea; and anything more complete than the illusion we never witnessed. Signori Malano and St. Maine were the Harlequins; Harry Boleno and Flexmore, Clowns; Messrs. Tanner and Beckingham, Pantaloon; and Madame Boleno and Miss Sharp, Columbines. It was a late hour when the performances terminated, a circumstance which was partly owing to an occasional hitch in the scene shifting department, and which will of course be corrected after two or three repetitions. The audience were as good humoured and tolerant as ever assembled within the walls of a theatre; and during the transformation scene called Mr. Blanchard, Mr. Beverley, and Mr. Smith before the curtain, to receive the usual meed of approval.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—After the performance on Monday of Mr. Mellon's "Victorine" the pantomime of "Puss in Boots" was produced. The opera went off exceedingly well. Mr. Haigh got a well-deserved encore, and all the singers were called at the conclusion. The introductory part of the pantomime is very well written, and acted with great spirit. Mr. W. H. Payne is not only a first-rate pantomimist himself, but is the father of a most talented pantomimic family. In "Puss in Boots," Mr. W. H. Payne and Mr. F. Payne appear in the opening, and in the second part Mr. F. Payne and Mr. H. Payne play respectively the characters of Harlequin and Clown. Without describing the introduction scene by scene, we may briefly observe that the tableau of the "Corn Fields" is painted and arranged with much taste, that the Ogre's residence (entitled "Gulpen-down Castle"), and "Fingal's Cave by moonlight," are also most effectively represented, and that the transformation is one of the most gorgeous tableaux ever produced at any theatre. With considerable curtailment, especially in the second part, the Covent Garden Pantomime will doubtless meet with considerable success. No work of the same kind has ever been more splendidly put upon the stage, and it is not a great accusation to make against it that at present there is rather too much of it. The last tableau of all, "The Fairy Halls of Peace," surpasses even the transformation scene. The tricks were good, and all went well. The fun went fast and furious, and the truly legitimate nature of the whole affair may be assumed from the important fact that the traditional red-hot poker was in requisition. An excellent Punch's puppet-show and a most laughable duet on violins, by the Paynes, junior, among numerous other amusing feats, kept the house, which was filled in every part, in a constant roar. The music throughout was well executed, of course, but was also selected with good judgment and admirable taste.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.—One of the most charming of all the Christmas entertainments and one of the most successful of the author's efforts was produced on Monday last. It is entitled "Valentine's Day." An exceedingly elegant, not to say pretty-looking, woodman, named Sylvanus (Miss Eliza Weeks) must needs devote that portion of his time not engrossed by the laborious duties of his vocation to falling in love with the daintiest of milkmaids, called Belphebe (Miss Louise Leclercq). On the face of it there would seem to be no reason why these two young persons should not at once proceed to some sylvan Doctors' Commons, and take out a licence. Slander (Mr. Clark), and Gossip (Mr. Coe), are jealous of the happiness of the young people, and spare no pains to estrange them. For a time poor Belphebe and Sylvanus are sadly tormented by these malicious persons, aided, it is almost needless to say, by Hate, Spite, Malice, Venom, and Jealousy. The lovers quarrel with each other until they are reconciled by a most amiable and beneficent prelate, Bishop Valentine (Mr. Cullenford), who has all along been watching over the persecuted pair. They are taken to the bower of the good fairy, and there, of course, the transformation occurs. Sylvanus is changed to Harlequin (Mr. Arthur Leclercq), Belphebe to Columbine (Miss Fanny Brown), Slander to Pantaloon (Her Cole), and Gossip to Clown (Mr. Charles Leclercq). This was most admirably acted by all; there was some very graceful dancing by a numerous corps de ballet, and a large number of humorous "properties" introduced. Of the scenery, it would be difficult to speak in terms of too great praise. The "Spring Flower Dell," with its "conservatory of many-coloured crocuses," was an exquisite fairy home, with coloured lamps of glass to represent the flowers which adorned it on every side. The transformation scene was even more gorgeous and poetic—glass being again employed to a great extent, and with the most admirable effect, and when, at last, the fairy temple was completely before the audience, such loud and long-continued shouts arose for Mr. Fenton—the artist who had produced these scenic marvels—that that gentleman, led on by Mr. Buckstone, made his appearance, and bowed his acknowledgments.—The demands upon our space, this week, compel us to defer our other theatrical notices.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SECRETARIES OF LODGES throughout the country are requested to forward, as early as possible, the place, day, and hour on which the Lodge will be held in 1860.

"VETO" is thanked. His communication shall be attended to. It is impossible at a distance to test the accuracy of every statement forwarded us without the assistance of the brethren.

"J. W."—It is not the province of a Journalist to interfere in private disputes.

"P. M."—You were in fault in the first instance. Practical jokes are not admissible in Lodge. Surely you cannot be what you sign yourself; or you would be better informed on the customs of the Order.

LODGE No. 90, WINCHESTER.—We have received a report of the last meeting of this Lodge, which we are compelled to postpone until next week.

"HAGGAI."—Usually speaking, anthems are only used in consecrations, but there is no law to prevent their introduction into the ceremony of installation, if appropriate. We doubt, however, whether the singers could as a rule, be obtained for the Board of Masters. There is no necessity for a Grand Officer's presence during the performance.

